2. As Proteſtants need no externall ſacrifice, ſo neither doe they ſtand vpon an externall Prieſthood: their Miniſters ſuffice to offer vp the ſpirituall and publike ſacrifices of the people.

3. The argument better followeth: Moſes erected materiall altars, as belonging to the externall ſacrifices and ceremonies of the Law: therefore, theſe ceremonies being abrogated, there is no vſe any longer of ſuch materiall altars.

4. Though we denie any ſuch externall Prieſthood to be in the Church, as Aarons was: yet wee take not away diuerſitie of callings, neither doe bring in a confuſion, making all alike, as that rebellious crue did: we teach obedience to ſpirituall gouernours, and make diſtinction of degrees and callings: our Miniſters, though not as ſacrificing Prieſts, doe ſerue to edifie the Lords people, by the preaching of the word, and miniſterie of the Sacraments, and offering vp their common prayers.

The Proteſtants.

First, we hold it to be a great blaſphemie to ſay, that the Prieſthood and ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the croſſe, is not that ſacrifice or Prieſthood into the which the old ſacrifice and Prieſthood was tranſlated and changed. The Apoſtle proueth the contrary: for that ſacrifice, whereby the new Teſtament is eſtabliſhed, is that, whereinto the old ſacrifice and Prieſthood is tranſlated: but this is done
Heb.7.23. by the ſingular ſacrifice of Chriſt, who is the ſuretie of a better teſtament, Heb.7.23. Ergo, his ſingular ſacrifice vpon the croſſe, is that whereinto the old Leuiticall ſacrifices are changed, and no other. Againe, the Prieſthood after Melchiſedechs order is that, into the which the old Prieſthood is changed: but the Prieſthood of Chriſt vpon the croſſe was after that order. Ergo. But here they are not aſhamed to denie, that the ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the croſſe was after Melchiſedechs order; but doe moſt impudently and blaſphemouſly affirme, that it was after the order of *Aaron: Heskin. lib.*1.*cap.*13. And thus euery vile Maſſe-monger ſhall be more properly a Prieſt after Melchiſedechs order, then Chriſt himſelfe.

Secondly, none but Chriſt is a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech: for vnto whom the Lord ſaid, Thou art a Prieſt for euer after the order of Melchiſedech, to him the Lord ſaith alſo in the ſame Pſal.110.1. Pſalme, Sit thou at my right hand, Pſal.110. But this cannot agree to any popiſh prieſt: therefore not the other. Againe, the Apoſtle maketh this difference betweene the Prieſthood of the Law and the Goſpell; becauſe then there were many Prieſts, they being prohibited by death to continue: but Heb.7.23.24. Chriſt is the only prieſt of the new Teſtament, becauſe he dieth not, Heb.7.23.24. If they anſwere, as they doe, that although there be many Prieſts, yet it is but one Prieſthood, becauſe Chriſt concurreth with them in the acts of the Prieſthood, Rhemiſt.

We anſwere: firſt, Chriſt concurreth with his faithfull miniſters in the acts of their Miniſterie: but no ſuch Prieſthood doe we acknowledge. Secondly, ſo Chriſt concurred in the acts of the Leuiticall Prieſthood, and the ſacrifices of the law that were rightly offered: wherefore this concurrence of Chriſt doth no more take away the multitude of Prieſts in the Goſpell, then it did in the Law.

Thirdly, concerning the name of Prieſts in their ſenſe, as it implieth an authoritie of ſacrificing, we vtterly abhorre it. Secondly, but as it is deriued of the Greeke word πρεσβύτερος, which ſignifieth an Elder, we refuſe it not, but wiſh rather, that it had not been abuſed in common ſpeech to ſignifie popiſh ſacrificers. Thirdly, as for the word (ſacerdos) which may be engliſhed a ſacrificer, we finde it no where in the new Teſtament giuen to the Miniſters of the Goſpell, and ſo much Bellarmine confeſſeth, *cap.*17. And therefore vnfitly and vnproperly agreeth vnto them. If ſome of the fathers haue confounded the names of Sacerdos and Preſbyter, yet they meane nothing leſſe then a ſacrificing Prieſt. The word Sacerdos, a ſacrificer, being a proper name of the Leuiticall Prieſts, cannot properly be attributed to the Miniſters of the Goſpell. To conclude, this word (Prieſt) as it is the Engliſh of Sacerdos, we doe not approue: but as it giueth the ſenſe of (Preſbyter) from whence it is deriued, we condemne it not: for ſo it ſignifieth nothing elſe but an Elder. If common vſe of ſpeech haue drawne it to a contrarie ſenſe, it would be amended.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the Apoſtles in their writings vſe not the words of prieſt, ſacrifice, temple, altar, and ſuch like; becauſe the Iewiſh ſacrifices and prieſthood were yet in force, leſt they might be thought, by vſing theſe words, to renew and confirme the rites of the Iewes: but afterward, when as the temple was deſtroyed, theſe names began to be vſed of the ancient fathers, *Bellarm. cap.*17.*lib.*1. de Miſſa.

Contra. First, it is vntrue that the Apoſtles in the Scripture forbeare at all to vſe theſe names: for in the new Teſtament euery one of theſe names is found, but in a ſpirituall ſenſe, as the Apoſtle taketh the Temple for the Church of God, 1.Cor.3.16. 2.Cor.6. Againe, the Apoſtles ſpeake of ſpirituall ſacrifices, Rom.12.1. Heb.13. and the Apoſtle in the ſame chapter ſaith, wee haue an altar,&c. meaning the altar of the croſſe. And Reuel.1.6. He hath made vs Kings and Prieſts, that is ſpiritually: wherefore it is a great vntruth, that the Apoſtles did of purpoſe ſhunne theſe names, for any ſuch cauſe alleaged, ſeeing they euery where vſe them.

Secondly, it cannot bee denied, but that this word (ſacerdos) a prieſt, is taken by ſome of the ancient fathers, for an office of the Goſpell: but they vnderſtand not then a ſacrificing prieſt, but either the ſame, which was called (Preſbyter) a teaching Elder, as Damaſus epiſtol.4. Choropiſcopi miniſterio preſbyterorum contenti ſint,&c. Let the countrie Biſhops be contented only with the miniſtrie of the Presbyters, and be partakers only of the Lords table: A table is for Miniſters, not for Prieſts: Or elſe they expreſſed it by this word (miniſter) a Miniſter; as Cornelius epiſtol.2. Epiſcopi & miniſtri,&c. Biſhops and Miniſters muſt not frequent riotous feaſts. Arelatenſ.1.2. Miniſtri fœnerantes, That Miniſters ſhould not be Vſurers: Or elſe they vnderſtood this word ſpiritually. Ambroſ.lib.5.in Luc. Omnes filij eccleſiæ ſacerdotes,&c. All the children of the Church are prieſts, offering themſelues ſpirituall ſacrifices to God. So alſo Origen, Hom.9.in Leuitic. Petrus ad omnem dicit eccleſiam,&c. Peter ſaith to the whole Church, ye are a royall prieſthood. But a ſacrificing prieſt by this word (ſacerdos) they vnderſtood not: for (ſacrificans, or ſacrificulus) a ſacrificer was taken for an Idolatrous prieſt of the Idols of the Gentiles, as S. Cyprian vſeth it, Epiſt.3. ad Cornelium: Hi quinque cum paucis vel ſacrificantibus, vel male ſibi conſcijs,&c. Theſe fiue with a few ſacrificers, or men of a guiltie conſcience, did adopt Fortunatus to be their falſe Biſhop.

Auguſtine ſaith, Sacerdotium Iudæorum nemo dubitat,&c. No faithfull man doubteth, but that the Prieſthood of the law was a figure of the royall Prieſthood in the Church, whereby all that pertaine to the bodie of Chriſt, the chiefe and true prince of prieſts, are conſecrated,&c. He acknowledgeth no other Prieſthood abiding in the Church, then that whereby all Chriſtians are made Prieſts, to offer ſpirituall ſacrifices vnto God through Chriſt.

Quæſt.Euangelicar.lib.2. quæſt.40.

Heare alſo what Bernard ſaith: Non ſolus ſacerdos ſacrificat, non ſolus conſecrat, ſed totus fidelium cœtus, qui adſtat, cum illo conſecrat, cum illo ſacrificat: The Prieſt only doth not ſacrifice or conſecrate, but the whole companie of the faithfull, that ſtand by, doe conſecrate and ſacrifice with him: Ergo, in this ſenſe all the people are as well Prieſts as the ſacrificer.

Further, who properly is the Prieſt of the new Teſtament: 1. Euſebius ſheweth: We alſo do ſacrifice and burne incenſe, otherwhile celebrating the memoriall of that great ſacrifiee,&c, otherwhile conſecrating our ſelues to him, eiuſq; pontifici, and his prieſt,&c. He giueth the name and title of Prieſthood only vnto Chriſt.

Lib.1.de demonſtrat.Euangelic.c.10.

2. Tertullian alſo ſaith: We muſt offer a gift vnto God, prayer and thankſgiuing, per Chriſtum Ieſum catholicum patris ſacerdotem: by Chriſt the vniuerſall prieſt of his Father,&c. There is not then any other Prieſt of the new Teſtament, Chriſt being the vniuerſall and generall, and ſo the ſole Prieſt of his Father.

So that if they faile of proofe for their ſacrifice, they fall ſhort alſo for their Prieſthood.

Concord.cap.131.pag.904.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE VERTVE AND efficacie falſely aſcribed to the ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

The Papiſts.

1. They blaſphemouſly affirme, that it is a ſacrifice propitiatorie, that is, auailable to obtaine, ex opere operato, by the very worke wrought, remiſſion and pardon of all their ſinnes. Trident. Concil.ſeſſ.22.can.3.

33.Error.

*Argum.*1. There were vnder the law ſacrifices truly propitiatorie, and auailable to take away ſin, as Iob 1. he ſacrificed for the ſinnes of his ſonnes: and Leuit.chap.4.5. there are deſcribed diuers ſacrifices for ſinne. If then the ſacrifice of the croſſe, which was ſhadowed foorth in theſe ſacrifices, did not hinder them to be propitiatorie, much leſſe doth it hinder the ſacrifice of the Maſſe to be ſuch, which is a commemoratiue alſo of the paſſion of Chriſt: Bellar.lib.2.de Miſſ.c.2.

Anſw. Firſt, the ſacrifices of the law did not truly purge ſinnes as concerning the conſcience, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.9.10. but were figures onely and types of the ſacrifice of the croſſe, which doth only purge our conſcience from dead workes: ibid.verſ.14. And it is vntrue, that Bellarmine to this replieth, that thoſe ſacrifices were figures alſo of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe and of the Euchariſt: for neither doe wee acknowledge any ſuch ſacrifice of the Maſſe; and the Euchariſt hath relation to Chriſts ſacrifice alreadie paſt, as the old ſacrifices did ſhadow it foorth then to come: ſo that the Euchariſt is not the ſubſtance of the ſhadow of ſacrifices; but the paſſion of Chriſt is the ſubſtance both of their ſacrifices and our Sacraments. Secondly, Bellarmine himſelfe granteth, that the legall ſacrifices did not iuſtifie men before God, as ex opere operato, by the worke wrought, but only ſerued for the expiation of legall faults: therefore the argument followeth not from the ſacrifices of the law to the ſacrifices of the Maſſe, which he affirmeth to be propitiatorie, ex opere operato. Thirdly, all this being granted to be true of the ſacrifices of the law, yet he hath proued nothing for the Maſſe, which wee denie to be a ſacrifice.

Heb.5.1. Argum.2. Heb.5.1. Euery Prieſt is ordained to offer gifts and ſacrifices for ſins: but in the Church now there are Prieſts properly ſo called: Ergo, they offer for ſinnes: Bellarm.ibid.argum.3.

Anſw. I haue ſhewed before, that there remaineth now no externall Prieſthood in the Church but
1.Pet.2.5. onely a ſpirituall, to offer vp ſpirituall ſacrifices to God through Chriſt, 1.Pet.2.5. and that the true
Heb.7.26. Prieſthood in the new Teſtament reſteth only in the perſon of Chriſt: Heb.7.26. Such an high Prieſt it became vs to haue, which is holy, harmeleſſe, vndefiled, ſeparate from ſinners, higher then the heauens, &c. But theſe properties are only in Chriſt: Ergo, he is the only Prieſt of the new Teſtament. This argument then beggeth the thing in queſtion, and therefore concludeth not.

Argum.3. Chriſt himſelfe ſaith in the inſtitution, This is my blood ſhed for you for the remiſſion of ſinnes: Ergo, the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is auailable for remiſſion of ſinnes: for it forgiueth ſinnes either as a ſacrifice, or a Sacrament: but as a Sacrament it is onely appointed for our ſpirituall nouriſhment: Ergo, as a ſacrifice, &c. Bellarm.lib.2.de miſſ.c.2.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. First, Chriſt inſtituted no ſacrifice, as we declared before, but only a Sacrament in remembrance of his death and paſſion. Secondly, the Euchariſt as a ſacrifice neither forgiueth ſin, nor giueth aſſurance thereof; becauſe it is no ſacrifice at all, but as a Sacrament rightly adminiſtred it ſerueth to aſſure our faith of remiſſion of ſins, by the death of Chriſt: which is an effect of our ſpirituall nouriſhment, to aſſure vs of our ſpirituall health, which is the remiſſion of our ſinnes: but it doth not by it owne vertue conferre remiſſion of ſinnes, neither profiteth by the worke wrought: for the Apoſtle
Heb.11.6. ſaith, that without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Hebr.11.6. Wherefore no action is accepted of God not proceeding of faith.

Argum.1. The Apoſtle ſaith, Where there is remiſſion of ſinnes, there is no more ſacrifice for ſinne, Heb.10.18. Heb.10.18. Seeing then remiſſion of ſinnes is fully obtained by the death and ſacrifice of Chriſt, there can be no more ſacrifice for ſinne: Ergo, the Maſſe is no ſacrifice for ſinne.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, there are two things required to the remiſſion of ſinnes: firſt, the finding out, or paying the price of our redemption. Secondly, the application thereof: The firſt is done by the ſacrifice of the croſſe, ſo that there neede no more offering for the ſatisfying for ſinne: but for the application of that remedie a ſacrifice is yet neceſſarie, which is the Maſſe: lib.1. de Miſſ.c.25. reſp.ad argum.2.

Contra. Firſt, the ſacrifices of the law alſo did ſerue to applie the vertue of Chriſts croſſe, and yet the Apoſtle excludeth them by this reaſon, that where there is remiſſion of ſinnes, there is no more ſacrifice: wherefore if the Apoſtles reaſon be good, it concludeth againſt ſacrifices applicatorie alſo. Secondly, to applie the benefit of Chriſts paſſion, a ſacrifice is not neceſſarie; God hath appointed the preaching of the word, and the miniſtration of the Sacraments to that end. Thirdly, the power of Chriſts croſſe is not ſeene only in finding out the price of our redemption, but in giuing and conferring the ſame actually vpon all beleeuers, to whom alſo he giueth that grace to beleeue by the vertue Heb.10.14. of his croſſe: Heb.10 With one offering hath he conſecrated for euer them that are ſanctified.

Secondly he anſwereth, that the Maſſe doth not immediatly giue remiſſion of ſinnes, but obtaineth the gift of repentance for ſinners, whereby they are ſtirred vp, to ſeeke for remiſſion of ſinnes: And if it worke not in them repentance, as it doth not in all, yet it worketh a diſpoſition to repentance, which yet helpeth them not, becauſe they reiect the calling of God, Bellarm.lib.2.de Miſſ.c.5.

Contra. Firſt, if the ſacrifice of the Maſſe conferre not remiſſion of ſinnes, and yet you ſay the Sacrament doth conferre grace: then is the Sacrament more auailable, where Chriſt is not offered, then the ſacrifice wherein he is offered. Secondly, if the Maſſe purchaſe remiſſion of ſinne no otherwiſe but by working repentance, then is it not at all auailable for the dead, as you ſay it is, to whom repentance is not giuen. Thirdly, if in the Maſſe Chriſt were offered vp verily and indeed, as you ſay, why ſhould not the Maſſe giue then remiſſion of ſinnes? which is the immediate and proper effect of the ſacrifice and croſſe of Chriſt. Fourthly, neither doth the Maſſe giue repentance to all thoſe, for whom it is ſaid, for many of them remaine impenitent ſtill: and as for that diſpoſition you ſpeake of, ſeeing it benefiteth them not, they might as good be without it. And thus by your owne grant, the Maſſe is altogether vnprofitable, neither auaileable to remit ſins, nor to giue repentance to him, that is otherwiſe diſpoſed.

Heb.9.22. Argum.2. Heb.9.22. Without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion; but in the Maſſe, there is no ſhedding of blood: Ergo, no remiſſion.

Bellarmine anſwereth, firſt to the propoſition, that the Apoſtles meaning is, not that blood ſhould be ſhed ſo often as there is remiſſion of ſinnes, but that there is no remiſſion of ſinnes, but in the vertue tie of the ſhedding of blood, lib.1. de Miſſ.c.25. reſp. ad argum.3. Secondly, to the aſſumption hee ſaith, that the blood of Chriſt is really ſhed in the oblation of the Maſſe ibid.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle meaneth not the vertue of blood onely, but the actuall ſhedding of blood, verſ.22. Almoſt all things are by the Law purged with blood, and without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion: as the legall purging then was by blood, ſo is the remiſſion of ſinnes by blood; but there was the very actuall ſhedding of the blood of ſacrifices: Ergo, conſequently there muſt be ſo in the remiſſion of ſinnes. Secondly, if Chriſts blood be really ſhed in the Maſſe, then is Chriſt ſlaine in the Maſſe: for without death, there is no ſhedding of blood: becauſe that the ſhedding of blood is to confirme a Teſtament, and a Teſtament is not ratified but by death, Heb.7.17. Heb.7.17.

*Argum.*3. The Maſſe is no ſacrifice at all, as we haue ſhewed before: Ergo, it is not a ſacrifice propitiatorie: the firſt alſo may be thus further proued: The ſacrifice of Chriſt is of infinite vertue. Heb. 10.14. With one offering hath he conſecrated for euer, them that are ſanctified: but Valor Miſſæ finitus, the valour or vertue of the Maſſe is finite, Bellarm.c.4. prop.4. lib.2. Ergo, in the Maſſe Chriſt is not ſacrificed. And againe, no finite thing can conferre that which is infinite; but remiſſion of ſinnes is infinite, that is, for euer: Heb.10.17. Their ſinnes and iniquities will I remember no more; but the vertue of the Maſſe is finite, and therefore is often iterated: Ergo, it doth not conferre remiſſion of ſinnes. If it ſhall be here obiected, that this reaſon alſo may bee vrged againſt the often receiuing of the Euchariſt; I anſwere, that the Euchariſt, doth not as a ſacrifice actually and really conferre remiſſion of ſinnes by the worke wrought, but onely inſtrumentally aſſure vs of remiſſion of ſinnes, by faith in the blood of Chriſt: and therefore the reaſon is not like againſt the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, and the Sacrament of the Euchariſt. Heb.10.14.17.

Interrelig cap.22. Chriſtum incruento & impaſſibili modo ſiſtimus patri, non vt remiſſionem peccatorum promereamur,&c. We doe after an vnbloodie and impaſſible manner preſent Chriſt to his Father; not to merite thereby remiſſion of ſinnes, but that calling to minde the memorie of the Lords Paſſion, we giue him thanks for our ſaluation purchaſed vpon the Croſſe, and by faith apply the ſame vnto vs: Ergo, the Maſſe in it ſelfe conferreth not remiſſion of ſinnes.

See further euidence out of their owne decrees: part.2 cauſ.1.qu.1.c.80. Scito quoniam ſanctum eſt, quod offertur in altari,&c. Know, that it is holy, which is offered vpon the Altar: but thou non tam ſanctificaris ex hoſtijs, quàm pollueris ex peccatis; art not ſo much ſanctified by the hoaſt, as polluted by thy dead workes, &c. If the ſinne of the partie doth hinder the worke of the ſacrifice, then doth it not profit ex opere operato, by the very worke of the ſacrifice onely.

Doctor Taylor holy Martyr witneſſeth the ſame: Chriſts body offered vpon the Croſſe was the propitiatorie ſacrifice, full, perfect, and ſufficient vnto ſaluation, for all that beleeue in him: Our ſacrifice is onely memoratiue in the remembrance of Chriſts death and paſſion, a ſacrifice of thankeſgiuing, and other ſacrifice hath the Church of God none. p.1521. Pag.1382.1.30

Now further touching this point. 1. The 6. ancient Greeke Fathers had no ſuch conceite, that the Maſſe ſacrifice was propitiatorie, and gaue remiſſion of ſinnes by the verie worke wrought; but as they held Chriſt to be there ſacrificed, ſo alſo was the remiſſion of ſinnes: Chryſoſtome ſaith, Chriſtum in Euchariſtia pati & occidi: That Chriſt ſuffereth in the Euchariſt, and is ſlaine: And Gregorie Nyſſen. giueth the reaſon: Non eſſet idoneum ad edendum corpus victimæ animatum: The liue bodie of a ſacrifice is not fit to be eaten, &c. their meaning was not that Chriſt was truly crucified, or died againe; for that had beene contrarie to the Apoſtle, Chriſt dieth no more: but that it was in myſterie and memorie of his death: no otherwiſe is remiſſion of ſinnes conferred, but by a fruitfull commemoration of Chriſts death: And ſo Euſebius well expreſſeth: Igitur & ſacrificamus, & incendimus, alias memoriam magni illius ſacrificij,&c. celebrantes,&c. Therefore wee alſo ſacrifice and burne incenſe, ſometime celebrating the memorie of that great ſacrifice, &c. it is not then the ſacrifice it ſelfe, but the memorie thereof. Hom 24.in 1.Corinth. Hom. 1. de Paſch. Rom.8.9. Lib.1.de demonſtr.Euangel. c.10.

2 Auguſtine thinketh the only ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the croſſe to be propitiatorie, Quoniam ſingulari & ſolo vero ſacrificio, pro nobis Chriſti ſanguis effuſus eſt, Becauſe by the ſingular & only true ſacrifice, for vs the blood of Chriſt was ſhed, &c. If Chriſts blood were onely ſhed by that ſingular ſacrifice vpon the croſſe, then that was only the true propitiatorie ſacrifice: but Proſper yet more euidently writeth: Quæ eſt propitiatio, niſi ſacrificium? & quod ſacrificium, niſi occiſio illius agni, qui tulit peccatum mundi,&c. What propitiation is there, but a ſacrifice, and what ſacrifice but the ſlaying of the Lambe, which tooke away the ſinne of the world. 4 See Gratian's decrees before alleaged: concerning the opinion of the moderne Popiſh writers: it is worth the marking, to ſee how they are here in opinion diuided: [a] Ribera denieth that Chriſt dieth in the Maſſe ſacrifice: but [b] Cardinall Allen, granteth, that Chriſt dieth, is ſlaine, and crucified: ſome thinke, that the Maſſe is propitiatorie, for mortall ſinnes, as [c] Suarez: ſome for veniall onely; [d] Melchior Canus: And a doubt there is, whether theſe veniall be remitted immediatly, by the worke wrought, or mediatly by ſome act firſt wrought in the partie that receiueth pardon: ſome affirme it, as Soto, Carduba, ſome decree it as [e] Suarez: ſome thinke further, that the Maſſe is not auaileable at all for ſinnes, but for the releaſing of the puniſhment onely: ſome miſlike this opinion, as [f] Gregorius de Valentia. It ſeemeth then to be a meere deuiſe, this conceite of the propitiatorie ſacrifice, wherein they are ſo vncertaine and variable in opinion.

The Papiſts.

34.Error.

2. THe ſacrifice of the Maſſe is not onely propitiatorie for ſinnes, but auaileable to obtaine all other benefites, as peace, tranquillitie, health, and ſuch like, Bellarm.cap.3.

Ezra.6.10.

*Argum.*1. The Sacrifices of the law were auaileable for obtaining of temporall benefites, as Dauid by his ſacrifice turned away the plague, 2. Sam. 24. and the Iſraelites did offer ſacrifice for the life of Darius and his children, Ezra.6.10. Ergo, the Euchariſt is much more auaileable, Bellarmin, cap.3.

Heb.9.13.

Anſwere. Firſt, the argument followeth not, for the ſacrifices of the Law being temporall and carnall, might ſerue for temporall bleſſings; as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.9.13. They did ſanctifie, as touching the purifying of the fleſh: but the euerlaſting ſacrifice of Chriſt is to procure eternall bleſſings. Secondly, the plague was ceaſed before Dauid ſacrificed, for the Angell was bid to ſtay his hand, verſ.16. ſo that Dauids ſacrifice following, verſ.25. was rather a ſacrifice Euchariſticall, than impetratorie: and the Iſraelites are not commanded to ſacrifice, but to pray for the life of the King, verſ.10.

1.Tim.2.1.

*Argum.*2. S.Paul willeth, that prayers and interceſſions ſhould be made for all men, eſpecially for Kings, that wee may leade a godly and a peaceable life, 1.Tim.2.1. Theſe are the prayers which are made in the celebration of the Maſſe, Bellarm.

Epiſt.59.

Anſwere. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all prayers, made by whomſoeuer, as it appeareth, verſe 1. Therefore this place is vnfitly applied to the prayers of Prieſts in the Maſſe. Secondly, this place prooueth, that temporall benefites are obtained by faithfull prayers, not by the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, which S.Paul neuer knew. Thirdly, Auguſtine indeede expoundeth this place of the publike prayers of the Church, vſed in the adminiſtration of the Sacrament: for hee calleth it, Domini menſam, the Lords table, not the Altar: he meaneth nothing leſſe then your Popiſh Maſſe.

The Proteſtants.

IT is contrarie to the inſtitution of Chriſt, to apply the Sacrament for any ſuch temporall or externall vſe.

*Argum.*1. It was ordained to be receiued in remembrance of Chriſts death, as our Sauiour ſaith, Doe this in remembrance of me, to aſſure vs by faith, of remiſſion of ſinnes, and other ſpirituall bleſſings: not to giue vs aſſurance of health, peace, life, proſperitie; for the obtaining of ſuch bleſſings, according to the will of God, other meanes are appointed. The miniſterie of the Sacraments no more ſerueth for ſuch vſes, then the preaching of the word.

Heb.9.12.

*Argum.*2. The Apoſtle maketh this difference betweene the legall ſacrifices, and the ſacrifice of Chriſt: They ſanctified as touching the purifying of the fleſh: but the blood of Chriſt, which through the eternall ſpirit offered vp himſelfe,&c. doth purge our conſcience from dead workes, to ſerue the liuing God: wherefore the end and vſe of Chriſts ſacrifice, is, to obtaine eternall redemption for vs: temporall bleſſings wee obtaine alſo through him: but all his members haue them not, nor alwayes: but eternall redemption by him, all beleeuers obtaine: wherefore this onely is the end and vſe of his ſacrifice.

And further the ancient name of this Sacrament, called the Euchariſt, of giuing of thankes, ſheweth the vſe thereof rather to bee in giuing of thankes for benefites receiued, then in praying for the ſame: and ſo it may bee gathered, that ſacrifices were vſed vnder the law, to teſtifie their thankfulneſſe after ſome temporall deliuerance, as from famine, or captiuitie, for the obtaining whereof they vſed publike faſting and prayer, as Ioel.2.16. Sanctifie a faſt, call an aſſemblie.&c. Let the Prieſts weepe betweene the porch and the altar,&c. Theſe were the meanes which they vſed in their diſtreſſe, Prayer and faſting: And againe, verſ.14. Who knoweth, if hee will returne, and leaue a bleſſing, a meate offring, and a drinke offring,&c. Theſe ſacrifices were vſed after their deliuerance, as teſtifying their thankeſgiuing.

Let vs ſee what antiquitie ſaith, *Liberius decret.*1. Si euenerit fames, aut peſtilentia,&c. If there fall out a famine, or the peſtilence,&c. Let them intreat Gods mercie, with faſting, almes, prayers,&c. He ſaith not, Let a Maſſe be ſaid.

*Trullan.can.*26. Ad viuificationem, & peccatorum remiſſionem,&c. For our quickening and the remiſſion of ſinnes, ſolam oblationem,&c. That they miniſter the oblation onely to the people: the oblation then in the Euchariſt ſerueth onely for remiſſion of ſinnes.

1. Chryſoſtome well ſheweth to what purpoſes the Euchariſt is auaileable: Ipſa menſa animæ noſtra vis eſt, nerui mentis, fiducia vinculum, ſpes, vita, &c. This table is the ſtrength of the ſoule, the ſinewes of the minde, the bond of our confidence, our hope, our life, &c. theſe are ſpirituall, not temporall benefites.

Homil. 24. in 1. ad Corinth.

2 Tertullian ſaith, Sacrificamus pro ſalute imperatoris, &c. ſed quomodo præcepit Deus, pura prece: We ſacrifice for the health of the Emperour, but as God hath commanded, by pure prayer, &c. but if the Maſſe had beene ſo auaileable, to obtaine ſuch benefites, it ſhould not haue beene omitted. In the moderne Africane and Æthiopike Church, they neuer vſe to carrie the Sacrament to the ſicke: which ſheweth, that they vſe not to apply it as a remedie for bodily health.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, FOR WHOM the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is auaileable.

The Papiſts.

First, they affirme that Maſſe may be ſaid and offered for all the liuing, yea for Pagans and Infidels, for men abſent as well as preſent: for S. Paul willeth prayers and ſupplications to bee made for all men, 1. Tim. 2. 1. Bellarm. cap. 6.

35. Error.

Secondly, the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is auaileable for the dead which are in Purgatorie, Bellarm. cap. 7. Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 22. can. 3.

Thirdly, Maſſe may be rightly ſaid in the remembrance and for the honour of Saints, with inuocation of them alſo in the prayers of the Church, Bellarm cap. 8.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtles taught the Church to keepe a memorie or inuocation of the Saints in this ſacrifice, and that there ſhould bee ſpeciall prayers for the dead: for theſe and ſuch like were the things (no doubt) that Saint Paul ſaith hee would ſet in order when hee came, 1. Cor. 11. 34. Rhemiſt. ibid.

1. Cor. 11. 34.

Anſwere. 1. To the place out of Timothie we haue anſwered before, that it is vnderſtood generally of all prayers made by the faithfull: neither doth it follow, it is lawfull to pray for all men, and therefore the Sacrament is auaileable for all men: For theſe are two diuers things; Prayer is an effect of our faith, which we are commanded one to make for another: the Sacrament is an inſtrumentall or miniſteriall cauſe of our faith; the benefite whereof is to them onely that worthily receiue it, becauſe to them onely it is a Sacrament, by preſenting the viſible ſignes to their eyes.

2 It is too great boldneſſe for you, without Scripture, to affirme, that theſe ſuperſtitious rites of yours were thoſe very orders, which the Apoſtle promiſed at his comming to eſtabliſh; but either they were ſuch as pertained not to the adminiſtration of the Sacrament, or were but accidentall orders meete for the Church of Corinth, and not neceſſarie for all times and places.

Argum. 2. The ſacrifice of the Croſſe was offered for all; the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is a repreſentation of the Croſſe: Ergo, it may be offered for all. Bellarm. c. 6.

Anſwere. Firſt, the ſacrifice of Chriſt was not offered for all men in generall, but onely for the children of God: Iohn 11. 52. Chriſt dyed to gather together in one the children of God, which were ſcattered: and if Chriſt prayed not for the world, Iohn 17. 9. much leſſe would hee die for the world.

Secondly, we denie any ſuch ſacrifice of the Maſſe to be offered at all in Chriſts Church; thirdly, it followeth not, that ſo many ſhould be partakers of the Sacrament and repreſentation of Chriſts death, as ſhall be partakers of his death: for he died for many yet vncalled and vnregenerate, but none but the faithfull are to be admitted to the Sacrament.

Argum. 3. The ſacrifices of the olde teſtament were offered for the dead, as Iudas Macchabeus is commended for ſo doing, 2. Macchab. 12. 45. Ergo, the ſacrifices of the new may likewiſe be vſed. If it be here anſwered, that this booke is not canonicall; yet for the matter of ſtorie, it is of as good credite as Ioſeph or Saluſt, and ſheweth, that this hath beene an ancient cuſtome in the Church to ſacrifice, and make prayer for the dead, Bellarm. c. 7.

2. Macch. 12. 45.

Anſwere. Firſt, for a matter of fact, we refuſe not this ſtorie, and it may be, that ſuch a thing Iudas did: but this booke erreth in commending it to be well done; as likewiſe, chap. 14. 41. Razis is commended for killing himſelfe. Secondly, the Iewes to this day haue no ſuch cuſtome, to pray for the dead. Thirdly, here ſacrifice is made for manifeſt idolaters, verſe 40. whom this author notwithſtanding commendeth for godly men, verſe 45. and it is contrarie alſo to the practiſe of the Popiſh Church to pray for the notorious wicked.

2. Macch. 14. 41.

The Proteſtants.

First, the Sacrament (for externall ſacrifice therein wee acknowledge none) is onely ordained for their comfort that doe receiue it: neither can one receiue the Sacrament for another, no more

4 See Gratian's decrees before alleaged: concerning the opinion of the moderne Popiſh writers: it is worth the marking, to ſee how they are here in opinion diuided: [a] Ribera denieth that Chriſt dieth in the Maſſe ſacrifice: but [b] Cardinall Allen, granteth, that Chriſt dieth, is ſlaine, and crucified: ſome thinke, that the Maſſe is propitiatorie, for mortall ſinnes, as [c] Suarez: ſome for veniall onely: [d] Melchior Canus: And a doubt there is, whether theſe veniall be remitted immediatly, by the worke wrought, or mediatly by ſome act firſt wrought in the partie that receiueth pardon: ſome affirme it, as Soto, Carduba, ſome decree it as [e] Suarez: ſome thinke further, that the Maſſe is not auaileable at all for ſinnes, but for the releaſing of the puniſhment onely: ſome miſlike this opinion, as [f] Gregorius de Valentia: It ſeemeth then to be a meere deuiſe, this conceite of the propitiatorie ſacrifice, wherein they are ſo vncertaine and variable in opinion.

The Papiſts.

34.Error. 2. THe ſacrifice of the Maſſe is not onely propitiatorie for ſinnes, but auaileable to obtaine all other benefites, as peace, tranquillitie, health, and ſuch like, Bellarm.cap.3.

*Argum.*1. The Sacrifices of the law were auaileable for obtaining of temporall benefites, as Dauid by his ſacrifice turned away the plague, 2. Sam. 24. and the Iſraelites did offer ſacrifice for the life of Darius and his children, Ezra.6.10. Ergo, the Euchariſt is much more auaileable, Bellarmin, cap.3. (Ezra.6.10.)

Anſwere. Firſt, the argument followeth not, for the ſacrifices of the Law being temporall and carnall, might ſerue for temporall bleſſings; as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.9.13. They did ſanctifie, as touching the purifying of the fleſh: but the euerlaſting ſacrifice of Chriſt is to procure eternall bleſſings. Secondly, the plague was ceaſed before Dauid ſacrificed, for the Angell was bid to ſtay his hand, verſ.16. ſo that Dauids ſacrifice following, verſ.25. was rather a ſacrifice Euchariſticall, than impetratorie: and the Iſraelites are not commanded to ſacrifice, but to pray for the life of the King, verſ.10. (Heb.9.13.)

*Argum.*2. S.Paul willeth, that prayers and interceſſions ſhould be made for all men, eſpecially for Kings, that wee may leade a godly and a peaceable life, 1.Tim.2.1. Theſe are the prayers which are made in the celebration of the Maſſe, Bellarm. (1.Tim. 2.1.)

Anſwere. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all prayers, made by whomſoeuer, as it appeareth, verſe 1. Therefore this place is vnfitly applied to the prayers of Prieſts in the Maſſe. Secondly, this place proueth, that temporall benefites are obtained by faithfull prayers, not by the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, which S.Paul neuer knew. Thirdly, Auguſtine indeede expoundeth this place of the publike prayers of the Church, vſed in the adminiſtration of the Sacrament: for hee calleth it, Domini menſam, the Lords table, not the Altar: he meaneth nothing leſſe then your Popiſh Maſſe. 2. Macch. 14. 41.

The Proteſtants.

First, the Sacrament (for externall ſacrifice therein wee acknowledge none) is onely ordained for their comfort that doe receiue it: neither can one receiue the Sacrament for another, no more hen he may bee baptized in the ſtead of another: the prayers which are offered vp in the Euchariſt, may profit others, that are not preſent, but not the ſacramentall action it ſelfe in receiuing eating and drinking.

Secondly, neither doth the celebration of the Sacrament profite the dead, as wee haue ſhewed before, that it is in vaine to pray for them.

Thirdly, neither are the Saints, either then or at any other time to be prayed vnto, or either by this, or any other religious worſhip to be honoured.

*Argum.*1. All theſe ſuperſtitious obſeruances are cleane contrarie and repugnant to the inſtitution of Chriſt. Firſt, hee ſaith, Take ye, eate ye, doe this: wherefore to their comfort onely the Sacrament worketh, that doe receiue it, and are doers in that action: the benefite thereof then is not extended to the abſent, but onely to the partakers. Secondly, the dead can feele no comfort by it, becauſe they can neither eate nor drinke it, nor be doers therein. Thirdly, Chriſt ſaith, Doe this in remembrance of me: he ſaith not, in remembrance of Angels, Apoſtles, Saints: but onely of me. Therefore it is contrarie to the inſtitution to vſe any commemoration of Saints in the Sacrament.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Saints are not remembred in the Maſſe, as Chriſt is: for his death is there repreſented and remembred, ſo is not the death and paſſion of the Saints: but they are remembred as our mediators and interceſſors. *Bellarm.c.*8.

Contra. Firſt, there are but two kindes of commemorations; one is with worſhip & adoration; the other is Euchariſticall, when we giue thanks in the memoriall of the Martyrs and Saints, for ſuch excellent inſtruments: this commemoration may be made of the Apoſtles and Saints: the other is peculiar to Chriſt in the Sacrament; and yet they do aſſociate vnto him, the Virgin Mary, in that kinde of commemoration, thus ſaying in the Maſſe; Worſhipping the memoriall of the Virgin. Secondly, they doe in their Maſſe vſe commemoration euen of the death and paſſion alſo of their Saints: as thus,

Tu per Thoma ſanguinem, quem pro te impendit,
Fac nos Chriſte ſcandere, quò Thomas aſcendit.
By the blood of Thomas, which for thee he did ſpend,
Grant vs Chriſt with Thomas to aſcend.

This was Thomas of Canturburie.

Thirdly, the remembrance, which is to be made in the Sacrament, is expounded by S. Paul, to be a ſhewing of the Lords death, 1 Cor.11.25.26. but the death of none but Chriſt is to be ſhewed forth, and this Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth: Ergo, he onely is to be remembred. 1.Cor.11.25.

*Arg.*2. He onely is to be inuocated, or we are onely to draw neere vnto him by prayer, by whom we haue an entrance vnto God, Heb.10.19 20. but by the blood of Ieſus we haue entrance only, Ergo. Heb.10.19.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt and the Saints are not mediators alike, for Chriſt is a Mediator by himſelfe, the Saints by him: and as wee praying one for another, doe no iniurie to Chriſts mediation; ſo neither the Saints praying for vs, through Chriſt; nor wee praying to them to pray for vs. Againe, in the Maſſe, we pray not directly vnto Saints, as thus; O Peter pray for me: but indirectly, we pray that God would heare their prayer for vs. Bellarm.ibid.

*Contra.*1. If Chriſt be the Mediator both of the prayers of the Saints and ours, then is the mediation of Saints ſuperfluous; for ſeeing we may haue acceſſe to the Sonne himſelfe, it is in vaine to runne to the ſeruant. Secondly, we pray not as mediators one for another, but as humble ſuters, not with authoritie, but of charitie; therefore the compariſon betweene our prayers and the Saints prayers is not like. Thirdly, though the Saints pray in heauen for vs, as fellow members, in reſpect of their inward deſire; yet it followeth not, that wee ſhould pray vnto them, no more then wee pray to men liuing that pray for vs. Fourthly, your indirect inuocation of Saints in the Maſſe, when ye pray thus, by whoſe merits and prayers, grant we may be defended, is both blaſphemous in leauing out the Mediation of Chriſt; and preſumptuous, in making your ſelues mediators of the prayers of the Saints: for they pray, that the prayer of the Saints may be heard. Fifthly, yet is not our argument anſwered, that we muſt draw neere only to him, by whom we haue an entrance, which are the Apoſtles direct words: and I thinke they will not ſay, that we haue entrance by the blood of Saints.

Auguſtine ſaith, Quis offeret ſacrificium corporis Chriſti, niſi pro ijs, qui ſunt membra Chriſti? Who will offer the ſacrifice of the bodie of Chriſt, but for the members of Chriſt? *Lib.*1. *de Origin.anim. cap.*9. Therefore the Sacrament cannot be celebrated for Pagans and Infidels, who are no members of Chriſt.

Againe, he ſaith: Nos Martyribus non conſtituimus templa, ſacerdotia, ſacra aut ſacrificia: Wee doe not erect either temples, Prieſts, ſeruice or ſacrifices to Martyrs, De ciuitate Dei.lib 8.*cap.*27. Ergo, it is not lawfull to vſe the Sacrament for the honour of Saints.

*Concil.Carthaginenſ.*3.*can.*6. Placuit vt corporibus defunctorum Euchariſtia non detur, dictum eſt enim à Domino, Accipite, edite, cadauera autem nec accipere poſſunt, nec edere: We think good that the Euchariſt be not giuen to the bodies of the dead, for the Lord ſaid, Take, eate: Now dead bodies cannot take and eate, &c. The Sacrament then is appliable to none, but to thoſe that take and eate; but neither the dead nor any that are abſent, can take and eate: Ergo.

In defence of this truth, that the Maſſe is not a propitiatorie ſacrifice for the quick, and dead, many holy and excellent Martyrs willingly rendered their liues: As Rowland Taylor, Iohn Philpot, Iohn Bradford, Biſhop Hooper, with others. *Fox.*p.1471.col.1. Pag.1337.1.28

Their owne decrees thus teſtifie, decr. par. 3. diſt. 1. c. 40. Clemens. Mortui non obuoluantur veſtimentis altaris: That the dead ſhould not be wrapped in the altar-cloathes, &c. But the ſacrifice of the altar is more then the altar-cloath, if this muſt not be communicated to the dead, much leſſe the other. Againe, decr. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 6. Innocent. 3. Iniuriam facit martyri, qui orat pro martyre: He doth wrong to a Martyr, that prayeth for a Martyr: But ſo doe the Papiſts in praying, that God would heare the prayers of Martyrs, Ergo they offer them wrong.

1 Chryſoſtome ſaith: Dum in hac vita ſumus, vt terra nobis cœlum ſit, facit hoc myſterium: As long as we are in this life, this myſterie maketh the earth, to bee as heauen vnto vs, &c. the vſe of the Euchariſt then ſerueth for them, that be aliue: the moderne Greeke Church is here ſomewhat declined: yet they are not ſo groſſe in this point as the Romane Church: Ieremie Patriarke ſaith, that the Euchariſt ſanctifieth two wayes, Ipſa mediatione ſiue oblationis actu: Either by the mediation and by the act of oblation, or participatione by the receiuing and communicating: the firſt way hee confeſſeth it belongeth both to the liuing and dead, but not the other way, for the dead can no longer eate nor drinke. Hom. 24. in 1. epiſt. ad Cor. Cenſur. oriental. c. 13.

2 See the Councell of Carthage before alleaged for the Africane Church: the Æthiopike Church at this preſent, vſeth no Maſſes for the dead, as Zaga Zabo their Biſhop confeſſeth. Damianus a Goes.

3 Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. artic. 2. Thirdly, Chriſt in the inſtitution of the Lords ſupper, doth not command the Prieſts to offer for others either quicke or dead, &c. Saxonic. THE FIFTH QVESTION, OF PRIuate Maſſes.

The Papiſts.

If any man ſhall ſay, that priuate Maſſes, wherein the Prieſt alone by himſelfe doth communicate, are vnlawfull, and therefore to be aboliſhed; we pronounce him accurſed, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 22. can. 8. 36. Error.

Argum. 1. The reaſon of the Councell is this, becauſe that many doe communicate ſpiritually in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, that are not preſent, and ſo the fruit thereof being publike, the Maſſe it ſelfe is in this behalfe not priuate, but publike: Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 22. cap. 6.

Anſwere. Firſt, a ſpirituall communion of the faithfull, wee grant euen without a Sacrament, which is not the effect of the Sacrament, but by faith, Epheſ. 4. 4. There is one bodie, one ſpirit: And in the celebration of the Sacrament, there is alſo an exerciſe of this ſpirituall communion, the faithfull doe communicate with vs in our prayers, and in the profeſſion of the ſame faith: but they doe not communicate with vs in the Sacrament, or the fruite thereof. Secondly, to the ſacramentall communion is required a preſence of many: as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1. Cor. 10. 17. We that are many, are one bread and one bodie, becauſe we are partakers of one bread: ſo then the ſpirituall communion is one thing, the ſacramentall another: and we cannot be one bodie ſacramentally, vnleſſe wee communicate together in the Sacrament. Thirdly, as priuate prayer, though it may haue a publike fruite, yet it is priuate ſtill, ſo the Sacrament priuatly adminiſtred, though it might haue ſome publike effect, is yet priuate ſtill. Epheſ. 4. 4. 1. Cor. 10. 17.

Argum. 2. Prayer is profitable to him, that is prayed for, though he be not preſent; the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is a kinde of ſolemne prayer: Ergo, though it be priuate, it may be profitable. Bellarmin. lib. 2. de miſſ. c. 9.

Anſw. Firſt, we ſee that they are forſaken of the Scripture, for the proofe of their priuate Maſſes, and therefore are driuen to deuiſe reaſons of their owne. Secondly, there is not the ſame reaſon of a Sacrament (for ſacrifice therein, we acknowledge none) and of prayer: for a Sacrament is exhibited vnto men by the commandement of Chriſt, a prayer is exhibited vnto God from men, and therefore prayer may be priuate, becauſe, God, to whom we pray, heareth priuatly: And againe, we haue warrant in Scripture for priuat prayer, Matth. 6. 6. ſo haue we none for a priuat Maſſe. Secondly, Bellarm. confeſſeth that a Maſſe cannot be ſo priuate, Vt vni ſoli applicaretur: To be applied to one man alone, c. 9. yet priuate prayer may be made for one man alone: therfore the compariſon is not like betweene them. Thirdly, the prayers which are made in the Euchariſt for the whole congregation of Chriſts Church, may be profitable to thoſe that are abſent; but it followeth not therefore, that the ſacramentall action of eating and receiuing, ſhould be auaileable for them which are abſent. Matth. 6. 6.

Argum. 3. The ſacrifices of the law were Sacrifices, before the people did eate thereof: ſo the ſubſtance and making of a medicine is one thing, the ingredients, or taking of it, another: Ergo, neither is receiuing part of the ſubſtance or making of the ſacrifice of Chriſts bodie, but a conſequence only: therefore there may be a ſacrifice and Sacrament without it, Rhemiſt. 1. Cor. 11. ſect. 14.

Firſt, the argument followeth not from the ſacrifices and ceremonies of the law, to the Sacraments of the Goſpell: for they are much vnlike: it was not lawfull but for the Prieſts onely, and the males amongſt them to eate of the ſacrifices, Leuiticus 2. 3 6. 29. they may as well conclude hereupon, that none but Prieſts ſhould eate of the Sacraments of the new teſtament.

Secondly, the propoſition is alſo falſe, for the Paſchall Lambe, which of all the ſacrifices doth moſt properly reſemble the Euchariſt, was neither ſacrifice nor ſacrament, vnleſſe it were eaten.

Thirdly, we denie that there is any ſacrifice in the Euchariſt, but a ſacrament onely: and therefore the compariſon holdeth not betweene a ſacrifice, which conſiſted both of oblation to God, and the participation of the people that offered, and the Sacrament which Chriſt in his inſtitution offered not to God, but to his Diſciples.

Laſtly, neither doth the ſimilitude of a medicine conclude: for you cannot proue that the Sacrament not receiued hath vertue in it, as a medicine hath: for faith is requiſite to the worthie receiuing of the Sacrament, which is not neceſſarie in the applying of a medicine; and yet it is not properly called a medicine, vnleſſe being made, it be alſo applied, and receiued. And ſay it is a medicine vnreceiued, yet it profiteth not, vnleſſe it be vſed; ſo you haue gained nothing hereby, but that the Euchariſt is alſo an vnprofitable medicine, where it is not receiued.

The Proteſtants.

VVE vtterly condemne the ſuperſtitious practiſes of Popiſh Prieſts, who doe vſe to communicate alone in their Maſſes, the people ſtanding by, gazing and looking vpon him: yea, you might haue ſeene many Maſſes ſaid in one Church at once, almoſt in euery corner one, no perſon being preſent for the moſt part, but the Prieſt and his boy.

*Argum.*1. This priuate receiuing of the Sacrament is contrarie to the inſtitution of Chriſt, who ſaith, ſpeaking to many, Take ye, eate ye, and diuide this amongſt you: there muſt be then a diuiſion and diſtribution. S.Paul alſo ſaith, We that are many are one bread and one bodie, in as much as wee are partakers of one bread, 1.Cor.10.17. Ergo, many muſt communicate together. For the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the myſticall communion of the faithfull in this place, which doe all make but one bodie in Chriſt, (for ſo we doe communicate with the Church by faith, not onely in the Sacrament, but without it) but of the Sacramentall Communion of as many as receiue together: for how elſe can they be ſaid to be partakers of one bread, or loafe, vnleſſe they receiue together?

1.Cor.10.17.

Bellarmine anſwereth, firſt, all that which Chriſt commanded in the inſtitution to be done, is not of the eſſence of the Sacrament, nor alwaies to be obſerued; but in reſpect of perſon, time, and place: for if there be none worthie to miniſter the Sacrament to, yet it muſt bee celebrate notwithſtanding. *c.10.reſponſ.ad argum.*1.

Contra. Firſt, and doe you ſpeake, as you thinke, that all, which Chriſt commanded concerning the Sacrament, is not of neceſſitie to be obſerued: and yet all which your Church commandeth, muſt be kept: we may then iuſtly ſay vnto you, as Chriſt ſaid to the Phariſies, You reiect the commandement of God, to obſerue your owne tradition, Marke. 7.9. Secondly, all Chriſts precepts in the inſtitution of the Sacrament are of the ſame authoritie: for of them all hee ſaith (this doe ye) &c. then they may as well leaue all vndone, or any one of them, as another; and ſo they neede no more vſe conſecration of the Sacrament, than diſtribution, which in their owne learning is very abſurd. Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſaith, concerning the actions of breaking, taking, eating, &c. That, which I receiued of the Lord, haue I deliuered to you, 1.Cor.10 23. Hee maketh euery one of theſe of and belonging to the tradition and inſtitution of Chriſt.

Secondly, ſaith he, the Apoſtle concludeth affirmatiuely, that he which eateth the Euchariſt, is ioyned to Chriſt: but not negatiuely, he, which receiueth not the Euchariſt, is not ioyned vnto Chriſt: for this may be done in heart and deſire, Bellarm.reſp.ad 3.obiect.

Contra. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of a ſpirituall onely, but of a ſacramentall communion with Chriſt in this place: and therefore he ſaith, The bread which we breake is the communion of the bodie of Chriſt, &c. If the ſacramentall communion of Chriſts bodie bee in the breaking and diſtribution of bread, then where the bread is not broken and diſtributed, there is not that ſacramentall communion. So he ſaith, Wee that are many are one bread, becauſe wee are partakers of one bread. They then which partake not, are not ſacramentally one bread, though ſpiritually we denie not, but they are.

Act.2.42. *Argum.*2. Act 2.42. They continued in the Apoſtles doctrine and fellowſhip, and breaking of bread: It was then the vſe in the Primitiue Church to vſe diſtribution in the Sacrament.

Bellarm. It is true, yet it followeth not, that the Sacrament cannot bee celebrated without diſtribution.

Contra. It cannot be ſhewed that in the Primitiue Church, there was any celebration of the Euchariſt without diſtribution: Ergo, the argument followeth. The Apoſtles neuer celebrated the Euchariſt priuately, therefore it is vnlawfull ſo to doe.

*Argum.*3. The Apoſtle maketh a manifeſt difference betweene the Lords Supper, and other feaſts: for theſe might be priuate in their owne houſes, 1.Cor.11.22. Haue ye not houſes to eate and drinke in? but the other ought to be publike, verſ.33. They muſt one tarrie for another: Ergo, the Lords Supper muſt not be priuate.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the Sacrament, but of other feaſts, then vſed in the Church, which he calleth the Lords Supper: for he ſaith, one is hungrie, another is drunken: but in the Euchariſt, they did all eate alike, &c. Theſe then are the feaſts which the Apoſtle would haue common.

Contra. Firſt, it is true, that ſuch feaſts were then kept, which were called feaſts of loue: but in the end of thoſe feaſts they vſed to receiue the Sacrament: and therefore the Apoſtle reproueth them, becauſe, when they came together to eate the Euchariſt, they did eate their owne Supper afore, verſ.22. Secondly, it is euident, that the Apoſtle by the Lords Supper meaneth the Euchariſt, becauſe immediatly he inferreth the inſtitution of Chriſt, which had been impertinent, if he ſpake not of the Sacrament. And where he ſaith, that ye come not together vnto condemnation, it is euident, that hee ſpeaketh of comming together to the Lords table, wherein onely, and not at the common table, they eate and drinke their damnation, that doe it vnworthilie.

Argum.4. The word of God is not to be preached but to a congregation, nor Baptiſme to be adminiſtred where there is none to be baptized: Ergo, neither is the Euchariſt without communicants to be adminiſtred.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the reaſon is not alike: for the word and Sacraments are from God directed to men: but the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is directed vnto God, Bellarm.c.9.

Anſwer. Firſt, we denie any ſacrifice in the Euchariſt, but a Sacrament onely: and therefore as the one Sacrament of Baptiſme requireth ſome to bee baptized, ſo the other of the Euchariſt requireth communicants. Secondly, the Euchariſt is not directed vnto God but vnto men, no not in the words of conſecration, whereby they ſay it is made a ſacrifice: for theſe words, this is my bodie, whereby they ſay it is conſecrated to be a ſacrifice, are directed vnto men, if they vſe thoſe words, as Chriſt did: for theſe words follow in the Goſpell, This is my bodie, which is giuen for you: which words are by them left out in the Maſſe, that their craft ſhould not appeare, in peruerting the vſe of Chriſts words, which were ſpoken onely to his Apoſtles, and not directed vnto God.

Auguſtine ſaith, that, Sacramentum benedicitur, ſanctificatur, & ad diſtribuendum comminuitur: Epiſtol.59. That the Sacrament is bleſſed, ſanctified, and broken to be diſtributed: Ergo, where there is diſtribution, there muſt be many to receiue.

Can. Apoſtolor. 10. Fideles qui ingrediuntur eccleſiam, & ſanctam Communionem non perceperint, communione priuentur: The faithfull, which come into the Church, and receiue not the Communion, ſhall be excommunicate.

Clemens, epiſt. 2. Tanta in altari holocauſta offerantur, quanta populo ſufficere debeant: Let ſo much be offered, as may ſuffice all the people. Prouiſion muſt be made for all the companie to communicate: Ergo priuate Maſſes were not yet heard of in the Church.

See further teſtimonie out of their owne decrees: Par.3. diſtinct.2.c.10. Anacletus. Peracta conſecratione omnes communicent, &c. After conſecration, all muſt communicate, they which will not, let them be thruſt out of the Church: for thus the Apoſtles haue ordained, and the Romane Church ſo holdeth. C.17. Soter. In cœna Domini à quibuſdam, &c. Some men neglect to receiue the Euchariſt in the Lords Supper, which ought to be receiued, ab omnibus fidelibus, of all the faithfull: Ergo, priuate Sacraments are againſt their owne Canons.

Maſter Philpot holy Martyr: Chriſt ſaid, and the Miniſter ſaith in Chriſts behalfe to all that are preſent, Take ye, eate ye: wherefore as many as be preſent, and doe not communicate, breake Gods commandement in not receiuing the ſame: and the Miniſter is no iuſt Miniſter, that doth not diſtribute the Sacrament as Chriſt did to all, that are preſent: and where Gods word is tranſgreſſed, there is not Chriſt preſent, and conſequently no Sacrament. Fox pag.1816.col.1. Pag.1648.2.50

And further for the teſtimonie of forren Churches: 1. The Greekes to this day allow not of priuate Maſſes: and therefore they finde fault with the Romane Prieſts for ſaying three Maſſes in a day, and that the people in ſtead of communicating doe kiſſe the Prieſt. The Armenians ſay the Maſſe in the companie alwaies of two or three. Scanga.lib.2. Polonici.c.12. Theuet.lib.8. cap.25.

2. The Æthiopians likewiſe finde fault with the Latine Prieſts, that one alone ſaying Maſſe, without adminiſtring the Communion to thoſe which aſſiſted him: they alſo make a cake in bignes according to the number of the perſons that communicate, &c. Aluares c.30.

3. Confeſſ. of Auſpurg, cap.1. de Abuſib. The inſtitution doth ordaine, that there be a Communion, that is to ſay, that the Miniſters of the Church doe deliuer alſo to the reſt, the bodie and blood of our Sauiour. Harm.ſect.14. pag.461. Sweueland, chap.19. Therefore they reiected priuate Maſſes, becauſe the Lord did commend this Sacrament to his Diſciples to be vſed in common, &c. Wittemberg, chap.9. The ancient Church excommunicated them, which being preſent, while this Sacrament was adminiſtred, would not communicate with others. And to this purpoſe they alleage the decree of Anacletus epiſt.1. of the Antiochian Councell, c.2. of Dionyſius de eccleſ. Hierarch. ſee the place. Harm.ſect.14. pag.456. Hereunto agreeth the Engliſh Confeſſion: There was not any Chriſtian at that time, which did communicate alone, while others looked on: for ſo did Calixtus in times paſt decree, that after the conſecration was finiſhed all ſhould communicate, &c. Ibid.pag.427. Diſtinct.2.c. ſeculares.

4. This is ſo euident, that their owne men confeſſe, that priuate Maſſes of ancient time were not vſed: as Caſſander citeth Odo Cameracenſ. That priuate Maſſes were not in vſe of ancient time in the Church. Conſult.artic.25. Cochlaus alſo confeſſeth, that all, cum ſacrificante communicabant, did communicate with him, that ſacrificed. Ex Hoſpinian. lib 4.hiſtor. Sacrament.

AN APPENDIX, CONCERNING THE name of Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

37.Error. THey vtterly miſlike theſe names of the Sacrament, that it is called amongſt vs the Lords Supper or Communion; belike (ſay they) they will bring it againe to the Supper, or euening ſeruice: Rhemiſt.1.Cor.11.ſect.6. And the name Communion, is as ignorantly vſed of them, thereby making the people beleeue, that many ſhould communicate together, 1.*Cor.*11.*ſect.*24. they ſhould rather vſe the names of the Euchariſt, Maſſe, or Leiturgie.

The Proteſtants.

1.Cor.11.20. FIrſt, for the name of the Lords Supper, we doe learne of S. Paul ſo to call it: When ye come together (ſaith he) this is not to eate the Lords Supper, 1.Cor.11.20. Rhemiſt. The Apoſtle calleth their feaſts of loue, which they were wont to make after the receiuing of the Sacrament, the Lords Supper, cœnas dominicas, becauſe they were made in the Lords houſes, which were called Dominica: he meaneth not the Sacrament.

Anſw. Firſt, there were then no ſuch diſtinct places, as Churches, and Oratories for the ſeruice of God, which began to be built many yeeres after, but they aſſembled together in their owne houſes. Secondly, the Apoſtle cannot meane any other Supper, but that which was inſtituted by Chriſt, and which he deſcribeth afterward as it followeth, verſ.23. Further, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh but of two Suppers; the one, which he calleth their owne Supper, verſ.21. the other is the Lords Supper, which is ſo called, becauſe it was inſtituted by the Lord Ieſus, as the Apoſtle ſheweth afterward.

Thus teſtifieth alſo Maſter Latimer holy Martyr: There was cœna Iudaica, the Iewiſh Supper, when Chriſt with his Apoſtles did eate the Paſchall Lambe, the other was called cœna Dominica, the Lords Supper, Fox pag.1456.

And though Doctor Weſton cauill in that place againſt this name, (the Lords Supper) yet hath the Communion been ſo called in former times.

*Concil.Cabilonenſ.can.*47. In cœna Domini perceptio Euchariſtiæ à quibuſdam negligitur: In the Supper of the Lord, ſome neglect to receiue the Euchariſt. Auguſtine calleth it the Lords Supper, In Luk.ſer.33. Cœnam manibus ſuis conſecratam diſcipulis ſuis dedit: His Supper being conſecrated, he gaue it with his owne hands to his Diſciples. And although we ſate not downe at the feaſt: Ipſam cœnam tamen fide quotidie manducamus: yet we eate that Supper daily by faith.

Yea their owne decrees allow this name: *Decret.par.*3.*diſtinct.*2.*c.*17. Sæter: In cœna Domini à quibuſdam perceptio Euchariſtiæ negligitur,&c. In the Supper of the Lord the receiuing of the Euchariſt of ſome is neglected.

2. The name Communion, the Apoſtle alſo himſelfe vſeth: he calleth it κοινωνία, The Communion of the bodie of Chriſt, 1.Cor.10.16. ſo doth Auguſtine name it, Communionem corporis Chriſti de ciuit.Dei 20.*cap.*9. So alſo is it called in the Councels: *Nicen.*1.*c.*14. *Eliberin.decr.*1.*Toletan.*12.5. and in diuers other. 1.Cor.10.16.

3. As for the names of the Euchariſt, and Leiturgie, wee miſlike them not, being vnderſtood in their owne ſenſe: but becauſe they are Greeke and not vnderſtood of the people, wee vſe them not. The horrible ſacriledge of the Maſſe, is the cauſe alſo why we vſe not that terme.

See the teſtimonie and practiſe of other Churches herein before produced, error 30.

THE SIXTH QVESTION, OF THE manner of ſaying and celebrating Maſſe.

The Papiſts.

38.Error. IT is not neceſſarie that the Maſſe (or as we call it, the Sacrament) ſhould be ſaid or done in the vulgar and familiar ſpeech, but for the greater reuerence, to be kept in the Latine tongue, they ſay, it is more conuenient: and that the words of conſecration ſhould not bee vttered in a loud and audible, but in a ſoft and low voyce, *Bellarm.cap.*11.12.

*Argum.*1. If Maſſe ſhould be ſaid in the vulgar tongue, two great inconueniences would enſue: one, that the words of conſecration muſt be often changed, becauſe the vulgar ſpeech doth often alter: the other is, that hereby the communion of Churches ſhould be taken away: for an Italian could not ſay Maſſe in France, nor a Frenchman in Italie, *Bellarm.cap.*11.*argum.*5.

Anſw. For the firſt, the vulgar tongue is not ſo ſoone, nor ſo eaſily altered: the vulgar Engliſh tongue doth not differ, ſauing in certaine new words, from the vulgar language vſed three hundred yeeres agoe: but if it ſhould in proceſſe of time bee wholly altered, what would it hurt, if the forme of the Leiturgie were changed with all? as likewiſe the vulgar tranſlation of Scriptures may ſafelie be amended, as the vulgar ſpeech is perfited. To the ſecond we anſwere: firſt, the ſame obiection may be made againſt Latine Maſſe, for neither can an Italian ſay Maſſe in Greece, nor a Grecian in Italie.

Secondly, the Latine tongue rather taketh away the communion and fellowſhip of the Church, when the ſame congregation vnderſtandeth not a Latine Maſſe, where it is ordinarily and daily ſaid, which is rather to be reſpected, then any ſuch extraordinarie or vnwonted occaſion of ſtrangers and trauellers. Thirdly, by the ſame reaſon ſermons alſo ſhould be made in Latine, becauſe otherwiſe ſtrangers cannot vnderſtand them. Fourthly, where in populous cities there be diuers congregations, there ſhould be prouided for them Miniſters of their owne: As Innocent.3. decreed, Qui ſecundum diuerſitates linguarum, &c. Which according to the diuerſitie of the tongues, ſhould celebrate the diuine offices, *Decret.Greg.lib.*1.tit.31.c.14. Their owne decree is euidently againſt them.

Argum.2. Chriſt for the ſpace of three houres, being ſo long vpon the croſſe, vttered nothing in the hearing of the ſtanders by, but ſeuen ſhort ſentences: Ergo, in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, it is not neceſſarie to vtter all in the hearing of the people, Ibid.

Anſw. First, they haue not proued by this example, that the Prieſt ſhould mutter and mumble to himſelfe, but the contrarie rather: that either he muſt altogether hold his peace, or elſe ſpeake aloud; vnleſſe they can ſhew that Chriſt ſpake ſome words ſecretly to himſelfe. Secondly, we muſt not fetch the right vſe of the Sacrament of our owne heads, from the example of Chriſts ſacrifice vpon the croſſe: but we are commanded to reſort for direction to the inſtitution in his laſt Supper, 1.Cor.11.23, wherein Chriſt is not read to haue ſpoken any thing, but in the hearing of his Apoſtles: neither did Chriſt pronounce any of the words of conſecration vpon the croſſe, but in the inſtitution of his laſt Supper. 1.Cor.11.23.

Argum.3. The Prieſt in the law did enter alone into the holy place, all the people ſtanding without, as we reade of Zacharie, Luk.1.10. Ergo, the ſacrifice of the Maſſe muſt be offered vp in ſilence and ſecret, Bellarm.cap.12.argum.3. Luke 1.10.

Anſw. First, the Prieſt herein was a type of Chriſts entring into the holie place of heauen, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Heb.9.24. therefore it concludeth not for the Maſſe. Secondly, a ſacrifice might be offered without the preſence of the people, but vnder the Goſpell we denie any ſuch ſacrifice. Thirdly, the Prieſt while hee burned incenſe, was neither heard, nor ſeene of the people: you may as well inferre, that your Prieſts neither muſt be ſeene of the people ſaying of Maſſe, and ſo ſhould ye loſe the glorie of your ſuperſtitious eleuation. Fourthly, the reaſon why the people ſtaied without in the time of the ſacrifice, was in reſpect of the diuiſion of the Temple, which conſiſted of three parts; the moſt holy place, whereinto only the high Prieſt entred; the holy place, appointed for the inferiour ſacrificing Prieſts; and the court without, which was for the people: but the Temple now is diſſolued, and the vaile thereof, which made this diuiſion, was rent by the death of Chriſt: ſo that it muſt not bee a paterne neceſſarily of Chriſtian oratories or houſes of prayer. Heb.9.24.

The Proteſtants.

First, for the Sacrament, or any other part of the ſeruice of God to bee miniſtred in an vnknowne tongue, is contrarie to S. Pauls rule, who would haue all things to be done in the Church to edifying, and in ſuch ſort that the vnlearned might ſay, Amen, 1.Cor.14.16. But the people cannot be edified by a language which they vnderſtand not: nor yet can ſay Amen vnto ſtrange prayers. But of this matter we haue alreadie elſwere entreated more at large. 1.Cor.14.16.

Secondly, it is alſo contrarie to Saint Pauls rule, that the Prieſt ſhould mutter to himſelfe, and not ſpeake aloud in the hearing of the people: for hee ſaith, Ye doe ſhew foorth, καταγγέλλετε, annuntiatis, preach or declare the death of Chriſt, ſo often as ye receiue it, 1.Cor.11.26. But they doe not annuntiare, that is, preach, ſet foorth, and declare the death of Chriſt, that ſpeake only to themſelues. 1.Cor.11.26.

Bellarmine anſwereth; This ſhewing forth of Chriſts death is not done ſo much by the words, as in act and in deed: for how elſe could all the people ſhew foorth the death of Chriſt, but by eating and drinking in the Sacrament?

Contra. First, we grant, that by the very action of eating and drinking in the Sacrament Chriſts death is ſhewed foorth, but not thereby onely: for the inſtitution of Chriſt muſt bee declared, as the Apoſtle doth, 1.Cor.11.23. I haue receiued of the Lord, that which I haue deliuered vnto you: otherwiſe, if there ſhould be a dumbe action onely, without the word of inſtitution rehearſed in the audience of the people, they ſhould not know, what by their action is repreſented and ſhewed foorth. Secondly, if by the action of eating and drinking only the Lords death is ſhewed forth, then in your priuate Maſſes, where the people neither eate nor drinke, there is no ſhewing forth at all of the Lords death. 1.Cor.11.23.

Argum.3. A Sacrament conſiſteth of two parts; of the outward element, as the matter; and of the word of inſtitution, as the forme: the element, as water in Baptiſme, bread and wine in the Euchariſt muſt not be concealed: Ergo, neither the word of inſtitution.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it is ſufficient, if the words be vſed, though not pronounced in their hearing, that receiue the Sacraments: for infants heare not the words ſpoken in Baptiſme.

Contra. First, the reaſon is not alike betweene infants baptized, and other communicants; they heare not, neither vnderſtand, therefore they profit not by the words: but they which communicate in the other Sacrament can both heare and vnderſtand. Secondly, though infants heare not, yet they which are preſent at their Baptiſme doe heare and are edified: otherwiſe yee might as well reaſon thus, Infants perceiue not the element, which is vſed: Ergo, the water alſo may be concealed. Thirdly, yet the argument is not anſwered, drawne from the proportion, betweene the element of the Sacraments, and the word.

*Argum.*4. There is the ſame reaſon of vſing words not vnderſtood in the Church of God, and of words, that are not heard: for by neither is the people edified: but the firſt are not to be vſed; as the Apoſtle ſaith, I had rather in the Church ſpeake fiue words with mine vnderſtanding, that I might inſtruct others, then tenne thouſand words in a ſtrange tongue, 1. Cor. 14. 19. Ergo, neither are the other; and therefore their fiue words of conſecration muſt be ſo ſpoken, as that others may be inſtructed thereby.

1.Cor.14.19.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of preaching, not of prayer. Secondly, ſacrificing is not a ſpeaking, but a doing; and if it be a ſpeaking it is to God, not to the Church.

Contra. Firſt, it is euident that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of prayer, verſ. 14. If I pray in a ſtrange tongue my ſpirit prayeth, but my vnderſtanding is without fruite, that is, to others. Secondly, if their ſacrifice be a doing only, what need they vſe any words at all? Thirdly, prayer is a ſpirituall ſacrifice offered only to God, yet the Apoſtle would not haue it without vnderſtanding and inſtruction.

Contra Parmenian.lib.2. cap.7.

Auguſtine ſaith, Populus cum epiſcopo orat, & quaſi ad eius verba ſubſcribens reſpondet, Amen: The people prayeth with their paſtor, and ſubſcribing to his words, ſay, Amen, &c. But how can the people ſay, Amen, where nothing is heard, or ſubſcribe in their hearts vnto it?

Concil. Oxonienſ. ſub Stephano: Verba canonis præſertim in conſecratione corporis Chriſti plenè & integrè proferantur: The words of the Canon, eſpecially at the conſecration of the bodie of Chriſt, muſt be pronounced fully and wholly.

Concil. Baſilienſ. ſeſſ. 21. Abuſum aliquarum eccleſiarum, in quibus Miſſa priuatæ ſine miniſtro, aut per ſecretas orationes ita ſubmiſſa voce dicitur, quod à circumſtantibus audiri non poteſt, abolemus, &c. The abuſe of certaine Churches, where Maſſe is ſaid priuatly without a Miniſter, or with a low voyce the prayers are mumbled, that the ſtanders by cannot heare, we doe aboliſh. This is contrarie to Bellarmines opinion, who would not haue the words of conſecration vttered in a loud voyce.

Nouell.conſtit.123.

Concerning the practiſe of other forren Churches: 1. It was the ancient vſe of the Greek Church, to celebrate the Sacrament with an audible voyce that they might bee vnderſtood of all: as appeareth by that conſtitution of Iuſtinian: Iubemus vt omnes epiſcopi & presbyteri, non tacito modo, ſed clara voce, quo à populo exaudiatur, ſacram oblationem celebrent, &c. We will, that all Biſhops and Presbyters, doe celebrate the ſacred oblation, not in a ſtill manner, but with a loud voyce, that the people may heare, and be ſtirred vp to greater deuotion, &c. The ſame is the manner of the Greeke Church to this day, as Ieremie the Patriarke teſtifieth, that in their Leiturgie the ſacred Scripture is read, vt ad virtutis ſtudium prouocemur, that wee might bee prouoked to the ſtudie of vertue, &c. But this could not be, vnleſſe all were rehearſed both in an audible voyce, and to the peoples vnderſtanding. The like is the faſhion of the Moſcouites, which follow the Greeke Church; they doe celebrate in the vulgar tongue, the people anſwering alſo in the ſame language, Hoſpiday pomytoy, that is, Haue mercie vpon vs O Lord: and if their Prieſt doe chance to ſtammer in reading, or depreſſe his voyce, that he be not heard, the people chide him, and crie out to haue the bookes giuen to another.

2. Origen ſheweth againſt Celſus, what the cuſtome was in his time in all Churches: Singuli natiua & vernacula lingua Deum precantur, &c. non enim præſidens vniuerſa machinæ Deus, veluti vnus aliquis fuerit, qui barbaram ſit linguam vel Græcam ſortitus, vt cæteras neſciat: Euery one pray to God in their natiue and vulgar tongue; for the preſident of the whole world God is not to be thought only to vnderſtand the Barbarian, or Greeke tongue, and to be ignorant of the reſt, &c.

At this day the Æthiopike Church haue their ſeruice in the Abiſſine language, which is their vulgar tongue.

4. Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth, that Chriſt in the inſtitution of the Sacrament did ſo ſpeake, vt ab Apoſtolis audiretur, that he might be heard of the Apoſtles. Salmeron the Ieſuite confeſſeth, that in the ancient Maſſes, which goe vnder the names of S. Iames Clement, Baſile, and in the iudgement of Leo, Auguſtine, Ambroſe, the words of conſecration were to be ſpoken with an audible voyce, that the people might anſwere Amen, &c. Indeed Celſus obiecteth, touching the Pagane gods, that if any named them in a barbarous tongue, hee ſhould bee tormented, not, if they called them in the Greeke tongue: and Herban a Iew diſputing with Gregentius, findeth fault with the Septuagint, for tranſlating the Hebrew Scriptures into the Greek tongue: ſo it ſeemeth this inſtance of vſing an vnknowne tongue in diuine ſeruice, is both Heatheniſh and Iewiſh.

THE SEVENTH QVESTION, OF THE CEREMOnies which they vſe in the idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

The Papiſts.

39.Error.

SOme ceremonies goe before the celebration of the Maſſe, and they are of ſuch things, as they haue alwaies in a readines for that impious ſeruice; ſuch are the veſtiments and apparell of the Prieſt, the Albe, Cheſill, Stole, Dalmatike, with ſuch other: Altars, Altar-clothes, Corporaſſes, Pixes, Paxes, Diſhes, Candleſtickes, Platters, Cenſers, Water-pots: all theſe and the like trumperie ought of right to be vſed in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, the better to diſcerne the bodie of Chriſt, Rhemiſt. 1.Cor. 11.*ſect.*18.

Argum. Bellarmine warranteth their maſſing garments by the example of the prieſtly attire preſcribed in the law: and as Magiſtrates in their office vſe a ſpeciall kinde of attire for reuerence ſake, ſo alſo it is fit that Prieſts ſhould bee knowne by ſome ſpeciall habite in the publike ſeruice of the Church, *Bellarm. lib.*2.*de Miſſ.c.*14.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, If the Prieſthood be changed, there muſt be alſo a change of the law, Heb.7.12. wherefore the prieſtly garments belonging to the law of the Prieſthood, are changed together with it, and are no warrant for the habite of the Miniſters of the Goſpell. Secondly, be it granted that Miniſters may be diſcerned in their office, by ſome decent habite (though by their life and doctrine they chiefly are to manifeſt themſelues) yet ſuch partly ridiculous, partly ſuperſtitious apparell, as you hang vpon your Maſſe-prieſts backe, is not fit: for as the Magiſtrate will not adorne himſelfe with ſtrange and vnwonted apparell, but ſuch, as may adde comelines and grace to his perſon; ſo neither are ſuch popiſh ragges ſeemely for a Miniſter of the Goſpell, which onely attend vpon their Idolatrous ſacrifice. Thirdly, ſacrificing garments are not meete to be vſed where there is no externall ſacrifice: but vnder the Goſpell there is no externall ſacrifice: Ergo, the ſacrificing garments of Aaron are not now to be put in vſe.

Heb.7.12.

The Proteſtants.

First, for diuers cauſes wee doe condemne and reiect theſe ſuperſtitious vſages of the Papiſts: firſt, becauſe of the ſuperfluous and vnneceſſarie number of them, fewer by a great deale may ſerue for the Communion to be kept, after Chriſts inſtitution: neither doe we reade, that Chriſt at his laſt ſupper vſed any ſuch, who notwithſtanding would not haue left out any thing requiſite and needfull for the Sacrament.

Secondly, the ſuperfluous and exceſſiue coſt, in making ſo many Church veſſels of gold and ſiluer, ſo many Maſſe garments of ſilke, fine linnen, embroidered with gold, pearle, and pretious ſtones, was both an intollerable burthen to the Church, at whoſe charge ſuch things were prouided, and a great deale more coſtly, then became the ſimplicitie of the Goſpell.

Thirdly, conuenient veſſels and inſtruments, which are neceſſarie for the adminiſtration of the Sacrament, with other ſeemely ornaments: as a decent couering for the Communion table, a cleane and handſome veſſell to keepe the wine, a cup of ſiluer for the diſtribution, cleane linnen napkins for the bread; ſuch inſtruments and ornaments of the Lords table wee condemne not, but vſe them our ſelues: yet none of thẽ for ſuch ends or purpoſes, as they pretend, to diſcerne the body of the Lord by them; as though they were ordained to waite and attend vpon the bodily preſence of Chriſt, which they haue falſely imagined: but wee doe vſe them for decencie and order ſake, and due reuerence, which is to be yeelded to ſo great myſteries. As in their owne decrees, *Decr. Gregor. lib.*3.*tit.*44.*c.*2. *Innocent.*3. Sunt alij, &c. qui veſtimenta tam immunda relinquunt: There be, that leaue the veſtments ſo vncleane, &c. that they are loathſome vnto ſome, &c. wherefore wee will, that they be kept white and cleane. Such comelines and cleanlines in the celebration of the Sacrament we commend, and allow: but their ſuperfluous veſſels and garments the Goſpell hath no need of.

Argum. The Tabernacle, with all things thereto belonging, was a figure for the time preſent, vntill the time of reformation, Heb.9.9. The prieſtly garments did belong to the ſeruice of the Law: Ergo, they are no more to be vſed now vnder the time of reformation.

Heb.9.9 & 23

Againe, as the Apoſtle ſaith, That the ſimilitude of heauenly things, and the heauenly things themſelues, are not purified with the ſame things, Heb.9.23. ſo neither are they to be adorned, and ſet foorth with the ſame things: the ſimilitude of heauenly things require ſuch ornaments; but the heauenly things themſelues muſt haue better ornaments.

In the Apoſtles time they had no conſecrated Altars, but Communion tables, 1.Cor.10.21. neither is it like that they vſed veſſels of gold or ſiluer in the Lords Supper, when they had neither ſiluer nor gold in their purſes, Matth.10.9. Wherefore ſuch things are not neceſſarie for the diſcerning of the Lords bodie.

1.Cor.10.21.

Matth.10.9.

Bernard ſaith well: Domum Dei decet ſanctitudo, quæ non tam politis marmoribus quàm ornatis moribus delectatur, & puras magis diligit mentes, quàm ſuperauratos parietes: Sanctity becommeth Gods houſe, which is not ſo much delighted with poliſhed marble, as garniſhed manners, and loueth rather a good minde and will, then guilded walles, &c. Churches then are better adorned with deuout affections, then coſtly ornaments.

*Euſebius, decret. par.*3.*diſtinct.*1.*cap.*45. Non in ſerico panno, aut tincto, ſed puro lineo, terreno ſcilicet lino procreato, ſacrificium altaris conſecretur: Let the ſacrifice be conſecrate, not in ſilke, or coloured cloath, but in pure linnen made of naturall flaxe. But now ſilke will not ſerue the turne: their Altar-clothes are decked with gold, ſiluer, and pretious ſtones.

Bonifacius Martyr and Biſhop, being asked, whether it were lawfull to celebrate the Sacrament in wooden veſſels, made anſwere: Quondam ſacerdotes aurei ligneis calicibus vtebantur, nunc e contrario lignei ſacerdotes aureis vtuntur calicibus: In time paſt golden prieſts vſed wooden cups, now wooden den prieſts vſe golden cups: Decret.par.3.diſtinct.1.c.46. Wherefore it is euident, that in the ſimpler ages of the Church, ſuch ſumptuous ornaments were not requiſite. Firſt they did miniſter in wooden cups; then Zepherinus brought in glaſſe cups: and after that time cups were in vſe; and laſt of all ſiluer and golden cups, ibid.cap.44.45. And thus by ſteps and degrees, they grew to this ſuperfluitie.

Hom 83.in 26.Matth. In rational. diuin.offic. lib.3.cap.1. Chryſoſtome ſpeaketh in his time of a white garment, which they vſed in the Church: This is your dignitie, non quia tunicam induti candidiſſimam per eccleſiam ambulatis,&c. not that ye walke in a white garment in the Church,&c. But this was farre off from that curioſitie vſed in poperie, where they aſſigne ſixe ſeuerall garments to a Prieſt, and nine more, in all fifteene to a Biſhop, to ſignifie fifteene degrees of vertues, as Durand.

Lib.de Baptiſm. De corona militis. 2. But Tertullian ſheweth, that this was the difference in his time, betweene the ſeruice of Chriſtians, which was plaine and ſimple, and the habite of idolatrous Pagans, which was ſumptuous and coſtly: Mentior ſi non è contrario idolorum ſolennia de apparatu & ſumptu fidem & authoritatem ſibi extruunt,&c. I am deceiued, if on the contrarie the ſolemnities of Idols doe not get credit and authoritie by their coſtly preparation,&c. And againe, Hoc ritu habitu & apparatu idolis immolatur,&c. In this faſhion and habite they ſacrifice to their Idols. Such kinde of veſtures are not then to be vſed of Chriſtians.

3. Confeſſion of Wittemberg,35. Of which ſort is all that whole furniture of Maſſing attire, which they ſay doth ſhadow out the whole paſſion of Chriſt,&c. They count it vnlawfull among other ſuperſtitious ceremonies.

Durand.lib.3. cap.1. 4. See the decree of Euſebius one of their owne Popes before alleaged: and their owne Durand confeſſeth, the ſacred veſtures, à veteri lege videntur aſſumpta, ſeeme to bee taken from the old law, &c. Therefore vnfit for the Goſpell.

The Papiſts.

2. THere are other ceremonies, which they obſerue and vſe in the very action it ſelfe and celebration of the Maſſe: as the diuers geſtures of the Prieſt, to lift vp his eyes, and caſt them downe againe, and to lift them vp the ſecond, the third time: ſometime to caſt abroad his hands, to cloſe them againe, to warble with his fingers, to bow, to bend, to ducke, to turne on this ſide and on that, now on the right hand, againe on the left: to ſigh, to ſmite vpon his breaſt, to lift vp the Chalice, and ſhew it to the people, and ſet it downe againe: as alſo the diuiding of the hoaſt into three parts, which ſignifie three parts of the Church, in Heauen, in Earth, and in Purgatorie: the rinſing of part thereof in wine, and eating part drie, the waſhing of his fingers before conſecration: kiſſing of the Altar, the paten, the book, the paxe: ſprinkling of holy water, cenſing of odors, croſſing the Chalice, the bread, their mouth, breaſt and face, which ſigne of the croſſe they make aboue twentie times in one Maſſe while: Adde alſo vnto theſe, their tedious and yrkeſome ſongs, the rude noiſe and vnedifying ſound of ſtrange inſtruments, and the whole courſe of their Maſſe-muſicke ſet foorth in a ſtrange language, and endited to the honour of Saints. All theſe ſuperſtitious rites, with diuers more, vaine, vnfruitfull, abominable, they notwithſtanding with force and maine defend and maintaine, Bellarm.lib.2.de Miſſa,cap.14.15.Concil.Tridentin.ſeſſ.22.can.7.

Argum. The lifting vp of the hands Bellarmine warranteth by Moſes example, Exod.17. the bowing of the knees, and the eleuating of the eyes by the example of Chriſt, who often lift vp his eyes, and prayed kneeling: the eleuation of the hoaſt, the burning of incenſe, and muſicall inſtruments he deriueth from the ſacrifices of the law: and ſo concludeth the lawfull and neceſſarie vſe of them, lib.2.de Miſſ.c.15.

Anſw. Firſt, to lift vp the eyes, the hands, to bow the knees, to knocke the breaſt, are reuerent geſtures, and to be vſed in prayer, and wee willingly retaine them in our ſeruices: but they abuſe theſe ſeemely geſtures three waies: firſt, in ſetting forth thereby a falſe and idolatrous ſacrifice; for though it be a comely thing to kneele, yet it is impious to kneele to an Idoll. Secondly, they offend in their mutabilitie and inconſtancie, ſhifting and changing their geſtures, looking ſometime vp, ſometime downe, now this way, now that way: as the wiſe man ſaith, The eyes of the foole are in the corners of the world, Pro.17.24. but Stephen looked ſtedfaſtly into heauen, Act.7.55. ſo they kneele, they duck, they bend, they bow: So did not Moſes, that continued holding vp his hands till the euening, and Salomon was vpon his knees all the time he prayed, 1.King.8. Thirdly, they offend in vſing dumbe and mute geſtures, without any prayer at all, or the ſame in an vnknowne tongue: ſo did not the Publicane, who not only ſmote vpon his breaſt, but ſaid, Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner.

Secondly, if the fleſh of beaſts were now ſacrificed, as vnder the law, then they might alſo ſhake them and heaue them before God, and perfume them with incenſe, as the Leuites did: wherefore thoſe ſacrifices being aboliſhed, the rites alſo and ceremonies accompanying them, are alſo extinguiſhed.

Ephes.5.19. Thirdly, a moderate and ſober vſe of Muſicke in the Church wee condemne not, though the practiſe of the Iewiſh Church doth not warrant it: for their melodious ſound of inſtruments was typicall, ſignifying the ſpirituall melodie and harmonie, which wee ſhould make in our hearts, Eph.5.19. And though Muſicke may be well vſed, yet is it by them three waies abuſed: firſt, in adorning a falſe and Idolatrous ſeruice. Secondly, in playing and ſinging vnedifying ſongs. Thirdly, in diſplacing thereby the preaching of Gods word, and fruitfull prayer.

The Proteſtants.

1. THis multitude of humane inuentions, agreeth not with the inſtitution of the Lords Supper: for wee reade not of any ſuch kiſſing, kneeling, becking, bowing, or the like ridiculous geſtures to haue beene vſed, when our Sauiour inſtituted the Supper, nor afterwards by the Apoſtles to haue beene practiſed: wherefore we contenting our ſelues with the plaine inſtitution of Chriſt, doe worthily reiect all ſuch toyes.

2. Moſt of theſe geſtures are impious, and tend to Idolatrie in the adoration of bread and wine, which are but creatures: and they are all friuolous and hypocriticall, ſtealing away true deuotion from the heart, and making men to reſt in the outward geſtures of the bodie. Auguſtine ſaith very well: Corpus genibus flexis proſternis, collum curuas in oratione, video vbi iaceat corpus, ſed quæro vbi volitet animus? Thou boweſt the knee, bendeſt thy bodie in prayer, ſtretcheſt out thy necke, I ſee where thy bodie lieth: but what is become of thy ſoule?

3 Concerning Church ſongs and Muſicke, Auguſtine thus writeth: Sobriè pſallimus in Eccleſia diuina cantica Prophetarum: Wee ſing treatably and ſoberly in the Church the diuine ſongs of the Prophets. Two conditions he requireth: firſt, that we ſing holy Pſalmes taken out of the Scriptures. Secondly, that they be ſung treatably and diſtinctly. Etiam illic (ſaith he) ſi ſonum non ſenſum libido audiendi deſideret, improbatur: Euen in good ſongs, if wee follow the ſound, not the ſenſe, it is to be diſcommended: but in Popiſh ſongs neither of theſe conditions is kept: for both the dittie, for the moſt part, is idolatrous, ſtuffed with inuocation and adoration of Saints, and the note is ſo diuided and drawne out in length, that it cannot be vnderſtood.

Contra Iulian lib.4.c.14.

Bernard thus writeth excellently of this matter: *Sæpe ad ſacrum myſterium vocem meam fregi, vt dulcius cantarem: magis delectabar in vocis modulatione, quàm in cordis compunctione: Meditat. cap.*11. Oftentimes in diuine ſeruice, I quauered with my voyce to ſing more pleaſantly, and ſo delighted more in tuning my voyce, then in turning my heart. This then is one great fault in ſinging, ſo to regard the note, that we thinke not of that which is ſung: And therefore he ſaith, Sic mulceat aures, vt moueat corda: Let it ſo pleaſe the eares, that it may play vpon the heart: Frangis vocem, frange & voluntatem: ſeruas conſonantiam vocis: ſerua & concordiam morum: Thou reliſheſt with thy voyce, reliſh alſo with thy heart: thou keepeſt the conſort of the voyce; keepe alſo the harmonie of manners, *Meditat. cap.*51. But Popiſh Maſſe ſongs ſet forth with tedious notes, and vnknowne ſyllables, doe want this conſort and harmonie of the heart, being not vnderſtoode for the moſt part of the ſingers themſelues, much leſſe of thoſe that heare them.

Concerning Organe play: Order hath beene taken by Councels in theſe two points eſpecially. 1. Nolumus quod organicis inſtrumentis reſonet in Eccleſia impudica aut laſciua melodia, ſed ſonus omnino dulcis qui nihil præter hymnos diuinos, & cantica ſpiritualia repræſentet: Wee will not haue any light, wanton voluntarie melodie to bee played vpon the Organes, but onely ſpirituall and diuine hymnes: *Concil. Senonenſ. decret.*17.

2 For the moderating of Organe play, thus alſo it is decreed, Colonienſ. part.2. cap.12. Illud non recte ſit in quibuſdam Eccleſijs, &c. That is not well done in ſome Churches, when becauſe of the ſingers, and Organes, better things, as prayer, giuing of thankes, are ſhortened, are omitted or cleane cut off, &c. Theſe rules in Church Muſicke are to be kept: which the Popiſh ſort little obſerue in their Maſſe ſeruice.

Let vs heare their owne decrees: *part.*1. *diſtinct.*92. *c.*2. Gregor. In ſancta Romana Eccleſia dudum eſt conſuetudo valde reprehenſibilis exorta, &c. There is of late a very euill cuſtome riſen vp in the holy Church of Rome, &c. That certaine ſingers are choſen for the Miniſterie of the altar, &c. and they attend the tuning of the voyce, which ſhould apply themſelues to preaching, and ſo it commeth to paſſe, Dum blanda vox quæritur, quæri congrua vita negligatur: That while they ſtudie for a pleaſing voyce, they neglect a good life: and a ſinging Miniſter pleaſing the people with his voyce, offendeth God with his workes: Wherefore I ordaine, Vt altaris Miniſtri cantare non debeant: That the Miniſters of the altar ſhould not ſing. Likewiſe, *Iohann.*22. *extrau. commun. lib.*3. *tit.*1. *c.*1. reproueth certaine notorious abuſes in Church Muſicke: In ſemibreues & minimas Eccleſiaſtica cantantur, diſcantibus lubricant, triplis, &c. inculcant: They ſing Church ſongs with ſembriefes and minimes, and glide away with triple time and deſcant, &c. This curious kinde of ſinging here reprehended, is notwithſtanding ſtill vſed in the Popiſh Maſſe-ſeruice.

The Muſcouites following the Greek Church at this day, in their Leiturgie, In organa nullos ſumptus fecerunt, neq; hactenus vſi: Beſtow no coſt vpon their Organes, neither hitherto haue vſed them.

Iohan. Faber de religion. Moſcouit.

Tertullian miſliked in his time, the extenſion and lifting vp of the voice, Sonos vocis ſubiectos eſſe oportet, &c. Deus non vocis, ſed cordis, ſicut auditor, ſic conſpector eſt, &c. The ſound of the voice ſhould be ſubmiſſe, &c. God as the hearer, ſo is he the beholder of the heart, not of the voice. It ſeemeth, that in the South Church, they vſe not to ſing their Maſſe: for the Debeteres among them a people ſo called, did commend the Romane Maſſe for the Muſicke, ſaying that they neuer heard ſuch a Maſſe, but they found fault, that one ſang alone without miniſtring the communion to thoſe which aſſiſted him.

The reformed Churches doe thus deliuer their opinion: latter confeſſ. of Heluetia. There muſt be a meane and meaſure, as in other things, ſo alſo in publike prayers, that they be not ouer long and tedious, let therefore the moſt time bee giuen to the teaching of the Goſpell,&c. Wittemberg.c.27. Singing becauſe it was vſed in a tongue commonly knowne, it had both a godly vſe, and deſerued great praiſe, Sweueland c.21. Our Miniſters did firſt of all deteſt this, that many things which were contrarie to the Scriptures, are mingled with holy prayers and ſongs, as that theſe things are attributed to Saints, which are proper to Chriſt alone,&c. They finde fault with three abuſes in Church Muſicke, the tediouſneſſe of them, their vnprofitableneſſe being in an vnknowne tongue, and the ſuperſtition of them, being indited to the honour of Saints.

As touching other trickes, and toyes, and ceremonies, they thus alſo ſhew their opinion: confeſſ. of Belgia, artic.35. We doe here worthily reiect as a meere prophanation, all the toyes and damnable deuiſes of men, which they haue preſumed to adde and mingle with the Sacraments, affirming, that all the godly are content, with that onely order and rite, which Chriſt and his Apoſtles haue deliuered vnto vs,&c. Former confeſſion of Heluetia.artic.23. As for other vnprofitable and innumerable circumſtances of ceremonies, as veſſels, apparrell, vailes, candles, altars, gold, ſiluer, ſo farre forth as they ſerue to peruert religion,&c. we doe remoue them farre from holy meeting,&c.

Annot. in 1. Sam.16.v.16.

Our Doway men ſhall be here alſo witneſſes: who giue this note vpon thoſe words: Which ſhould prophecie on Harpes: They played on Inſtruments, Pſalmes, and Canticles made by the Prophets,&c. ſo they ſay, that Dauids playing on the Harpe, relieued Saul, together with his ſincere deuotion: Then in Church ſongs two things are requiſite in their iudgement, for the matter, they muſt be propheticall, not ſauouring of humane deuiſes, for the manner, they muſt be ſung and played with deuotion, which cannot be, where there is no vnderſtanding.

THE EIGHTH QVESTION, OF THE FORME OF THE Maſſe, which conſiſteth partly of the Canon, partly of ſuch things as are rehearſed before and after the Canon.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE PRAYERS WHICH goe before the Canon of the Maſſe.

WE doe not vtterly condemne whatſoeuer is ſaid or ſung in their Leiturgie or Maſſe: for as they haue their introite, ſo wee doe bid the people after due preparation, in our Communions to draw neere. We haue alſo our Confiteor, a confeſſion of ſinnes to be ſaid before the Communion. Other formes alſo, which haue beene vſed of ancient time, we doe not refuſe: as Dominus vobiſcum, The Lord be with you: Kyrie eleyſon, Lord haue mercie vpon vs: Surſum corda, Lift vp your hearts: with Alleluia, praiſed be God, and Sanctus, Sanctus, holy, holy; and Gloria in excelſis, Glorie bee to God on high; the Preface alſo to the Communion, Vere dignum, & iuſtum eſt: It is meete, right, and our bounden dutie: And we vſe alſo the Lords prayer after the diſtribution. Theſe formes we miſlike not, vſing the ſame our ſelues, which notwithſtanding we borrow not from them, but from the ancient and purer ages of the Church. But the corruptions, additions, innmutations, which are vſed by them in theſe Prefaces to the Maſſe, we doe vtterly condemne, as their introite and confiteor, is ſtuft full of idolatrie, and inuocation of Saints: their Kyrie eleyſon is nine times repeated in an vnknowne tongue. Eleuation and adoration was brought in by Pope Honorius, anno. 1222. the Agnus was deuiſed by Pope Sergius, anno. 700. the Pax by Innocentius, plura apud Foxum. pag.1403.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE Canon of the Maſſe.

The Papiſts.

40. Error.

1. FIrſt, the forme of their Maſſe they haue (they ſay) by tradition from the Apoſtles: Rhemiſt. 1.Cor.11.ſect.22.Bellarm.lib.2.de miſſ.c.19.

Argum. That the Canon of the Maſſe is moſt ancient, and ſo like to take beginning from the Apoſtles time, Bellarmine ſheweth by theſe three coniectures: firſt, becauſe mention is made onely of Martyrs in the Canon, not of the confeſſors of the Church, who began of later time to be honoured: Secondly, becauſe ſome few words of the Canon haue beene added ſince by diuers, as by Leo 1. Gregorie 1. with others, whereby it appeareth, that the Canon it ſelfe was before their time. Thirdly, becauſe the author of the Canon is vnknowne, and therefore it is like it came by tradition from the Apoſtles.c.20.

Anſwere. Firſt, the adoration and inuocation of Martyrs, as alſo of confeſſors, is but a late ſuperſtitious deuiſe, not knowne in the ancient and purer times of the Church: as Origene ſaith, Homil.6.Ioſua. Ioſua non adoraſſet, niſi agnouiſſet Deum: Ioſua would not haue worſhipped, if hee had not knowne the Angell to be God. Ambroſ.in 9. 9.ad Roman. Non poteſt genu flecti niſi Deo: The knee cannot be bowed of euery creature but only to God. And againe, lib.4.de interpellat.c.12. vpon theſe words in the 73. Pſalme, Whom haue I in heauen but thee? Nec ſupereſt in caleſtibus quod amplius queram,&c. There is nothing in heauen but Chriſt, which I deſire: Ergo, he needed not, neither deſired the helpe and aſſiſtance of Saints. S. Hierome alſo ſaith, aduerſ.Vigilant. Quis enim ô inſanum caput Martyres vnquam adorauit? Who euer (thou fooliſh head) worſhipped or adored Martyrs? Ergo, by this reaſon it appeareth, that the Canon of the Maſſe, allowing inuocation of Martyrs is not ſo ancient as Origene, or Ambroſe, and Hieromes time. Neither is it true, that Martyrs only are mentioned in the Canon, for the Virgine Marie and Iohn the Apoſtle were no Martyrs, who are eſpecially remembred: and whereas they conclude thus, after rehearſall made of ſome, Et omnium ſanctorum tuorum: And of all thy Saints, vnder this generall name, not onely Martyrs, but all true confeſſors of Chriſt are contained.

Secondly, the patching together of the Maſſe by diuers at ſundry times doth euidently ſhew that the Canon of the Maſſe, as it now ſtandeth, is not ancient. And whereas hee inferreth that ſome part of the Canon was before Leo and Gregorie, wee grant it, for the Lords Prayer vſed in the Maſſe, and theſe words, This is my bodie, and the rehearſing of the inſtitution are read in the Goſpell: but this proueth not, that the other parts alſo are Apoſtolicall.

Thirdly, the author of the Canon is aſſigned to be one Scholaſticus by Gregorie, as euen now followeth to be ſhewed, Ergo, Bellarmines third coniecture is vaine.

The Proteſtants.

Their owne authors doe teſtifie, that euery patch of their Maſſe was thruſt in by Popes, later then the Apoſtles: As Sixtus the ſecond brought into the Maſſe, the (Sanctus) Innocentius the firſt, the (Pax) Leo the firſt addeth this clauſe, Sanctum ſacrificium, immaculatam hoſtiam, The holy ſacrifice, the vnbloodie hoſt: Gelaſius the prefaces, collects, graduals: Symmachus the (Gloria in excelſis) Agapetus the firſt, the proceſſions. Pelagius the ſecond, appointed nine prefaces before the Canon. Gregorie the firſt, brought in the (Antiphonies, and the Kyrie eleyſon) Sergius the firſt, Agnus Dei: The other parts alſo and members of the Maſſe are aſſigned to their ſeuerall authors, and inuentors: yea, Gregorie the firſt confeſſeth, that one Scholaſticus made the moſt part of the Canon, Ergo, it was not deuiſed by the Apoſtles. Bellarmine anſwereth, that Gregorie ſetteth not downe any one man, by this name Scholaſticus, but meaneth generally ſome notable learned man: and in this ſenſe S. Peter, ſaith he, which was the author of the Canon, may bee called Scholaſticus, *Bellarm.cap.*19.

Anſwere. This deuiſe of the Ieſuite is rather to bee laughed at, then to bee confuted. Who euer heard before, that S. Peter and the other Apoſtles were Scholaſtici, Schoolemen? What is this elſe, but to ſet the ſpirit of God to Schoole, in ſaying that the Apoſtles being men endued with the holy Ghoſt, were brought vp in Schooles? Againe, Gregorie findeth fault with the ſaid Scholaſticus, that in compoſing the Canon, hee would put in his owne prayers, and leaue out the Lords prayer: but if this Scholaſticus had beene Peter, I thinke Gregorie would not haue beene ſo bold, as to haue rebuked him: Or elſe ſaith Bellarmine, this Scholaſticus was not the author of the Canon, but of certaine extraordinarie prayers.

Contra. I will here oppoſe the iudgement of Eſpenſeus a graue writer among the Papiſts, who calleth Scholaſticum, vſitati Canonis authorem: Scholaſticus the author of the vſuall Canon. Comment,in 1.*Timoth.p.*31.d.

*Argum.*2. There be many things contained in the Canon contrarie to the doctrine of the Apoſtles, as inuocation of Saints, adoration of bread, prayer for the dead, with many other groſſe errors, as afterward ſhall be ſhewed: Ergo, the Canon was not inſtituted by the Apoſtles.

*Argum.*3. S. Hierome findeth fault with ſome in his time, that in their prayers and oblations vſed to ſay, Qui ſedes ſuper Cherubim & Seraphim: Thou that ſitteſt vpon the Cherubim and Seraphim: Illorum pius, ſed coarguendus error: Whoſe error, though it may haue a ſhew of pietie, is worthie of reproofe, becauſe that no where mention is made in Scripture, that God ſitteth vpon the Seraphim, but onely vpon the Cherubim: tom 4.epiſt.ad Damaſ. From hence I reaſon thus; If they vſe the ſame forme in their Maſſe oblation, then is it an error, and ſo cannot be fathered vpon the Apoſtles: if they doe not; then doe they not vſe that forme, which was in Hieromes time, and ſo it cannot be of any great antiquitie, let them chooſe which part they will.

Ieremie Patriarke ſeemeth to ſay, that there leiturgie was firſt compoſed by Saint Iames and Saint Marke, Sed quia vtriuſq; volumina fuerunt deprauata, But becauſe both their bookes were depraued, afterward, ordinata ſunt, they were ordained firſt by Baſile, then by Chryſoſtome, &c. they hold then not the Apoſtles, but thoſe two Fathers to be the authors of the Canon of their Maſſe.

The Æthiopians ſay no Maſſes, pro redemptione animarum, for the redemption of ſoules, [a] Zaga, Zabo: neither yet for the [b] dead: but the Canon of the Latine Maſſe is ſaid for both: therefore it is not like, the Apoſtles were the authors of it, for then it ſhould generally haue beene receiued.

Confeſſion of Saxonie: It is manifeſt, that the Greeke and Latine Canons are vnlike the one to the other,&c. and it appeareth, that in the Latine Canon, many iagges and pieces were by little and little patched together of ignorant authors,&c.

were added by the Biſhop of Rome Duedo a Diuine of Louaine, was ſo farre from thinking the Canon of the Maſſe, to haue beene compoſed by the Apoſtles, that hee ſuſpecteth ſome things, ab hæreticis confićta, To haue beene inuented by heretiques: So that it is probable, that, as Gilbertus Cognatus, ſometime Eraſmus ſcribe or notarie, reporteth, that the Canon of the Maſſe, as it is now vſed in the Popiſh Church, was firſt compiled by Gratiane, then augmented by Gregorie the ninth, anno 1227. and afterward by Boniface the eighth, ann. 1300.

The Papiſts.

2. THe Canon of the Maſſe (ſay they) is perfect and abſolute, voyd of all error, and therefore not to be changed or abrogated. Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 22. can. 6. Bellar. cap. 21.

The Proteſtants.

BVt wee on the contrarie ſide, more truly and agreeable to Scripture, doubt not to ſay, that there can be nothing more corrupt, abominable, fuller of all impietie, hereſie, lying, then is their idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe: as it ſhall now more particularly appeare, by the collection of the ſeuerall errors.

A FVLL HALFE HVNDRED OF ERRORS AND Blaſphemies that are to be found in the Canon of the Maſſe, as touching the matter.

1. THe Prieſt ſaith, We pray thee accept theſe gifts, theſe holy and vnſpotted ſacrifices. Thus he maketh Bread and Wine the ſacrifices of the Goſpell: for theſe words are ſpoken before Conſecration. And whereas Bellarmine ſaith, it is called a ſacrifice, becauſe it is intended and ſet apart to be a ſacrifice. Contra. Yet is it not alreadie a Sacrifice, much leſſe vnſpotted, ſeeing it is neither vnſpotted in reſpect of it ſelfe, being not yet made the body and blood of Chriſt, nor in reſpect of the offerer, who is a ſinfull man.

2 The Prieſt ſpeaking of the bread and wine, thus ſaith; Which we offer vnto thee for thy holy Catholique Church. And againe afterward; Which we offer for the redemption of our ſoules. What great blaſphemie is this, to offer bread and wine for the redemption of the Church, for the which Chriſt in great loue offered vp himſelfe? and ſo to make his death of no force.

Bellarmine. Bread and wine is not offered for the Church, but the ſacrifice to bee made of bread and wine. Contra. Then the Prieſt ſhould ſay, Which we ſhall offer, not, Which wee doe offer: but that which he offereth, is nothing but bread and wine, whatſoeuer it is, which hee offereth afterward.

3 The Rubricke of the Maſſe willeth, that the Prieſt ſhould pray for his owne Biſhop onely and for himſelfe, and his ſpeciall friends: But charitie would, that hee ſhould pray for all Biſhops, Paſtors and Miniſters: and Chriſt biddeth vs, not onely to pray for our friends, but alſo for our enemies.

1. Tim. 2. 2.
1. Pet. 2. 13.

4 The Prieſt firſt prayeth for the Pope, then for his owne Biſhop, laſtly for the King: but S. Paul would haue prayers firſt of all made for all men, but eſpecially for Kings, 1. Timoth. 2. 2, they ſhould firſt of all be remembred: and S. Peter ſetteth downe the King as the chiefe, 1. Pet. 2. 13. Agatho B. of Rome writing to Conſtantine the Emperour, confeſſeth himſelfe Imperij famulum, a ſeruant to the Emperour, action. 4 Synod. 6. Conſtantin.

5 He ſaith, and with thy ſeruant our Pope: hee is their Pope and Biſhop onely, that are vnder his Dioceſſe and Seignorie: he hath no iuriſdiction ouer other Churches: Pelagius 2. 1. epiſtol. decretal. calleth it profanum vocabulum, a prophane name to bee called vniuerſall Biſhop: and Gregor. 1. ad Eulog. Patriarke of Conſtantinople findeth fault with him, for giuing him the ſtile of vniuerſall Pope, calling it ſuperba appellationis verbum; a proud name. And here alſo let it bee noted, whether our Engliſh Papiſts can bee true ſubiects, that in their Maſſe and other prayers preferre the Pope before their Prince, and acknowledge him to be their Pope and Biſhop.

6 Hoc ſacrificium laudis: This ſacrifice of praiſe: it is onely then a ſpirituall ſacrifice of thankeſgiuing, not a materiall and externall ſacrifice, as they beare men in hand. Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Sacrifice of Chriſts body, is called a Sacrifice of praiſe, becauſe thereby God is praiſed, &c. Contra. Firſt, God thereby is greatly diſhonoured, when they adore a piece of bread, and Chriſts bodie alſo is diſgraced, being made ſubiect to wormes and corruption, and to be eaten of Mice and Dogges: all which inconueniences enſue vpon the carnall preſence. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſheweth, what the Sacrifice of praiſe is, namely, the fruite of the lips, Heb. 13. 15. but Chriſts body is not the fruit of the lips: though their Prieſts think they can make Chriſts body with fiue words ſpeaking, yet I thinke they dare not ſay, that Chriſts bodie is the fruite of the Prieſts lips: if they ſhould, the Apoſtle confuteth them, who expoundeth himſelfe, that the fruit of the lips is, the confeſſion of the name of God: Ergo, Chriſts body is not the Sacrifice of praiſe.

7 The Prieſt ſaith, Worſhipping the memoriall of the Virgine: But Chriſt inſtituted the Sacrament to be kept in remembrance of himſelfe, and not for the worſhip of Saints.

1. Iohn 2. 2.

8 By whoſe merites and prayers, namely of the Saints, grant we may be defended. But S. Iohn ſaith, If any man ſinne, we haue an aduocate with the Father, Ieſus Chriſt the righteous, 1. Iohn 2. 2.

9 In the ſecond prayer of the Canon, they pray, by vertue of the oblation of bread and wine to be deliuered from eternall damnation: for as yet the elements are not conſecrated. Bellarm. They conclude this prayer, through Chriſt our Lord, by whom, and not by the oblation, they deſire it to bee granted. Contra. They doe for faſhion ſake indeede conclude their prayers, through Chriſt, &c. but they doe alſo aſcribe their Petition to the vertue of the oblation: that God being well pleaſed with that oblation, &c. would deliuer them from eternall damnation, &c.

10 Wee beſeech thee (ſaith the Prieſt) to receiue this oblation, which wee beſeech thee in all things to make bleſſed: Here the Prieſt is made a Mediator betweene Chriſt and his Father; deſiring God to ſanctifie the bodie and blood of his Sonne. Thus beginneth the third prayer of the Canon. Bellarmine anſwereth, they pray not here for the Euchariſt now conſecrated, but to be conſecrated, that it may be made the bodie and blood of Chriſt, *c.*23. Contra. Firſt, they pray for that oblation, whereby they prayed a little before to bee deliuered from damnation: Ergo, for an oblation conſecrated. Secondly, after the conſecration they pray alſo in the ſame manner, Which we beſeech thee vouchſafe to accept.

11 Who the next day afore he ſuffered: But the Scripture ſaith, The ſame night. For this is my body: Here they haue put in enim, of their owne, and left out, Quod pro vobis datur. Such is their boldneſſe, that they are not aſhamed to change the words of our Sauiour Chriſt.

12 Take yee, &c. Why then doth the Prieſt take it alone? ſeeing Chriſt appointed it to be taken of many.

13 Eate yee, &c. Why then doe they hang it vp in a Pixe? ſeeing Chriſt would haue it eaten.

14 Drinke yee all of this: why then doth the Prieſt drinke it alone? ſeeing by the inſtitution all are to drinke of it.

15 He ſaith further in the fourth Prayer: The holy bread of eternall life, which vouchſafe thou with a pleaſant countenance to behold: The bread of eternall life is Chriſt himſelfe, if this be hee, how dare yee preſume to offer him vp to his Father? Bellarmine anſwereth, that they pray not in reſpect of the Sacrifice offered, but in reſpect of the Miniſter, that offereth. Contra. They deſire God not to behold the Prieſt, but the oblation.

16 As thou didſt vouchſafe to accept the righteous gifts of Abel, and the ſacrifice of Abraham. Here the Sacrifice of Chriſt is compared to the ſacrifice of beaſts: and the Prieſt ſeemeth to attribute as much efficacie to the one, as to the other: he compareth the gifts and ſacrifices together, not the ſacrificers in reſpect of their deuotion, as Bellarmine trifleth.

17 And the holy Sacrifice which thy high Prieſt Melchiſedech did offer vnto thee. This is a plaine vntruth, and a flat lye, as wee haue ſhewed alreadie, that Melchiſedech ſacrificed bread and wine.

18 After the words of conſecration rehearſed, the Prieſt is willed in the Rubricke, to rub his fingers, becauſe of the crummes: but if it bee Chriſts bodie, it cannot bee crummie. And againe, let the fourth croſſe be made vpon the bread: Heere it is called bread after the conſecration: then is it not Chriſts bodie: So by their owne Canon, they are conuinced to be in an error.

19 Command thou theſe to be brought by the hands of thy holy Angell, vnto the high Altar in heauen. What an abſurd thing is this, that hee ſhould deſire that to bee carried into heauen, which hee eateth and deuoureth? And if this bee the bodie of Chriſt, what neede the helpe of an Angell to carrie it vp to heauen? Is not Chriſt able to lift vp his owne bodie? Or what neede that to bee conueyed to heauen, which was neuer from thence? Bellarm. The Angell doth not carrie vp Chriſts bodie into heauen, but, their ſeruice and obedience. Contra. He ſaith, Iube hæc, &c. Command theſe things, &c. looking toward the hoaſt and the chalice: Ergo, hee meaneth, that Chriſts bodie and blood ſhould be carried.

20 As many of vs as ſhall receiue thy Sonnes body and blood: And yet for the moſt part none receiue, but the Prieſt; and when the people doe communicate, the wine they haue not: how then can he ſay, As many?

21 Remember, O Lord, the ſoules of thy ſeruants, which reſt in the ſleepe of peace, and grant them a place of refreſhing and reſt: Here is another error contrarie to the Scriptures in praying for the dead, and the prayer alſo is contrarie to it ſelfe: for firſt he ſaith, they reſt in peace, and yet afterward prayeth for their refreſhing: thus beginneth the fifth prayer of the Canon. Bellarmine anſwereth, that they which are in Purgatorie, are at reſt from the workes of ſinne, though not from torment. *c.*25. Contra. They which are dead in Chriſt, doe reſt from their labours, Apocal. 14.13. Ergo, from all laborious and painfull torments. Apocal.14.13.

22 In the ſixth prayer, Vouchſafe than they may haue a portion with the Saints, ending through Ieſus Chriſt, &c. The Rubricke forbiddeth Amen to be ſaid; contrarie to the Apoſtle, 1. Cor. 14. 16. that would haue Amen to be ſaid to the publike bleſſing and thankeſgiuing in the Church. 1.Cor.14.16.

23 Deliuer vs by the bleſſed interceſſion of the Virgine: What then is become of Chriſts Mediation and Interceſſion? who euer liueth to make Interceſſion for vs, Heb. 7.25. Heb.7.25.

24 Let this mingling together of the body and blood of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, be vnto me ſaluation of minde and body: Then is not Chriſts blood ſhed vpon the Croſſe the full ſufficient and perfect ſaluation of mankinde, if there be another ſaluation beſide.

25 Againe, if it be the very body and blood of Chriſt, how can they be mingled together, ſeeing the very body and blood of Chriſt cannot be deuided? Bellarmine anſwereth, that they are mingled onely by reaſon of the formes of bread and wine, which remaine. Contra. Formes and accidents cannot be mingled without ſubſtances, & therefore, if there be no ſubſtance remaining but of Chriſts body and blood, it followeth, that they are mingled. And further; ſeeing they hold, by way of their deuiſed concomitance, that the fleſh of Chriſt is with the blood, and the blood with the fleſh, what need then any ſuch mixture or mingling at all?

26 Grant me ſo worthily to take this body and blood, that I may merit to receiue forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: O ſinfull man, how canſt thou merit that which is Chriſts onely gift? And in the ſixth prayer of the Canon, the Prieſt prayeth thus, Not weighing our merit, &c. and here he prayeth for merit: So that their Maſſe is contrarie to it ſelfe.

27 Let the Prieſt bow himſelfe to the hoaſt, ſaying, I worſhip thee, I glorifie thee, I praiſe thee: What monſtrous Idolatrie is this, thus to worſhip a piece of bread?

28 The Sacrament of thy body and blood, &c. If it be a Sacrament of Chriſts bodie, then is it not the bodie it ſelfe: for the ſame thing cannot be both the Sacrament, and the thing whereof it is a Sacrament: the ſigne, and the thing ſignified; the ſhadow and the bodie: Sacraments are liuely ſha-Coloſſ. 2.17. dowes, but Chriſts bodie is not a ſhadow, Coloſſ. 2.17.

29 Haile for euer, thou most holy fleſh of Chriſt, &c. Haile for euer, thou moſt heauenly drinke: Where doe they finde in Scripture, to ſalute God in this manner? the Angell indeed ſaid to Marie: Aue, Haile: and S. Iohn forbiddeth vs to ſay to an heretike, Aue, which the Rhemiſts tranſlate, God ſaue you: Epiſt. 2.10 Is it not then a ſeemely thing to ſay to Chriſt, All health, haile, or God ſaue you ſyr? that we ſhould bleſſe him, of whom we looke to be bleſſed.

30 Let not this Sacrament bee vnto my iudgement or condemnatien: thus they thinke that Chriſts fleſh may be eaten to condemnation, contrarie to the Scripture: Whoſoeuer eateth my fleſh, hath eter-
Iohn 6.54. nall life, Iohn 6.54.

31 Deliuer me by thy precious bodie from all mine iniquities, &c. and grant, that for euer I be not ſeparated from thee: This is contrarie to their owne doctrine, that a man cannot be ſure to be preſerued from finall falling: for if the Maſſe be an auaileable ſacrifice, as they hold, then is it auaileable to this end, that they ſhall not be finally ſeparated from God.

32 Out of a temporall gift, let it be to vs a remedie euerlaſting: Here he calleth the body and fleſh of Chriſt a temporall gift, which is blaſphemie, vnleſſe they will grant that there is bread ſtill.

33 Let this Communion purge vs from ſinne: If they meane the principall purging of our ſinne,
Heb. 1.3. ſo doth Chriſt onely purge vs, Heb. 1.3. If they vnderſtand the inſtrumentall meanes of our purgati-
Rom. 3.28. on, ſo are we purged and iuſtified onely by faith, Rom. 3.28. I conclude, that a man is iuſtified by faith, without the workes of the Law.

34 Reſpect not my ſinnes, but the faith of thy Church: By this reaſon one may be profited by anothers faith; which is contrarie to the Scriptures: The iuſt ſhall liue by faith: his owne, and not ano-
Rom. 1.17. thers: Rom. 1.17. and belike the Prieſt thus ſaying, hath no faith himſelfe.

35 Let vs worſhip the ſigne of the Croſſe: What I pray you will not theſe Idolaters worſhip?

36 Let this ſacrifice which I haue offered, auaile to obtaine remiſſion of ſinnes: If the Maſſe be auaileable for this end, wherefore then died Chriſt?

37 The Prieſt prayeth, that God would reſtore the land conſecrated by Chriſts blood to the Chriſtian faith: But where doe they finde, that the land was conſecrated by Chriſts blood, whereas the Numb. 35.33. Scripture ſaith, that the land is defiled with blood, that is, ſtandeth accurſed, Numb. 35.33. And the Apoſtle ſaith, He hath conſecrated, (not the earth, but) them that are ſanctified. Heb. 10 14. and, the
Heb. 9.14. blood of Chriſt purgeth our conſcience, Heb. 9.14 not the terrene part.

38 And whereas they pray, that the holy land may be recouered out of the hand of the enemies of the Croſſe: which God hath not done: how is now their Maſſe auaileable for the obtaining of temporall benefites, as Bellarmine would beare vs in hand?

39 The Prieſt prayeth alſo, That the vowes of the faithfull may be directed toward the deliuering of that land: Theſe were ſuperſtitious and vnlawfull vowes: as S. Hierome writeth vpon theſe words of the Pſalme, I hope to ſee God in the land of the liuing: Ergo, Terra Iudæa, quæ illius ditionis erat, &c. Therefore the land of the Iewes, which was vnder his regiment, is not that land of the liuing, but he draweth vs to a ſpirituall vnderſtanding: Hierom. de terra promiſſ. And againe, vpon theſe words, The Lord loueth the gates of Sion more, then all the tabernacles of Iacob: Nunquid iſtas portas diligit Deus, quas videmus in cineres, &c. Doth God loue thoſe gates, which are turned to aſhes? Ne ſtultis quidem hoc perſuaderi poteſt, Verie fooles will not be ſo perſwaded. So then all ſuch vowes are fooliſh, that are made in reſpect of the terreſtriall Ieruſalem, and by Hieromes ſentence they are fooles, that are ſo perſwaded.

40 In the end of the Maſſe, according to the vſe of Sarum, there is annexed the forme of bleſſing, or conſecrating the Paſchal Lamb, with this prayer, Vouchſafe to ſanctifie this Paſchall Lamb, that as many of thy people as doe eate thereof, may be repleniſhed with all heauenly benediction, &c. What groſſe ſuperſtition is this, that they ſhould ſtill retaine the vſe of the Paſchal Lamb, which cannot be, but to the great derogation of the true Paſchal Lambe Chriſt Ieſus, that the bodie being come, the ſhadow ſhould be ſtill retained? And I haue heard it credibly reported, by one ſometime brought vp in Barnwell Abbey by Cambridge, that the Monkes did vſe once a yeere to roſt a Lambe whole, and ſo to eate it with herbes: what greater ſuperſtition can be found among the Iewes?

OTHER ERRORS IN THE MANNER of celebrating Maſſe.

41. NOw to make vp the halfe hundred of errors in the Maſſe, as thoſe before going are found in the matter, ſo theſe following are in the manner: as firſt, all is done and ſaid in the Latine tongue, not vnderſtood of the people, and often not of the Prieſt himſelfe, contrarie to S. Pauls rule, that all things ſhould be done to edifying, 1, Cor. 14. 12. and they that ſpeake words not vnderſtood, ſpeake in the ayre, verſ. 9.

1. Cor. 14. 12.

42. Againe, they vſe many irkeſome, tedious, and friuolous repetitions of the ſame words, as Benedicamus Domino, Let vs bleſſe the Lord, is ſung tenne ſeuerall times together, and Ite, miſſa eſt, is ſung thirteene ſeuerall times, with long and tedious notes. This is contrarie to the precept of Chriſt, that wee ſhould not, when wee pray, vſe vaine repetitions, Matth. 6. 7. for ſo the word βαττολογεῖν there vſed, ſignifieth, being taken from the Poet Battus, that vſed often to inculcate or repeate the ſame things.

Matth. 6. 7.

43. The Prieſt is charged in the Rubricke to ſay diuers prayers, priuatim, ſecretly to himſelfe: as that prayer, Deliuer vs Lord from all euill, paſt, preſent, to come, &c. And, Thou Lambe of God, that takeſt away the ſinnes of the world. Likewiſe, where he ſaith, Forſake not vs thy ſeruants, but forgiue vs our ſinnes, &c. theſe and many other words muſt bee pronounced to himſelfe: contrarie to S. Paul, who would haue prayers ſo ſaid, that they may be vnderſtood, and thereunto Amen anſwered by the people, 1. Cor. 14. 16.

1. Cor. 14. 16.

44. The Prieſt is taught by the Rubricke to make thirtie ſeuerall croſſes at the leaſt vpon the bread, the cup, the Altar, his forehead: as may appeare in the Canon of the Maſſe, according to the vſe of Sarum, and as it is tranſlated by Maſter Fox in the beginning of the tenth booke of the Acts and Monuments: wherein firſt they doe contrarie to that, which they profeſſe in the Canon, ſaying thus, Diuina inſtitutione formati, Being informed by the diuine inſtitution. But no ſuch croſſing is to bee found in Chriſts inſtitution, which they profeſſe to follow. Secondly, whereas they vſe to croſſe themſelues either againſt the diuel and euill ſpirits, they need not feare any ſuch thing, where Chriſts bodie is: or elſe they vſe it, to bleſſe withall: but they haue no reaſon to bleſſe Chriſts bodie, whereby they receiue bleſſing. Thirdly, if the ſigne of the croſſe be ſo effectuall a ſigne, as they make it, once or twice were enough, or too much: but the making of it ſo often, ſheweth it to bee a vaine, idle, ſuperſtitious and vnprofitable ceremonie, as they vſe it.

45. Their geſture in ſaying of Maſſe, is ſo changeable, ſo ridiculous, ſo affected, that a man would thinke a Player were comming foorth vpon the ſtage, when the Prieſt addreſſeth him to the Maſſe: nay, Roſcius was not ſo full of action, as the Maſſing Prieſt is of geſture, varying and changing it at the leaſt fortie or fiftie times in a Maſſe while: firſt hee boweth his bodie: then hee rouſeth himſelfe and kiſſeth the Altar on the right ſide: he boweth againe, and looketh toward the hoaſt, hee ioyneth his hands, wipeth his fingers, lifteth vp the hoaſt: then he lifteth vp his eyes, and boweth himſelfe, and lifteth vp his eyes againe: he boweth againe, and lifteth vp the hoaſt aboue his forehead, vncouereth the cup, and holdeth it betweene his hands, keeping his thumbe and forefinger together: then hee boweth, and lifteth vp the cup a little, then to his breaſt, or aboue his head, hee ſetteth it downe againe, and wipeth his fingers for feare of crummes: then he ſpreadeth his armes acroſſe: he boweth his bodie; then riſing kiſſeth the Altar on the right ſide, after this, hee ſmiteth his breaſt: then he vncouereth the cup, maketh fiue croſſes with the hoaſt, beyond the cup twice, on each ſide, vnder the cup and before it: then he laieth his hands vpon the Altar: the Deacon then reacheth the Prieſt the Paten, which he putteth to his right eye, then to his left, and maketh a croſſe beyond his head with it, kiſſeth it, and laieth it downe, then he breaketh the hoaſt in three, holding two pieces in his left hand, one in his right ouer the cuppe, which with a croſſe hee letteth fall into it: the Prieſt then kiſſeth the Corporas, the Deacon taketh the Pax from the Prieſt, giueth it to the Subdeacon, and hee to the Queere: then humbling himſelfe, he firſt taketh the bodie, then the blood; ſo hee goeth to the right horne of the Altar: then the Subdeacon powreth in wine, and the Prieſt rinſeth the cup and waſheth his hands, &c. he turneth himſelfe to the people, commeth againe to the Altar, and turneth to the people the ſecond time, then bowing his bodie, and cloſing his hands he prayeth to himſelfe: he riſeth againe, making the ſigne of the croſſe, and bowing againe ſo goeth from the Altar. This leuitie and inconſtancie, in turning this way, and that way, to the right hand, to the left, now vp, now downe, backward and forward, caſting the armes acroſſe, warbling the fingers, &c. Moſes vſed it not in his prayer, that continued holding vp his hands in prayer againſt Amelek, till he was wearie: and Salomon endured kneeling on his knees, and ſtretching out his hands to heauen, till he had made an end of his prayer, 1. King. 8. verſ. 54.

1. King. 8. 54.

ERRORS COLLECTED OVT OF THE CAVTELES of the Maſſe, that follow after the Canon.

46. THe eighth cautele is, that if the Prieſt chance to conſecrate water for wine, hee muſt conſecrate againe. Why maſters, if theſe words, this is my bodie, be effectuall to make the body of Chriſt, why not ſpoken ouer water, as well as ouer wine? If ye vrge Chriſts power, he was able to turne water into wine, and ſo likewiſe water into his bodie: if ye vrge Chriſts inſtitution, that conſecrated onely in wine, he vſed no water at all, and therefore ye breake his inſtitution.

47. In the tenth cautele, A Prieſt excommunicate is willed to proceed. Can he then make Chriſts body, that is not of his body? this were monſtrous: for then not onely Prieſts, but euery one may make Chriſts body, euen an Heathen or Infidell: for he that is excommunicate is ſuſpended from his office, and is for the time as an heathen man, Matth. 18. 17.

Matth.18.17.

48. Cautele 12. If a Flie or Spider fall into the cup after conſecration, they muſt be firſt waſhed, then burned, and the waſhing and aſhes be kept in the ſacring veſſell: if the blood bee poyſoned, it muſt not bee drunke, but kept in a cleane veſſell. But this Cautele telleth vs not, what ſhall become of that which is kept, but there it remaineth ſtill, till it ſowre or ſtinke, or putrifie with wormes, which is as bad, as the falling in of a flie: and how an abſurd thing is it, that Chriſts blood may be poyſoned, ſeeing there be many preſeruatiues againſt poyſon, much inferiour to Chriſts body?

49. Cautele 18. If a drop of blood fall vpon the Altar, or Altar-cloth, table, &c. the Prieſt muſt lick it vp with his tongue, and the place muſt be waſhed, and the waſhing laid vp, &c.

Contra. Here the Prieſt hath a good office, to licke ſtones and tables, and clothes with his tongue: but I would aske them, whether euery drop of the Chalice be Chriſts whole body, or part: if a part, then is he diuided: if the whole, then, how many drops in the Chalice, ſo many bodies of Chriſt are there at once: they cannot winde themſelues from theſe abſurdities.

50. Cautele 22. If any man vomit vp the Euchariſt, it muſt be burned, and the aſhes laid vp by the altar, &c. What maſters will yee make Chriſt an heretike, that yee burne his body? And I pray you whence are theſe aſhes? they cannot be of accidents: ye muſt either grant that it is bread, that is burned, or Chriſts body: if the firſt, then there is no tranſubſtantiation: if the ſecond, it is blaſphemie. And cannot Chriſts body ſtay a vomite, which many a medicine is able to doe?

51. Cautele 23. If the Sacrament be eaten of a mouſe, or if it be loſt, let the Prieſt doe penance, &c. Thus by the popiſh doctrine, mice may deuoure Chriſts bodie, and he that found the loſt ſheepe may be loſt himſelfe.

52. Cautele 24. If by the negligence of the Prieſt the hoaſt doe putrifie, let him doe penance, &c. If the accidents only putrifie, there is no harme done, and this penance may be ſpared: if the hoaſt it ſelf putrifie, as this Cautele ſaith, then doe they make Chriſts glorious bodie corruptible.

Thus wee ſee with how many and what great and horrible blaſphemies this popiſh, and ſuperſtitious Canon of the Maſſe is ſtuffed: indeed it is an epitome and abridgment of Papiſtrie, the marrow, ſinewes, and bones of their idolatrous profeſſion: yea the very darling of the popiſh Church: it is the very proper badge and marke of a Papiſt. He that hateth the Maſſe, hateth the whore of Babylon: he that loueth the Maſſe, cannot loue the truth.

If, then I ſhould be demanded at once, which of all popiſh blaſphemies and hereſies I thinke moſt abominable, contrarie to the faith, and to be abhorred of all good Chriſtians: (though I know that there are many of this kinde) yet I would readily anſwere the Maſſe: the inuention whereof, I am well aſſured, cannot be aſcribed but to him that is the author of all lies, and blaſphemies.

Laſtly, let vs ſee how well the popiſh Maſſe agreeth with their owne Canons: concerning the mingling of the bread and wine together, it is contrarie to the decree of Iulius: Decret. par. 3. diſt. 2. c. 7. Illud, quod pro complemento communionis intinctam tradunt Euchariſtiam, &c. That for the complement of the Communion, they doe giue to the people the Euchariſt ſopped, or dipped, &c. it hath no warrant from the Goſpell.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that this decree forbiddeth onely that commixtion, which is giuen to the people in the Sacrament, not that, which is done in the Maſſe, lib. 2. de Miſſ. c. 27. reſp. ad obiect. 4.

Contra. The reaſon in the decree vſed, is generall againſt all mingling of the Sacrament: Seorſim panis, ſeorſim calicis, &c. The bread was commended or ſanctified apart, and the cup apart: neither did Chriſt giue dipped bread to any of his Diſciples, but to Iudas, to ſignifie his prodition, not any inſtitution of a Sacrament. Wherefore this decree is moſt euident againſt this ſuperſtitious mixtion in the Maſſe.

Concil. Colonienſ. par. 2. c. 11. Videbimur operæpretium facturi, &c. We ſhall doe very well, if wee cauſe the Miſſals and Breuiaries to be peruſed, that cutting off ſuperfluous things, & quæ ſuperſtitioſius, &c. and things ſuperſtitiouſly brought in, &c. How can the Miſſall or Maſſe-ſeruice be void of error, which is ſtuffed with many ſuperfluous and ſuperſtitious things?

Synod. Auguſtenſ. c. 33. Quod ad apocrypha, &c. As touching apocryphall, fooliſh, and vnſyncere matters, by the corruption of time crept into the Breuiaries, the often repetition of Pſalmes, innumerable Suffrages, new Collects, Sequencies, Prefaces, to be amended, and taken out of the ſeruices, &c.

This Canon reprehendeth vaine repetitions, the multitude of Collects in the Maſſe-ſeruice, which yet remaine vnpurged.

I will laſtly inſert the teſtimonie of Lindanus an arch-papiſt, who reporting the words of Agobertus Biſhop of Lyons: Antiphonarium correximus,&c. We haue corrected the Antiphonarie, cutting off what ſeemed to vs ſuperfluous,light,falſe,blaſphemous,ridiculous,phantaſticall. He addeth further: Who if he were now aliue to ſee our Miſſals,&c. how would hee call them? in the which not onely Apocryphall ſtories out of the Goſpell of Nicodemus, and other toyes,are inſerted, but ſecret prayers, mendis turpiſſimis conſpurcata, defiled with moſt filthie faults: yea the Canon it ſelfe, variat & redundat, doth varie and exceed,&c. Lindan.lib.3.de interpret.ſcriptur.c.3. Here is a graue teſtimonie of a learned writer of their ſide againſt the errors,faults,and corruptions of the Maſſe: how then are they not aſhamed to iuſtifie the ſame as perfect,and without reprehenſion.

I conclude therefore with that ſaying of Gregorie, as he ſaid concerning the word Antichriſtus: ſo may I in as good ſenſe of this word, Miſſa, as it is now vnderſtood of Papiſts: Si ſpectes quantitatem vocis,duæ ſunt ſyllabæ; ſi pondus iniquitatis,eſt vniuerſa pernicies: If you marke the quantitie of the word,it ſtandeth but of two ſyllables: but if we reſpect the waight of iniquitie, it containeth all impietie and vngodlines. As one ſometime pleaſantly deſcanting vpon the name,ſaid,that the Maſſe was called beyond the Sea (Miſſe:) for that all is amiſſe in it.

Iohn Mailer Fox pag.1204. col.2.& edition 1610.p.1099. l.35.

Beſide this opinion,which their owne men haue of the Canon of the Popiſh Maſſe: the Grecians to this day refuſe it, diſſenting from the Latines in many materiall points,as hath been before ſhewed in their ſeuerall places: as in their priuate Maſſes, in reſeruing of the Sacrament, in miniſtring with vnleauened bread,in adoration of the Sacrament,and ſuch other points wherein the difference is ſo great,that the Moſcouite Grecians, if a Latine Prieſt chance to ſay Maſſe vpon one of their Altars, they forthwith breake them downe,as defiled and polluted: And they hold the Prieſts of the Latine Church to be no better then heretikes,and vouchſafe not to ſalute them.

Sacranus Elucidar. error. 23.err.

The Æthiopike Church alſo vtterly reiecteth the popiſh canon of the Maſſe, for they reſerue not the Sacrament,they miniſter in both kindes,they ſay no Maſſes for the dead,or for remiſſion of ſinnes, neither allow they of Maſſe without a Communion, and other diuers points there are,as hath been before declared in the particular queſtions,wherein they diſſent from the Romane Church.

And for theſe and other ſuch matters,the reformed Churches alſo reiect the popiſh canon: as the confeſſion of Saxonie ſaith, that they haue certaine fragments called the Canons of the Maſſe, alleaged againſt the cleere light of truth.

Harm.ſect.14. pag.450.

Soli Deo immortali Patri,Filio,cum Spiritu ſancto,ſit honor & imperium ſempiternum.

Before I leaue this place, being a controuerſie of ſuch great waight, I thought good to inſert the arguments of the Martyrs againſt the reall preſence, and the contrarie reaſons vſed againſt them by the Papiſts in thoſe daies.

THE PAPISTS THEN IN TIME PAST HAVE thus reaſoned for their carnall preſence.

Arg.1. THe ſame bodie which was giuen for vs,is truly in the Sacrament: for our Sauiour Chriſt ſaid, This is my bodie,which ſhall be giuen for you.

But his true bodie was giuen for vs.

Anſw. Biſhop Cranmer anſwereth: His true bodie is truly preſent to them that truly receiue him, but ſpiritually: ibid. Which anſwere may be further explained thus: Firſt, we grant, that the ſame is preſent,but not after the ſame manner: Chriſts bodie may be truly preſent,although it bee not there carnally: he is preſent ſpiritually by faith,which is his true preſence. Secondly, wee turne this argument againſt them: for if the ſame bodie of Chriſt be preſent in the Sacrament,which he gaue for vs; then is it not preſent,but only to thoſe for whom it was giuen: but it was giuen only for the elect and beleeuers,therefore to the wicked and Infidels Chriſt is not preſent in the Sacrament, becauſe for ſuch he gaue not his bodie: and ſo it followeth, that wicked men doe not eate Chriſt in the Sacrament,and conſequently Chriſts bodie is not there carnally preſent: for then the wicked, that communicate,ſhould eate thereof.

Contra. Chriſt,when he ſpake theſe words, this is my bodie, ſpake of the ſubſtance of his bodie,not of the efficacie or effect, Chriſts bodie then is more then ſpiritually,that is effectually preſent: Chedſey.

Anſw. Wee grant,that in the Sacrament there is both the efficacie of the bodie of Chriſt, and the ſubſtance thereof, but the ſubſtance ſpiritually applied by faith: for the fleſh profiteth nothing of it ſelfe, My words (ſaith Chriſt) are ſpirit and life, Ioh.6. ſic Cranmer. It is therefore no good argument, ment,the efficacie of Chriſts bodie is ſpiritual in the Sacrament: Ergo,the ſubſtance of his body is not there ſpiritually: for the ſubſtance of Chriſts body is there ſpiritually,as the worker; the effect alſo is ſpiritual,as that which is wrought.

Argum.2. That only is giuen to vs in the Sacrament,which was giuen for vs vpon the croſſe:but bread was not giuen on the croſſe for vs: Ergo,bread is not giuen in the Sacrament: Chedſey.

Anſw. To the propoſition wee anſwere: firſt, the ſame bodie indeed is giuen both in the Sacrament,and vpon the croſſe,but not after the ſame manner: we haue the ſame bodie, but ſpiritually giuen vs by faith. Secondly,it is not true that that only is giuen vs in the Sacrament,&c. For there are both the bodie of Chriſt preſent ſpiritually in myſterie,and the bread preſent viſibly.

Argum.3. The ſame fleſh, whereby Chriſt is made our brother and kinſman, is giuen of Chriſt to vs to be eaten.

Chriſt is made our brother and kinſman by his true,naturall,and organicall fleſh.

Ergo,his true,naturall,and organicall fleſh is giuen vs to be eaten: argum.Weſton.

Anſw. Chriſt giueth vs indeed his true naturall fleſh to bee eaten, yet not after a carnall manner, but ſpiritually by faith: ſic Cranmer.

Contra. Chriſt gaue vs the ſame fleſh, which hee tooke of the Virgin: but hee tooke not his true fleſh of the Virgin ſpiritually,or in a figure.

Ergo,he giueth it not vs ſpiritually: ſic Weſton. diſput.Oxonienſ.

Anſw. Firſt,the propoſition wee grant, that Chriſt tooke the ſame fleſh of his mother,which he giueth vs to be eaten, but not after the ſame manner: therefore the aſſumption, which includeth the manner,not the thing,is ſophiſtically inferred,and containeth more then is in the propoſition:which ſpeaketh of the ſame fleſh,but not of the ſame manner.

Secondly,this argument may be turned vpon themſelues: as thus,

Chriſt giueth vs the ſame fleſh,which he tooke.

But he tooke not his fleſh of his mother ſpiritually at all,but after an humane manner only:

Ergo,he giueth not his fleſh to vs to be eaten ſpiritually at all.

If this be a good concluſion, (which let them grant,if they will) then is the other brought forth by them.

Argum.4.ex Chryſoſtomo. That thing is ſhewed in the Sacrament,which is worthie moſt higheſt honour in the earth:

But the bodie of Chriſt is worthie higheſt honour,not the elements of bread and wine:

Ergo,the bodie of Chriſt is ſhewed in the Sacrament,argum.Weſton.

Anſw. Firſt,the concluſion we grant,if it be rightly vnderſtood: for the body of Chriſt is ſhewed ſpiritually to the eye of faith in the Sacrament,as the Apoſtle ſaith, Chriſts death is ſhewed forth: for other ſhewing of Chriſts bodie in the Sacrament there can be none: The Papiſts themſelues cannot demonſtrate vnto vs Chriſts body,but only the externall ſhapes of bread and wine.

Secondly, we grant that the body of Chriſt, thus ſpiritually ſhewed in the Sacrament, is worthie higheſt honour: and that the outward ſignes,not as bare elements,but as they are myſticall ſeales of hid and heauenly graces,and the Sacraments inſtituted of Chriſt,are of vs to be highly reuerenced,as the ordinances of God. So then Chriſts bodie ſhewed in the Sacrament,is worthie higheſt honour in earth,and the Sacraments,as ſignes of holy things,are highly to be eſteemed.

Argum.5. The ſoule is fed by that,which the bodie eateth:

But the ſoule is fed by the fleſh of Chriſt:

Ergo,The bodie eateth the fleſh of Chriſt in the Sacrament,argum.Chedſei.

Anſw. Firſt,the Sacrament is one thing, the matter of the Sacrament another, outwardly the bodie eateth the Sacrament, inwardly wee eate the bodie of Chriſt: as in Baptiſme the fleſh is waſhed with water,that the ſoule may be purged ſpiritually,ſo our bodie eateth the outward Sacrament,that the ſoule may be fed of God: ſic Cranmer.

Secondly,to the argument in particular we anſwere thus: firſt to the propoſition: It is not generally true,that whatſoeuer the bodie eateth,the ſoule is fed by the ſame: and if it be but particularly propounded,this inſtance only of eating in the Sacrament, then the argument proueth not, ſtanding wholly of particulars. Againe, the bodie and the ſoule are fed by the ſame meate in the Sacrament, but not after the ſame manner; the bodie is nouriſhed by the naturall propertie of the elements, which they haue to nouriſh: but the ſoule, by the ſacramentall and ſupernaturall power, as they are ſignes and ſeales of holy things. Secondly,we grant that the ſoule is fed by the body of Chriſt,yet not carnally,but ſpiritually by faith: ſo that this argument may bee turned vpon them thus: As the ſoule feedeth vpon Chriſt,ſo doth the bodie: the ſoule is fed by faith: Ergo,ſo and no otherwiſe is the bodie. And true it is that the bodie is nouriſhed both with the Sacrament,and with the body of Chriſt: with the Sacrament (though not as a Sacrament) naturally to temporall life; with the body of Chriſt (ſupernaturally by the gift of faith in the ſoule) to eternall life: ſic Cranmer ad Weſtonum.

Argum.6. As Chriſt liueth by the Father, ſo liue we by his fleſh:

But Chriſt liueth by his Father naturally:

Ergo,we liue naturally by the eating of Chriſts fleſh,argum.Treſhami.

Anſw.1. The firſt part of this argument is not generally true: for Chriſt liueth otherwiſe by the Father in many reſpects: for hee is the Sonne of God by nature from all eternitie, but ſo are not wee. Secondly, the Papiſts themſelues denie any ſuch naturall eating of Chriſts fleſh: for the naturall food goeth downe into the belly, part whereof is turned into the ſubſtance of the body, part is throwne out into the draught: But neither is true of Chriſts fleſh; for if it were conuerted into our fleſh, then ſhould our fleſh alſo be immortall, and without ſinne, as our food is: and to ſay, that part thereof goeth the common way of meates, were a monſtrous blaſphemie againſt Chriſts glorious bodie: therefore we cannot ſo naturally eate Chriſts fleſh. Thirdly, we notwithſtanding in a good ſenſe are ſaid naturally to liue by Chriſt: firſt, not only becauſe we are of his nature according to the fleſh, but rather in that wee make all one myſticall bodie, whereof Chriſt is the head: that as the bodie naturally liueth by the head, ſo we doe naturally, that is verely, and in deede, liue by Chriſt. Secondly, in that Chriſt doth communicate vnto vs his nature of eternitie and glorie, and will bring vs to be, where he is, we are ſaid alſo naturally to liue by Chriſt: Sic Doctor Cranmer diſputat. Oxonienſ.

Argum. 7. The ſpeech of Chriſt, in ſaying (this is my bodie) they would thus proue, not to be a figuratiue, but a proper ſpeech.

Argum. Subſtantia, is not predicated denominatiuely:

This word (bodie) which is the prædicatum, is a ſubſtance:

Ergo, it is an eſſentiall predication, not a denominatiue: ſo it is his true bodie, not a figure of his bodie: argum. Oglithorpi.

Anſw. Subſtantia may be predicated denominatiuely, in an allegorie or metaphor, or a figuratiue locution: ſic D. Cranmer diſputat. Oxonienſ. And ſo is it in this place, where Chriſt ſpeaketh figuratiuely. Againe, they thus argue.

Argum. A figuratiue ſpeech worketh not:

But Chriſts ſpeech, this is my bodie, worketh: the word of Chriſt is of ſtrength, and by the Lords words the heauens were made:

Ergo, it is no figuratiue ſpeech: argum. Tongi.

Anſw. 1. The words of Chriſt doe not worke of themſelues, but Chriſt himſelfe, and hee worketh by a figuratiue ſpeech. 2. Chriſts ſpeech, or rather Chriſt by his ſpeech worketh, in inſtituting a Sacrament, not in conuerting the ſubſtance of bread. 3. God doth worke by his power in the Sacraments, as in Baptiſme, ſo in the Euchariſt: But there is no ſuch conuerſion in Baptiſme, therefore not in the other. 4. The Sacrament of Chriſts blood is made: the words make the blood to them, that receiue it; not that the blood is in the cup, but in the receiuer: reſp. D. Cranmer diſputat. Oxonienſ. Againe, thus they reaſon.

Argum. My ſheepe (ſaith Chriſt) heare my voyce, and follow me: but all the ſheepe of Chriſt heare this voyce, This is my body, without a figure:

Anſw. Firſt, the ſheepe of Chriſt follow the voyce of Chriſt, vnleſſe they be ſeduced and deceiued through ignorance: But the ſheepe of Chriſt neuer vnderſtood this voyce of Chriſt without a figure: for the fathers doe number this place among figuratiue and tropicall ſpeeches: reſponſ. D. Ridlei diſputat. Oxonienſ.

Argum. 8. Whereas we alleage ſuch places of Scriptures againſt the carnall preſence, as doe make mention of Chriſts aſcenſion into heauen, and his abode there: they on the contrarie labour thus to proue, that Chriſts aſcenſion into heauen, and his continuance there, is no let to the reall preſence of his fleſh in the Sacrament.

Chriſt appeared corporally and really on the earth ſince his aſcenſion into heauen: as he was ſeene of Paul, 1. Corinth. 15. and eccleſiaſticall ſtories make mention, that Chriſt appeared corporally vnto S. Peter, as he fled from Rome, as Egeſippus writeth, lib. 3. cap. 3.

Ergo, for al Chriſts being in heauen, he may alſo be in earth, and ſo conſequently in the Sacrament: argum. Smithi.

Anſw. Firſt, Chriſt may, when it pleaſeth him, be in heauen, and in earth, and appeare to whom he will: yet it followeth not, that he will doe ſo. Secondly, that Chriſt appeared to Paul and Stephen, Act. 7. we grant, but he was ſeene of them in heauen, not in earth: the ſtorie that is reported of Chriſts appearing to Saint Peter, is not certaine, and therefore it proueth not. Thirdly, though we ſhould grant the corporall appearance of Chriſt ſometime vpon earth, yet it muſt needes bee with ſome intermiſſion of his bodily preſence in heauen: for corporally to be preſent in earth, and corporally to be in heauen at the ſame time, is contrarie to the Scriptures, and againſt the nature of an humane bodie: wherefore if Chriſt abide in heauen after the manner of his corporall preſence, as the Scripture ſaith, The heauens muſt containe him; this muſt needs hinder his bodily preſence in the Sacrament: reſponſ. D. Ridlei diſput. Oxonienſ.

Argum. 9. Euery Sacrament of the new Teſtament hath a promiſe of grace, and ſo conſequently the Euchariſt hath:

But there is no promiſe of grace made to the bread and wine, but to the bodie, and blood of Chriſt:

Ergo, the bread and wine are not the Sacraments, but the bodie, and blood of Chriſt: argum. Watſon, diſputat. Oxonienſ.

Anſw. Firſt, there is no promiſe made to bread and wine, as they are common bread and wine; but in as much as they are ſanctified, and made the Sacraments of the bodie and blood of the Lord, they haue a promiſe of grace annexed vnto them. Secondly, and yet to ſpeake properly, this promiſe of the ſpirituall partaking of Chriſts bodie, is made not to the bread, and wine; but to them which worthily doe receiue the Sacrament: Reſponſ.D.Ridlei.

*Argum.*10. ex Chryſoſtomo: That which the woman did hold in her wombe, that ſame thing holdeth the Prieſt: but the Virgin did beare the very fleſh of Chriſt in deed: Ergo: argum.Weſtoni.

*Anſw.*1. We grant, the Prieſt holdeth the ſame thing, but after another manner: ſhe did hold the naturall bodie, the Prieſt holdeth the myſterie of the bodie: Reſponſ.Ridlei diſputat.Oxonienſ. And thus farre of our aduerſaries arguments.

THE ARGVMENTS OF THE MARTYRS AND holy confeſſors of Gods truth againſt the carnall preſence.

*Arg.*1. IF Chriſts bodie be carnally in the Sacrament, as it is now celebrated in the Church, then ſo was it preſent, at the firſt inſtitution thereof: If Chriſts bodie were then eaten in the Sacrament; and Chriſt as he did eate the Paſchall Lambe with his Diſciples, ſo likewiſe did he the Euchariſt: then it will follow, that Chriſt did eate his owne bodie, which were very abſurd.

Anſw. Moreman a popiſh Doctor granteth this conſequent, that Chriſt did eate his owne body: againſt whom Maſter Philpot framed this argument.

Receiuing of Chriſts bodie, hath a promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes:

Chriſts eating the Sacrament had no ſuch promiſe: for he had no ſinnes, and therefore needed no remiſſion: Ergo, Chriſt in the Sacrament did not eate his owne bodie.

*Anſw.*1. Firſt, Moreman anſwereth to the propoſition, denying that the receiuing of the Sacrament hath a promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes: whom Maſter Philpot confuteth by the very words of inſtitution; Which is giuen for you, which is ſhed for you for remiſſion of ſinnes.

*Anſw.*2. Doctor Weſton anſwered, that Chriſt did no more eate the Sacrament for remiſſion of ſinnes, then he was baptized: and by this reaſon may we proue as well, that he was not baptized at all; becauſe Baptiſme is giuen for remiſſion of ſinnes.

Contra. Though Chriſt were baptized, not for any neede thereof, but to giue an example to his Church, yet it is otherwiſe in eating his owne body in the Euchariſt: for the water in Baptiſme of it ſelfe is but a terrene element, but Chriſts bodie is liuely, and cannot be eaten without ſome effect or operation. Againe, let it bee obſerued, how they doe here match the Euchariſt and Baptiſme together, which elſewhere they denie; affirming that theſe two Sacraments haue no likelihood each to other: If then they will compare theſe Sacraments, they muſt be alike herein; that as the bread in the Euchariſt is become, as they ſay, the bodie of Chriſt; ſo muſt the water likewiſe in Baptiſme: and ſo conſequently it is as abſurd a thing, for Chriſt to eate his owne bodie in the Euchariſt, as for his bodie to be waſhed with his bodie in Baptiſme: *ex diſputat.conuocat.act.*3.diei.

Matth.28.6. Ioh.16.28. *Argum.*2. The Angell ſaid to the woman, He is riſen, he is not here: Matth.28. Ioh.16. I came from my father into the world: againe, I leaue the world, and goe to my father: Chriſt ſpeaketh of his naturall bodie: Ergo, we may conclude, that his bodie is not now in the world, argum.Philpotti.

Anſw. Chriſt is viſibly departed in his humanitie, but inuiſibly notwithſtanding he remaineth in the Sacrament.

Ioh.16.29. Contra. This diſtinction may be taken away by the anſwere of the Diſciples to our Sauiour Chriſt in the ſame place, where he ſpeaketh of his departure, Ioh.16. Now thou ſpeakeſt plainly, and vttereſt foorth no prouerbe: But if Chriſt had vnderſtood any ſuch inuiſible preſence according to the diſtinction, he had ſpoken obſcurely, and darkly, not plainly: *Reſp.Phil.diſp.conuoc.act.*4.diei.

Act.3.21. *Argum.*3. Philpotti: S.Peter ſaith, Act.3. Whom heauen muſt receiue, till the conſummation of all things: this is ſpoken of Chriſts humanitie: Ergo, it cannot be preſent vpon earth in the Sacrament.

Anſw. Harpsfield anſwereth, 1. Chriſt is not ex neceſſitate, of neceſſitie forced to any place. Contra. Chriſt is no otherwiſe forced of neceſſitie to any place, then as he hath by his owne decree appointed his bodie to remaine in heauen, and ſo declared it in his word. The decree therefore of God is immutable, not that God is forced by any to keepe it, but becauſe his will and purpoſe cannot be changed.

*Anſw.*2. Chriſt is omnipotent, and may be in heauen, or in earth at his pleaſure. Contra: of Chriſts omnipotencie, what he can doe, is not our queſtion, but rather what he doth: it is no good argument, he may doe this or that: Ergo, he doth it. So much only is to be beleeued of Chriſts omnipotencie, as is in the word expreſſed: but that Chriſts bodie is in heauen, and carnally the Sacrament vpon earth, is not expreſſed in the word: Ergo, it is not to be beleeued. ſic Philpot Martyr.

*Anſw.*3. This word oportet, vſed by S.Peter, he muſt, doth not include an abſolute neceſſitie, as may appeare by other places of Scripture: S.Paul ſaith, Oportet Epiſcopum vnius vxoris virum eſſe: A Biſhop muſt be the husband of one wife, yet he may be a Biſhop, that was neuer married.

Contra. This word oportet, is diuerſly taken in Scripture; S.Paul deſcribing a Biſhop, ſheweth his qualitie, what manner of perſon hee ought to bee: but S.Peter ſpeaking of Chriſts being in heauen, declareth the place where Chriſt muſt neceſſarily be, vntill his ſecond comming: As when I ſay (oportet te hic eſſe) you muſt needes be in this place; here is included an abſolute neceſſitie, that you cannot poſſibly, at the ſame inſtant, be in another place: but when I ſay, oportet te virum bonum eſſe, you muſt be a good man: it doth not include any ſuch neceſſitie, but that you may be an euill man: Sic Philpot diſputat, conuocat, action. 6. As then this word is taken in common ſpeech, ſo alſo in Scripture: ſometime it ſignifieth (it is meete) conuenient, ſometime it implieth an abſolute neceſſitie.

Argum. 4. As Chriſt worketh in Baptiſme, ſo he worketh in the other Sacrament.

But in Baptiſme he worketh not by any conuerſion of ſubſtance:

Ergo, there is no ſuch conuerſion in the Euchariſt: argum. Cran. diſp. Oxon.

Anſwere. 1. Firſt, D. Young anſwereth, that by this meanes they will make no change at all in the Sacrament.

Contra. Not ſo, but we make a great change: as in them that are baptized there is a great change, when the childe of the bond-ſlaue of the diuell is made the ſonne of God: ſo is it alſo in the Sacrament of the Supper, when he receiueth vs into his protection and fauour: ſic Cranmer.

Anſwere. 2. There is great difference betweene Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper: in the Supper the words are directed to the bread; in Baptiſme, to the ſpirit: he ſaid not the water is the ſpirit, but of the bread he ſaid, This is my bodie: ſic Weſt.

Contra. The Scripture in like manner, as here the bread is called Chriſts body, becauſe it repreſented his bodie, ſo it calleth the ſpirit a Doue, when the ſpirit deſcended in likeneſſe of a Doue: as Iohn 1. Vpon whomſoeuer thou ſhalt ſee the ſpirit deſcending: He calleth that which deſcended, the holy Spirit: the bread then is no more the body of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, then the Doue in the Baptiſme of Chriſt lighting vpon him, was the ſpirit. Iohn 1.33.

Argum. 5. ex Theodoreto: who thus reaſoneth againſt the heretike Eutyches, who denied two natures of ſubſtance to remaine in Chriſt.

As in the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt after the conſecration, there is the ſubſtance of Chriſts humanitie together with the ſubſtance of bread, ſo in the perſon of Chriſt there doe remaine two ſeuerall ſubſtances, that is, his diuinitie and humanitie vnited together, &c. But if ſo, that there ſhould not remaine in the Sacrament, which is a repreſentation of Chriſt, the ſubſtance of bread, but ſhould be abſorpt by the preſence of Chriſts fleſh, this would make ſtrongly, not againſt, but for Eutyches, that euen ſo in the perſon of Chriſt, his humanitie ſhould bee ſwallowed vp of his diuine nature annexed thereunto: argum. Philpotti diſputat. conuocation.

Argum. 6. To theſe reaſons wee may adioyne thoſe ſubſtantiall prooues and arguments exhibited by that famous Clerke, and moſt conſtant Martyr Biſhop Ridley, in his learned diſputation at Oxford.

1 The reall and carnall preſence varieth from the articles of the faith, He aſcended into heauen, &c. and from thence, and from no other place ſhall he come to iudge the quicke and the dead.

2 It deſtroyeth and taketh away the inſtitution of the Lords Supper: firſt, the Lords Supper was commanded onely to be vſed, vntill the Lord himſelfe ſhould come: but if he be come alreadie in his fleſh, then muſt the Supper ceaſe. Secondly, we are commanded to vſe it in remembrance of Chriſt: but a remembrance is not of a thing preſent, but of a thing that is paſt, and abſent.

3 This opinion of the reall preſence, admitteth many abſurdities: as that whoremongers, murtherers, wicked and faithleſſe men, yea Mice, Rats, and Dogges alſo may receiue the very reall, and corporall bodie of the Lord.

4 It confirmeth and maintaineth that beaſtly kinde of crueltie of the Anthropophagi, that is, the deuourers of mans fleſh: for it is a more cruell thing to deuoure a quicke man, then to ſlay him.

5 Againe, the bread which Chriſt gaue to his Diſciples, he brake: but his body could not be broken, for the Scripture ſaith, Exod. 12. Ye ſhall not breake a bone of him. Further, the bread which Chriſt Exod.12.46.
giueth vs to eate, came downe from heauen, Iohn 6. But Chriſts bodie came not downe from heauen: Iohn 6.32.
Ergo, his body is not carnally eaten, and after a fleſhly manner.

Argum. 7. Here we may remember alſo the pithie arguments of that renowned learned man Peter Martyr, propoſed by him in his diſputation at Oxford.

1 The analogie or reſemblance betweene the Sacrament, and the thing ſignified in the Sacrament, muſt alwaies be kept: But ſo is it not, if the reall preſence be affirmed, without the ſubſtaace of bread and wine: as it is thus further proued. Firſt, one point of reſemblance is in nouriſhing, that as the bread and wine nouriſh the body, ſo the body of Chriſt doth ſpiritually nouriſh the ſoule: but the elements of bread and wine without a ſubſtance cannot nouriſh, they cannot therefore reſemble the ſpirituall nouriſhment. Secondly, another reſemblance in the Sacrament is this, that as one loafe of bread, and one cup of wine containeth many cornes, and grapes; ſo the myſticall congregation containeth many members, yet maketh but one bodie: but if there bee no ſubſtance of bread and wine (which ſhould conſiſt of many corns, and grapes vnited) remaining, this ſimilitude of the coniunction of the parts and members of the Church, cannot be repreſented: Ergo, there remaineth the ſubſtance of bread and wine, or elſe the analogie of the Sacrament is aboliſhed.

2 The death of Chriſt is not preſent really in the Sacrament, but by ſimilitude: for it is done in remembrance of his death: Chriſt in the Sacrament dieth not verily, or is crucified againe.

The precious blood of Chriſt is preſent in the Sacrament, as his death is preſent, for Chriſts blood was ſhed in his death, and without his dying his blood cannot be ſhed: if his death be verily and indeede, ſo is the ſheding of his blood; if one be in myſterie, ſo is the other.

Ergo, the precious blood is not preſent in the Sacrament, but by ſimilitude, and as the death of Chriſt is ſhewed forth.

3 Chriſts body cannot be really in the Sacrament, vnleſſe it be in many places at once: for out of heauen his body muſt not be vntill Chriſts ſecond comming:

But his body being a true naturall body, cannot be at one inſtant preſent in many places: Ergo.

The aſſumption or ſecond part is thus proued: Firſt, Spirits being of a more rare and ſubtill ſubſtance then a bodie is, cannot be in many places at once: as the ſoule of man hath his certaine place, ſo alſo are the Angels limited at one time to one place: much more is a naturall bodie tyed vnto a definite and certaine place. Secondly, euery quantitie, that is, euery body hauing magnitude, length, and other dimenſions, is circumſcribed in one peculiar place: but the bodie of Chriſt hath his dimenſions, and is a quantie: Ergo:

4 The wicked receiue not Chriſts body:

But if Chriſt bee really preſent in the Sacrament, and ſo all receiue his bodie that communicate in the Sacrament, then ſhould the wicked bee partakers of Chriſts bodie, which is not to bee granted:

Ergo, Chriſts bodie is not really preſent.

That the wicked eate not Chriſts bodie, it is further thus proued:

To eate Chriſt, is for a man to haue Chriſt dwelling, and abiding in him, the wicked haue not Chriſt dwelling in them.

Ergo, the wicked eate not the bodie of Chriſt. Againe, Chriſts body is eaten by faith.

But the wicked haue no faith.

Ergo, they cannot eate the bodie of Chriſt: that Chriſts bodie is eaten onely by faith, it thus appeareth:

Iohn 6.47.50. That bread, the eating whereof giueth eternall life, is eaten by faith: as Iohn 6.47. Hee that beleeueth in me hath euerlaſting life, and verſe 50. He which eateth of this bread ſhall not die. Here to beleeue, and to eate of the heauenly bread, are all one, becauſe they bring forth the ſame effect, namely euerlaſting life: But Chriſts body is this heauenly bread, that giueth euerlaſting life, verſe 53.

Ergo, his body is onely eaten by faith. And further thus:

Chriſts body is either eaten by ſenſe, reaſon, or faith:

But the wicked eate him not by any of theſe meanes: Ergo, not at all.

Not by ſenſe: for they ſay, that Chriſts body in the Sacrament is not ſenſible: they are the ſhapes onely and accidents of bread and wine that are ſeene, felt, and taſted, (as they ſay) in the Sacrament: Not by reaſon, for the Sacrament exceedeth all reaſon. Nec fides habet meritum, vbi ratio prabet experimentum: Faith is nothing worth where reaſon maketh experience: And faith wicked men and vnbeleeuers cannot haue: Ergo, they cannot eate Chriſts bodie at all.

Iohn 16.7. 5 The holy Ghoſt could not come, if the body of Chriſt were really preſent, as it is proued, Iohn 16. Vnleſſe I goe from you, the holy Ghoſt cannot come.

That the holy Ghoſt is come it is moſt certaine; Ergo, Chriſt cannot be carnally preſent, for this were to depriue vs of the preſence of Gods ſpirit.

6 If Chriſt had giuen his bodie ſubſtantially and carnally in the ſupper, then was that body either paſſible, or impaſſible:

But you cannot ſay that it was either paſſible, or impaſſible: Ergo, Chriſts paſſible bodie is not now giuen to bee eaten, for Chriſt dieth no more, his bodie is now glorified, and can bee no more paſſible.

Neither did he giue an impaſſible bodie to be eaten: for he ſaith, This is my bodie, which ſhall be giuen for you: that is, which ſhould ſuffer and be crucified for them: If it bee then neither paſſible, nor impaſſible, it is no bodie at all. And thus farre alſo of theſe arguments, who liſt at large further to know the ſure and ſubſtantiall grounds of the faith of the holy Martyrs in this matter, may ſupply what is here wanting, which for want of ſufficient leyſure, and the neceſſitie of finiſhing and haſtening this worke, I could not at large collect together, may make a ſupply thereof by his owne obſeruation out of the ſtorie of their acts and doings. Againſt the carnall preſence we haue the full conſent of antiquitie.

S. Cyprian ſerm. de cœna Domini. Panem Angelorum ſub Sacramento manducamus, &c. We eate the bread of Angels vnder a Sacrament in earth, wee ſhall eate the ſame without a Sacrament more manifeſtly in heauen: The ſame bodie ſhall bee eaten in heauen, which is eaten in earth, though not after the ſame manner: but Chriſts fleſh ſhall not bee eaten in heauen, therefore it is not eaten in earth.

Againe in the ſame Sermon, Eſus carnis huius, &c. The eating of this fleſh, is a certaine deſire of abiding in him: That which food is to the fleſh, that is faith to the ſoule: that, which meate is to the bodie, that is the word to the ſpirit.

Origen. homil. 16. in Numer. Bibere dicimur ſanguinem Chriſti, &c. Wee are ſaide to drinke the blood of Chriſt, not onely in the ſacramentall rites, but when we receiue his word. If Chriſt bee eaten in his word, as in the Sacrament, then is hee onely eaten ſpiritually.

Chryſoſtome alſo, hom. 51. in Matth. Tangamus nos fimbriam veſtimenti, &c. Let vs touch the hemme of Chriſts garment, whoſe not veſture onely, but his body is ſet before vs. As Chriſts garment is ſet before vs, ſo is his body; but the one is ſpiritually done, therefore the other. Againe, Ne agnum comedentes, in lupos conuertamur, &c. Let vs not after we haue eaten the Lambe, be turned into Wolues: As men are turned into Wolues: ſo they eat the Lambe; but they are ſo ſpiritually onely turned: Ergo, they doe ſpiritually eat the Lambe; Non eſt opus &c. We haue no neede of golden veſſels, but of golden ſoules, ibid. Chriſts body then is food for the ſoule.

Auguſtine in Pſalm. 14. Donec ſeculum finiatur, ſurſum eſt Dominus; ſed etiam hic nobiſcum eſt veritas Domini: corpus enim in quo reſurrexit, in vno loco eſſe oportet, veritas eius vbique diffuſa eſt: While the world ſhall laſt, the Lord is aboue, and the verity of the Lord is with vs: for his body, wherewith he roſe muſt be in one place, but the verity thereof is euery where diſperſed.

Hierom. ad Marcellum: Stultum eſt in paruo loco vel abſcondito quarere, qui totius mundi eſt lumen: It is great fooliſhneſſe to ſeeke him in a corner (as the popiſh Prieſt doth, that putteth him into the pixe) who lightneth the whole world.

Ambroſius: Qui diſcordat à Chriſto non manducat carnem eius, nec bibit ſanguinem, etſi tanta rei ſacramentum accipiat: Hee that diſſenteth from Chriſt, doth neither eat his fleſh, nor drinke his blood, though he receiue the Sacrament thereof. If wicked men eat not Chriſts body, and yet eat the Sacrament, then is not the body of Chriſt the Sacrament.

Againe, S. Ambroſe lib. 1. c. offic. c. 48. Nunc Chriſtus offertur, ſed hic in imagine, &c. Now Chriſt is offered, but heere in an image or ſimilitude, but there in truth, where hee as our aduocate maketh interceſſion for vs with his Father: if Chriſts body then be onely in verity in heauen, then is not his true body carnally preſent in the earth.

Likewiſe, Tertullian contra Marcion lib. 4. Auguſt in Pſal. 3. cont. Adimant cap. 12. In this ſpeech of Chriſt, This is my bodie, doe vnderſtand the figure of his bodie. Likewiſe Origen. hom. 7. Leuitic. Eſt in Euangelijs litera, quæ occidit: There is a killing letter in the Goſpell, as well as in the old Teſtament, for if according to the letter we follow that, which is ſaid, Unleſſe ye eate my fleſh, &c. this letter killeth. And many teſtimonies wee haue beſide, but theſe here ſhall ſuffice, and ſo I conclude this place.

Tertullian ſaith directly, hoc eſt corpus meum, id eſt, figura corporis mei: this is my body, that is, a figure of my body; and how Chriſts fleſh is to be eaten, he further ſheweth: quia durum et intolerabilem exiſtimauerunt ſermonem eius, quaſi voce carnem ſuam illis edendum determinaſſet, vt in ſpiritu diſponeret ſtatum ſalutis, præmiſit, ſpiritus eſt qui viuificat, &c. Becauſe they thought it an hard and intolerable ſpeech; as though he had determined his fleſh truly to be eaten of them, he premiſeth, it is the ſpirit which quickneth &c. Heere he denieth that Chriſts fleſh is verely, that is, carnally eaten; but how hee is to be eaten, he ſheweth a little after, auditu deuorandus, ruminandus intellectu, fide digerendus: he muſt be deuoured by hearing, ruminated by vnderſtanding, and digeſted by faith, &c. And wheras the pagan idolaters obiected vnto the Chriſtians, infanticidium et pabulum cruda, the killing of infants in their aſſemblies, and eating of raw fleſh; hee returneth this accuſation vpon themſelues, ſhewing that they doe vſe to drinke humane blood, and not the Chriſtians: as they vſed in Rome, when any were initiated, vnto the ſeruice of Bellona, to take of their blood, and the reſt to drinke it, and in their ſword plaies the people vſed to drinke of their blood that were ſlaine for a remedie againſt the falling ſickeneſſe, &c. But if Chriſtians had in deed in their ſacrifices eaten Chriſts fleſh, and drunk his blood, they would not in defence of their fact, haue put it vpon the Gentiles, being themſelues guilty of it.

Many ſuch teſtimonies may be produced, but theſe may ſuffice and ſo I conclude this place.

HEERE FOLLOWETH A SHORT TREATISE CONSISTING OF THREE PARTS: THE FIRST CONTAINETH THE REASONS OF THE HOLY MARTYRS, AGAINST THE MASSE: THE SECOND, A confutation of Maſſe-goſpellers arguments, in defence of their going to Maſſe: the third dealeth againſt Popiſh Recuſants.

THE FIRST PART.

ARGVMENTS IN GENERALL AGAINST the idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

B. Ridley Martyr: Epiſt ad Bradford. pag.1725.

THere are two moſt perilous engines, wherby Antichriſt doth chiefly impugne the verity and faith of the Goſpell, which ſeeme to be the moſt maſſie poſtes, and mighty pillers, whereby he vpholdeth, and maintaineth his Kingdome: the one is the idolatrous vſe of the Lords Supper, which they haue turned into the idoll of the Maſſe: the other is the proud and arrogant vſurpation of the primacie of the Sea of Rome. Of this latter wee haue entreated before at large: this other pillar, as we haue hitherto in this place laid particular aſſault vnto it, ſo now, we will by Gods grace ſhake the foundation of it all at once: by ſetting foorth ſuch valiant arguments, wherewith the faithfull and ſtout ſouldiers of Chriſt, the holy Martyrs and confeſſors of the truth, haue armed themſelues, againſt this raging beaſt, that hath deuoured the pretious liues of ſo many of Gods Saints.

*Argum.*1. The popiſh Maſſe, is not onely diuers from the inſtitution of the Lords Supper, but contrarie to it, not diſſenting onely from it, but quite and cleane ouerthwarting, and ouerthrowing it: Ergo, it is abominable.

The antecedent or firſt part of the argument thus appeareth to be true, by theſe particulars. Firſt, Chriſt commanded it to be done in his remembrance: the Prieſt ſaith Maſſe in remembrance of dead men. Secondly, Chriſt tooke bread, and left bread: the Prieſt taketh bread and coniureth it away. Thirdly, Chriſt tooke bread and brake it: the Prieſt taketh bread and hangeth it vp. Fourtly, Chriſt tooke bread and gaue it to his Apoſtles: the Prieſt eateth euery whit alone. Fifthly, Chriſt gaue a Sacrament to ſtrengthen mens faith: the Prieſt giueth a ſacrifice to redeeme mens ſoules. Sixthly Chriſt gaue it to be eaten; the Prieſt giueth it to be worſhipped, Chriſt gaue bread; the Prieſt ſaith hee giueth a God, Ergo, the Maſſe is contrary and oppoſite to Chriſts inſtitution. ex dialog. conſuetud. verit.p.1392.

*Argum.*2. Whatſoeuer commandeth and practiſeth things contrary to the word, will, and commandements of God, is to be abhorred and deteſted: but ſo doth the Maſſe: it maintaineth inuocation of Angels and Saints, prayer for the dead, adoration of creatures, yea euen of bakers bread, opinion of merits, with ſuch like, as wee haue proued before ſeuerally in euery one of theſe queſtions: Ergo.

*Argum.*3. The ſacrifice of the Maſſe, which they ſay is a propitiatorie ſacrifice for the quicke and the dead, is iniurious and derogatorie to the death and paſſion of Chriſt: Ergo, it is abominable.

The firſt is thus proued: to reiterate a thing once done for the ſame end wherefore it was begun, declareth the imperfection of the ſame thing before: but in the Maſſe is reiterated the ſacrifice of Chriſt for the ſame end, for the which it was firſt offered, namely for propitiation and remiſſion of ſins: Ergo, it maketh Chriſts ſacrifice vnperfect. Argum. M. Bradford. Fox. pag. 1397. col. 2.

*Argum.*4. The Maſſe alſo is blaſphemous to the Prieſthood of Chriſt, which is eternall and perpetuall; but by that popiſh ſacrifice it is made not eternall: That thing is not eternall or perpetuall, which admitteth ſucceſſion of other to doe the ſame thing that was done before, Heb.7.23. But the Maſſe Prieſts ſucceede after Chriſt, doing the ſame ſacrifice, as they ſay, which he did before : Ergo, they make Chriſts Prieſthood not to be perpetuall. Argum. Bradford.

Argum. 5. The popiſh Prieſthood is idolatrous and abhominable : Ergo, ſo is their ſacrifice. Probatur antecedens.

No ſacrifice ought to be done, but by a Prieſt meet for the ſame, and appointed thereunto.

But all Prieſts are vnmeet to offer ſacrifice for ſinne, ſauing Chriſt, becauſe they are ſinners, Heb. 7. 27. And onely Chriſt is called to that honour, to ſacrifice for ſinnes, hee being the onely Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech, Hebr. 5. 6. Ergo, popiſh prieſts haue no authority to ſacrifice for ſinnes, but in ſo doing commit ſacriledge and idolatry. Argum. B. Ridlei, Fox pag. 1445.

Hebr. 5. 6.

Argum. 6. The Maſſe is a vaine, needleſſe, and fruitleſſe action : Ergo, to be aboliſhed. It is thus proued.

After eternall redemption found and obtained, there needeth no more daily offering for the ſame.

But Chriſt hath for vs obtained eternall redemption, Hebr. 9. 12. and is able perfectly to ſaue vs, Heb. 7. 25. Ergo, all ſacrifice and oblation for the ſame is needleſſe and in vaine. Argum. D. Ridlei.

Heb. 9. 12.
Heb. 7. 25.

Argum. 7. As the matter, end, and the Miniſter of the Maſſe are, as wee haue ſeene, all idolatrous and vnlawfull; ſo alſo is the manner thereof. All things, according to S. Paules rule, ought to be done in the Church in a knowne and edifying tongue, 1. Cor. 14. But the Maſſe is celebrate in a ſtrange and vnknowne tongue : Ergo, it ought not to be done or vſed in the Church.

Argum. 8. The Maſſe hindreth the right ſeruice of God: Ergo. Whatſoeuer cauſeth a man to reſt in the outward ſeruing of God, whoſe ſeruice ſhould be inward, in ſpirit and truth; that hindreth the true ſeruice of God. But this doth the Maſſe, requiring nothing but externall ſeruice, in hearing, ſeeing, gazing, peeping, ſtouping, kneeling, knocking : yea and they make theſe things meritorious, Ex opere operato, etiam ſine bono motu intentionis : By the very worke wrought, without any good motion or intention : Ergo, the Maſſe deſtroyeth the true ſeruice of God.

Argum. 9. The Maſſe is an enemy to preaching, praying, and all other godly Chriſtian exerciſes : Ergo.

Where one thing is made and thought to be alone ſufficient, there all other helpes are needleſſe.

But the Maſſe, as they ſay, ſerueth for all, to pardon ſinnes, to deliuer from hell and purgatory: to giue health both of body and ſoule: Ergo, it maketh all other helps needleſſe, hearing of Gods word, praying, repenting, &c. and other helps to good life. Argumentum Magiſtri Foxi.

Argum. 10. As the Maſſe ouerthroweth the true ſeruice of God, and doth oppoſe it ſelfe to al Chriſtian exerciſes, ſo doth it alſo hinder a good life.

Whatſoeuer maketh men preſumptuous, and miniſtreth falſe hope of forgiueneſſe to the wicked, maketh them more prone and ready to ſinne, and hindreth good life.

But this doth the Maſſe, promiſing ſufficient redemption to the wicked, that haue ſpent their life in drunkenneſſe, adulteries, wantonneſſe, ſwearing, riot, exceſſe, and in all vncleanneſſe, if they will but come to the Church and heare a Maſſe, and take holy bread, and holy water, or finde a ſoule Prieſt, or giue ſomewhat to the Prieſt to doe penance for him; though they neither pray, nor repent, nor heare the word preached.

This is proued by the confeſſion of Roger Holland, who was at the firſt an obſtinate Papiſt, yet afterward (God hauing mercie vpon him) he was conuerted to the faith of the Goſpell, and dyed a conſtant Martyr. It is not vnknowne (ſaith he) that I was of this your blind religion, and therein continued obſtinately all King Edwards dayes: and hauing liberty vnder your auricular confeſſion, I made no conſcience of ſinne at all; truſting to the Prieſts abſolution, he for money alſo doing ſome penance for me: which after I had giuen, I cared no further what offences I did, ſo that lecherie, ſwearing, and all other vices I accounted no offence or daunger, ſo long as I might haue them abſolued for money. Hæc Roger Holland. Martyr. coram Bonero. vid. plur. Fox. pag. 2040. col. 1. Ergo, the Maſſe bringeth wicked men into a fooles paradiſe, and maketh them preſumptuous, and more bold to ſin, and ſo hindreth good life. Wherefore, ſeeing the popiſh Maſſe is ſo contrary to the inſtitution of Chriſt, ſo full of errors and blaſphemies, ſo derogatorie to the eternall Prieſthood, and onely ſufficient ſacrifice of Chriſt, a peruerting of ſound doctrine, and a deſtruction of good life and manners: we conclude, that it is an abominable inuention, and ſay with Doctor Taylor, that it is one of Antichriſts daughters, Epiſtol. ad vxorem p. 1588. with Biſhop Ridley, that it is one of the maſſie poſts, and mighty pillars of Sathans Synagogue, pag 1725. with William Tims Martyr, that in the ſacrament of the Altar, Chriſt is not preſent neither ſpiritually, nor corporally, but as they vſe it, it is an abominable Idol, pag. 1897. with Thomas Hudſon Martyr, that it is a patched monſter, a diſguiſed puppet, more longer a peecing then euer was Salomons Temple, page. 2035. And therefore to be abhorred and deteſted of euery good Chriſtian.

See this place obiected againſt by a popiſh cauiller, and anſwered Retectio. p. 27.

HERE FOLLOW OTHER REASONS, WHY IT IS not lawfull to reſort to the popiſh Maſſe, or any part of their Idolatrous ſeruice.

*Arg.*1. FOr as much, as there haue beene ſome of opinion, (whether carried away with a ſelf-loue, and ſingularity in themſelues, or thereunto driuen by reaſon of their weakenes, in time of perſecution) that a man keeping his heart and conſcience to himſelfe, might preſent himſelfe, for ſafegard of his life, at the popiſh idolatrous and maſſing ſeruice. How dangerous this opinion is, and how vnlawfull a thing it is ſo to doe, we will by theſe reaſons make it plaine. Firſt, the Maſſe, and the whole popiſh ſeruice, (though the firſt we grant, is fuller of abominations, and therefore more dangerous; yet both of them wicked and abominable;) doth repugne manifeſtly againſt Gods word. In the Maſſe, theſe things are offenſiue, and intolerable; the want of ſhewing the Lords death, in making it priuate, whereas it ſhould be a Communion: the Sacrament is not communicated vnder both kinds: the ſigne is ſeruilely worſhipped, for the thing ſignified: Chriſts paſſion is iniuried, ſeeing they make the Maſſe a propitiatory ſacrifice: Ergo, for theſe abominations, we ought neither to heare, nor ſee a Maſſe. Argum. Ridlei.p. 1718.

In the popiſh ſeruice or leiturgie, theſe notorious abuſes and ſuperſtitions are common: In their Mattens and Euenſong, there is idolatry maintained, inuocation of Saints, kneeling to the Rood, creeping to the Croſſe, reading fables in ſtead of Scripture, prayer for the dead, and all is done in an vnknowne tongue, which is forbidden in Gods word. Wherefore ſeeing they are manifeſtly oppoſite to the word of God, we ought not to vouchſafe our preſence, leſt thereby wee ſhould ſeeme to giue conſent vnto them. Argum. Bradford in epiſtol. quad. p. 1647.

Argum. 2. We cannot be partakers of Gods Religion, and Antichriſts ſeruice, whereof the Maſſe is moſt principall: and the Latine ſeruice is a plaine marke of Antichriſts Synagogue: a man can not be a member of Chriſts Church, and of the Popes Church: But he that frequenteth their idolatrous aſſemblies, maketh himſelfe a member therof: Ergo, he cutteth himſelfe off from the Church of Chriſt. Argum. Bradford.

Argum. 3. To diſſemble, and to halt in matters belonging to Gods glory, is a thing impious and vngodly: but they which are preſent at Maſſe, both hearing the name of God blaſphemed, and ſeeing many abominations, and yet holding their peace, doe notably diſſemble: for as the Iewes were wont to rend their clothes, when they heard or ſaw any thing done or ſpoken blaſphemouſly againſt God: and Paul and Barnabas did ſo likewiſe, when they ſaw the people of Lycaonia readie to offer ſacrifice vnto them; ſo ought we to open our mouthes againſt the blaſphemie and abominations of the Maſſe: but this the Maſſe-goſpellers doe not: Ergo, they are diſſemblers, and to be condemned in ſo doing, Argum. Bradford epiſtol. quad. p. 1652.

Argum. 4. Frequenting of Maſſe impugneth diuers petitions in the Lords prayer, and ſo the practiſe of ſuch is contrary to the daily prayer they vſe: How can we ſay, let thy kingdome come, and goe to Maſſe, when as nothing in the earth more deſtroyeth the preaching and kingdome of Chriſt, than the Maſſe? how can we pray, thy will be done, when we will doe our owne will, and the will of our parents and friends, and not Gods will? How pray we, deliuer vs from euill, which knowing the Maſſe to be euill, doe come to it? Ergo, if we meane, as we pray, going to Maſſe is to bee auoided: Argum. Bradford. ibid.

Argum. 5. The Maſſe and Latine ſeruice, and the ſetters forth of it, condemne the Engliſh reformed ſeruice, as hereſie, and ſo doe they which communicate with their aſſemblies, thus condemning that in practiſe, which they allow in iudgement: contrary to S. Pauls rule, Bleſſed is hee that condemneth not himſelfe, in that thing which he alloweth, Rom. 14. 22. Ergo, in going to Maſſe, they ſin againſt their owne conſcience: argum. Bradford. p. 1647. col. 1. Rom.14.22.

Argum. 6. All things, which giue occaſion to the wicked to be more obfirmed, to the weake to ſtumble and fall, are to be abhorred: But Goſpellers going to Maſſe, and by their preſence giuing allowance of it; doe occaſion the obſtinate to be more intractable: the weake Papiſts to be more obſtinate: the ſtrong Goſpellers to be ſore weakened: the weake Goſpellers to bee vtterly ouerthrowne: Ergo. argum. Bradford. ibid.

Dan.1.8. Argum. 7. Daniel refuſed to be filled with the Kings meates, Dan. 1. 8. which were polluted by idolatrie, and ſo Iudith likewiſe, Iud. 12. The Machabees manfully gaue their liues in defence of the ceremonies of the Law: Ergo, wee ought much more to endure and ſuffer all things for the maintenance of the word of God, and Sacraments: argum. D. Ridlei. pag. 1722.

Amos.5.5. Argum. 8. God commanded his people by the mouth of his Prophet Amos, not to ſeeke Bethel, neither to enter into Gilgall, where idolatry was vſed: My ſoule hath no pleaſure in theſe, ſaith the Lord, that withdraw themſelues, Hebr. 10. 38. If any man prophane the Temple of God, him will God deſtroy, 1. Cor. 3. 17. All ſtrange religion is counted whoredome with the Prophets, and they that follow the ſame goe a whoring: onely they whoſe names are not written in the booke of life, doe receiue the marke of the beaſt, Apocal. 13. Hebr.10.38. 2.Cor.3.17. Apoc.13.7.

But they that goe to Maſſe, enter into Bethel, and Gilgall, that is, places of idolatry: they withdraw themſelues from the faith, in their outward behauiour: they prophane their bodies, which are Gods temples, being preſent at idolatrous ſeruice: they go a whoring after a ſtrange worſhip; yea and they carry the marke of Antichriſt in their externall obedience: Ergo, the Maſſe is abominable, and they in ſo doing are in danger of Gods curſe: argum. M. Philpotti Martyr, epiſtol. quad. p. 1832.

Argum. 9. Abraham, becauſe he would not be partaker of their idolatry, fled from the people of Chaldea, his natiue country: Lot departed from the Sodomites, leaſt hee ſhould bee conſumed with them: Sara would not ſuffer Iſmael, who was giuen to mocking, to keepe companie with her ſonne Iſaac, leaſt he alſo ſhould become a mocker. Moſes at Gods appointment, commanded the people to depart from the tents of Chore, Dathan, and Abiram, leaſt they ſhould be all wrapped in their ſins, & ſo periſh among them: And the Scripture ſaith, Goe out of her my people, that you be not partakers in her ſins, and ſo receiue of her plagues, Apocal. 18. 4. Ergo, we muſt not keepe companie with idolaters and maſſe-mongers, in their idolatrous and maſſing temples; for ſo communicating with them in their ſinnes, we doe entangle our ſelues in their puniſhment: arg. Gulielm. Tyms. epiſt. Fox p. 1900, col. 2. Apoc.18.4.

Argum. 10. Laſtly, what better proofe can we haue, then the wofull experience of thoſe, who profeſſing the Goſpell, were enticed through their infirmity to come to Maſſe, and afterward either iudged themſelues, feeling inwardly an horror of conſcience, and ſo repented them, or continuing in that ſinne, were iudged of God.

Examples of the firſt, we haue one Ciselie Ormes, who for the ſpace of a twelue month after ſhee had recanted, could not be quiet in conſcience, vntill ſhe had vtterly forſaken all popery, and at the laſt gaue her life for the faith of Chriſt, pag. 2023. Alſo one William Sparrow, who hauing yeelded to be confeſſed and heare Maſſe, had ſuch trouble in conſcience, that he could not be at reſt, till hee had renued the confeſſion of his former faith, and died for the ſame, Fox pag. 2026. Many ſuch examples are occurrent euery where to ſuch, as are conuerſant in the ſtories of the Martyrs: and all theſe iudged themſelues, and found mercie.

I will ſet downe one notable example of a backſlider, who not iudging himſelfe, was iudged of God: One Robert Edgore ſeruing in the place of the Clarke, in the Church of Mendleſham in Suffolke, but ſore againſt his conſcience, was at the length ſo depriued of his wits, that many yeers after his poore wife was conſtrained to keepe him bound in chaines. Notwithſtanding this ſo good a warning, one George Reuet, that had beene a talkatiue Goſpeller, for lucres ſake, ſet his ſonne into the ſame roome; and being therefore reproued of ſome good Chriſtians his neighbours, hee wiſhed of God, that if it were not Gods will his ſonne ſhould ſerue in that place, God would ſhew ſome ſtrange token, which came euen ſo to paſſe: for the Lord ſent vpon him a ſtrange ſwelling in his legs, which riſing vp to his body did ſo torment him, that he died moſt miſerably and impatiently, Fox pag. 1918. col. 1.

Thus I truſt it appeareth how dangerous and vnlawful a thing it is for Chriſtians to aſſociate themſelues to idolatrous aſſemblies, and to be preſent at Maſſe, or other popiſh ſeruice. Now becauſe it is the property of fleſh and blood to ſeeke ſtarting holes, and to ſearch euery corner, to finde ſome excuſe to ſalue their weaknes, and infirmity thereof, and with Adam as with fig leaues to hide our nakednes: I will therefore ſet downe certaine obiections with their anſwers: which ſome haue inuented in defence, or at the leaſt to excuſe their going to Maſſe.

CERTAINE OBIECTIONS WITH THEIR ANſweres made by Maſſe-goſpellers, in defence of their going to Maſſe.

Obiect. 1. IT is not materiall, though my body bee preſent, if my heart doe not conſent to their wicked doings.

Anſ. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, Glorifie God in your body, and in your ſpirit, 1. Cor. 6. 20. It is not enough then, to reſerue our ſoule onely for God; but as he hath made both body and ſoule, ſo we muſt honor him in both, Reſponſ. M. Philpotti. pag. 1832. col. 1. 1.Cor.6.20.

2. In Helies time God counted none to be his ſeruants and people, but ſuch as had not bowed their knees to Baal, 1. King. 19. euen ſo now he is Gods faithfull ſeruant, that hath not bowed his knee to the filthie Idoll of the Maſſe, or any other abomination. Wee muſt not thinke that God requireth leſſe of vs, than the husband of his wife: will the husband admit his wiues excuſe, finding her in bed with another, that her heart notwithſtanding is her husbands? No more will Chriſt allow the preſence of your body at Maſſe, though your heart be not conſenting to it. Reſp. Bradford. p. 1652. col. 1. 1.King.19.18.

Obiect. 2. It is a great crime to diuide and ſeparate our ſelues from the communion and fellowſhip of the Church, which is the common practiſe of the Anabaptiſts in our daies; and of the Nouatians, and the heretikes called (Cathari) in times paſt: therefore we thinke it beſt to retaine the fellowſhip of the Church, and to come to the ordinary and vſuall aſſemblies.

Anſw. The ſect of the Anabaptiſts, Nouatians, and other heretikes is to be condemned, who vpon no iuſt or neceſſary occaſion doe ſeparate and diuide themſelues from the Church: alſo wee graunt that the vnity of the Church is to bee retained by all meanes, as a thing neceſſary to ſaluation: but the Popiſh maſſe, as it is now vſed, is not the communion of the Church, but a monſtrous Idoll, and grieuous prophanation of the Lords Supper: So that they which abſtaine from it, do not breake themſelues off from the fellowſhip of the Church, but indeed they depart from Babylon, and the abominations thereof, Reſponſ. D. Ridlei. pag. 1718. Vnitie therefore and concord, is to bee ſought for by all meanes, and embraced, but vnitie, as Saint Paul ſaith, Secundum Ieſum Chriſtum. According to Ieſus Chriſt. Sic beat. Latimer. ibid.

Obiect. 3. Admit there be ſome fault in the Maſſe, and ſomewhat that may bee mended, and made better: if you doe not conſent thereunto, what neede you further trouble your ſelfe. Auguſtine ſaith, that communion of the Sacraments defile not a man, but conſent of deedes.

Anſ. If there were but ſome ſmall faults, and indifferent matters, or tolerable abuſes in the Maſſe, rather ſhewing ſome imperfection, than tending to open impiety; they might for common quietnes ſake be ſomewhat borne withall. But now ſeeing it is ſtuffed full of blaſphemies, and ſpotted with foule idolatry, manifeſtly impugning the holy inſtitution of the Lords Supper: no man can with good conſcience either in word or deede, giue conſent thereunto. Auguſtines meaning, is that the badneſſe of the Miniſter, or of the receiuers, pollute not the Sacraments nor the commers thereunto, where the Sacraments are rightly adminiſtred: he ſaith not, that men abhorring ſuperſtition, and the traditions of men, thruſt vpon the Church in ſtead of Gods word, ought not to refraine from them for feare of pollution, Reſp. beat. Ridlei. Martyr p. 1719.

Obiect. 4. Vnto this your fact in abſtaining from the Church by reaſon of the Maſſe, the examples of the Prophets, of Chriſt, of the Apoſtles is contrary: for we doe not read, that any of them, no not in moſt ſuperſtitious times, refuſed to communicate in the Temple with the people, in their ſacrifices, and other Sacraments of the Law. Our Sauiour Chriſt and his Apoſtles, making no doubt or ſcruple, haunted the Temple: Ergo, you alſo may ſafely come to the popiſh Churches.

Anſw. That the Prophets, Apoſtles, yea our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe, reſorted to the Iewiſh Temple, we graunt: but we read not that they did communicate with them in their idolatrie, or ſuperſtitious worſhips, but reproued them: onely in the lawfull ceremonies and rites of the law, they aſſociated themſelues to their aſſemblies: So neither are we angry with the Churches, or the men there congregated, but would willingly reſort to them, to heare Gods word, and if we might haue the Sacraments rightly adminiſtred: but not to communicate with them in their idolatrous ſeruices, wee are taught by the examples aforeſaid, Reſp. beat. Ridl. ad Antonij obiect. p. 1722.

Obiect. 5. You condemne the Maſſe, becauſe it is ſaid in an vnknowne tongue, and therefore refuſe to come vnto it. So is Baptiſme alſo miniſtred in the Latine tongue: and yet, you will not ſay, that a child hauing receiued it, is to be baptized againe.

Anſ. There is great difference betweene the popiſh Maſſe, and Baptiſme vſed in popery: firſt, I denie not Baptiſme to be a Sacrament in their church, nor ſay it ought to be reiterated, becauſe the ſubſtance of the inſtitution is kept, to baptize in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt. But the Maſſe is neither ſacrifice, nor Sacrament at all, becauſe many ſubſtantials of the inſtitution are wanting, as we haue ſhewed before. 2. Though Baptiſme, and all other publike exerciſes ought to be celebrate in the vulgar tongue, yet there is not the like neceſſitie in Baptiſme, becauſe the children are not able to vnderſtand what is ſpoken, in what language ſoeuer: but to the other Sacrament, none but ſuch as are of diſcretion, are admitted. 3. Though children baptized in popery, are not to be baptized againe, yet when they come to yeeres of diſcretion, they muſt be taught and inſtructed in the chriſtian faith: and for ſuch children, as are not yet baptized, the parents might doe better to defer their Baptiſme, then to receiue it in the popiſh Church, till ſome conuenient time, when they may get one to miniſter Baptiſme, not in ſubſtance onely, but in rites and ceremonies agreeable to Chriſts inſtitution, wherein the Baptiſme of the popiſh Church faileth, Reſponſ. beat Ridlei. Fox p. 1722.

Obiect. 6. Some will ſay, excuſing themſelues for their going to Maſſe, God is mercifull, and his mercy ouer all and I truſt he will forgiue vs.

Anſ. True it is, God is mercifull, but we muſt not ſinne vpon hope of forgiueneſſe: Gods mercie is aboue all his works, and yet but vpon ſuch as feare him: as we read in the Pſalmes, The mercy of God is on them that feare him, Pſalm. 103. 17. And to feare God is to turne from euill, and doe that which is good. So that they which looke to bee partakers of Gods mercy, muſt not abide in any knowne and manifeſt euill, Reſponſ. beat. Philpot. Fox. pag. 1832. Pſal. 103. 17.

Obiect. 7. Wee are commanded to obey our Magiſtrates, though they be wicked: and therefore ſeeing they command and enioyne vs to come to Maſſe, wee ſee not how we can doe otherwiſe, for feare of contempt and diſobedience.

Anſw. We are bound indeede to obey wicked gouernours, but ſo long onely, as they command nothing contrary to Gods word: if they doe, wee muſt heerein follow the Apoſtles example, who not obeying the Magiſtrates wicked precepts, anſwered: that it was better to obey God, than men, Act. 4. And our Sauiour Chriſt teacheth vs, to giue vnto Caeſar, the things that are Caeſars, and to God, the things that are Gods, Reſponſ. Philpot. Act. 4. 19.

Obiect. 8. Some other there be, that for an extreame refuge in their euill doing, doe runne vnto Gods predeſtination, and election, ſaying, if I be elected of God to ſaluation, I ſhall be ſaued, whatſoeuer I doe.

Anſw. Theſe men be great tempters of God: they will at the deuils bidding caſt themſelues down from the pinnacle of the temple, by preſumption, that God may preſerue them by his Angels, through predeſtination. We muſt not doe euill, that good may come thereof, whoſe damnation is iuſt, ſaith S. Paul, Rom. 3. 8. Wee muſt alſo conſider, that God hath choſen vs to this end, that wee ſhould be holie, Epheſ. 1. 4. And Saint Peter willeth vs to make our election ſure through good works, 2. Pet. 1. 10. The conſideration of our election then, is ſo farre off from making vs careleſſe of good works, that it will rather ſtirre vs vp to all godlines of life. So that hee which conformeth not himſelfe to all obedience of life, hath good cauſe to doubt, that hee is none of Gods elect, Reſponſ. Philpot. ibid.

Rom. 3. 8.
Epheſ. 1. 4.
2. Pet. 1. 10.

Obiect. 9. Some doe obiect the example of Naaman the Syrian: who being newly conuerted to the worſhip of the God of Iſraell, deſired to be diſpenſed with, when he ſhould goe in with the King into the houſe of his Idoll Rimmon, and there bow himſelfe, together with the King, that herein God would be mercifull vnto him: vnto whom the Prophet anſwered; Goe in peace, as liking of his motion, and yeelding to it.

Anſ. This example is ſo farre from being any warrant for Chriſtians to preſent themſelues in Idolatrous Temples, that it rather maketh againſt it: for the Prophets anſwere, Goe in peace, doth inſinuate no grant made of his petition, but rather a prohibition, not to trouble himſelfe about thoſe matters: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, content thy ſelfe, requeſt no ſuch thing, it would trouble thy conſcience, but goe in peace, keepe a good conſcience, and labour for the peace thereof. That the Prophet is thus to be vnderſtood, it ſhall appeare by theſe two arguments.

Firſt, the circumſtance of this place ſheweth it: Naaman made two requeſts: one for a toleration to goe into Rimmons Temple: the other, for two Mules load of earth to carry home with him, to ſacrifice vpon vnto the Lord. Now the Prophet made the ſame anſwere to both: he then either granted both, or denieth both: but grant them both he did not: for the one was cleane contrary to the law, to giue Naaman leaue to ſacrifice in Syria, whereas Ieruſalem was onely appointed to bee the place of ſacrifice: neither did Naaman aske to haue any Prieſt or Leuite with him, to whome it onely pertained to offer ſacrifice: ſo this had beene another tranſgreſſion of the law. This requeſt therefore, the Prophet in no wiſe is to be thought to haue granted: Ergo, not the other.

Secondly the vſe of this phraſe in Scripture, Goe in peace, may teach vs how it is to be taken heere: it is twice vſed in one chapter, 2. King. 4. 23. 26. In the 23. verſe the Shunamite, ſo ſoone as her child was departed, which God had giuen vnto her, according to the word of Eliſha, made haſt to go to the Prophet: her husband not knowing the cauſe, ſeemed to bee vnwilling: Wherefore wilt thou goe to him to day, ſaith he, ſeeing it is neither new moone, nor Sabbath day? Shee anſwered, Peace be vnto thee, and ſo went on her iourney: In ſo ſaying, ſhee condeſcendeth not to her husbands mind, but willeth him onely to content himſelfe, and not to be too inquiſitiue. Likewiſe in the 26. verſe, as ſhe was comming toward the Prophet, Gehezi met her and ſaid, Art thou in health? is thy husband and the child in health? She anſwered, Peace bee vnto thee: which was not an affirmation of his queſtion, but a watch-word, that he ſhould deſiſt, from further enquiring of her. As this forme of ſalutation is taken in theſe places, in the ſame ſenſe did the Prophet vſe it, when he ſaid to Naaman, Peace be vnto thee: wiſhing him to content, and quiet his mind, and not to trouble himſelfe with ſuch curious matters, which might diſturbe the peace of his conſcience. And thus I thinke this place is anſwered.

2. King. 4. 23. 26.

Whether Naaman were allowed by the Prophet to bow the knee before the Idoll.

Some thinke that the Prophet doth anſwere thus, declarando, by declaring that it was lawfull for Naaman to go in with his Maſter, to doe his office, and attend vpon him, whether it were in the idole temple, or without. Lyranus vpon this place: that hee thus anſwered: diſpenſando, diſpenſing with Naaman, not generally, but in this caſe onely, to goe into the idols Temple: Paulus Burgenſis: and ſome againe, that the Prophet doth it deprecando, promiſing to pray for him, that this infirmitie may be forgiuen him. But becauſe the Prophet was far from either allowing the leaſt ſhew of idolatry, ſuch as this was, as lawfull, or from diſpenſing with that which was euill, or in promiſing to pray for the forgiueneſſe of a ſinne, which hee purpoſed to continue in; I reſolue rather with learned Iunius vpon the firſt ſenſe. Indeede Tertullian approueth certaine cauſes, which may giue allowance to be preſent at idolatrous ſacrifices: licebit adeſſe in quibuſdam, quæ nec homini, non idolo officioſos habent: it is lawful to be preſent vpon ſome occaſion, to preform ſome office vnto men, not to the idole: ſi propter ſacrificium vocatus adſiſtam, ero particeps idololatriæ, ſi me alia cauſa coniungit ſacrificanti, ero tantum ſpectator ſacrificij: If I be called for the ſacrifice ſake, I ſhall be partaker of idolatry, if any other cauſe ioyne me to the ſacrifice, I ſhall be onely a beholder of the ſacrifice, otherwiſe what ſhould ſeruants and officers doe which attend vpon their maſters and gouernors &c. But yet Tertullian putteth in this caution, that ſuch an one being preſent muſt, ab omni ſpecie idololatriæ ſe intactum præſtare, ſee that he be not touched with any ſhew of idolatry: and he ſaith further, ſi merum quis ſacrificanti tribuerit, immo ſi verbo aliquo ſacrificio neceſſario adiuuerit miniſter habebitur idololatriæ: if he do but miniſter wine to the ſacrifice, or helpe him with any worde neceſſary for the ſacrifice, hee ſhall bee counted a miniſter of idolatry, &c. So then Tertullian alloweth one to be preſent by reaſon of his ciuill office, but ſo as he yeeld not to the leaſt ſhew of idolatry: but to bow the knee is a pregnant ſhew and ſuſpition of idolatry vpon what occaſion ſoeuer: for both are equally forbidden, to honour an idoll with the kiſſe of the mouth, or bowing of the knee. 1. King. 19.18.

1.King. 19. 18. As then it had not beene lawfull for Naaman to haue kiſſed the idoll with his mouth, if it had beene the faſhion, when the King had done it, for all his ſeruants to follow, ſo neither was it to bow the knee: It was lawfull for Sadrach, Meſach, and Abednago to be preſent at the dedication of Nebuchadnezzars idols, becauſe they were gouernours, and by reaſon of their office were to attend the King, but by colour of their office they were not to bow the knee, neither did they, and therfore were they caſt into the fiery ouen. So Nehemiah by occaſion of his ſeruice and attendance might be preſent in the temple of Rimmon: but vpon no pretext was hee to bow the knee before the idol.

Obiect. 10. Laſt of all, it may be thus obiected out of the 8. of the firſt to the Corinthians, verſ. 10. 1.Cor.8.10. where the Apoſtle writeth thus: If any man ſee thee which haſt knowledge ſit downe in the Idols temple, ſhall not the conſcience of him that is weake, be bold to eat things ſacrificed to Idols? Heere the Apoſtle reprooueth not the ſitting downe in, or reſorting to the Temples of Idols, but onely the eating of things offered to Idols, whereby the weake might be offended: wherefore it ſeemeth not by the Apoſtle to be condemned.

Anſ. 1. This queſtion whether it be lawfull to eat things ſacrificed to Idols, the Apoſtle handleth at large, in the tenth chapter from the 19. verſe to the end: where the whole queſtion is diuided into three members or parts. Firſt, whether it bee lawfull to eat them before the Idols in the Idolatrous Temples. Secondly, whether they may buy ſuch meat in the ſhambles: for that which was left of the ſacrifices, the idolatrous Prieſts put to ſale for their aduantage. Thirdly, whether they might eate ſuch things, if they were inuited by the Infidels home to their owne houſes: theſe two laſt caſes the Apoſtle alloweth in themſelues, as matters lawfull and indifferent, vnleſſe the weake brother bee thereby offended: but the firſt hee maketh abſolutely vnlawfull, without any reſpect had to the offence: Ye cannot, ſaith he, be partakers of the Lords table, and the table of diuels: that is, they which communicate in Chriſtian aſſemblies, thereby making themſelues members of Chriſt, ought not to 1.Cor.10.20. 21. aſſociate themſelues to the company of the idolatrous Infidels, who in their filthie Idols worſhipped diuels, verſ. 20. 21.

Secondly, this being then the Apoſtles iudgement in that place, no doubt hee is of the ſame minde and meaning heere, that it is vtterly vnlawfull to ſit downe at the ſacrificers feaſts in the Idoll Temples: yet he ſpeaketh onely of the offence, that may ariſe to the weake, about the eating of things ſacrificed, becauſe this is the matter only here in queſtion, ſimply for the lawfulnes of eating or not eating, without any relation had vnto the place, as it may appeare verſ. 4. And therefore the Apoſtle, who doth alwaies keep himſelfe to the very point of the queſtion, leaueth the part leſſe pertinent to his purpoſe, and ſtandeth wholly vpon the other, deciding the reſt in the tenth chapter. This place then, is ſo farre off from giuing allowance, either of Chriſtians reſorting then to idolatrous Temples, or now to popiſh ſeruices: that by comparing this place, in the eight Chapter, and the other in the tenth, verſ. 20. we doe gather a ſtrong argument, againſt ſuch practiſes: for as the Apoſtle there reaſoneth againſt idoll ſacrifices, that they ſacrificed them to diuels, becauſe idolatry is the inuention of the deuill: So, we may ſay that Maſſe-ſeruice is the ſeruice of the diuell, that monſtrous Idoll being of his inuention and deuiſing; and they therefore that are partakers of it, doe worſhip the inuention of the deuill, and ſo in like manner are partakers of the table of diuels.

I will end now this treatiſe with a notable ſaying of Saint Auguſtine: Conteſtor vos omnes coram Deo & Angelis eius, ac denuntio, vt nec ad diabolica illa conuiuia, qua aut ad fanum, ad fontes, aut arbores fiunt, veniatis, et ſi vobis forte inde aliquid tranſmiſſum fuerit, tanquam ſi ipſum diabolum videatis perhorreſcite, vt nec in domum veſtram permittatis, de illo ſacrilego conuiuio quicquã exhiberi, propter illud Apoſtoli, Non poteſtis calicem domini bibere, & calicem demoniorum: I doe charge you all before God and his Angels, & denounce vnto you, that ye neither go your ſelues vnto thoſe diueliſh feaſts, which are made in their temples, by fountaines, or vnder trees: and if any thing chance to bee ſent vnto you from thoſe feaſts, to be afraid to touch it, as if ye ſaw the diuell himſelfe, neither ſuffer any part of ſuch ſacrilegious feaſts to come within your houſe, becauſe the Apoſtle hath ſaid, Ye cannot be partakers of the Lords cup, and the cup of diuels, Serm de tempor. 241.

Thus (I truſt) it hath beene ſufficiently declared, how horrible and dangerous a thing it is, for good Chriſtians and wellwillers of the Goſpell, though not conſenting in heart, yet in body to bee preſent at idolatrous ſeruices, ſuch as we are perſwaded the Maſſe-worſhip is. We haue alſo ſeene their weak grounds and ſimple excuſes, which goe about to maintaine and vphold their weaknes and imbecility heerein. And here an end of this matter.

As wee haue hitherto declared, how vnlawfull a thing it is, for profeſſours of the Goſpell to reſorte to Maſſe, or Maſſe-ſeruice; and anſwered, what on the contrarie part may bee obiected: ſo now in the next place, wee will deale againſt our Recuſants, that refuſe to come to the Engliſh Leiturgie, as it is now vſed in the Church of England: who beeing of two ſorts, either popiſh, or ſchiſmaticall Recuſants, wee are not heere to deale with the later, but with the former onely, the other beeing without the compaſſe and ſcope of this worke. And ſeeing theſe alſo are not all of one ſort, for ſome will frequent our prayers, but not abide to heare ſermons; others will reſort to both theſe, but to the Communion in no wiſe. A third ſort more ſlauiſhly addicted to popery than the reſt, refuſe to be preſent at any of them, either praiers, preaching craments: wee will put them all together, and ioyntly deale with them: firſt confuting their arguments, which they bring in defence of their recuſancie, and then conuincing them by contrarie arguments.

POPISH ARGVMENTS CONFVTED, COMmonly alleaged in defence of Recuſants.

Arg.1. Their firſt argument is drawne from the matter of our Communion and ſeruice: they moſt blaſphemouſly call our Communion, the cup and table of diuels, wherein the diuell (ſay they moſt wickedly) in properly ſerued, Rhemiſt.1.Cor.10.annot.in verſ.9. and that our Communion will come at length to the ſacrifice of Ceres and Bacchus, Rhemiſt.Ioh.4.4. And as for our ſeruice, they ſay, it is the ſeruice of Baal, and plaine Idolatrie, Rhemiſt.2.Cor.6.verſ.14. And therefore they will none of our Communion or ſeruice.

Anſw. Firſt, this new vpſtart generation of Papiſts, in theſe their lies and blaſphemies, filleth vp the meaſure of their forefathers: for as they blaſphemed, ſo doe theſe. One, ſometime a Biſhop in their Church, vnreuerently calleth the Communion table, an oyſter table: Biſhop White, Fox p.1765. Another ſaith, an houell is good enough for our Communion: they get them a tankard (ſaith he) and one ſaith, I drinke and am thankfull: the more ioy of thee, ſaith another, Weſton Fox pag.1459. Theſe lies and blaſphemies they caſt not at vs, but euen againſt Chriſts inſtitution: for they ſhall neuer bee able to ſhew, as long as the world ſtandeth, that any thing is vſed in our Communion beſide or contrarie to Chriſts inſtitution: Chriſt tooke bread and wine and bleſſed it, ſo doe we: he ſaid, Take, eate, drinke ye all of this; ſo both the bread and cup is diſtributed in the Communion: he bad vs doe it in remembrance of him; ſo wee doe celebrate the Communion, as a commemoration of Chriſts death and paſſion: and in all things, as neere as we can, we obſerue and keepe the firſt inſtitution. Wherefore, if our Communion bee the table of diuels; if it bee the feaſt of Ceres and Bacchus, then was Chriſts euen ſo, which to thinke, what horrible and inexpiable blaſphemie is it?

Secondly, they doe but preuent vs: for the Idoll of the Maſſe is, as they ſay falſely of our Communion; and as a notable Martyr ſaid, It is Antichriſts daughter, in which the diuell is rather preſent and receiued, then Chriſt: Doctor Taylor, pag.1528. For in how many points doe they ſwarue from the inſtitution? Chriſt ſaid, Take yee, eate yee, miniſtring to many; they make it priuate onely to the Prieſt: Chriſt appointed it to be eate and drunke; they hang it vp in pixes and make an Idoll of it: Chriſt celebrated in both kindes; they take away the cup from the people: Chriſt calleth it the fruite of the vine, and Paul bread after conſecration: they ſay, there is neither bread nor wine, but only the bodie and blood of Chriſt. See more of this matter, argum.1.general.cont.Miſſam.

Beſide theſe contradictions to Chriſts inſtitution: One denieth that the Sacrament hath a promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes: and yet Chriſt ſpeaking of his blood, as it is repreſented in the Sacrament, ſaith, which is ſhed for you, and for many, for remiſſion of ſinnes. The ſame partie alſo granted another great abſurditie, that Chriſt eate his owne bodie, *Moreman.in diſput.conuocat.pag.*1412. Another denieth the Euchariſt to bee a Sacrament of the bodie of Chriſt, ſauing onely of his myſticall bodie, which is the Church, *D.Coole diſput.Oxonienſ.pag.*1434.*col.*1. Another ſtout champion of theirs, denied that Chriſt commanded the Sacrament, or the vſe of it: and that Take ye, eate ye, was no commandement: B.*Wincheſt.p.*1611.*col.*1.

Let any indifferent man now iudge, whether of vs are departed from the inſtitution of Chriſt: and whether wee may not more iuſtly call their Maſſe-ſeruice, the ſeruice of the diuell, then they can ſo terme ours, being in euery reſpect anſwerable to Chriſts inſtitution.

Thirdly, but are they not aſhamed to charge vs with Idolatrie? What dare they not now ſay, ſeeing they herein, againſt all ſhew of truth, will not ſtick to belie vs? I pray you where be our Idols of ſiluer or gold? can you ſee your ſelues, or ſhew others any in our Churches? There are but two things requiſite to Idolatrie; To haue and ſet vp Images, and then to bow down vnto them and adore them. The Lutheranes haue Images, but adore them not; wee neither haue them, nor adore them: Papiſts doe both: the Lutherans come neerer Idolatrie then Proteſtants: if they be not Idolaters, much leſſe are we.

I pray you this: if a Iew or Turk, which both of thē hate Images, ſhould come firſt into a popiſh Church, and ſee in euery corner an Image, beautified and garniſhed, and the people kneeling before them, knocking vpon their breaſts: afterward let him be brought into a Church of the Proteſtants, where there is neither Image to be ſeene, nor any crouching or bowing vnto them; whether of theſe two now would hee count Idolatrous Churches? or whether people would he call Idolaters? But thus blind are the Papiſts, that they take bitter for ſweet, and ſweet for bitter, they call good euill, and euill good, as the Prophet ſaith. They would haue vs to be counted Idolaters, which neither haue Images, nor yet doe worſhip them: and themſelues to be none, which doe both. We worſhip not Ceres and Bacchus, that is, Bread and Wine, as the Manichees ſometime obiected againſt the Chriſtians, and the Papiſts do now againſt Proteſtants. We vſe bread and wine in the Sacrament, and reuerence them as holy ſignes, but we bow not downe vnto them, nor worſhip them. Our aduerſaries indeed doe make an Idoll of a piece of bread, when the Prieſt boweth himſelfe to the hoaſt in the Maſſe, ſaying, ing, I worſhip thee, I glorifie thee: what monſtrous Idolatrie is this, ſo to adore a cake made of flower? Who are now the worſhippers of Ceres and Bacchus but Papiſts? For that which they doe ſuch homage vnto, in ſhew is bread, in taſte and feeling, bread; in the eye, the mouth, and hand, bread: what is it elſe then but bread, whatſoeuer they ſay? Like vnto the old idolatrous Iſraelites, who, as the Septuagint tranſlate, and as Auguſtine readeth: Elegerunt nouos Deos, ὡς ἄρτον κρίθινον, vt panem hordeaceum: They choſe new Gods, as barlie bread: that is, they changed their Gods, as men doe change their bread, as Auguſtine expoundeth it, qu.30. in lib. Iudicum. So the Papiſts haue choſen a new God, euen panem triticeum, wheaten bread. Wee may put out ὡς ἄρτον as bread; for they doe worſhip, not barlie, (for that is the only difference) but wheaten bread indeede. Wherefore, ſeeing our Communion is the ſeruice of Chriſt, not the ſeruice of the diuell, as they blaſpheme, and it is as farre off from idolatrie, as that which hath the leaſt agreement with it; in this reſpect they haue no cauſe to refraine our Churches: and thus is their firſt reaſon anſwered.

Argum.2. Another fault they finde with our congregations and aſſemblies; calling our Temples and people, ſchiſmaticall: and therefore they will not come at them, Rhemiſt. annot. 2.Cor.6.14. Thus then they reaſon: It is not lawfull to aſſemble, or pray with ſchiſmatikes; you are ſchiſmatikes: Ergo.

Anſw. Firſt, the propoſition is not true, that it is not lawfull to pray with ſchiſmatikes: for if Schiſma, be nothing elſe, as it is defined in Auguſtine contra Fauſt. lib.20.cap.2. Quam eadem opinantem atque eodem ritu colentem, quo cæteri, ſolo congregationis delectari diſsidio: For a man holding the ſame iudgement in religion, and the ſame manner of worſhip, onely to ſeparate himſelfe from the reſt of the congregation: I ſee no reaſon, why it is not lawfull to pray with ſuch, who faile not in any point of faith, though they breake the bond of charitie; but both haue the word of God, and Sacraments truly taught and adminiſtred: ſo that by our comming to them, we ſeeme not to approue their ſchiſme. Did not S. Paul ioyne himſelfe to the Iewiſh Synagogues, which were more then ſchiſmatically diuided from the true Church, both enduring to heare the lectures of the law read, as alſo himſelfe to preach amongſt them, yea and to pray (for their preaching was not without prayer?) reade Acts chap.13. and 15.

Secondly, the aſſumption or ſecond part of their reaſon, is more falſe and vntrue then the firſt: for, be it knowne vnto them, we are no ſchiſmatikes, theirs is the ſchiſmaticall Church. Firſt, Saint Paul ſheweth who are ſchiſmatikes: namely, They which depart, and play the apoſtataes from the faith, giuing eare to the doctrine of diuels, as forbidding of mariage, and teaching to abſtaine from meates, 1.Ti-
1.Tim.4.1.3. moth.4.verſ.1.3. But they, not we, teach theſe doctrines: Ergo, they, not we, are the ſchiſmatikes and apoſtataes. Secondly, euery departure maketh not a ſchiſme. We are commanded to depart from Ba-
Apoc.18.4. bylon, Apocal.18.4. that is, not to communicate with their ſinnes and errors: ſo wee in leauing the Church of Rome haue not forſaken the fellowſhip of the true Church, but onely ſhaken hands with their filthie and abominable doctrine.

Thirdly, euery abſolute kingdome and Church, may meaſure themſelues by themſelues: and may eaſily know who they are that diuide themſelues from the ſocietie of that Church, where they liue, without compariſon and reſpect had to other Churches: As to know who are ſchiſmatikes in England, we need not runne to Rome, but they are ſuch, as ſeparate themſelues from the lawfull congregations in England, which haue the right vſe of the Word, & Sacraments: to trie out this matter by their owne rules; who are the ſchiſmatikes in our Church? they that ſteale their Maſſes in corners, or they that heare diuine ſeruice, according to Gods word, publikely in Churches? Is the whole congregation ſchiſmaticall, or a few ſingular fellowes rather, that doe diuide themſelues from the reſt?

S. Auguſtine ſpeaking of the Gentiles in his time, ſaith, Si non conſentiant veritati veſtræ, erubeſcant paucitati ſuæ: If they will not agree to your veritie, let them be aſhamed of their paucitie: in Matth. ſerm.6. So may I ſay of popiſh Recuſants in England, that although their number is not ſo ſmall, as might be wiſhed, and I truſt in time may be, yet God be thanked it is not ſo great, as that it is able to counteruaile by many parts the Lords royall hoſt of Proteſtants: whoſe number daily let vs beſeech God to encreaſe: Ergo, we are no ſchiſmatikes, and ſo haue they loſt alſo this argument.

Argum.3. Catholikes muſt haue nothing to doe with heretikes, ſpecially in prayers: Ergo, they refuſe to aſſemble with vs in our Churches, holding vs to be heretikes, Rhemiſt. annot. 2.Cor.6.14.

Anſw.1. It is not indeed lawfull to pray with heretikes, becauſe their prayers alſo are hereticall: but ſo are not our prayers, which moſt of them, I thinke, they themſelues will not refuſe to ſay Amen vnto: for many of them are the very ſame which they alſo vſe in their ſeruice, as the Gloria in excelſis, the Epiſtle and Goſpell, the Creede, the Lords prayer, and many Collects and ſhort prayers beſide: (for what is good in their ſeruice and Leiturgie, and may be vſed without ſuperſtition, we think Tit.3.10. not much to retaine:) An heretike (ſaith Saint Paul) after two or three admonitions, auoide, Tit.3. But what if prayers vſed by thoſe, whom you count heretikes, haue not any thing worthie of admonition or reproofe? why then ſhould ſuch prayers be ſhunned, and auoided? but ſuch are ours: Ergo.

2. The accuſation of hereſie, wee doe with much better right, and iuſter title returne vpon your head, which you ſhall neuer be able to faſten vpon vs. Firſt, if they will bee tried by Saint Pauls rule,
1.Cor.16.21. he ſaith, He that loueth not the Lord Ieſus, let him be accurſed, 1.Cor.16.21. Who is he now, that lo-ueth not the Lord Ieſus? Is it hee, that aſcribeth his ſaluation onely to Chriſt Ieſus, in whole and in part, the beginning, continuing, and end: or hee rather who hopeth to bee ſaued partly by the death of Chriſt, partly by his owne merits? who ſaith, the beginning of his iuſtification, which they call the firſt iuſtification, is of grace: the ſecond (which indeed is nothing elſe but ſanctification, the fruits of iuſtification) ſay they, is merited. I thinke the firſt loueth Chriſt: ſuch I truſt, are we: the ſecond, I am afraid, loueth him not: for Chriſt will not part ſtakes, nor giue his honour to another: of this ſort, I would our aduerſaries were not. They therefore, if any, are the heretikes, and to be holden accurſed.

3. Or will they ſtand to Auguſtines definition of an heretike: Hæreticus eſt, qui alicuius temporalis commodi, & maximè gloriæ & principatus cauſa, falſas & nouas opiniones, aut gignit; aut ſequitur. He is an heretike, who for ſome temporal commoditie, or glorie and chiefedome ſake, doth either inuent and begin falſe & new opinions, or doth follow them: De vtilitat. credend. c. 1. Now we neither inuent nor follow falſe or new opinions: not falſe; for our deſire is to be tried with our opinions by the touchſtone of Gods word in Scripture reuealed, the only rule of faith: and therefore we loue not the errors of darknes, ſeeing we hate not the light: not new; for our faith is the ancient Catholike Apoſtolike faith, reuealed by Chriſt, preached by the Apoſtles, profeſſed in the Church many hundreds after, ſealed with the blood of Martyrs: and this ancient freehold of our faith, they ſhall be neuer able to driue vs from. Againe, as wee are free from the falſe and ſtrange opinions of heretikes, ſo alſo wee defie their couetous and ambitious minde. What temporall commoditie (I pray you) did the Proteſtants looke for, in the late daies of perſecution in England, when as for their conſcience and faith ſake, ſome loſt their liuings and dignities in the Church, Biſhopricks, Archbiſhopricks, Deanries, Archdeaconries, yea and their countrie withall? And as for vainglorie, it was farre from them, as it appeareth by their deepe proteſtations being charged therewith, as you may reade in Maſter Bradfords ſtorie, Fox pag. 1606. And Maſter Philpot doth in great vehemencie of ſpirit in this manner diſcharge himſelfe: I proteſt here before God, and his eternall ſonne Ieſus Chriſt my Sauiour, and the holie Ghoſt and his Angels, that I doe not ſtand in any opinion of wilfulnes or ſingularitie, &c. pag. 1800. And who would not beleeue them, both for their earneſt proteſtation ſake, but much more for that they declared it in deed? for what liſt, thinke we, or leiſure had thoſe holy men, to ſeeke for the fame of this world, when they looked euery day when their liues ſhould be taken from them? Fame and eſtimation is much deſired in the world, but hardly will a man purchaſe it by the loſſe of his life.

But what ſhall we think of our aduerſaries? Is not the hope or rather hauing of gaine a great piller of their profeſſion, and the fayreſt white, that they ayme at? Let their Pilgrimages, Maſſes, Dirges, Trentals, Suffrages for the dead, purgatorie doctrine, pardons, Indulgences, and the like trumpery ſpeake in this caſe, if lucre were not the mother, that bare them, and the nurſe that fed and nouriſhed them. There was neuer any ſuch gainfull religion to the profeſſors thereof ſince the world began, as popery hath beene to Popes, Cardinals, Abbots, Monks, Friers, and the like. And what for principality? doe they contemne and deſpiſe it? I thinke no. What elſe made Popes in times paſt ſo proud, as to make Emperours and Kings their ſlaues and vaſſals, to tread on their neckes, to make them dance attendance in froſt and cold, barefoote, and barelegged at their gates, to cauſe them to kiſſe their feet, to hold their ſtirrop, and lead their horſe by the bridle, and ſuch like ſeruices they put them to? Is not this the prince of Pride? Why doth the Pope challenge to bee head of Chriſts Church, to bee the Lord of the whole world, aboue Kings and Princes, and propoſeth it to be beleeued as an article of faith to all his ſubiects: if he were not poſſeſſed with pride? Eraſmus that famous learned Clerke wel perceiued the pride and couetouſneſſe of this generation, when he being asked by the Duke of Saxony, what hee thought of Luthers proceedings, wittily anſwered, that hee dealt with two things, which were in no wiſe to bee touched, the Popes Crowne, and the Monkes belly: meaning the pride of the one, and the couetous deſire of the other. Wherefore if the holding of falſe and ſtrange opinions on the one ſide, with hope and deſire of gaine or glory on the other, doe make an heretike who ſeeth not that this definition better agreeth to the members of the Church of Rome, then vnto Proteſtants? Wee are then no heretikes, much leſſe are our prayers and ſeruice hereticall: and therefore our Recuſants in this reſpect haue no cauſe to abſent themſelues from our congregations.

Argum. 4. An other reaſon of their Recuſancy is drawn from the Miniſters of the word & Sacrament amongſt vs: Heretikes, ſay they are not to be heard, though they pray and preach the truth, Rhemiſt. annot. Mark. 3. ver. 1. Ergo, they will not heare our Miniſters either preach or pray.

Anſ. 1. That the truth is not to be heard or receiued at heretikes hands, it hath neither warrant of Scripture, nor good ground of reaſon: Firſt, Auguſtine ſaith, reaſoning thus out of Scripture, Euangelium Iudas ſine detrimento fidelium prædicauit: Iudas preached the Goſpell, without any hinderance or loſſe to the faithfull: Nunquid Paulus gauderet de talium prædicatione, qui contentioſi erant, niſi ſciret, quod illis pernitioſum eſſet, rem caſtam non caſtè annuntiare, illis ſalubre qui per illos proficerent ad ſalutem: Or would Paul haue reioyced of their preaching, which were contentious, as he doth, Philip. 1. 18. but that he knew, that it was hurtfull to them that preached the chaſt truth not chaſtly, but holeſome to them, that profited thereby to ſaluation? Lib. 2. cont. epiſt. Parmeni. ca. 11. Here be two examples out of Scripture, which ſhew, that the truth by whomſoeuer may ſafely bee preached: our Saui-

Sauiour Chriſt neither condemned Iudas preaching of the Goſpell, that childe of perdition, nor yet Paul the contentious preaching of falſe diſciples.

Auguſtine addeth alſo a third example, out of the Goſpell: Botrum carpe, ſpinam caue: Cathedra Moſis, vitis eſt: Phariſaeorum mores & doctrina ſpinæ: Take the grape, but beware the thorne: the vine, is the chaire of Moſes; the thorne is, the corrupt doctrine and manners of the Phariſies, Tract. in Iohan 46. The Phariſies had many erroneous doctrines, and therefore our Sauiour Chriſt giueth his Apoſtles warning to take heede of their leauen; yet ſo long as they taught the truth ſitting in Moyſes Matth.23.2. chayre, our Sauiour biddeth to heare them, Mat.23.2. Secondly, beſides thoſe examples out of Scripture, it is thus confirmed by reaſon: Auguſtine denieth that heretikes are worſe then ethnikes and Infidels: his reaſon is, becauſe Chriſt ſaith, If a man heare not the Church, let him be vnto thee as an Infidel: making that the extreameſt, and moſt dangerous caſe of all: but, ſaith he, In ipſis ethnicis, quod Act.17.28. rectum erat, approbarunt apoſtoli: the Apoſtles in the very heathen allowed that was right, as Act.17. S. Paul citeth a place out of an Athenian Poet: Ergo, that which is right we may heare and allow, euen in heretikes.

2 Yet, though this were granted, that heretikes are not to be heard, no, not ſpeaking the truth; that our Miniſters are heretikes, or fauourers or followers of heretikes, or that they draw neere vnto hereſie, they ſhall neuer be able to proue: So that they are ſatiſfied for this, and neede not therefore be ſo ſcrupulous in this behalfe, in not comming to our prayers.

*Argum.*5. A Catholike man, ſay the Rhemiſts, is bound to confeſſe his faith, Rhemiſt. Luk. 10. ver. 8. And, Annot. Iohan. 12. ver 42. they do ſharply rebuke and reprehend ſuch Catholikes, as dare not freely confeſſe their faith: hereupon it followeth, that a Pope-Catholike profeſſor ought in no wiſe to reſort to the Churches of Proteſtants: which cannot be done without diſſimulation of their faith, which they ſhould openly and boldly profeſſe.

*Anſ.*1. The Rhemiſts iudgement in this place concerning the open profeſſion of faith, we do willingly approoue and allow: and wee could wiſh, that all the Pope-Catholikes in England at this day were of this minde, and heerein would follow the counſell and aduiſe of their ghoſtly Fathers of Rhemes: that is, that all Engliſh Papiſts were become Recuſants, and would openly ſhew what lyeth hidde in their breaſts, that we might better take heede of them. But it is to be feared, that wee haue many hollow hearted Country men, that do openly reſort to our congregations in body, but in heart communicate not with vs; who haue Engliſh faces, but Romiſh hearts: Theſe are our moſt dangerous enemies, and chiefly to be feared: vnto whom we may vſe that good old ſaying, Aut appare quod es, aut eſto quod appares: Either appeare as thou art, or be that which thou appeareſt. So it were to be wiſhed, that theſe cunning fellowes would either appeare outwardly to be Papiſts if they be ſo in heart, or elſe be Goſpellers indeed, as they ſhew by their outward behauiour.

2 Faith in deed is publikely to be confeſſed: diſſimulation in all matters is to bee miſliked, but it is worſt in religion: yet he, that wil make publike confeſſion of his faith, had need be ſure, he is in a right faith, leaſt afterward hee be aſhamed of his faith: And ſo I would that popiſh Recuſants did confeſſe their faith, that is to abide and indure the examining, ſifting and tryall of their faith by the Scriptures, and not to refuſe our Sermons, bookes, conferences, admonitions, whereby we declare vnto them the errors of their faith: For this is to confeſſe our faith, as S. Peter defineth it: To giue an anſwere to euery one that asketh vs a reaſon, &c. 1 Peter. 3. 15. Theſe Recuſants then, are no open confeſſors of 1.Pet.3.15. their faith, for as much as they are not ready to giue an account thereof: which courſe if they would take, I doubt not, but in the end they ſhould ſee the errors, whereunto they had beene nuſled, and ſo confeſſe, & ſet before their face their faith, as Auguſtine ſaith of ſin: Tu peccatum tuum ante faciem tu- In Pſalm.50. am conuerte, ſi vis vt inde faciem Deus auertat: ſi peccatum tuum in dorſo tuo ponis, Deus ibi faciem ponit: Set then thy ſin before thy face, if thou wilt haue God therefrom to turne his face, but if thou place thy ſin behind, as on thy backe, that is, hide it, thither alſo God turneth his face: that is, God will hide his face from thee, as thou hideſt thy ſin from him. Thus let theſe ſelfe-wild Recuſants confeſſe and acknowledge their faith, that is, ſet before their eies their errors and falſe opinions, ſo would God forgiue them their ignorances and errors, and thus they ſhould be right confeſſors of the popiſh faith, confeſſors not to maintaine, but to forſake it and to be aſhamed of it.

3 A man wee grant is in no caſe to diſſemble his faith: that is no right faith, or profeſſion, which alloweth diſſimulation, nor yet hee a good profeſſor, or faithfull man, that will diſſemble: for wee are not ignorant, what our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith: that whoſo denieth him before men, him will he deny before his father in heauen. To this purpoſe may be remembred, what Auguſtine reporteth of the conuerſion of one Victorinus a Rhetorician of Rome: who after he was become a Chriſtian, yet frequented not the Chriſtian aſſemblies: vnto whom Simplicianus a godly Prieſt was wont to ſay, Ego te non deputabo inter Chriſtianos, niſi in Eccleſia te videro: I wil not for my part count you a Chriſtian, vnleſſe I ſee you in the Church of Chriſtians. But he at the firſt ſcoffed, ſaying: Ergone parietes faciũt Chriſtianos? then belike the wals of the Church make Chriſtians? Afterward being better aduiſed, hee reſorted to the Church, was baptized, and openly (ſtanding in an high place) confeſſed his faith before the congregation, whereas he might haue done it more ſecretly: and this reaſon is giuen of his ſo doing: Non erat ſalus (inquit) quam docebat in Rhetorica, & eam tamen publice profeſſus erat: That tended not to ſaluation, which he taught in Rhetorike, and yet hee publikely profeſſed it: meaning that much more faith, whereby we are led vnto life, ought boldly and publikely to be profeſſed, Auguſt.lib.confeſſ.8. cap.2.

This then being fully determined and concluded, that faith is not to be cloked, or diſſembled: let vs ſee how much our aduerſaries come ſhort and faile in this point, and ſo offend againſt their owne rules; amongſt whom, it is an vſuall and common trade in the moſt, to cloake their Popiſh profeſſion with an outward countenance and ſemblance of the Goſpell. And with Papiſts it is no rare thing to diſſemble both in religion and other affaires of life. Was it not ſaid openly in the Councell of Conſtance, when they brake the Emperours ſafe conduct granted to Iohn Huſſe, that fides non eſt ſeruanda hæreticis, that faith is not to bee kept with heretikes? The like anſwere was made ann. 1526. by Hawnart the Emperours Ambaſſadour; that whereas the Lady Katherine the Emperours younger ſiſter was promiſed to Iohn Fredericke Duke of Saxony in mariage, and writings were made thereupon, yet after the reformation of Religion in Saxony, the couenant was broken: for with heretikes, ſaid Hawnart, promiſe is not to be kept, Fox.p.884.col.1.

It is not long ſince here in England ſolemne promiſe was made, that the religion eſtabliſhed in King Edwards dayes ſhould not be altered, and it was made by one that then ruled the helme, yet was it not performed, vid.Fox.p.1407. If they can thus diſſemble, and breake their troth and faith in humane matters, who doubteth thereof, but that they will bee changelings in Religion: for as S. Iames ſaith, A wauering minded man is vnſtable in all his wayes, Iam. 1.8. that is, both toward God and men. He that knoweth the vertue of the Popes diſpenſations, which can diſſolue othes and vowes, may eaſily thinke that Pope Catholikes may be diſpenſed withall to diſſemble in Religion: How elſe came it about, that ſo many Proteſtants in ſhew, in King Edwards dayes, were ſo ſoone transformed into Papiſts in Queene Maries: and ſo many Papiſts then, had ſo ſoone put on the face of Proteſtants in Queene Elizabeths gracious raigne? I could wiſh with all my heart, that all the Papiſts at this preſent day in England, were Recuſants, that wee might the better take heede of them. But it is to be feared, that there be many cloſe Papiſts in England, that are content for a while to temporize, watching for an houre, which I truſt they ſhall neuer ſee: like vnto the heretikes called Priſcillianiſts, of whom Auguſtine reporteth, that their manner was, Vt ſua venena non prodant, noſtros ſe eſſe mentiuntur, That they ſhould not bewray their poiſon, they faine themſelues to be ours, lib.1.cont.mend.c.3. Mendacio occultare hæreſin, & ſe catholicos fingere: To cloake their hereſie by a lie, and to faine themſelues good Catholikes, *Lib.cont.mendacium cap.*1. I would we had no ſuch Romaniſts now in England, which faine themſelues to be true Catholike Proteſtants.

Thus then are our aduerſaries anſwered for this matter, whom firſt we deſire to follow their owne rules, that is, to deale plainely with vs, and to ſhew themſelues outwardly, as they are in heart: And then we doe wiſh, that they would glorifie God, and confeſſe their errors, and ſo be reformed both in heart, and changed alſo in their outward profeſſion: ſo may they ſafely reſort to our Chriſtian aſſemblies, without diſſembling their conſcience.

Argum.6. Another reaſon of their Recuſancie is drawne from the ſequell or euent of their comming to our Churches, if they ſhould yeeld thereunto: that is, they thinke that their preſence would grace and countenance, and bring credite to our aſſemblies, which by all meanes they labour to diſcredit, and bring into contempt: for thus the Rhemiſts open their blaſphemous mouth, It muſt needes be an honour to Caluines communion, when Catholikes are ſeene in the Idols temple, ſitting at the abominable table. Annot. 1.*Cor.*8.*ver.*10.

Anſwere. Firſt, we acknowledge no ſuch Caluins communion amongſt vs: that which we haue is Chriſts communion: and of his name both it and we are called: wee depend not vpon men, though we praiſe God for ſuch excellent inſtruments, as Caluine and Luther were, ſtirred vp of God to ſet forth his truth. It is your guiſe, and not ours, to call your profeſſions, and Maſſes after the names of men: you haue Saint Gregories Maſſe, Saint Baſiles Maſſe, Saint Iames his Maſſe, which you doe falſly father vpon him. And in England, you had the vſe of Sarum, and the vſes of other Churches: diuers formes of your Maſſe: Contrarie to the decree of the fifth Councell *Toletan.can.*2. Vnus modus in Miſſarum ſolennitatibus, vnus in veſpertinis officijs, nec diuerſa ſit vltrà in nobis eccleſiaſtica conſuetudo, quia in vna fide continemur & regno: Let one and the ſame way be obſerued at Maſſe and Euening prayer, neither let there be any longer a diuers vſe in the Church, ſeeing we belong to one faith and Kingdome.

Though Luther had ſome priuate opiniō not generally receiued of Proteſtants, yet notwithſtanding wee acknowledge him to haue been an excellent inſtrument of the truth: here then is no contradiction. See this cauill further anſwered, Retect.pag.72.

Secondly, ye are ſhameleſſe men to call our Churches, Idols temples. We haue no Images or Idols at all to be ſeene in our Churches, much leſſe doe we worſhip them: And as for the bread and wine in the Sacrament, though we reuerence them as holy ſignes, yet wee adore them not, neither make idols of them as you doe. If our communion table be an abominable table, then ſo is Chriſts: for we ſay all that Chriſt ſaid, and doe all that he did in the inſtitution of his laſt ſupper: ye are not able to ſhew that in any one iote we haue ſwarued from the firſt inſtitution, as you haue done diuers waies; as in taking away the cup, whereas Chriſt ſaid, Drinke ye, as well as eate ye; and making the communion priuate, whereas Chriſt ſaith, Drinke ye all of this; in reſeruing the Sacrament, whereas Chriſt would haue it eaten and drunke, and in many ſuch things: your Maſſe altar therefore is that abominable table, not our communion table. And you are thoſe worſhippers of the Idols of ſiluer and gold, Apoc.9.20. for you haue ſuch Images in your Churches, you fall downe and pray before them, and offer incenſe to them, and ſo are moſt groſſe Idolators: but wee follow the rule of your owne Councels, Synod. Moguntin. cap. 42. Nos praua ſuperſtitioni viam præcludere volentes, omnibus locorum Ordinarijs iniungimus, vt ſi forte in territorijs ſuis concurſus ad imaginem fieri, & homines ad ipſius imaginis figuram reſpectum habere, & quaſi quandam diuinitatis opinionem illi tribuere animaduerterint, ipſam imaginem pro cauſa qualitate tollant, aut mutent: We willing to ſtop all way againſt ſuperſtition, doe enioyne the Ordinaries, that if they ſee in their territories the people to runne to images, and to attribute vnto them a diuine power, hauing reſpect to the figure of the Image, that they either take away, or change the Image. If they be idolators that haue taken away Idols and aboliſhed them, then will we alſo be Idolators.

Thirdly, now to anſwere to their argument: Firſt, they ſhew of what making they are, and whoſe children they be, in that they are afraid, that the truth by them ſhould be graced, and Chriſts inſtitution honoured. They will not come to Church, becauſe they thinke it would bee an honour, not to Act.7. 51. Caluins, but to Chriſts communion: to whom we may ſay, as S. Stephen to the peruerſe Iewes, Act. 7. 51. You ſtiffe necked and of vncircumciſed hearts, and eares, you haue alwaies reſiſted the holy Ghoſt, as Pſal.4.2. your fathers did, ſo doe you: And as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, O ye ſonnes of men, how long will ye turne my glorie into ſhame? Pſalm. 4. 2. Doth it grieue you that Chriſt ſhould be honoured and his inſtitution reuerenced? O enemies to God and all godlineſſe! Secondly, though they doe come to our Churches, if their hearts be not reformed, but doe cloake the ſuperſtition of their darke mindes, with the ſhew of outward conformitie and obedience, they are ſo farre from gracing our aſſemblies, that they are a diſgrace and a diſhonour to them. And as Iude ſaith of ſuch, They are ſpots in your feaſts of charitie, verſe 12. ſo theſe are foule blemiſhes in our holy meetings, when as hypocrites doe ioyne themſelues to the aſſemblies of the Saints. They neede not feare, leaſt thus comming, they ſhould honour our communion, nay rather as much as in them lieth, they prophane and pollute it: when holy things are thus caſt vnto dogges, and pearles before ſwine. Thirdly, but if they would reſort to our aſſemblies dutifully, as it becommeth good Chriſtians, to receiue inſtruction and comfort by the word of God and the Sacraments; they ſhould not for all this bring grace or win credit to theſe publike exerciſes, Pſal. 149.9. but ſhould themſelues be graced, and receiue honour thereby. The Pſalmiſt ſaith, Pſalm. 149. 9. Such Deut.4.8. honour God vouchſafeth his Saints, that is, in giuing vnto them his word: ſo ſaith Moſes, Deut. 4. 8. What nation is ſo great that hath ordinances and lawes ſo righteous? &c. The law of God maketh a people great, that is, honourable: and thus alſo haue we anſwered this argument. Wherefore ſeeing they can now pretend no honeſt excuſe for their Recuſancie, for neither is our ſeruice in it ſelfe hereticall, neither yet our people that profeſſe it, or Miniſters that preach it, heretikes or ſchiſmatikes: ſeeing alſo they may be freed from diſſimulation, when their hearts ſhall truly be conuerted vnto God, and ſo yeeld obedience to our publike aſſemblies, and that by their comming God may be honoured, I pray God giue them grace to acknowledge their wilfulneſſe, and forſake their errors, into the which their blind guides haue led them, that they may now at length ioyne themſelues vnto the true Church of Chriſt, in the profeſſion of the right faith, to the ſaluation of their ſoules.

Here now I thought to haue inſerted a treatiſe againſt the Browniſts, wherein I haue at large confuted the arguments, which they vſe againſt our Church, and likewiſe propounded our reaſons in defence thereof, with a diſcouerie of diuers erroneous opinions by them held and maintained: but I altered my purpoſe vpon theſe reaſons. Firſt, the treatiſe was not fully finiſhed, and the Printer called vpon me earneſtly to make haſte. Secondly, becauſe I intended to deale onely againſt the Papiſts in this worke. Thirdly, though they bee peeuiſhly ſet; yet I iudged them the leſſe dangerous enemies, ſeeing they diſſent not from vs in the fundamentall points of our faith. Fourthly, many of their aſſertions are ſo abſurd, that they are rather to be laughed at, then worthie of any confutation. Therefore not ſtaying the Reader further in theſe digreſſions, I proceede to the reſt of the Controuerſies that follow.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CENTVRIE, OF THE FIVE POPISH SACRAMENTS.

HERE ENSVE THE CONTROVERSIES OF THE fiue other Popiſh Sacraments: Penance, Matrimonie, Confirmation, Orders, Extreame Vnction.

THE FOVRTEENTH GENERALL CONTROuerſie, of Popiſh Penance.

VNto this Controuerſie belong theſe queſtions following:

1 Of the name Penance, whether it be rightly giuen.

2 Whether that which they call Penance, but we much better, Repentance, be a Sacrament.

3 Whether there bee any other Sacrament of repentance beſide Baptiſme.

4 Of the eſſentiall parts of Penance, as the matter and forme, and of the three materiall parts, Contrition, Confeſſion, Satisfaction: with an appendix, whether Repentance goe before Faith.

5 Of Contrition, 1. The cauſe thereof, 2. The quantitie thereof, 3. Whether it be ioyned with faith, 4. Whether it be ſatisfactorie, 5. Whether Contrition bee neceſſarie for veniall ſinnes. 6. Of Contrition which onely proceedeth of feare.

6 Of Auricular confeſſion, 1. Whether it be neceſſarie, 2. Whether it bee a diuine ordinance, 3. To whom it is to be made, 4. Of the time.

7 Of Satisfaction, with the ſeuerall branches of this queſtion.

8 Firſt, of penall iniunctions, 1. Whether neceſſarie, 2. By whom to be impoſed. Secondly, of indulgences, 1. Whether there be any ſuch, 2. The ground of them, 3. In whoſe power they be.

9 The circumſtances of penance. 1. Their habite, 2. Their workes, 3. Of the time of their Penance.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE name of Penance.

The Papiſts.

THe Latine word Pœnitentia, which they tranſlate, Penance, being deriued of pœna, doth ſignifie (ſay they) not onely confeſſion and amendment of life, but contrition and ſorrow for the offence, and painfull ſatisfaction, Bellarm.lib.1.cap.7. 41. Error.

Argum. Matth.11.21. The word muſt needes ſignifie, ſorrowfull, painefull, and ſatisfactorie Penance, Rhemiſt. Matth.3.2. for no man doth ſit downe in ſackcloth and aſhes, which hath not repented before: this therefore is a penall action that followeth the inward ſorrow. So the Niniuites are ſaid to haue repented, Luk.11.32. which was in ſackcloth and aſhes, and praiers: Ergo, Penance conſiſteth in an outward penall action. Bellarm.ibid. Matth.11.21. Luke 11.32.

Anſwere. The places quoted out of S. Matthew and S. Luke, proue no ſuch thing: where our Sauiour ſaith, that Tyre and Sidon would haue repented in ſackcloth and aſhes, and Niniue had repented: which is no ſatisfaction for ſinne, but an outward ſigne of true ſorrow for ſinne, inwardly conceiued: for repentance is begun inwardly, and continued and finiſhed outwardly: ſo then aſhes, ſackcloth, was no part of repentance, but an outward teſtification of their inward griefe.

Argum. 2. S. Paul ſaith, I ſhall bewaile many of them, which haue ſinned and not done penance for their vncleanneſſe, 2. Corinth.12.21. It cannot be ſaid, which haue not repented, for, or becauſe of their vncleanneſſe: for then ſinne ſhould bee the cauſe of repentance, which it is not: for inward repentance commeth of ſome good inſpiration: but ſinne is properly ſaid to bee the cauſe of outward penance. Bellarm.ibid.

Anſwere. Firſt, ſinne is, not the cauſe of inward repentance, but the occaſion, no more is it of outward penance or puniſhment: for as the inward repentance proceedeth from a good inſpiration, ſo the outward puniſhment is procured by the inward ſorrow, as the aſhes and ſackcloth of the Niniuites were outwardly vſed, becauſe they firſt inwardly ſorrowed. Secondly, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh here of inward repentance, it is euident: becauſe 1. he ſaith, he ſhall bewaile: that is, becauſe they haue not mourned for themſelues, hee will: as Ambroſe in the like caſe; Si Saul defleſſet peccata: If Saul had mourned for his ſinne, Samuel had not wept: lib.5.in Luc. 2. And it was in the Apoſtles power to haue inflicted an outward puniſhment, as hee did vpon the inceſtuous young man; but to cauſe them to repent, was not in his power: the Apoſtle then would not haue complained of that, which was in his power to haue enioyned them. 3. And he ſaith, I ſhall bewaile many: There was a great multitude of them, in which caſe no ſuch penance could be inflicted, the diſeaſe being ſo generall; and thus Auguſtine expoundeth this place: Cum idem morbus plurimos occuparit, nihil reſtat præter gemitum; When as the ſame diſeaſe hath occupied many, there remaineth nothing but mourning: the Apoſtle doth not now bid them not to eate meat with ſuch, as hee gaue a charge concerning the young man, &c. lib.3.cont.Parmen.cap.3. So that in Auguſtines iudgement no ſuch externall penance is here ſignified; a great part of the flocke being with this diſeaſe inuaded.

The Proteſtants.

THat this word (μετάνοια) vſed in the new Teſtament, is more fitly tranſlated repentance, to ſignifie a change of the minde, then by them, penance, to betoken ſome outward penall ſatisfactorie act, thus it is proued.

*Arg.*1. The Greek word euery where vſed, is μετάνοια, which ſignifieth as Laurentius Valla noteth, emendationem mentis, the change or amendment of the minde; and no ſuch outward ſatisfactorie Penance as they pretend. Wherefore it is more fitly engliſhed, Repentance. And although the Latine word pœnitentia, do not properly expreſſe the Greeke word, to the which reſipiſcere, and reſipiſcentia, repentance and to repent do better anſwere: yet agere pœnitentiam, in Latine, is not to do penance, as the Rhemiſts tranſlate it, but is all one, as to ſay, repent: yea and ſo the Rhemiſts themſelues reade, be penitent, Mark.1.15. and not, do penance. And Act.11.18. they tranſlate, pœnitentiam, repentance.

*Argum.*2. Matth.3.2. Iohn Baptiſt preached and ſaid, repent, &c. not, as the Rhemiſts tranſlate, doe penance: that inward repentance is here ſignified, it appeareth by theſe reaſons. 1. Iohn is ſaid, To preach the Baptiſme of repentance for remiſſion of ſinnes: Luk.3.3. That which hee preached, the people practiſed: but wee reade not of any outward penall workes they did, but onely of contrition and confeſſion for their ſinnes, Matth.3.6. 2. Againe, Baptiſme is in the name of Chriſt: Penance, is a worke of man, whereby ſatisfaction is made vnto God, as they teach: how then can it be the baptiſme of penance; for Chriſt to ſatisfie, and man to ſatisfie, are two contrarie things. 3. Iohn alſo ſaith, Bring forth fruites of repentance: worthie or meete for repentance: outward penall acts then are the fruits of repentance, they are not repentance it ſelfe.

*Argum.*3. Act.2.38. Repent and be baptized, not doe penance and be baptized: for 1. they were immediatly the ſame day baptized, verſ.41. What time was there here for any doing of penance? 2. And ſeeing you make penance a Sacrament, how could they doe penance, before they had receiued Baptiſme, the firſt Sacrament? 3. Thus their owne gloſſe expoundeth, cauſ.33. diſtinct.1. de pœnit.c.87.gloſſ. Petrus legitur dixiſſe, &c. Peter ſaith in the Actes, doe penance, &c. Quod de interiori, &c. Which is vnderſtood of the inward, not outward penance: ſo the ſame gloſſe c.34. Conuerſio eſt cordis verſio: Conuerſion is the verſion or turning of the heart.

Auguſtine thus taketh this word pœnitentia, [a] Rectè pœnitens quicquid ſordium contraxit, oportet vt abluat ſaltem mentis lachrymis: The true penitent man muſt at the leaſt waſh away his ſinnes with the teares of the minde, &c. If then repentance bee in the ſoule, what is become of this outward ſatisfactorie penance?

Colonienſ.part.7.cap.31. Pœnitentia tum rectè prædicatur, [b] cum arguuntur ſcelera ac flagitia per verbum Dei, & incutitur populo timor iræ, indignationiſque, ac iuſti iudicij Dei: Then Penance or Repentance is rightly preached, when mens ſinnes are reproued by the word of God, and a feare of Gods wrath and iuſt iudgement is ſtriken into the people, &c. This Councell calleth that Penance, when the people begin inwardly to feele Gods wrath, and ſo lament for their ſinnes: they ſpeake of no ſuch outward ſatisfactorie Penance.

1 The ancient writers of the Greeke Church take repentance for a change of the minde, not for any externall penall worke: as Iuſtinus Martyr ſaith, that God will rather haue repentance, then puniſhment, that is penance: And againe, ſpeaking of the repentance of the Niniuites, he calleth it, true repentance from the heart.

2 So alſo Tertullian defineth, Pænitentiam animi paſſionem, repentance to be a paſſion of the mind: and hee maketh three parts of repentance: Satisfactio confeſſione diſponitur, confeſſione pœnitentia naſcitur: Satisfaction, confeſſion, and penitence, that is contrition of the heart. Athanaſius ſaith, therefore penance is called repentance, Quod mentem à malo ad bonum transferat, Becauſe it turneth the minde from euill to good.

[a] De pœnitentia cap.9.

[b] This place is excepted againſt, as though this Popiſh Councell were miſalleadged, which maketh 3. parts of penance as other Romaniſts do: but the queſtion is not here of the 3. parts of penance, but of the ſignification of the word penance, ſee this obiection fully anſwered: Retect. p.115.

THE SECOND QVESTION, WHETHER there be any Sacrament of Penance.

The Papiſts.

CHriſt (they ſay) inſtituted the Sacrament of Penance, when he breathed vpon his Apoſtles after his reſurrection, and ſaid vnto them: Receiue ye the holy Ghoſt: whoſe ſinnes ye remit, they are remitted: whoſe ſinnes yee retaine, they are retained, Iohn 20.22. The facultie of the Prieſthood conſiſting in remitting of ſinnes, is here beſtowed vpon the Apoſtles, Rhemiſt. annot. Ioh. 20. ſect. 5. Hereupon they are bold to conclude, that Penance is truly and properly a Sacrament: Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. can. 1. 43. Error. Ioh. 20.22.

Bellarmine addeth further, that here is externum ſymbolum, an externall ſenſible ſigne, the words of abſolution, and a promiſe of grace, namely, remiſſion of ſinnes: Ergo, a Sacrament of Penance: Lib. 1. de pœnitentia, cap. 10.

Anſw. Firſt, if the power of remiſſion of ſinnes were here firſt inſtituted, how could the Apoſtles haue baptized before, without power to remit ſinnes to the penitent? Chriſt therefore in this place doth but renew and confirme the authoritie of their Apoſtleſhip, which was granted to them before: Matth. 18.18. Matth. 18.18.

Neither is there here any externall viſible ſigne to make a Sacrament, as euen now ſhall be ſeene: and as for the promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes, it is not here annexed to any externall ſigne: but generally made to the Apoſtles to be executed as well without, as with a Sacrament: as the Councell of Cabilon ſaith: Deus ſalutis & ſanitatis author plerunque hanc prabet ſua potentia inuiſibili adminiſtratione, plerunque medicorum operatione: God the author of ſaluation ſometime giueth forgiuenes of ſinnes by his inuiſible power, ſometime by the working of his Miniſters, our Phyſitions. Can. 33.

Secondly, this power here giuen, is principally exerciſed by preaching of the word of God, and denouncing publikely or priuately the promiſes of God, for remiſſion of ſinnes to the penitent, or the threates and iudgement of God, in binding the ſinnes of the obſtinate and impenitent: So Luke 20.24. Chriſt commandeth his Apoſtles to preach repentance and remiſſion of ſinnes in his name. Luke 20.24.

Thirdly, we confeſſe alſo a iudiciarie power of the keyes, in binding and looſing, which is exerciſed in eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, in puniſhing and abſoluing according to the word of God: as the inceſtuous perſon was bound, when he was deliuered vp to Satan, 1. Cor. 5.5. he was looſed againe, when hee was reſtored to the Church, 2. Cor. 2.7. But neither this nor the other was commended to the Church as a Sacrament. 1. Cor. 5.5. 2. Cor. 2.7.

Argum. 2. Bellarmine affirmeth, the Montaniſts and Nouatians were the firſt, that denied penance to be a Sacrament; for they did not, as ſome thinke, denie forgiueneſſe before God to thoſe that fell, but only penance and reconciliation in the Church, Bellarm. cap. 9.

Anſw. As Bellarmine is to be truſted in this, ſo let him be credited in the reſt: but in this place he hath deuiſed a notable forgerie: firſt, thoſe forenamed heretikes did not only exclude thoſe that fell in time of perſecution from reconciliation to the Church by penance, but euen depriued them of all hope of remiſſion of ſinnes before God. Cyprian deſerueth rather to bee credited herein, then this Sophiſter: lib. 3. epiſt. 23. Puto his indulgentiam Domini non defuturam, &c. I doe thinke that mercie with God will not be wanting to thoſe, who once ſtood in the battell, though they afterward fell: thus he pleadeth againſt the Nouatians, in the behalfe of thoſe, that were fallen. And Ambroſe likewiſe, lib. de pœnitent. lib. 1. cap. 9. thus witneſſeth, alleaging theſe words of our Sauiour: Euery one that beleeueth in him, ſhall not periſh, but haue life euerlaſting: if thou deſireſt to call againe any that is fallen, doeſt thou exhort him to beleeue, or not to beleeue? ſurely to beleeue: he then that hath faith, hath eternall life; he that hath life, is not excluded from forgiueneſſe: Athanaſius. Theſe fathers are euident witneſſes, that the Nouatians did ſhut out grieuous ſinners from forgiuenes before God.

Secondly, it is one thing to take away penance altogether, another to denie it to be a Sacrament: the firſt theſe heretikes were guiltie of, the ſecond we affirme, but not the firſt.

Thirdly, if to denie penance be all one, as to denie it to be a Sacrament, then the Fathers are further off (then we) from making it a Sacrament; for they did not grant publike penance twice: Auguſtine epiſtol. 54. Pœnitentia in eccleſia non iteratur: Penance or publike repentance is not iterated in the Church: but we are not ſo ſtrict, but that to the truly penitent, though they haue fallen againe, we admit a ſecond reconciliation to the Church.

Argum. 3. Bellarmine, to prooue penance a Sacrament, alleageth the teſtimonie of the Fathers: he produceth the witneſſe of tenne of them: Tertullian, Cyprian, Ambroſe, Hierome Auguſtine, with others: and yet not one of them affirmeth penance a Sacrament: but ſome doe call it aliud lauacrum, another Lauer, and that it doth imitate Baptiſme, Medicinam pœnitentia, the medicine of penitencie, and ſuch like, but none of them calleth it a Sacrament: but onely one Victor Cartennenſ. who is brought forth in the eleuenth place, but he is not ancient enough to be credited for this matter, nor of weight to ſway againſt the reſt.

The Proteſtants.

TRue repentance wee doe acknowledge, which is a dying to ſinne, and a walking in newneſſe of life, Rom.6.4. But a Sacrament of repentance wee finde none in Scripture, and therefore we denie it.

*Argum.*1. In euery Sacrament there is an externall ſenſible element, as Water in Baptiſme, Bread and Wine in the Lords Supper: but there is none in their penance: Ergo, no Sacrament.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the words of abſolution and confeſſion, are the outward ſignes in penance: it is not neceſſarie it ſhould be a viſible ſigne: it is a ſenſible ſigne being audible, *cap.*11.

*Anſw.*1. There muſt be the word beſide the element: as Auguſtine ſaith, Accedat verbum ad elementum: Let the word be ioyned to the element; and it maketh a Sacrament: the word it ſelfe cannot be the element: for the ſame thing cannot both ſanctifie and bee ſanctified. And if the audible word be the element, by this reaſon the preaching of the word alſo ſhall be a Sacrament.

Bellarmine replieth: 1. That whether the outward ſigne be viſible, or audible, it skilleth not, ſo it be apt to expreſſe the ſpirituall effect: as the ſigne in penance is, which conſiſteth in the words of the Prieſt abſoluing, and the confeſſion of the penitent partie: and S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh onely of the Sacrament of Baptiſme, when he ſaith, *Let the word be ioyned to the element, &c. Bellarm. cap.*11 reſp. ad 7. argum. Kemnitij.

1.Timoth.4.5.

Anſw. If 1. an audible ſigne ſufficed, what needeth water in Baptiſme? for there the Miniſter ſaith, I baptize thee, as in the other, I abſolue thee. 2. The Apoſtle ſaith, Euery thing is ſanctified by the word and prayer, 1.Tim.4.5. If the word doe ſanctifie, then is it not the thing ſanctified. 3. It cannot be ſhewed, that any of the Sacraments of the law, which did reſemble ours, had any ſuch audible ſigne. 4. Auguſtine, though in that place, ſpeaketh chiefly of Baptiſme, yet elſewhere ſheweth this to be the generall condition of all Sacraments, to haue a viſible ſigne: as ſpeaking of the anointing of Aaron: Quod in genere viſibilium ſignaculorum ſacroſanctum eſt, ſicut ipſe Baptiſmus, &c. Which in the kinde of viſible ſignes is holie, as Baptiſme is: So then he accounteth all holie ſignes, viſible, *cont. Petilian. lib.*2.*cap.*104.

Likewiſe, *lib.*3.*de doctrin. Chriſtian.c.*7. Deus nobis ſigna pauca pro multis dedit, factu facilia, &c. God hath giuen vs few ſignes for many, eaſie to be done, excellent in ſignification, moſt chaſt in obſeruation, ſuch as is Baptiſme and the celebration of the bodie and blood of the Lord, &c. the ſignes of the Sacraments are eaſie to be done, not eaſie to be ſaid: and as they are in Baptiſme and the Euchariſt, but there they are viſible.

2.Sam.12.13.

Argum, 2. There was repentance and abſolution of ſinnes both, in the old Teſtament: for both Dauid confeſſed and was ſorrie for his ſinne, and the Prophet Nathan pronounced forgiuenes from God, 2.Sam.12.13. So likewiſe Iohn preached repentance for remiſſion of ſinnes, and the people came and confeſſed their ſinnes: here were all things neceſſarie for true repentance, yet was it no Sacrament all this while, as they themſelues confeſſe, which they hold to be inſtituted after Chriſts reſurrection, *Trident. Concil. ſeſſ.*14.*cap.*1. Why then ſhould it bee rather a Sacrament now, then before?

Bellarmine anſwereth, 1. That the power of remitting ſinnes was not giuen to any in the old law: And that Nathan did not remit vnto Dauid his ſinnes, but only ſhew, that God had remitted them: And if Nathan did abſolue Dauid, it was but one ſingular example, which maketh no law.

Iſay 1.18.
Iſay 6.7.
Hoſh.14.3.

*Contra.*1. If Nathan did declare vnto Dauid, that God had forgiuen him, it was ſufficient: for the Apoſtles themſelues had no further power, then to declare on Gods behalfe remiſſion of ſinnes to the penitent, and to ſhew the way how they ſhall be forgiuen. Synod. Cabilonenſ. ſub Carolo 33. Confeſſio, quæ Deo fit, purgat peccata, quæ ſacerdoti fit, docet, qualiter ipſa purgentur peccata: The confeſſion which is made to God, purgeth ſinne, that which is made to the Prieſt, ſheweth how ſinne ſhould bee purged, &c. So the people being pricked in heart at the Sermon of S. Peter, cried, ſaying, Men and brethren, what ſhall we doe? Act.2.37. then Peter himſelfe abſolueth them not, but only ſheweth what courſe they ſhould take to haue their ſinnes forgiuen. 2. The pronouncing remiſſion of ſinnes, is no extraordinarie thing in the old Teſtament: Iſay 1.18. Though your ſinnes were as crimſon, Chap.6.7. thy ſinne ſhall be purged: and more plainly, Ezech.18.22. Hoſh.14.3. Take vnto you words. And be it that Nathan did it but once, yet haue we once in the old Teſtament abſolution of ſinnes, which the Ieſuite denieth.

Bellarmine. 2. That Penance, which Iohn Baptiſt and our Sauiour Chriſt preached, was no Sacrament, becauſe the words of abſolution were wanting, in Iohns penance; and confeſſion, in that which Chriſt preached: *lib.*1.*de pœnitent. cap.*11.

*Contra.*1. The people confeſſed their ſinnes before Iohn, this they willingly grant: it is manifeſt alſo that he declared to them remiſſion of ſinnes, for hee preached the Baptiſme of repentance to the remiſſion of ſinnes, Luks 3.3. And to what end ſhould, or would the people haue confeſſed their ſins, if they had not expected forgiuenes of the ſame at Iohns hands? 2. Concerning the repentance which our Sauiour preached, there was both the words of abſolution, Luke 7.48. Thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee; and the womans abundant teares, therewith waſhing Chriſts feete, ſtood for confeſſion: and yet more plainly, Luke 19. Zacheus confeſſeth, verſ.8. Chriſt abſolueth, verſ.9. This day is ſaluation come to thy houſe. Here therefore was as much a Sacrament of penance, as was after miniſtred by the Apoſtles.

Luke 19.8,9.

*Argum.*3. Act.26.20. S.Paul hauing ſet downe the ſumme of repentance: To repent, to turne to God, and to doe workes worthie of repentance: afterward teſtifieth thus, verſ.22. Saying none other things, then Moſes and the Prophets did ſay ſhould come: Paul preached no other repentance, then the Prophets; but they preached no Sacrament of repentance, which they themſelues confeſſe: Ergo.

Acts 26.20.

Bellarmine. 1. Paul doth not recite the ſumme of the doctrine of penance, but it is an exhortation onely to penance. 2. And hee ſpeaketh of Penance before Baptiſme, which is no Sacrament. 3. And the things which the Apoſtle ſaith agreeable to the Prophets, are not concerning penance, but as touching the paſſion, and reſurrection of Chriſt, as it followeth, verſ.23. reſponſ. ad 4. argum. Kemnitij.

Anſw. Firſt, 1. the ſumme of the doctrine of repentance, is to turne in heart to God, and to bring forth good fruits: as Auguſtine; Fructus eſt dignus pœnitentia tranſacta flere peccata, & eadem iterum non agere: It is a worthie fruite of repentance, to lament ſinnes paſt, and not to doe the ſame againe: *Serm. de tempor.*66. This ſumme of the doctrine of repentance, the Apoſtle here ſetteth downe, not by way of exhortation only, but he ſaith he ſhewed, Annunciauit, he preached or declared it vnto them, by way of inſtruction. Secondly, there is one and the ſame kinde of repentance, both before and after Baptiſme, as followeth in the next argument. Thirdly, not the preaching only of Chriſts ſuffering is the doctrine agreeable to the Prophets, but of remiſſion of ſinnes, in his name, and ſo conſequently of repentance, as S.Peter ſheweth, Act.10.43. To him all the Prophets witneſſe, that through his name all that beleeue ſhall haue remiſſion of ſinnes.

*Argum.*4. There is one and the ſame kinde of repentance before Baptiſme and after: but the firſt is not a Sacrament, as they confeſſe: Ergo, no more is the latter.

Bellarmine, Penance after Baptiſme requireth particular confeſſion of ſinnes and laborious works, ſo doth not penance before Baptiſme. *Bellarm. cap.*11.

Anſw. Firſt, particular confeſſion is not requiſite at all, as afterward ſhall be ſhewed: but both confeſſion, and bringing forth of good fruite are neceſſarie in repentance before Baptiſme, as may appeare, Matth.3.6. they confeſſed their ſinnes, verſ.8. Bring foorth fruites, &c. Secondly, Auguſtine ſetteth forth Zacheus as an example of true repentance, *ſerm.*116. de tempore: who both confeſſed his ſinnes and made reſtitution, Luke 19.8. being not yet baptized.

Matth.3.6.

Auguſtine thus writeth: Sacramentum ideò dicitur, quia aliud videtur, aliud intelligitur: It is called a Sacrament, becauſe one thing is ſeene, another vnderſtood. And then he ſaith, Quid tale aut ipſi vident, aut alijs queunt oſtendere in eo quod ſacramentum pœnitentiæ vocant: But neither doe they ſee, or can ſhew to others, any ſuch viſible ſigne in that which they call the Sacrament of repentance. Here Auguſtine denieth repentance to be a Sacrament, becauſe it hath no viſible ſigne.

Serm. de Baptiſmo ad Infantes, & lib.3. quæſt. veter. Teſtam.

Bellarmine anſwereth here very ſimply, that Auguſtine by a viſible ſigne vnderſtandeth, that which is ſenſible to any of the ſenſes, though it be to the hearing, *cap.*11. reſponſ. ad 3. argum. Caluini. Thus that which is only heard, ſhall be ſaid to be viſible, which is moſt abſurd, and needeth no other confutation.

The Maſter of the Sentences propoundeth two reaſons againſt the Sacrament of penance, which require a further anſwere: firſt, if outward penance be a Sacrament, then it would follow, that, Non omne Sacramentum euangelicum id efficit, quod figurat: That euery Sacrament of the Goſpell doth not effect that, which it figureth: but inward repentance doth effect the outward, not contrariwiſe: The anſwere there is this, that the propoſition is true onely of thoſe Sacraments, that were inſtituted in the Goſpell, but Penance and Matrimonie had their beginning before: but ſeeing theſe new Sophiſters make Penance a Sacrament of the Goſpell, they muſt finde out another anſwere; *Lambard lib.*4. *diſt.*22.c.

The other reaſon obiected is this; if externall Penance be a Sacrament, it will follow, that res ſacramenti, the ſacramentall thing or worke ſhould goe before the Sacrament, as inward repentance is the ſacramentall thing, and goeth before outward penance: the Maſter ſaith this may well be ſo, but we ſee not how; it would haue a better anſwere, I would haue them demurre further vpon it.

This truth alſo is ſealed: Agnes Snoth burned denying the Sacrament of penance: Fox p.1859.

1. It ſeemeth, that of ancient time penance was not held for a Sacrament in the Greeke Church: for Nectarius the Patriarke, vpon a certaine abuſe which happened in the Church by reaſon of priuate confeſſion, a certaine noble woman and a Deacon hauing companie together, aboliſhed that rite of penance, leauing euery one to his owne conſcience, when they come to the Communion; but he would not haue aboliſhed one of the Sacraments.

Socrates lib.5. cap.9.

2. Tertullian nameth only two Sacraments in vſe in his time: for thus he ſpeaketh to the Marcionite heretike concerning the admitting of ſuch as are maried to the Sacraments: Nec alibi coniunctas ad ſacramentum Euchariſtia & baptiſmatis admittens: Nor being otherwhere ioyned together admitteſt

mitteſt them to the Sacrament of Baptiſme and the Euchariſt,&c. Vpon the which words, Beatu Rhenanus, one of their owne writers, giueth this marginall note: Baptiſmus & Euchariſtia duo ſacramenta primitiua eccleſia: Baptiſme and the Euchariſt two Sacraments of the primitiue Church.

3. See before the confeſſion of the reformed Churches concerning the number of the Sacraments, which they acknowledge only to be but two: *Centur.2.err.*104.

Coſter. Enchiridion. Conſult artic.13. 4. Their owne Coſterus defineth a Sacrament, to be externum & viſibile ſignum, an externall and viſible ſigne of a diuine and inuiſible grace, &c. By this definition penance, which hath no viſible ſigne, cannot be a Sacrament. Caſſander one of their owne confeſſeth, that vntill Peter Lombard, they ſhall not readily finde any writer, qui certum numerum ſacramentorum ſtatuit, which appointeth a certaine number of the Sacraments.

THE THIRD QVESTION, WHETHER THERE BE any other Sacrament of repentance, beſide Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

44.Error. Secundâ tabula poſt naufragium. 1.Ioh.1.9. Baptiſme ſerueth onely, they ſay, for remiſſion of ſinnes done before: for ſinnes committed after Baptiſme, the Sacrament of Penance, which is a diſtinct Sacrament from Baptiſme, is appointed for a remedie: and therefore is fitly called, The ſecond table of refuge after ſhipwracke: Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.14.can.2.

*Argum.*1. Saint Iohn ſaith, If we confeſſe our ſinnes, he is faithfull to forgiue vs: he ſaith not, that by the memorie of Baptiſme, but by confeſſion, which is a part of penance, our ſinnes are forgiuen: *Bellarm.cap.*13.

Anſw. Firſt, we ſay not, that by the bare memorie or remembrance of Baptiſme, ſins after committed are done away: but that the ſacramentall force of Baptiſme doth extend it ſelfe to our whole life, that is, to bee a ſeale vnto vs of remiſſion of all our ſinnes in the blood of Chriſt. Secondly, the confeſſion of our ſinnes is not a taking away of the force of Baptiſme, but a more effectuall applying thereof, as the people which were baptized by Iohn confeſſed alſo their ſinnes. Thirdly, it is no good argument, we muſt confeſſe our ſinnes after Baptiſme: Ergo, Penance is another Sacrament beſide Baptiſme: for confeſſion of ſinnes is a fruite of the Sacrament of Baptiſme.

*Argum.*2. In the old law Circumciſion was not appointed as a remedie for ſinnes committed afterward, but they had ſacrifices and other expiations, &c, ſo in the new Teſtament Baptiſme is not appointed to purge ſinne after Baptiſme, but we haue the ſacrifice of the new Teſtament, and abſolution, &c. *Bellarm.cap.*13.

Act.7.51. Anſw. Firſt, the force and efficacie of Circumciſion was ſeene in the reformation of the whole life: why elſe doth Stephen thus charge the Iewes, Act.7.51. that they were of vncircumciſed hearts and eares? ſignifying thereby, that they did not expreſſe the force and vertue of their firſt circumciſion in the renuing of their hearts, reforming of their eares: if then to circumciſe the eares, bee an effect of circumciſion, but infants cannot be circumciſed, becauſe they neither heare, nor vnderſtand; then it followeth, that the effect of circumciſion was not limitted only to that time, but was to be exerciſed and applied thorough the whole life. Againe, Circumciſion being the ſeale of the righteouſnes of faith, Rom.4.11. and faith being the life of the ſoule, Rom.1.17. it followeth that the whole righteouſnes and ſpirituall life of man, not the beginning only was then ſealed in Circumciſion, and now in Baptiſme. Rom.4.11. Rom.1.17.

Secondly, as then they had ſacrifices and Sacraments, not to beget a new faith, or to obtaine new remiſſion of ſinnes, but to confirme them in their firſt faith, and to applie the remiſſion of ſinnes ſealed in Circumciſion: ſo now beſide Baptiſme we haue the Euchariſt, no ſacrifice, but a Sacrament, to cheriſh and reuiue in vs our firſt life in Baptiſme: like as foode doth not giue a new life to the bodie, but only ſuſtaineth the firſt life receiued in the birth, &c.

Heb.6.6. *Argum.*3. The Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr.6.6. that they which haue been once lightened, (that is, baptized) if they fall away ſhould be renewed by penance: they cannot bee renewed againe by that penance, which is by Baptiſme: Ergo, by another penance they may; vnleſſe yee will ſay that the Apoſtle excludeth ſuch as fall after Baptiſme altogether from Penance, which was the hereſie of the Nouatians: Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, to be lightened is not to bee baptized: the Apoſtle addeth further, verſ.5. They that haue taſted of the good word of God: but infants haue no taſte of the word; therefore they are not illuminate in Baptiſme. Secondly, if by penance you vnderſtand Baptiſme, then you haue made a good reaſon for vs, that hold no other Sacrament of Penance but Baptiſme. Thirdly, S. Paul ſpeaketh not of euery falling after Baptiſme, but of manifeſt apoſtaſie, and vtter renouncing of the grace receiued, for whom there was no more hope at all: which was not the error of the Nouatians, that denied reconciliation to thoſe that fell of infirmitie: but the Apoſtles owne poſition, Heb.10.26. That there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſinne at all for thoſe, which after the knowledge of the truth ſinne willingly, that is, obſtinatly and with a malicious and peruerſe minde, as the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, verſ.29. They tread vnder foote the Sonne of God, &c. and deſpite the ſpirit of grace: of ſuch the Apoſtle Heb.10.26.29

ſpeaketh in this place, that they do crucifie to themſelues the Sonne of God. Fourthly, if your expoſition be admitted, you haue gained nothing but this, that there is repentance after Baptiſme, which you call penance, and this wee denie not: but any other Sacrament of repentance, wee acknowledge not, which you ſhould haue proued.

The Proteſtants.

WE acknowledge no other Sacrament of repentance, but Baptiſme.

Arg. 1. The Scripture ſo calleth it, The baptiſme of repentance for remiſſion of ſins, Mar.1.4. Bellarmine anſwereth, that the baptiſme of Iohn was called the baptiſme of repentance, not the baptiſme of Chriſt, *cap.*14.

Mark.1.4.

Anſw. 1. Wee haue proued before, Contro.12.queſt.7. that the baptiſme of Iohn, and of our Sauiour Chriſt was all one, and therefore this diſtinction faileth. 2. That Chriſts baptiſme was a baptiſme of repentance, S. Paul ſheweth, Rom.6.4. Wee are buried by baptiſme into his death, &c. that wee ſhould walke in newnes of life. Chriſts baptiſme then teacheth vs to die vnto ſin, and to riſe vp to newnes of life: but this is repentance, Hebr.6.1. Repentance from dead workes: Ergo, Chriſts baptiſme preacheth repentance.

Heb.6 1.

So Auguſtine calleth Baptiſme, Sacramentum fidei, & pœnitentia, the Sacrament of faith, and repentance: what need we then ſeeke for a new Sacrament of repentance, which cannot any where be found in Scripture?

De fide ad Pëtrum cap.29.

Bellarm. Firſt, Auguſtine calleth Baptiſme the Sacrament of faith, and Penance which goeth before Baptiſme, not of that, which followeth after. Secondly, Iohns Baptiſme is called the Baptiſme of repentance to remiſſion of ſinnes, not that it gaue remiſſion of ſins, but it wrought repentance, and repentance remiſſion of ſins: but Chriſts baptiſme worketh not repentance, but repentance goeth before, *cap.*14.*reſp.ad argum.*3.

Anſw. Firſt, How 1. can baptiſme be the Sacrament of faith and Penance before going, ſeeing children, that haue baptiſme, haue as yet neither faith nor repentance? 2. And you contradict your ſelues: for you hold Penance before Baptiſme to bee no Sacrament, and yet you ſay that Auguſtine calleth Baptiſme the Sacrament of Penance before going. Secondly, 1. Repentance went before Iohns baptiſme: for they confeſſed their ſinnes before they were baptized, Matth.3.6. but without repentance, there can be no confeſſion. 2. And that Iohns baptiſme ſealed remiſſion of ſins vnto them, it is euident, becauſe they did thereby eſcape the wrath to come, Luke 3.7. But Gods iudgements cannot bee auoided, where ſin is not firſt remitted.

Luke 3.7.

*Argum.*2. If Baptiſme and the vertue thereof cannot be aboliſhed by ſin, then there is no need of another Sacrament of repentance: but the firſt is true, Ergo the ſecond.

Bellarmine. The grace of regeneration had in Baptiſme, may afterward be loſt and caſt out by ſinne.

Anſw. Firſt, as touching the grace of election, whereby infants are ſaued in Baptiſme, being taken away in their infancie, it is diuelliſh doctrine to ſay it may be loſt: for whom Chriſt loueth, he loueth to the end, Ioh.13.1. Secondly, the grace of regeneration, which is not conferred in Baptiſme, but onely ſealed, and afterward by the worke of the ſpirit effected in the hearts of the faithfull, cannot be loſt where once it is wrought: for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom.11.2. And your owne Canons confirme the ſame: Diuina clementia dimiſſa peccata vlterius redire in vltionem non patitur: The diuine clemencie doth not ſuffer ſins once remitted to returne againe vnto puniſhment, *Gelaſius cauſ.*33.*qu.*3.*diſtinct.*4.*c.*24.

*Argum.*3. Baptiſme is of no leſſe force and efficacie, than Circumciſion: but that was a durable and permanent Sacrament, effectuall through the whole life, being the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, Rom.4.11. But 1. faith ſanctifieth both the firſt and latter repentance: For without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb.11.6. Ergo, euen repentance following depended as then vpon Circumciſion, ſo now vpon Baptiſme. 2. And if Baptiſme be the ſeale of righteouſnes; but without finall and continuall repentance there is no righteouſnes, it is therefore the ſeale and Sacrament of all and euery repentance.

*Decret.par.*2.*cauſ.*23.*qu.*1.*c.*40. in the title thus: In extremo poſitus etiam ab hæretico pœnitentiam accipere valet: At the point of death a man may receiue penance of an heretike. And in the Canon it ſelfe: Sine ſancti baptiſmi ſacramento: Without the holie Sacrament of Baptiſme hee would not goe out of his life. Heere Baptiſme is interpreted to bee the ſame thing, that is called before Penance.

Synod.Colonienſ. Docendus eſt populus, quod in baptiſmo aboleatur vetus homo, remiſſo omni peccato, atque nouus exoriatur, &c. The people muſt be taught, that in Baptiſme the old man is aboliſhed, all ſinne being taken away, and the new man beginneth, &c. But to put off the old man with his works, Coloſſ.3.9. is nothing elſe but repentance, which is from dead workes: Ergo, Baptiſme is the Sacrament of repentance.

Coloſſ.3.9.

So alſo Chryſoſtome defineth Baptiſme: Nihil aliud eſt quam interitus eius qui baptiſatur & reſurrectio: It is nothing elſe but the dying or periſhing of him, that is baptized, and his riſing againe, &c. but this is repentance.

In 6. caput ad Hebræos.

Tertullian calleth not penance, but martyrdome, ſecunda ſolatia, the ſecond comfort after baptiſme.

Lib. aduerſ. Gnoſtic.

tiſme. Auguſtine maketh three actions of penance, vna quæ nouum hominem per baptiſmum parturit: One which begetteth a new man by baptiſme, &c. the other is extended thorough the whole life; the third is for ſinnes committed againſt the Decalogue, &c. Baptiſme then in his opinion is a Sacrament of repentance.

De pœnitent. medicin. c. 2.

Luther ſaith, this penitence is nothing elſe but via & reditus ad baptiſmum, a way and returning vnto baptiſme. Melancthon calleth baptiſmum ſignum pœnitentiæ: Baptiſme a ſigne or ſymbole of repentance. To the ſame purpoſe alſo Maſter Caluin: Of this opinion then (as we ſee) are the chiefe writers of the reformed Churches.

Lib. 4. Inſtitut. c. 15. ſect. 4.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, OF THE ESSENtiall parts of penance.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE MATTER and forme of popiſh penance.

The Papiſts.

45. Error.

THe forme of this Sacrament, ſay they, conſiſteth in the words of abſolution, pronounced by the Miniſter, the matter thereof is the contrition, confeſſion, and ſatisfaction of the partie penitent: Concil. Tridentin. ſeſſ. 14. cap. 3. Bellarm. lib. 1. cap. 15.

Argum. Bellarmine here hath no argument out of Scripture: and as for the popiſh Councels of Florence and Trent alleaged by him, we hold them not worth the anſwering. He only obtrudeth this reaſon: A ſenſible ſigne of iuſtifying grace inſtituted of God is a part of the Sacrament: but the action of the penitent partie, weeping, and confeſſing his ſinnes, is a ſenſible ſigne that he is iuſtified: Ergo. Bellarm. cap. 14.

Anſw. Firſt, a ſenſible ſigne ſufficeth not, it muſt bee a viſible element, that is the matter of the Sacrament, as water in Baptiſme, bread and wine in the Euchariſt: but the action of the penitent is no viſible element. 2. Againe, no humane action, ſuch as this of the penitent is, can be a part of a diuine Sacrament. 3. It is no ſigne of grace, for an hypocrite may doe all this, as Ahab did, and not be iuſtified.

The Proteſtants.

NEither is their penance a Sacrament, neither can theſe be parts of a Sacrament.

Argum. 1. In euery Sacrament there are two things required: res terrena, and actio externa, the earthly thing or element, as is water in Baptiſme; and the externall action: neither doth the element alone, nor the action alone make a Sacrament: as in Baptiſme there is both water, which is the matter; and the waſhing, that is the action. Wherefore ſeeing in their penance there is nothing but the action of the Miniſter, and the action of the receiuer, it can be no Sacrament.

Argum. 2. The parts of euery Sacrament, as the forme, the matter, muſt bee inſtituted of Chriſt: but this are they not able to ſhew for the forme and matter of penance, namely, the inſtitution of Chriſt: Ergo, it is no Sacrament. For in theſe words of our Sauiour Chriſt, Whoſe ſinnes ye remit, &c. which is the only place of inſtitution, which they are able to alleage for this their deuiſed Sacrament, though we ſhould grant, that the words of abſolution may be picked out of this place, which they ſay containe the forme; yet there is no mention of contrition, confeſſion, ſatisfaction in the partie abſolued, wherein conſiſteth the matter. If Bellarmine anſwere, as elſewhere hee ſaith, that theſe alſo may be gathered out of this place, becauſe ſinnes muſt not be forgiuen, but to thoſe that confeſſe them; Bellarm. cap. 10. We replie againe: 1. That in the inſtitution of a Sacrament there muſt be expreſſe mention of the materiall parts thereof, as it was in the inſtitution of Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper. 2. By the ſame reaſon we will conclude againſt the Ieſuite, that our Sauiour Chriſt abſolued not, but vpon confeſſion going before: for it is not like that he would forgiue ſinnes, where ſinnes were not acknowledged: and thus there being confeſſion and abſolution in the penance that Chriſt preached, it muſt needs be a Sacrament after their definition, which Bellarmine inſtantly denieth.

Argum. 3. Some of the principall Schoolemen are of a contrarie iudgement to Bellarmine: one thinketh, namely Gropperus, that the action of the Prieſt is the materiall part of this Sacrament, and not the action of the penitent partie, Enchirid. Colon. Other, as Scotus, in 4. ſentent. diſtinct. 14. qu. 4. and Ockam, Ioannes Maior doe thinke, that the abſolution of the Prieſt is the onely eſſentiall part of penance. They reaſon thus:

Firſt, that is a Sacrament which is conferred by the Miniſter: but onely abſolution is conferred by the Miniſter, not the confeſſion of the penitent: Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the penitent partie is cooperator miniſtri, is the helper of the Miniſter.

Contra. 1. Yet dare hee not ſay hee is the Miniſter: 2. He may as well ſay, that the people, which eateth and drinketh and communicateth in the Euchariſt, is the Miniſters fellow-worker in the Sacrament.

Secondly, that only is of the eſſence of the Sacrament, which is cauſe of the Sacramentall effect: but abſolution only is the cauſe of remiſſion: Ergo, it is only of the eſſence.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that as a man conſiſteth of two parts, the ſoule, and body, yet hee vnderſtandeth onely by the ſoule: ſo the Sacrament conſiſting of two parts, may worke onely by one of them.

Contra. Firſt, if the Sacrament haue two parts, and worke onely by one of them, then is the other ſuperfluous. Secondly, the ſpirit or ſoule of man onely vnderſtandeth formally; but the matter and obiect of the vnderſtanding is deliuered by the outward ſenſes: ſo likewiſe to the ſacramentall worke muſt concurre as well the matter as the forme thereof. Thus the Papiſts diſagree among themſelues, and each doe confute another: which ſheweth that their Sacrament of Penance is but a new deuice, ſeeing they know not themſelues what certainly to hold.

See the iudgement of other Churches before, err. 43. for they which hold not penance to be a ſacrament, will not acknowledge theſe to be the eſſentiall parts thereof.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS QVESTION, of the three materiall parts of popiſh penance, contrition, confeſſion, ſatisfaction.

The Papiſts.

THeſe three (they ſay) are the true and proper parts of penance, Contrition, and painful ſorrow of the heart, Confeſſion to the Prieſt, and Satisfaction to God for our ſins, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. can. 4. Rhemiſt. Matth 3. ſect. 2. 46. Error.

Argum. 1. Contrition is proued, Pſalm. 51. 17. A contrite heart is a ſacrifice to God. Confeſſion, Math 3. They were baptized in Iordane confeſſing their ſinnes. Satisfaction, Matth. 11. 21. They would haue repented long agoe in ſackcloth and aſhes, Bellarm. cap. 19. Pſalm. 51. 17. Matth. 3. Matth. 11. 21.

Anſ. Firſt, that godly ſorrow and contrition of the heart, is neceſſary to true repentance, wee neuer will denie: but that this ſorrow is any ſatisfaction to Gods iuſtice, wee abhorre it as a monſtrous blaſphemie. Secondly, Confeſſion and acknowledgement of our ſins vnto God; and in ſome caſes, where the conſcience is not ſatisfied, to the Miniſter or ſome other faithfull man, wee doe willingly grant: but that it is neceſſary to make generall confeſſion of ſinnes to the prieſt, that place prooueth it not: for Iohn had had ſhriuing worke enough for many yeeres, to heare euery mans particular confeſſion. Thirdly, that ſitting in ſackcloth and aſhes, was no ſatisfaction for ſinne, but an outward ſigne of true ſorrow for ſinne.

Argum. 2. In Dauids repentance, there was contrition: his heart ſmote him, when he had numbred the people, 2. Sam. 24. 10. Confeſſion, I haue ſinned exceedingly. Satisfaction, by his prayer and offring of ſacrifice, &c. In the Publicane, Luk. 18. there was contrition in that hee durſt not lift his eyes to heauen: Confeſſion, Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner: Satisfaction, in ſmiting vpon his breaſt, Bellarm. cap. 19. 2. Sam. 24. 10. Luke. 18.

Anſw. Firſt, contrition we grant in both theſe, as a preparation to a further repentance, not as any part of ſatisfaction to Gods iuſtice. Secondly, heere is alſo confeſſion, but not auricular, by particular enumeration of ſins. Dauid maketh confeſſion but of that one ſin at that time committed, the publicane confeſſeth in generall, and both confeſſe vnto God; what is this to auricular confeſſion to the Prieſt? Thirdly, Dauid offereth ſacrifice onely 1. as a teſtimonie of thankfulneſſe vnto God, not by way of ſatisfaction: 2. and it was a ſmall ſatisfaction in the publicane for all his notorious ſinnes to ſmite vpon his breaſt: 3. Doe you thinke that oppreſſion, forgerie, extortion, ſuch as the ſins of the Publicanes were, Luke. 19. 8. are of ſo ſmall waight, that they may be done away with a knocke vpon the breaſt? 4. This ſmiting vpon the breaſt was a ſigne of contrition, no part of any ſatisfaction: And Auguſtine ſaith; Tundere pectus quid aliud eſt, quam arguere, quod latet in pectore, &c. To knocke vpon the breaſt, what is it elſe, but to reprooue that, which lieth hid in the breaſt? in Matth. ſerm. 8.

The Proteſtants.

WE do make two parts onely of true repentance, according to the Scriptures, that is, the mortifying of the old man with his works, by dying vnto ſinne: vnto the which belongeth true ſorrow and contrition of heart for our ſins, 2. Corinth. 7. 11. acknowledgement and confeſſion therof before God, 2. Sam. 12. 13. and a perfect hatred and deteſtation of ſin, and indignation with our ſelues for the ſame, 2. Corinth. 7. 11. The other part is the renewing and quickning of the new man in vs, which conſiſteth partly in ſetting our conſciences at peace with God, our ſinnes being forgiuen vs, Rom. 5. 1. and working in vs a zeale, ſtudy, care, and deſire of newnes of life, 2. Cor. 7. 11. Theſe two parts onely we finde in Scripture. 2. Cor. 7. 11. 2. Sam. 12. 13. 2. Cor. 7. 11. Rom. 5. 1. 2. Cor. 7. 11.

Argum. 1. Iſai. 1. 17. Ceaſe to doe euill: Learne to doe good: wee muſt dye vnto ſinne, and walke in newnes of life, Rom. 6. 4. Put off the old man, put on the new, Coloſſ. 3. 9. Iſai. 1. 17. Rom. 6. 4. Coloſſ. 3. 4.

Bellarmine anſwereth, 1. Partes ſunt iuſtitiæ, non pœnitentiæ: Theſe are parts of righteouſnes, not of repentance: namely, to ceaſe to doe euill, and learne to goe good, cap. 20. 2. And againe, cap. 19. propoſ. 4 Penance is onely from dead works, and all men need not repentance, Luk. 15. 7. but the mortifying of the fleſh, and to be renewed in the ſpirit, appertaineth to all. 3. Neither can it bee ſhewed any where in Scripture that it is called repentance to decline from euill, and to doe good. Luke. 15. 7.

Contra. Firſt, it followeth not, they are parts of Iuſtice or righteouſnes, therefore not of repentance: To make ſatisfaction is a part of repentance, by their owne confeſſion, yet is it alſo a worke of righteouſneſſe; as Zacheus, Luk. 19.8. reſtoreth what hee had wrongfully gotten: And the Apoſtle ſaith, Being made free from ſin, ye are made the ſeruants of righteouſnes, Rom. 6.8. Freedome from ſin, which is nothing elſe but repentance from dead works, Hebr. 6.1. is the ſeruice of righteouſnes, which is our ſanctification: for heere we ſpeake not of our iuſtice before God in Chriſt, but of iuſtice which is wrought in vs.

Luke 19.8.
Heb. 6.1.

Secondly, it is an hereticall poſition, that any are ſo iuſt, which neede no repentance: 1. For if they need no repentance, they ſhould haue no ſin: and whoſoeuer ſaith he hath no ſin is a liar, 1. Iohn 1.8 then it followeth, if we acknowledge our ſins, hee is faithfull to forgiue vs our ſins. The Apoſtle excludeth not any (no not himſelfe) that haue ſins, from confeſſion of ſins, which is a part of repentance. 2. Our Sauiour ſpeaketh of ſuch iuſt perſons, as in their owne preſumptuous opinion were ſuch: ſo he ſaith, I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance, Matth. 9.12. Thinke you that any were ſo iuſt, that Chriſt needed not to haue come into the world for their ſakes, as here he ſaith, I came not; then needed he not alſo to haue died for them. 3. Againe, heare what was decreed. Concil. Mileuitan. can. 8. where Auguſtine was preſent: Placuit, vt quicunque verba ipſa, &c. They which hold, that they which ſay thoſe words of the Lords prayer, forgiue vs. &c. doe rather ſay them in humility then in truth, let them be accurſed. If euery man truely craueth in the Lords prayer forgiuenes of his ſins, then euery man is truely a ſinner, and ſo hath neede of repentance.

1. Iohn. 1.8.
Matth. 9.12.

Libr. de diuin. inſtituend. c. 4. Lactantius ſaith, nemo eſſe tam iuſtus poteſt, vt nunquam ei ſit pœnitentia neceſſaria, &c. no man can be ſo iuſt that repentance ſhould neuer be needfull vnto him.

Iſay. 58.7. Thirdly, it is more boldly than truely, or wiſely ſaide, the Scripture no where doth call it repentance to ceaſe to doe euill, &c. Iſay. 58. Is not this faſting, to looſe the bands of wickednes, &c. verſ. 7. to deale thy bread to the hungry? By faſting heere is vnderſtood repentance, as verſ. 3. Wherefore haue we faſted, &c. and puniſhed our ſelues? but puniſhment belongeth, euen in their owne ſenſe, to repentance.

Act. 3.19 Argum. 2. Remiſsion of ſins doth alwaies follow true repentance. Act. 3.19. Repent and turn, that your ſinnes may be put away, when the time of refreſhing ſhall come from the preſence of the Lord: but remiſsion of ſins do not alwaies follow contrition, confeſsion, ſatisfaction: as all theſe three were in Iudas, and yet he hanged himſelfe: therefore theſe three, contrition, confeſsion, ſatisfaction, are not the parts of true repentance.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt Iudas was baptized, and receiued the Euchariſt, and hanged himſelfe, yet were they the right Sacraments. Secondly, Iudas had not true contrition, which alwaies is ioyned with hope, neither did he make particular confeſsion of all his ſins, nor yet was ſatisfaction enioyned him by the Prieſt.

Anſ. Firſt, there is difference betweene the Sacraments and repentance: for the Sacrament is one thing, res ſacramenti, the vertue of the Sacrament another: the firſt may be receiued to death, or to life: for they that receiue vnworthily, are guilty of the body and bloud of Chriſt. 1. Corinth. 11.27. but the other, is omni homini ad vitam, nulli ad exitium, is to life vnto all, not to deſtruction, Auguſtin. tract. 26. in Ioann. So is true repentance, not vnto death vnto any, but vnto life. Secondly, you make contrition a part of repentance, Non vt in corde ſedem habet: Not as it is in the heart, but as it is manifeſted by ſignes, Bellarm. cap. 17. therfore hope is no part of popiſh contrition being in the heart. 2. Iudas alſo confeſſed his ſin in particular, I haue ſinned in betraying the innocent blood: he made not a particular confeſsion of all, no more did Dauid or the Publicane, alleaged before as examples of repentance. 3. His ſatisfaction was not enioyned by the Prieſt: if hee ſhould haue expected their ſentence, they would haue enioyned none at all: and who I pray you enioyned Dauid his ſatisfaction, when he offered ſacrifice to God? or the Publicane, when he ſmote vpon his breaſt; for theſe (you ſay) were their ſatisfactions?

Argum. 3. Durand (one of their owne writers) denieth contrition and ſatisfaction to be parts of penance: the firſt, becauſe contrition is not ſenſible, but euery part of a Sacrament ſhould bee ſenſible. The ſecond, becauſe ſatisfaction in act is not neceſſary, but it ſufficeth if it be in vow and deſire, Durand in 4. diſtinct. 16. qu. 1. Thus we ſee how well they agree together.

Bellarmine thus anſwereth: firſt, contrition is a part of penance, not as it is in the heart, but as it is manifeſted by ſignes. Secondly, penance may be without ſatisfaction: but then it is as it were maimed, and imperfect.

Iſay. 58.5. Contra. Firſt, contrition by ſignes may bee in hypocrites, and ſo diſſembled: ſuch as the Prophet ſpeaketh of, to bow themſelues like bulruſhes, Iſay 58. which the Lord denieth to be repentance: Is this a faſt that I haue choſen? &c. They ſhewed their contrition by faſting and humbling themſelues, yet the Lord refuſeth it: wherfore ſuch contrition is no part of true repentance, which is acceptable to God.

Secondly, if penance may bee without ſatisfaction, then is it no part of a Sacrament: for a Sacrament can want none of the materiall parts: take water from Baptiſme, or bread and wine from the Euchariſt, and they are no Sacraments at all. Againe, repentance may be perfect without actuall ſatisfaction, as was the repentance of the theefe vpon the croſſe. But I neede not labour to ſtrengthen or fortifie Durandi arguments, it is ſufficient that the truth hath euidence from the aduerſaries thereof.

Likewiſe for the parts of true repentance, their owne Canons doe witneſſe: Decret. p. 2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. de pœnitent. c. 39. Pœnitentia eſt mala præterita plangere, & plangenda iterum non committere: It is repentance to bewaile the ſins paſt, and not to commit the ſame againe.

Auguſtine ſaith, Fructus eſt dignus pœnitentiæ, tranſacta deflere peccata, & ea iterum non agere: This is true repentance, to lament for ſinnes paſt, and not to commit the ſame againe: Though this bee no perfect definition of repentance, yet wee ſee that both confeſſion and ſatisfaction are excluded.

De tempor. Serm. 66.

Colonienſ. part. 7. cap. 39. Sacerdos monebit confitentem, vt quod admiſſum eſt deteſtetur, & ſic deinceps vitam inſtituat, ne in vllum lethale crimen poſtea incidat: The Prieſt muſt moue him that confeſſeth, to deteſt that which is committed, and ſo afterward to frame his life, that hee fall into no deadly ſin. Heere alſo are theſe two things required to repentance, to hate ſinne, and embrace righteouſneſſe.

This truth alſo is ſealed: Iohn Lamberts Martyr, I know none other penance, except it bee renouation of liuing, by caſting away old vice, and taking them to new vertue: ad artic. 10. pag. 1106.

Further, 1. Of the Greeke Church heere ſhall ſpeake Euſebius Emiſſenus: declinet homo a malo et faciat bonum, inquirat pacem et ſequatur eam; hæc eſt enim vera pœnitentia: let a man decline from euill, and doe good, let him ſeeke peace and enſue it, this is true repentance, &c.

Feria. 6. poſt inuocauit.

2 Auguſtine ſaith, quid eſt pænitere, niſi dolere præterita, & de cætero ab his temperare, quæ admiſerat? what is it to repent, but to bee ſorrie for the ſinnes paſt, and afterward to abſtaine from thoſe things, which he committed, &c.

Quæſt. vet. & noui. Teſtam. 102.

3 Latter confeſſion of Heluetia, artic. 14. this is true repentance, namely an vnfained turning vnto God, and to all goodneſſe, and a ſerious returne from the Deuill and all euill: Saxonie artic. 16. In true conuerſion, there muſt be theſe things, a mortification and a quickning as it is ſaid Rom. 6. and in diuers other places: for Doctrines ſake, we doe diuide conuerſion and repentance into contrition, faith, and new obedience.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER REpentance goe before faith.

The Papiſts.

Their opinion is, that repentance goeth before iuſtification by faith, and that it is a way rather vnto faith and iuſtification in the remiſſion of ſinnes: Pœnitentia eſt via ad remiſſionem peccatorum: & prior iuſtificatione, Bellarm. cap. 19.

47. Error.

Argum. Act. 2. 38. Repent and be baptized in the name of Chriſt for the remiſſion of ſinnes: Remiſſion of ſinnes followeth repentance: Ergo, iuſtification alſo and faith follow repentance. Act. 8. 22. Repent of this thy wickedneſſe, and pray God, if it be poſſible, the thoughts of thy heart may be forgiuen thee. Heere forgiuenes followeth repentance.

Act. 2. 38.
Act. 8. 22.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. First this place proueth not, that remiſſion of ſinnes followeth repentance, becauſe Baptiſme was giuen after repentance: for Baptiſme doth not giue remiſſion of ſinnes, but it is a ſeale onely and confirmation of our faith, in the remiſſion of ſinnes. Secondly, neither is remiſſion of ſinnes obtained before God, by the act of our repentance: but wee are already being once called, iuſtified before God, by the remiſſion of our ſinnes, and imputation of the righteouſnes of Chriſt, Rom. 8. 30. Whom he called, he iuſtified: Iuſtification immediately followeth our calling: by repentance, and other works that follow, our calling is made ſure, 2. Pet. 1. 10. our ſaluation finiſhed, that is, aſſured to our ſelues: Philip. 2. 12. Make an end of your ſaluation by feare and trembling. So then feare and trembling which worketh repentance, beginneth not our ſaluation, but onely doth aſſure vs of the ſame. So we muſt diſtinguiſh, as the Apoſtle ſaith, betweene the beginning of faith and iuſtification before God: and the perfection and aſſurance thereof to our ſelues: faith is firſt whereby wee are iuſtified, and our ſinnes remitted before God, then followeth repentance whereby our hearts are aſſured to our ſelues of this remiſſion.

Rom. 8. 30.
2. Pet. 1. 10.
Philp. 2. 12.

Thirdly, 1. Saint Peter ſo ſaith to Simon that hypocrite, not that hee doubted of remiſſion of ſins vpon true repentance, but that he doubted of Simons true repentance, as it followeth verſ. 23. I ſee thou art in the gall of bitternes. 2. Or he ſo ſaith, to ſhew vnto Simon how difficult, or hard a thing remiſſion of ſins was. 3. And though remiſſion of ſinnes be already decreed before God, yet is it not felt in the heart, nor the conſcience aſſured thereof, til after effectuall repentance, as Nathan, preſently when Dauid had ſaid, I haue ſinned, ſaith, the Lord alſo hath put away thy ſins, 2. Sam. 12. 13. This notwithſtanding Dauid yet felt not the comfort thereof in his ſoule, for the which he praieth, Pſalm. 51. 12. therefore when remiſſion of ſinnes is placed after repentance, it ſheweth the aſſurance thereof made vnto our hearts after repentance, not the firſt decree or graunt thereof with God, which goeth before repentance.

2. Sam. 12. 13.
Pſalm. 51. 12.

Rom. 6.4.
Hebr. 11.6.

Argum. 1. Iuſtification goeth before ſanctification: for this is the fruit of the other: but repentance is part of our ſanctification, renouation, or regeneration, being called by S. Paul, A walking in newneſſe of life, Rom. 6.4. Ergo, it followeth and commeth after our iuſtification. And ſeeing without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb. 11.6. how ſhould our repentance be acceptable to God, vnleſſe it proceeded of faith? Faith then is initiate and begun in vs before repentance, which we deny not, by true repentance and other fruits of ſanctification, to bee daily ſtrengthened and encreaſed, as Tertullian ſaith of patience, ipſa eſt, quæ fidem ſubſequitur & antecedit, it both goeth before faith, and followeth.

Lib. de patientia.

Argum. 2. Bellarmine himſelfe, forgetting belike his owne poſitions, prooueth that Faith goeth before repentance, by the example of the Niniuites, Ioh. 3.5. They beleeued God and proclaimed a faſt: Whereupon he concludeth, that Faith is the cauſe of repentance. Bellarm. cap. 19. propoſ. 2. And hee vnderſtandeth iuſtifying faith, propoſ. 4. Mortification, fructus fidei iuſtificantis, is the fruit of iuſtifying faith, Ergo, iuſtifying faith goeth before repentance. The Maſter of the Sentences affirmeth the ſame out of S. Auguſtine, Non ſatis ſit, quod doleat, ſed ex fide doleat: Let it not ſuffice, that he is grieued, but let his griefe bee of faith, Lib. 4. diſtinct. 14. n. And Diſtinct. 15. cap. Immundi ſunt omnes, &c. They are all vncleane, whom faith cleanſeth not, by faith purifying their hearts, Acts. 15.9. And in the ſame Diſtinction, d. Sine charitate non poteſt eſſe vera pœnitentia: Without charitie there can bee no true repentance, and without faith there can be no charity: Galath. 5.6. Faith working by loue.

Epiſtol. 105.

Auguſtine ſaith, No man is iuſtified but by the grace of Ieſus Chriſt: Non ſolum remiſſione peccatorum, ſed prius ipſius inſpiratione fidei & timoris dei, donec ſanet omnes languores noſtros: Not only by remiſſion of ſins; but firſt, by inſpiring into vs faith and the feare of God, till he haue cured all our maladies, &c. He ſaith (as we heare) that faith is inſpired before we haue remiſſion of ſins and the feare of God, without the which there is no true repentance.

Iulius. 1. decret. 11. Fides omnes actus hominis præcedere debet, Faith muſt go before all the workes or doings of man: Ergo, before repentance.

Homil. domin. 3. poſt Epiphā.

So alſo Euſebius Emiſſenus: hic eſt certus pœnitentiæ ordo, vt quicunque ad Deum mundandus venit, prius ſeipſum totum offerat, fidem et charitatem — promittat: this is the right order of penitencie, that he which commeth to be cleanſed firſt ſhould offer vp himſelfe, his faith and charity, & perſeuerance in good works, &c. Faith then goeth before the clenſing of the ſoule, and remiſſion of ſins: Ieremie the Greeke patriarke ſaith, this is the catholike faith, that euery one then obtaineth remiſſion of his ſins, cum per veram pœnitentiam fidemq; viuam — ad Deum conuerſus fuerit, when he is conuerted to God by true repentance, and a liuely faith, ſhewing it ſelfe by good works, &c. faith ſtill goeth before remiſſion of ſins.

Cenſur. oriental. c. 5.

Lib. 4. contra Marcionem.

2 Tertullian ſaith directly: ſi pœnitentiæ ſtimulus ex fide acciderit, per pœnitentiam ex fide iuſtificatam, ab eo audijt, &c. if the pricke of repentance happened by faith, through repentance iuſtified by faith, then ſhee heard of Chriſt, thy faith hath ſaued thee, &c. repentance then proceedeth by faith, Auguſtine yet ſpeaketh more euidenly; A good tree cannot bring forth euill fruit: pœnitentia ergo, quæ non procedit ex fide, vtilis non eſt: repentance then which proceedeth not of faith, is not profitable.

De ver. et fal. pœniten c. 2.
Harmon. ſec. 8. p. 220.

3 So the reformed Churches do ioyne faith and repentance together: Confeſſ. of Bohemia. c. 20. the people muſt be admoniſhed, that they would truly repent — and ſtir vp their conſcience by faith in Chriſt, &c. Auſpurg. artic. 3. Though theſe ſorrows be requiſite, — yet we muſt ioyne faith with them, that is, a truſt and confidence of mercie promiſed for Chriſts ſake.

Ibid. p. 226.

4 See alſo their owne decrees before alleaged.

THE FIFTH QVESTION, OF CONTRITION: the firſt part of their Penance.

THere are certaine points which we doe agree vpon.

2. Cor. 7. 10.

1 We grant: that true contrition and ſorrow of the heart is neceſſary vnto repentance, and that it ſtandeth very well with the liberty of the Goſpell, and is profitable for Chriſtians. 2. Corin. 7. 10. Godly ſorrow cauſeth repentance to ſaluation.

1. Cor. 11. 31.
Act. 11. 23.

2 That true contrition is ioyned both with a full hatred and deteſtation of ſin committed: 1. Cor. 11. 31. We muſt iudge & condemne our ſelues, as alſo with a ful purpoſe to amend our liues, Act. 11. 23. This point is handled by Bellarmine againſt other Papiſts which denied a formall purpoſe of amendment of life to be requiſite in contrition lib. 2. cap. 6. 7.

3 That true contrition before God is ſufficient, before the abſolution of the miniſter, ſo that the party haue a purpoſe afterward to be reconciled to the congregation: which point Bellarm. handleth alſo againſt ſome other of his ſect.

Let vs then now ſee what difference of opinion there is betweene vs concerning contrition.

The Papiſts.

48. Error.

1. THey hold that contrition is neither wholy of mans free will, nor yet wholly of God: but that man by his free will, holpen of God, is able to repent: ſo that hee doth onely, Deo ad-

iuuante pœnitere, He is brought to repentance, God onely helping and aſſiſting him, Bellarm. de pœnitent. lib. 2. cap. 3.

Argum. Ioel. 2. Rent your hearts. Matth. 3. Agite pœnitentiam: Repent ye: To what end ſhould God command thoſe things that are not in our owne power? Ergo, contrition is in mans power and free will. Bellarm. cap. 2. propoſ. 2.

Ioel. 2. Matth. 3. 2.

Anſ. Firſt, it is no rare thing in Scripture to finde, that God commandeth vs impoſſible things: as S. Paul ſaith, Rom. 8. 3. that the precepts of the law are impoſſible: the reaſon thereof is rendred, Galath. 3. 24. The law was a ſchoolemaſter to bring vs to Chriſt: So God commandeth hard things, that we finding no ſtrength in our ſelues to doe them, we ſhould ſeeke for helpe at his hands: as Bernard ſaith well, Non latuit præceptorem præcepti pondus hominum vires excedere, ſed indicauit vtile ex hoc ipſo ſuæ illos inſufficientiæ admoneri, &c. Our maſter was not ignorant, that his commandements did exceed our ſtrength, but he thought it good heereby to admoniſh vs of our inſufficiencie. Secondly, another reaſon of theſe precepts, is this: to let vs know; that although the will of man hath of it ſelfe by nature no inclination to that which is good, yet it is otherwiſe then a peece of clay, and God ſpeaketh to men otherwiſe then vnto beaſts, Conſenſus voluntarius nos diſcernit a beſtijs, as Bernard ſaith, Our voluntary or free conſent doth diſcerne vs from beaſts. So it is in the power of man, velle, to will, that is ſomewhat; but velle bonum, to will that which is good, is of God. Thirdly, though God giue repentance, and all other good gifts, yet he worketh them by meanes, as by the preaching of his word, by precepts, exhortations, and ſuch like: whereby we are ſtirred vp to ſeeke that at Gods hand, which we finde not to bee in our ſelues. Fourthly thoſe places doe as well conclude, that it is wholly in mans power to repent, as in part: for to what end ſhould God command, that which is not whollie and fully in mans power to performe; as the Ieſuite obiecteth.

Rom. 8. 3. Galath. 3. 24. Super Cantic. Serm. 50.

Argum. 2. Contrition is an acceptable ſacrifice to God, Pſalm. 51. 17. but that which is coact, not voluntary, is not acceptable: Ergo, contrition is voluntary. Bellarm. ibid.

Pſalm. 51. 17.

Anſ. We deny not but that contrition is a voluntary and free offering vnto God, as the Prophet ſaith, Pſal. 119. 108. Accept the free offerings of my mouth. But as Auguſtine ſaith, Deus ex nolentibus volentes facit: God of nilling maketh vs willing: ſo then it is made a voluntary ſacrifice, not by the power of mans will, but by the worke of Gods grace.

Pſalm. 119. 108

The Proteſtants.

True contrition of heart, as all other good thoughts in vs, as they are good, come onely of God: our cogitations indeed are our owne, but all the goodneſſe of them is the meere gift of God, Iames 1. 17.

Iam. 1. 17.

Argum. 1. 2. Tim. 2. 25. If at any time God will giue them repentance: Repentance then is the gift of God. And Auguſtine writing vpon theſe very words, ſaith: Quantumlibet præbeat pœnitentiam, niſi ipſe dederit, quis agit pœnitentiam? Although he neuer ſo much giue occaſion of repentance, yet vnleſſe he beſtow vpon vs the full gift of repentance, no man is able to repent, &c. Thus hee plainely diſtinguiſheth betweene præbere pœnitentiam, to offer occaſion to repent: as hee proueth out of Saint Paul, Romanes 2. 4. the bountifulnes of God calleth thee to repentance; and dare pœnitentiam, to giue or grant repentance. But if God ſhould onely helpe our free will, and worke together with vs to repentance, and not doe all alone himſelfe, hee ſhould rather præbere, then dare pœnitentiam: offer occaſion by ſtirring of vs vp to repentance, then grant vs repentance it ſelfe, which were contrary to the Apoſtle.

2. Tim. 2. 25. Cont. Iulian. lib. 5. 3. Rom. 2. 4.

Argum. 2. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, Create in me a cleane heart, Pſal. 51. 10. Like as then God in the creation of the world, had no helper, or aſſiſtant, but all was his worke: ſo in the renewing of the heart, to create is onely Gods worke, to inſpire good thoughts, and to make a new heart, is to create, or make a new creature, as S. Paul calleth it, 2. Cor. 5. 17. Ergo, it is onely and wholly the worke of God: as S. Ambroſe ſaith, Gratia tota repellitur, ſi non tota ſuſcipitur: Grace is wholly refuſed, if it bee not wholly receiued: Epiſtol. 84. Hierome Quodcunque in ſuo riuulo fluit ad fontem refert: Whatſoeuer floweth in the riuer muſt be referred to the fountaine, ad Cteſiphont.

Pſal. 51. 10. 2. Cor. 5. 17.

Bernard ſaith: Non partim gratia, partim liberum arbitrium, ſed totum ſingula peragunt, totum hoc, totum illa, ſed vt totum in illo, ſic totum ex illa: Not partly grace, partly free wil, but each of them wholly worketh, this wholy, and that wholy; wholy indeed in free will, but wholy of grace, &c. ſo he maketh the will onely to be as the paſſiue matter, wherein grace worketh: they worke not both together actiuely.

Lib. de libero arbitrio.

The Maſter of the ſentences agreeth, Lib. 4. diſtinct. 20. a. Opus eſt non hominis, ſed Dei fructifera pœnitentia, inſpirare eam poteſt, quandocunque vult ſua miſericordia: Fruitfull repentance is not the worke of man, but of God, which he can inſpire, when he will, of his mercy, &c. Repentance then proceedeth altogether from the mercy of God.

Concil. Arauſican. 2. can. 7. Si quis per naturæ vigorem, bonum aliquod, quod ad ſalutem pertinet vitæ æternæ, cogitare, eligere, &c. If any man ſay that by the ſtrength of nature man can thinke or chuſe any good thing belonging to eternall life, or giue conſent to holeſome preaching, hee is deceiued by the ſpirit of hereſie, ſeeing the Lord ſaith, you can doe nothing without mee. This Councell leaueth not any ſtrength at all in mans free will.

In defence of this truth died Thomas Spicer, Iohn Denie, Edmund Poole, that man hath no free wil of himſelfe to doe any good thing, pag. 1912. articul. 7.

In Sermon. prim. dominic. aduent.

1 Chryſoſtome, though in other places, he ſeemeth to be a patrone of free will, yet hee thus writeth: before ſinne, we had free will to doe well, not after: quia non noſtra virtute poſt peccatum euadere poſſumus de manu diaboli, ſed ſicut nauis fracto gubernaculo illuc ducimur, vbi tempeſtas voluerit, ſic a diabolo a peccato in peccatum ducimur. Becauſe we cannot by our owne power after ſinne eſcape out of the hand of the Deuil, but as a ſhip, the routher being broken, we are carried, whether the tempeſt will, ſo we are carried of the Deuill from ſinne to ſinne, &c.

Epiſt. 46. De fide ad Petrum. c. 31.

2 Auguſtine ſaith: Gratia & miſericordia Dei conuertit hominem, the grace and mercy of God conuerteth a man, &c. Againe hold this firmely, neminem hic poſſe pœnitentiam agere, niſi quem Deus illuminauerit, & gratuita ſua miſericordia conuerterit: that no man can here repent, but whom God illuminateth and conuerteth by his meere mercie, &c.

Harmon. ſec. 8. p. 212. Ibid. p. 217.

3 Latter confeſſion of Heluetia. c. 14. Now doe we expreſſly ſay that this repentance is the meere gift of God, and not the worke of our ſtrength. Bohemia. c. 5. This repentance and ſauing conuerſion doth our mercifull God by his peculiar gift offer and beſtow.

Lib. 4. de liber. arbit. c. 14. Opuſcul. de concurſu lib. 1. c. 5.

4 Bellarmine alledgeth one Almainus a Schooleman, who affirmeth, Deum ſuo concurſu determinare voluntatem: that God by his concurring doth determine the will of man vnto good. Suarez the Ieſuite alledgeth diuers of that ſide, who affirme the ſame: In their opinion then, the wil of man is determined and directed by God vnto contrition and true repentance.

The Papiſts.

49 Error.

2. THey affirme, that contrition, which is ioyned with an inward terror of the minde, and proceedeth from the ſight and conſideration of our ſins, doth not appertaine to the law, but to the Goſpell, Bellarm. lib. 2. c. 2. propoſ. 3.

Math. 4. 17.

Argum. 1. Chriſt preached repentance, to the which contrition belongeth, Math. 4. 17. Repent, for the kingdome of God is at hand: but Chriſt was a miniſter of the Goſpell, not of the law. Bellarm. ibidem.

Anſw. Firſt, repentance hath part from the law, part from the Goſpell: from the Law it hath the ſight of ſinne and terror of minde for the ſame; from the Goſpell it hath hope and comfort, ſpringing of faith in Chriſt: wherefore this reaſon ſheweth not, that repentance in euery part thereof is of the Goſpell. Secondly, though the law and Goſpell are in nature and property diſtinguiſhed, yet they may bee ioyned in vſe: ſo; Moſes the Miniſter of the law may preach Chriſt, and Chriſt the Miniſter of the Goſpel doth alſo eſtabliſh the law, and by the terrors of the law cal men to the knowledge of their ſinne, where repentance beginneth.

Argum. 2. The law hath no promiſe of grace, contrition hath a promiſe of grace, as Iſay 66. 2. To whom will I looke, but to him that is poore and of a contrite ſpirit: Ergo, contrition is not of the law. Bellarm. ibid.

Iohn. 1. 17.

Anſ. Firſt, it is true, that the law hath not in it ſelfe, the promiſe of grace annexed, For grace and truth commeth by Ieſus Chriſt, Iohn, 1. 17. Yet by grace the law is made as a ready way and inſtrument to bring vs to Chriſt, in whom we finde grace, and ſo contrition wrought by the terrors of the law, doth prepare a way vnto grace. Secondly, contrition, as it is a worke of the law, beeing but yet begun in terror and feare, obtaineth not the promiſe, but beeing perfited by faith in Chriſt, and in the comforts of the Goſpell, it findeth grace and mercie: as heere in the Prophet, to contrition of heart is ioyned poorenesse of ſpirit, which is a deniall of our ſelues, and an apprehenſion of Chriſt by faith.

The Proteſtants.

THat the terrors of a contrite heart, and the ſight of ſinne, where contrition beginneth, commeth by the knowledge of the law, the Scripture is plaine.

Rom. 7. 7.

Argum. 1. Rom. 7. 7. I knew not ſinne, but by the Law, I had not knowne luſt, Vnleſſe the law had ſaid thou ſhalt not luſt: therefore by the law commeth reuelation of ſinne, which is the beginning of true contrition.

2. Cor. 3. 6. 9. Galath. 4. 3.

Argum. 2. S. Paul calleth the law, the killing letter, and the miniſtery of condemnation, 2. Cor. 3. 6. 9. But the Goſpell is the miniſtery of righteouſneſſe and life: Wherefore contrition, as therein is ſet before vs our damnable ſtate by ſinne, and miniſtreth to vs a ſight of condemnation, is of the law. So likewiſe, Galath. 4. 3. We are in bondage and feare vnder the law, but by the Goſpell wee are made ſons, and ſo receiue the ſpirit of the Sonne: Ibid. ver. 6. Ergo, the feare, terrors, and as it were bondage of the ſoule, is of the law. Ambroſe ſaith, Lex iram operatur, fides gaudium: The law worketh wrath, faith bringeth ioy: In 3. ad Roman. Ad hoc data lex vt terrori eſſet, &c. Therefore was the law giuen to be a terror to men, to prouoke them to good life.

Theodoret ſaith, lex eos, qui peccabant, condemnabat, gratia autem eos ſuſcipiens per fidem iuſtificat, &c. The law condemneth thoſe that ſinne, but grace receiuing them doth iuſtifie them by faith.

Lib. 1. in Ioan. c. 24.

Cyrillus of Alexandria ſaith, lex ſeruitutis ſpiritum ad formidinem dabat, Chriſtus ſpiritum adoptionis mis ad libertatem. The law of ſeruitude did giue a ſpirit of feare, but Chriſt the ſpirit of adoption vnto liberty.

Latter confeſſion of Heluetia.c.13. the Goſpell is indeed oppoſed to the law, for the law worketh wrath, and doth denounce a curſe, but the Goſpell doth preach grace and a bleſſing. Harm.ſec. 7.p. 202.

Ferus a Popiſh writer ſaith, lex conuincit nos peccatores eſſe, ſemper enim plus contra legem, quam pro lege facimus: the law conuinceth, that we are ſinners, for we doe alwaies more againſt the law, then for it, &c. The ſight of ſinne then commeth by the law. Commentar. in Act.15.

The Papiſts.

3. SOme of the Papiſts affirme, that in Contrition it is not neceſſary to haue a formall, that is, a reſolute and expreſſe purpoſe of newnes of life, but that this is alwaies included in the deteſting of ſinne; which implicite or incluſiue purpoſe is ſufficient: So Iohan. Maior. in 4. ſententiar. diſtinct. 14.*qu.*1. Veg. lib. 13. in concil. Trident. c. 13. 50.Error.

Argum. David only confeſſed his ſinne, ſaying, Lord I haue ſinned: ſo the Publican: Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner: there is no expreſſe purpoſe of amendment of life mentioned. Likewiſe, the thiefe vpon the Croſſe had no ſuch expreſſe purpoſe: Ergo, it is not neceſſary.

Anſw. First, that David had a full purpoſe of the heart, euen in that inſtant to turne vnto God, it is euident, Pſal. 51.13. Then ſhall I teach thy waies to the wicked: this Pſalme was made by the Prophet, as a teſtimonie of his repentance, for that ſinne, for the which Nathan reproued him: and here he profeſſeth, that he will become a new man. Pſalme 51. 13.

Secondly, the Publicane finding mercy and departing iuſtified, no doubt had alſo an expreſſe purpoſe in himſelſe for euer to forſake his ſinne; for otherwiſe hee could not haue beene iuſtified, nor found remiſſion of ſinnes: for this is the law and perpetuall rule of forgiueneſſe, Ezech. 18.21. If the wicked turne from his ſinnes, &c. and keepe all my ſtatutes: his tranſgreſſion ſhall not bee mentioned: to find remiſſion then, theſe two things are required, forſaking of ſinne, and doing that which is right: and this is ſignified in the Publicanes ſmiting vpon his breaſt: as Auguſtine ſaith, Pectora tundamus, non vt ſuper peccata noſtra pauimentum ſolidemus, &c. Let vs knocke vpon our breaſts, not to make a pauement, as it were, and beaten floore vpon our ſinnes, &c. For hee that beateth vpon his breaſt and is not corrected, doth harden his ſinnes, hee taketh them not away: ſo then the Publicane in this ſmiting vpon his breaſt, was amended and corrected, and thought with himſelfe, neuer to doe the like againe. Ezece. 18.21. De Diſciplin. Chriſtian. cap.1. Tom.9.

Thirdly, 1. The theefe vpon the croſſe, being in the very agonie of death, and not expecting life, could not in that ſhort time expreſſe euery part of his vnfained repentance. 2. Yet there appeareth in him, as that ſhort moment could affoord, both a deteſtation of ſinne in condemning himſelfe and his fellow, and a loue of righteouſneſſe, and deſire thereunto, if hee had liued, in commending the innocencie of our Sauiour.

The Proteſtants.

WE hold, that as in true Contrition, there muſt be perfect hatred of ſinne; ſo alſo there is ioyned with it a determinate purpoſe of amendment of life.

*Argum.*1. The place before cited out of Ezechiel,proueth it: Ezech. 18. 21. Likewiſe Iſay. 1.16. Waſh you, make you cleane, ceaſe to do euill, learne to doe well: Act.11.23. They exhorted all, that with purpoſe of heart, they would turne to the Lord, Eph. 4.22. Caſt off the old man, put on the new, &c. All theſe places doe euidently proue, that in true contrition and repentance, there is required a forſaking or dying vnto ſinne and liuing vnto righteouſneſſe. Iſay. 1.16. Act.11.23. Epheſ.4.22.

*Argum.*2. Bellarmine is a notable witneſſe for vs againſt this error, which hee laboureth to confute, lib. 2. *de pœnit, ca.*6.7. in two whole Chapters: and heerein he is alſo a witneſſe againſt himſelfe, for *lib.*1.*c.*20. he confuteth the contrary opinion, that to ceaſe to doe euill, and learne to doe well, are not two parts requiſite to repentance, and anſwereth that place by vs alleaged, Iſay 1.16. Ceaſe to doe euill, &c. But now much forgetting himſelfe, but the truth preuailing more with him, hee produceth this very place, to prooue, that in true contrition or repentance, there muſt bee a purpoſe of amendment, which is the ſame thing, that we defend, both before *qu.*4. part 2. and in this place. Auguſtine vpon theſe words of the Prophet Iſay, Lauamini, be ye waſhed, &c. Lauatur itaque & mundus eſt, qui & præterita plangit, & iterum non admittit: He is waſhed, and is cleane, which doth bewaile his ſinnes paſt, and doth not commit them againe: de tempor. ſerm. 66.

See the further probation and ratifying of this point by the teſtimonie of other Churches before, Error. 46.

The Papiſts.

4. THey teach, that Contrition ought to be perfect, becauſe it muſt proceed from the loue of God, which is the moſt perfect kinde of loue, Catechiſ. Roman. pag. 439. and that the greatneſſe of the griefe ought to be anſwerable to the quantity of the ſinne: ſo they conclude, that a man ſhal neuer know when he is ſufficiently contrite, Thomas Aquinas: for hee muſt be contrite for euery great ſin he hath committed, Tileman. Heſhuſ. loc. 9. de pœnitent. error. 25.27.28.32. 51.Error.

*Argum.*1. That perfect Contrition is required, Bellarmine pretendeth to prooue by theſe Scriptures, 1.King. 8.48. If they turne againe vnto thee with all their heart, &c. Ioel. 2. Turne vnto mee with all your heart, &c. *Bellarm. c.*10. 1.King.8.48.

Anſ. 1. Thoſe places do well proue, that our ſorrow ought to be vnfeigned, and that we ſhould neither diſſemble, nor be indifferent in our ſorrow: but we muſt giue our whole heart vnto God, that Pſal.12.2. is, not to haue a double heart, and as the words are; a heart and a heart, Pſalm. 12. 2. 2. So then in our Contrition a godly endeuour, and a diligent care is required, a ſufficiency in our ſorrow Ierem.9.1. cannot bee performed: No, though our eies were as fountaines of teares; as the Prophet wiſheth, Ierem. 9.1.

The Proteſtants.

WHat is this elſe but a plaine doctrine of deſperation? for when is a man able ſo perfectlie to bee contrite, as his loue toward God ought to bee perfect? or how can his ſorrow bee equiualent to the waight of his ſinnes? or can a man remember all his ſinnes, that he ſhould bee ſory for?

Argum. 1. The ſorrow of Chriſtians is not infinite or vncertaine, but it is determined and limited. 2.Cor.2.7. Saint Paul ſaith, That he ſhould not be ſwallowed vp of too much heauineſſe, 2. Corinthians 2. 7. 2.Cor.7.8. And againe, My Epiſtle made you ſorie though for a ſeaſon, 2. Corinth. 7.8.

Iob.9.2. Argum. 2. Iob 9. 2. We cannot Anſwer God one thing of a thouſand: our greateſt ſorrow is not ſufficient for our leaſt ſinne: therefore there can be no proportion betweene the greatneſſe of our ſinne and the quantity of our ſorrow: Peter committed a great ſinne in denying of his Maſter, and yet vpon his bitter weeping he was receiued to mercie, as Hierome ſaith, Petrum ter negantem amaræ in ſuum locum reſtituère lachryma: Peters bitter teares after thrice denial reſtored him to his place: was Peters ſorrow any way anſwerable in meaſure or quantity to his ſinne? We muſt indeed weepe bitterly as Peter did, and after we are thoroughly humbled, we are certaine, that God will looke vpon vs, as he did vpon Peter: and the inward feeling of Gods fauour will ſet the bounds and limits of our ſorrow.

Their owne Canons are more equall, which doe not enioyne ſo ſtrict penance, and ſuch immeaſurable contrition, as theſe new maſters require: as decret. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 38. c. 5. Alexander 3. concerning certaine that in their confeſſion ſay, that they cannot abſtaine from thoſe ſinnes: hee decreeth, Eorum confeſſionem recipere debes, &c. You muſt receiue their confeſſion, for though it bee no true repentance, yet it is a true confeſſion.

De tempor. ſerm. 7. in natal. ſerm. 3. Auguſtine ſaith, Iſta eſt vera pœnitentia, quando quis ſic conuertitur, vt non reuertatur: This is true repentance, when a man doth ſo turne vnto God, that he returne not vnto ſinne. When a man therfore hath in this manner repented, he may be ſure that he hath mourned ſufficiently. It is therfore vntrue, that a man is vncertaine when he hath ſorrowed enough.

Synod. Colonienſ. part. 7. cap. 19. Quamuis quis peccato mordeatur, ſi tamen pœniteat, vt de cætero, peccandi voluntatem nullam habeat, confidens de Domini mericordia accedat ad Euchariſtiam intrepidus, &c. Although a man bee greeued in conſcience for his ſinne, yet if hee repent him, ſo that hee haue a purpoſe not to ſinne againe, truſting to Gods mercy, let him come without feare to the Communion: &c. If he thus ſorrowing be without feare, it followeth, that God in Chriſt accepteth his ſorrow as ſufficient.

So alſo Chryſoſtome ſaith, ab ipſa Domini erga nos benignitate, non ex tua pœnitentia mihi ſumo In Iſaiam. fiduciam: pœnitentia enim tua non præualet tantam abſtergere malorum eluuiem: I haue good truſt (of forgiuenes) from Gods mercie, not thy repentance, for thy repentance is not able to waſh away ſuch an heape of ſins; &c. the efficacy then of our repentance dependeth not vpon the greatnes thereof, but of Gods mercie.

De interpret. Pſalm. Athanaſius ſaith, Pœnitentia eſt a peccatis deſinere, &c. It is repentance to leaue off to ſinne: &c. by this then ſhall one know, whether his repentance be ſufficient by the forſaking of his ſinne.

Harm. ſec. 8. p. 227. Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. artic. 3. they taught that abſolution was nought worth without ſufficient contrition, what elſe was this but quite to take away from all conſciences the comfort of the Goſpell, &c. ibid. p. 231 Saxonie artic. 16. Here we reproue our aduerſaries, who feigne, that contrition muſt be ſufficient.

The Papiſts.

52. Error. B*Ellarmine* hath heere a certaine fond conceite of his owne, bringing in this diſtinction of ſorrow in contrition: that there is Dolor ſummus intenſiuè, appreciatiuè: The greateſt and higheſt ſorrow, intenſiuely, and by way of eſtimation: of this ſort he giueth an example, as a good man may weepe more for the loſſe of his children, then for his ſinnes, yet in his choyce hee had rather loſe his children then offend God: this is that kinde of griefe by way of eſtimation, though intenſiuely hee grieue more for his children, yet, when hee maketh an eſtimate of the one and the other, hee preſerreth that in his iudgement, which is the leaſt in his affection: this kinde of griefe when as the affection goeth before the iudgement, hee thinketh is ſufficient for contrition. Bellarm. cap. 11.

Argum. Ioel 2. Turne vnto God with all your heart: this muſt be vnderſtood of this greateſt kinde of griefe, by way of eſtimation, &c.

1.King.8.49. Anſ. Whereas it is ſaid, 1.Kin. 8 49. If they turne vnto thee with all their heart and ſoule, &c. how can they turne with the whole heart and affection, when as they in their affection can ſorrow more for other things? wherefore as God will haue the whole and entire ſoule, that is the iudgement, ſo the whole heart alſo and affection. As Auguſtine ſaith, Inueni triſtem, &c. I finde one very heauy, I aske him, Friend, why art thou heauy? ſaith he, I haue loſt my money: Locus immundus fructus nullus: This is an vncleane place, there can be no fruit: De tempor. ſerm. 151.

The Proteſtants.

Though I deny not but a right good man, may ſometime breake out more into affection for ſome temporall loſſe, than for the committing of ſin, as Matth.2.18. The women mourne for their children, and would not be comforted: yet this is not a vertue to be commended, but an infirmity to bee amended, as it was commendable in Eli, who hearing patiently the heauy newes of the death of his ſons, when mention was made of the taking of the Arke, could hold no longer, but through feeblenes caused by ſudden greefe, fell backwards and brake his necke, 1.Sam.4.17.

1.Sam.4.17.

Argum. This hath beene the continuall practiſe of the Saints to lament more for ſin, then for any other temporall loſſe whatſoeuer: as Dauid ſaith, Pſalm.6.6. I cauſe my bed euery night to ſwimme, and water my couch with teares: Pſalm.119.136. Mine eies guſht out with riuers of water, becauſe they kept not thy law, Matth.26.75. Peter went out, and wept bitterly. No earthly matter could haue drawne from them ſuch plentifull ſtore of teares: wherefore the Saints did euen weepe moſt intenſiuely, that is, earneſtly and effectually for ſinne.

Your owne canons are cleere in this point: Decr.par.2.cauſ.33.diſtinct.3.c.42. Satis durus eſt cuius mentis dolorem,&c. Hee is very hard whoſe griefe of mind the teares of his body cannot declare: but let him know, ſe culpabiliter durum, that he is very culpable in his hardnes, which doth lament the loſſes of time, the death of his friend, &c, and doth not ſhew the griefe for ſin with teares: Let none therefore excuſe themſelues, that they haue not a fountaine of teares, who with teares doe ſhew the griefe of temporall things, &c. This ſentence is rehearſed out of Auguſtine, and approued by the Maſter of ſentences, lib.4.diſt.15.f. whereby they are defined to bee culpable, which doe more expreſſe the loſſe of things temporall by their teares, then of ſpirituall: which is that which Bellarmine alloweth as good and commendable.

Chryſoſtom ſaith: quod eſt illius maculæ balneũ? calidi lachrymarum fontes, gemitus e profundo cordis aſcendentes, compunctio perpetua, preces continuæ: what bath is there for that blot? fountains of warme teares, deepe ſighes from the heart, a perpetuall compunction, continuall prayers, &c. he that thus writeth, requireth a greater griefe for ſinne, then for any worldly thing.

Godly ſorrow and contrition bringeth ioy and comfort to the ſoule in the end, with vndoubted aſſurance of the forgiuenes and remiſſion of ſinnes.

Argum. 1. Godly ſorrow worketh in the true penitent perſon, a cleering of the mind, 2.Corinth.7.verſ.11. but the ſoule and conſcience cannot be cleered and ſet at reſt, vnleſſe wee bee perſwaded that our ſinnes are forgiuen vs: Ergo.

Argum. 2. All hope is certaine, and bringeth vndoubted aſſurance, and therfore it is called the anchor of the ſoule, Hebr.6.19. Wherefore either contrition is voide of hope altogether, (which they will not grant) or if it haue any hope, it is ſure and ſtable, and worketh a ful perſwaſion and aſſurance of the mercy of God.

Hebr.6.19.

Auguſtine ſaith, Petrus mox à Domino indulgentiam accepit, qui amariſſimè fleuit trinæ negationis culpam: Peter ſtraightway receiued pardon and indulgence, when he had moſt bitterly bewayled the ſinne of his three-fold deniall of Chriſt, &c. How could Peter immediately haue felt and receiued the remiſſion of that great ſinne, if the Lord had not aſſured his conſcience thereof?

De tempor. ſerm.66.

The former Canon of the Collin Councell ſaith, that when a man hath ſorrowed for his ſinne, purpoſing not to doe the like, Securus & intrepidus accedat: Let him draw neere without feare, and be ſecure. He that is ſecure and without feare, doubteth not: Ergo, he is aſſured of the forgiueneſſe of his ſinne.

Bernard alſo ſaith: Animam pœnitentiæ lachrymis afflictam ſpiritus paracletus libenter conſolatur, frequenter viſitat, & ad veniæ fiduciam plene reformat: A ſoule afflicted with penitent ſorrow, the ſpirit of comfort doth comfort, often viſite, and fully bring it to the truſt of pardon: *de interior. domo.cap.*37. Their owne Canons are cleere for vs: Decr.par.2.cauſ.33.diſtinct.1.cap.50. Nemo poteſt bene agere pœnitentiam, niſi qui ſperauerit indulgentiam: No man can truly do repentance, if hee doe not hope for indulgence.

That repentance then is not good nor acceptable, which is not full of aſſurance, and in hope comfortable.

Iohn Huſſe holy Martyr: Vnto a true abſolution, firſt there is required contrition. Secondly, a purpoſe and intent to ſin no more. Thirdly, true confeſſion. Fourthly, ſtedfaſt hope of forgiueneſſe: as Chriſt ſaith, My ſonne, beleeue, and thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee. pag.616. artic.5.

Anſw. Firſt, it followeth not, without repentance and true contrition there is no iuſtification: Ergo, repentance is a meane vnto iuſtification: for faith cannot bee without works, yet works are no meane vnto faith: ſo repentance and contrition are the fruits of iuſtification, not a meane thereunto. Secondly, there is difference betweene iuſtification, and ſaluation, or glorification; contrition is a meane and way to ſaluation: by repentance through the mercie of God in Chriſt wee are preſerued from periſhing and euerlaſting deſtruction: and repentance goeth before our conſummation, and perfect abolition of our ſins in the day of refreſhing at the comming of Chriſt: But it followeth not, that contrition therefore is a meane vnto iuſtification; for firſt wee are iuſtified, then afterward

Rom 8 30. Phil.2.12. glorified: our ſaluation is accompliſhed, *Rom.*8.30. Thirdly, contrition is a meane to aſſure vs of our iuſtification, but not to iuſtifie vs: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Philip.2. 12 With feare and trembling finiſh your ſaluation.

The Proteſtants.

THat true contrition is neceſſary, we willingly grant: and that without it remiſſion of ſins cannot

Rom.4.5. be had: but we deny that it is a neceſſary meane vnto iuſtification: a neceſſary ſigne, fruit, or work of iuſtification it is, but not a meane or cauſe.

Argum. 1. We are iuſtified by faith, Rom.4.5. To him that beleeueth in him, that iuſtifieth the vngodly, faith is counted for righteouſneſſe: But faith goeth before repentance, as Bellarmine himſelfe before confeſſed by the example of the Niniuites, who firſt beleeued, and afterward repented, Bellarm. lib.1 cap.19. propoſ.2. Ergo, iuſtification is before repentance, and ſo conſequently repentance is no meane vnto it.

Argum. 2. Good workes are no meane to iuſtification, for then they ſhould goe before iuſtification: but as Auguſtine ſaith, Bona opera non præcedunt iuſtificandum, ſed ſequuntur iuſtificatum: Good workes doe not goe before him that is to bee iuſtified, but they follow him that is already iuſtified.

But contrition is a good worke: confeſſed and proued by Bellar. lib.2. cap. 2. Ergo, it is no meane vnto iuſtification.

Auguſtine ſaith, Noli præſumere de operibus ante fidem, noueris quia peccatorem te fides inuenit: Preſume not of works before faith, (as if by the merit of works thou hadſt receiued faith) know that faith hath found thee a ſinner: in Pſalm. 21. If then good works goe not before faith, and faith and iuſtification come together, as I haue ſhewed, then contrition beeing a good action precedeth not iuſtification. See before error 47. where it is ſhewed that faith goeth before repentance, by the which faith we are iuſtified, then repentance cannot be the cauſe of iuſtification comming after it.

55. Error. 7. THey make contrition a part of ſatiſfaction for our ſins, and to be a cauſe of iuſtification and remiſſion of ſins, not onely in diſpoſing and preparing of vs thereunto, but in that thereby wee verily obtaine and deſerue remiſſion of our ſins, Bellarm. lib.2. de pœnitent. cap.12.

Luke.7.47. Argum. 1. Luk.7.47 Many ſins are forgiuen her becauſe ſhe loued: Not onely faith, but loue or charity obtaineth remiſſion of ſins, Bellarm. ibid. Rhemiſt. in hunc locum.

Anſ. The argument is 1. not from the cauſe to the effect, but from the effect to the cauſe: for Chriſt doth not reaſon thus, ſhe loued much, therfore many ſinnes are forgiuen her, but contrariwiſe, Many ſins are forgiuen her, therefore ſhe loueth much: As the next words declare: to whom little is remitted, he loueth little. 2. And our Sauior ſaith in plain words in the laſt verſe, that her faith had ſaued her; whereof her loue was an effect. 3.And further as the Apoſtle ſaith, Wee know that wee are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe we loue the brethren, 1.Iohn.3.14. he ſaith not,we are tranſlated, but wee know we are: ſo this woman by her loue might know or be aſſured that her ſins were remitted her. And Bellarmine hath a ſaying not much vnlike, that theſe words of Chriſt,many ſins are forgiuen her confirmant abſolutionem inuiſibiliter datam, doe confirme the abſolution inuiſibly giuen before, lib. 2.c.14.reſp.ad obiect. 1.Her loue was a meanes then to confirme her abſolution, which was inuiſibly giuen before.

Anſ. Firſt,the places 1. in *Ezechiel,*if they be taken in his ſenſe, would prooue, that it is in a mans power to conuert his ſoule, or to renew his owne heart, whereas the Prophet acknowledgeth it wholly to be the Lords worke,Pſalm.51.12 Create in me a new heart: and Iere.31. Conuert thou mee O Lord,and I ſhall be conuerted. 2.But why the Lord thus ſpeaketh to man, in bidding him conuert, S.Auguſtine rendreth the reaſon:Quia non ſicut in lapidibus inſenſatis Deus ſalutem noſtram operatur: Becauſe God worketh our ſaluation in vs, not as in ſenſeleſſe ſtones: *cont.Pelag.lib.*1.c 5.Man therfore ſaueth his ſoule,or maketh his heart new,but as Gods inſtrument; as the axe in the workemans hand: it is Gods ſpirit that maketh man to make his heart new. 3. Bellarmine himſelfe helpeth vs with a ſufficient anſwere,that remiſſion of ſinnes is firſt inuiſiblie giuen; and then by our earneſt repentance,it is confirmed and aſſured vnto vs: ſo then repentance is a meane to the aſſurance of forgiueneſſe, as theſe places prooue; but not to the inuiſible grace or gift of remiſſion.

Ierem.31.18.

Secondly, 1. The word in Daniel ſignifieth not to redeeme,but to breake off: for ſo is this word vo pharak vſed,Gen.27.40. Thou ſhalt breake his yoake from thy necke. 2.By (redeeming) admitting that reading, may bee vnderſtood not redemption to bee made before God, but recompence to bee made vnto men, whom he had iniuried. 3.Neither doth the Prophet ſpeake of the forgiueneſſe of his ſins,but of the prolonging of his peace and proſperity: for theſe words, Forſitan ignoſcet Deus: God perhaps may forgiue your ſins, are not read in the Hebrue. 4. And how could the almes of an vnbeleeuer, ſuch an one as Nabuchadnezzar was,be a cauſe of forgiueneſſe,ſeeing without faith nothing is acceptable to God? 5. Laſtly,the Kings righteous and mercifull dealing ſhould be onely a teſtimonie to his conſcience,that his ſinnes were forgiuen. 6. Concil.Cabilonenſ.c.36. It is denied that ſins, de induſtria, committed willingly,or wittingly, are redeemed by almes: Sic enim viderentur Deum mercede conducere: So they ſhould ſeeme to hire God with a reward.

The Proteſtants.

THat contrition of the heart meriteth not, neither is any cauſe of the forgiueneſſe of ſins, which doth iſſue only out of the fountaine of Gods mercy by faith in Chriſt, the Scriptures doe teſtifie.

*Argum.*1.Rom.3.24.*We are iuſtified freely by grace.*If freely,then is not our iuſtification merited, or cauſed by any worke of ours.

Rom.3.24.

*Bellarm.*anſwereth:firſt, that we are iuſtified freely,though it be by the merit of contrition,becauſe contrition is the gift of God.Secondly,contrition meriteth not,ex condigno, of condignitie or worthines, but *ex congruo,*of congruity: which kinde of merit is founded not in Gods iuſtice, but in his benignitie and bountie,*Bellarm.cap.*12.

Contra. Firſt, this is the very anſwere 1. of the olde Pelagians, who did in like manner affirme, that the good will of man was of God,becauſe it could not be in a man,vnleſſe man were,*vt homo autem ſit,à Deo habet,*but for a man to be,is of God: for if therefore remiſsion of ſins bee of grace, and the gift of God,becauſe contrition,wherby it is merited,is the gift of God;then ſay alſo,that we may be ſaued by nature,and yet by the gift of God,becauſe the nature of man is the gift & work of God. 2.But the Apoſtle confuteth this gloſſe, in ſaying further, We are iuſtified freely,&c.thorough redemption in Chriſt Ieſus: if through redemption, then not through contrition. 3. And againe, men firſt muſt be reconciled vnto God,and of enemies be made friends,before he giue them gifts:as the Apoſtle ſaith,*Chriſt firſt led captiuity captiue,*that is,ſubdueth and remoueth ſin that led vs captiue, and then gaue gifts vnto men, Epheſ.4.8.Then muſt we firſt be reconciled vnto God, which conſiſteth in the forgiueneſſe of our ſins,Rom.3.25. before we can haue the gift of contrition. Wherfore if reconciliation and forgiuenes of ſins go before contrition,it can be no meritorious cauſe of the remiſſion of ſinnes.

Rom.3.25.

Secondly, 1. No merite or worke is of mercy,but of iuſtice,as the Apoſtle ſaith,Rom.4.4. To him that worketh,the wages is not counted by fauour, but by debt: wherefore the merite of congruity is no merite,being founded in Gods mercie. 2. Neither is there any congruity or conſequence at all, that God ſhould reſpect vs being his enemies: but enemies wee are before wee are reconciled by the remiſſion of our ſinnes: wherfore contrition,going before remiſsion of ſins, and ſo reconciliation, cannot deſerue ſo much as of congruity, if there were any ſuch merite.

Rom.4.4.

Argum. 2. That the contrition of the heart is no cauſe of our iuſtification, neither doth merite, or deſerue remiſsion of ſins:S. Paul ſheweth,Rom.4.5.6. To him that beleeueth faith is counted for righteouſneſſe: And Dauid declareth the bleſſednes of that man, to whom God imputeth righteouſnes without works. It is faith then only that obtaineth remiſſion of ſins: and a man is iuſtified without any reſpect had to his works. Therefore neither contrition, nor any other worke inward or outward, procureth remiſſion of ſins, but faith only is the meane.

Rom 4.5.6.

So Auguſtine ſaith, Opera ſequuntur iuſtificatum, non precedunt iuſtificandum: Workes follow a man already iuſtified, they go not before to iuſtification, De fide & operibus, cap. 14. Therefore the worke of contrition is not auaileable to iuſtification.

And againe: nec quiſquam dicat meritis orationum ſuarum — traditam Dei gratiam — ſed gratia et miſericordia Dei conuertit hominem, &c. Neither let any man ſay that grace is giuen by the merite of his prayers, but the grace and mercy of God conuerteth a man.

Laſtly, Iulius 1. Decret. 11. thus teſtifieth, Fides omnes actus hominis præcedere debet: Faith muſt goe before all the acts of men. Cyrill. Alexand. expoſit. Nycen. ſymbol. Sicut fides abſque operibus mortua, &c. As faith is dead without works, ſo wee may turne it and ſay, works are dead without faith. Contrition then is either before faith or after; if before, being without faith, it is a dead worke, as is heere ſpecified, and ſo cannot merite: if after faith, then it commeth after iuſtification and remiſſion of ſinnes: for by faith are wee iuſtified: Rom. 3. 26. That he might be a iuſtifier of him, that is of the faith of Ieſus.

We want not the euidence of ſome of their owne ſide: Capreolus in ſecund. ſenten. diſt. 40. Dominicus à Soto lib. 2. de natur. & grat. cap. 4. doe denie that contrition any way either of congruity, or condignity meriteth remiſſion.

8. THere is a kinde of contrition that proceedeth onely from the feare of puniſhment, when a man doth leaue ſinning, not for any loue or delight hee hath in God, but onely for feare of damnation: Euen this contrition alſo is good and profitable; yet this ſeruile feare is at length cleane driuen out by charitie. But there remaineth ſtill in the godly an awe and feare of God and his iudgements, with miſtruſt, and feare of hell and damnation: as Matth.10. Feare him that can caſt bodie and ſoule into hell: Rhemiſt.Ioh.4.ſect.6. And Bellarmine ſaith; that if a ſinner ſolius pœnæ fugiendæ cauſa,&c. onely to auoide puniſhment, doe take heede of ſinne; this is a good and profitable feare, lib.2.17 — 57. Error. Matth.10.

Malach.1.6. Matth.10.28.

Anſwere. Firſt, the Lord in theſe places by his Prophets ſpeaketh vnto the prophane wicked of thoſe times: as Ierem.verſ.21. Heare O fooliſh people, and without vnderſtanding: and Malach.1.8. it followeth in the ſame verſe, O ye Prieſts that deſpiſe my name: Theſe prophane perſons had neede to be terrified with the feare of Gods iudgements: but it followeth not, that this feare is neceſſarie for the ſeruants of God. Secondly, the Prophet Malachie ioyning the honour of ſonnes, and feare of ſeruants together; vnderſtandeth not a ſeruile, miſerable, and ſlauiſh feare, but ſuch as dutifull and obedient ſeruants yeeld vnto their maſters as fathers, which is a commendable feare, and fit alwaies to be retained. Thirdly, our Sauiour ſpeaketh by way of compariſon: that they ſhould not feare them which kill the bodie,&c. Hee preferreth a ſeruile feare of God, before this worldly feare of men: yet ſo that hee would not haue them ſtay here, or reſt in this feare; for the which hee diuers times reproueth them: as Luk.12.32, Feare not little flocke, it is your fathers will to giue you a kingdome. Fourthly, we confeſſe that this ſeruile feare is profitable to make a beginning and further entrance: as Prou.1.7. The feare of God is the beginning of wiſedome: but afterward loue muſt ſucceede in the place thereof. — Luk.12.32. Pro.1.7.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, wee acknowledge that the feare of puniſhment is neceſſarie in the beginning, to make a way for true loue to enter, as the briſtle or needle (as Auguſtine ſaith) maketh roume for the threed to enter. Wee alſo confeſſe, that there is a continuall feare and reuerence of God in the godly, ſuch as children haue of their parents; but as for any miſtruſt or feare of hell and damnation, after loue bee once entred, and we made the children of God, which breedeth terror and anxietie of conſcience, it is cleane expelled, and thruſt out of the doores by loue.

*Argum.*1. So ſaith the Apoſtle, There is no feare in loue: but perfect loue caſteth out feare, and maketh vs to haue confidence in the day of iudgement: But he that feareth damnation, and is afraid of the day of iudgement, cannot haue confidence in that day. So Auguſtine: Quid dicimus de illo, qui cœpit timere diem iudicij? ſi perfecta in illo eſſet charitas, non timeret? What ſay wee to him, that feareth the day of iudgement? if loue were perfect in him, he would not feare it? — 1.Iohn 4.17.

*Argum.*2. Matth.25.25. The ſlothfull ſeruant ſaith to his maſter, I knew thou waſt a hard man,&c. and therefore I was afraid. This ſeruant was not commended for this feare, but blamed and reproued, and caſt into vtter darkneſſe: for his maſter ſaid, Thou euill and ſlothfull ſeruant. And Origen hereof writeth well: Nec eſt bonus huiuſmodi timor, nec liberat nos talis timor à tenebris exterioribus: Neither is this feare good, neither doth it deliuer from vtter darkneſſe: Tract.33.in Matth. — Matth.25.25.

Bellarmine replieth: that to feare God cannot be euill; but they that haue this ſeruile feare, doe notwithſtanding feare God: *Ergo,c.*18.

Contra. Firſt, the diuels feare God and tremble, Iam.2.19. doth he thinke there is any good feare in diuels? Secondly, neither doe thoſe feare God, but hell: for if there were no hell, they would not feare God at all. — Iam.2.19.

*Argum.*3. God is not to be loued for hope of reward: Ergo, neither to be ſerued for feare of puniſhment.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the reaſon is not alike: for the obiect of loue is good, the obiect of feare is euill: God is good, and therefore to be loued for himſelfe: but he is not euill, and therefore to be feared for another, cap.18.reſp.ad argum.6.

Contra. Firſt, the obiect indeede of ſeruile feare is euill, but the obiect of a godly feare is good; as Eccleſ.12.13. Feare God and keepe his commandements: will he ſay that the obiect of this feare is euill? Secondly, if God be onely to be feared for another thing, then all feare ſhall be ſeruile; and the filiall feare is aboliſhed, when God is feared and reuerenced as a father for himſelfe. Thirdly, Hierome ſheweth the reaſon to be alike: Qui diligit,&c. He that loueth, keepeth the commandement, not becauſe he is compelled with feare of puniſhment, or greedineſſe of reward, but becauſe, that which is commanded is good: Tom 4. de filio prodigo. — Eccleſ.12.13.

7. 1. Chryſoſtome ſaith, Idcirco nec terreat tuorum conſcientia peccatorum, cum pœnitentia deleantur,&c. Therefore let not the conſcience of thy ſinnes terrifie thee, when they are by repentance blotted out,&c. — Homil.de Iona Propheta.

De correction. Donatiſt.c.15. 2 Auguſtine ſaith thus ſpeaking of S. Paul: Agnoſcant in eo Chriſtum prius ferientem, deinde conſolantem — et quem maior timor compulit ad charitatem, eius perfecta charitas foras miſit timorem: Let them acknowledge Chriſt in him firſt ſmiting, then comforting: and whom great feare compelled vnto charitie, his perfect charitie expelled feare.

Harm.ſect.8. pag.218. 3 Confeſſion of Bohemia,c.5. This ſauing repentance — hath this in order firſt, it is a feare and terrour of the ſecret heart before God, — ſuch a terrour and true ſenſe of ſinne, doth worke in the faithfull an inward change of the minde: — hereunto is ſtraightway added, that ſuch men ought by faith in Chriſt Ieſus conceiue a ſure and vndoubted truſt in his mercie,&c. We ſee then that true repentance though it begin with feare, yet it endeth in peace, confidence and comfort.

Synod. Moguntin. cap.10. Libertatem Chriſtianam intelligimus, &c. non vt alij homines pœnarum metu & imperio legis compellantur,&c. We vnderſtand Chriſtian libertie, not that we ſhould not doe thoſe things which are commanded, but that wee ſhould not as others are, bee drawne or enforced to keepe through feare of puniſhment,&c. Ergo, there remaineth no feare of puniſhment in the righteous.

Wee haue moſt cleere teſtimonies beſide: Ambroſ.epiſt.84. Timoris, quo Deus metuitur nulla diſtinctio,&c. There is no difference in name of that feare, wherewith God is feared,&c. there is feare of puniſhment, here is carefulneſſe for the reward: Of the ſeruile feare it is ſaid, perfect loue expelleth feare, but of the liberall feare; The feare of the Lord is holy and remaineth for euer. And againe, epiſtol.7. Velle ſapientis, ſeruire inſipientis: To be willing, is the part of a wiſe man; to ſerue, of a foole: in the Law there is ſeruitude, in the Goſpell libertie,&c. Seruit peccator formidini: A ſinner is a ſlaue to his feare.

Hieron. de 42. Manſionib. Duplicia ſunt in ſcripturis vincula,&c. There are two ſorts of bands in Scripture,&c. but Chriſts bands are voluntarie, Et vertuntur in amplexus, and are turned into embracings.

Decret. Gregor. lib.5. tit.41. c.8. Qui ex timore facit præceptum, aliter quam debeat facit, & ideo iam non facit: He that of feare doth the commandement, doth it otherwiſe then he ſhould, and therefore doth it not at all,&c. By all theſe teſtimonies it is euident, that this ſeruile feare of puniſhment hath no place where the loue of God is.

Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, Ioh.20.22. were giuen them in vaine, if no man were bound to ſeeke for abſolution at their hands: which cannot be had of them without diſtinct vtterance to them of our ſinnes: for they cannot rule the caſes of conſcience, vnleſſe they haue exact knowledge and cogitation of their ſinnes, Rhemiſt. ibid.

*Anſw.*1. God hath not made his Miniſters in Chriſts ſtead Iudges of caſes of conſcience, as though there were in them an actuall power to remit and abſolue ſinnes: but their office is onely to declare and ſet forth vnto all penitent perſons, the promiſes of God for remiſſion of ſinnes, and the ſeueritie of Gods iudgement againſt impenitent perſons: which is eſpecially performed in the preaching and applying of the word either publikely or priuately; as S. Paul calleth the Goſpell committed vnto 2.Cor.5.16. him, the word of reconciliation, 2.Cor.5.16.

2 A man therefore may by their miniſterie, which are the Preachers of reconciliation, finde remiſſion of ſinnes, without a particular declaration thereof: neither is it neceſſarie for them to haue ſo exact a knowledge of our ſinnes, ſeeing they are not abſolute Iudges of the conſcience, but the 2.Cor.5.20. miniſters and ambaſſadours of reconciliation, 2.Cor.5.20.

3 And Miniſters are not to ſtay while ſuite is made vnto them for their helpe, but they ought to exhort and deſire men to be reconciled to God by their miniſterie.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Prieſts are truly and properly Iudges of mens ſinnes, and haue a iudiciarie power not to declare or teſtifie the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, but truly to binde, or looſe them. Firſt, they are called the keyes: which doe verily open and ſhut the doore, not ſignifie the opening and ſhutting; as Chriſt is ſaid to haue the key of Dauid to open and ſhut, which power Chriſt communicateth to the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors. Secondly, to binde and to looſe doe not ſignifie, to denounce and declare, but indeed to put on, or take off the bondes; ſo are they ſaid to retaine ſinnes: and what is it elſe to retaine, but nolle remittere, not to be minded to remit? Thirdly, the words are, whoſe ſinnes, not all mens ſins are remitted, but whom the Prieſt ſhall iudge meet: but the word is preached to all, remiſſion of ſins is not giuen to all: therefore this is not vnderſtood of the preaching of the word, but of the iudiciary power of the keyes. Fourthly, in that Chriſt breathed vpon them, it ſheweth, that as a blaſt doth extinguiſh the fire, and chaſe the clouds, ſo they had power verily to extinguiſh ſins, and not to declare onely: Bellar. lib. 3. c. 2.

Contra. Firſt, the keyes 1. of the Church doe truly open and ſhut, being executed according to the will and minde of the maſter of the houſe: the ſeruant to whom the keyes are committed, doth open and ſhut, yet but as a ſeruant, and according to his maſters direction: ſo the keyes of the Church are committed to men, but as miniſters of the keyes, not to open and ſhut at their pleaſure, but as Chriſt preſcribeth. 2. But it is not farre from blaſphemy to ſay that the ſame power of the keyes, which Chriſt hath, is communicated to the miniſters of the Church: for hee openeth, and no man ſhutteth, &c. Reuel. 3. 8. but man may open to ſome, to whom Chriſt may ſhut, and hee ſhut the dore againſt others, to whom Chriſt may open: yea and when the Phariſies had ſaid, Who can forgiue ſinnes but God onely? Mark. 2. 7. Chriſt reproueth them not, but ſheweth, that hee (beeing both God and man) had authority alſo to forgiue ſins. Chriſt therfore only properly forgiueth, the Apoſtles forgiue as his miniſters. 3. And that theſe keyes are diſpenſed in preaching the word, and not onely in the diſcipline of the Church; it is euident, Acts. 14. 27. a doore of faith is opened by the preaching of the Apoſtles, Matth. 23. 13. The Phariſees by not preaching true doctrine are ſaid to ſhut vp the kingdome of heauen. Thus their owne canons teſtifie, epiſt. 1. Clemen. Per ipſum, per verbum Dei, & ſalubre conſilium curetur: He that is troubled with his ſin, and confeſſeth to the miniſter, &c. that by him through the word of God, and holeſome counſell he may be cured. Sinnes then are cured and healed by the word of God.

Mark. 2. 7.
Act. 14. 27.
Matth. 23. 13.

Secondly, the Apoſtles and they which ſucceed them, do truely binde and looſe, remit and retaine ſinnes, but as miniſters, and ſo long as they execute this authority according to Chriſts will: as Peter hath the keyes, but he is firſt built vpon the rocke, Matth. 16. 18. the Apoſtles haue power to bind and looſe, Matth. 18. 18. but they muſt doe it in Chriſts name, verſ. 20. otherwiſe, a curſe cauſleſſe ſhall not come, Pro. 26. 2. And, though men curſe, God will bleſſe, Pſalm. 109. 28. The blind man was caſt out by the Phariſees, but he was receiued in by Chriſt, Iohn 9. 35. S. Ambroſe ſaith, Dei munus, miniſterium ſacerdotis eſt, &c. Quis tantus eſt, &c. In giuing the ſpirit, the gift is Gods, the miniſtery the Prieſts, &c. who is ſo great, as to arrogate to himſelfe the beſtowing of this gift? Lib. 1. de ſpirit. ſanct. cap. 7.

Matth. 16. 18.
Matth. 18. 18.
Prou. 26. 2.
Pſalm. 109. 28.
Iohn 9. 35.

Thirdly, 1. As the word of God is not to be denied to any, that will receiue it; ſo neither is remiſſion of ſinnes to be withheld from any by the will of man, that doe deſire it: the word is not to be caſt before ſwine and dogs, Matth. 7. 6. no more is remiſsion of ſins to be granted to the impenitent. 2. If the Miniſter ſhal at his pleaſure denie remiſsion to the penitent, his ſentence bindeth not before God: as Origen wel ſaith: Si aliquis non recto iudicio, &c. If any man by the erroneous iudgement of thoſe which gouerne the Church be caſt out, if he haue not deſerued to be caſt out, is not any thing hurt by this error of iudgement, &c. Hom. 14. in Leuitic.

Matth. 7. 6.

Fourthly, the breathing which Chriſt vſed, betokened the giuing of the holy Ghoſt, which truly and properly, doth remit and retaine ſinnes, as the winde chaſeth away the clouds. This then ſheweth not a iudiciall authority in men, that are but the miniſters of the ſpirit, but an abſolute power in the ſpirit: as Ambroſe excellently ſaith, Per ſpiritum ſanctum peccata donantur, &c. Sinnes are forgiuen by the holy ſpirit: but men to the remiſsion of ſins do exhibite their miniſtery: Non ius alicuius poteſtatis exercent: They doe not exerciſe any right of power, &c. they pray, God forgiueth; the ſeruice is mans, the munificence is from a ſuperne power; lib. 3. de ſpirit. c. 19.

Argum. 2. As the Prieſts in the law had only authority to diſcerne the leproſie of the people, and therefore Chriſt ſendeth the lepers to the Prieſt, Luk. 17. 14. ſo men muſt reueale the ſpiritual leproſie of ſin to the Prieſt, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Luke 17. 14.

The Doway ſtudents do further thus enforce this argument: out of that place Num. 5. 7. they ſhall confeſſe their ſinne, and reſtore the principall, where they giue this marginall note, particular confeſſion of ſins, and ſatisfaction required by the law of God.

Numb. 5. 7.

Anſw. Firſt the leproſie was not healed by the prieſt, but onely declared to bee healed: ſo ſinnes are declared to be forgiuen by the Prieſt, not properly forgiuen. Secondly, the Prieſt receiued not knowledge of all diſeaſes, but of this that was contagious: therefore it would not follow heereupon, that all ſins are to bee confeſſed to the Prieſt; but ſuch as are notorious, where publique Confeſsion is by Church diſcipline inioyned: and ſuch confeſsion we denie not. Thirdly, the argument followeth not from the Prieſts of the law, to the Miniſters of the Goſpell: for the Prieſthood of the law is tranſlated wholly vnto Chriſt, who hath all knowledge to diſcerne, and power to heale our ſpirituall diſeaſes.

Fourthly, I will oppoſe to our Doway Romaniſts, the iudgement of Lyranus, who vpon that place ſaith: Lex iſta loquitur in caſu, &c. This law ſpeaketh of ſuch a caſe, wherein a man being ſtriken with remorſe, is willing to make ſatisfaction to his neighbour. This proueth not a generall confeſſion of all ſinnes, nor yet made neceſſarily to the Prieſt, but of ſuch wrongs, which doe clogge the conſcience, which muſt be confeſſed and ſatisfied for to the partie wronged: yet Lyranus in another place ſaith directly, vpon theſe words, Leuit. 16. 21. Aaron ſhall confeſſe (ouer the goat) all the iniquities of the children of Iſrael: In veteri lege non omnia peccata in particulari explicabant, &c. They did not in the olde law confeſſe all their ſinnes in particular: For that was impoſſible, both for the ſhortneſſe of time, and becauſe the Prieſt knew not all the ſinnes of the people: but in generall, as we doe in the beginning of Maſſe. Tolet alſo their Cardinall ſaith, That the purpoſe of confeſſing was not neceſſarie in the olde law. Instruct. ſacerd. de confeſſion.

Act. 19.18. Argum. 3. Act. 19.18. Many that beleeued, came and confeſſed, and ſhewed their workes: Hence the Ieſuite would inferre the neceſſitie of auricular confeſſion, Lib. 3. de pœnitent. cap. 4. Bellarm.

Anſw. This place ſerueth nothing at all for his purpoſe: Firſt, all that beleeued came not to confeſſe, but ſuch as were pricked in conſcience, with remembrance of ſome ſpeciall ſinnes, as it followeth, ver. 19. they that vſed curious Arts brought their bookes: but the Papiſts enioyne auricular confeſſion of neceſſitie to all. 2. It is not ſaid they made particular rehearſall of all their ſinnes, but Dan. 9.5. generally confeſſed themſelues to be ſinners: as Daniel confeſſeth, cap. 9.5. We haue ſinned and done wickedly, &c. 3. It was no confeſſion made in the eare, but publikely before all the multitude: but auricular confeſſion is made onely in the eare of the Prieſt. Fourthly, theſe beleeuers came but once, that we reade of, in the beginning of their conuerſion to confeſſe, and they came willingly without conſtraint: But they exact a yearely confeſſion of the people, and enforce them to it. They muſt ſeeke better grounds for their eare-confeſſion then this, or elſe they are like to miſſe of it.

Bellarmine replieth, 1. That they confeſſed all their ſinnes: for when the Scripture ſpeaketh abſolutely of ſinnes, all muſt bee vnderſtood: as Matth. 9.2. Thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee: that is, all thy Matth. 9.2. ſinnes. 2. The Epheſians might confeſſe oftner, then this once, though it bee not mentioned; for wee may ſay as well, they were not baptized, becauſe it is not expreſſed. 3. Neither are all with vs bound to confeſſe, but they which are touched in conſcience. 4. Neither is it expreſſed, whether they confeſſed priuately or publikely. 5. They came willingly to confeſſion, becauſe there was yet no law to enioyne them. Bellarm. cap. 4.

Cont. Firſt, where 1. mention is made of forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, all muſt be vnderſtood, becauſe there is a neceſſitie, that all bee forgiuen: but of confeſſing all ſinnes there is no neceſſitie. 2. And they confeſſed their workes, πράξεις, but the Papiſts exact confeſſion of thoughts and words. 3. Neither confeſſed they all their workes, but ſuch as were notorious and offenſiue, as it followeth verſ. 19. ſuch were the workes of them that exerciſed curious artes.

Secondly, 1. There is no queſtion but they were baptized, becauſe it is Chriſts generall ordinance; ſo is not auricular confeſſion. 2. Neither could they confeſſe, as they did, to S. Paul yeerely, becauſe he was not alwaies with them. 3. Neither afterward could the beleeuers confeſſe ſuch works, as they did in their infidelitie.

Thirdly, it is vntrue, that you ſay; for you require confeſſion of all whatſoeuer, neither doe you giue abſolution, but vpon ſuch confeſſion: but all that ſinne haue neede of abſolution: therefore all muſt confeſſe.

Fourthly, it is euident, that this confeſſion of their workes was publike, as it is expreſſed verſ. 19. They which vſed curious artes, burned their bookes: In conſpectu omnium, in the ſight of all.

Fifthly, if the Scriptures authorize not any law to enioyne confeſſion, it is great preſumption for you, to lay ſuch a yoke vpon the Lords people.

7 Caietane their Cardinall thinketh, that this place is not to be vnderſtood of particular and ſacramentall confeſſion, but onely of a generall and publike confeſſion, ſuch as they made, that came Lorinus in Act. 19.18. to Iohn: but Baronius diſſenteth, affirming certainly the contrarie: Lorinus their Ieſuite, dare neither encline to the one or the other.

2. Cor. 5.19. Argum. 4. 2. Cor. 5.19. He hath committed to vs the word of reconciliation, now we are embaſſadors for Chriſt, &c. But how can men be reconciled, vnleſſe they make their caſe knowne, and confeſſe their ſinnes, Bellarm. cap. 4. loc. 2.

Anſw. 1. If thoſe Embaſſadors reconciled to themſelues, it were fit confeſſion ſhould be made to them, but ſeeing they pray to be reconciled to God, it ſufficeth to confeſſe to God. 2. The word of reconciliation is committed vnto them: Ergo, by the preaching of the word men are reconciled: but confeſſion of ſinnes is not requiſite at euery preaching of the word.

Iames 5.16. Argum. 5. Iam. 5.16. Confeſſe your ſinnes one to another, and pray one for another: that is, the Elders and Prieſts ſpoken of verſ. 14. muſt pray for them, and to them they muſt confeſſe: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. This place is very direct againſt them. 1. If to confeſſe one to another, be vnderſtood of the people and the Prieſt, then muſt the Prieſt confeſſe to the people, as the people doth to him: for ſo 1. Theſſ. 4.18. the word ἀλλήλοις ſignifieth, as 1. Theſſ. 4.18. Comfort your ſelues one another, &c. 2. The Apoſtle addeth, The prayer of a righteous man auaileth much; he ſaith not, the prayer of a righteous Prieſt, but Iames 5.19. of any righteous: ſo verſ. 19. If any of you hath erred, and ſome man hath conuerted him, &c. He ſpeaketh not onely of the Miniſter, but of any other faithfull man.

1. Iohn 1.9. Argum. 6. 1. Iohn 1.9. If we acknowledge our ſinnes, hee is faithfull and iuſt to forgiue vs our ſinnes, and to cleanſe vs from all vnrighteouſneſſe: this is not vnderſtood of confeſſion made to God. 1. For Gods faithfulneſſe is in keeping his promiſe; but there is no promiſe extant in Scripture, of forgiueneſſe to thoſe, that confeſſe to God, but to thoſe, that confeſſe to the Miniſters, &c. 2. And if it ſufficed to confeſſe to God; men would not care to ſeeke for forgiueneſſe at mans hands, and ſo Chriſt had ſaid in vaine, Whoſe ſinnes ye remit, &c. Bellarm. c. 4.

Anſwere. Firſt, it is boldly and vntruly affirmed, that there is no promiſe, &c. to them that confeſſe to God: there is 1. nothing more euident in Scripture, as 1.King.8.47. If they ſinne againſt thee, &c. and returne and pray, ſaying, We haue ſinned and done wickedly, then heare thou in heauen, and be mercifull: here is a direct promiſe of mercie to thoſe that confeſſe to God. 2. Neither is the Miniſtrie to be deſpiſed, but there is great vſe thereof: 1. Both by the preaching of the word, in calling vpon the people to repent, and confeſſe their ſinnes to God: 2. And where the griefe of ſinne is ſuch, as the ſoule of the penitent cannot wraſtle againſt it, in this caſe he is to reſort to the Miniſter. 3. And it is the Miniſters part, where he ſeeth euident ſignes of repentance, to declare the mercie of God, and looſing of ſinnes vnto ſuch, though not confeſſed vnto him: Peter confeſſed not to Chriſt, but onely wept, and was forgiuen: the inceſtuous partie confeſſed not to Paul, but by his great ſorrow ſhewed his repentance, yet the Apoſtle forgaue him, 2.Cor.2.10. 4. Like as then the Leper being firſt cured of Chriſt, was bid to ſhew himſelfe to the Prieſt, Matth.8.4. according to the law: ſo they, which confeſſing vnto God, doe finde remiſſion, muſt notwithſtanding by the miniſtrie of the word labour to be confirmed therein.

1.King.8.47.

2.Cor.2.10.
Matth.8.4.

Secondly, this place is chiefly to be vnderſtood of confeſſing vnto God. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all, excluding not himſelfe: but to whom ſhould the Apoſtles confeſſe but vnto God. 2. The Apoſtle ſaith, to cleanſe vs: but man cannot cleanſe vs, this is onely Gods worke. 3. And God onely cleanſeth from all vnrighteouſneſſe: for all our ſinnes cannot be made manifeſt to men, no, not to our owne conſcience; and if our owne heart condemne vs: God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. 1.Iohn 3.20. God is much more able to finde out our ſinne then our owne conſcience.

1.Iohn 3.20.

Argum.7. In the laſt place Bellarmine produceth many teſtimonies out of the Councels and fathers, to proue auricular and particular confeſſion, making them to ſpeake that, which they neuer knew: the places alleaged, I purpoſe not particularly to anſwere, for theſe reaſons. 1. Becauſe my purpoſe is to deale chiefly with places of Scripture. 2. For that I entending chiefly the good and profit of the vnlearned, I would not diſtract them, or hinder them from more profitable knowledge by the curious diſcuſſing of the fathers. 3. This worke would by this meanes haue growne to a greater volume, then was fit for euery mans vſe. 4. I thought it not needfull to handle at large theſe teſtimonies, writing in our owne language, which the aduerſarie, that firſt gaue occaſion vnderſtandeth not. 5. Becauſe other learned men, ſome of this our Church, ſome abroad in other nations, with a godly zeale and good ſucceſſe, haue alreadie vndertaken the through confutation of all Popiſh allegations: to whom I wiſh both all diuine aſſiſtance, and humane encouragement, to proceede in ſo excellent an enterpriſe.

Yet thus much ſhall ſuffice for a generall anſwere at this time: that none of the teſtimonies alleaged, till we come to the yeere 600. and after, when ſuperſtition began to encreaſe (and the teſtimonies of the times following we much regard not) do witneſſe for auricular confeſſion: but all of them, if a ſuruey be taken of them, doe ſpeake of one of theſe fiue confeſſions: either 1. of confeſſion to be made to God: as Tertullian; Exomologeſis eſt, qua delictum Domino confitemur: That is confeſſion, whereby we doe confeſſe our ſinne vnto God, *Apologet.cap.*4. Or elſe 2. of publike confeſſion made before the whole Church, for ſome publike ſinne; as the ſame Tertullian: Ergo, cùm te ad fratrum genua protendis, Chriſtum exoras: When thou boweſt thy ſelfe to thy brethrens feete, thou entreateſt Chriſt. Thirdly, they ſpeake of a confeſſion, which they made each to other, Beda in 5. Iacob. Quotidiana leuiaq; peccata alterutrum coæqualibus confiteamur, &c. Our daily ſinnes let vs confeſſe to our equals, one to another. Fourthly, they commend confeſſion made to the Prieſt, when the conſcience otherwiſe cannot be ſetled: ſo *Origen.hom.2.in Pſal.*37. Sicut ij qui habent intus incluſam eſcam indigeſtam, &c. As they, which haue meate vndigeſted in the ſtomacke, if they doe vomite, are eaſed; ſo they that ſinne, while they conceale it, are in a manner choaked, but vomiting of it vp by confeſſion, &c. Fifthly, a generall confeſſion to bee made, with reconciliation before the receiuing of the Communion, Cyprian maketh mention of: Nec ad communicationem venire quis poſſit: But none might come to the Communion, before he had confeſſed, &c. lib.3.epiſt.16. All theſe kindes of confeſſions we acknowledge to haue beene well knowne to the fathers, neither doe we miſlike them: but none of the ancient writers for 600. yeeres after Chriſt doe witneſſe for auricular confeſſion, and particular enumeration of ſinnes.

The Proteſtants.

Confeſſion of ſinnes, ſuch as the Scripture alloweth, we doe acknowledge: as namely theſe foure kindes: There are priuate confeſſions, either to God alone, as Daniel confeſſeth, 9.4. or for the eaſing of our conſcience, to man alſo, as to him whom we haue offended, Matth.5.24. or to any other faithfull man, the Miniſter or ſome other, that we may be holpen and comforted by our mutuall prayers, Iam.5.16.

Dan.9.4.
Iam.5.16.

And herein we thinke and ſay with Biſhop Ridley holy Martyr: Confeſſion to the Miniſter, which is able to inſtruct, correct, comfort, and enforme the weake, wounded, and ignorant conſcience, indeed I euer thought might doe much good in Chriſts congregation, and ſo I aſſure you I thinke euen at this day, pag.1728. Epiſtol.ad Weſt.

There are alſo two kindes of publique confeſſion, either of the whole congregation together, Nehe.

Nehem.9.3. Nehe.9.3. or of ſome one or more, that make publique confeſſion of their ſinne, for the ſatisfying of 1.Cor.2.6. the congregation, whom they haue offended: which belongeth to Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, 2.Cor. 2.6. Beſide theſe kindes of confeſſion, it is commendable alſo, which is practized in ſome reformed Churches, that before the receiuing of the Sacrament, particular examination ſhould bee had of ſuch as are to communicate, not ſo much to confeſſe ſuch ſinnes to the Miniſter, as doe grieue their conſcience, and ſo to finde eaſe for their griefe; as it is vſed to be done to this day in the reformed Churches of Bohemia. Harm.ſect.8.c.5.confeſſ.Bohem. And of Auſpurge.ſect.8.artic.3. and of Saxonie, ſect.14.confeſſ.Saxon.Neither are any admitted to the Communion, except they be firſt heard and abſolued of the paſtor: but chiefly that euery one may be particularly examined, tried and made fit concerning their faith, and ſo prepared to come worthily to the Lords table: this vſe Kemnitius thus writeth of, in 2.part.exam.c.5. de confeſſ. Confeſſionis vſus apud nos ſeruatur,&c. The vſe of confeſſion is retained with vs,&c. In this priuate colloquie, the paſtors doe make triall of their auditors, whether they vnderſtand the doctrine of ſinne, of the degrees of ſinne, of the wages thereof, and of faith in Chriſt, they are brought to a conſideration of their ſinnes, and asked if they doe earneſtly repent for the ſame, if they haue a purpoſe to amend their life, and whether they doe not continue in certaine ſinnes,&c. Maſter Caluine alſo approueth this vſe: Lib.3 inſtitut.cap.4.ſect.13.Interim quia ſiſtant ſe oues paſtori,&c. That the ſheepe ſhould preſent themſelues to the Paſtor, as often as they receiue the Communion, I am ſo farre for reclaiming againſt it, that I would haue it euery where obſerued. And Epiſtol.302. he ſheweth, that the like vſe is retained in Geneua. That no man may come to the holy table, before it be knowne to the Miniſter, that he hath profited in religion in ſome meaſure, and once a yeare the Miniſter in euery quarter goeth to euery houſe, to make triall both of their life and faith. Such confeſſion, triall, and examination, as theſe Churches haue receiued, I hold very conuenient and profitable, and the like to be deſired and much wiſhed for in our Church. But this particular confeſſion, yea 1. of all ſinnes; euen of them which are 2. ſecret, 3. and vpon paine of damnation, 4. and to none but the Prieſt, how vnfit ſo euer; is an Antichriſtian yoake.

*Argum.*1. It is not neceſſarie to make confeſſion at all vnto men: the Prophet Dauid confeſſeth Pſal.51.4. onely vnto God. Againſt thee O Lord onely haue I ſinned, Pſal.51.4. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Quid mihi cum hominibus vt audiant confeſſiones meas, quaſi ipſi ſanaturi ſint languores meos? What haue men Lib.10.3. to doe to heare my confeſſions, as though they were able to heale my ſores? *Confeſſion lib.*10,3.

*Argum.*2. If a man otherwiſe cannot finde eaſe of conſcience, but will open his ſinnes to men: it is not alwayes neceſſarie he ſhould ſeeke to the Miniſter, though it be moſt conuenient, if hee be a fit man; any other faithfull godly man may ſerue: for ſo the Apoſtle biddeth vs, Acknowledge our Iam.5.16. faults, not to the Prieſt, but one to another, Iam.5.16. Whereupon Auguſtine writeth, Peccata noſtra debemus non ſolum Deo, ſed etiam ſanctis & Deum timentibus confiteri: Wee muſt confeſſe our ſinnes not onely to God, but to men alſo that feare God: Hee ſaith not, Sacerdotibus, onely to the Prieſts, *Homil.*12.

*Argum.*3. Such a particular enumeration of ſinnes is not neceſſarie, neither is it poſſible: It ſufficeth, where our ſinnes are kept from our ſight, to ſay with the Prophet, Cleanſe mee from my ſecret Pſal.19.12. ſinnes, Pſalm.19.12. Auguſtine ſaith, Quot habes in corde compunctiones facinorum, tot habe illic punctiones confeſſionum: Looke how many ſinnes doe pricke thy conſcience, ſo muſt thy confeſſion be. It is an vncomfortable doctrine to teach men to labour to remember all their ſinnes, and to make a particular catalogue of them: they haue worke enough to be eaſed of thoſe ſinnes that lye heauie on the heart.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that if the enumeration of ſinnes to men bee impoſſible, and vncomfortable, ſo is it in our confeſſion to God, to whom alſo we are to confeſſe, whatſoeuer ſinnes wee know, and remember, and otherwiſe men are not enioyned to confeſſe to the Prieſt. Bellarmin.lib.3. c.16.

Contra. Firſt, the Lord himſelfe doth not exact ſuch a particular enumeration, as the Popiſh law doth: for Chriſt teaching his Diſciples to pray, taught them to ſay thus, Forgiue vs our treſpaſſes,&c. not willing them to make a particular rehearſall of their ſinnes; but the Popiſh Prieſts will accept no Pſal.50.21. confeſſion, if it be not particular. Secondly, in making confeſſion to God, the Lord may bring our ſinnes to remembrance, Pſalm.50.21. I will ſet them in order before thee, which the Prieſt cannot do. Thirdly, there is more comfort in confeſſing to God, becauſe he hath power onely to forgiue, the other is but as Gods miniſter, and it is more comfortable to goe to the Maſter, then to the ſeruant: and we may more boldly open our infirmities to God, which we often are aſhamed to ſhew to men.

*Argum.*4. Chriſt ſaith, As my father ſent me, ſo ſend I you; and then hee ſaid, receiue ye the holy Ghoſt; whoſe ſinnes ye remit,&c. Here our Sauiour Chriſt giueth authoritie and power to remit ſinnes, to his Apoſtles, as hee himſelfe executed the ſame in earth: But Chriſt forgaue ſinnes without any ſuch particular confeſſion, as to the woman, Luk.7. that waſhed his feete with her teares: Ergo, remiſſion of ſinnes may be pronounced without auricular confeſſion, whereas by other ſignes the ſorrow of the heart may be made knowne.

Bellarm. The Apoſtles had not the like power to remit ſinnes, as Chriſt himſelfe had: for Chriſt was able to iuſtifie and forgiue ſinnes without a Sacrament: But the Apoſtles did it by meanes: *Bellarm.cap.*18. Neither as yet was the Sacrament of confeſſion inſtituted.*cap.*17.

*Anſw.*1. The difference betweene Chriſts and his Apoſtles working is this, that Chriſt by his own power did forgiue ſinnes, the Apoſtles in Chriſts name onely, as his Miniſters and inſtruments: But concerning the outward meanes of ſaluation, Chriſt vſed the ſame which his Apoſtles did: he preached the Goſpell, called for faith, and repentance, as his Apoſtles afterward did: and as Chriſt then forgaue ſinnes without a Sacrament, ſo did he by the miniſterie of his Apoſtles: Paul hath the word of reconciliation committed to him, 2.Cor.5.19. he reconcileth to God by the preaching of the Goſpell, which was no Sacrament. Concil. Cabilonenſ, can;33. Deus ſalutis & ſanitatis author plerunque hanc prebet ſua potentia inuiſibili adminiſtratione, plerunque medicorum operatione: God the author of health and ſaluation, often giueth remiſſion of ſinnes by his inuiſible power, often by the miniſterie of the ſpirituall Phyſitian, &c. Sinnes are euen now forgiuen without the miniſterie of man, and without auricular confeſſion, and conſequently without your popiſh Sacrament of Penance: this therefore maketh no difference betweene Chriſts working, and his Apoſtles working. 2.Cor.5.19.

2. But be it granted that Chriſts power herein was greater then his Apoſtles to forgiue ſinnes without confeſſion: was alſo the power of the Prophets greater then theirs? I thinke they will not ſay ſo: yet Nathan pronounced abſolution of Dauids ſinnes, without particular confeſſion, he onely ſaid in generall, I haue ſinned: therefore the Apoſtles did, and ſo the Miniſters of the Goſpell may remit ſinnes without auricular confeſſion.

3. If your Sacrament of confeſſion were not inſtituted by Chriſt (which is the reaſon that you giue, why hee vſed it not) then is there no ſuch Sacrament at all: for Chriſt onely inſtituted Sacraments, the Apoſtles inſtituted none, but deliuered to the Church, as they had receiued from Chriſt: 1.Cor.11.23. 1.Cor.11.23.

*Argum.*5. A notable euidence againſt auricular and priuate confeſsion wee haue out of Sozomen his hiſtorie, lib.7.c.16. who thus reporteth, that Nectarius Patriarke of Conſtantinople, by reaſon of an adulterous act committed betweene a Deacon of the Church, and a noble Matron, that came to confeſſe to the Penitentiarie Prieſt, depoſed the ſaid Prieſt, and aboliſhed that kinde of confeſsion, And permitted, that euery man ſhould doe according to his owne conſcience in comming to the ſacred myſteries.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Nectarius 1. diſcontinued publike, not priuate confeſſion, becauſe the woman publikely confeſſing her fault, there followed a tumult among the people: 2. and after Nectarius time, priuate confeſſion was vſed in the Greeke Church: Bellarm. lib.3.cap.14. 3. Yea, they themſelues allow priuate confeſſion. Ibid.

Anſw. First, Nectarius aboliſhed priuate not publike confeſſion: 1. For the office of the Penitentiarie, was to receiue their confeſſion ſecretly: Quia graue viſum eſt Epiſcopis in media plebe, velut in theatro, &c. It ſeemed hard to the Biſhops, that in the middeſt of the people, as in a theater, they ſhould confeſſe their ſinnes: Nicephor. lib.12.c.28. Further, 2. Socrates ſaith, that the woman comming to the Penitentiarie, did particulatim, particularly confeſſe her ſinnes: lib.5.cap.19. 3. The tumult might ariſe not vpon her publike confeſſion, but the publike notice afterward.

Secondly, priuate confeſſion was not after this vſed in the Greeke Church: 1. Chryſoſtome hom.2. in Pſalm.50. Si confunderis alicui dicere, &c. If thou be aſhamed to confeſſe to another, confeſſe thy ſinnes in thine owne ſoule, I ſay not, thou ſhouldeſt confeſſe to thy fellow ſeruant, to caſt thee in the teeth, but to God, &c. 2. Decret.p.2.cauſ.33.diſt.1.c.90. Some doe ſay that wee muſt confeſſe onely to God, vt Græci, as the Grecians. Bellarmine ſaith, that theſe words, vt Græci, are like to haue been thruſt into the text. Anſw. So he ſaith, that Sozomen the reporter of this ſtorie, telleth many lies. Theſe are but ſillie ſhifts. 3. Thom. Waldenſ. a Popiſh writer granteth, that Nectarius did ſimply abrogate confeſſion. Tom.2.c.141.

Thirdly, priuate confeſſion with examination and triall of euery mans faith, wee acknowledge in ſuch manner, as I haue before expreſſed, but a particular enumeration of ſinnes, with a neceſſitie of conſcience, which breedeth ſuperſtition, rather then inſtruction, without any godly conſolation or exhortation at all miniſtred, we refuſe and condemne as Antichriſtian.

We want not here the teſtimonie of antiquitie: Alexander epiſt.1. Confeſſio non extorqueri debet, ſed ſponte potius profiteri: Confeſſion muſt not be violently extorted, but voluntarily confeſſed: but now in the Popiſh Church euery man is bound of neceſſitie to profeſſe.

Concil. Cabilonenſ. can.33. Et peccata confiteamur Deo, &c. Let vs both confeſſe our ſinnes vnto God, and ſay with Dauid, againſt thee haue I ſinned, or confeſſed my ſinne, and according to the inſtitution of the Apoſtle, let vs confeſſe one to another, that wee may pray one for another to bee ſaued, &c. As we muſt pray one for another, ſo we muſt confeſſe our ſinnes one to another: Now the Prieſt only prayeth not for the people, but the people alſo for the Prieſt: Ergo, neither muſt they confeſſe their ſinnes only to the Prieſt.

Interrelig. Cæſar cap.17. Quæ in mentem non veniunt generali confeſſioni recte includuntur, & nihilominus ea remittuntur, quam ſi ea confitendo enumeraſſes: Thoſe ſinnes which come not to thy mind, muſt be included in a generall confeſſion, and they ſhall notwithſtanding as fully bee remitted as if they were particularly numbred, &c. A particular enumeration therefore of ſinnes is not neceſſarie; as now in the popiſh Church is required.

We haue ſufficient euidence out of their owne decrees. Decret. part.2. cauſ.33. diſt.1. cap.1.2.

Non inuenio, quid dixerit Petrus; inuenio quod fleuerit,&c. I finde not what Peter ſaid,I finde hee did weepe,&c. Lachrymæ lauent delictum,&c. Let teares waſh away the ſinne, which it is a ſhame to confeſſe.

Ibid.c.34.gloſſ. Antequam ſacerdotibus ora noſtra oſtendamus: Before wee ſhew our face to the Prieſt,that is,confeſſe our ſinnes,we are cleanſed from the leproſie of ſinne. Cap.37. gloſſ. Sicut circumciſio data eſt Abrahamo: As circumciſion was giuen to Abraham as a ſigne of iuſtice, not as a cauſe of iuſtification, ſo confeſſion is offered to the Prieſt,in token of pardon receiued,not as a cauſe of remiſſion to be obtained.

Magiſt.lib.4.diſtinct.17.a. Ore tacente interdum veniam conſequimur: Sometime wee obtaine pardon,the mouth being ſilent,&c.If therefore remiſſion of ſinnes may be had,where there is no confeſſion at all; and,where confeſſion is vſed,it is a ſigne of remiſſion alreadie had,not a cauſe of remiſſion afterward to be obtained, then is not ſuch confeſſion neceſſarie to obtaine remiſſion of ſinnes,as is by the Papiſts affirmed.

This truth alſo hath the ſeale of the holy Martyrs: Leonard Keyſer of Bauaria burned for denying auricular confeſſion: yet three kindes of confeſſions he granted: the firſt of faith; which is alwaies neceſſarie: the ſecond of charitie; when a man hath offended his neighbour: the third not to be deſpiſed, which is to aske counſell of the ancient Miniſters of the Church, pag.885.

Iohn Bradford holy Martyr, ſetteth downe theſe reaſons againſt auricular confeſſion: firſt, they make it meritorious. Secondly,they make it of neceſſitie, taking him for no good Chriſtian, that vſeth it not. Thirdly, it requireth an impoſsibilitie, that is, the numbring and telling of all our ſinnes. Fourthly,it alloweth praying to Saints: Precor ſanctam Mariam, you muſt ſay, or the Prieſt for you. Fifthly,it is iniurious to the libertie of the Goſpell,&c.pag.1653.

1. The ancient vſe of the Greeke Fathers was to confeſſe their ſinnes vnto God: as Baſil ſaith: Non vt multis manifeſtus fiam, ore tantum fateor, ſed corde ipſo, clauſis oculis tibi ſoli reſpicienti arcana, mecum ipſe lugens oſtendo gemitus meos: I doe not confeſſe only with my mouth to be made manifeſt to many,but with my heart,mine eyes ſhut to thee only,ſeeing ſecrets,mourning by my ſelfe, do I ſhew my gronings,&c. See Chryſoſtome before alleaged: the Grecians at this day vſe a particular confeſſion,but they hold it not neceſſarie: as Ieremie their Patriarke ſaith: Thoſe ſinnes,which a man leaueth vnconfeſſed,either by forgetfulnes, or becauſe hee is aſhamed to vtter them,we beſeech the mercifull God to pardon them,&c. The Moſcouites ſay,that confeſſion belongeth vnto Lords,and that it is ſufficient for them to beleeue in Ieſus Chriſt.

Hee maketh mention alſo of one Geilerius, a graue Diuine of Strauſburge, who being acquainted with many,that were troubled in conſcience, about this point of particular confeſsion, and ſpecially a Carthuſian, that was ſo perplexed in minde about it,that he was readie to make away himſelfe, ſet foorth a booke of that argument for the comfort of ſuch as were troubled in minde about confeſſion,and affirmed, that it was impoſsible for any to confeſſe according to their rules.

Maldonate a Ieſuite ſaith, that confeſsion in the Church of long time was, publice facta, made publikely.

AN APPENDIX OF OTHER CIRCVMSTANces of Auricular confeſsion.

The Papiſts.

1. THis order and cuſtome of Confeſsion, they hold to be a diuine ordinance, no humane tradition, Concil.Trid.ſeſſ.14.can.6.8.

59.Error.

*Argum.*1. The antiquitie of confeſsion ſheweth it to be a diuine ordinance, ſeeing it hath been alway vſed in the Church, euen from the beginning, Bellarm.lib.3.c.2.

Anſw. Firſt, it is vntrue, that Auricular confeſsion hath been of ancient time vſed in the Church: in Chryſoſtomes time it was not: who ſaith, *I require thee not, that thou ſhouldeſt confeſſe thy ſinnes to thy fellow ſeruant: in Pſal.30.Homil.*1. Your owne gloſſe ſaith, This inſtitution of penance began rather of ſome tradition of the vniuerſall Church, then of any authoritie of the old or new Teſtament: De pœnitent.diſtinct.5.in principio. Eraſmus ſaith, apparet tempore Hieronymi inſtitutam non fuiſſe: It appeareth, that in the time of Hierome, this ſecret confeſsion of ſinnes was not ordained, &c. But herein our Diuines not aduiſedly conſidering, what the old Doctors doe ſay, are deceiued: that which they ſay of generall and open confeſsion, they wreſt by and by to this ſecret and priuie kinde of confeſsion. Secondly, it is apparant, that there was no publike conſtitution for Auricular confeſsion before the Lateranе Councell, anno 1215. held by Innocentius 3. ſo that from thence it ſeemeth to take beginning.

Eraſm. in ſchol.in epitaphium Fabiolæ.

*Argum.*2. Auricular confeſsion ſeemeth ſo hard and difficult a thing, that it is like the people would neuer haue endured it, if it had not been by ſome diuine authoritie eſtabliſhed. And againe, ſuch is the vtilitie and profit that ariſeth thereby, that God muſt needs be the author thereof: Bellarm. lib.3.cap.12.

The commodities that confeſsion bringeth, he rehearſeth to bee theſe: Firſt, Gods mercie appeareth, not in condemning vpon confeſsion (as the Iudges of this world doe) but in forgiuing: his iuſtice, in that firſt men are humbled by confeſsion. Secondly, the Paſtors themſelues are benefited, in knowing by this meanes the diſeaſes of their ſheepe, that they may miniſter the remedies the better, and applie the word againſt ſuch ſinnes. Thirdly, the Common-wealth is profited, when as by this meanes men are reconciled, things are reſtored, &c. which things by the earthly Courts cannot be amended. Fourthly, the parties themſelues doe finde mercie for ſinnes paſt, and ſtrength to reſiſt the like afterward. Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Auricular confeſsion indeed is a grieuous and hard yoke, which becauſe the people haue borne, it followeth not, it ſhould be of Gods inſtitution: It was 1. an hard thing, that the idolatrous Iſraelites ſhould ſacrifice their children to their Idols; that Baals Prieſts ſhould launce their fleſh with kniues. The Phariſies 2. alſo did lay heauy burthens and grieuous to be borne vpon the people, Matth.23.3. yet none of all theſe were of God. Many things beſide were hard in poperie: as that the Pope ſhould 3. tread vpon Emperours neckes, and make them his vaſſals and ſlaues, that hee ſhould with his taxes, annates, Peter-pence, rob and pill the people, all theſe were hard yokes: to the which the people were made ſubiect, not wittingly, nor by the working of any diuine power; but as S. Paul prophecied, God ſent them ſtrong deluſions to beleeue lies, 2.Theſſ.2.11. they were beſotted with a ſuperſtitious feare, and ſo became ſlaues to this yoke of confeſsion, and other obſeruances: as vpon the like ſuperſtitious feare, the Indian Paganes had auricular confeſsion in vſe, as alſo to doe penance for their ſinnes, in enduring to be whipped of yong men for the expiation of their ſinnes: as Acoſta the Ieſuite witneſſeth, *lib.6.de Indorum ſalut.cap.*12. And 4. againe, in that the Ieſuite ſaith, it is an hard yoke, he hath made an argument againſt himſelfe, for Chriſt ſaith, my yoke is eaſie: therefore this yoke being hard, is none of Chriſts.

2.Theſſ. 2.11.

2. Concerning the fruite and vtilitie, that commeth by auricular confeſsion, you ſhall ſee what it is. Concil.Lateranenſ.part.50.ca.21.Significaſti nobis quendam Preſbyterum cum alterius coniuge diabolico inſtinctu in eccleſia frequenter dormiuiſſe: You ſignified to vs that a certaine Prieſt of a diueliſh motion did often lie with another mans wife in the Church. Here we ſee adulterie is one fruit of ſuch confeſsion. Further ſaith Robert Smith holy Martyr, it hath been a bewraier of Kings ſecrets, and the ſecrets of other mens conſciences: and it hath been vſed as a meane to pick mens purſes: as he reporteth a ſtorie of his own knowledge, how a Gentleman his Maſter, confeſſed to a Prieſt, was bound by the Prieſt to forgiue a great ſumme of money to one Maſter Greſham, whereof the Prieſt had a good ſhare, and ſo robbed his wife and children: and how afterward a great part of that debt by the gentlemans brother, ſome two or three hundred pounds was recouered: Fox pag.1692. Here be other fruites of auricular confeſsion, treaſon, couſonage, robberie: And therefore it was well ſaid of one Richard Boſtocke, (who was perſecuted for it) that auricular confeſsion had killed more ſoules, then all the billes, clubbes, and halters haue done, ſithence King Henry was King of England, pag.1203. col.1.

3. As for thoſe particular commodities rehearſed, they ariſe not of auricular confeſsion. Firſt, Gods mercie is more ſeene in forgiuenes without confeſsion made to men, when as we confeſſe only to God, Pſal.32.5. I confeſſed my wickednes to the Lord, and thou forgaueſt me, &c. His iuſtice alſo, in that hee forgiueth not, but where men are firſt humbled by true ſorrow and contrition: as Peter wept bitterly before he found mercie, and yet confeſſed not.

Secondly, it is not any way profitable to the Paſtor to know mens particular faults, a generall confeſſion, with ſome rehearſall of the manifeſt and greater ſinnes ſufficeth for the knowledge of the Paſtor: neither ſhould the Miniſter be ſo vndiſcreete, as to bring mens ſecret infirmities into the pulpit: this maketh nothing for auricular confeſſion.

Thirdly, I ſhewed before, that this auricular confeſſion was the occaſion of adulteries, treaſons, reuealing of ſecrets, of couſonage, and ſuch like: therefore the Common-wealth was hindred thereby, not benefited any thing at all.

Fourthly, the parties confeſſing, did neither finde true remiſſion for their ſinnes paſt, (being taught rather by their owne ſatisfactorie workes to merit their forgiuenes, then to depend vpon Gods mercie:) neither were they armed againſt ſinne afterwards, but rather emboldened to commit the like; ſeeing by confeſſion in the eares of the Prieſt, and by procuring his fauour, they might yeerely bee cleered from their offences.

Fifthly, all theſe aforeſaid benefits the Church enioyed in the Apoſtles time: Gods mercie and iuſtice appeared in forgiuenes of ſinnes: the paſtors and teachers tooke knowledge of the diſeaſes of their flock; many notorious ſinners were corrected and amended; the penitent perſons found comfort and ſtrength againſt ſinne; yet was there then no auricular confeſſion heard of, nor many yeeres after.

Sixthly, for the profit and vtilitie that commeth by auricular confeſſion, their owne Canons witneſſe: Cauſ.30.qu.1.c.10. Non debet Epiſcopus aut Preſbyter commiſceri, &c. The Biſhop or Preſbyter muſt not company with the women that come to confeſſe: Such tricks as theſe, were very common, when popiſh confeſſion was vſed. Cauſ.33.diſt.6.c.2. Deponatur, &c. Let him be depoſed, that reuealeth the ſinnes of the penitent perſon: This was another of the fruites, to reueale the ſecrets of them which confeſſed.

The Proteſtants.

THey are neuer able to ſhew that it had any diuine inſtitution: but it was a meere deuiſe and inuention of men. Firſt, we read that Nectarius a good Biſhop of Conſtantinople, did abrogate this cuſtome of confeſſion vpon this occaſion, which had before time beene vſed in that Church: for it was found out that a certaine woman of the citie, vnder this pretence of confeſſion, had vnlawfull company with a Deacon in the Church: whereupon the good man aboliſhed that cuſtome, ſeeing more harme then good to come by it. And this act of his was approued by that famous preacher Chryſoſtome, who ſucceeded him in that See: but if it had beene the ordinance of God, it ought not for ſome abuſe to haue beene aboliſhed.

Beza Antith. pap.cap.7.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, that Sozomene the reporter of this ſtorie, Multa eſſe mentitum, hath forged many things therein. Secondly, hee denieth, that Nectarius the author of this act, was, Vir ſanctitate, & eruditione clarus: a man famous for his holineſſe and learning, as Caluine ſpeaketh of him. But theſe are but ſillie ſhifts; to blame the author and the reporter: hee anſwereth therefore in the third place, that Nectarius onely aboliſhed publike confeſſion, becauſe the woman publiquely acknowledging her adultery, cauſed a tumult and vprore among the people. Bellarmine cap.14.

Nicephor. lib. 12.cap.28.

[a] Anſ. It appeareth rather that Nectarius aboliſhed priuate confeſſion, than publike. 1. He did remoue the Prieſt from his office, that was appointed to take the confeſſions: which Prieſt was elected from the reſt, Probata vita, taciturnus & prudens: Such an one as was of an honeſt life, and could keepe counſell. But what neede he keepe counſell in publike confeſſions, made in the hearing of al? Bellarmine anſwereth: that ſome ſinnes he heard publikely, ſome priuately, which required ſecrecie. Anſwere: But Nectarius abrogauit Preſbyterium pœnitentiarium, did abrogate the whole office of the penitentiary Prieſt, as the Ieſuite confeſſeth, ſo that he had no power, no not to heare priuate confeſſions. 2. Publike confeſſion could not be any cauſe of the womans adultery, but was a meanes rather to reſtraine it, and therefore Nectarius ſhould not haue done well, to haue remoued that, which was a bridle to ſinne; neither would Chryſoſtome his ſucceſſor haue conſented thereto: but priuate confeſſion hath giuen very fit opportunity to the committing of vncleannes, as we heard before out of the Laterane Councell: this therefore was abrogate, not the other. 3. Publike confeſſion remained a long time after Nectarius daies in the Church: as Auguſtine reporteth of one Victorinus a Rhetorician, who beeing conuerted to the faith, fidem ex edito loco profeſſus eſt, did profeſſe the Chriſtian faith ſolemnely out of an high place in the Church: lib.8.confeſſion.c.2. Again, afterward in the time of Leo.1. Biſhop of Rome, anno.462. this cuſtome of publike confeſſion was in vſe: which although he ſomewhat reſtraine, leſt ſome for feare, à penitentia remedijs arcerentur, ſhould be driuen from vſing the remedy of penance: yet he concludeth thus: Plenitudo tamen fidei videtur laudabilis, quæ propter Dei timorem apud homines erubeſcere non veretur. Yet the fulneſſe of faith is commendable, which for the feare of God, refuſeth not to be aſhamed among men: he commendeth publike confeſſion. It was not then by Nectarius abrogated, but continued long after in vſe in the Church: It was therefore priuate confeſſion which hee remooued, whereunto Chryſoſtome afterward agreed: Ergo, it was no diuine conſtitution. The more full anſwere to this, ſee before quæſt.6.argum.proteſtant.5.

[a] Here it is obiected by a certaine cauiller, that priuate confeſſion was in vſe of anciẽt time, becauſe Nectarius tooke it away: I anſwer ſome kinde of priuate confeſſion might be vſed, as of the greater ſinnes, and yet the particular confeſſion of all, which they cal auricular, was not required: of what kinde ſoeuer it was, it was abrogated as incõuenient. See further. Retec.p.74.

But concerning thoſe two anſwerers of Bellarmine, with whom concurreth alſo Baronius: who take exception to the report of the author, giuing him the plaine lie, and further ſay, that Nectarius abrogated publike not priuate confeſſion, Suarez the Ieſuite doth reiect them both as vnſufficient: and thinketh that Chryſoſtome, Nectarius ſucceſſor, ſpake againſt not publike but priuate confeſſion.

Suarez in Thom.part.3. tom.4.diſp.17. ſect.2.

*Argum.*2. Our Sauiour Chriſt neither by precept nor example, ordained auricular confeſſion, nor yet the Apoſtles afterward required of the people any ſuch particular enumeration of their ſinnes: Ergo, it is no diuine ordinance.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt as yet (that is, while he liued) had not inſtituted the Sacrament of confeſſion: inſinuating thereby, that afterward he did: their Maſter ſaith, Multa facta ſunt, quæ ſcripta non ſunt: Many things were done, that are not written: Lib.4.diſtinct.17.f.Bellarmin.lib.3. cap.17.

Contra. Firſt, if Chriſt inſtituted not the Sacrament of confeſſion, then is it no Sacrament at all: for 1. he only had power to inſtitute Sacraments. And 2. it is euident that Chriſt, while he liued vpon the earth, ordained no ſuch thing: as it may appeare by Peters repentance, who wept for his ſinnes, but confeſſed not: and 3. their Maſter granteth, that Nondum facta erat inſtitutio confeſſionis: That confeſſion was not yet inſtituted: Lib.4.diſtinct.17.f. 4. If they ſay that Chriſt inſtituted it afterward, Ioh.20. when he breathed vpon his Apoſtles, &c. Firſt, that is but a renewing of the power of binding and looſing, and opening and ſhutting, giuen before, Matth.16.19.18.18. For to remit and retaine ſinnes, is the ſame that binding and looſing is. Againe, Chriſt ſaid, Conſummatum eſt, That all was finiſhed vpon the croſſe, that was neceſſarie for the ſaluation of man: Therefore confeſſion, if it be neceſſarie, as they affirme, was inſtituted before: how elſe was all finiſhed.

Secondly, though many particular acts of the Apoſtles were done, that are not written; yet nothing concerning the doctrine of the Church, is vnwritten: and I thinke they are not ſo abſurd, as to build Sacraments vpon vnwritten traditions: they muſt find expreſſe Scripture for Sacraments, which they are neuer able to doe for confeſſion.

Laſtly, what the Apoſtolike inſtitution is for confeſſion, their owne Canons teſtifie: Diſtinct.1. de pœnitent.c.90. Apoſtoli inſtitutio nobis ſequenda eſt, vt confiteamur alterutrum peccata noſtra: The Apoſtles inſtitution muſt be followed, to confeſſe our ſinnes one to another.

1. If auricular confeſſion had been of diuine inſtitution, Nectarius Patriarke of Conſtantinople, and Chryſoſtome, (as is ſhewed before) would neuer haue abrogated it.

2. Neither would Auguſtine thus haue written: Quid mihi cum hominibus, vt audiant confeſſiones meas, quaſi ipſi ſanaturi ſint omnes languores meos, &c. What haue I to doe with men, that they ſhould heare my confeſſions, as though they could heale all my infirmities, &c. Et vnde ſciunt, cum à meipſo de meipſo audiunt, &c. And how know they, when they heare of me concerning my ſelfe, whether I ſay the truth, ſeeing God only is the ſearcher of the heart, &c.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. YEa, but Auguſtine ſaith, Sacerdos, vt perfectus medicus, primum ſciat curare peccata ſua, & poſtea aliena vulnera detergere: The Prieſt as a cunning Phyſition, muſt firſt know how to cure his owne ſins, before he can heale anothers wounds: De ſalutaribus docum.cap.52. And in another place: Quærat ſacerdotem ſcientem ligare & ſoluere, ne ambo cadant in foueam: Let him ſeeke a Prieſt that knoweth how to binde and looſe, leſt both fall into the ditch, De pœnitent.diſt.1.cap.88. But ſuch an one cannot be had in euery pariſh: for many times the pariſh Prieſt is worſe then he that commeth to be confeſſed: ſuch an one, Auguſtine ſaith, is not to be taken, and therefore men ſhould not in that caſe binde themſelues to their popiſh Prieſt.

Argum. Saint Iames ſaith: Confeſſe your faults one to another, and pray one for another that you may be healed, for the prayer of the righteous auaileth much, &c. As wee muſt pray one for another, ſo wee muſt confeſſe our faults, but it is not only the Prieſts part to pray, but euery righteous mans part, (vnleſſe you will ſay, that there are none righteous but Prieſts:) Ergo, we may confeſſe to any righteous man, ſooner then to an vnrighteous Prieſt.

Synod.Colonienſ.part.7.cap.33. Magnopere neceſſarium iudicamus, vt Sacerdos, qui à confeſſionibus eſt, ſit integer, eruditus, ſilentij tenax, alioqui diſſipandis, magis quam paſcendis ouibus videbitur idoneus: We thinke it requiſite, that the Prieſt which receiueth confeſſions, be vpright, learned, ſilent, otherwiſe he is more like to ſpill the ſheepe, then to fill, or feede them, &c. But euery popiſh pariſh-Prieſt is not ſuch: Ergo, the people are not bound to confeſſe vnto them.

Diſt.6.de pœnit.c.1. Sacerdoti meliori confiteatur: Let a man confeſſe to the beſt Prieſt. C.3.Vrbanus alloweth to confeſſe to another Prieſt, pro ignorantia, for the ignorance of their owne Prieſt. *Sext. decretal.lib.5.tit.10.c.2. Bonifac.*8. The Biſhop may giue leaue to his ſubiect, Idoneum eligere confeſſorem, to chuſe a fit Confeſſor. Therefore it is not neceſſarie to confeſſe to the pariſh-prieſt. Clement.lib.3.tit.3.c.2. Licence is granted to the Friers to heare confeſſions: Extrauag.commun.lib.5.tit.3.c.2. Ioan.de Poliaco did hold, that Iterum confitendum eſt: That notwithſtanding confeſſion made to any other, they muſt confeſſe to their owne Prieſt, which is by Pope Iohn 22. condemned for an error: ſo that they themſelues are euident witneſſes, that it is not neceſſarie to confeſſe to the pariſh-prieſt.

Regul.contract.qu.229.

Baſil ſaith: Quemadmodum corporis morbos, &c. As the diſeaſes of the bodie men reueale not to euery one, but to thoſe which know how to heale them, Ita & peccatorum reuelatio ijs fieri debet, qui mederi nouerint: So the reuealing of ſinnes muſt be made to thoſe, which can tell how to heale them.

Confeſſ.lib.11. cap.4.

Auguſtine in the place laſt before recited, thus further ſaith: What haue I to doe with men to heare my confeſſions, addeth further: Curioſum genus ad cognoſcendam vitam alienam, & deſidioſum ad corrigendam ſuam: A curious ſort of men to enquire of anothers life, and ſlouthfull to correct their owne: Quid à me quærunt audire qui ſim, cum à te audire nolint qui ſint? Why would they heare of me who I am, refuſing to heare of thee who they are? I will ſhew my ſelfe to them, qui mihi congratulari cupiunt, cum audierunt, quantum ad te accedam munere tuo, which will reioyce with me when they heare how neere I come vnto thee, by thy gift: & orare pro me, quando audierunt, quantum retardor pondere meo, and pray with me, when they heare how much I am hindred by mine owne heauineſſe. Hence it is euident, that a man is not of neceſſitie bound to confeſſe vnto his owne pariſh prieſt, being ignorant, and vnfit to aduiſe or comfort a penitent ſinner.

Harm.ſect.8. pag.240.

So the confeſſion of Sweueland, chap.20. Our Preachers doe exhort men to confeſſe their ſins,-- that a man ſhould ſecretly ſeeke for comfort, counſell, doctrine, and at the hands of a man, that is a Chriſtian, and wiſe, yet by commandement they vrge no man, &c.

That the acts of penance, as contrition, confeſſion, are meritorious; is both contrarie to the Scripture: for after Dauid had confeſſed his ſinne in the preſence of the Prophet Nathan, 2.Sam.12.13. yet he prayeth vnto God in this manner, Haue mercie vpon me according to the multitude of thy mercies: he aſcribeth all to Gods mercie, nothing to the merite of his confeſſion.

Saint Ambroſe witneſſeth the ſame, in 1. ad Epheſ. Homines ſic benedicit Deus, &c. God ſo bleſſeth men, that he beſtoweth the gift of grace vpon them, not according to their merits, but according to his mercie.

The Gloſſe vpon their own Canons, diſtinct.1.de pœnitent.c.37. thus teſtifieth, Fit confeſſio ad oſtenſionem pœnitentiæ, non ad impetrationem veniæ: Confeſſion is made to ſhew repentance, not to obtaine pardon.

This truth alſo is ſealed: Richard Colins troubled for ſaying, That in all things wherein hee offended God, he ſhould onely ſhriue himſelfe to God; and in which things he offended man, he ſhould ſhriue himſelfe to man, Fox pag.832. Ergo, not neceſſarie alwaies to be confeſſed to a Prieſt. See before of the merit of contrition, err.55.

AVguſtine ſaith contrarie, Non tantum laici ſed etiam ſacerdotes vna die eſſe non debent ſine pœnitentia: Not only lay men, but not Prieſts ought to be one day without repentance, In Apocal. hom.2. His reaſon is, becauſe they cannot be one day without ſinne.

Againe, the Communion is often to be receiued: ſaith our Sauiour, This doe as oft as ye drinke it in remembrance of me. S. Ambroſe: Accipe quotidie, quod tibi quatidie proſit: Take that euery day, which may euery day profit thee. He that deſerueth not, or is not fit to receiue euery day, is not fit to receiue after a yeere, De Sacram.lib.5.c.4. Therefore alſo we are often to examine and confeſſe our ſelues, ſeeing that without triall and examination, we muſt not approach to the Lords table: 1.Cor.11.28. Let a man examine himſelfe, &c.

Hom.2.in Pſal.30. Harm.ſect.8. pag.228.

Chryſoſtome ſaith, as he is alleaged in the confeſſion of Sweueland, chap.3. of abuſes. Acknowledge thy ſinnes, that thou maiſt doe them away: if thou art aſhamed to ſhew thy ſinnes to any man, then vtter them euery day in thine heart.

Damianus a Goes de motib.Æthiop.

It is the vſe of the Æthiopike Church at this day, to confeſſe, as ſoone as they haue committed any ſinne: yea, ſometime they receiue euery day, and then they confeſſe euery day: as Zaga Zabo their Biſhop teſtifieth.

Matthæus Dymonetus Martyr at Lyons, anno 1553. The true confeſſion ought to bee made, not to the Prieſt once a yeere, but euery day to God, and vnto ſuch whom wee haue offended. Fox pag.908.

THE

THE SEVENTH QVESTION, of ſatisfaction.

THis queſtion containeth theſe parts: Firſt, whether the ſinne being forgiuen, there remaine any puniſhment.

2 Whether the temporall puniſhment of this life may be redeemed by good works.

3 Whether the wrath of God may be ſatisfied for ſinne, and the puniſhment due vnto the ſame.

4 Whether one man may ſatisfie for another: of theſe now in their order.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE PVNISHment remaine, the ſinne being once pardoned.

The Papiſts.

THey doe affirme, that it may ſtand with the iuſtice of God to forgiue the ſinne committed, and yet reſerue the puniſhment, Concil. Triden. ſeſſ. 14. can. 14. 62. Error.

Argum. The Lord forgaue vnto Dauid the ſinne of adulterie and murder, which he had committed, yet he puniſhed him in the death of his childe, 2. Sam. 12. 13. 14. Bellarm. lib. 4. cap. 2. 2. Sam. 12. 13. 14.

Anſwere. That Croſſe was laid vpon Dauid, not as a puniſhment of his ſinne, but as a fatherly correction or chaſtiſement, to exerciſe him and make him more carefull for the time following: as Auguſtine ſaith, writing vpon the ſame example: Subſecutus eſt illius comminationis effectus, vt pietas hominis in illa humilitate exerceretur, atque probaretur: The effect of the threatning immediatly followed, that Dauids godlines might thereby be tried and proued: He ſaith not, that Dauid might thereby be puniſhed. De peccat. merit. & remiſſ. lib. 2. 34.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, but the Scripture ſaith, that Dauids ſinne was the cauſe of the death of his childe, becauſe by this deede thou haſt cauſed the enemies of God to blaſpheme, the child that is borne, ſhall die, 2. Sam. 12. 14. 2. Sam. 12. 14.

Anſwere. This place rather maketh againſt the Ieſuite: for Dauid is not heere puniſhed in his childe for the deede which he had done, but becauſe in the deede doing he had giuen offence to the enemies of God, both to ſtop their mouthes, that they ſhould not accuſe Gods iuſtice in ſparing Dauid; and to make him more carefull afterward, the Lord ſent this croſſe: as Chryſoſtome ſaith, Hom. de pœnitent. Propter hoc imponit nobis pœnam non de peccatis ſumens ſupplicium, ſed ad futura nos corrigens: For this cauſe God laieth puniſhment vpon vs, not to reuenge our ſinnes, but to correct vs for afterward.

Bellarm. 2. Death is the puniſhment of originall ſinne, and yet although that ſinne be forgiuen vs, death notwithſtanding followeth: Ergo, the puniſhment remaineth after the ſinne remitted.

Anſw. 1. Though death came in firſt by ſinne, yet is it not now vnto the children of God ſo much a puniſhment of ſinne, as an end of their miſerie, and an entrance to a better life: ſinne indeede is a ſting of death, but our ſinnes being forgiuen vs in Chriſt, death hath loſt his ſting, 1. Cor. 15, 55. So death remaineth, but without a ſting, it is no more a puniſhment of ſinne to the children of God: ſo then, as the guilt of ſinne is taken away, but not the blot or ſtaine thereof, ſo the ſting of death, which is the guilt of ſinne, is gone, though corruption and mortalitie remaine. Secondly, the cogitation alſo and remembrance of death, is a notable meane to withdraw our mindes from earthly things, and to prepare vs for the Lord: for this cauſe alſo death remaineth, ſo it is not vnto vs a puniſhment of ſin. 1. Cor. 15. 55.

Thus Auguſtine excellently ſaith: Mortem corporis Deus homini, &c. God inflicted vpon man the death of the bodie for ſinne: but after the remiſſion of ſinne, propter exercendam iuſtitiam, hee hath not taken it away for the exerciſe of iuſtice: de peccator remiſſion. lib. 2. c. 34.

Argum. 2. 1. The Iſraelites were puniſhed for the golden Calfe, and yet God at Moſes requeſt had pardoned their ſinne, Exod. 32. 2. Likewiſe when the people murmured, Numb. 14 God, at the prayer of Moſes, forgaue their ſinne, verſ. 20. I haue forgiuen it according to thy requeſt: yet they all for this ſinne died in the wilderneſſe. 3. So Moſes and Aaron becauſe they did not glorifie God at the waters of ſtrife, receiue this puniſhment, that they ſhould not enter into the land of promiſe, Numb. 20. 12. and yet no man will ſay, but that Moſes and Aaron after this were reconciled to God. 4. Amongſt the Corinthians diuers were puniſhed with death, for vnworthie receiuing the Sacrament, yet were they reconciled to God: therefore the puniſhment of ſinne oftentimes remaineth, euen after the ſinne is forgiuen. Bellarm. lib. 4 de pœnitent. c 2. Numb. 14. 20.

Anſwere. Firſt, the two firſt examples haue the ſame anſwere: 1. That in ſome of them who periſhed through vnbeliefe, neither their ſinne was remitted, nor yet the puniſhment: but the temporall plagues were beginnings and fore-runners of eternall: as Auguſtine ſaith, Vindicta dei hic incipiet, & ardebit vſque ad extremam damnationem: The Lords reuenge beginneth here, and burneth to extreame condemnation. Your owne Canons affirme the ſame: Moſes pro peccatis populi, &c. Moſes entreated for the ſins of the people, but yet obtained no pardon, decr. par. 1. diſt. 50. c. 27. 2. Againe, God at Moſes requeſt did only pardon that great puniſhment, which he had determined in the vtter ouerthrow, and deſtruction of that nation: Numb. 14. 12. I will ſmite them, and make thee a greater nation

Pſal.106.23. than they. And thus the Pſalmiſt expoundeth this place, Pſalm.106.23. Therefore hee minded to deſtroy them, had not Moſes his choſen ſtood in the breach, to turne away his wrath, leaſt he ſhould deſtroy them. 3. And thoſe iudgements were not ſo much puniſhments to that nation, as examples vnto others, both to acknowledge Gods iuſtice and to glorifie him: Numb.14. verſ.20. I haue forgiuen it according to thy requeſt, notwithſtanding all the earth ſhall be filled with the glorie of the Lord: as alſo to 1.Cor.10.6. take heede to offend in the like. 1.Cor.10.6. Theſe are enſamples to vs, to the intent that we ſhould not luſt after euill things, as they luſted.

Secondly, concerning the examples of Moſes and Aaron, and of the Corinthians, I doe anſwere, that theſe were not puniſhments of their ſinnes, (for there is no proportion betweene temporall puniſhment, and the greatneſſe of ſinne) but as Auguſtine well ſaith, as hee is alſo cited in the Decrees, diſtinct.3.de pœnitent.c.7. Vel ad demonſtrationem debitæ miſeriæ, vel ad emendationem labilis vitæ, vel ad exercitationem neceſſariæ patientiæ, &c. Either to demonſtrate the deſerued miſerie, or for the amendment of our vncertaine life, or the exerciſing of neceſſarie patience, the puniſhment abideth a man temporally, whom the ſinne condemneth not eternally. So God doth chaſtiſe his children temporally, either to make them more heedfull, and to draw them more effectually to repentance, or to exerciſe their patience, or for the good example of others: but that their corrections are properly puniſhments for ſinnes, it is not to be thought; neither doe theſe examples proue it. Thus Moſes was corrected, not puniſhed, both that others might take warning by his example, and that he himſelfe ſhould be more carefull not to offend in the like, and that he might thereby be the better prepared, being depriued of the earthly Canaan, to ſeeke for the heauenly.

Our Popiſh Diuines of Doway doe here alſo helpe out with their arguments. 1. They giue this
2.Sam.24.16. marginall note vpon that place, 2 Sam. 24. 16. where Dauid entreated the Lord to ſtay his hand:
2 King.23.26. Temporall puniſhment inflicted, after the guilt of ſinne was remitted. 2. Againe, they further note thus, 2.King.23.26. albeit Manaſſes repented, and was reſtored to Gods fauour, —yet his ſinnes were temporally puniſhed both in himſelfe and his poſteritie, &c.

Contra. I anſwere here, as to the like obiections before, that theſe afflictions came not for the reuenge or puniſhment of ſinne, but for manifeſtation of Gods iuſtice, the example of others, and Annot.in 6.c. Iohan.v.19. pag.480. their owne admonition: as they themſelues doe thus obſerue in a marginall annotation: Or elſe they ſuffer temporall affliction for their warning to abhorre ſinne.

The Proteſtants.

THat our ſinnes being once freely forgiuen vs in Chriſt, there remaineth no puniſhment either temporall or eternall, to be by vs for our ſinnes endured; we proue it thus.

Mark 2.5. *Argum.*1. Chriſt ſaid to the ſicke of the palſie, Mark. 2. 5. Sonne, thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee. Whereby our Sauiour would haue them to vnderſtand, that the ſinne being once forgiuen, the ſickneſſe of the bodie, which was the puniſhment of ſinne, could not continue: for the cauſe being remoued, the effect ceaſeth.

Ierem.31.34. *Argum.*2. Ierem.31.34. The Lord ſaith, I will forgiue their ſinnes, and remember their iniquities no
Ezech.18.22. more. Ezech.18.22. His tranſgreſſions ſhall be mentioned no more vnto him, Iſay.44.22. I haue put away
Iſay.44.22. Micah 7.19. thy tranſgreſſions as a cloud. Mich.7.19. He will caſt all their ſinnes into the bottome of the ſea. Pſal.32.1.
Pſal.32.1. Their ſinne is couered: but the ſinnes of the righteous being once forgiuen, are not couered, no more remembred, caſt into the bottome of the ſea, if they be againe reuiued by puniſhments: Ergo, where ſinne is once freely forgiuen before God, there remaineth no more puniſhment. arg. Caluin.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that God is ſaid, not to remember ſinne, to couer it, to blot it out, though he doth temporally puniſh for it, becauſe he doth not remember it vnto euerlaſting puniſhment.

Contra. Firſt, the Lord ſaith, I will remember their iniquities, not for euer, but no more: If then our ſinnes ſhould be remembred againe, how can it be true, they are remembred no more? to remember no more, and not to remember for euer, are two diuers things. Secondly, Ezech.18.22. it followeth, but in his righteouſneſſe, that he hath done, ſhall he liue: The righteous after his ſinnes are forgiuen, and no more mentioned, liueth in his righteouſneſſe: but to be puniſhed for ſinne, is not to liue in his righteouſneſſe: for ſinne yet liueth, and is reuiued by the puniſhment: Ergo, the righteous after forgiueneſſe obtained, is not puniſhed for ſinne. Thirdly, Iſay. 44. 22. As a miſt or cloude is chaſed of the Sunne, ſo are our ſinnes: but the miſt is wholly diſperſed and diſſolued that nothing of it remaineth: Ergo, ſo are our ſinnes. Fourthly, like as that which caſt into the ſea, and deſcendeth to the bottome, Exod.15.5. riſeth not againe; as the Egyptians are ſaid to haue ſunke downe to the bottome like a ſtone, Exod.
Ierem.51.63. 15.5. And Ierem.51.63. The Prophet vſeth this ſigne to ſignifie the finall deſtruction of Babell; hee bindeth a ſtone to the booke of the curſes againſt Babel, and throweth it into the midſt of Euphrates, ſaying, Thus ſhall Babell bee drowned, and ſhall not riſe, &c. Wherefore our ſinnes in this ſenſe being caſt into the bottome of the ſea, when they are freely forgiuen vs in Chriſt, ſhall riſe no more to iudge vs either in this world or the next.

*Argum.*3. The Prophet Iſay ſaith, The chaſtiſement of our peace was vpon him, 53.5. And hee hath Coloſſ.1.21.22 reconciled vs in the body of his fleſh, to make vs vnblameable, &c. Coloſſ.1.21,22. Therefore Chriſt hath borne all puniſhment due to our ſinne, not onely eternall, but temporall. Hee hath borne our infirmi-
Iſay.53.5. ties, Iſay.53.5. euen all of them, and hath deliuered vs from the curſe of the law, Gal.3.13. Ergo, from Galath 3.13. temporall puniſhments, which are part of our infirmities, and belonging to the curſe.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt hath immediatly ſatisfied for our ſinne and eternall death: but for temporall puniſhment mediatly onely, giuing vs power by his death to ſatisfie for them: *Lib.4 de pœnitent. cap.15. reſponſ. ad argum.*4.

Anſw. Chriſt hath immediatly in his owne bodie ſatisfied for the whole puniſhment of ſinne. 1. Chriſt hath immediatly taken away the curſe of the law, becauſe hee was made a curſe for vs: but temporall puniſhments for ſinne are part of the curſe, which if they remaine ſtill, then are we yet vnder the curſe. 2. Chriſt alſo hath borne our infirmities; but if hee giue power onely to vs to beare, then we beare them, and not he. 3. Againe, if any puniſhment for ſinne yet remaine, then are we not yet at perfect peace with God, becauſe his wrath is not yet fully ſatisfied: But Chriſt hath vpon the Croſſe ſet vs at peace with God, Coloſſ.1.20. Ergo. Coloſſ. 1.20.

The afflictions of this life are the louing corrections of God to admoniſh vs, not plagues to puniſh vs: as Auguſtine ſaith well, Tota miſeria generis humani dolor—medicinalis, non ſententia pœnalis: The miſerie of man is but a medicinall griefe, not a ſentence of puniſhment: in Pſal.138. And againe, Homines cum iſta patiuntur,&c. Men when they ſuffer theſe things, either as in Iob their merits are examined; or as in Herod, their ſinnes puniſhed, epiſt. ad Hieron. Not the righteous then as Iob, but the wicked as Herod are puniſhed for their ſinnes.

Let vs ſee what further euidence wee haue euen from the lawes of men. Firſt, the Ciuill law thus teſtifieth: Cod. lib.4. tit.14. leg.6. Seruus liber factus non tenetur,&c. A ſeruant being made free, cannot be chalenged for any thing committed againſt his maſter before his freedome. Cod. lib.9. tit.51. leg.1. Antonin. Reſtitutio à principe conceſſa,&c. Reſtitution granted by the Prince, in integrum reſtituit, doth reſtore a man fully add wholly. Leg.4. Ex indulgentia reuerſus ab exilio,&c. He that by the Princes pardon is returned from exile, is not bound to his former creditors. If then the making free of a ſeruant, doth exempt him from all former dangers and penalties; if the indulgence of the Prince doth reſtore a man fully, and freeth him from all debts and creditors, if this equitie bee in the law of man; how much more ſhall not the true libertie, which wee haue in Chriſt, and the moſt bountifull indulgence of God, together with our reſtitution in Chriſt, diſcharge vs from all debts and puniſhments whatſoeuer belonging to our ſinnes?

The Canon law is a witneſſe alſo for vs: Diſtinct.3. de pœnitent. c.83. Subſecutum illius commi-nationis effectum,&c. That which God threatned to Dauid, came to paſſe after his ſinne was forgiuen him, Vt pietas hominis in illa humilitate exerceretur,&c. That the mans godlineſſe might by humilitie be exerciſed and tried,&c. It remained not then as a puniſhment, but as a triall and aduertiſement.

The Maſter of the Sentences to the ſame purpoſe: Lib.4. diſt.4.f. Soluto reatu peccati pœna temporalis manet,&c. The guilt of ſinne being diſſolued, the temporall puniſhment remaineth, that that life ſhould more ſtudiouſly bee ſought for, which is free from all paine. And yet more euidently: Diſtinct.15.a. Quinque modis flagella contingunt,&c. The Lord layeth his ſcourges fiue manner of wayes, that by patience their (merite) or vertue may be encreaſed, as in Iob: Ad cuſtodiam virtutum, To be a ſafegard to their vertue, that pride tempt them not, as in Paul; to correct their ſinnes, as Mary became leprous, Moſes ſiſter; or to the glorie of God, as in the man borne blinde, Iohn 9. or for the iudgement of puniſhment, as in Herod. None of all theſe reaſons wee refuſe: ſo then corrections or chaſtiſements the righteous taſte of, iudgements and puniſhments for ſinne are proper to the wicked.

1 Further Chryſoſtome ſaith: I doe teſtifie, that if any man depart from his former ſinnes, and vow from his heart vnto God, Se nunquam ad illa rediturum, nihil aliud Deus requiret ad ſatisfactionem vlteriorem, That he will neuer returne to them, that God will require no other ſatisfaction,&c. There then remaineth no puniſhment to be ſatisfied for after the ſinne is remitted. De beat. Philogon.

2 So alſo Auguſtine: Chriſtus ſuſcipiendo pœnam, & non ſuſcipiendo culpam, & culpam deleuit & pœnam: Chriſt in taking vpon him the puniſhment and not the fault, hath blotted out both the puniſhment and fault. Serm.13. de verbis Domini.&c.

3 Latter confeſſ. of Heluetia: c.15. To iuſtifie in the Apoſtles diſputation, doth ſignifie to remit ſinnes, to abſolue from the fault, and the puniſhment thereof, to receiue into fauour,&c. but in remiſſion of ſinnes we are iuſtified, therefore the fault is alſo pardoned. Harm. ſect.9. pag.242.

4 Their owne diuine Canus ſaith: Non eſt plene remiſſa culpa, quamdiu peccator eſt reus ſoluendæ pœnæ: The fault is not fully remitted, as long as the ſinner is guiltie of paying the puniſhment. Loc. Theolog. lib.12 ſect. ex quo.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER THE TEMporall puniſhment of this life may be redeemed by good workes.

The Papiſts.

63. Error. THat wee may redeeme and buy out as it were the puniſhments due to ſinne in this life by our good workes, ſauing whereas God hath certainly determined to puniſh, as in Dauids caſe it is their generall ſentence. They hold alſo that the temporall paines of Purgatorie may be in like manner redeemed.

Ierem.18.7.

*Argum.*1. God purpoſed to deſtroy the Citie of Niniuie: but that, being pleaſed with their faſting, ſackcloth and prayers, he ſaued the Citie, Ierem.18.7. I will ſpeake ſuddenly againſt a nation to deſtroy it, &c. but if the nation repent of their wickedneſſe, I alſo will repent of the plague. Wherefore temporall puniſhments may be by good workes redeemed, Bellarm.lib.4.c.3.

Pſal.51.1.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not: God ſheweth mercie vpon our repentance: Ergo, repentance redeemeth the puniſhment due, &c. for if it be of mercie that God ſpareth vs, as the Apoſtle ſaith, the bountifulneſſe of God calleth thee to repentance, Rom.2.4. then is it not of our workes. Secondly, prayer and faſting are but effectuall ſignes of repentance, they are not meritorious cauſes of forgiueneſſe. Dauid faſted and prayed, yet he ſueth vnto Gods mercie, Pſal.51.1. According to the multitude of thy mercies doe away mine offences.

Dan.4.24.

*Argum.*2. Daniel ſaid to Nabuchadnezzar the King; Redeeme thy ſinnes by righteouſneſſe, and thine iniquities by ſhewing mercie to the poore, chap.4.24. Bellarm.cap.3.

Gen.27.40.

Anſw. The text is rather thus to be read: 1. Breake off thy ſinnes by righteouſneſſe: that is, leaue off to doe euill: as it is by Iunius tranſlated more agreeable to the Hebrew: ſo is the word [illegible] parach, interpreted, Geneſ.27.40. Thou ſhalt breake his yoke from thy necke: 2. For if redemption be here properly vnderſtood, it would follow that men may redeeme not only the puniſhment of their ſinnes, but the ſinnes themſelues: for Daniel ſaith, redeeme thy ſinnes, not the puniſhment of thy ſinnes: and ſo take Chriſts office out of his hand. 3. By true and faithfull repentance, and other good works proceeding of faith, we may auoide Gods heauie iudgement due to our ſinnes, yet not for the merite or ſatisfaction of any worke, but through the merites onely of Chriſt. See this argument anſwered more fully before, queſt.5.part.6.

The Proteſtants.

CONcerning the paines in Purgatorie to be redeemed in this life, we haue proued before ſufficiently, that this Purgatorie place is but a Popiſh dreame, and therfore no ſuch paines there to be feared: And for the chaſtiſements of this life, where God ſeeth they are neceſſarie, he inflicteth them vpon his children; when as he ſeeth other cauſe, hee ſpareth vs for his mercie, his iuſtice is not bought out with the price of our workes.

Ierem.31.34.

Rom 3.24.

*Argum.*1. As our ſinnes are forgiuen, ſo is the puniſhment due vnto them: but our ſinnes are forgiuen vs freely in Chriſt, Ierem.31.34. Ergo, ſo is the puniſhment.

S.Paul alſo ſaith, Wee are freely iuſtified by grace. Rom.3.24. by the forgiueneſſe of our ſinnes, through the redemption that is in Chriſt: Ergo, not by the redemption of our owne workes: argum. Melancth.Caluin.lib.3.inſtitut.c.4.ſect.25.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it is of grace, that our workes doe redeeme the temporall puniſhment, becauſe they haue this grace and power in Chriſts death: ſo then Chriſt doth freely forgiue our ſinne, and the euerlaſting puniſhment due vnto it, he doth freely forgiue alſo the temporall puniſhment, in giuing vs grace freely to ſatisfie for it, cap.13.reſponſ.ad 5.argum.c.14.reſp.ad lib.4.de pœnitent.

Rom.11.6.

Contra. This is an impious diſtinction, and contrarie to the Scriptures. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith freely, through the redemption of Chriſt, verſ.24. Ergo not by the redemption of our workes. 2. Againe, the puniſhment of ſinne is taken away in our reconciliation vnto God: for God puniſheth the wicked and his enemies, not thoſe which are reconciled: But our reconciliation is by faith in Chriſts blood, Rom.3.25. Ergo, not by workes. 3. Further, the forgiueneſſe of our ſinnes (ſaith the Apoſtle) through the patience of God: but Gods patience is ſeene in the forbearing the puniſhment of ſinne: So then Gods righteouſneſſe in forgiuing our ſinnes, and his patience in forbearing or doing away the puniſhment, are here by S.Paul aſcribed to faith in Chriſts blood: Ergo, ſatisfaction is no more made for the puniſhment, than for the ſinne it ſelfe. 4. Laſtly, grace and workes cannot ſatisfie or worke together, Rom.11.6. If it be of worke, it is no more of grace; if of grace, it is no more of worke: How then is it poſſible that we ſhould ſatisfie both by grace and worke together?

Matth.3.8.10.

*Argum.*2. That Purgatorie paines are not redeemed by any workes of this life, that place ſheweth, Matth.3 8. Bring forth worthie fruits of repentance: By theſe workes, teſtifying repentance, men doe flye from the wrath to come, verſ.7 and the tree that bringeth not forth theſe fruits, is caſt into the fire, verſ.10. This is the euerlaſting wrath of God and fire, which wee doe not ſatisfie for, but preuent by theſe fruits: ſo theſe are workes to be performed by the liuing, they pertaine not to the dead: they preuent euerlaſting deſtruction through faith in Chriſt, for the which, they themſelues confeſſe, our workes doe not ſatisfie.

Iob.9.3.

Againe, there muſt be ſome proportion betweene the price of redemption, and the thing redeemed: but ſo is there not betweene our good works, and the puniſhments due to our ſinnes: for as Iob ſaith, We cannot anſwere him one thing of a thouſand, Iob.9.3. Bernard alſo ſaith, Quis amplius grunniet dicens, nimium laboramus, nimium ieiunamus, cum nec milleſima, immo nec minimæ parti debitorum ſuorum valet reſpondere? ſerm.de quadrup.debit. Who will now murmure and ſay, we labour too much, faſt too much, when as wee are not able to anſwere the thouſandth part, no not the leaſt part of our debt? But how can we redeeme our puniſhments by our works, vnleſſe our works were in waight and number anſwerable vnto them? Ergo, we cannot redeeme them by any ſuch meanes.

Futher. 1. Heſychius ſaith, Chriſtus nobis propitiatio factus, ergo in ipſo omnino pœnitentiæ ſacrificium miniſtratur & agitur,&c. Chriſt is our propitiation, therefore in him altogether the ſacrifice of repentance is adminiſtred and performed,&c. There is nothing then remaining to be bought out by our ſelues: and S. Chryſoſtome, Pœnitentia tua non valet tantam abſtergere malorum luem: Thy repentance is not able to wipe away ſuch a companie of euils. Leuit.7.lib.2. De beato Philogon.

2 S. Auguſtine ſaith, Omnium piorum,&c. in huius vitæ infirmitate gementium ſpes vna eſt, quod aduocatum habemus: This is the onely hope of all that doe grone vnder the infirmitie of this life, that we haue an aduocate,&c. our owne workes cannot then eaſe our groanings, or deliuer vs from puniſhment. Cont.2.epiſt. Pelag.lib.3. c.5.

3 Confeſſ.of Wittemberg.c.15. As touching prayer, faſting, giuing of almes, and ſuch like workes, we thinke that they are diligently to be performed, yet that they haue a farre other vſe, then that they ſhould by their merites either ſatisfie God for our ſinnes, or apply vnto vs the merite of Chriſt. Harm.ſect.8. p.240.

4 S. Gregorie ſaith: Ipſa noſtra perfectio culpa non caret, niſi hoc ſeuerus index — miſericorditer penſet: Euen our perfection is not without fault, vnleſſe the ſeuere Iudge doe weigh it in mercie,&c. if then in our beſt workes we haue neede of mercie, there is no merite to buy out or ſatisfie. Moral.lib.5. c.8.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER A MAN may truly ſatisfie the wrath of God, for the puniſhment due vnto ſinne.

The Papiſts.

It is not a ſufficient ſatisfaction, to beleeue that Chriſt hath aboundantly ſatisfied for vs; neither yet is it enough to amend and correct our liues: but God alſo muſt be ſatisfied for our ſinnes, by the puniſhment and chaſtiſement of our ſelues, as by affliction laid vpon vs by God, or penance enioyned by the Prieſt, or by prayer, faſting, almes-deedes, which we doe take vp our ſelues: *Concil.Trid. ſeſſ.14.can.13.Rhemiſt.Matth.*11.21. 64.Error.

Bellarmine alſo affirmeth, that Gods grace aſſiſting vs, wee may ſatisfie God for the temporall puniſhment of ſinne, ex proprijs, of our owne, ad æqualitatem, to an equalitie, ex condigno, condignly, or worthily, *cap.*8.

*Argum.*1. Matth.3.8. Bring forth fruits worthie repentance: he preacheth ſatisfaction by doing worthie fruits of penance, as faſting, prayer, almes, and the like, *Rhemiſt.Bellar.c.*8. Matth.3.8.

Anſwere. 1. Fruites worthie of repentance, are no ſatisfaction for ſinne, or the puniſhment thereof, but arguments of true repentance, effects, not any part thereof. 2. Againe, in this place mention is made of euerlaſting deſtruction, verſ.10. Euery tree that bringeth not forth good fruite, is hewen downe and caſt into the fire: wherefore if by worthie workes, they vnderſtand ſatisfactorie works, then will it follow that ſatisfaction may bee made not onely for temporall, but eternall puniſhment. 3. Further, worthie workes, are expounded to be good workes, verſ.10. And Bellarmine expoundeth thus, To doe workes worthie repentance, is ſo to worke, as it beſeemeth him that is penitent: Bellar.ibid. This therefore is nothing elſe, but newneſſe and holineſſe of life, whereby we doe ſhew our effectuall repentance. 4. This place proueth neither equalitie, nor condignitie, nor a propertie of our owne in ſatisfaction; which all three are againſt the Scripture: there is no equalitie, we cannot anſwere God one of a thouſand, Iob.9.3. No propertie, 1.Cor.4.7. If thou haſt receiued it, why reioyceſt thou, as though thou haddeſt not receiued it? No condignitie, Luk.17.10. When we haue done all that is commanded, we are but vnprofitable ſeruants. 5. Neither will this euaſion ſerue, that by grace our workes ſatisfie: for grace and workes are ſo diuers, that they cannot concurre together: Rom.11.6. If it be of workes, it is no more of grace,&c. grace taketh away workes, and workes take away grace, if they bee ioyned as working cauſes together. Iob.9.3. 1.Cor.4.7. Luk.17.10. Rom.11.6.

*Argum.*2. Iudge your ſelues, that you be not iudged, 1.Cor.11.31. Wee muſt puniſh our ſelues according to the waight of the ſinnes paſt, Rhemiſt. And againe, ſaith the Apoſtle, What great puniſhment hath it wrought in you? 2.Cor.7.11. This is nothing elſe but the ſatisfactorie puniſhment for our ſinnes, *Bellarm.lib.*4.*cap.*8. 1.Cor.11.31. 2.Cor.7.11.

Anſwere. The Apoſtle meaneth nothing elſe, but an heartie and earneſt ſorrow for our ſinnes, whereby we doe iudge and condemne, and as it were puniſh our ſelues, yet we are farre from making any ſatisfaction hereby for our ſinnes: as Auguſtine ſaith, Omnis iniquitas puniatur neceſſe eſt, aut à pœnitente homine, aut vindicante Deo: — vis non puniat? puni tu: — antequam ipſe intendat vt puniat, tu confitendo præueni & puni. All ſinne muſt needes be puniſhed either of man himſelfe repenting, or God reuenging: if thou wilt not haue him puniſh, puniſh thou: before hee intend to puniſh, preuent him by thy confeſſion, and puniſh thy ſelfe,&c. So then this puniſhment of our ſelues is nothing elſe, but true repentance and confeſſion of our ſinnes. In Pſal.58.

2 Againe, this puniſhment, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, was wrought in them, it was not enioyned them by the Prieſt. 3. Beſide, this repentance, whereof this puniſhment was an effect, was to ſaluation, verſ.10 which was the eſcaping of euerlaſting death: but for euerlaſting puniſhment they themſelues dare preſcribe no ſatisfaction but in Chriſt. 4. The Apoſtle ſheweth the end and vſe of this puniſhment, which was to cleare themſelues, and to worke in them a zeale and deſire: not to ſatisfie.

Argum.3. If good workes may merite or deſerue eternall life, much more may they auert and Matth.20,8. turne away temporall puniſhment: but the firſt is true, Matth 20.8. the kingdome of God is called 2.Timoth 4.8. wages or reward: 2.Timoth.4.8. it is called the crowne of iuſtice, which God the iuſt Iudge ſhall giue. So it is a reward iuſtly giuen to mens deſerts: Ergo, good workes may much more redeeme temporall puniſhment, Bellarm.cap.8.lib.4. de pœnitent.

Anſw. We vtterly denie, that heauen can be merited with good workes. Firſt, S. Paul hauing firſt
Rom.6.23. ſaid, the wages of ſinne is death, addeth further, the gift of God is eternall life, Rom.6.23. he calleth it a gift, and not wages.

Secondly, it is called in the parable, a reward or wages; but not in reſpect of the workmans labour, but of Gods couenant and promiſe. For 1. if it were by deſert, then he that laboured twelue houres, had deſerued more, than hee that wrought but one. As S. Ambroſe ſaith, de vocat. Gentium, lib.1.3. Hora vndecima intromiſſos in vineam,&c. They which were ſent into the vineyard at the eleuenth houre, the diuine indulgence made equall to the labourers of the whole day, not paying the wages of their labour, but powring out the riches of his goodneſſe, &c. that they which endured much labour, and receiued no more then the laſt, ſhould vnderſtand, Se demum gratiæ non operis accepiſſe mercedem: that they receiued a gift of grace, not a reward of the worke. 2. And the Lord ſaith, verſ.15. Is it not lawfull for mee to doe as I will with mine owne? but if they had deſerued it, it had beene their owne.
Rom.4.4. 3. S. Paul alſo directly affirmeth, that wages is not counted of fauour, but by debt: let them ſay then if they dare, that to obtaine heauen is not of Gods fauour.

Thirdly, 1. It is a crowne of iuſtice, but not of ours, but of the iuſtice of faith in Chriſt: as the Apo-
2.Timoth.4.7. ſtle ſaith, verſ.7. I haue kept the faith. 2. And it is Gods iuſtice to giue it in reſpect of his promiſe, not of our deſert, as Auguſtine ſaith, Ex miſericordia promiſſam, ſed iam ex iuſtitia ſoluendam: Promiſed of mercie, but now in iuſtice to be payed: ſerm.2.de verb. Apoſtoli.

Argum 4. Bellarmine bringeth in a great troupe of ancient writers to ſpeake for ſatisfaction, but they are not ſo pregnant to ſerue his turne: our generall anſwere to them all is this:

Firſt, that the moſt of his witneſſes are partiall, and not olde enough to be credited, ſuch as liued in the latter ages of the Church, as Rabanus, Rodulphus, Damianus, with other.

Secondly, many writings paſſe vnder the names of Cyprian, Ambroſe, Hierome, Auguſtine, which were not theirs: as there goeth vnder Cyprians name, a booke De inuentione capitis Baptiſtæ,&c. Of the inuention of Iohn Baptiſts head: In which treatiſe mention is made of Athanaſius, and Theophilus of Alexandria, and Pipinus, that were long after Cyprians time. The like exception may be made againſt ſome of the reſt.

Thirdly, the authentike fathers ſpeake of three ſatisfactions: firſt, of ſatisfaction made vnto men, as vnto the whole Church, or to any other that are offended: and in this ſenſe ſpeaketh Cyprian, epiſtol.3 ad Cornelium, ſpeaking of Schiſmatikes, Si cum precibus & ſatisfactionibus veniant, audiantur,&c. If they come with entreating and ſatisfactions, let them be heard: Si minas & maledicta ingerunt: If they threaten or curſe, let them be refuſed: the ſatisfaction is to bee made to them, whom they threaten, but they threaten not God, but men: in this ſenſe alſo, the olde tranſlation readeth, Act.24.10. Act.24.10. That Paul ſatisfied, that is, anſwered for himſelfe: and 1.Pet.3.18. Be readie to ſatisfie eue-
1.Pet.3.18. rie man, that asketh a reaſon,&c. this ſatisfaction then is made vnto men.

2.Cor.7.11. Secondly, there is a ſatisfaction made vnto a mans owne conſcience, as 2.Cor.7.11. What clearing of your ſelues, defence, or ſatisfaction, (as Eraſmus readeth, and the olde interpreter in other places tranſlateth the word ἀπολογίας,) hath it wrought: ſo Ambroſe ad virgin. lapſam. c.8. cited by Bellarm. Grande, grandem ſatisfactionem: a great ſinne, requireth great ſatisfaction, that is, great ſorrow, to ſatisfie and ſettle the conſcience.

Thirdly, they ſpeake of ſatisfying God, but either in hyperbolicall ſpeech, commending thereby the neceſſitie of repentance, whereby God is, as it were, ſatisfied, the better to ſtirre vp men thereunto: or elſe, they vnderſtand a ſatisfaction, not of Gods iuſtice, but of Gods commandement and will, in obeying his voyce, by comming to repentance, which God in mercie accepteth of: ſo Tertullian ſaith, Habes cui ſatisfacias, & quidem volenti: You haue one, who is willing to bee ſatisfied: lib.de pœnitent.

Numb.5.7. Our Doway diſputers doe here thus put in their verdite. 1. Vpon that place, Numb.5.7. They ſhall confeſſe their ſinne, and reſtore the principall, and the fifth part: They thus obſerue: that the partie which had offended was bound to make reſtitution, and for further ſatisfaction to God, they muſt offer ſacrifice, &c.

Numb.29.7. 2 Likewiſe Numb.29.7. The tenth day of the moneth, you ſhall afflict your ſoules: whereupon they giue this marginall note: for the remiſſion of ſinnes, the penitents did cooperate by penall workes of faſting and abſtinence, &c.

Contra.1. Satisfaction by reſtitution to be made to men, we hold neceſſarie vnto true repentance: ſatisfaction to God cannot bee made by any but Chriſt: of whoſe all-ſufficient ſacrifice, the legall ſacrifices were types and figures: wherein the faithfull ſhewed their obedience, in ſatisfying the will and commandement of God: but it was not the ſacrificers or offerers act, that appeaſed the wrath of God: their ſacrificing ſheweth the contrarie, for therein they declared their faith, in the onely ſatisfactorie ſacrifice of Chriſt, ſhadowed forth and repreſented by thoſe ſacrifices.

2. Faſting and prayer ſerueth to humble the ſoule, which is required; not as a cauſe of remiſſion, which is freely granted in Chriſt, but as a meanes, way or condition, which is by the penitent to bee performed, and of God in Chriſt graciouſly accepted: and they, in ſaying, that theſe things cooperate to the remiſſion of ſinnes, doe manifeſtly contradict the Apoſtle, who ſaith: We are iuſtified freely by Rom.3.24. his grace, through the redemption that is in Chriſt Ieſus.

The Proteſtants.

THat ſatisfaction ought to be made vnto men, either by reſtitution, as Zacheus reſtored that which he had wrongfully gotten; or by reconciling our ſelues to thoſe, whom wee haue offended, as Matth.5.24. we doe willingly grant: but that the wrath of God may be appeaſed and ſatisfied for our Matth.5.24. ſinnes, or the puniſhment due vnto the ſame by any worke of ours, it is a great blaſphemie, and cleane contrarie to the courſe of Scripture.

*Argum.*1. That it is ſufficient to returne vnto God by true repentance and amendment of life, without any ſatisfaction, either for our ſinne, or the puniſhment of ſinne: the Prophet Ezechiel ſheweth, Ezech.18.22. where ſpeaking of the conuerſion of a wicked man, he ſaith, His iniquities ſhall no more be mentioned, or laid to his charge, chap.18.22. But if after the ſinne remitted, there ſhould remaine ſome puniſhment behinde, his ſinnes ſhould ſtill be remembred and mentioned: there is therefore no ſatiſfaction for the puniſhment of ſinne, becauſe none remaineth.

Bellarmine anſwereth, God remembreth no more their ſinnes, in that hee doth not puniſh them by eternall death, *cap.15.reſponſ.ad argum.*1.

Anſw. When the righteous ſuffer temporall chaſtiſements, hath God their ſinnes then in remembrance, or hath he not? If he haue, then the Prophet ſhould ſpeake vntruly, who ſaith, their iniquities are not mentioned: if he haue not, it commeth to our ſaying, that God doth chaſtiſe his children without reſpect had to their ſinnes, or remembrance thereof. I ſuppoſe this Dilemma will put the Ieſuite to ſome buſineſſe before it be well anſwered.

2. Againe, verſ.20. the Prophet ſaith, The righteouſneſſe of the righteous ſhall be vpon him, and the wickedneſſe of the wicked ſhall be vpon him: but now if the righteous be puniſhed for his ſinne paſt, the wickedneſſe ſhall be vpon the righteous man, which is contrarie to the ſaying of the Prophet.

3. Further, Ezech.33.12. Impietas impij non nocebit ei: The wickedneſſe of the wicked ſhall not Ezech.33.12. hurt him, in that day he turneth from his wickedneſſe: but if he be puniſhed for his wickedneſſe, after he be returned, then doth his wickedneſſe hurt him. Bellarmine anſwereth as before, that his wickedneſſe doth not hurt him, or hinder him from euerlaſting life, lib.4.c.11. *Cont.*1. Chaſtiſements and corrections, which God laieth vpon his children, to make them more carefull and circumſpect, are profitable, and not hurtfull at all, as the Prophet Dauid ſaith, Pſalme 119. verſ.71. It is good for Pſal.119.71. me, that I haue been afflicted: But puniſhments and iudgements for ſinne, how are they not hurtfull, and a wound vnto the ſoule? 2. So then, as the righteouſneſſe of the righteous ſhall not deliuer him in the day of his tranſgreſſion; ſo the wickedneſſe of the wicked ſhall not hurt him, verſ.12. but the former righteouſneſſe ſhall not deliuer a man, no not from temporall iudgements: Ergo, the former wickedneſſe of a man ſhall not hurt him, but by his conuerſion he ſhall be deliuered from temporall puniſhments. 3. Further, verſ.17. The way of the Lord is equall, the way of man vnequall: man many time puniſheth, where he forgiueth; but Gods way is not like vnto mans: wherefore God puniſheth not after forgiueneſſe. See a further anſwere to Bellarmines exception before, in the ſecond argument of the firſt part of this Queſtion.

*Argum.*2. Our Sauiour Chriſt required no ſatisfaction to be made vnto God, for her ſinnes that was accuſed of adulterie; but ſaith onely to her, Goe, ſinne no more, Ioh.8.11. Ergo, no ſatisfaction for Ioh.8.11. ſinne is required by the Scripture, argum. Lutheri.

Bellarmine anſwereth; 1. That Chriſt doth not abſolue her from her ſinne, but only from the puniſhment, which was to be ſtoned to death. 2. Or he might ſee ſo great contrition in her, that it was a ſufficient ſatisfaction; as we reade of Mary Magdalene. 3. And Chriſt might by his authoritie at once pardon the fault and the puniſhment, but Miniſters muſt keepe themſelues to the law, &c. Bellar. cap.11.reſp.ad 2.argum.

Contra. Firſt, that Chriſt did pardon her ſinne, it 1. appeareth, in that he ſaith, Goe, ſinne no more: for though ſhe ſinned no more, if this were not pardoned, it was ſufficient to condemne her before God. 2. As for the outward puniſhment of death, Chriſt doth not deale in it, it belonging to worldly gouernours: hee refuſed to be Iudge of an inheritance, Luke 12.14. which is leſſe then to be Iudge Luke 12.14. of life and death.

Secondly, 1. It is like there was not ſuch an extraordinarie contrition in this woman, being immediatly before deprehended in adulterie. 2. And if there had bin ſuch a perfect change, which cannot be without a full purpoſe of amendment; why doth our Sauiour ſay vnto her, Goe, ſinne no more? Maries teares did not ſatisfie for her ſinne, ſhe was ſaued by her faith: her teares declared her loue, Luke 7.47.50. Luke 7.47.50.

Thirdly, though Chriſt had all power in himſelfe, and was aboue his law, yet hee came to fulfill all righteouſneſſe, Matth.3.15. and as hee ſent the leper being cleanſed to the Prieſt, to offer according to Matth 3.15.

the Law, Matth.8. ſo healing the ſpirituall leproſie of this woman, he would not haue omitted the law of ſatisfaction, being as neceſſarie in this ſpirituall caſe (if any ſuch thing were required) as the reſorting of the leper to the Prieſt.

Iſai.43.25. *Argum.*3. Iſai.43.25. I am he that putteth away thine iniquities for mine owne ſake. Likewiſe 53. verſ.4. He hath borne our infirmities, and carried our ſorrowes: the chaſtiſement of our peace was vpon him, and with his ſtripes are wee healed. God of his free mercie doth forgiue our ſinne: Chriſt alſo hath fully ſatisfied for vs: Ergo, there is no ſatisfaction in vs: wee are made whole by his ſtripes, and not our owne.

Likewiſe the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt is the propitiation for our ſinnes, 1.Ioh.2.2. Behold the Lambe of God, that taketh away the ſinnes of the world, Iohn 1.29. Chriſt his owne ſelfe bare our ſinnes 1.Pet.2.24. in his bodie on the tree, 1.Pet.2.24. Ergo, Chriſts death fully and wholly redeemeth vs, there neede no other ſatisfaction.

Bellarm. Firſt, we grant, that Chriſts death is ſufficient to redeeme all the ſinnes of the world, but Chriſts death profiteth not, vnleſſe it be applied by faith, the Sacraments, and other applicatory means and inſtruments, among the which, ſatisfaction is one, for the expiation of temporall puniſhment. Secondly, it is true, that by Chriſts merite wee are onely iuſtified and reconciled, yet this letteth not, but that wee may ſatisfie alſo by the vertue of Chriſts death for temporall puniſhment: *Bellarmine cap.*14.

Contra, Firſt, there 1. is no other meanes appointed for the application of the fruites of Chriſts death, but faith: Rom.3.26. He is a iuſtifier of him, that is of the faith of Ieſus: verſ.22. The righteouſneſſe of God by the faith of Ieſus: verſ.25. To be a reconciliation through faith in his blood: If through faith we are reconciled, iuſtified, we haue righteouſneſſe; all other meanes of application are vnneceſſarie and ſuperfluous. 2. Againe, no workes of ours can applie Chriſts death, no, not good works, Epheſ.2.8.9. Epheſ.2.8.9. Ye are ſaued by grace through faith, not of workes, yea of good workes: verſ.10. Which God hath ordained. 3. That which applieth Chriſts death, applieth his righteouſneſſe for remiſſion of ſinnes, Rom.3.25. but ſatisfaction applieth not Chriſts death for remiſſion of ſinnes, but only to remoue the puniſhment, as they ſay: Ergo, it applieth it not at all.

Secondly, 1. If wee be reconciled and iuſtified by Chriſts death, then are wee at peace with God, Rom.5.1. Rom.5.1. but God doth not puniſh thoſe for their ſinnes, with whom hee is at peace. 2. Againe, Rom.8.33. Rom.8.33. God with Chriſt hath giuen vs all things beſide: Ergo, not remiſſion of ſinne onely, but of the puniſhment alſo. 3. Verſ.33. Who ſhall accuſe the choſen of God, it is God that iuſtifieth: Ergo, ſin is not laid to the charge of them that are iuſtified, and ſo conſequently, they are not for the ſame iudged or puniſhed, ſeeing they are not for the ſame accuſed.

*Argum.*4. If men ſhould ſatisfie by their owne workes, both Chriſts honour is 1. empaired, ſeeing the whole worke is not left to him; our conſcience 2. cannot bee quieted, depending vpon our owne ſatisfaction. 3. And beſide it is impoſſible, ſeeing that man ſinneth euery day, and euery houre, and how can he ſatisfie for ſinnes paſt, continually multiplying new? *argum. Caluin. lib.*3. *Inſtit. c.*4. *ſect.*27.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1. Chriſts honour is more encreaſed, in that he himſelfe doth not onely ſatisfie for our ſinnes, but giueth power to his members in ſome ſort to ſatisfie likewiſe. 2. The conſcience may be ſecure and at peace being aſſured of the remiſſion of ſinnes, though ſome temporall puniſhment remaine. 3. One act of contrition euen in a moment of time may ſatisfie for many mortall ſinnes, how much more one houre, one day of contrition, &c. *Bellarm. cap.*14.

Contra. Firſt, he may as well ſay, it had been for Chriſts honour, to haue taken vp to him vpon the croſſe ſome one of his members, and to haue giuen him power by his death to ſatisfie: but the Scripture ſaith contrarie, Iſai.48.11. I will not giue my glorie to another: Pſal.115.1. Not vnto vs, but vnto thy Name giue the praiſe. Secondly, the Prophet ſaith, There is no reſt in my bones becauſe of thine anger, and of my ſinne, and I roare for the griefe of my heart, Pſal.38.3,8. As long as hee was chaſtiſed for his ſinne, he could finde no reſt, neither in bodie, nor ſoule: how then can the conſcience be at quiet, being vnder the puniſhment of ſinne. Thirdly, it 1. ſeemeth, you thinke it an eaſie matter to ſatisfie for ſinne, being not aſhamed to ſay, that it may be done in a moment: ye know not what true repentance or true contrition is: it worketh in vs, 1. care, 2. cleering of our ſelues, 3. indignation, 4. feare, 5. deſire, 6. zeale, 7. puniſhment, 2.Cor.7.11. Can all theſe be wrought in a moment? 2. And ſeeing that continually a righteous man falleth, euen ſeuen times a day, and riſeth againe, by repentance, Prouerbs 24.16. he hath enough to do ſtill to wreſtle againſt preſent ſinnes: and being alwaies in tranſgreſſion, how can hee ſatisfie God for his tranſgreſſion? for if thou ſtreightly markeſt iniquities, ſaith the Pſalme, quis ſuſtinebit? who is able to ſuſtaine it? Pſal.130.3. Therefore man being compaſſed alwaies with ſinne, cannot ſuſtaine Gods wrath, much leſſe ſatisfie or appeaſe it.

*Argum.*5. The Prophet Iſay ſaith, chap.1.17,18. Ceaſe to doe euill, learne to doe well, &c. Though your ſinnes be as crimſin, I will make them white as ſnow. Here is no ſatisfaction required. Likewiſe, Ieremie 50. verſ.20. In thoſe daies the iniquitie of Iacob ſhall be ſought for, and there ſhall none be found. Ezech.36.22. I doe not this for your ſakes, O houſe of Iſrael, but for mine owne holy name ſake, &c. The people did not ſatisfie God for their temporall deliuerance out of captiuity, but it proceeded of Gods mercie: arg. Caluin.

Bellarm. Firſt, the Prophet Iſay promiſeth the perfect remiſsion of ſinne to thoſe that did cleanſe and waſh themſelues by contrition, repentance, and other good deeds, which are their ſatisfaction: this place rather maketh for ſatisfaction, than againſt it. Secondly, the Prophet Ezechiel ſpeaketh there of the grace of the new Teſtament, which is not aſcribed to the merits of the Iſraelites: and if it be vnderſtood of their temporall deliuerance, we grant that the temporall puniſhments of the next world is alwaies redeemed by ſatisfaction, but not the temporall puniſhment of this life: this maketh not therefore againſt ſatisfaction, Bellarm.cap.15.reſp.ad arg.3.& 6.

Contra. Firſt, by making of their ſinnes as white as ſnow or wooll, is vnderſtood the perfect remiſsion of ſinne: and the condition required before, is to ceaſe to doe euill, to learne to doe well, to waſh them,&c. If theſe be ſatisfactorie workes, and goe before remiſſion, then will it follow, that not the puniſhment only, but the ſinne it ſelfe is by theſe workes redeemed: if they come after, what puniſhment can remaine to be ſatisfied for, ſeeing there is no rednes, or bloodines remaining, (whereby the puniſhment of ſinne is ſignified) but all is as white as ſnow?

Secondly, 1. It is euident, that the Prophet ſpeaketh directly of their temporal deliuerance, verſ.24. I will take you from among the heathen, though vnder this temporall benefit is included alſo the promiſe of ſpirituall grace. 2. Neither is the queſtion, whether the temporall puniſhment of this life be alwaies redeemed, but whether, when it is remoued, it bee by ſatisfactorie workes redeemed. This place euidently ſheweth, that this deliuerance of the Iſraelites (though they endured ſeuentie yeeres captiuitie, with much affliction, which were as like to ſatisfie, as any painfull workes that can be ſuffered) is not attributed to their merits, but to the bountifull mercie of God. 3. And if ſatisfaction may bee made for Purgatorie penance, much more ſhould it bee auaileable againſt the iudgement of this life: But ſeeing your ſatisfaction faileth in the leſſe, which wee daily haue experience of, and you ſend vs to finde the force thereof, in a greater puniſhment, which no man euer did ſee, you giue iuſt occaſion to them, which are not wilfully blinde, both to ſuſpect your deuice of Purgatorie, and to reiect your ſandie foundation of ſatisfaction.

Argum.6. In the Law there were no ſatisfactorie 1. workes appointed for the expiation of ſinne, but only the ſacrifice, 2. which were not counted as the 3. workes of men, but did depend of the only ſacrifice of Chriſt, whereof they were ſhadowes: 4. yet in the Law all rites of expiation were diligently preſcribed: argum.Caluin.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, the ſacrifices of the law were appointed as ſatisfactions for the temporall puniſhments of ſinne: for they did neither take away the ſinne it ſelfe, nor the eternall puniſhment: Pſal.51.16. Thou deſireſt no ſacrifice, the ſacrifice of God is a contrite heart. Secondly, neither did the ſacrifice ſerue for all ſinnes: for blaſphemie, homicide, adulterie, idolatrie, no ſacrifices were appointed, but aſhes and ſackcloth, &c. Thirdly, God hath not in the law exactly ſet downe all the rites of expiation. Fourthly, the ſacrifices, as they were diuine works being inſtituted of God, ſo were they alſo the laborious workes of men, and conſequently ſatisfactorie, in that they were an hindrance to their ſubſtance, and depended vpon the faith of the offerers, cap.15.reſponſ.ad argum.5.

Contra. Firſt, the ſacrifices of the law were appointed for the forgiuenes of the ſinne it ſelfe, Leuit. 6.7. The Prieſt ſhall make attonement for him, and it ſhall be forgiuen him. 1. How could attonement or reconciliation be made, without remiſſion of ſinne? 2. If ſacrifices were not to that end, then had they no meanes at all to aſſure them of remiſſion of ſinne. 3. Yet in themſelues thoſe ſacrifices could not purge the conſcience, Heb.9.9. but did onely purifie as touching the fleſh, verſ.13. that is, take away the legall and outward vncleannes: but they did alſo ſanctifie inwardly, being offered by faith, as they were types and ſhadowes of Chriſts ſacrifice, which is that Dauid affirmeth, Pſal.51.16.

Secondly, 1. The ſinnes of homicide, adulterie, idolatrie, blaſphemie, were ſinnes puniſhable by death, and therefore no ſuch expiation by ſacrifice was appointed for them, as for other ſinnes: Blood could not be expiated, or purged, but by blood. 2. Dauid notwithſtanding after he had committed two of thoſe ſinnes, hauing firſt ſacrificed a contrite heart vnto God, did afterward finde comfort and further aſſurance of remiſſion, in offering the ſacrifices of righteouſneſſe, Pſal.51.19. that is, right and lawfull ſacrifices applied to the right end, which is to teſtifie their faith and repentance. Pſal.51.19. 3. But aſhes and ſackcloth were no ſatisfactions for ſuch ſinnes. 1. For Bellarmine himſelfe ſaith, that ſin cannot be ſatisfied for, but the puniſhment only. 2. And Dauid hauing repented thoroughly for his ſinne, yet pretendeth no ſatisfaction, but ſueth for mercie, Pſal.51.4. Pſal.51.4. 3. Wherfore either the ſacrifices of righteouſnes and faith, were the propitiation for ſuch ſinnes, as they were Sacraments of Chriſts death, or elſe they had no meanes of expiation at all, which is not to be admitted.

Thirdly, it is a great vntruth, that the Lord by Moſes did not exactlie ſet downe all manner of expiations fit for that time, ſeeing the Scripture ſaith, that Moſes was faithfull in all the Lords houſe. Heb.3.2.

Fourthly, ſeeing he granteth that the ſacrifices depended of the faith in the offerer, and faith is the gift of God, and is founded in Chriſts death; he hath made a good argument againſt himſelfe, that the ſacrifices were not ſatisfactions, but workes of faith, applying the vertue of Chriſts death: the ſacrifices then of the law were applicatorie, not ſatisfactorie.

Argum.7. Hoſh.14.2. Take away all iniquitie, and receiue vs graciouſly, ſo will wee render the calues of our lips. If all iniquitie bee taken away, then none remaineth to bee ſatisfied for: if after forgiuenes, giuenes, nothing but thankſgiuing be required, then no ſatisfaction is to be performed: argum. Caluin. ibid.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, iniquitie may be remoued, though the puniſhment doe remaine. Secondly, after forgiuenes, though wee be not acquited of the temporall puniſhment, wee are to giue thankes. Thirdly, if God ſometime doe ſo forgiue, that he require no ſatisfaction but of praiſe, it followeth not that he ſhould doe ſo alwaies, Bellarm. c. 15. reſp. ad argum. 6.

Contra. Firſt, how 1. can all iniquitie be remoued, when as the puniſhment yet remaineth? there muſt be ſome ſinne to be puniſhed, or elſe God puniſhing without ſinne ſhould be vniuſt. 2. Again, the Prophet ſpeaketh directly of remouing the puniſhment alſo, verſ. 1. They ſhall fall by the ſword, verſ. 2. Thou haſt fallen by thine iniquitie: But now verſ. 3. vpon their repentance the Prophet ſheweth, that they ſhall fall ſo no more: all iniquitie, both the ſinne and the paine ſhall be remoued. 3. Againe, verſ. 5. Mine anger is turned away: but when God puniſheth for ſinne, he is angrie.

Secondly, thankſgiuing followeth after 1. full remiſſion had, and all iniquitie remoued: but where ſatisfaction is to be done, there is not yet full remiſſion: for Bellarmine confeſſeth, that Plena remiſſio, quoad omnem pœna reatum: Full remiſſion is in reſpect the guilt of all puniſhment remoued, cap. 15. reſp. ad loc. 3. Therefore the calues of the lips could not yet be offered, when as ſomewhat remaineth to bee ſatisfied. 2. Reioycing and giuing of thankes cannot bee without comfort and perfect aſſurance of remiſſion: but where God yet iudgeth for ſinne, and the puniſhment remaineth to be ſatisfied for, there can be no ſuch aſſurance.

Thirdly, this courſe here preſcribed by the Prophet, is perpetuall, and generall for all the faithfull of God: he ſpeaketh to all Iſrael, verſ. 2. yea vnto all the faithfull ſeruants of God, verſ. 10. Who is wiſe, and he ſhall vnderſtand theſe things. And the Prophet Dauid ſaying, What ſhall I render to the Lord for all his benefits to me? I will take the cup of ſaluation, and call vpon the name of the Lord: Pſal. 116. 13, 14. ſheweth, that God requireth no other ſatisfaction at our hands but giuing of thankes.

Argum. 8. The Publicane vpon his repentance was iuſtified, and no ſatisfaction required: ſo likewiſe Peter was forgiuen, without any ſatisfaction: So to the man ſick of the palſie, Chriſt ſaid, Ariſe, thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee, Mark. 2. 9. Neither is the contrarie to bee ſeene in the reſt of the examples in Scripture of remiſſion of ſinnes, but they were forgiuen freely without any ſatisfaction required: argum. Caluin. ibid.

Bellarm. Firſt, the Publicane was not iuſtified without ſatisfaction, as ſmiting vpon his breaſt, confeſſing his ſinne. Secondly, Peter alſo ſatisfied by his teares. Thirdly, 1. Chriſt forgiueth to the ſicke man his ſinne, but not the temporall puniſhment. 2. His long ſickneſſe might ſatisfie God for his ſinnes. 3. Chriſt might at his pleaſure together pardon both the ſinne and the puniſhment; but his Miniſters cannot doe ſo, cap. 16. reſp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. Firſt, the 1. ſmiting of the breaſt in the Publicane was a ſigne of his contrition, no part of ſatisfaction. 2. He ſaith, God be mercifull to me a ſinner: here he could not ſatisfie, becauſe he crieth only for mercie. 3. And was the Publicanes ſinne ſo ſmall, thinke you, that hee could ſatisfie for it, with knocking vpon the breaſt? 4. But this his contrition went before, hee was iuſtified afterward: but ſatisfaction goeth not before iuſtification, no not in the popiſh doctrine: for they ſay ſinnes are firſt remitted, and then afterward the puniſhment is ſatisfied for.

Secondly, 1. Doe you thinke, that Peters deniall of Chriſt, was ſo ſmall an offence, that hee could ſatisfie with his teares? 2. Peter wept before hee found forgiuenes, as Ambroſe ſaith: Verecundæ lachrymæ ſine horrore culpam loquuntur: Shamefaſt teares without horror doe confeſſe the fault. But ſatisfaction followeth forgiuenes, wherefore Peter did not ſatisfie by his teares. Ambroſe ſaith, Lachrymæ veniam non poſtulant, ſed merentur: Teares doe not aske pardon, but they are worthie or fit to be pardoned, &c. Peter then was not as yet pardoned, weeping for his ſinnes; Ambroſ. in Luc. 22.

Thirdly, 1. The ſicke man had not only his ſinne forgiuen, but his temporall puniſhment releaſed: for Chriſt ſaid to him, Ariſe, take vp thy bed and walke. 2. Neither did his ſicknes ſatisfie for his ſin, it was then faith that healed him, verſ. 5. neither was there any place for ſatisfaction, his ſinne being not yet forgiuen. 3. And that Chriſt did not this by his extraordinarie authoritie, but by the ſame power which he hath committed to his Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, the Rhemiſts directly affirme, in their annotations vpon this place: neither was this extraordinary: for in all the examples alleaged, Chriſt tooke the ſame courſe in forgiuing ſinne without any ſatisfaction.

Laſtly, we haue plentifull euidence from the Fathers, Councels, and their owne decrees, againſt this ſuperſtitious doctrine of ſatisfaction.

Mark. 9. Cyprian. lib. 3. ad Quirinum, cap. 42. Fidem tantum prodeſſe, & tantum nos poſſe, quantum credimus, Marc. 9. Omnia poſſibilia credenti: That faith only profiteth, and wee are able to doe as much as we beleeue: as Mark 9. All things are poſſible to him that beleeueth. If faith only profiteth, what neede is there of ſatisfaction?

Ambroſ. lib. 2. de pœnitent. cap. 8. Veniam tanquam ex fide ſperemus, non tanquam ex debito: Let vs hope for forgiuenes, as of faith, not of debt. But ſatisfaction is of debt.

Hieronym. ad Marcellam. Tantam in nobis fidei ſtabilitatem eſſe dominus deſiderat, &c. God requireth ſuch ſtabilitie of faith in vs, vt certius eſſe, quod credimus, quam quod patimur iudicemus: That we ſhould iudge that more certaine, which wee beleeue, then that which wee ſuffer, &c. But the Papiſts contrarie, do hold no certaintie of remiſſion of ſins by faith, without ſuffering by ſatisfactorie works, Concil. Arauſican.1.decret.ex Gratian. Authoritate Dei,&c. By the authoritie of God, and the iudgement of his ſpirit, we doe thruſt them out of the boſome of the Church: Quouſque reſipiſcunt & eccleſia Dei ſatisfaciunt: Till they repent and ſatisfie the Church of God. Here are two things required, repentance toward God, and ſatisfaction to his Church, not to God.

Diſtinct.de pœnitent.1.c.1. Non inuenio quid dixerit,&c. I finde not what Peter ſaid, I finde that he wept: Lachrymas lego, ſatisfactionem non lego: I reade his teares, I reade no ſatisfaction.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that by ſatisfaction, here is vnderſtood excuſe or defence of his ſinne, as it followeth, Quod defendi non poteſt,&c. That which cannot be defended, may be waſhed.

Cont. Firſt, the Maſter of the Sentences vnderſtandeth it otherwiſe for true ſatisfaction, and maketh this anſwere, That Peter might ſatisfie, though it be not expreſſed, or that confeſſion was not yet inſtituted, lib.4.diſt.17.f. Secondly, Gratian alſo doth ſo vnderſtand it, alleaging to the like purpoſe a ſaying of Chryſoſtome, ibid.c.2. Lachrymæ lauent delictum,&c. Let teares waſh away the ſinnes, which it is a ſhame to confeſſe: And proueth hereby, that contrition may ſuffice without confeſſion: to ſpeake of excuſe or defence had beene impertinent. Thirdly, S. Ambroſe expoundeth himſelfe; Inuenio cur tacuit,&c. I ſee the reaſon why Peter held his peace, leaſt that the crauing of pardon ſo ſoone might offend. Peter was farre from excuſing his ſinne, or Ambroſe from ſo imagining.

Auguſtine ſaith, Peccaſti in fratrem? fac ſatis, & ſanatus es: Haſt thou offended thy brother? ſatisfie him, and thou art healed. Theſe kindes of ſatisfaction both publikely and priuately we acknowledge: but ſatisfaction to God, neither he, nor we acknowledge.

In Mat.ſer.26.

Inter relig.cap.3. Qui precioſo Chriſti ſanguine redimitur, & cui meritum paſſionis Chriſti applicatur, is continuo iuſtificatur,&c. He that is redeemed by the precious blood of Chriſt, and to whom the merit of Chriſts paſſion is applied, he is ſtraightway iuſtified. And S. Paul ſaith, Whom he iuſtifieth, he glorifieth, Rom.8.30. Satisfaction therefore to be performed by man is ſuperfluous, ſeeing Chriſts death bringeth iuſtification, and glorification.

This truth is ſealed: Maſter Tindall holy Martyr thus witneſſeth: Satisfaction is a full recompence or amends making to him, whom we haue offended, which recompence wee are able to make one to another, and are bound ſo to doe: but to God none can make any mends or recompence, but onely Gods owne ſonne Chriſt Ieſus our Sauiour: Fox pag.1249.col.2. artic.1.

And yet for further euidence. 1. Chryſoſtome, as he is before alleaged, ſaith, Nihil aliud Deus requirit ad vlteriorem ſatisfactionem,&c. God requireth nothing elſe for further ſatisfaction, then that we promiſe vnto God from our heart, neuer to returne vnto our former ſinnes: Ieremie the Patriarke of Conſtantinople ſaith: We muſt confeſſe, quod gratis per Chriſtum peccata, & non propter aliqua merita nobis remittuntur,&c. That our ſinnes are freely forgiuen vs by Chriſt, and not for any merites of ours, &c. our workes then doe not ſatisfie.

Cenſur. oriental.c.21.

2 Auguſtine further ſaith: Nec quiſquam dicat meritis orationum, vel meritis fidei gratiam Dei traditam: Let not any ſay, that fauour and grace is giuen by the merit of prayer or of faith, &c. Prayers then and other like workes are not ſatisfactorie, ſeeing they merit not.

4 The Diuines of Louaine did hold, Solius Chriſti ſatisfactionib. remiſſam pœnam temporalem, That the temporall puniſhment is only remitted by the ſatisfactions of Chriſt, &c as Bellarmine reporteth: then not by the ſatisfaction of our workes.

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER ONE man may ſatisfie for another.

The Papiſts.

Satisfactorie workes are not onely profitable to the ſufferers themſelues, but alſo for other their fellow members in Chriſt, and one may beare the burthen, and diſcharge the debt of another: Rhemiſt.Coloſſ.1.ſect.4.

65. Error.

Argum. The paſſions of the Saints are ſuffered for the common good of the whole bodie, as S.Paul ſaith, Now I reioyce in my ſufferings for you, and fulfill that which is behinde of the afflictions of Chriſt for his bodies ſake, which is the Church, Coloſſ.1.24. Here S.Pauls afflictions are meritorious and ſatisfactorie for the Coloſſians. Rhemiſt.

Coloſſ.1.24.

*Anſwere.*1. The Apoſtles ſufferings were for the glorie of God, and the confirmation of their faith; and in this ſenſe hee ſaith, his afflictions were for Chriſts bodie, that is, his Church ſake: but therefore it followeth not, that they were meritorious, either for himſelfe, or others. 2. His ſufferings are ſaid to be Chriſts, who ſuffereth in his members, not that they receiue any force from Chriſt to

Rom.8.17. be ſatisfactorie, but becauſe he was made like and conformable by his ſufferings vnto Chriſt, Rom.8.17. Auguſtine alſo thus expoundeth the place: He ſheweth that what hee ſuffered belonged to the ſufferings of Chriſt: quod non poteſt intelligi ſeruus dum caput, quod nihil tale patitur, ſed ſecundum corpus, id eſt ecclesia, which cannot bee vnderſtood in regard of the head, which ſuffereth no ſuch thing, but of the bodie, that is the Church: which bodie with the head is one Church, &c. They are not then the ſufferings of Chriſt, as though they receiued a ſatisfactorie power from Chriſt: but becauſe he was a member of Chriſt, who ſuffered together in and with his members. Thus alſo anſwereth Sir Iohn Borthwick holy confeſſor: That where S. Paul ſaith, (for the Church) he doth not vnderſtand thereby, the redemption, ſatisfaction, or expiation of the Church, but for the edifying and profiting of the ſame: And by the afflictions of Chriſt, hee vnderſtandeth thoſe which hee now ſuffereth in his members: And ſo he concludeth, and ſealeth this doctrine, that if the Scripture teach vs, that no man can worke his owne ſaluation, but when we haue done all that is commanded, we ſhall be found but vnprofitable ſeruants: much leſſe can any man worke anothers ſaluation: Fox pag.1261.

Exod 32.v.13. The Doway ſtudents doe giue this note vpon thoſe words of Moſes prayer, Remember Abraham, &c. God ſheweth mercie for the merit of his ſeruants.

Contra. Moſes deſireth God to remember the promiſe made to Abraham, Iſaak and Iſrael, as followeth in the ſame place, to whom thou ſwareſt by thine owne ſelfe: he thinketh not to be heard for their merit.

Here are three notable arguments included: firſt, mans righteouſneſſe ſufficeth not themſelues, much leſſe others. Secondly, by the teſtimonie of the Prophet, that thoſe holie men there named, ſhould but ſaue themſelues. Thirdly, from the like: as wicked men doe onely by their owne ſinne condemne themſelues, ſo the righteous only liue by their owne righteouſnes.

By the authoritie of God, and the iudgement of his ſpirit, we doe thruſt them out of the boſome of the Church: Quouſque reſipiſcunt & eccleſiæ Dei ſatisfaciunt: Till they repent and ſatisfie the Church of God. Here are two things required, repentance toward God, and ſatisfaction to his Church, not to God.

Diſtinct. de pœnitent.1.c.1. Non inuenio quid dixerit,&c. I finde not what Peter ſaid, I finde that he wept: Lachrymas lego ſatisfactionem non lego: I reade his teares, I reade no ſatisfaction.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that by ſatisfaction, here is vnderſtood excuſe or defence of his ſinne, as it followeth, Quod defendi non poteſt,&c. That which cannot be defended, may be waſhed.

Cont. Firſt, the Maſter of the Sentences vnderſtandeth it otherwiſe for true ſatisfaction, and maketh this anſwere, That Peter might ſatisfie, though it be not expreſſed, or that confeſſion was not yet inſtituted, lib.4 diſt.17.f. Secondly, Gratian alſo doth ſo vnderſtand it, alleaging to the like purpoſe a ſaying of Chryſoſtome, ibid.c.2. Lachrymæ lauent delictum,&c. Let teares waſh away the ſinnes, which it is a ſhame to confeſſe: And proueth hereby, that contrition may ſuffice without confeſſion: to ſpeake of excuſe or defence had beene impertinent. Thirdly, S. Ambroſe expoundeth himſelfe; Inuenio cur tacuit,&c. I ſee the reaſon why Peter held his peace, leaſt that the crauing of pardon ſo ſoone might offend. Peter was farre from excuſing his ſinne, or Ambroſe from ſo imagining.

Auguſtine ſaith, Peccaſti in fratrem? fac ſatis, & ſanatus es: Haſt thou offended thy brother? ſatisfie him, and thou art healed. Theſe kindes of ſatisfaction both publikely and priuately we acknowledge: but ſatisfaction to God, neither he, nor we acknowledge. In Mat. ſer. 16.

Interrelig. cap.3. Qui precioſo Chriſti ſanguine redimitur, & cui meritum paſſionis Chriſti applicatur, is continuo iuſtificatur,&c. He that is redeemed by the precious blood of Chriſt, and to whom the merit of Chriſts paſſion is applied, he is ſtraightway iuſtified. And S. Paul ſaith, Whom he iuſtifieth, he glorifieth, Rom.8.30. Satisfaction therefore to be performed by man is ſuperfluous, ſeeing Chriſts death bringeth iuſtification, and glorification.

This truth is ſealed: Maſter Tindall holy Martyr thus witneſſeth: Satisfaction is a full recompence or amends making to him, whom we haue offended, which recompence wee are able to make one to another, and are bound ſo to doe: but to God none can make any mends or recompence, but onely Gods owne ſonne Chriſt Ieſus our Sauiour: Fox pag.1249.col.2. artic.1.

And yet for further euidence. 1. Chryſoſtome, as he is before alleaged, ſaith, Nihil aliud Deus requirit ad vlteriorem ſatisfactionem,&c. God requireth nothing elſe for further ſatisfaction, then that we promiſe vnto God from our heart, neuer to returne vnto our former ſinnes: Ieremie the Patriarke of Conſtantinople ſaith: We muſt confeſſe, quod gratis per Chriſtum peccata, & non propter aliqua merita nobis remittuntur,&c. That our ſinnes are freely forgiuen vs by Christ, and not for any merites of ours, &c. our workes then doe not ſatisfie. De beat. Philogon. Cenſur. oriental. c.21.

2 Auguſtine further ſaith: Nec quiſquam dicat meritis orationum, vel meritis fidei gratiam Dei traditam: Let not any ſay, that fauour and grace is giuen by the merit of prayer or of faith, &c. Prayers then and other like workes are not ſatisfactorie, ſeeing they merit not. Epiſt.46.

3 Confeſſ. of Bohemia. c.4. Yet muſt they not be perſwaded, as though they deſerued any thing by ſuffering this puniſhment, or ſhould receiue any grace or reward in recompence for the merit of theſe puniſhments: ſeeing that Paul of a much more worthie croſſe — ſaith that they be not comparable to the glorie, which ſhall be ſhewed vnto vs. — Wittemberg. c. 15. As touching prayer, giuing of almes, faſting, and ſuch like works, we think that they are diligently to be performed, and yet that they haue a farre other vſe, then that they ſhould by their merits, either ſatisfie God for our ſinnes,&c. Harm. ſect.4. pag 69. Sect.8 p.240.

4 The Diuines of Louaine did hold, Solius Chriſti ſatisfactionib. remiſſam pœnam temporalem, That the temporall puniſhment is only remitted by the ſatisfactions of Chriſt, &c as Bellarmine reporteth: then not by the ſatisfaction of our workes. Lib.1. de indulgent. c.4.

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER ONE man may ſatisfie for another.

The Papiſts.

Satisfactorie workes are not onely profitable to the ſufferers themſelues, but alſo for other their fellow members in Chriſt, and one may beare the burthen, and diſcharge the debt of another: Rhemiſt. Coloſſ.1 ſect.4. 65. Error.

Argum. The paſſions of the Saints are ſuffered for the common good of the whole bodie, as S. Paul ſaith, Now I reioyce in my ſufferings for you, and fulfill that which is behinde of the afflictions of Chriſt for his bodies ſake, which is the Church, Coloſſ.1.24. Here S. Pauls afflictions are meritorious and ſatisfactorie for the Coloſſians. Rhemiſt. Coloſſ.1.24.

Anſwere. 1. The Apoſtles ſufferings were for the glorie of God, and the confirmation of their faith: and in this ſenſe hee ſaith, his afflictions were for Chriſts bodie, that is, his Church ſake: but therefore it followeth not, that they were meritorious, either for himſelfe, or others. 2. His ſufferings are ſaid to be Chriſts, who ſuffereth in his members, not that they receiue any force from Chriſt to be ſatisfactorie, but becauſe he was made like and conformable by his ſufferings vnto Chriſt, Rom. 8. 17. Auguſtine alſo thus expoundeth the place: He ſheweth that what hee ſuffered belonged to the ſufferings of Chriſt: quod non poteſt intelligi ſeruus dum caput, quod nihil tale patitur, ſed ſeruus dum corpus, id eſt eccleſia, which cannot bee vnderſtood in regard of the head, which ſuffereth no ſuch thing, but of the bodie, that is the Church: which bodie with the head is one Church, &c. They are not then the ſufferings of Chriſt, as though they receiued a ſatisfactorie power from Chriſt: but becauſe he was a member of Chriſt, who ſuffered together in and with his members. Thus alſo anſwereth Sir Iohn Borthwick holy confeſſor: That where S. Paul ſaith, (for the Church) he doth not vnderſtand thereby, the redemption, ſatisfaction, or expiation of the Church, but for the edifying and profiting of the ſame: And by the afflictions of Chriſt, hee vnderſtandeth thoſe which hee now ſuffereth in his members: And ſo he concludeth, and ſealeth this doctrine, that if the Scripture teach vs, that no man can worke his owne ſaluation, but when we haue done all that is commanded, we ſhall be found but vnprofitable ſeruants: much leſſe can any man worke anothers ſaluation: Fox pag. 1261. Rom. 8. 17.

Exod 32. v. 13. The Doway ſtudents doe giue this note vpon thoſe words of Moſes prayer, Remember Abraham, &c. God ſheweth mercie for the merit of his ſeruants.

Contra. Moſes deſireth God to remember the promiſe made to Abraham, Iſaak and Iſrael, as it followeth in the ſame place, to whom thou ſwareſt by thine owne ſelfe: he thinketh not to be heard for their merit.

The Proteſtants.

NOne can merit or ſatisfie for themſelues, much leſſe for others: neither can one man beare the burthen, or pay the debt of another mans ſinne.

Argum. 1. The Scripture ſaith, The ſoule that ſinneth, the ſame ſhall die, Ezech. 18. 20. Euerie man ſhall beare his owne burthen, Galath. 6. 5. None can redeeme his brother, or giue a price to God for him, Pſal. 49. 8. Ezech. 18. 20. Galath. 6. 5. Pſalm. 49. 8.

Auguſtine vpon thoſe words, Ioh. 16. 23. Whatſoeuer ye ſhall aske in my name, he will giue it you: Exaudiuntur quippe omnes ſancti pro ſeipſis: non autem exaudiuntur pro omnibus, vel amicis, vel inimicis, &c. The Saints are heard praying for themſelues: but they are not heard praying for all their friends or enemies, becauſe it is not ſaid ſimply, he will giue, but, he will giue to you: Ergo, much leſſe can they ſatisfie for others, if their prayers be not heard alwaies for others. Iohn. 16. 23. Tract. 102. in Ioan.

Leo epiſtol. 81. De fortitudine fidelium exempla nata ſunt patientiæ, &c. From the fortitude of the faithful we haue examples of patience, not gifts of righteouſnes: &c. their deaths were only for themſelues, neither did they thereby pay any others debt, Chriſt our Lord only is he, in whom all men are dead and crucified.

Argum. 2. We cannot doe for our ſelues all that which is required at our hands: But when wee haue done all, wee muſt ſay, wee are vnprofitable ſeruants, wee haue done that which was our dutie to doe, Luke 17. 10. Ergo, it is not in any mans power to ſatisfie for another. So Ambroſe writeth vpon this place: Quis tanta ſalutis beneficia, digno poſſit æquare ſeruitio? Who can with his ſeruice anſwere in equalitie ſo great benefits of ſaluation? Quis poteſt ſoluere, quod accepit? Who can pay that hee hath receiued? ſerm. 16. in Pſal. 119. Luke 17. 10.

Bernard alſo ſaith, writing vpon theſe words of the fiue fooliſh virgins; Giue vs of your oyle: Stulta petitio, vix iuſtus ſaluabitur, &c. A fooliſh requeſt, the iuſt man ſhall hardly be ſaued: the oyle of the Saints doth ſcant ſuffice themſelues, how much leſſe ſufficeth it themſelues and others: Noe, Daniel, Iob, ſhall not deliuer, no not their children, but as the ſoule that hath ſinned ſhall die; ſo the ſoule that hath done righteouſly ſhall only liue, &c. Here are three notable arguments included: firſt, mens righteouſneſſe ſufficeth not themſelues, much leſſe others. Secondly, by the teſtimonie of the Prophet, that thoſe holie men there named, ſhould but ſaue themſelues. Thirdly, from the like: as wicked men doe onely by their owne ſinne condemne themſelues, ſo the righteous only liue by their owne righteouſnes. Ezech. 14. 16.

But here they will come in with a ſtale diſtinction, that, Si iuſtitiæ rigorem ſpectamus: If we reſpect the rigor of Gods iuſtice, no mans iuſtice is ſufficient for himſelfe, ſed ex Dei miſericordia & liberalitate, &c. But of Gods mercie and liberalitie, they may profit themſelues and others: Interrelig. Cæſar. cap. 23.

Anſ. Gods mercie in Chriſt, and the workes of ſupererogation cannot ſtand together, Rom. 11. 6. If of grace, then not of works. And Paul counteth all things dung, in reſpect of Chriſt, Philip. 3. 8. The Pſalme alſo ſaith, that no man can redeeme his brother, Pſal. 49. 7. And Chriſt only hath workes to ſupererogate to others, Of his fulnes we haue all receiued, &c. Ioh. 1. 16. Rom. 11. 6. Phil. 3. 8. Pſalm. 49. Iohn. 1. 16.

Diſtinct. 1. de pœnitent. Non alium ſtatuatis nuntium, &c. Appoint not another meſſenger, who ſhould offer your gift for you: Per vos peccaſtis, per vos erubeſcatis: Ye haue ſinned by your ſelues, by your ſelues be aſhamed. Euery man muſt repent for himſelfe.

Magiſt. ſentent. lib. 1. diſtinct. 48. e. Nullius paſſione redempti ſumus, niſi Chriſti: We are not redeemed by any mans paſſion, but Chriſts, &c. The paſſions of the Saints did profit thoſe, which endured them, and they are profitable alſo to others, (that is for example) but they are not our redemption. Lib. 3. diſtinct. 18. e. Vix vnicuique ſua virtus ſufficiebat, &c. Euery mans vertue doth ſcarſe ſuffice himſelfe: much leſſe then is he able to ſatisfie for another.

For the Greeke Church, Ieremie Patriarke ſaith, hauing alleaged that ſaying in the Goſpell: when we haue done all, — we muſt confeſſe our ſelues vnprofitable ſeruants: Id, quod ipſi conferimus paruum quid, aut plane, ſi cum diuina munificentia conferatur, nihil ſit: That, which we doe, is a verie little, or if it bee compared with the diuine bountie it is nothing &c. and to the ſame purpoſe hee alleageth Chryſoſtome, Non quiſquam mortalium poteſt — ante Deum conſiſtere,&c. No mortall man, if all his life ſhould be laide together, can ſtand before God, nor bee found worthie of pardon,&c. If a man cannot ſuffice for himſelfe, much leſſe for himſelfe and others. Cenſur orien-tal.c.6.

2 Tertullian hath an excellent ſaying: Quis alienam mortem ſua ſoluit, niſi ſolus Dei filius — proinde qui illum æmularis donando delicta, ſi ipſe nihil deliquiſti, patere pro me: ſi vero peccator es, quomodo oleum faculæ tua ſufficere & tibi & mihi poterit? Who hath deliuered another from death by his death, but onely the Sonne of God, — thou therefore which wouldeſt imitate him in forgiuing of ſinnes, if thou art without ſinne, ſuffer for me: but if thou art a ſinner, how ſhall the oyle of thy lampe ſuffice for thee and me,&c. Libr.de pudicitia.

3 Confeſſion of Auſpurg.artic.3. of abuſes: The application of the beneſit of Chriſt, is not by another mans worke, but by our owne faith. Harm ſect.14. p.438.

4 See the decrees and the Maſter before alleaged: the Diuines of Louaine alſo did hold: that the paſſions of the Saints are not ſo applied vnto vs, vt ſint iuſtæ ſatisfactiones, That they ſhould be iuſt ſatisfactions. Ex citation Bellarm lib.1. de indulgen. c 4.

THE EIGHTH QVESTION, OF INDVLGENCES and penall iniunctions.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER PENALL and painſull workes are neceſſarie vnto repentance.

The Papiſts.

NOt only amendment, and ceaſing to ſinne, or repentance in heart before God is alwaies enough to obtaine full reconcilement, but there muſt be outward penaltie, correction, and chaſtiſement beſide, Rhemiſt.2.Corinth.2.ſect.2. 67. Error.

Argum. The inceſtuous perſon was rebuked of many, 2.Cor.2.6. which word implieth, beſide his inward repentance, outward correction and chaſtiſement. 2.Cor.2.6.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. WE acknowledge, that in notorious ſinnes, and offenſiue to the Church, as this, of the young mans was, inward repentance is not ſufficient, but that after ſharpe diſcipline, by the outward teſtification of ſorrow, and publike confeſſion, ſatisfaction muſt bee made to the Church: but it followeth not that this courſe ſhould bee taken for all ſinnes, which a man repenteth him of. And yet wee grant that outward ſignes of our ſorrow are alwaies neceſſarie in true repentance, not as ſatisfactorie meanes to redeeme our ſinnes, but onely as infallible tokens and effects of our repentance. As Auguſtine ſaith, Satis durus eſt, cuius mentis dolorem oculi carnis nequeunt declarare: He is hard hearted, the griefe of whoſe minde, the eyes of his fleſh doe not ſhew forth: de pœnitent.cap.9.

Argum.1. There are but two eſſentiall parts of repentance and true conuerſion vnto God: To turne from our ſinnes, and leade an holy life. So ſaith the Lord by the Prophet, If the wicked will returne from his ſinnes and keepe all my ſtatutes, Ezech.18.21. This is all God requireth, without any other penall workes: wherefore ceaſing from ſinne and amendment of life, which neceſſarily include the true ſorrow and conuerſion of the heart, are ſufficient for repentance. Ezech.18.21.

Argum.2. Peter was receiued to mercie without any ſatisfaction; ſo was the Publican, Luc.18. Likewiſe Chriſt ſaid to the ſicke of the palſie, Ariſe, thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee, without any penall iniunction: Ergo, ſuch penall workes are not neceſſarie. See more of this argument before, *qu.7. part.3. argum proteſtant.*8. and all the other arguments concluding againſt ſatisfaction, may bee applied againſt the neceſſitie of penall and ſatisfactorie workes.

Pœnitentia vera eſt pœnitenda non admittere, & admiſſa deflere, ſatisfactio pœnitentiæ eſt, cauſas peccatorum excidere, nec earum ſuggeſtionib. aditum indulgere: It is true repentance, not to commit things to be repented of, and beeing committed to bewaile them: ſatisfaction of repentance is to cut off the cauſes of ſinne, and not to giue way to their tentations: De eccleſiaſtic. dogmat.c.54.

Here ſatisfaction is nothing elſe but true repentance, and no other workes of ſatisfaction but to ceaſe from euill, and doe good, which are the parts of true repentance. See to the ſame purpoſe before Error 64. at the end the conſent of other Churches.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, WHICH be the Penall Satisfactorie workes.

The Papiſts.

PRayer, faſting, almes, are thoſe ſatisfactorie workes, whereby we doe ſatisfie God for the temporall puniſhment due vnto ſinne: and beſide theſe, there are other, opera indebita: workes which we are not bound vnto, as whipping and beating of the body, and ſuch like: Bellarm.lib.4. de pœnitent.c.6.

68 Error.
Ioel.2.17.

Argum. Firſt, that prayer, faſting, and ſuch other workes commanded are ſatisfactions, the Scripture teſtifieth, Pſalm.50.15. Call vpon me in the day of trouble, I will deliuer thee, &c. Ioel.2.17. Turne vnto me with all your heart, with faſting, weeping, and mourning: who knoweth if he will returne and repent, &c. Ergo, with prayer and faſting God is ſatisfied: Bellarm.c.6.

Rom.10.14.
Ioel.2.13.

Contra. Firſt, prayer is a fruit of faith, Rom.10.14. How ſhall they call on him, vpon whom they haue not beleeued: and faſting is a meanes to make our repentance more effectuall, being ioyned with weeping and mourning: all theſe are fruits and effects of faith, by the which God is reconciled to vs, and his wrath appeaſed, and we at peace with God, Rom.3.24. & 5.1. Secondly, it is not then the prayer which ſatisfieth or is auaileable before God, but faith, Iam.5.15. The prayer of faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke. Thirdly, and this is euident by the circumſtance of theſe places, Pſalm.50.15. And thou ſhalt glorifie me: if God haue the glorie of our deliuerance, it is to be aſcribed to his mercie, not to our ſatisfaction: and Ioel.2.13. The Lord is mercifull, gracious, &c. but if faſting doe ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, what neede they flee to his mercie?

69. Error.
1.Cor.9.27.

Argum.2. Saint Paul whipped and beate himſelfe, 1.Cor.9.27. I beate downe my bodie: for ſo the word ſignifieth, to beat till the bodie be blew. The Publicane beat vpon his breaſt: Iohn Baptiſt was apparrelled in Camels haire, &c. Ergo, painefull and laborious workes not preſcribed or commanded, are acceptable to God, and ſatisfactorie: Bellar.ibid.

Epheſ.5.29.

Contra. Firſt, it is a vaine ſurmiſe, that S. Paul ſcourged or beate his owne bodie, as your Friers Flagellants vſe to doe: 1. the Apoſtle taketh his ſimilitude from champions that vſe to fight, and one beat another, which the word ὑπωπιάζω ſignifieth; and ſo continuing the metaphore, ſaith, I doe beat downe, &c. 2. The ſame word is vſed, Luc.18.5. I will doe her right, leaſt ſhe come and make me wearie: Obtundat me, it were abſurd to ſay, leaſt ſhe beat me. 3. The Apoſtle ſheweth, how he doth beat his bodie, by bringing it into ſubiection, which may be done otherwiſe than by beating: 4. the Apoſtles doctrine is contrarie, Epheſ.5.29. No man hateth his owne fleſh, but nouriſheth and cheriſheth it.

Secondly, the beating vpon the Publicanes breaſt, was a ſigne of his great ſorrow, and of the diſpleaſure taken againſt his ſinne; he did not in ſo doing wound or offer violence to his bodie. Auguſtine ſaith, Tundere pectus, quid aliud eſt, quam arguere quod latet in pectore, &c. To knocke vpon the breaſt, what is it elſe, but to checke or to reproue ſinne lying hid in the breaſt, *In Matth. Serm.*8.

Coloſſ.4.5.
Nahum.2.10.
Matth.3.2.
Matth.11.7.

Thirdly, all theſe workes are commended in Scripture: as to mortifie and ſubdue the fleſh, which Saint Paul did, Coloſſ.4.5. Mortifie your earthly members: to teſtifie ſorrow by the ſmiting of the ioynts and parts together, as the Publicane did, is warranted, Nahum.2.10. The heart melteth, the knees ſmite together. Iohns auſtere life and conuerſation was agreeable to his calling, which was to be a cryer in the wilderneſſe, Matth.3.2. and our Sauiour commendeth him for his ſtrict life, Matth,11.7,18. Wherefore theſe examples ſerue not at al to warrant laborious works, not preſcribed nor commanded.

Galath.2.20.
Matth.3.11.

Fourthly, admit theſe workes to be laborious and painfull, yet were they not ſatisfactorie. S. Paul ſaith, he was crucified with Chriſt, he had mortified and ſubdued his fleſh; yet hee challengeth no ſatisfaction thereby, but ſaith, I liue by faith in the ſonne of God, Galath.2.20. The Publicane maketh ſuite for mercie, Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner, therefore intended no ſatisfaction: and Iohn was ſo farre from ſeeking any merit or ſatisfaction by his life, that he confeſſeth, he was not worthie to beare Chriſts ſhooes, Matth.3.11. Wherefore by theſe places, no ſatisfactorie penall workes can be warranted or perſwaded.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, prayer, faſting, almes, are the liuely fruits and effects of faith, neceſſarie to be done, and through Chriſt acceptable vnto God, but there is no merit or ſatisfaction in them.

Luke 17.10.

Argum. No workes which are commanded, and wherein we are indebted vnto God, are able to ſatisfie, becauſe wee haue done no more, then was our dutie to doe, Luk.17.10. Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Nemo in operibus glorietur, &c. Let no man glory in his workes, becauſe of right we owe obedience to the Lord, &c. Nec in te patitur dominus vnius vſum eſſe operis, aut laboris, &c. God doth not ſuffer thee to haue the vſe of any one worke or labour, becauſe while wee liue, wee muſt be alwayes working, Ambroſ.in 17.Luc. But prayer, faſting, almes are commanded, and ſo our due debt vnto God: Ergo, they are not ſatisfactorie.

Hierome ſaith, Caue ne ſi ieiunare cæperis, te putes eſſe iam ſanctam, &c. Take heed leaſt thou thinke thy ſelfe holy, when thou beginneſt to faſt; for this vertue is but an helpe, it is not the perfection of holineſſe, ad Calant. but ſatisfaction is the very perfection of workes.

This is alſo the opinion of ſome of the Popiſh writers, Non ſatisfieri per opera aliàs debita: That wee cannot ſatisfie by workes that are due, or debted: Thomas, Durandus, Paludanus in 4. diſt. 15. Wherefore prayer, almes, and other workes being commanded, and ſo our due debt vnto God, cannot ſatisfie.

Secondly, neither is God ſo much as pleaſed with voluntarie puniſhments inflicted vpon the bodie, much leſſe doe they worke any ſatisfaction.

Argum. Coloſſ. 2. The Apoſtle calleth it, a ſhew of wiſedome in voluntarie religion, in not ſparing the body,&c, is no true wiſedome, but a ſhew of wiſedome; not religion preſcribed, but voluntarie: like as Baals Prieſts did lance and cut themſelues with kniues, being therefore derided of the Prophet, 1.Reg.18. Such are the painefull workes which Monkes and Heremites doe afflict their bodies with: God requireth no ſuch things at their hands. Coloſſ.2.23.

Bellarm. S.Paul reproueth thoſe, that of ſuperſtition afflict their body, not for the health of their ſoule: *lib.*14.*de pœnitent.c.*4.

Contra. Firſt, thoſe alſo pretended by afflicting of the body to humble the ſoule, in humbleneſſe of minde, and not ſparing the body: Secondly, all voluntarie or will-worſhip, ἐθελοθρησκεία (which Hierome tranſlateth, falſa religio, falſe religion, or falſe worſhip, Algaſiæ.qu. 10.*tom.*4.) is ſuperſtitious: wherfore the Papiſts that offer vnto God workes not commanded, euen of their owne deuiſing, to be ſatisfactions for them, are alſo guiltie of ſuperſtition.

Bellarmine alſo is a witneſſe for vs againſt himſelfe: Satisfactoria opera non in obſeruationibus ab hominibus excogitatis,&c. Wee doe not place ſatisfactorie workes in obſeruations inuented of men, but in faſting, almes, prayer, which in the Scriptures haue precepts, examples, and large promiſes, *lib.*4.*c.*13.*reſp.ad arg.*7. a more euident teſtimonie againſt voluntarie ſatisfactions cannot be produced.

Laſtly, Auguſtine ſaith, Qui tundit pectus, & non corrigitur, ſolidat peccata non tollit: He that beateth his breaſt, and is not corrected, doth harden or conſolidate his ſinnes; he taketh them not away: *Tom.9.de diſciplin. Chriſtian.c.*1. Ergo, beating of the fleſh, being not a mollifying of the heart, doth worke no ſatisfaction.

And further. 1. Chryſoſtome ſheweth what are the penall workes required of penitent perſons: Poſt humilitatem oratione intenta opus eſt, lachrymis,&c. After humilitie, there is neede of earneſt prayer, of teares, of almes, &c. Opus eſt non iraſci,&c. We haue neede not to be angrie, to conuert our brethren from error, &c. to helpe them that are wronged, &c. Theſe are not voluntarie workes, deuiſed of men, but ſuch as God hath commanded. In c.6.ad Hebræos.

Tertullian alſo ſheweth what bee the exerciſes of the penitent: Corpus ſordib. obſcurare; animum mærorib. deijcere, ieiunio preces alere, ingemiſcere, lachrymari,&c. To abaſe the bodie, to humble the minde with ſorrow, to nouriſh prayer with faſting, to mourne, to weepe, &c. Theſe things are required of God: they are not mens deuiſes, the abaſing and obſcuring of the bodie, is a thing indifferent, if it be vſed onely as a meane to worke vpon the affection, not with an opinion of merite and ſatiſfaction. Lib.ad pœnitent.

Heluetia latter confeſſ.c.14. The penitent perſon, thinketh ſeriouſly of amendment, and of a continuall care of innocencie and vertues, wherein to exerciſe himſelfe holily all the reſt of his life: but theſe vertuous actes are duties preſcribed of God. Harm.ſect.8. p.212.

THE SECOND PART, BY WHOM PENALL workes are to be inflicted.

THree waies, they ſay, God is ſatisfied: 1. by bearing patiently the puniſhment that God layeth vpon vs: 2. by aſſuming voluntarily the laborious and painefull workes of penance: 3. and in willing vndergoing the ſentence of the Prieſt in his penall iniunctions. Of the firſt, there is no queſtion betweene vs, that we are patiently to endure the Lords croſſe, though thereby we neither merit, nor ſatisfie: the other two they would proue thus.

Firſt, that penall workes may voluntarily be vndertaken, theſe examples ſhew it: Iob ſaith, I doe reprehend my ſelfe, and repent in duſt and aſhes: Iob.42.6. Dauid, of himſelfe faſted and prayed, 2.Sam. 12. hee was not enioyned to doe it. So likewiſe Ahab humbled himſelfe with faſting and ſackcloth, 1.King.21, he was not bid ſo to doe; yet God was well pleaſed with it: Bellar l.4.c.4. 70.Error. Iob.42.6.

Contra. Firſt, thoſe were not voluntarie workes, to humble themſelues with faſting and ſackcloth, but ſuch as God called for, and were by the Prophets preſcribed to the people, when they by repentance did turne vnto God: Ioel.2.12. Turne vnto the Lord with faſting and weeping,&c. Wherefore by theſe examples they haue not proued, that voluntarie and vnbidden puniſhments, as whipping and ſcourging of the bodie, and ſuch like, are of our ſelues to be inflicted. Secondly, none of theſe were penall or ſatisfactorie workes of penance, but liuely and euident ſignes of true repentance. Thirdly, it is very abſurd, that Ahab a wicked hypocrite, is matched here with Iob and Dauid, the faithfull ſeruants of God, in the exerciſe of true repentance: that God ſpared Ahab, it was not of his ſatisfaction, but of Gods mercie, remitting temporall puniſhment for temporall repentance: for how could Ahab ſatisfie God, that did ſell himſelfe to worke wickedneſſe. And they themſelues grant, that a man being in deadly ſinne, cannot ſatisfie: *Bellarm.c.*13.*reſp.ad argum.*7. Ioel.2.12.

71.Error. Secondly, the Prieſts haue power to enioyne workes of penance, as affliction of bodie, mulct, penaltie, correction, by almes-deeds, faſting, abſtinence, and ſuch like, Conc.Trid.ſeſſ. 14.*can.*15.*Rhemiſt.*2.*Corinth.*2.*ſect.*2.

Argum. To them is giuen authoritie to binde and looſe: Ergo, to enioyne penance: As they looſe their ſinnes, ſo they binde them vnto the penall workes of penance: and as they haue power to remit ſinnes, in reſpect of the fault and euerlaſting puniſhment; ſo to retaine ſinnes, for the temporall puniſhment: Bellarm.lib 4 *c.*5.

*Anſwere.*1. Some kinde of mulcts, Church diſcipline is not to deale withall: as bodily puniſhment, and pecuniarie fines, which are to be impoſed at the diſcretion of the Magiſtrate: *Synod.Mogunt.cap.*77.Archidiaconus mulcta pecuniaria punire non praſumat: The Archdeacon ſhall not preſume to puniſh with pecuniarie mulct. Secondly, wee grant an holſome vſe of the keyes in Church diſcipline, in puniſhing and cleanſing of notorious offenders in the open face of the congregation: but priuatly to enioyne men penance for their ſecret ſinnes, is an Antichriſtian yoke. Thirdly, yet publike penance enioyned notorious offenders, is no part of their ſatisfaction to Godward, but a ſigne of their reconciliation to the Church, which they haue offended; and it is profitable for the example of others, that they by ſuch publike ſhame may be terrified from the like offending. Fourthly, binding and looſing are contrarie actes, when the Miniſters by the word of God binde, they looſe not; when they looſe, they binde not: but the Popiſh Prieſt doth both looſe and binde together; looſe the ſinne, binde the puniſhment: and the authoritie which Chriſt giueth, is to remit and retaine ſinne: As for remitting or retaining of the puniſhment, it belongeth to the iudge of the world, Chriſt himſelfe.

The Proteſtants.

First, for a man to lay any voluntarie or deuiſed puniſhment vpon himſelfe to be a ſatisfaction for his ſinne; it is contrarie to the Scripture.

Mark.7.7. *Argum.*1. Mark.7.7. In vaine doe they worſhip mee, teaching for doctrines the commandements of men: but the inflicting vpon the bodie ſuch puniſhments, as in whipping, ſcourging, beating of the fleſh, is the doctrine and commandement of men: Ergo, it is a vaine worſhip. *Bellarmine. Anſwere.*1. Obedience to men diſpleaſeth not God, but when they command things contrarie to God. 2. It is the commandement of God, that wee ſhould repent with faſting, ſackcloth, &c. *lib.*4 *c.*4.

Contra. First, nothing can be more contrarie to Gods word, then to teach men by their owne puniſhment, to ſatisfie the wrath of God: for the Scripture teacheth, that Chriſt is our peace; that hee hath reconciled vs to God by his croſſe, and ſlaine hatred thereby, that was before betweene God and vs, Epheſ.2.14.16. there remaineth therefore nothing to be ſatisfied for, by vs. Secondly, to repent with faſting; to make our ſorrow more effectuall, which they alſo ſhewed in thoſe times by aſhes and ſackcloth, was the commandement of God, and the practiſe of the Saints: but to make balde the head, to cut and afflict the fleſh, was the vſe of idolatrous Prieſts, 1.King.18. neither liked nor allowed of God.

Epheſ.2.14.

Heb.12.2. *Argum.*2. The Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.12.9. Wee haue had the fathers of our bodies, which corrected vs, &c. ſhould we not much rather be in ſubiection to the Father of ſpirits, that we might liue? And verſ. 10. They chaſtened vs after their owne pleaſure, but he for our profit, &c. Here the Apoſtle maketh two ſorts of Correctors, man for the body, God for the ſoule: and two kindes of corrections, inflicted either by earthly parents, or by the Father of ſpirits: From whence I conclude, that all corrections tending to the life of the ſoule, are applied by the Father of ſpirits: therefore as children are chaſtened of their fathers for offences toward them, they doe not chaſtiſe themſelues; ſo our heauenly Father correcteth his children, they doe not puniſh themſelues.

Origen ſaith in 14 Matth. Si quando, &c. If at any time we fall into the neceſſitie of temptation, let vs remember, Quòd Ieſus nos compulit ingredi nauem illam: That Ieſus conſtrained vs to goe into the ſhip: as the Apoſtles went not into the ſhip of themſelues to ſaile on the troubleſome ſea, but Ieſus compelled them, Matth.14.22. ſo no man is willingly to runne into any affliction, bnt when hee is thereto appointed of God.

Secondly penall iniunctions impoſed for ſatisfaction by Prieſts, are not warranted by the word of God.

*Argum.*1. Such workes as God requireth neceſſarie to repentance, cannot bee refuſed without ſinne, as ſuch, whereof the Prophet ſpeaketh, Iſay.1.17. Learne to doe well, ſeeke iudgement, &c. But the iniunctions of the Prieſts may be refuſed without ſinne, as ſome of their Popiſh diuines hold: as Scotus, Gabriel, and this Bellarmine denieth not, though the reſt he ſaith be of another minde, *lib.*4. *c.*13. therefore the Prieſts penall iniunctions are not thoſe, which the Lord requireth in his word. argum.Philipp.apolog.confeſſ. Auguſtin.

Iſay.1.17.

*Argum.*2. The Indulgences of men may diſpenſe with the ſatisfactions enioyned by the Prieſt, but they cannot free them from thoſe precepts, Bring forth fruits worthie of repentance: Ergo, ſuch ſatisfactions are not preſcribed or commanded of God.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Indulgences of men, doe not free any from Gods precepts, but onely from the paines, and puniſhments: as it is the Apoſtles precept, to pay tribute to whom tribute belongeth: Rom.13. Yet the Prince may pardon the tribute, but for all this hee freeth not any from the Apoſtles precept. Bellarm lib.4.c 13. Rom.13.7.

Contra. Firſt, the reaſon is not alike, man may remit a debt or dutie vnto man: Ergo, man may diſpenſe with a debt due vnto God: nay, ſeeing one man cannot remit the debt of another, how vnreaſonable is it, that any ſhould preſume to remit any thing due vnto God. Secondly, the argument is not anſwered, neither doe I thinke that father Robert doth well vnderſtand himſelfe in his anſwere: for if penall ſatisfactions be comprehended in this commandement, Bring forth worthie fruites,&c. as they pretend they are; this being a precept of Scripture, if they can diſpenſe with this, then doe they diſpenſe with Gods precepts: wherefore they muſt either confeſſe, that their ſatisfactions are not theſe worthie fruites; and ſo they haue no ground in Scripture: or if they be, they haue no power to diſpenſe with them.

*Argum.*3. True repentance is a free worke, not of compulſion, or coaction: Saint Paul exhorteth men to iudge themſelues, that they be not iudged, 1.Cor.11.31. But now when penance is layd 1.Cor.11.31. vpon a man, and not voluntarily taken of himſelfe, he is iudged rather of another, hee doth not iudge himſelfe. Auguſtine ſaith, Quem pœnitet, punit ſeipſum, prorſus aut punis, aut punit Deus, vt ille non puniat, puni tu: Hee that repenteth, puniſheth himſelfe: either thou puniſheſt, or God: if thou wilt not haue God to doe it, puniſh thy ſelfe,&c. A man therefore muſt puniſh himſelfe, hee muſt not be puniſhed of another in his repentance to Godward: for of outward chaſtiſement to the world, now is not the queſtion.

Auguſtine ſaith, *de temp. ſerm.*181.*c.*16. Nunquam ſpernit pœnitentiam,&c. God neuer deſpiſeth repentance, if it be ſimply and ſyncerely offered vnto him: Etiamſi quis explere non poterit omnem ſatisfaciendi ordinem: Though a man cannot fulfill all the order of ſatisfaction? Here we ſee repentance, without ſatisfaction preſcribed and enioyned, is ſufficient. Likewiſe *ad fratres in eremo, ſermon.*11. O Monache, fac vt mens tua ſit liber, quem vidit,&c. O thou ſolitarie fellow (Monke) let thy minde be that booke, which Ezechiel ſaw, wherein were written Lamentations: Ad has Lamentationes te conuertas: Turne thee to theſe Lamentations,&c. Here are no outward Satisfactions enioyned, but inward Lamentations.

Tertullian ſheweth, that this maner of whipping & ſcourging the owne bodie, was firſt taken vp by Lib.ad Martyres. the Lacedemonians, among whom there was a certaine ſolemnitie called διαμαστιγώσις, a whipping: wherein, Nobiles adoleſcentes ante aram flagellis affliguntur, aſtantib. parentibus,&c. Noble young men were afflicted with whips before the altar, their parents ſtanding by, and exhorting them to perſeuere,&c. whereupon Rhenanus giueth this note: Iſtius veteris diamaſtigoſeos veſtigium aliquod videas apud Italos in Litanijs: Of this auncient kinde of whipping, you may ſee ſome footſteps among the Italians, in their Letanies,&c. who vſe in proceſſion to whip themſelues: ſo it is euident, that this faſhion was firſt taken vp by Pagans.

In the Greeke Church it was a cuſtome, that the Presbyter did preſcribe lawes of ſatisfaction to Socrates lib. 5. the penitent, and did abſolue them: which cuſtome was aboliſhed by Nectarius: hee thought it an c.19. vnreaſonable cuſtome, that the Prieſt ſhould enioyne ſuch penall ſatisfactions.

Confeſſ. of Bohem. c.4. They muſt not be perſwaded, as though they deſerued any thing by ſuffering Harm. ſect.4. puniſhment, or ſhould receiue from God any grace or reward in recompence for the merite of theſe puniſh- p.48. ments,&c. Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. They condemne thoſe, which teach that canonicall ſatisfactions are ne- Sect.8 p.224. ceſſarie to redeeme eternall paines, or the paines of purgatorie,&c. Then it followeth, that it is a ſuperfluous thing for the Prieſt to enioyne workes of ſatisfaction.

*Decret. Gregor. lib.*5.*tit.*38.*c.*1. Manifeſta peccata non ſunt occulta correctione purganda: Manifeſt ſinnes muſt not be purged with ſecret correction,&c. But Popiſh Prieſts many times enioyne ſecret penance for great ſinnes, wherein they doe contrarie to their owne Canons.

THE THIRD PART, OF PARdons and Indulgences.

The Papiſts.

1. THe principall Magiſtrates of the Church are no leſſe authorized to pardon, then to puniſh, and 72.Error. to remit the temporall puniſhment due to ſinners, the offence being firſt forgiuen, which wee call an Indulgence or pardon, *Rhemiſt.*2.*Cor.*2.4. *Concil. Trid. ſeſſ.*25.

Argum. To whom you forgiue any thing, I forgiue alſo, 2.Cor.2.10. Here the Apoſtle forgiueth 2.Cor.2.10. the young man a piece of his puniſhment, when he might haue kept him longer in penance for his offence, Rhemiſt. ibid.

*Anſwere.*1. We denie not, but that the Church may releaſe ſuch publike exerciſe of humiliation, which is enioyned offenders for triall of their repentance, and ſome ſatisfaction of the Church, when it ſeeth that they are ſufficiently humbled. But it followeth not, that the Church therefore may diſpence with any neceſſarie part of repentance towards God. 2. Whereas you ſay, the Apoſtle, notwithſtanding his rebuke was ſufficient, might haue kept the young man ſtill in temporall puniſhment: it is cleane contrarie to the Apoſtles owne rule, who perſwadeth the Corinthians to forgiue him, leaſt he ſhould be ouercome of too much heauineſſe, verſ.7. The Apoſtle therefore would neither forgiue nor releaſe him, before they had forgiuen him, and hee had ſatisfied the whole Church, verſ.10. Neither would he keepe him longer in puniſhment, hauing once ſorrowed ſufficiently, verſ.6. The Apoſtle therefore did neither binde nor releaſe him at his owne pleaſure, but as he ſaw repentance to be wrought in the offender.

The Proteſtants.

THe power which the Pope and popiſh Biſhops doe challenge vnto themſelues, in giuing Pardons and Indulgences, is moſt blaſphemous.

1 They doe take vpon them to releaſe both the puniſhment of this life, and the paines of Purgatorie alſo: and ſay, that their pardons profit both the dead and the liuing, Bull. Leon. 10.

1 Contrarie to their owne Canons, par.2.cauſ.24.qu.2.c.2.Gelaſius: Eccleſia viuentes poteſt ligare, vel ſoluere, non mortuos: The Church may looſe or binde thoſe which are liuing, but not the dead. And it is grounded vpon that ſaying of our Sauiour, Whatſoeuer you binde in earth, &c. Super terram (inquit) He ſaith vpon the earth: for he that dieth being bound, nuſquam dicit abſolui, hee ſaith no where, is abſolued. And Clemens 5. reproueth certaine pardoners, and decreeth againſt them, which made them beleeue, that gaue them almes, Quòd animas eorum (vt mendaciter aſſerunt) de purgatorio extrahant: That they drew out of Purgatorie their friends ſoules, as they lyingly ſaid: Clement.lib.5. tit.9 c.2.

2 They pardon not onely the puniſhment, but the ſinne both paſt, and to come, for dayes, yeeres, hundreds, thouſands of yeeres: howſoeuer the Rhemiſts would beare vs in hand, that an indulgence is a releaſe but of the puniſhment. Such was the firſt Iubile pardon granted by Boniface 8. anno 1300. And another by Leo the 10. anno 1513.

Clemens 6. in his bull of the Iubile yeere, ſaith thus, Mandamus Angelis quatenus animam omnium accedentium, &c. We command the Angels, to carrie all the ſoules of thoſe that come to Rome this yeere, out of Purgatorie into Paradiſe: Et concedimus cruce ſignatis, vt ad eorum vota, duas vel tres animas, quas vellent, è Purgatorio liberarent: And we grant to all thoſe, that haue taken vpon them the holy Croſſe, to deliuer two or three ſoules at their pleaſure out of Purgatorie. See what monſtrous blaſphemies here are. See alſo the Boſton pardons granted by Pope Innocent, Pope Iulie, Pope Clement, which gaue them releaſe of all their ſinnes for fiue hundred yeeres, *Fox p.*1178.

2 Contrarie to their owne Canons: Clem.lib.5.tit.9.c.2. Certaine Pardoners, and Queſtors are condemned, quia à pœna & culpa abſoluant: which tooke vpon them to abſolue both from the fault and puniſhment.

3 They giue indulgences for temporall ſeruices; as for giuing towards Subſidies for the maintenance of warre, for building of bridges, and ſuch like: for the which the Councell of Baſil is reprehended, *epiſtol.ſynod.*7. But the Apoſtle granteth indulgence to the inceſtuous perſon onely becauſe of his true ſorrow, which teſtified his repentance, 2.Cor.2.7.

2.Cor.2.7.

4 They tooke vpon them to grant plenarie and generall indulgences, as to all that doe ſuch and ſuch things: as in the yeere of Iubile, to all, that viſite Rome. So the Councell of Baſil gaue plenarie indulgence to all reſiant in the Councell, *ſeſſ.*45. Thus did not Iohn Baptiſt, who miniſtred Baptiſme of repentance and remiſſion of ſinnes, (which is the true indulgence) not to all indifferently, but to thoſe which confeſſed their ſinnes, Matth.3.6. the reſt hee rebuked, and threatned with Gods iudgements. Yea their owne Decrees teſtifie: Diſtinct. 50.27. Satis temerarius eſt, qui cunctis remiſſionem peccatorum ſe dare poſſe putet: He is very raſh, that thinketh he is able to giue remiſſion of ſinnes to all.

Matth.3.6.

5 They grant indulgences to many that are abſent, and vnknowne, not examining their contrition and repentance: ſo did not our Sauiour, who vſed to heale thoſe onely in whom he ſaw faith, Mark.5.34. Thy faith hath made thee whole, Mark.9.23. Luk.7.50. Yea and their owne Canons ſay, Peccati venia non datur niſi correcto: Pardon of ſinne is not granted, but to thoſe which are amended: *ſext. decretal. regul.iur.*5.

Mark.5.34.
Luk.7.50.

6 Their indulgences were reſtrained to ſeuerall limits and circuites: *Decret.Greg.lib.5.tit.38.c.*4. Indulgentiæ non proſunt non ſubditis: Indulgences doe not profit thoſe which are not ſubiects to the Biſhop, that is of his dioceſſe. But Chriſts indulgence is generall to all, Ioh.3.15. Whoſoeuer beleeueth in him, ſhall not periſh.

Iohn 3.15.

7 They giue indulgence not for the time paſt onely, but for the time to come, giuing as it were thereby a libertie to ſinne. Chriſt doth otherwiſe: after he had freed the adulterous woman, Ioh.8. he ſaith, Goe and ſinne no more: he doth not abſolue her for the time to come, but onely giueth her an admonition: See the Canon of Gelaſius following.

Iohn 8.11.

8 Their indulgences did flye in euery corner like flyes in the ayre, or moates in the Sunne: whereof there hath beene an ancient complaint: Fiunt hodie tot indulgentiæ, &c. There are ſo many indulgences now adaies, that they grow into contempt, opuſc.tripart.lib.3.c.9. But the Scriptures make not ſaluation ſo eaſie or common a thing, but that euen the righteous doe finde it through much difficultie obtained, 1.Pet.4.18.

1.Pet.4.18.

9 By their indulgences they could giue power to other to deliuer ſoules, as before in the bull of Clemens 6. but Chriſt gaue power onely vnto the Apoſtles and Miniſters to remit or retaine ſinnes, to binde, or looſe: they can haue no committies on this behalfe.

10. And that which filled vp the meaſure of iniquity, they ſet their pardons to ſale: as in Pope Leo his time, his pardoners for ten ſhillings would giue to any man power, to deliuer one ſoule at his pleaſure out of Purgatorie.

Fox.p.844.

Argum. The Scripture ſaith, that [a] God onely forgiueth ſinnes, Mark.2.7. And that Chriſt no otherwiſe, then as God, forgaue ſinnes, verſ.10. His Apoſtles only as his Miniſters and Ambaſſadors, in his name, declare and pronounce remiſſion of ſins, 2. Corinth.5.19. Wherefore there is no ſuch power giuen vnto men, at their pleaſure to bind or looſe.

[a] Which ſentence though it were vttered by the Scribes and Phariſies yet is it allowed by our bleſſed Sauiour, & is agreeable to other places of Scripture. Iſai.43.25.

See our further anſwer to this cauill. Retec.p.224.

1. Auguſtine ſaith, pax Eccleſiæ dimittit peccata: Non ſecundum arbitrium hominum, ſed ad arbitrium Dei, & orationes ſanctorum: the peace of the Church looſeth ſinnes, not at the pleaſure of men, but according to the will of God, and prayers of the Saints.

De Baptiſm. lib.3.cap.18.

Tertullian thus taxeth the forwardnes of ſome to grant indulgences: quod ſi diſciplinæ ſolius officia ſortitus es, nec imperio præſidere, ſed miniſterio, quis aut quantus es indulgere? quum neq; prophetam neque Apoſtolum exhibeas, cares ea virtute, cuius eſt indulgere: If thou onely haſt obtained the office of Diſcipline, not to be ſet ouer others by an authority, but a miniſtery, who and what manner of one, art thou to grant indulgences? ſeeing thou neither ſheweſt to bee a Prophet nor Apoſtle, thou wanteſt the power, which giueth indulgence, &c. In the Æthiopike Church, the patriarke granteth no indulgences nor pardons: as Zaga Zabo their Biſhop confeſſeth.

2. Neither was there of ancient time any indulgences in the Greeke Church: as Alphonſus confeſſeth: de indulgentijs nulla apud priſcos mentio, &c. there is no mention of indulgences in the ancient writers: and at this day the Muſcouites following the faſhion of the Greeke Church, allow of no indulgences.

Gelaſius epiſtol. ad Sanct. Auditum ſub iſto cœlo non legitur, quod eorum voce depromitur: date nobis veniam, dum tamen nos in errore duremus: Neſcio inter quæ mundi prodigia hoc poſſit admitti: Remitti culpa de præterito poteſt, correctione ſine dubio ſubſequente, &c. It was neuer heard of in the world (as they ſay,) giue vs pardon, but let vs continue in error ſtill: this may bee well counted a monſtrous thing: the fault that is paſt, may bee forgiuen, if amendment of life follow after. This learned Biſhop counteth it a monſtrous thing, to forgiue ſinnes to come, men ſtill continuing in ſinne: but this is an vſuall practiſe in the Popes Conſiſtory at Rome, to forgiue ſinnes for many yeres to come.

This doctrine alſo hath bene ſealed: Thomas Clarke perſecuted for ſaying the Pope hath no authoritie to giue pardon, and to releaſe any mans ſoule from ſinne, and ſo from paine, Fox.p.830.

Iohn Fortune Martyr, being asked if he did not beleeue, that the Pope had power to forgiue ſinnes, anſwered; The Pope is but a man, and the Prophet Dauid ſaith, No man can deliuer his brother, nor make agreement for him vnto God, Pſal.49. Fox pag.1918.

Pſalm.49.7.

Heere alſo may bee remembred, how one William Button appoſed a pardoner with this queſtion: Whether the holy father the Pope could deliuer ſoules out of Purgatory? There is no doubt of that ſaid the other: Why doth he not then (quoth Button) of charity deliuer all ſoules from thence? For this ſpeech the good man was troubled, Fox pag.1230.

This alſo was Maſter Latimers queſtion: Why the Pope, who could with a word of his mouth (as they ſay) haue ſpoiled all Purgatorie; doth ſuffer notwithſtanding ſo much money to be beſtowed that way, and to depriue vs of ſo many Patrones in heauen, as he might deliuer out of Purgatory. pag.1748.col.1.

The Papiſts.

2. THe ſatisfactorie and meritorious workes of the Saints which doe abound, being communicable, and applicable to the faithfull that want, are the very ground of the indulgences, and pardons of the Church, and the very treaſure thereof, and to bee diſpenſed according to euery mans neede by the paſtors of the Church, 2.Corinth.2.ſect.5.Coloſſ.1.ſect.4.Rhemiſt.

73.Error.

The Doway ſtudents would proue this point, by that text, Iob. 6.1.2. would God my ſinnes were weighed, &c. As the ſand of the Sea this would appeare heauie, whence they infer thus: which ſuperabundance of paynes patiently ſuffered by holy Iob and other Saints, more then their ſinnes deſerued, ſpecially of our bleſſed Sauiour, who could not ſinne, and of our bleſſed Ladie who neuer ſinned, remaine an infinite treaſure of ſatisfactorie workes appliable by the ſupreame ſtuard of the Church Chriſts Vicare, &c. and in the margent thus: pardons doe apply the ſufferings of ſome for the ſatisfaction of others.

Iob.6.1.2.

The Proteſtants.

HEre are many blaſphemies and vntruths couched together.

1. That a mans penalties may exceede and be greater then his ſinnes, and ſo his abounding may ſupply another mans want. For thus the Rhemiſts ſay: Which cannot ſtand with the iuſtice of God, to puniſh a man more then he hath deſerued. And it is contrary to the Scriptures: Enter not into iudgement with thy ſeruant: for in thy ſight ſhall none that liueth be iuſtified, Pſalm.143.2. And Iob ſaith, If

Pſalm.143.2.

Iob.9.3. the Lord ſhould call him to account, he ſhould not anſwere one to a thouſand, 9.3.

2 How can the Church-gouernours diſpenſe the merites of one to another? Who made them ſtewards of another mans good? Ye ſay alſo the contrary your ſelues, That the abounding paſſions of the Saints are applicable to others by the ſufferers intention, *Rhem.*1, *Coloſ.*2.2. Then not by the Churches diſpenſation.

3 It is a great blaſphemie, that one may be holpen by another mans merits, and it doth derogate from the death of Chriſt, whoſe only merits are the treaſure and ſtore-houſe of the Church: The moſt
Ezech.14.14. righteous man that euer was, can but ſaue his owne ſoule, Ezech.14.14. And that onely by Chriſt.

And what a preſumption is this, that they dare to match the ſufferings of our bleſſed Sauiour, and of the Saints together: and ſo make them, to bee cooperators and ioint-workers with their maſter, whereas the ſcripture ſaith that Chriſt had trode alone the wine-preſſe of his Fathers wrath.

Iſay.63.3. 4 That place in Iob is by them corrupted: there is no word, that ſignifieth ſinne: as the Latine tranſlator readeth, the word is כעס Caghas, which ſignifieth griefe, anger, as the ſeptuagint expreſſe it by the word ὀργή, and ſo it is taken. Eccleſ.7.5. anger is better then laughter: it were verie vnfit, to ſay, ſinne is better then laughter: ſo then Iob doth not compare his ſins and afflictions together, as though theſe exceeded the other; but hee deſcribeth the greatneſſe of his griefe, by an hyperbolicall ſpeech without compariſon.

See the iudgement of ſome of the Greeke and South Church, againſt the applying of works of ſome to others; before. err.65.

In Matth. ſerm.22. Auguſtine ſaith; Vnuſquiſque pro ſe rationem reddit, nec alieno teſtimonio quiſquam adiuuatur apud Deum, — & vix ſibi quiſque ſufficit, &c. Euery man ſhall giue account for himſelfe, before God no man is holpen by the teſtimony of another: the teſtimony of his owne conſcience doth hardly ſuffice for himſelfe.

Bellar.lib.1.de indulgent.c.2. Confeſſ. of Saxonie artic.17. they call this applying of indulgences, whereby the Pope doth apply the merits of Saints unto others, counterfeit, &c. Two of their owne writers, Maior and Durandus, by Bellarmines owne confeſſion doe doubt of the truth of this treaſure, which they ſay is mixed of the paſſions of Chriſt, and of the Saints, &c.

The Papiſts.

74.Error. 3. THe diſpenſing of pardons and indulgences, is onely committed, they ſay, to the chiefe Magiſtrates the Popes and Biſhops: and as the Biſhops in their Dioceſſe haue eſpeciall caſes reſerued to themſelues, wherein inferiour Prieſts are not to deale; ſo the Pope hath alſo his proper reſeruations, wherein other Prelates are not to meddle, *Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.*14.*cap.*7. The caſes reſerued to the Pope are 51. in number, Fox pag.785. The Biſhop of Paris, *an.*1515. reſerued theſe caſes to himſelfe, to diſpenſe in murder, witchcraft, ſacriledge, hereſie, ſimonie, adultery; ex Tileman. Heſhuſ. loc. 9.*de pœnitent.err.*63. Likewiſe the yeeres of their pardons are limited: Biſhops may not exceede 40. daies pardon: the Pope may be lauiſh in his hundreds and thouſands: yea, and this reſeruation of caſes, ſtandeth not onely with the externall policie of the Church, but is of force euen before God, *Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.*14.*cap.*7.

The Proteſtants.

WE will not much contend with them about reſeruation of caſes, for wee acknowledge no ſuch power to giue pardons, or indulgences, either in ſuperiour or inferiour Prieſts: yet wee will ſhew how this deuice of theirs ſtandeth not with their owne doctrine.

*Argum.*1. It is a greater power to remit the ſinne, than to releaſe the puniſhment: but euery Prieſt hath the greater power, as they ſay, to remit ſinnes, yea as fully as hath the Pope himſelfe: Allen in his booke of pardons, *cap.*2. Ergo, why haue they not the leſſe power, which is by indulgence to diſpenſe with the puniſhment? And that of theſe two, the remiſſion of ſinnes is the greater, it is confeſſed by the *Rhemiſt.*2.*Cor.*2 *ſect.*6.

*Argum.*2. In the point of death, the reſeruation of caſes hath no place: but at that time euery Prieſt may abſolue from all manner ſinnes and puniſhment, *Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.*14.*cap.*7. But euery houre is with ſome, and ought to be with all, the point of death: becauſe we are vncertaine when it commeth, and therefore ought alwaies to be in a readines. Therefore euen by their owne rule euery Prieſt hath at all times authority to abſolue in all caſes.

Iohn.20.22. Againe, if theſe words of Chriſt be ſpoken to all Miniſters and preachers of the Goſpell, Iohn.20.22. Whoſe ſinnes ye retaine, &c. (which cannot be denied) to them all then is committed equally that power of binding and looſing, which is exerciſed by the preaching of the word.

Their owne Canons doe giue authority to euery Prieſt to enioyne penance: *Decr.Greg.lib.*5.*tit.*38.*cap.*12. and they doe bind euery man, iniunctam ſibi pœnitentiam adimplere, to fulfill the penance inioyned; or elſe, viuens ab eccleſia ingreſſu arceatur: He that refuſeth muſt be kept out of the Church as long as he liueth, and want Chriſtian buriall, when he is dead, &c. If euery Prieſt then by their law hath power to enioyne penance; why not alſo to releaſe penance? wherefore heerein they doe their Prieſts wrong.

And ſeeing we are entred to ſpeak of the abuſe and vſurpation of the keyes in the popiſh Church, as in reſeruation of caſes, and ſuch like, I will briefly touch other notable abuſes and corruptions among mong them in the diſpenſation of the keyes, and ſpecially concerning excommunicating: wherein they apparently tranſgreſſe their owne canons.

Tertullian in his time knew of no ſuch reſeruation of caſes but onely vnto Chriſt: as ſpeaking of repentance he ſaith: quæ aut leuiorib. delictis veniam ab Epiſcopo conequi poterit, aut maiorib. et irremiſſibilib, a ſolo Deo: which either may obtaine pardon for ſmall faults of the Biſhop, or of great and irremiſſible of God, &c. And againe, repentance in deed is due, De venia Deo, reſeruamus, but pardon we reſerue for God: the Æthiopike Church thus profeſſeth by the penne of Zaga Zabo there Biſhop: the confeſſors doe giue vnto vs abſolution of all our ſinnes by the power of the Church, Nullo caſu epiſcopo aut patriarcha reſernato quamuis grauiſſimo, no caſe beeing reſerued to the Biſhop or Patriarke, though neuer ſo great.

Damianus a Goes de morib. Æthiop.

2. Baſile of the Greeke Church ſaith: illud vero in quib. dellictis, &c. But that is not to bee aked, in what ſinnes euerie one ſhould remit: cum nouum inſtrumentum nihil hic ſtatuat differentiæ, &c. when-as the new Teſtament heere appointeth no difference, but doth promiſe remiſſion of ſins of euery ſin, to thoſe that truely repent. &c.

Regul cõtract. queſt. 15.

3. Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. artic. 7. From hence are theſe burthens — that a ſinne in a caſe reſerued can not be pardoned but by the authority of him that reſerued it, whereas the canons ſpeake onely of reſeruing of canonicall puniſhments and not of reſeruing the fault, &c.

Harmon. ſec. 17. p. 526.

4. Franciſcus de Victoria their profeſſor of Salamanca ſaith, that the Pope may grauiter errare, ſin grieuouſly in diſpenſing with the decrees of councels: &c. and he complaineth of ſuch a company of diſſolute indulgences, as hee calleth them from the Court of Rome, vt orbis ferre non poſſet, that the world cannot endure them, &c. We ſee then the fruit, which commeth, euen by the iudgement of their owne men, by the reſeruation of caſes.

Retec. 17. propoſ. 5.

ABVSES IN THE POPISH CHVRCH IN THE administration of the Keyes, and namely about Excommunication.

1. THe ancient Canons forbid, that the dead ſhould be anathematized, or excommunicate: Anaſt. decr. 2, Monente nos Apoſtolo, &c. The Apoſtle admoniſhing vs, &c. leſt any offence might riſe in the Church, while we goe about to iudge of them, which are paſſed out of this life, &c. Whether we liue or die, we are the Lords: Why doſt thou iudge another mans ſeruant? And to the ſame effect Paulinus thus anſwereth Iuſtinian the Emperour: Quibus recitabitur ſententia damnationis noſtra, &c. To whom ſhall the ſentence of our condemnation be recited? To what ende ſhould wee warre with the dead? &c. But nothing is more common with Papiſts, than to excommunicate the dead.

2. Excommunication in time paſt in the purer ages of the Church, was not vſed to be denounced againſt Kings: Epiſtol. Leodienſ. cont. Paſchal. 2. Si quis vetus & nouum teſtamentum, &c. If anie man turne ouer the olde and new teſtament, hee ſhall euidently finde, quod aut minime, aut difficile poſſunt, that Kings and Princes may hardly or not at all bee excommunnicate; they may be admoniſhed, reproued, &c. Behold Pope Hildebrand was the firſt, qui leuauit ſacerdotalem lanceam contra diadema regum, that lift vp the Prieſtly weapon againſt the crowne of Princes. But now they take vpon them at their pleaſure to excommunicate princes, and it hath beene the practiſe of the Popes a long time.

3. They did not vſe of ancient time to excommunicate vpon diſpleaſure, but for ſome notable ſin: Origen. tract. 24. in Matth. Eſt videre multos doctores, &c. Wee may ſee many doctors and teachers, that ſuffer not to enter into the Church, &c. Non propter peccata, &c. They doe not excommunicate for ſinne, but of diſpleaſure and contention; and they are better many times than themſelues, &c. But this was vſuall in Popery, to excommunicate men vpon diſpleaſure, as Arundell Archbiſhop of Canterburie ſuſpended all the Churches in London, that did not ring their bells at his comming: Fox. pag. 554.

4. The vſe hath beene, that none for light or ſmall offences ſhould bee excommunicate. Concil. Aurel. 5. can. 2. Nullus ſacerdotum quenquam recta fidei hominem, &c. That no Prieſt for light cauſes or matters, ſuſpend any man from the communion: But the contrary is practiſed among them; as Courtney Archbiſhop of Canturburie ſuſpended certaine poore men, becauſe they brought litter for his horſe in ſackes. Fox. p. 555.

5. It hath beene decreed, Diem peremptorinm ad primam citationem non ſtatuendum, maxime cum de rebus Eccleſiaſticis agitur: That a peremptory day ſhould not be ſet vpon the firſt citation, eſpeciallie in Eccleſiaſticall matters, but that the partie ſhould be further expected: Lateranenſ. ſub Alexand. 3. part. 2. c. 9. The contrary is with them practiſed, vpon the firſt citation to excommunicate.

6. Likewſe it was decreed, Penitus interdicimus, vt cauſa cupiditatis nullus, &c. Wee do inhibite, that none vpon couetouſneſſe doe excommunicate, or abſolue, eſpecially where the cuſtome is, that the excommunicate party when he is abſolued, ſhould pay money. Lateranen. ſub Innocent. 3. c. 49. But they vſe to excommunicate for want of their fees.

7. Another fault before this time complained of, quod tot hodie fiunt excommunicationes per officiales les. That there are now ſo many excommunications by officials, that they are contemned & turned to laughter: *Opuſc.tripart.lib.3.c.9.Senonenſ.concil.decret.mor.*31. We ſtraightly charge, vt caueant ab earum multiplicatione,&c. That they take heede of multiplying excommunications, ne in vilipendium deducantur, that they be not made nought worth. But nothing is more common with them, than for popiſh curſes and excommunications to flye abroad.

8. Lateranenſ.ſub Alexand.3.part.1.c.3. Niſi admonitione canonica præmiſſa, &c. That the prelates ſhould not pronounce the ſentence of excommunication, but vpon canonicall admonition going before; ſo alſo was it decreed, Concil.Oxonienſ. ſub Stephano: But it is their vſe, to excommunicate at the firſt, without any other admonition.

9. It hath beene the vſe, that for publike and notorious ſinnes, men ſhould bee excommunicate: Concil.Cabilon.ſub Carol.c.25. Si quis publicè peccat,&c. If any man ſinne publikely, ſecundum ordinem canonum pro merito ſuo excommunicetur,&c. let him according to the canons bee excommunicated for his demerite, and ſo be reconciled: but it is a rare thing with them to excommunicate for adulterie, blaſphemie, vſurie, and ſuch like, but to enioyne a little popiſh penance, and ſo to reconcile them.

10. Carthag 4.c.84.Epiſcopus nullum prohibeat ingredi Eccleſiam. &c. Let the Biſhop forbid none to enter into the Church, and to heare the word, whether a Gentile, Iew, or heretike, vntill the Maſſe, &c. which was then nothing elſe, but the communion: But with them excommunicate perſons are excluded from hearing the word at all, whereby they might be brought to repentance for their ſinne.

11. None in the purer times of the Church were excommunicate, before their cauſe was heard: Epiſtol.Leodienſ.Nec à Papa Romano nos excommunicatos credimus,&c. Neither doe we beleeue, that we are excommunicate of the Pope, for we know he is not ignorant, what Nicodemus ſaith; our lawe condemneth no man, vnleſſe it heare him firſt: But they vſe to excommunicate without preſence of the partie, or hearing of the cauſe.

12. It is their law, that excommunicatus non poteſt excommunicare, that they which are excommunicate, cannot excommunicate others. Cauſ.24.q.1.c.4. But the Papiſts ſtand ipſo facto excommunicate, as all heretikes and idolaters doe: and Maſter Beza ſaith, he told them to their face at Piſſiacum, that there was none of the popiſh hierarchie, which by the pure and ancient canons of the Church is not ipſo facto to be pronounced excommunicate. Epiſtol.1.p.18.

13. Their owne canons make two kinds of excommunications: the greater, which is à communione fidelium, from the communion of the faithfull; and the leſſe, à perceptione ſacramentorum, from the receiuing of the Sacraments: Decr.Greg.lib.5.tit.39.c.59. And the greater excommunication is not to be vſed, but vpon great offences: Synod.Colonienſ.part.13.cap.5.Cum excommunicatio pœna ſit, qua nulla maior in Eccleſia: Seeing excommunication is a puniſhment, then the which there is no greater in the Church, let no man be excommunicate, niſi pro peccato lethali, but for deadly ſin. Now the contrarie is practiſed with them, which draw out euen the greater excommunication vpon euery ſmall occaſion, neuer vſing the leſſe at all: And that it is the greater excommunication, both their practiſe ſheweth, in ſeparating not from the communion onely, but from the entrance into the Church; and the Canon likewiſe witneſſeth, excommunicatio ſimpliciter lata: an excommunication ſimply pronounced, without any condition, is vnderſtood of the greater: Decr.Greg.lib.5. tit.39.c.39.

14. By the ancient Canons, it is not lawfull to haue any fellowſhip with excommunicate perſons: they all ſtand excommunicate, qui cibo, potu, oſculo,&c. which doe communicate with them in meat or drinke, &c. Cauſ.11.q.3.c.3. Nicolaus. Sine ſpe ſit reconciliationis, Hee is without hope to be reconciled, that doth company with the excommunicate. C.7. Martin. Non palam vel ſecretè cum eis loquendum: They muſt not openly or ſecretly talke with them. C.18.Iſidor. It is not lawfull to go to the houſe of one excommunicate, C.26. Communicare non licet ijs: It is not lawfull to communicate with thoſe, that keepe company with the excommunicate. C.25.Greg. Now then the Canons being thus ſtrict, that not only they that keepe company with the excōmunicate, but they which communicate with the companions of the excommunicate, that doe eat drinke and talke with them, doe ſtand alſo excommunicate: by this meanes, thouſands of people (excommunications beeing ſo common as they are) ſhall ſtand ſubiect at once to the ſentence of excommunication.

15. Becauſe excommunication was counted ſo heauy a ſentence: anathema, æterna mortis damnatio: It is the damnation of eternall death, to be anathematized or excommunicate. Cauſ.11.q.3.c.41. In the ſame place it is decreed, that the ſentence of excommunication, non ferenda ſine conſcientia Epiſcopi, ſhould not be giuen without the knowledge of the biſhop or Archbiſhop himſelfe. But the contrary is practiſed amongſt them; euery officiall, deputie, or ſurrogate, hath as great power to excommunicate as the biſhop himſelfe.

16. Beſide, excommunicate perſons (by the Canons and Imperiall conſtitutions) are depriued of ciuill priuiledges and immunities: Excommunicandus non audiendus in iudicio: An excommunicate perſon is not to be heard in Iudgement, decret.Greg.lib.1.tit.29.c.21. Non ſunt homicidæ,&c. They are not guilty of murder, that take armes againſt the excommunicate: Cauſ.23.qu.5.c.47.Vrban. In nullum teſtimonium recipiendi: They muſt not bee receiued as witneſſes in any cauſe: Calixt.epiſt.2.

They are ſubiect Banno imperiali to the imperiall outlawrie, if they ſtand one yeere excommunicate: *Cod.lib.*1.*Tit.*6.*leg.*13. Frederic. Who ſeeth not, what inconueniences will enſue, that thouſands being wrapped in the ſentence of excommunication at once, as I ſhewed *artic.*14. ſhall alſo incur the penalty and danger of the Princes lawes.

17. It is prohibited by the Canons, that any man ſhould excommunicate in his owne cauſe, Pro vindicta propria iniuria, quod ſacris regulis prohibetur: to be reuenged for any iniury done to himſelfe, which is forbidden by the ſacred rules: *cauſ.*23.*qu.*4.*c.*27. Gregor. The contrary is practiſed by popiſh Prelates: as ſee an example before *artic.*4.

18. *Nicen.*2 *can.*4. It is decreed, that no man, Propter auri exactionem vel alicuius alius ſpeciei, venerandum templum claudere: Should for the exacting of gold or ſiluer, or ſuch like ſhut vp the Church dores, that is, interdict it, that the diuine myſteries be not ſolemnized in it: The popiſh practiſe is contrary, who for the omiſſion of the leaſt duty, or fee, belonging to them, and vpon other ſmall occaſions, do interdict Churches; an example heereof ſee in *Arundell.artic.*3.

19. By the old Canons he that was excommunicate, was ſolemnly reconciled to the Church, Terra proſtratus veniam poſtulat: Falling downe to the ground, he muſt aske forgiueneſſe: and publique prayer was to be made for him in this manner: Præſta quæſumus Domino huic famulo tuo &c. Grant Lord, wee pray thee to this thy ſeruant worthy fruit of repentance, that he may be reſtored to the holie Church, from whoſe integrity hee hath erred by ſinning, cauſ. 11. qu. 3. c. 108. But now among them abſolution is done in ſecret, without any notice giuen, or ſubmiſſion made before the congregation.

20. Laſtly, to end where I began, in time paſt the Presbyters were ioyned with the Biſhop, in the adminiſtration of the keyes of the Church, as in binding, and looſing: but the Pope and popiſh prelates were the firſt that brought in reſeruation of caſes, and appropriated all to themſelues, excluding the reſt, as it may appeare by this reſeruation of caſes, and for the truth of antiquity in this behalfe, theſe authorities I had at hand.

1. *Cauſ.*11.*q.*3.*c.*106. Debent 12. ſacerdotes epiſcopum circumſtare, &c. Twelue other Prieſts muſt ſtand by the Biſhop, when he pronounceth excommunication, &c. *C.*108. Likewiſe, when the penitent party was to be reconciled, the Biſhop muſt be aſſiſted with as many.

2. *Cauſ.*12.*q.*2, *c.*51. Nec epiſcopi ſine presbyteris, nec presbyteri ſine epiſcopo res eccleſiæ vendant, &c Neither the Biſhop without the Presbyters, nor the Presbyters without the Biſhop muſt ſell, the goods of the Church. If they were ioyned together in diſpenſing of the temporall goods of the Church, much more in the ſpirituall.

3. They were ioyned together in deciding and ending of controuerſies of the Church, Cauſ. 15.*qu.*7, *cap.*2. Præſentibus ſenioribus epiſcopus, &c. The Biſhop ſhall heare the cauſes of the Clergie, the Seniors or Elders beeing preſent. C. 6. Nullius cauſam audiat epiſcopus, &c. Let the Biſhop heare no mans cauſe without the preſence of the Clergie. *Decret.Gregor.lib.*5.*tit.*7.c. 9. Lucius 3. Epiſcopi cum conſilio Clericorum, &c. The Biſhops with the counſell of the Clergie muſt iudge of heretikes.

4. Innocentius 3. decreed, that omnis vtriuſq; ſexus, &c. that euery one of both ſexes vpon paine of excommunication, ſhould confeſſe proprio ſacerdoti, to their owne Prieſt, and ſhould fulfill iniunctam pœnitentiam, penance enioyned by him, *decret.Greg.lib.tit.*38.*c.*12.

5. Synod. Auguſt.c. 19. Poteſt quilibet confeſſor pro peccatorum magnitudine, ex cauſa, quæ ſibi iuſta videbitur, ad tempus communione interdicere: Euery confeſſor may according to the greatneſſe of the ſinnes, as hee ſhall ſee iuſt cauſe, for a time to interdict from the Communion. If then the Prieſt haue power to binde, why hath he not power to looſe? and if to looſe, then alſo to binde? Their owne Canons allow them to inioyne penance, to interdict the Communion, why not alſo to giue indulgence.

6. Origen ſaith: Epiſcopi & presbyteri, quibus ſunt credita cathedræ, qui tradunt eccleſias, quibus non oportet, &c. Biſhops and Presbyters, to whom the chaires or ſeates of the Church are committed, which doe deliuer Churches to thoſe, whom they ſhould not, are they that ſell Doues, &c. Hee ſaith, that to both of them the chaire of the Church is committed: *Origen.tract.*15.in Matth.

7. Ambroſe thus witneſſeth: *Lib.*2.*de Cain & Abel.c.*4. Remittuntur peccata per Dei verbum, cuius Leuites interpres & executor eſt, Leuites igitur miniſter remiſſionis eſt: Sinnes are remitted by the word of God, whereof the Leuite is the interpreter, and executor, the Leuite then is the miniſter of remiſſion.

8. To this agreeth our Engliſh confeſſion, *Harm.ſect.*11. Seeing one manner of worde is giuen to all, and one onely key belongeth to all, we ſay, there is but one onely power of all Miniſters, as concerning opening and ſhutting.

9. To this accordeth a reuerent learned man of our Church, writing thus: After Biſhops were appointed, &c. at length by cuſtome Presbyters were vtterly excluded from all aduice and counſell, whereof Ambroſe complaineth, and Biſhops onely entermedled with the regiment of the Church. This manner of ſubiection in Presbyters, and prelation in Biſhops, grew only in continuance of time, and not by any ordinance of Chriſt or his Apoſtles: B. Bilſon. Of the regiment of the Church. p. 237. Whereby this reuerend author inſinuateth, as the truth is, that at the beginning, Presbyters were ioyned with Biſhops in the regiment of the Church and diſpenſation of the keyes, howſoeuer it is come to paſſe, that they are now vtterly excluded.

We haue the teſtimony of the holy Martyrs: Richard Fenrus holy Martyr, In preaching of the word is all the power contained of binding and looſing, Fox. p.913.col.2.

Iames Baineham Martyr: Hee that preacheth the worde of God, and liueth thereafter, hath the key that bindeth and looſeth both in heauen and earth: the which key is the ſame Scripture that is preached, and the Pope hath no other key to binde or looſe, but the key of Scripture, Fox page 1029. col.2.

True repentance conſiſteth not in ſuch outward exerciſe of the body, but is a conuerſion rather of the heart. It was the manner of hypocrites, idolators and ſuperſtitious men, to ſeeke to appeaſe their gods with afflicting of their fleſh, as the Gentiles did cut their haire, Deut.14.1. Baals prieſts did launce their fleſh. 1.King.18.28.

He calleth it voluntary religion or ſuperſtition in not ſparing the bodie: when men doe not vſe ſuch outward exerciſes of faſting and abſtinence from the chaſtiſement of the fleſh, to ſubdue it to the ſpirit, but with an opinion of meriting thereby, preferring them before the faith and conuerſion of the heart, as the Papiſts doe.

De ver. et falſ. pœnit cap.13. tom.4.

Auguſtine ſaith, Non ſit ſatis, quod doleat, ſed ex fide doleat, & non ſemper doluiſſe, doleat: Let it not ſuffice to bee ſorrowfull, but let his ſorrow proceede of faith, and let it grieue him, that hee is not alwaies grieued for his ſinne. So then true repentance is eſpecially an inward worke of faith, rather then an exerciſe of the bodie, and it ought alwaies to continue. Wherefore it conſiſteth not in ſuch laborious workes, which if a man ſhould long endure, hee ſhould end his life ſooner then repentance.

The Proteſtants.

THat true repentance is not to be meaſured by the time, but by the right ſorrow and contrition of the offender, S. Paul teacheth vs, who writeth for the young man to bee releaſed, becauſe of his great and ſufficient heauineſſe for his fault, 2. Cor. 2.7.

1 Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Pœnitentia vera, non annorum numero, ſed amaritudine animi cenſetur:—pœnitentia quamuis ſit exigui temporis, &c. True repentance is not meaſured by number of yeeres, but by the bitterneſſe of the ſoule: though it bee but for a ſhort time, yet it is not deſpiſed before that Iudge which regardeth the heart.

2. Cor. 2.7.
De tempor. ſerm. 66.

2 Chryſoſtome ſaith: Ea demum eſt pœnitentia, ne amplius peccemus, That is true repentance, that we ſinne no more, &c. when one then hath forſaken his ſinne, whether hee haue fulfilled his time of penance or not, he is to be reſtored. Our aduerſaries obiect againſt vs the hereſie of Audiani, who, as Theodoret ſaith, Confeſſis donant remiſſionem, non tempus ad pœnitentiam, Did giue remiſſion vnto thoſe, which were confeſſed, not time for their penance, as the eccleſiaſticall lawes preſcribe, &c. But, 1. neither were the Audiani counted heretikes for tranſgreſſing an order of the Church. 2. Neither doe the Proteſtants denie but that ſome time ſhould be taken for the triall of true repentance in the offenders. 3. And the Papiſts come nearer the Audiani, who doe giue abſolution to the offenders, before they haue ſet them a time for the probation of their repentance.

3 The writers and confeſſours of the reformed Churches doe not gaine-ſay, but that offenders ſhould haue ſome time ſet them, that their vnfained repentance may appeare: for both Caluin, and Kemnitius, with other of our profeſſours, doe not reiect laborious workes, as ſignes and fruites of repentance: and then it muſt follow, that a time be ſuppoſed, wherein they ſhould ſhew theſe fruites of their repentance. But three things we miſlike in their preſcript times of penance. 1. Their ſuperſtition, in aſcribing a ſatisfactorie vertue to the keeping of thoſe times. 2. Their diſorder, firſt in giuing abſolution, before they enioyne penance, whereas in auncient time, they firſt tooke triall of the offenders repentance in ſome competent ſpace of time, as their owne Caſſander noteth. 3. Their indiſcretion, in reconciling all at the ſame time once in the yeere vpon Maundie Thurſday as it is called, as Bellarmine confeſſeth: whereas in one and the ſame time, repentance cannot be wrought alike in all: and ſeeing there is inequalitie and difference in ſinnes, ſo ſhould the time of penance be limited.

THE FIFTEENTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, OF MATRIMONIE

THe ſeuerall queſtions belonging to this Controuerſie are theſe:

1 Whether Matrimonie be a Sacrament properly ſo called.

2 Of Polygamie, that is, the marying of many wiues either ſucceſſiuely, or at once.

3 Of the cauſes of diuorce, and whether it bee lawfull to marrie after diuorce.

4 Of the degrees in mariage: Firſt, the manner of ſupputation or accounting of degrees. Secondly, whether the degrees forbidden, Leuit.18. may bee diſpenſed with. Thirdly, whether any other degrees may bee by humane law prohibited.

5 Of the impediments of mariage, of two ſorts: firſt, of thoſe that may hinder the contract of mariage onely. Secondly, of ſuch impediments as may both diſſolue the contract and the mariage alſo conſummate.

6 The compariſon of mariage and virginitie, whether either bee preferred before the other before God.

7 Of the times of mariage prohibited.

8 Of the ceremonies and rites of Mariage.

Of theſe in their order.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER Matrimonie be a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

76.Error. THat it is properly and rightly a Sacrament inſtituted of God, and not deuiſed of men, Concil. Trid.ſeſſ.24.can 1.

Epheſ.5.32. *Argum.*1. Epheſ.5.32. This is a great Sacrament: Matrimonie is here a ſigne of an holy thing, repreſenting the coniunction of Chriſt, and his Church: Ergo, a Sacrament: ſo the Doway Gloſſemen, *annot.in Tobie.p.*1003.

Anſw. Firſt, the words are thus to be read rather, This is a great myſterie. Or if we reade Sacrament, they haue no great aduantage, ſeeing they are not ignorant, that the originall word myſterie, which they tranſlate Sacrament, is attributed to other things then Sacraments: as 1.Timoth.3.16. Myſterie of godlineſſe: Apocal.17.5. A myſterie great Babylon. Neither doe they themſelues much vrge this argument. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith not, that Matrimonie is a myſterie, but I ſpeake of Chriſt and his Church, verſ.32. Thirdly, Matrimonie we confeſſe to be inſtituted of God, and to bee a ſigne of a holy thing: yet no Sacrament: for ſo was the Sabbath ordained of God, and ſignified the reſt in Chriſt, Heb.4.8. yet was it no Sacrament. Wherefore all ſignificatiue and myſticall ſignes are not Sacraments. 1.Tim.3.16. Apoc.17.5. Hebr.4.8.

Bellarmine replieth, that this myſterie whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, is to be applied vnto mariage, as it is a ſigne of the coniunction of Chriſt and his Church. Firſt, Hierome and Chryſoſtome ſo expound it; and Nazianzene likewiſe. Secondly, this Pronoune demonſtratiue, hoc, muſt be referred to that which went before, where he ſpake of mariage. Thirdly, the argument of the whole chapter ſheweth it, for by the example of Chriſt and his Church, the Apoſtle exhorteth men to loue their wiues; but if this myſtery appertained nothing at all to marriage, the Apoſtles argument faileth: Fourthly, the Apoſtle ſaith, I ſpeake εις χριστὸν, not ἐν χριστῷ: not in Chriſt, but to Chriſt: ſhewing hereby, that the myſterie in mariage is referred to Chriſt. *Bellar. de Matrim.c.*2.

Contra. Firſt, Hierome ſpeaketh only of the mariage of Adam and Eue. Adam Chriſtum. &c. Adam prefigured Chriſt; Eue the Church: this maketh nothing for mariage now: for that mariage was before ſinne in the ſtate of innocency, and before the time of grace: it followeth not it was a figure then, and therefore a ſigne now. Chryſoſtome onely ſaith, Magnum myſterium, relicto eo, qui genuit gennit,&c. This is a great myſterie, that woman forſaking him that begat her, ſhould cleaue to her husband,&c. he ſpeaketh not of any myſterie in marriage referred to Chriſt. Nazianzene rather maketh againſt them: Scio quia locus iſte,&c. I know, that this place is full of ſacraments; but I thinke it to be vnderſtood of Chriſt and his Church: he ſaith no more than the Apoſtle doth, making no mention of marriage.

Secondly, this demonſtratiue τοῦτο, is in Scripture referred to that which followeth, as well as to that which goeth before: as Mark.16.17. Theſe ſignes, ταῦτα, ſhall follow them that beleeue: and then the ſignes are rehearſed.

Thirdly, it followeth not, becauſe the Apoſtle draweth his exhortation from the loue of Chriſt to his Church, that whatſoeuer hee ſpeaketh of Chriſt and his Church, ſhould be repreſented in marriage: as verſ.26. He gaue himſelfe for it, that he might ſanctifie it, and cleanſe it,&c. Can hee ſhew any ſuch myſterie in marriage? Epheſ.5.26.

Fourthly, hee ſheweth his ignorance in the Greeke tongue: for εἰς is often times taken for ἐν, in: as εἰς τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν καθίζομαι, To ſit in the Church: Aeſchin. εἰς στήλην γράφειν, To write in a pillar, Demoſt. So that in this place εἰς, to, may very well be taken for, ἐν, in and Bellarmine here controleth their owne Latine text, which readeth in Chriſto, in Chriſt, not in Chriſtum to or toward Chriſt.

Laſtly, Ambroſe vpon this place, Myſterium ſacramentum grande,&c. This myſterie is a great ſacrament, in the vnitie of the man and woman: nec hoc prodit,&c. yet hee ſetteth not forth this, but rendreth another cauſe of the Church and the Sauiour.

Argum.2. Matrimonie giueth grace of ſanctification to the parties married. Shee ſhall be ſaued in bearing of children, if they continue in faith and loue, 1.Timoth.2.15. Theſe are the graces giuen by matrimonie: Ergo, a Sacrament: This argument is vrged by the Doway Gloſſemen, annot.in Tobie p.1003. 1.Tim.2.15.

Anſwere. Firſt, we denie that any ſacraments giue or conferre grace, they are inſtruments onely of grace. Secondly, we alſo grant, that by matrimonie God giueth to the faithfull this ſpeciall grace, To liue in holineſſe and pureneſſe, from the filthie pollution of the fleſh: but the ſacraments are ſeales of ſpirituall graces, and ſerue for the encreaſe of faith: it is not ſufficient to be a meanes of any common gift, but of the ſpirituall and iuſtifying grace to make a ſacrament. Thirdly, wherefore if by faith and loue here they vnderſtand onely the fidelitie and dutie of wedlocke, they are not thoſe ſpirituall graces, whereof ſacraments are ſeales: if we take them for the true faith and loue, which are the common graces of the faithfull, as the very meaning is, they are as well to bee had out of wedlocke, as in it. Laſtly, if they will receiue Hieromes expoſition of this place (which I doe not greatly vrge) they can haue no colour at all out of this place: for this ſentence Si permanſerint, If they continue, he referreth to the children: Si illos erudierint in fide,&c. If they bring them vp in faith and loue,&c. And this ſeemeth to be more agreeable to the letter, becauſe here the Apoſtle changeth the number, ſpeaking in the plurall, If they continue: but before in the ſingular, Shee ſhall be ſaued,&c, And where it is obiected, That then the ſaluation of the mothers ſhould depend vpon the faith of their children: the anſwere is, That the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the cauſes of ſaluation, but of remouing the impediments, that women notwithſtanding bearing of children in ſorrow, which was laid vpon them for a puniſhment ſhall be ſaued: their bearing of children ſhall be no impediment vnto their ſaluation, if they haue a care to bring them vp well. If therefore Hieromes interpretation beare any credite with them, aduerſ.Iouinian. the graces here named, doe appertaine to the children, not to the women.

The Proteſtants.

THat matrimonie is no ſacrament of the Goſpell, ſpeaking now properly, and vnderſtanding a ſacrament, for the ſeale of the grace of God in the remiſſion of our ſinnes by Chriſt, it is thus proued.

Argum.1. Matrimonie was inſtituted by God, before ſinne in Paradiſe, therefore it can be no ſacrament of the Goſpell.

Matrimonie alſo may be betweene Infidels, who are not capable of the ſacraments of the Church: Ergo, Argum.Luther.Caluin.

Bellarm. anſwereth: 1. the ioyning together of Adam and Eue, had no promiſe of grace, or ſpirituall benediction, but onely a corporall: Increaſe and multiply: and therefore there is great difference betweene that marriage, and ours now: Bellarm.

Contra.1. Looke what promiſe of grace the marriage of Chriſtians now hath, the ſame had matrimonie in Paradiſe: as marriage hath now a promiſe of fœcunditie and mutuall comfort, and to be a remedie againſt vncleanneſſe: the two firſt were promiſed in Paradiſe: Fœcunditie, Gen.1.28. mutuall helpe and comfort, 2.20. the third was not then needfull, ſinne as yet not being knowne in the world. Secondly, S. Paul ſpeaking of the marriage of the faithfull, Epheſ.5.31. vſeth the ſame forme of words which Adam did at the very firſt inſtitution, Therfore ſhal a man leaue father and mother,&c. hereby ſhewing the inſtitution and ſubſtance of that matrimonie, and ours, to be all one. Thirdly, the maſter of the Sentences ſaith. Lib.4.diſt.2.b. Coniugium ante peccatum inſtitutum eſt ad ſacramentum: Marriage was inſtituted before ſin, to be a ſacrament. Diſtinct.22.c. Sacramentum pœnitentiæ, ſicut & coniugij ante tempus gratiæ à primordio humani generis fuit: The ſacrament of penance, as likewiſe the ſacrament of marriage, were from the beginning of mankinde before the time of grace: then it followeth, that matrimonie is no ſacrament of the Goſpell, being inſtituted before.

*Bellarm.*2. The matrimonie betweene Infidels is but a ciuill contract to performe the dutie of nature: but the marriage of Chriſtians is more, *Bellar.lib.*1.de Matrimon.cap 5.

Contra. Though Chriſtians know, how better to vſe marriage, than Infidels; yet the end and ſcope of them both is all one, as for mutuall comfort, for propagation, and to auoid fornication: theſe bee the chieſe ends of marriage, which in ſome ſort are to be found among Infidels: and therefore it is no ſacrament.

*Argum.*2. Our aduerſaries are contrarie to themſelues: for they call matrimonie a prophanation of Orders, *Martin.ſect.*15.*cap.*11. And they ſay it is more tollerable for a Prieſt to keepe many concubines, than to marrie: *Pighius ex Tileman. Heſhuſ.loc.*21. *Err.*2. Doe theſe fellowes meane in good ſooth, that matrimonie is a ſacrament, which they make ſo vile, polluted, and vncleane a thing?

Pope Siricius alſo applieth this ſaying of S.Paul, againſt marriage of Miniſters, They that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God, Epiſt.ad Himerium Tarraconenſ. But if matrimonie were a ſacrament, why ſhould it not agree with Orders, one ſacrament with another?

Bellar. anſwereth, that Siricius condemneth not mariage, but ſacriledge, that is, the vnlawfull marriage of Miniſters. Secondly, it cannot be denied, but that in the act of matrimonie there is vncleanneſſe, & turpitudo, filthineſſe: for why elſe ſhould the Prieſt ſay to Dauid, Are ye cleane from women? 1.Sam.21.4. 1.Sam.21. And what elſe is the cauſe, why men are aſhamed to exerciſe this act before others: and the Apoſtle ſaith, That the virgine careth for the things of the Lord, &c. that ſhee may be holy both in bodie and ſpirit, 1.Cor.7.34. 1.Cor.7.34. Ergo, they haue an holineſſe in bodie, which the married haue not: and therefore in ſome ſenſe it may be ſaid of marriage: They that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God: *reſp.ad arg.*4.

Contra. Firſt, 1. the mariage of miniſters is commendable, and allowable by the word of God, as Heb.13.4. I haue ſhewed before in that controuerſie: and the Scripture ſaith, Heb.13.4. Marriage is honourable Rom.8.8. among all men: 2. againe, that place Rom.8.8. They that are in the fleſh, is egregiouſly abuſed: for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not there of marriage, but of the ſinfull workes of the fleſh: 3. They that are in the fleſh, are not ſubiect to the law of God, neither can be, v.7. they are not Chriſts, v.9. ſay thus if ye dare of married perſons: 4 the Apoſtle alſo ſpeaking to ſuch as were married men, as to Aquila and Priſ- Rom.16.3. cilla, whom he greeteth by name, Rom.16.3. ſaith, v.9. Yee are not in the fleſh but in the ſpirit.

Secondly, 1. how farre is this fellow from the hereſie of the Marcionites & Tatianites; they counted mariage vnlawfull, and he calleth it vncleane: 2. the Prieſt ſpeaketh of a legall kinde of cleanli- Luk.2.22. neſſe, as in that reſpect the virgine Marie was to be purified, Luc.2.22. will ye therefore iudge her vncleane? 3. neither is euery thing done in ſecret, vncleane: Chriſt biddeth vs to pray in ſecret, Mat.6. and a man is oft aſhamed, that his humble behauiour ſhould bee ſeene in prayer; is it therefore vn- 1.Cor.12.23. cleane? modeſtie alſo teacheth man to couer the vncomely parts, 1.Cor.12.23. will ye ſay therefore, that any of the parts of the bodie are vncleane? Auguſtine ſaith, Nuptiæ ſinuntur exercere quod decet, vt non negligant occultare, quod dedecet: Mariage is ſuffered to exerciſe that which is lawfull, ſo that it hide that which is vncomely; hee ſaith not, vncleane: *Lib.*2 *de grat.c.*7. 4. The virgine is ſaid to take care to pleaſe God, and to be holy, &c. not becauſe the maried are vnholy: for the Apoſtle ſaith 1.Cor.7.14. the contrarie, If their children be holy, 1.Cor.7.14. how are they vnholy: but it is ſpoken comparatiuely, becauſe the vnmarried haue better helpes, and are void of thoſe impediments which accom- Heb.13.2. panie marriage. 5. Laſtly, the Apoſtle ſaith, the marriage bed is vndefiled: Heb.13.2. how dare hee ſay it is defiled; we ſpeake not of the abuſe, but of the right vſe of marriage. Ambroſe ſaith, Copula nuptialis, non quaſi culpa vitanda, &c. The marriage copulation, is not to be ſhunned as a fault. Auguſtine ſaith, Libidinis voluptas non propter nuptias cadit in culpam, ſed propter nuptias accipit veniam: The pleaſure of luſt is not culpable becauſe of mariage, but pardonable: *De nupt.& concup.lib.*1.*c.*14.

Secondly, Bellarmine anſwereth, that matrimonie is forbidden thoſe that take orders, not as it is a ſacrament, but becauſe it bringeth worldly cares and other impediments.

Contra. Nay, they prohibite marriage to ſuch, as it is a ſacrament: for a principall part of this their ſacrament conſiſteth in the matrimoniall act and copulation: which although Bellarmine inſtantly denie, is proued thus euen by his owne confeſſion: hee granteth that matrimonie is a myſticall ſigne of the ſpirituall coniunction of Chriſt and his Church, *cap.*2. but this is repreſented in the matrimoniall coniunction: They two ſhall be one fleſh, this is a great ſecret: Ergo, herein conſiſteth the ſacrament; and this act of matrimonie (they ſay) is a pollution of orders: and thus one ſacrament is polluted by another.

Whether carnall copulation be an eſſentiall part of mariage.

Bellarmine replyeth, that the act of copulation, or carnall act in Matrimonie, is no eſſentiall part of the Sacrament. Secondly, it is not abſurd, that they which haue one Sacrament, ſhould be without another; as the Apoſtles refuſed the miniſterie of Deacons: Acts 6. *Bellarm.reſponſ.ad argum.*6.

Firſt, the Canon of Leo is directly contrarie: Cum ſocietas nuptiarum à principio ita ſit inſtituta, &c. Seeing the ſocietie of marriage was ſo inſtituted at the firſt, Vt præter coniunctionem ſexuum, non habeant in ſe nuptiæ: That beſide the conjnction of ſexe, Marriage hath not the Sacrament of coniunction of Chriſt & his Church,it is not to be doubted,but that the woman doth not appertaine to mariage,with the which there hath beene no matrimoniall act or miniſtery,&c. This Canon ſaith directly, that the Sacrament of mariage is in the matrimoniall copulation.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Canon muſt be read without the negatiue,Vt præter, &c. habeant, &c. that beſide the coniunction,mariage hath the Sacrament,&c.

Contra. Firſt,if the negatiue be taken away, there is no ſenſe in the Canon: for a woman not carnally knowne,is proued to be no wife, becauſe the Sacrament of marriage onely conſiſteth in the carnall act. Secondly the Maſter of ſentences rehearſeth this Canon with a negatiue,lib.4 diſtinct. 26.g. Bellarmine thinketh moſt abſurdly, that the Maſter muſt be read without a negatiue, whereas hee alleageth the Canon to proue Illam mulierem,&c. That a woman pertaineth not to mariage,that is not carnally knowne,which this Canon proueth not, if the negatiue be omitted. Thirdly, other Canons doe agree, ibid.c 18.Benedict. Non poſſe fieri vnam carnem,&c. They cannot bee one fleſh, but by carnall copulation: but the myſterie is in being made one fleſh, as S. Ambroſe calleth it Myſterium vnitatis, the myſterie of vnity. Fourthly, Bellarmine himſelfe granteth, that when the contract is made only per verba de futuro,by words of the future time, then the carnall copulation is an eſſentiall part, and that then ex opere operato, by the worke wrought, the coniugall act doth conferre grace: Bellarm.ibid. Where by the way let it be remembred, that the carnall act,which before hee proued to be vncleane,is now affirmed to be ſo holy, that it doth conferre grace.

Secondly, 1. He is neuer able to proue,that he which hath one Sacrament of Chriſtian religion, is ſimply to be denied the other, as they denie Miniſters that haue orders to be married, which both are ſacraments in their religion: but the true Sacraments of the Church, as Baptiſme, and the Euchariſt, are generall and free for all,that are fit for them. 2. The Apoſtles refuſed not the office of Deacons as vnlawfull, but as inconuenient: neither is this any Sacrament, and the Apoſtles did execute the office of Deacons at the firſt themſelues. 3. Though it ſhould be granted, that the Sacraments may be diuided, in reſpect of perſons, that ſome may haue one and not another; yet it is not to be endured, that one Sacrament polluteth another, as they ſay, Matrimony is a defiling of Orders: wherefore they themſelues deny it to be a Sacrament: for Sacraments to all are holy, but mariage in Miniſters they make vnholy and vncleane.

*Argum.*3. In euery Sacrament there ought to be an externall ſenſible element, as the matter,and a ſanctifying word, as the forme: But in Matrimony there is neither: Ergo, it is no Sacrament. argum Kemnitij. Caluin.

Bellarm. The forme, are the words pronounced by the parties themſelues, when they contract Matrimony: I doe take thee,&c. They alſo themſelues are the matter; yea, and the Miniſters of the Sacraments too: For the Ieſuite holdeth, that it is a Sacrament in the very contract and giuing of mutuall conſent, before it be ſolemnized in the Church, De matrim.cap.6.

Anſw. Firſt, the Sacrament is one thing, and the receiuers another: therefore the married parties cannot be the ſacramentall matters being the receiuers.Secondly it is not euery word that ſanctifyeth, but the word of God, 1.Tim.4.5. but theſe words, I take thee, are no part of the word: Ergo, they want alſo the forme of a Sacrament. Thirdly, the Miniſters of Chriſt,and preachers of the word are onely the diſpenſers of the myſteries and Sacraments of the Church, 1.Cor. 4.1. Wherefore the parties themſelues could not be miniſters of Matrimony,if it were a Sacrament.

1.Corinth.4.1.

Fourthly, I will adioyne the reaſons of ſome of the Papiſts: Eſpencæus de clandeſtin.matrim.c.14. Ad huius Sacramenti rationem,patres verbum fidei requiſiuerunt in lege,&c. The fathers in the law required the word of faith to this Sacrament,how much more in the Goſpell: but this, I take thee, is not the word of faith: cap.15.ex Groppero: Vt venerabilem Euchariſtiam idem et porrigat & capiat, cætera non item Sacramenta: The Euchariſt, one and the ſame man may giue and receiue, but it is not ſo in other Sacraments: no man doth baptize or confirme himſelfe: and ſo conſequently, if priuate Matrimony were a Sacrament,no man could marry himſelfe.

*Arg.*4. We haue plentifull teſtimony of the Papiſts themſelues,ſome affirme Matrimony a Sacrament of the old Teſtament, not of the new: as Alphonſus à caſtro,lib.11.cont.hæreſes.hæreſ 3.Petrus à Soto,lect.2.de Matrim. Some hold it no Sacrament at all, as Durandus, whoſe reaſons doe heere follow: other denie priuate Matrimonie to be a Sacrament, being contracted onely, not ſolemnized, as Canus, whom Bellarmine confuteth, cap. 8. Of the ſame opinion is Gropperus before alleaged: Catharinus alſo affirmeth,priuate contract of mariage without the conſent of the parents to be no Sacrament,becauſe it is no marriage: ex Eſpenc.de clandeſtin.matrim.c.15.

Now Durand his reaſons,to proue Mariage properly no Sacrament,are theſe.

Firſt, in euery Sacrament,there is ſome ſpirituall thing ſignified,that exceedeth naturall reaſon; as in Baptiſme by the waſhing of water, the remiſſion of ſins is ſhewed forth: but in mariage when two are preſented to be ioyned together,a natural man may comprehend why they are coupled together. It may be anſwered that the ſpirituall thing in marriage,is the coniunction of Chriſt and his Church. Contra. Sacraments doe effect that which they ſignifie; but matrimonie doth not effect the vnion of Chriſt and his Church,but onely the vnion of the male and female: Ergo, that is not the principal ſignification of marriage.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that not the vnion onely, but ſuch an vnion as is inſoluble; and as well the vnion of their ſoules and bodies is ſignified in marriage, which exceedeth naturall reaſon.

Contra. Firſt, the vnion of the maried parties to be inſoluble, is naturall; for both among the Gentiles, as the Romanes a long time, there was no diuorſe in marriage knowne or heard of: the Turtle Doues by nature are taught to keepe themſelues inſeparably one to the other: therefore this exceedeth not humane reaſon. Secondly, the vnion of the mind is no eſſential part of marriage, for the marriage holdeth in the vnion of the body, though there be no vniting of the affections: they two ſhall be one fleſh, it is not ſaid, one ſoule.

Secondly, Durand. in a Sacrament, there muſt be ſome holy thing applied to the receiuer by the miniſter: as in baptiſme, water; in matrimony it is not ſo: there is neither any outward holy ſigne, nor no miniſter neceſſary beſide the parties, nor yet any receiuer need be preſent, for matrimonie may be ſolemnized by a Proctor betweene parties that are abſent: Ergo, it is no Sacrament.

Bellar. anſwereth: The reaſon why matrimony is vnlike other Sacraments in theſe points, is, for that it is of the nature of a contract: now in a contract, the parties themſelues ſuffice; and it may be done in their abſence, Bellar c.5. reſp. ad argum. 11.

Contra. In humane contracts it is ſo, as he affirmeth, no ſuch things are required; but in diuine contracts it is otherwiſe; of which nature all ſacraments are: for as it is ſaid of circumciſion, it was a Geneſ.17.11. ſigne of the couenant, or contract betweene God and his people, Geneſ. 17. 11. ſo all ſacraments are badges of our profeſſion, and the cogniſance of our obedience promiſed vnto God: ſo that in this behalfe there is no difference betweene one Sacrament and another; they being all ſolemne contracts and couenants made betweene God and vs.

Thirdly, Sacraments giue grace, as the Papiſts affirme; they are ſeales and pledges of grace, as the Proteſtants hold: but matrimonie neither conferreth nor ſealeth grace; not the firſt grace, which is remiſſion of ſinnes; nor the ſecond, which is encreaſe of grace. The maſter of the Sentences ſaith, that ſome ſacraments doe confer grace as Baptiſme, ſome in remedium tantum ſunt, are only appointed for a remedy, as matrimony: Lib.4 diſt.2.a Durand.

Bellarm. anſwereth, that the meaning of the Maſter is, that matrimony was not principally ordained to this end, for remiſſion of ſinnes; and yet it doth after a ſort remit ſinnes, as the Euchariſt and the Sacrament of order: reſp. ad argum. 12.

Contra. Firſt, the Maſter ſaith, that matrimony is tantum in remedium, is onely for a remedy: if onely, then it ſerueth not chiefly, but altogether to that end. Secondly, we deny any Sacrament of order: the Euchariſt properly ſerueth to aſſure our faith of the remiſſion of ſinnes, becauſe it is a ſhewing forth of the Lords death: and our Sauiour ſaith, which was ſhed for you for remiſſion of ſinnes: but there is no ſuch promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes annexed to matrimony. Thirdly, Bellarmine affirmed, before, reſp. ad arg. 7. that ſome ſacraments (as matrimonie) are not inſtituted for remiſſion of ſins; and now (forgetting himſelfe) hee ſaith, it ſerueth for remiſſion of ſinnes: ſo well hee agreeth with himſelfe. Fourthly, the Church cannot alter or appoint the eſſentials of any Sacrament, the Church doth appoint the eſſentials of matrimony, as in determining what perſons are to be married, and in what degrees: Ergo, it is no Sacrament, Durand.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that the ordinance of the Church is of the neceſſity of the Sacrament, as in penance it is no abſolution that is giuen to one of another Dioceſſe. Secondly, the materiall part of Matrimonie, is not ſimply the ioyning together of man and woman, but of ſuch perſons as are lawfull: for otherwiſe the Sacrament of Matrimony might be betweene the Father and the daughter, and ſuch like neere degrees.

Contra. Firſt, as for penance, this ſheweth ſufficiently that it is no Sacrament, becauſe it dependeth of the ordination of the Church: ſo doe not true ſacraments which onely depend of Chriſts inſtitution: as the Apoſtle deliuered no other thing as touching the Sacraments, but, that which he had re- 1.Cor.11.23. ceiued of the Lord, 1. Corinth. 11. 23. Secondly, ſuch degrees in Mariage, as the Scripture prohibiteth, are neceſſary to be obſerued, as betweene the father and daughter, &c. But the Church of Rome preſuming to forbid other degrees, and to make more perſons illegitimate for mariage, then the Scripture doth, taketh vpon her to alter & change the material part of Matrimony: which no Church hath power to doe in true Sacraments.

Fifthly, without Baptiſme none are capable of any Sacrament: but a man before Baptiſme is capable of Matrimonie: Ergo, it is no Sacrament. Durand.

Bellarm. Though it be Matrimony afore Baptiſme, it is no ſacrament: but after they are conuerted to the faith, it beginneth to be a Sacrament.

Contra. The Matrimony before Baptiſme, muſt either be contracted a new, or elſe it remaineth the ſame ſtill: but a new contract is not to bee made: for if God haue ioyned them together before, no man muſt put them a ſunder, Matth. 19. 6. to bee contracted and conioyned againe: if they were Matth.19.6. not ioyned of God, then was it no Matrimony. Againe, what if but one of the parties bee conuerted, the other remaineth an Infidell, and ſo refuſeth to bee contracted againe: yet is this Matri- 1.Cor.7.14. monie holie, and the iſſue thereof holy, 1. Cor. 7. 14. though there bee no new contract. If the ſame Matrimonie remaine ſtill without alteration, how is it more a Sacrament after Baptiſme then before, ſeeing the ſame eſſentials, both the matter and forme were in the Matrimony before? Of the firſt opinion are Capreolus, Eckius, that a new contract is needfull: of the other, Thomas de Argentine, Paludanus: ſo well they agree together. And thus are Durands arguments fortified againſt this ſacrament.

Auguſtine thus writeth: Ne quis iſtam magnitudinem ſacramenti in ſingulis quibuſque hominibus vxores habentibus intelligeret, ego autem dico, inquit, &c. Leſt any man ſhould think when the Apoſtle had ſaid, this is a great ſacrament, that this great ſacrament is to be vnderſtood of all married perſons, the Apoſtle addeth, but I ſpeake of Chriſt and his Church. But if ſo be Matrimonie were a ſacrament, why is it not to be found in all maried folke? Tract.in Ioh.9 tom.9.

Concil.Florentin.in fine: Sacramenta tribus perficiuntur, rebus tanquam materia, verbis vt forma, & perſona miniſtri conferentis ſacramentum: quarum ſi aliquid deſit, non perficitur ſacramentum: The ſacraments are perfited of three things, the things or elements as the matter, the words as the forme, and the perſon of the Miniſter conferring the ſacrament; if any of theſe be wanting, the ſacraments are not perfect, &c. According to this rule Matrimonie is no ſacrament: for in the contract, when it ſhould begin to bee a ſacrament, there want both the matter and the element, which cannot be the parties themſelues, and the Miniſter which ſhould conferre the ſacrament: neither haue they words of inſtitution to be found in Scripture.

The holy Martyrs haue ſealed this truth: Richard Woodman: There need not be a ſigne of an holy thing, where the holy thing is it ſelfe: Matrimonie is an holy thing it ſelfe, and is ended outwardly: Ergo, it is no ſacrament, Fox pag.1990.col.2.

Maſter Benbridge Martyr, he denieth Matrimonie to be a ſacrament, but confeſſeth it to be a ſacred order, &c. and gaue his life in defence hereof. pag.2046.artic.10.

And yet further: 1. Eraſmus thinketh, that of ancient time Matrimonie was not taken for one of the ſacraments of the Church: for thus hee noteth vpon the Epiſtle of Hierome to Gerontia: Haud ſcio an illa atate eccleſia numerarit matrimonium inter ſacramenta: I cannot tell whether the Church did then count Matrimonie among the Sacraments, certainly Dyoniſius profeſſedly handling them, matrimonij nullam facit mentionem, maketh no mention of Matrimonie.

2. Tertullian prouing againſt Marcion the lawfulnes and dignitie of mariage, vrgeth theſe words, Epheſ.5.32. But I ſpeake of Chriſt and his Church: Habet interpretationem, non ſeparationem ſacramenti: oſtendit figuram ſacramenti ab eo praminiſtratam, cuius erat vtique ſacramentũ: It hath the interpretation, not the ſeparation of a ſacrament: he ſheweth that he miniſtred afore the figure of the Sacrament, whoſe the Sacrament was, &c. He calleth Matrimonie a figure of the Sacrament and myſterie betweene Chriſt and his Church, and therefore to be honoured: he maketh it a figure of a Sacrament, not a Sacrament it ſelfe, at the leaſt, not in proper ſpeaking: for ſo he acknowledgeth onely two Sacraments. See before Centur.2.err.104. Lib.4.aduerſ. Marcion.in fine.

3. There alſo is ſet downe the iudgement of the reformed Churches, concerning the Sacraments of the Church, which they acknowledge onely to bee two, and ſo exclude Matrimonie among the reſt.

4 Durandus, as hath been ſhewed before holdeth Matrimonie to be no Sacrament: and the Maſter denieth, that it conferreth grace. Caſſander conſult.art.13.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF POLYGAMIE, of the mariage of diuers ſucceſſiuely. Part.1.

The Papiſts.

THeir decrees ſeeme vtterly to condemne and exclude ſecond mariage. *Cauſ.*31.*c.*8. Penance is enioyned ſecond mariage, and a Miniſter is forbidden to be preſent at the celebration of them. Can.9. Second mariage is called, honeſta fornicatio, honeſt fornication. Theſe Canons Bellarmine is aſhamed of, and refuſeth them: why then doe they ſuffer them to ſtand among the reſt of the decrees collected by Gratian? But yet Bellarmine cannot ſo ſhift off the matter: for it appeareth that they haue a very baſe conceit of ſecond mariage, ſeeing they barre all ſuch from orders, as haue been twice married: as in their owne decrees, *C.*31.*c.*10. this reaſon is giuen: Quam ſancta ſit digamia hinc oſtenditur, &c. How holy a thing it is to be twice married, it appeareth by this, that ſuch are not choſen to the Clergie. And againe, they denie publike bleſſing vnto ſecond mariage. Bellarmine would ſalue vp the matter thus, becauſe the bleſſing giuen in the firſt mariage continueth ſtill, cap.9. 80.Error.

The Proteſtants.

COncerning the denying of orders to them that are twice married, I haue entreated elſewhere in the generall Controuerſie of the Clergie: that publike benediction is to be vſed in ſecond mariage as well as in the firſt, we proue it thus:

Firſt, I reaſon thus from their owne principles: Euery Sacrament at the celebration thereof muſt be bleſſed: for, Euery thing is ſanctified by the word and prayer, 1.Timoth.4.5. But ſecond marriage with them is a ſacrament: Ergo, publikely to bee bleſſed. And whereas it is alleaged, that the former bleſſing remaineth. I anſwere: firſt, the firſt Matrimonie remaineth not: Ergo, neither the benediction. For the firſt couples being parted by death, and ſo the mariage knot diſſolued, how can that bleſſing remaine, which was pronounced ouer them but while they liued? Againe, Matrimoniall be- 1.Timoth.4.5.

nediction is no more effectuall, then the benediction in the Euchariſt: but that is often renewed: Ergo, ſo may the other.

Secondly, Raguel bleſſed the mariage of young Tobie and Sara, which was giuen in mariage to ſeuen men before, Tobie 7.11,13. Ergo, ſecond mariage may be bleſſed. This booke is Scripture with them, and therefore concludeth againſt them ſtrongly. Tobie.7.11.

Further, where God bleſſeth, there man ought to bleſſe much more: but Gods bleſſing is vpon the married couple being fit for procreation, though it be in their ſecond, or third mariage, Encreaſe and multiplie: Ergo, the Miniſters bleſſing is to be adioyned.

So alſo Tertullian ſpeaking of that conſtitution of Moſes of marrying the brothers wife, giueth this reaſon thereof: Quia adhuc vetus illa benedictio dominica habebat, creſcite & multiplicamini, &c. Becauſe that ancient bleſſing was yet to runne along, Encreaſe and multiplie, &c. Wherein then parties are ioyned in mariage for procreation, the ſaid bleſſing muſt be renewed, and ſo runne downe along.

Laſtly, Leo ſaith, Epiſtol.9.c.4. Ancillam à toro abijcere, & vxorem certæ ingenuitatis accipere, non duplicatio coniugij, ſed profectus honeſtatis eſt: For a man to reiect his maide, or concubine from his bed, and to marrie a wife that is a free woman, is not a doubling of mariage, but a profiting in honeſtie. I reaſon thus: Mariage after fornication doth receiue publike benediction, becauſe it is not the ſecond, but the firſt mariage: Ergo, much more ſhall mariage after lawfull mariage be publikely bleſſed: vnleſſe they will make mariage worſe then fornication.

THE SECOND PART OF POLYGAMIE, which is the mariage of diuers wiues at once.

The Papiſts.

81.Error. IT is their opinion, that it was lawfull not only for the Patriarkes of the Hebrews, but for the Gentiles alſo by way of diſpenſation to haue many wiues.

*Argum.*1. Sara gaue conſent to Abraham to take him another wife, which ſhe would not haue done, if it had been vnlawfull: ſo Iacobs wiues offered vnto him two other wiues: *Bellarm.cap.*11. *propoſ.*4.

Contra. Firſt, from the infirmities of holy men, or women, the argument followeth not, to proue the thing lawfull. Sara twice diſſembled, and in affirming to be Abrahams ſiſter, conſequently denied to be his wife: ſo did Rebecca once: it followeth not, that it is therefore lawfull. Secondly, thoſe were Abrahams and Iacobs concubines, not their wiues: they may as well inferre, that they had a diſpenſation alſo to haue concubines beſide their wiues: that Hagar was not Abrahams wife, while Geneſ.16.6. Sara liued, whatſoeuer ſhe was afterward (for ſome thinke, that Keturah his ſecond wife was Hagar) it appeareth: 1. Becauſe ſhe is ſtill called Saraes maide, and vnder her correction, Gen. 16.6. 2. And the Angell biddeth her humble her ſelfe to her dame, verſ.9. 3. At the length, ſhe is caſt out with her ſonne, Geneſ.21. 4. She is alſo ſtill called a bond-woman, Gen.21.10. But if ſhe had been Abrahams wife, ſhe ſhould haue been free.

*Argum.*2. That it was lawfull alſo for the Gentiles by diſpenſation to haue many wiues, he proueth by the example of Laban, who was an idolater, and gaue to Iacob two wiues: Eſau alſo, who belonged not to the people of God, had many wiues, imitating therein, as it is like, the example of Abraham: *Bellarm.c.*11.*propoſ.*5.

Anſ. Firſt, neither Laban, nor Eſau were altogether ſtrangers from the people of God, and therefore are not well brought foorth, as example of the Gentiles: for if Laban had been a meere Gentile, Iacob had not been ſent to take his wife from thence: and Eſau when hee tooke his two wiues, was Gen.26.35. yet in his fathers houſe, Geneſ.26.35. and ſo one of the familie. Secondly, the fact of theſe proueth no more the lawfulnes of many wiues, then Labans Images doe warrant the worſhip of many gods. Thirdly, it is not like that Eſau herein imitated Abraham: 1. for Sara was dead before Eſau was borne, and therefore in Eſaus remembrance he had not two wiues. 2. And his father Iſaacks example was neerer to him to be imitated, who had but one wife. 3. If he had reſpected the imitation of Abraham, he would not haue married of the Hittites, to grieue his parents. Laſtly, Auguſtine ſaith of the Patriarkes, Coniugio vſi ſunt propter dei populum propagandum: They vſed mariage for the propagation of the people of God: Their Polygamie hee thinketh was tolerated for the encreaſing of the Church. But the Church among the Gentiles was not encreaſed: Ergo, there was no reaſon of any ſuch toleration amongſt them. *Auguſt.de Virginit.cap.*20.

The Proteſtants.

COncerning Polygamie, or the hauing of diuers wiues at once, our ſentence is this: firſt, that it was neuer lawfull, being either a tranſgreſſion, of, or at the leaſt a digreſſion from the firſt inſtitution in the creation. Secondly, yet in the Patriarks we denie not, before there was yet any law written, in reſpect of the neceſſitie of thoſe times, it was by vſe and cuſtome tolerated, though not by any diſpenſation authorized. Thirdly, among the Gentiles, where there was not the like reaſon or occaſion, it was neither lawfull, nor tolerable. Fourthly, after Moſes law written, and the Church in them encreaſed, we doubt not but that the multitude of wiues was a ſinne and corruption.

Firſt, the Prophet Malachie ſaith, chap. 2. 15. Did he not make one, yet had he abundance of ſpirit? and wherefore one? becauſe he ſought a godly ſeede. Here the Prophet ſheweth, that the firſt inſtitution in the creation, was of one wife: So our Sauiour, Mat. 19. 8. doth ſend vs to the firſt inſtitution, From the beginning it was not ſo, verſ. 4. At the beginning God made them male and female: one male, and one female: and they two ſhall be one fleſh, not three, or foure, but only two are made in one: therefore Polygamie is a breach and tranſgreſſion of the firſt inſtitution.

Matth. 2. 15.
Matth. 19. 8.

Secondly, that there was neuer any diſpenſation granted to make it lawfull, it is euident. 1. Chriſt ſaith, Moſes for the hardnes of your hearts, &c. verſ. 8. we reade of no diſpenſation, but a toleration in Moſes, and by reaſon of the hardnes of the Iewes hearts. 2. A diſpenſation muſt bee of as high a nature as the inſtitution: but the firſt inſtitution was giuen in the creation, and deliuered by tradition, though it were not written, not only by inſpiration (as he ſuppoſeth) the like tradition muſt be ſhewed for the diſpenſation. 3. If there had been any ſuch diſpenſation, why did not the righteous firſt take benefit of it, to whom it was ſpecially granted, but wicked Lamech was the firſt that tooke two wiues. 4. And the diſpenſation being generall, for the procreation of the righteous ſeed, they ſhould haue offended, that vſed not that libertie being for a common good: as Iſaack, that had only Rebecca, and by her but one birth. 5. Auguſtine ſaith, Nullam legitur Iacob petiiſſe præter vnam, &c. neque hoc faceret, niſi vxores flagitaſſent: Iacob deſired but one, — neither would hee haue vſed more, if his wiues had not requeſted it: lib. 16. de Ciuitat. cap. 38. If there had been any ſuch diſpenſation, why ſhould he haue deſired one rather then two? and what needed he to haue the conſent of his wiues? it was then a permiſſion only, no diſpenſation.

Thirdly, Polygamie among the Gentiles was altogether vnlawfull: firſt, they ſerued not for the propagation of the Church, for the which Polygamie was tolerated. Secondly, the fathers are excuſed, Quia caſtiùs habebant plures, quàm nunc vnam: Becauſe they vſed many wiues more chaſtly, then men doe now one, as Auguſtine ſaith: But the Gentiles had no knowledge, how to poſſeſſe their veſſels in holineſſe, but in the luſt of concupiſcence, 1. Theſſ. 4. 5. They could not vſe one wife chaſtly, much leſſe many.

De bon. coniugal. c. 13.
1. Theſ. 4. 5.

Fourthly, after the law of Moſes written, Polygamie was a corruption and tranſgreſſion: firſt, there was then no neceſſitie of propagation, as Auguſtine ſaith: Cum copia ſpiritualis cognationis exuberet: When there was plentie of the ſpirituall kindred: de Virgin. cap. 10. Secondly, it was contrarie to the law: Deut. 25. 17. The King ſhall not take many wiues, leſt his heart turne away. The author of the queſtions vpon Deuteron. vnder Auguſtines name, cap. 27. ſaith, that Dauid did not tranſgreſſe this law but Salomon, Quia habuit paucas, non multas: Dauid had a few wiues, not many: The very ſame note is inſerted in the Doway tranſlation, that Dauid offended not againſt that law but Salomon, and that not pluralitie of wiues is not forbidden, but to multiplie many: Annot. in Deut. 17. verſ. 17. & 3. King. 11. 3.

Deut. 25. 17.

Anſw. 1. Dauid had not ſo many as Salomon, and therefore was not ſo deepe in tranſgreſſion: but yet he had with Michol and Bathſheba eight wiues, 2. Sam. 3. which are many: yea any number aboue two with the Hebrewes maketh a pluralitie. 2. The reaſon of the law is, leſt his heart turne away. This fruite of Polygamie was in Dauid; for his heart was turned away from iuſtice by the loue of women, as appeareth in the ſtorie of Vriah. 3. The Prophet Malachie calleth it godly ſeede, which commeth of ſingle mariage after Gods inſtitution: and therefore Dauid tranſgreſſing herein, was chaſtiſed with vngodly children.

1. Iuſtinus Martyr, though he excuſe the polygamie of the fathers by the myſticall ſignification thereof: yet he condemneth it in Dauid, ſpeaking againſt the libertie of the Iewes in taking to themſelues many wiues, he ſaith: this ſhould haue been rather (permitted) in Dauid.

Dialog. cum Tryphon. in fine. τοῦτο μᾶλλον συνεχωρεῖτο.

2. Tertullian is here very direct: Vnum habendum confirmatur, quia quod à Domino permiſſum non inuenitur, agnoſcitur interdictum: One matrimonie is confirmed, for that which is not found to be permitted, is confeſſed to be forbidden: then he vrgeth the inſtance of the creation: God made but one woman, cum nec artifex, nec materia defeciſſet, plures coſtæ in Adamo, & indefatigabilis manus in Deo, ſed non plures vxores apud Deum: when as neither matter wanted, or a maker: Adam had more ribs, and Gods hands were not wearie, yet there were not more wiues with God, &c. Numerus matrimonij à maledicto viro cæpit, &c. The number of matrimonie began from a curſed man, Lamech was the firſt, that being married vnto two, made three into one fleſh, &c. Theſe three arguments taken, 1. from the ſilence of Scripture, 2. from the creation, 3. from the example of Lamech, though Tertullian doe vrge them in generall againſt all ſecond mariage, yet they moſt fitly are applied againſt polygamie, that is the mariage of diuers wiues at once. Indeed Tertullian in the ſame place, vnto the obiection of the Patriarkes, which had diuers wiues, maketh this anſwere: Sine & licebit, ſi aliqui adhuc typi ſunt, &c. It ſhall be alſo lawfull for thee, if any types yet remaine of any Sacrament, which thy mariage ſhould prefigure, &c. But he afterward expoundeth himſelfe: In primordio ſementem generis emiſit indultis coniugij habenis, &c. In the beginning God ſent forth the generation of mankinde, by an indulgence of the bridle of mariage, till the world ſhould be filled: It was then no conceſſion or diſpenſation, but an indulgence, conniuence, permiſſion or toleration.

Tertullian exhortation. ad inſtitutum.

3. Our Proteſtant writers held Polygamie to be coniugij corruptela, a corruption of mariage: Caluin, Martyr, Sarcerius with others.

In. 1. Cor. 7. 1.
Et Epheſ. 5. 31.

4. Lyranus vpon theſe words, from the beginning it was not ſo, giueth this note: that is in the ſtate of nature newly inſtituted, but in men fallen by ſinne, it was permitted for auoiding a greater euill, non tanquam licitum, ſed ſicut minus malum, not as a thing lawfull, but as leſſe euill, &c.

Laſtly, thus their owne decrees teſtifie: Cauſ.31.c.10. Primus Lamech homicida vnam carnem diuiſit in duas vxores; fratricidium & digamiam eadem cataclyſmi deleuit pœna, &c. Lamech the murtherer was the firſt that diuided one fleſh into two wiues: fratricide and digamie, the ſame puniſhment of the flood tooke away: Quantum diſtas in numero, tantum in crimine: As thou exceedeſt in number, ſo likewiſe in ſinne.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE CAVSES OF diuorce in mariage, and whether it be lawfull to marrie after diuorce.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THERE MAY be more cauſes of diuorce, than fornication only.

The Papiſts.

82. Error. Diuorce, as Bellarmine defineth it, is either from the duties of mariage, as from bed and boord, as we ſay, which is properly called diuortium, or it is a diſſoluing of the knot and bond of mariage, which is called repudium.

Firſt then, they affirme, that the very bond and knot may be diſſolued in the mariage of Infidels, if one of them after mariage become a Chriſtian: his reaſon is, becauſe mariage contracted in Infidelitie is no Sacrament, and therefore may be diſſolued, Bellarm.cap.12. So hee affirmeth theſe three things: firſt, that if the Infidell refuſe to dwell with the beleeuing partie, the partie refuſed and forſaken, may marrie againe. Secondly, that though the Infidell be content to dwell together, the other is at his or her libertie to refuſe, and may marrie againe. Thirdly, if the Infidell bee content to dwell with the beleeuer, but yet ſo, that he is alwaies entiſing and prouoking to idolatrie and infidelitie, the beleeuing partie may depart. The firſt of theſe is not by vs gainſaid; the other two Bellarmine proueth thus.

Argum. Saint Paul ſaith, If the Infidell partie will depart, let him depart, a brother or ſiſter is not in ſubiection in ſuch a caſe, 1.Cor.7.15. 1.Cor.7.15.

Anſw. Firſt, S. Paul giueth not libertie to the one partie at their pleaſure vtterly to renounce the other, as though they were no longer man and wife: for Saint Paul had ſaid before, that if the Infidell partie be content to dwell with the other, he or ſhe is not to be put away. But his meaning is, that if one partie wilfully depart, the other is no longer bound, nor in ſubiection for the performance of the mutuall duties of mariage. Secondly, though the Infidell partie be yet froward and obſtinate, if hee bee content to dwell with the other, let her not forſake him, ſaith the Apoſtle: and hee giueth a reaſon thereof, verſ.16. What knoweſt thou O wife, whether thou ſhalt ſaue thy husband? &c. Though hee or ſhe be yet froward, or obſtinate, yet in time they may be conuerted.

Secondly, ſeparation from bed and boord may be admitted, they ſay, for diuers cauſes, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.24. can.8. Bellarmine nameth three: Fornication, according to Chriſts rule, Matth.5. Hereſie, Tit.3. An heretike muſt bee auoided. Thirdly, when one is a continuall offence to another and a prouocation to ſinne: If thine eye offend thee, pull it out, Matth.5.29. Bellar.cap.14.

Anſw. 1. Fornication we admit is a iuſt cauſe of ſeparation and diuorce, but not hereſie: for Saint Paul would not haue a woman to forſake an Infidell, 1.Cor.7.13. therefore not an heretike. 2. We muſt auoid ſuch, that is, take heed of their poyſoned opinions, and ſhunne their companie alſo, where we are not otherwiſe bound. 3. Neither is the eye to be cut off, where there is any hope: but who knoweth whether the offenſiue partie may returne to grace? 4. And this place proueth as well a finall cutting off of mariage, as a ſeparation or diſiunction.

The Proteſtants.

Firſt, that there is no cauſe of vtter diſſolution of mariage by way of diuorce, neither that it is lawfull to diſmiſſe or put away the wife, but only for adulterie and fornication: it is plaine by our Sauiour Chriſts words, Matth.5.32. and 19.9. where neither infidelitie nor any cauſe beſide is excepted, but onely fornication: Whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife, (ſaith our Sauiour) except it be for fornication, &c.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, our Sauiour ſpeaketh of mariage 1. betweene the faithfull: ſo that this rule bindeth not, if either partie be an Infidell. 2. And againe, ſuch ſeparation is here ſpoken of, as is by way of ſome crime, not when it tendeth to greater perfection, and where there is 3. feare of adulterie; as in the ſeparation of Infidels there is not, when the partie forſaken may marrie againe. Secondly, he anſwereth, our Sauiour onely mentioneth the proper cauſe of ſeparation in mariage, which is fornication; the other for hereſie, and inducement to ſin he leaueth as generall to all ſocieties: for theſe cauſes the ſonne may leaue the father, the ſeruant the maſter, and the wife likewiſe the husband.

Thirdly, hee anſwereth, that Chriſt in this place ſpeaketh of ſuch a dimiſſion onely, or putting away, as is to continue for euer during their liues: but the other dimiſſions are to endure but for a time: of the firſt kinde of dimiſſion there can be no cauſe but fornication: Bellarm.cap.14.reſp.ad obiect.2.

Contra. Firſt, 1. The words of our Sauiour are generall: Whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife, verſ.9. And 2. he ſpeaketh to the Iewes, that were not baptized, therefore he meaneth euen mariage before Baptiſme. 3. And our Sauiour reaſoneth from the firſt inſtitution of mariage in the creation: but the law of the creation bindeth all both Infidels and beleeuers. 2. Againe, when any departeth for hereſie, or infidelitie, it is a departure for a crime. 3. And when the beleeuing partie departeth not being forſaken, but voluntarily (for where there is deſertion, the caſe is otherwiſe, as ſhall be afterward ſhewed) how can it be without feare of adulterie, when in this caſe, the mariage is not diſſolued betweene them?

Secondly, 1. It is a falſe poſition, that a ſonne is to forſake his father, or a ſeruant to denie ſeruice to his maſter for hereſie, or infidelitie, the Apoſtle teacheth the contrarie: 1.Timoth.6.1. Let as many 1.Timoth.6.1. ſeruants, as are vnder the yoke, count their maſters (he meaneth Infidels) worthie all honour. 2. And againe, if any other cauſes of dimiſſion might be pretended, though generall, then were not the rule giuen here by Chriſt ſufficient, not vniuerſally true: except for fornication, &c. if for other things, they might be diſmiſſed.

Thirdly, it ſhall ſoone appeare how inſufficient his third anſwere is: firſt, Bellarmine is contrarie to himſelfe: for heere hee maketh fornication the only cauſe of perpetuall dimiſſion, much forgetting himſelfe: for he affirmeth likewiſe, that the married parties by mutuall conſent may ſeparate themſelues, and vow continencie: and after their vow thus made, it is not lawfull for them to come together againe: here then is another kinde of perpetuall ſeparation. Secondly, neither is diuorce or ſeparation for fornication neceſſarily to continue, during their life time: they may be reconciled: and ſo both Bellarmine and the Rhemiſts thinke, expounding that place, 1.Cor.7. Let her remaine vnmaried, or be reconciled: of ſuch as are diuorced for fornication. So Leo epiſtol.77.cap.1. determineth thus: Quod debent fœminæ, quæ captis viris nupſerant alijs, regreſſis de captiuitate viris, prioribus copulari: That women, which marrie to others, their husbands being taken captiues, ſhould bee reſtored to their husbands after their returne. Here women falling into adulterie muſt returne to their husbands. Againe, the Scripture ſpeaketh for vs: that as God after ſpirituall fornication is readie vpon their repentance to receiue his people againe, Ierem.3.1. Thou haſt plaied the harlot, yet returne vnto me (ſaith the Lord:) ſo Chriſtian charitie requireth, that if it be poſſible, reconciliation ſhould bee made betweene man and wife, vpon humble ſubmiſſion for the fault committed. Thus wee ſee, that euen in caſe of fornication the way is not ſhut vp againſt compaſſion: therefore the Ieſuite hath anſwered nothing.

Argum. What God hath ioyned together, let no man put aſunder, Matth.19.6. But the Papiſts, in Matth.19.6. deuiſing ſo many ſeparations from bed and boord, doe put aſunder thoſe, whom God hath coupled: for where the duties of mariage are broken off, there mariage it ſelfe is alſo diſſolued: if the man and wife be no longer bound to render the carnall debt one to another, and other ſeruices of loue, the bond of mariage it ſelfe is looſed betweene them: this then is but a friuolous diſtinction, that there are two ſeparations of mariage: Quoad thorum, quo ad vinculum: One from the bed, another from the bond of mariage: they then making ſo many ſeparations from the one, doe alſo diſſolue the other: and ſo man diuideth, where God hath coupled. argum.Kemnitij.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the bond of marriage is one thing, the debt or dutie of marriage another: for otherwiſe, when the married parties are abſent by ſome diſtance of place, and ſo the debt not paied, the bond alſo ſhould preſently be diſſolued, and they ceaſe to be man and wife: cap.14. reſp.ad obiect.5.

Contra. Firſt Bellarmine granteth, that theſe words, Whom God hath coupled, &c. are vnderſtood of the bond of marriage, not of the carnall debt, communion of bed and boord: ex conceſſis, I reaſon thus: That whereby they are coupled and made one fleſh, is the bond of mariage, but the carnall debt maketh them one fleſh; They twaine ſhall be one fleſh, Matth.19.5. therefore the carnall debt is the very bond of mariage: the propoſition is proued by the words of our Sauiour, verſ.6. wherefore they are no more twaine, but one fleſh: Let no man therefore put aſunder, that which God hath coupled together: here the making of two one fleſh, is ſaid to be the very coupling, wherewith God ioyneth them together.

Secondly, Saint Paul vſeth all theſe words indifferently, for one and the ſame thing, debt or dutie, 1.Cor.7.3. to be in ſeruice or ſubiection, verſ.15. to be bound to a wife, verſ.27. So then ὀφειλὴ, debt, δουλεία, ſeruice, δέσις, bond: are with the Apoſtles all one: where then the debt of the fleſh is not due, nor the ſeruice of the bodie, there alſo the bond is looſed.

Thirdly, that in mariage the debitum, debt, and vinculum, bond, are all one: and that relaxatio debiti, the releaſing of the debt, is ſolutio vinculi, the diſſoluing of the bond: beſide that the Apoſtle ſaith, 1.Cor.7.27. Art thou bound to a wife, ſeeke not to be looſed; where he ſpeaketh vnto beleeuers of the 1.Cor.7.27. diſſoluing of mariage; but they allow no diſſolution of mariage, but only in the caſe of infidelitie: Saint Ambroſe alſo ſaith, ſpeaking of the diſſoluing of mariage, Non debetur reuerentia coniugij ei, &c. The reuerence of mariage is not due to him, which abhorreth the author of mariage: in 7.1 ad Corinth. The diſſoluing of mariage, and not paying the debt, with him are all one: Cauſ.28.q.2.c.2.

Non eſt ei fides ſeruanda coniugij,&c. The faith of marriage is not to be kept to him, which departeth because he would not heare Chriſt; not to keepe the faith or debt of marriage, and to diſſolue marriage are the ſame.

Cauſ.32.qu.7.c.18. Si mulier non valeat debitum reddere: If the woman be not able to render her debt, or due to her husband, he may marrie another: Ergo, where the debt is not paied, the marriage bond is diſſolued.

Fourthly, when the parties are abſent vpon neceſſarie occaſion, or by conſent, here is neither refuſall, nor acquitall of the carnall debt, as there is in forced ſeparations; but in affection and deſire, they remaine ſtill ſubiect one to the other: therefore the reaſon is not alike: ſo then I conclude, that they ſeparating, where God alloweth no ſeparation, doe contrary to the Scripture, put aſunder, where God hath ioyned together.

We haue alſo the full conſent of antiquitie, that no dimiſſion of mariage is to be admitted, but for fornication: Concil. Anglican. an.670.can.10. Nullus coniugem propriam niſi vt ſanctum euangelium docet, fornicationis cauſa relinquat: That no man put away his wife, but as the Goſpell teacheth, for fornication.

Toletan.12.can.8. Praeceptum domini eſt, vt excepta cauſa fornicationis vxor à viro dimitti non debeat,&c. It is the commandement of the Lord, that except for fornication, the wife ſhould not be diſmiſſed from her husband: and therefore whoſoeuer vpon any other occaſion, except the former crime, doth diſmiſſe his wife; becauſe he ſeparateth that, which God hath ioyned, let him be put from the Communion, ſo long, till he receiue his wife againe.

Nicholaus 1. de matrimon.can.6. Quicquid mulier contra te cogitauerit, non eſt excepta cauſa fornicationis reijcienda: Whatſoeuer thy woman doth practiſe againſt thee, ſhe muſt not bee caſt off but for fornication. What greater euidence of antiquitie can any man require? This Canon is rehearſed, Cauſ.32.qu.5.c.22.

We haue further euidence: Cod.lib.3.tit.38.leg.11. Conſtant. Quis ferat, liberos à parentibus, à viris coniuges ſeparari? Who can endure, that children from parents, wiues ſhould be ſeparated from their husbands? &c. Yet I denie not, but that ſome Imperiall lawes allow other cauſes of ſeparation, beſide adultery, as homicide, ſacriledge, robberie, man-ſtealing, *Cod.lib.5.tit.17.leg.*8. and impotency or imbecillitie of nature, *ibid.leg.*10. yet the Canons of the Church haue otherwiſe decreed: as here I haue ſet them downe.

Cauſ.29.qu.7.c.19. Gregor. Excepta cauſa fornicationis: It is not lawfull for any man to diſmiſſe his wife, except it be for fornication: ſo likewiſe Zachar.cauſ.29.qu.2.c.2. Cauſ.32.qu.5.c.18. Quicquid excepta cauſa fornicationis cogitari poteſt horribile, ſuſtineat maritus: What horrible thing ſoeuer may be imagined, except the cauſe of fornication, the husband muſt ſuſtaine, c.21. Communione priuetur,&c. Let him be depriued of the Communion, qui citra culpam fornicationis vxorem quacunque occaſione dimiſerit, which beſide the fault of fornication vpon any occaſion doth diſmiſſe his wife.

What was the practiſe of the Greeke Church, Iuſtinus Martyr ſheweth, how a woman being conuerted to Chriſtianitie, hauing a licentious husband that liued an vncleane and libidinous life, when ſhe could by no meanes reclaime him, ſent him a libell of diuorce, &c. It ſeemeth the manner then was to be ſeparated for no other cauſe but fornication.

Apolog.1.pro Chriſtianis ſub initio.

Tertullian ſheweth the like in the Africane Church: Repudiata, quae per iram odium, & cauſas eorum iniuriam & calumniam & quamlibet querelam, & anima & corpore ſeparata eſt, tenetur inimico, ne dicam, marito: A woman repudiated, which is ſeparate in minde and bodie through wrath, hatred, and reproch and iniurie the cauſes thereof, or any other complaint, yet is tied to her enemie, that I ſay not, her husband, &c. There could not then bee a diſſolution of marriage for any of theſe cauſes or quarrels, though the parties were ſeparated in diſcontent for a while: fornication is not here named, for then the woman ſhould haue been no longer tied.

Lib. de Monogamia.

Confeſſion of Saxonie, artic.18. Touching diuorcements, this rule is moſt firmely held, that they do ſinne, who either by adulterie, or by forſaking, be the firſt cauſe of diſtraction: they allow then no diſtraction of mariage, but in theſe two caſes of adulterie or defection.

Harmon.18. ſect.p.565.

In the ancient Romane ſtate of long time, there was no diuorce but for adulterie: for Sp.Carbilius was the firſt, that renounced his wife for barrennes: Sulpitius Gallus the next, becauſe he ſaw his wife with her garment couer her head: Sempronius the third, becauſe his wife was preſent at certaine playes.

Plutar.quaeſt. Roman.9.14.

Now concerning the mariage of Infidels, Auguſtine ſometime was of opinion, that the wife might be diſmiſſed for Infidelitie, or ſpirituall fornication: but hee reuoketh and retracteth that opinion, Lib.retract.1.cap.19. For elſewhere he flatly concludeth thus: Apoſtolus non permittit mulierem à viro non fornicante diſcedere: The Apoſtle permitteth not a woman at all to depart from her husband, if he commit not fornication: De adult.coniug.1.7.

And yet further, to make this matter more plaine, wee acknowledge no other cauſe of lawfull diuorce in mariage but that onely, which is preſcribed in the Goſpell, namely, for adulterie or fornication, Matth.5.32. and 19.9. There is notwithſtanding another cauſe whereby the mariage knot may bee diſſolued, though not for fornication: as when one of the parties doth wilfully renounce, leaue time: of the firſt kinde of dimiſſion there can be no cauſe but fornication: Bellarm.cap.14.reſp.ad obiect.2.

Contra. Firſt, 1. The words of our Sauiour are generall: Whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife, verſ.9. And 2. he ſpeaketh to the Iewes, that were not baptized, therefore he meaneth euen mariage before Baptiſme. 3. And our Sauiour reaſoneth from the firſt inſtitution of mariage in the creation: but the law of the creation bindeth all both Infidels and beleeuers. 2. Againe, when any departeth for hereſie, or infidelitie, it is a departure for a crime. 3. And when the beleeuing partie departeth not being forſaken, but voluntarily (for where there is deſertion, the caſe is otherwiſe, as ſhall be afterward ſhewed) how can it be without ſeare of adulterie, when in this caſe, the mariage is not diſſolued betweene them?

Secondly, 1. It is a falſe poſition, that a ſonne is to forſake his father, or a ſeruant to denie ſeruice to his maſter for hereſie, or infidelitie, the Apoſtle teacheth the contrarie: 1.Timoth.6.1. Let as many ſeruants, as are vnder the yoke, count their maſters (he meaneth Infidels) worthie all honour. 2. And againe, if any other cauſes of dimiſſion might be pretended, though generall, then were not the rule giuen here by Chriſt ſufficient, not vniuerſally true: except for fornication, &c. if for other things, they might be diſmiſſed. 1.Timoth.6.1.

Thirdly, it ſhall ſoone appeare how inſufficient his third anſwere is: firſt, Bellarmine is contrarie to himſelfe: for heere hee maketh fornication the only cauſe of perpetuall dimiſſion, much forgetting himſelfe: for he affirmeth likewiſe, that the married parties by mutuall conſent may ſeparate themſelues, and vow continencie: and after their vow thus made, it is not lawfull for them to come together againe: here then is another kinde of perpetuall ſeparation. Secondly, neither is diuorce or ſeparation for fornication neceſſarily to continue, during their life time: they may be reconciled: and ſo both Bellarmine and the Rhemiſts thinke, expounding that place, 1.Cor.7. Let her remaine vnmaried, or be reconciled: of ſuch as are diuorced for fornication. So Leo epiſtol.77.cap.1. determineth thus: Quod debent fœminæ, quæ captis viris nupſerant alijs, regreſſis de captiuitate viris, prioribus copulari: That women, which marrie to others, their husbands being taken captiues, ſhould bee reſtored to their husbands after their returne. Here women falling into adulterie muſt returne to their husbands. Againe, the Scripture ſpeaketh for vs: that as God after ſpirituall fornication is readie vpon their repentance to receiue his people againe, Ierem.3.1. Thou haſt plaied the harlot, yet returne vnto me (ſaith the Lord:) ſo Chriſtian charitie requireth, that if it be poſſible, reconciliation ſhould bee made betweene man and wiſe, vpon humble ſubmiſſion for the fault committed. Thus wee ſee, that euen in caſe of fornication the way is not ſhut vp againſt compaſſion: therefore the Ieſuite hath anſwered nothing.

Argum. What God hath ioyned together, let no man put aſunder, Matth.19.6. But the Papiſts, in deuiſing ſo many ſeparations from bed and boord, doe put aſunder thoſe, whom God hath coupled: for where the duties of mariage are broken off, there mariage it ſelfe is alſo diſſolued: if the man and wiſe be no longer bound to render the carnall debt one to another, and other ſeruices of loue, the bond of mariage it ſelfe is looſed betweene them: this then is but a friuolous diſtinction, that there are two ſeparations of mariage: Quoad thorum, quoad vinculum: One from the bed, another from the bond of mariage: they then making ſo many ſeparations from the one, doe alſo diſſolue the other: and ſo man diuideth, where God hath coupled. argum. Kemnitij. Matth.19.6.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the bond of marriage is one thing, the debt or dutie of marriage another: for otherwiſe, when the married parties are abſent by ſome diſtance of place, and ſo the debt not paied, the bond alſo ſhould preſently be diſſolued, and they ceaſe to be man and wife: cap.14. reſp.ad obiect.5.

Contra. Firſt Bellarmine granteth, that theſe words, Whom God hath coupled, &c. are vnderſtood of the bond of marriage, not of the carnall debt, communion of bed and boord: ex conceſſis, I reaſon thus: That whereby they are coupled and made one fleſh, is the bond of mariage, but the carnall debt maketh them one fleſh; They twaine ſhall be one fleſh, Matth.19.5. therefore the carnall debt is the very bond of mariage: the propoſition is proued by the words of our Sauiour, verſ.6. wherefore they are no more twaine, but one fleſh: Let no man therefore put aſunder, that which God hath coupled together: here the making of two one fleſh, is ſaid to be the very coupling, wherewith God ioyneth them together.

Secondly, Saint Paul vſeth all theſe words indifferently, for one and the ſame thing, debt or dutie, 1.Cor.7.3. to be in ſeruice or ſubiection, verſ.15. to be bound to a wife, verſ.27. Thirdly, that in mariage the debitum, debt, and vinculum, bond, are all one: and that relaxatio debiti, the releaſing of the debt, is ſolutio vinculi, the diſſoluing of the bond: beſide that the Apoſtle ſaith, 1.Cor.7.27. Art thou bound to a wiſe, ſeeke not to be looſed; where he ſpeaketh vnto beleeuers of the diſſoluing of mariage; but they allow no diſſolution of mariage, but only in the caſe of infidelitie: 1.Cor.7.27. Saint Ambroſe alſo ſaith, ſpeaking of the diſſoluing of mariage, Non debetur reuerentia coniugij ei, &c. The reuerence of mariage is not due to him, which abhorreth the author of mariage: in 7.1.ad Corinth. The diſſoluing of mariage, and not paying the debt, with him are all one: Cauſ.28.q.2.c.2.

Non eſt ei fides ſeruanda coniugij,&c. The faith of marriage is not to be kept to him, which departeth becauſe he would not heare Chriſt; not to keepe the faith or debt of marriage, and to diſſolue marriage are the ſame.

Cauſ.32.qu.7.c.18. Si mulier non valeat debitum reddere: If the woman be not able to render her debt, or due to her husband, he may marrie another: Ergo, where the debt is not paied, the marriage bond is diſſolued.

Fourthly, when the parties are abſent vpon neceſſarie occaſion, or by conſent, here is neither refuſall, nor acquitall of the carnall debt, as there is in forced ſeparations; but in affection and deſire, they remaine ſtill ſubiect one to the other: therefore the reaſon is not alike: ſo then I conclude, that they ſeparating, where God alloweth no ſeparation, doe contrary to the Scripture, put aſunder, where God hath ioyned together.

We haue alſo the full conſent of antiquitie, that no dimiſſion of mariage is to be admitted, but for fornication: *Concil. Anglican. an.670.can.10. It is the commandement of the Lord, that except for fornication, the wife ſhould not be diſmiſſed from her husband: and therefore whoſoeuer vpon any other occaſion, except the former crime, doth diſmiſſe his wife; becauſe he ſeparateth that, which God hath ioyned, let him be put from the Communion, ſo long, till he receiue his wife againe.

There could not then bee a diſſolution of marriage for any of theſe cauſes or quarrels, though the parties were ſeparated in diſcontent for a while: fornication is not here named, for then the woman ſhould haue been no longer tied.

Lib.de Monogamia.

Confeſſion of Saxonie, artic.18. Touching diuorcements, this rule is moſt firmely held, that they doe ſinne, who either by adulterie, or by forſaking, be the firſt cauſe of diſtraction: they allow then no diſtraction of mariage, but in theſe two caſes of adulterie or defection.

Harmon.18. ſect.p.565.

Plutar.quæſt. Roman.9.14.

Now concerning the mariage of Infidels, Auguſtine ſometime was of opinion, that the wife might be diſmiſſed for Infidelitie, or ſpirituall fornication: but hee reuoketh and retracteth that opinion, Lib.retract.1.cap.19. For elſewhere he flatly concludeth thus: Apoſtolus non permittit mulierem à viro non fornicante diſcedere: The Apoſtle permitteth not a woman at all to depart from her husband, if he commit not fornication; De adult.coniug.1.7.

And yet further, to make this matter more plaine, wee acknowledge no other cauſe of lawfull diuorce in mariage but that onely, which is preſcribed in the Goſpell, namely, for adulterie or fornication, Matth.5.32. and 19.9. There is notwithſtanding another cauſe whereby the mariage knot may bee diſſolued, though not for fornication: as when one of the parties doth wilfully renounce, leaue and forſake the other vpon no iuſt cauſe, but either of lightneſſe or for diuers religion, as when an Infidell forſaketh a Chriſtian; a Papiſt, a Proteſtant; an heretike, a true profeſſor; or vpon any other vnlawfull or vniuſt cauſe: for the Apoſtle ſaith plainely, A brother or ſiſter is not in ſubiection in ſuch things, 1.Cor.7.15. that is, is freed from the yoke or bond of marriage. 1.Cor.7.15.

Firſt, it is plaine that the Apoſtle is ſo to be vnderſtood in this place: for the word which hee vſeth is, οὐ δεδούλωται, is no longer a ſeruant, or in ſubiection: which is to bee taken in the ſame ſenſe, as if hee ſhould ſay, οὐ δέδεται, he or ſhe is no longer bound or tyed: which word the Apoſtle vſeth verſ.39. And againe, the Apoſtle hath relation here to the fourth verſe, where he ſaith, The wife, οὐκ ἐξουσιάζει, hath no power of her owne bodie, and the husband likewiſe: But now, ſaith he, the Infidell partie hauing wilfully ſeparated himſelfe, χωρίζεται, the innocent partie is no longer in ſubiection, that is, ἐξουσιάζει, hath now power ouer his owne bodie: and is now become, ἐλευθέρα, free, exempt from the marriage knot or bond, in which ſenſe the Apoſtle vſeth the word, verſ.39.

Secondly, we muſt know, what kinde of deſertion it is, that cauſeth a diſſolution of marriage, and in what manner. First, it muſt bee malitioſa deſertio, a malitious departure without any iuſt cauſe: But when as the husband is abſent by conſent about neceſſarie affaires, as the Merchant beyond the ſeas: or is employed in ſome weightie buſineſſe, as in warfare, in ambaſſage, or ſuch like: or is violently deteined in priſon or captiuitie, amongſt the Turkes, or elſewhere: In theſe and the like caſes the wife is bound to wait and expect the returne of her husband, vnleſſe ſhe be otherwiſe aduertiſed of his death: According to the decree of the Trullane Synode, can.93. Militum vxores quæ non expectant viri peregrinantis reditum, ſed alteri nupſerint, antequam certa ſint de morte, mœchantur: Souldiours wiues, which doe not expect their husbands returne, being in trauell, but doe marrie others, before they be certaine of their death, doe commit adulterie. Secondly, the innocent partie muſt vſe all meanes to reconcile, reclaime, and bring home againe the wilfull and obſtinate partie ſo departing, if it be poſſible. Thirdly, if he continue in his obſtinacie, and depart, hauing no purpoſe to returne, the matter muſt be brought before the Iudge or Magiſtrate in ſuch caſes: who after publike citation of the obſtinate partie, and certaine knowledge that he refuſeth wilfully to appeare being cited, and is not otherwiſe letted to come, may with mature deliberation pronounce the innocent partie free and at libertie to marrie, according to S. Pauls rule, A brother or ſiſter is not bound in ſuch things.

Whether in caſe of deſertion, the partie forſaken be free.

Thirdly, neither is S. Paul contrarie to our Sauiour Chriſt, who alloweth no diuorce but onely for fornication: for that is a diuers caſe from this, whereof S. Paul treateth: And there is great difference betweene lawfull diuorce, and vnlawfull and wilfull deſertion: for there the innocent partie firſt claimeth the priuiledge of ſeparation: here the guiltie partie firſt ſeparateth himſelfe; there diuorce is ſued and required: here the innocent partie ſeeketh no diuorce, but ſeeketh all meanes of reconciliation: ſo that properly the ſetting free the innocent partie in this caſe, cannot bee called a diuorce. Chriſt therefore ſpeaketh of lawfull diuorce, not of euery diſſolution of marriage: for then mention ſhould haue beene made in that place of naturall death and departure, which is confeſſed by all to be a diſſolution and breaking off of mariage.

Thus haue I ſhewed mine opinion with Beza and others concerning this point: herein further as in all the reſt, referring my ſelfe to the determination of our Church, and the iudgement of our learned brethren, Beza. 1.Cor.7. verſ.15. Hemingius. Tileman. Heſhuſ. Luther. de capitiu. Babylon. cap. de Matrimon. Melancht. loc. theolog. tit. de coniug. Caluin. in 19. Matth. So alſo the confeſſion of Saxonie, artic. 18. And Paul ſpeaketh after the ſame manner in the caſe of forſaking: that is, that the partie forſaken is ſet free.

We haue alſo the conſent of a Councell: Concil. Lateranenſ. part. 50. cap 23. we finde this decree: A certaine man for the ſpace of ten yeeres was abſent from his wife, the woman came and complained, that ſhe could no longer expect his returne; then it followeth thus: Epiſcopus ſicut vir prouidus, parentibus ſuis mandauit, vt pro eo mitterent, & ipſum ad propria reuocarent. Cumque elapſo longo temporis ſpatio, vir ad propria non remearet: Epiſcopus in conſpectu Eccleſiæ inter eos diuortij ſententiam promulgauit, & mulieri, vt alium virum duceret plenariam facultatem indulſit: The Biſhop as a prouident man, did enioyne their parents to ſend for him and call him home: And after a long time, when he came not, the Biſhop in the ſight of the congregation did pronounce the ſentence of diuorce betweene them, and gaue the woman libertie to marrie another. Which ſentence of the Biſhop was approued of the whole Councell. The ſame Canon, ſee decret. Gregor. lib.4. tit.17. c.8.

Further euidence alſo wee haue for marriage in the caſe of wilfull deſertion: Ambroſ. in 7.1. ad Corinth. vpon theſe words, a brother or ſiſter is not in ſubiection, &c. Non debetur reuerentia coniugij ei, qui horret authorem coniugij, &c. The reuerence of marriage is not due to him, which abhorreth the author of marriage, &c. Ac per hoc non eſt peccatum ei qui dimittitur propter deum, &c. And ſo it is no ſinne vnto him, which is diſmiſſed for Gods cauſe, if he marrie another.

Cod. lib.5. tit.1. leg.2. Conſtant. Sponſa poſt biennium, &c. The ſpouſe after two yeere expecting the returne of her husband, may marrie another: Tit.27. leg.2. Poſt triennium, after three yeeres ſhee may marrie: leg.7. Poſt quadriennium, after foure yeeres, if ſhee heare no newes of her husband. If the law giue this libertie, when the husband is abſent vpon other occaſion, and ſuppoſed to be dead, much more in the caſe of voluntarie deſertion.

Likewiſe decreeth the Canon law, Cauſ.28.q.1.c.4. Vxor ſine vlla culpa relinquitur,&c. The wife is left without any fault at all, if ſhe refuſe to dwell with a Chriſtian husband.

Ibid.qu.2.c.2.Greg.Infidelis diſcedens,&c. An infidell departing ſinneth againſt God, and the faith of matrimonie is not to be kept with him.

Decret.Greg.lib.4 tit.19.c.7. Qui relinquitur ad ſecunda ſi voluerit, vota tranſibit: He or ſhe that is forſaken, may if ſhe will, goe vnto ſecond marriage.

The Papiſts themſelues allow the partie forſaken, to marrie againe; but the difference betweene vs is this: firſt, they affirme, that where the one partie is an Infidell, the marriage is diſſolued, whether 1.Cor.7.13. the vnbeleeuing partie will remaine or not; contrarie to the Apoſtle, 1.Cor.7.13. If hee be content to dwell with her, let her not forſake him. Secondly, they hold this to be deſertion onely, where the one partie is an Infidell: and in this caſe of infidelitie onely matrimonie vpon deſertion to be diſſolued: whereas if there be a wilfull deſertion of the one partie, the caſe is all one, whether hee be a profeſſed Infidell or not: for he that is careleſſe of his wife and family, by S. Pauls rule, is worſe than an Infidell,
1.Tim.5.8. 1.Timoth.5.8.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER IT BE LAWFULL to marrie after diuorcement for adulterie.

The Papiſts.

84. Error. FOr adulterie one may diſmiſſe another, but neither partie can marrie againe for any cauſe during life, Rhemiſt. Matth.19.ſect.4. ſo the Doway Collegials. annot. Deuter.24.v.1. no, not the innocent partie may marrie againe: for the marriage knot is not diſſolued becauſe of adulterie, Concil. Trident.ſeſſ.24 can.7.

Mark.10.11. Luk.16.18. Argum.1. Mark.10.11. Whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife and marrie another, committeth adulterie againſt her. Likewiſe, Luk.16.18. Ergo, it is not lawfull to marrie againe at all after the wife be put away, Bellar.c.16.argum.2.

Anſw. Saint Marke and Luke muſt be expounded by Saint Matthew, who ſaith, Whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife except it be for fornication, and marrie another, committeth adulterie: whereupon it followeth, that not euery one which putteth away his wife and marrieth another, committeth adulterie: wherefore the other Euangeliſts muſt be vnderſtood to ſpeake of other ordinarie and common occaſions, ſuch as were vſuall among the Iewes, for the which men did vſe to put away their wiues, and not to include in their generall ſentence, this exception of fornication; for then the Euangeliſts ſhould be contrarie each to other.

Bellar. 1. When Marke did write his Goſpel at Rome, is it like that he would ſend the Romanes to Matthew for an expoſition thereof? 2. It followeth not, Whoſoeuer putteth away,&c. except for fornication, and marrieth againe, committeth adulterie: Ergo, hee that putteth his wife away for fornication,&c. doth not commit adulterie: and that for diuers reaſons, Bellar.ibid.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtles and Euangeliſts liuing, who did write and preach the Goſpell, they needed not to ſend one to another to know the ſenſe, themſelues being directed of the ſpirit: but now, the beſt direction we haue, is to expound the Scripture by it ſelfe, and to make it accord together. Secondly, this exception εἰ μὴ, vnleſſe, or except, doth alwaies inferre the contrarie to that which is affir-
Luk.17.18. med: as Luk.17.18. There are none found to returne to giue God praiſe, ſaue this ſtranger: Ergo, this Matth.5 20. ſtranger did returne to praiſe God; Likewiſe Matth.5.20. Except your righteouſneſſe exceede the righteouſneſſe of the Scribes,&c. ye ſhall not enter into the kingdome of heauen: Ergo, if it did exceede,&c. they ſhould enter: After the ſame manner, If whoſoeuer doe put away his wife,&c. except for fornication, doe commit adulterie; then hee that for fornication doth put away and marrie againe, doth not,&c. As for the reaſons alledged to the contrarie, they ſhall be examined in the anſweres to our arguments. Thirdly, if they vnderſtand Marke and Luke thus generally without exception, then it ſhall not be lawfull at all to diſmiſſe for fornication. Bellarm anſwereth, that this may be proued out of Saint Matth.c.5.v.32. whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife, except for fornication: Ergo, for fornication it is lawfull to diſmiſſe. Contra. 1. Doth not hee now ſend vs for the vnderſtanding of Marke and Luke, to Matthew? 2. And doth not he himſelfe conclude the contrarie vpon the exception? thus he offendeth againſt his owne rules, and alloweth that in his owne argument, which he miſliketh in ours.

Matth.5.32. Argum.2. Matth.5.32. Whoſoeuer ſhall marrie her that is diuorced, committeth adulterie: This muſt be vnderſtood generally, without the exception of fornication; for if it be lawfull to marrie an adultereſſe that is diuorced for adulterie, and not the innocent partie, that is diſmiſſed, but not for adulterie, then ſhould the caſe of the adultereſſe be better than of the other: Bellar.c.16.arg.1.

Anſ. The adultereſſe is not ſtraightway to be admitted to ſecond marriage, but it is fit that ſome reſtraint ſhould be made in the diſcretion of the magiſtrate, leaſt it might be made an vſuall practiſe for incontinent perſons to get them new mates: therefore in this behalfe the adultereſſe caſe is not ſo good. 2. The innocent perſons caſe is much better, becauſe ſhee is free from ſo great a ſinne as the wife) to be giuen ouer, then hath the innocent partie the ſame remedie, with much better conditions, than the other. 5. Neither doth the argument follow, as it may appeare by this inſtance: Your penance you call the ſecond table after ſhipwracke: ſhe that ſinneth not need not this remedie, the adultereſſe is admitted to it; is the adultereſſe therefore the better becauſe of this ſecond table? no more is ſhe for her ſecond husband. 6. Wherefore the exception in the firſt clauſe of the ſentence, except it be for fornication, muſt be ſupplied alſo in the latter, as it is euident Matth.19 5. where the exception is ioyned to both members of the ſentence, both of diſmiſſion, and marrying againe. Matth.19.5.

*Argum.*3. Rom.7.2. The woman is bound by the law to her husband, ſo long as hee liueth: nothing but death diſſolueth the bond betweene man and wife: therefore not lawfull to marrie againe after diuorce, Rhemiſt. ibid. This place is alſo vrged by the Doway Collegials: annot. Deutr. 24. v.1. Rom.7.2.

*Anſw.*1. Saint Paul muſt be expounded by our Sauiour Chriſt, who maketh exception of fornication, Matth.5. Matth.5 32.

2 Neither doth S. Paul denie, that marriage may be diſſolued, while they liue, without breaking of wedlocke: but that although the knot hold during their life, yet by death it is diſſolued. Againe, S. Paul hauing no occaſion to intreat of diuorce, ſpeaketh of marriage as it ſtandeth whole and ſound by the ordinance of God, that if a woman ioyne her ſelfe to another man, her former wedlocke being not lawfully diſſolued, ſhe is a wedlocke breaker.

3 Therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, Quæ ſub viro eſt mulier, the woman that is in ſubiection to the man: But ſo is not a woman diuorced and ſeparated, any longer in ſubiection to her husband: therefore of ſuch an one the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not.

4 Laſtly, we muſt conſider the ſcope of the place, and how the Apoſtle applyeth this ſimilitude: As verſ.4. hee ſaith, that the law being dead by the comming of Chriſt, wee are freed from it, from henceforth to liue vnto him; as the woman is free after the death of her husband to marrie to another: ſo that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the continuance of the bond of wedlocke vntill death, but of the diſſolution thereof after death; which onely ſerueth for his preſent purpoſe. And thus alſo is that other place to be expounded, 1.Cor.7.39. where the Apoſtle ſheweth, that although marriage remaine firme and ſure vntill death, yet then it is diſſolued: 1.Cor.7.39. To this effect alſo anſwereth Caietanus a learned Papiſt.

*Argum.*4. 1.Cor.7.11. If ſhe depart, let her remaine vnmarried, or be reconciled: Ergo, the parties ſeparated for fornication may not marrie againe, Rhemiſt. 1.Cor.7.11.

Anſw. S. Paul ſpeaketh of other ſeparations, which are cauſed by diſſentions in marriage, and not of diuorce for adulterie: for he ſaith, 1. If ſhee depart; not, If ſhee be put away: 2. Neither was it ſo vſuall a thing for reconciliation to be ſought after ſolemne diuorce. 3. Againe, he ſaith, Let not the woman depart, as being in her choice, whether ſhe would depart or not: but in the caſe of fornication, ſhe was to depart, or rather be put away, whether ſhee would or not. Neither would S. Paul haue ſaid in caſe of diuorce, let her not depart, ſeeing the Goſpell granteth a ſeparation to bee made betweene the man and wife in ſuch caſes.

Bellarmine anſwereth, 1. That the Apoſtle in the firſt place, v.10. Let not the wife depart from her husband, ſpeaketh of vnlawfull and vniuſt departure. In the next v.11. But if ſhee depart, let her remaine vnmarried, or be reconciled, he ſpeaketh of lawfull departure for fornication. 2. If the Apoſtle had ſpoken of any vnlawfull or vniuſt departure, he would not haue put it to the womans choice, whether to bee reconciled or not; but ſimply haue enioyned her to bee reconciled: *c.*16. *reſp. ad arg.*4.

Contra. Firſt, the ſame kinde of departure is vnderſtood in both places: 1. becauſe they make but one full ſentence, and theſe words, ἐὰν δὲ, quod ſi, but if, haue relation to the other, and ſhew a coherence of the ſenſe: 2. And againe, the ſame word χωρίζω is vſed in both verſes, ſhewing one and the ſame kinde of ſeparation.

Secondly, 1, the Apoſtle doth not put it to the womans choice to be reconciled or not, but by this meanes denying libertie of marriage, doth driue her to ſeeke reconciliation; and ſaith thus much in effect, that, if ſhe did not reconcile her ſelfe, ſhe ſhould remaine vnmarried: 2. For otherwiſe it was not in the caſe of diſmiſſion for adulterie in the offenders power to be reconciled, but in the innocent partie to receiue her to reconciliation; but here it is in the power of the guiltie partie to reconcile her ſelfe: therefore it was for other offences beſide fornication.

*Argum.*5. If marriage ſhould bee granted after diuorce, theſe inconueniences would follow. Firſt, the children ſhould be euill prouided for, that are conſtrained to liue vnder a ſtepfather, or ſtepmother. Secondly, by this meanes, the married parties being diſcontented, would ſeeke occaſions and picke quarrels one to the other, that they may be diuorced and marrie againe.

Thirdly, if the marriage be vtterly diſſolued, then the guiltie partie is either to marrie againe, or not to marrie: if the firſt, they of purpoſe may commit adulterie, that they marrie where they liſt: if the ſecond, what reaſon is there to reſtraine the weaker partie of the remedie? *Bellar. c.*16.

Contra. Firſt, 1. The ſame danger will be to the children, vpon ſecond marriage after death, as well as after diuorce, to endure ſtepfathers or ſtepmothers; ſhall therefore all ſecond marriage for this be reſtrained? 2. If the innocent partie hauing not the gift of continencie, ſhould be forced to keepe an adultereſſe ſtill, there would enſue a greater inconuenience, the father being vncertaine of his children.

Secondly, 1. As it may be feared, leaſt diuorces ſhould be procured and ſought, where a way is open to ſecond marriage; ſo if the way were ſhut vp, a greater matter would be feared; leaſt where by diuorce they cannot helpe themſelues to new wiues, they ſhould practiſe by other meanes one to take away another. 2. Againe, where diuorce is by pretence or conſent, to pleaſe their owne luſt, the magiſtrate in his diſcretion hath power to moderate and ouerrule ſuch inordinate practiſes. 3. But where Chriſt hath granted a libertie, the wiſedome of man muſt not controule it, but leaue the ſucceſſe to Gods prouidence.

Thirdly, 1. As the guiltie partie by Moſes law was to die for adulterie, ſo now alſo; if ſome grieuous mulct be laid vpon the offender, according to the nature of the offence, they would haue ſmall liſt to practiſe by adulterie. 2. The guiltie partie doth not ſue for diuorce, but the partie grieued; and therefore if there bee offence willingly committed, yet the innocent partie may expect amendment and reconciliation; without whoſe conſent and liking, diuorce is not to be granted. 3. Some haue thought, that the guiltie partie ſhould not take benefite at all of ſecond marriage, as Luther, Eraſmus: ſome otherwiſe, as Melanct. in annot. ad c. 5. Matth. Howſoeuer, he or ſhe is not ſo eaſily to be admitted to it, but with due puniſhment and rebuke before, and the mature aduiſe and diſcretion of the Magiſtrate: but for euer to barre the incontinent partie of the remedie, would be occaſion of further ſinne: and if the innocent partie doe marrie againe, the bond of the firſt marriage is diſſolued, and both parties are ſet free, but if the innocent partie doe not goe vnto ſecond marriage, it is not fit the offender ſhould haue that libertie at all: and if the innocent partie be admitted to ſecond marriage, where there is no hope of reconciliation which firſt ought by all meanes to bee attempted, yet the offender ſhould not ſodainly, nor without condigne puniſhment before inflicted, bee allowed that libertie.

Whether the guiltie partie may haue the like libertie as the innocent.

The Proteſtants.

FOr no other cauſe in the world, but onely for fornication, may there be either a finall ſeparation, or cleane diſſolution of marriage, by way of diuorce: But for that cauſe our Sauiour hath granted libertie, both to diſſolue matrimonie, and to marrie againe.

Matth. 5. 32.
Matth. 19. 9.

Argum. Matth. 5. 32. Whoſoeuer putteth away his wife (except it bee for fornication) committeth adulterie: Ergo, for fornication it is lawfull for a man to diſmiſſe his wife. Likewiſe Matth. 19. 9. Whoſeuer ſhall put away his wife, except it be for whoredome, and marrie another, committeth adulterie: Ergo, for adulterie it is lawfull for the man both to put away and renounce his wife; and the wife likewiſe her husband (for there is the like reaſon for both) and for them to marrie againe. This libertie granted by our Sauiour Chriſt, by no humane law can be reſtrained or cut off.

This place troubleth our aduerſaries very ſore, and therefore they haue found out many ſtarting holes, but all to ſmall purpoſe.

1. Durand thus anſwereth: That when Chriſt vttered theſe words, the law of the Iewes was, that the adulterous woman ſhould be put to death, & ſo the husband might haue liberty to marrie againe.

Contra. Bellarmine ouerthroweth this anſwere. 1. Becauſe Chriſt here giueth a rule not onely to the Iewes, but to all Chriſtians, not being ignorant, how that in euery nation, that law of putting the adultereſſe to death, ſhould not be in force. 2. Chriſt might as well haue excepted other crimes that were puniſhed by death, as murder, and the like, that in thoſe caſes they might marrie againe, becauſe by the law their wiues were to die, as well as in the caſe of fornication. 3. Chriſt ſpeaketh of diſmiſſion: but properly the wife is not ſaid to be diſmiſſed, when ſhee is put to death: Chriſt therefore is not ſo to be vnderſtood.

2. Bellarmine therefore approueth this expoſition: Whoſoeuer ſhall put away his wife (except it be for fornication) and marrie another: he would haue the exception reſtrained to the firſt clauſe, in this ſenſe: he that putteth away his wife, which it is not lawfull to doe but for fornication: ſo that the crime of fornication maketh it lawfull to diſmiſſe, but not after diſmiſſion to marrie againe.

Contra. 1. This expoſition is contrarie to the Ieſuite, for he alloweth a ſeparation of matrimonie in other caſes, as of hereſie, infidelitie, vow of continencie: but here he ſaith, that onely ſeparation and diſmiſſion is to be made in the caſe of fornication. 2. This anſwere of Chriſt had not beene ſufficient, if he had ſpoken onely of diuorce, and not of libertie to marrie againe: for the Phariſes moued the queſtion concerning the manner of diuorce permitted by Moſes law, after the which it was lawfull for them to marrie againe: And therefore it was expected that our Sauiour ſhould anſwere to both theſe points; both in what caſes they might diſmiſſe their wiues, and marrie againe. 3. The ſentence cannot ſtand in any good ſenſe, vnleſſe it be read wholy together; vnleſſe you will ſay, that he which putteth away his wife onely, committeth adulterie: he may cauſe her to commit adulterie, as the Euangeliſt hath in another place, Matth. 5. 32. but commit adulterie he doth not, vnleſſe hee marrie another: ſo that this muſt needes be the ſenſe, he that putteth away his wife and marrieth another, vnleſſe it be in the caſe of fornication, committeth adulterie.

3. Bellarmine further anſwereth with Auguſtine, that theſe words (except it bee for fornication) are onely negatiuely to bee taken in this ſenſe: that hee which putteth away his wife, and marrieth, where there is no fornication, ſinneth: but he determineth not of the affirmatiue part, where there is fornication, whether the partie in marrying againe ſinne or not: ſo that it followeth not, he that marrieth againe, his wife being put away without fornication, ſinneth: Ergo, hee that marrieth, his wife being diſmiſſed for fornication, ſinneth not: it may be a leſſe ſinne, or not ſo grieuous a kind of adulterie, but it followeth not, that it is not at all: Bellar cap.17.reſp.ad obiect.3.

*Cont.*1. This anſwere had beene more inſufficient then the other: for Chriſt in not determining their queſtion ſhould haue left them in ſuſpence, and vncertaine what to doe: whereas Chriſts anſweres vſe to be moſt full. 2. If as well he committeth adulterie, that marrieth vpon diuorce for fornication, as hee that marrieth where there is no fornication, then our Sauiour Chriſts exception is needleſſe: he might haue ſaid in generall termes, that whoſoeuer putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, excepting no cauſe, committeth adulterie. And ſo indeede S. Marke and S. Luke ſet downe this ſpeech in generall words: who are to be expounded by Matthew, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme contrarie one to the other. But farre be it from vs to thinke, that Chriſt vſed any needleſſe or vnneceſſarie word. 3. This word of exception, εἰ μὴ, niſi, vnleſſe, or except, in Scripture is vſed to ſignifie a contrarie diſpoſition in that, which is excepted to that which is ſet downe, ſo that if the one be affirmed, the other is denied: as 1.King.3.18. None was in the houſe, except wee twaine: they two therefore were, other were not: Luk.13.3. Except yee repent, yee ſhall periſh: Ergo, if you doe repent, you ſhall not periſh: Luk.17.18. None are found to returne to praiſe God, εἰ μὴ, except this ſtranger: therefore this ſtranger did returne. So where Chriſt ſaith, Who ſo putteth away his wife, except it be for fornication, and marrieth another, committeth adulterie; We inferre negatiuely, that he doth not commit adulterie, who putteth away, and marrieth, where there is fornication. Thus for all their ſhifting euaſions, the truth cannot be obſcured.

Luk.17.18.

*Argum.*2. Saint Paul ſaith, Let euery man haue his wife, and euery woman her husband, for auoyding of fornication, and it is better to marrie, then to burne. Wherefore it is lawfull, the firſt marriage according to the word of God being broken, both for men and women to vſe the remedie againſt incontinencie, and to be married againe: for he ſpeaketh generally of all. To this purpoſe Hierome thus excuſeth the marriage of Fabiola, Repudiato marito, &c. Her firſt husband being refuſed: Melius eſt (inquit Apoſtolus) nubere, quàm vri: The Apoſtle ſaith, It is better to marrie then burne: ſhee was young, and could not keepe her widowhood, and therefore thought it better to confeſſe her infirmitie, and to enter into a ſhadow of marriage, then vnder the ſhew of ſingle life to play the harlot: ad Oceanum.

*Argum.*3. If after diuorce for adulterie no marriage ſhould bee lawfull, then the innocent partie ſhould bee puniſhed without his fault: and beſide, hee not hauing the gift of continencie, and being denied the remedie, either ſhall liue in continuall burning, or elſe be tempted to fall into adulterie: ſo it had beene better for no diuorce at all to be granted, then vpon diuorce no marriage: obiect. Kemnitij.

Bellarm. 1. The guiltie partie may be reconciled againe, and ſo be retained ſtill. 2. Or if that be not expedient, the remedie of continencie is readie for all thoſe, that will ſue for it, and aske it at Gods hands. 3. And in this caſe the innocent partie muſt endeuour to containe, as in the long abſence, or ſickneſſe of the wife: B.c.17.reſponſ.ad obiect.2.

Cont. 1. For the partie that offendeth, vpon his or her repentance to be receiued againe; we denie not, but to be a very charitable, and ſimply the beſt courſe: but all the matter is, when as there is no hope of amendment, ſhall a man retaine a ſerpent ſtill in his boſome? 2. The gift of Continencie is not giuen to euery man: for 1. our Sauiour ſaith, Matth.19.11. All cannot receiue this thing, ſaue they to whom it is giuen: It is not then giuen to all, for then all might receiue it, which is here denied. 2. And the Apoſtle ſaith further, 1.Cor.7.7. Euery man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, another after that. But if euery man may haue the gift of continencie, it is no proper but a common gift. 3. Where Gods hand is vpon either partie, as by long ſickneſſe, or by neceſſitie of inuoluntarie abſence, as in captiuitie, there being no other remedie left, God will not denie the neceſſary gift: but where there is an ordinarie remedie by mariage, we muſt not flie to the extraordinarie gift, which were to tempt God: as Peter leaped out of the ſhip, to walke vpon the water, and began to ſinke; ſo they which leaue the ordinarie meane, truſting to extraordinarie helpe, may be deceiued. 4. If continencie were ſuch an eaſie & vſuall remedie vpon diuorce; why did Pope Gregorie 3. giue this libertie, Cauſ.32.qu.7.c.18. that if a woman, by reaſon of her infirmitie, bee not able to render her due, the man, qui ſe continere non poterit, nubat, which cannot containe himſelfe, may marrie? And ibid.c.24. If a man lie with his ſtepmother, Vir eius poteſt aliam accipere, ſi ſe continere non poteſt: Her husband may take another, if he cannot containe. It is euident by theſe Canons, that euery man cannot containe, and that marriage after lawfull diuorce, is the next and beſt remedie againſt incontinencie.

Whether euerie one may haue the gift of continencie.
1.Cor.7.7.

Argum 4. If vpon lawfull diuorce marriage were not lawfull, then the law of diuorce ſhould bee altogether ſuperfluous and vnneceſſarie; neither ſhould Chriſt haue prouided as good a remedie in this caſe, as Moſes did, by whoſe law the adultereſſe was to die, and ſo the innocent partie at libertie to marrie againe. But none of Chriſts precepts are vnneceſſarie or ſuperfluous; Ergo.

Bellarm. Yes, diuorce is to great purpoſe, though it be not free to marrie afterward: for otherwiſe the innocent partie ſhould be conſtrained to the great danger of his ſoule, ſometime to liue with an heretike, &c. Bellarm.c.17.reſp.ad obiect.2.

Contra. 1. Separation for hereſie is not lawfull, but onely for adulterie, and therefore this inſtance is impertinent. 2. The innocent partie may ſequeſter or ſeparate himſelfe of his owne accord from the guiltie partie, though there were no publike law of diuorce, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, Diuortium quoad thorum propria authoritate fieri poſſe: That diuorce from the bed may bee done by a mans owne authoritie: *c.*14. *obſeruat.*2. and by this priuate ſeparation, all thoſe pretended dangers may be auoided.

*Argum.*5. This obiection was made in Auguſtines time, *lib.*2. *de adulter. coniug c.*16. Cogentur mariti adulteras occidere,&c. If marriage after diuorce be adulterie, then the husbands ſhall be vrged to conſpire againſt their wiues, to take them out of the way, that they may marrie againe.

Auguſtine anſwereth: 1. The ſame inconuenience may follow, when as the wife is ſeparated for any other cauſe than adulterie, that ſome may practiſe againſt the life of their husbands in this caſe alſo, to marrie their wiues. 2. Another inconuenience may be feared on the other ſide, that men will firſt diſmiſſe their wiues to cauſe them to fall into adulterie, that they may haue new. Auguſtin.ibid.

Contra. 1. No ſeparation is to be granted but for adulterie, and therefore in ſuch vnlawfull ſeparations, no ſuch danger can bee feared, but when the ſeparation is lawfull and marriage vnlawfull. 2. To practiſe againſt a womans chaſtitie, is not ſo great a ſinne, as to practiſe againſt her life: This may follow vpon the denying of marriage, the other vpon granting. Auguſtine ſaith, as hee is alleaged, *cauſ.*33.*qu.*2.*c*9. Si facturus eſt, quod non licet, iam faciat adulterium, & non faciat homicidium,&c. If a man muſt needes doe that which is not lawfull, let him commit adulterie rather than murder, and marrie another while his wife liueth, rather than ſhed blood: this inconuenience then is worſe than the other. 3. Where inconueniences are like to enſue on both ſides, the leſſe is to be taken, and rather that rule to be followed which is more conſonant to the Goſpell, as this is to marrie after lawfull diuorce.

De fide & oper.cap.19. tom.4. Auguſtine ſaith, that he which putteth away his wife for adulterie, and marrieth another, Non eſt æquandus ei, is not in the ſame caſe with him, which for any other cauſe putteth away and marrieth againe. But if it be as lawfull for other cauſes to be diuorced, as for hereſie and infidelitie, as the Ieſuite telleth vs, there ſhould be no difference made betweene the ſecond marriage of the one and the other. Auguſtine in the ſame place, though he be elſewhere reſolute againſt marriage after diuorce, yet granteth that it is not plaine out of Scripture, whether he be an adulterer, that marrieth againe after diuorce for adulterie: Sed quantum exiſtimo, venialiter ibi quiſque fallitur: But as I thinke, we are euery one of vs herein deceiued: And, *de fide & operib.c.*20. he doubteth, whether he be an adulterer which marrieth another wife, the firſt being put away for adulterie.

I end this point, better allowing Pollentius iudgement for this matter, than Auguſtines, betweene whom there is much diſcourſed of both ſides: Si mulier à viro non fornicante diſceſſerit, non ei licere alteri nubere propter præceptum: ſi autem à fornicante, non ei expedire propter opprobrium: If a woman depart from her husband being no adulterer, it is not lawfull to marrie another becauſe of the commandement: but if he be an adulterer, it is lawfull to marrie, but not expedient alwaies, becauſe of the ſhame and reproch, *Ad Pollent.lib.*1.*c.*6.

We haue alſo further euidence of antiquitie: *Venetic.Concil.can.*2.Eos qui relictis vxoribus ſuis, ſicut in Euangelio dicitur, excepta cauſa fornicationis, ſeu adulterij probatione, alias duxerint, ſtatuimus à communione arcendos: They, which leauing their wiues, vnleſſe it be for fornication, and adulterie manifeſtly proued, and marrie other, we decree, to be put from the Communion. It followeth then, that if adulterie be proued, they may relinquiſh their wiues, and marrie other.

*Concil.Vormatienſ.can.*63. Si quis cum matre & filia in adulterio manſit, & poſtea ille vir mulierem acceperit, dimittat eam,&c. illa vero mulier, quam reliquerit, accipiat virum: If any hath continued in adulterie with the mother and the daughter, and after hee taketh a wife, let him diſmiſſe her, and haue no wife ſo long as he liueth, but the woman ſo diſmiſſed may take an husband: Likewiſe if the mother and daughter did commit this ſinne ignorantly, they may keepe their husbands: if wittingly, one knowing of another, dimittant maritos, they ſhall diſmiſſe their husbands, illarum verò viri accipiant mulieres: but their husbands may take other women to their wiues. This Councell giueth libertie to the innocent partie to marrie after diuorce. But Bellarmine confeſſeth, Libertatem diuortium faciendi ob crimen, parem eſſe viro & vxori: That the libertie to make diuorce for adulterie, is alike to the man and wife: *De matrimon.lib.*1.*c.*14 Ergo, they may both marrie after diuorce for adulterie.

*Lateranenſ.part.*50.*cap.*46. Mulieres licita aliqua cauſa à viris ſeparatæ poſt annum expletum accipiant alium virum, ſimiliter vir vxorem: Women ſeparate from their husbands lawfully, after a yeare may take other husbands, and their husbands other wiues.

*Lateranenſ.part.*6.*cap.*21. Vrbanus decreed thus: Si quis pendente lite matrimoniali aliam acceperit, & poſtea inter ipſum & primam diuortium fuerit celebratum, poterit cum ſecunda remanere: If any man, while the ſuite dependeth about marriage betweene him and his wife, doe marrie another, and afterward ſentence of diuorce be pronounced betweene him and the firſt, he may vpon ſufficient penance remaine with the ſecond. *Synod.Florentin.ſeſſ.*25. Græci matrimonia ſeparant, in quo diſſident à Latinis: The Grecians doe vſe to ſeparate matrimonie, wherein they diſſent from the Latines: but the Latines ſeparate marriage onely, quoad thorum, not quoad vinculum, they diſſolue the vſe of marriage, riage,not the bond : Ergo, the Greeke Church diſſenting from them, diſſolueth the whole, both the vſe of mariage and the knot. And thus farre of this queſtion of mariage after diuorce : which wee ſee hath been practiſed in times paſt of the Church,and approued of antiquitie.

Yet we haue further euidence, S. Ambroſe in 7. 1. ad Corinth. thus writeth, the Apoſtle ſaying, Let not the man put away his wife, doth not adde as before of the woman, let him ſo remaine, Quia viro licet ducere vxorem, ſi dimiſerit vxorem peccantem : Becauſe it is lawfull for the man to marrie a wife, hauing diſmiſſed the firſt for her offence : here the man in Ambroſe iudgement is permitted to marrie after diuorce : but there is the ſame reaſon and libertie both of the man and wiſe in this caſe : as their owne law ſaith : Vna erit lex per omnia & viro & fœmina : There ſhall be one law altogether for the man and the wife : Cauſ.29.qu.2. Ergo, it is lawfull for both.

Cod.lib.5.tit.17.leg.8.Theodoſ.Vxorem ſi velit, ſtatim ducere definimus : We do define, that he may ſtraightway marrie a wife, which putteth away the firſt, for cauſes there expreſſed.

Lib.9.tit.9 leg.2. Crimen lenocinij incurrunt,&c. They incurre the crime of Bawdes, that retaine a wife ſtill in mariage deprehended in adulterie : and leg.3. Diſſolutio matrimonij : Vtter diſſolution of mariage is granted vpon the detecting of that crime.

And 1. further what was the practiſe of the Greeke Church, beſide the foreſaid imperiall lawes, may appeare by that report, which Iuſtinus maketh of a Chriſtian woman, which gaue a bill of repudium, to her adulterous husband : now, where there is repudium, there is an vtter diſſolution of mariage, as Bellarmine himſelfe diſtinguiſheth betweene diuortium, and repudium : ſee before, error 82. Epiphanius ſaith : Qui non potuit vna mortua contentus eſſe, ob aliquam cauſam, ſcortationem aut ſeparatione ob aliquam malam cauſam facta, eum diuina ſcriptura non accuſat, ſi vir ſecundæ coniungatur vxori,&c. He that cannot be content with one wiſe being dead, if ſeparation being made for whoredome, or any other euill cauſe, the man marrie a ſecond wife, or the wife a ſecond husband, the Scripture doth not finde fault, &c. The Grecians at this day grant ſecond mariage in the cauſe of adultery, as Bellarmine confeſſeth.

And againe, Illicite dimiſſam pro indimiſſa ducens adulter eſt : manet enim matrimonium quod non legitime diremptum eſt : He is an adulterer who marrieth a woman vnlawfully diſmiſſed, as not diſmiſſed at all : for mariage remaineth, not lawfully diſſolued or broken off, &c. Then conſequently it may be lawfully broken off and then it remaineth not.

3. The reformed Churches agree : Confeſſion of Saxonie, artic.18. The innocent partie is not forbid to marrie, that he may inuocate God, and liue holily : for ſeeing the Lord doth expreſſely ſet at libertie the innocent perſon, Matth.19. when as the other partie is polluted with adulterie, we muſt vnderſtand a ſetting at libertie, not in name onely, but in deed, &c. Wittemberg, 26. artic. chap. 21. We hope that it will come to paſſe, that all good Biſhops and Princes will permit them, who by a lawfull diuorce are ſeparated from their adulterous wiues or huſbands, to vſe that libertie of marrying againe in the Lord, which the Sonne of God hath granted, &c. And concerning the iudgement of our Engliſh Church, what it is, may appeare by this, that in the late act of Parliament which maketh it felonie to haue two wiues, ſpeciall exception is made of thoſe which marrie after ſentence of diuorce : and it is prouided in the late Canons, can. 107. that in euery ſentence pronounced only for diuorce and ſeparation, à menſa & thoro, from bed and boord, a reſtraint ſhall be inſerted into the act, that the parties during each others life ſhall not marrie againe, and that they ſhall put in a ſufficient caution for the performance thereof : but neither are ſuch ſecond mariages pronounced void, only the caution is forfeited, neither doth the Canon ſpeake of ſuch ſeparations, wherein the vinculum the bond it ſelfe is broken, as is by fornication.

4. [a] Eraſmus, [b] Caietanus, [c] Catharinus doe all agree, that mariage is lawfull after diuorce for adulterie.

[a] Annot. in 7.1. ad Corinth.
[b] In 19. Matth.
[c] Lib.5. annot. in comment. Caietan.

Likewiſe their owne Canons thus teſtifie: Cauſ.31.qu.1.c.6. Licet vxorem inſidiaturam dimittere, & ſi voluerit, aliam ducere : It is lawfull for a man to diſmiſſe a wife, laying await for her husbands life, and if he will to marrie another.

Cauſ.29 qu.2.c.4. Qui ancillam duxerit vxorem,&c. He that hath married a bond-woman, ſi voluerit, aliam accipiat : after he knoweth her to be a bond-woman, let him take another.

Cauſ.32.qu.7.c.17. Viro licet ducere aliam : The man may marrie another : ibid c.18 Gregor.3. alloweth a man to marrie againe ; Si mulier infirmitate correpta non valet debitum reddere : If the woman taken with ſickneſſe cannot render her debt or due to her husband, ibid.c.19. Illi, cuius vxor ſtuprata cum viri fratre, licita coniugia non negentur : lawfull marriage is not to be denied to him, whoſe wiſe committed adulterie with his brother.

Ibid.c.24. Si quis cum nouerca ; If any man hath lien with his mother in law, vir eius poteſt aliam accipere, the man may take another, if he cannot containe.

Cauſ.33.qu.1 c.1. Licet mulieri alteri nubere, ob frigiditatem viri : The woman may marrie another for the weakneſſe of her husband. C.2 Videtur mulierem ſecundas nuptias contrahere poſſe : It ſeemeth that the woman may marrie againe, ſpeaking of the ſame caſe. C.33.qu.2.c.9. Potius vxore viuente aliam ducat, quàm humanum ſanguinem fundat : Let a man rather marrie another wife, the firſt yet liuing, then ſhed mans blood.

Thus it is euident, how by their owne law and Canons, mariage is lawfull after diuorce: yea, wee ſee that ſome of their Popes haue granted ſecond mariage vpon diuorce, for other cauſes then adulterie, wherein, as they preſumed, exceeding the rule limited in the Goſpell, ſo now they offend in abridging the libertie granted.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE DEgrees in mariage prohibited.

First, of the ſupputation of degrees. Secondly, whether the degrees forbidden, Leuit. 18. may be diſpenſed with. Thirdly, whether any other degrees may by humane law be prohibited beſide thoſe.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE SVPPVtation and account of degrees.

THe degrees are either of conſanguinitie, which is of diuers perſons comming of the ſame ſtocke and blood: or of affinitie, which ariſeth of mariage, as when the kinſmen of either partie that is married, are by mariage allied to the other, though not of his blood, as Laban the brother of Rebecca was allied by mariage, as alſo by blood vnto Iſaac, though not ſo neerely.

In both theſe kindes of kinred there is a right line both vpward and aſcending: as in conſanguinitie, the Father or Mother, Grandfather, Grandmother, and ſo forth: in affinitie, the father in law, and mother in law, the ſtepfather, or ſtepmother: as alſo deſcending, as the ſonne, the ſonnes ſonne, the ſonne in law, or daughter in law, and their ſonnes and daughters. There is alſo a collaterall line in conſanguinitie, as brother and ſiſter, brother and ſiſters children, vncle or aunt: in affinitie, the brothers wife, ſiſters husband, the vncles wife, or aunts husband. Now our aduerſaries ſet downe theſe rules to know the degrees by.

The Papiſts.

85.Error. 1. IN the right line there are ſo many degrees as perſons, except the firſt, from the which we begin the account: as in this example, Iacob is in the ſecond degree from Abraham. The firſt is excepted, becauſe it is no degree of diſtance, but the beginning of the diſtance of the reſt: *Bellarm.cap.*26.

Abraham.
Iſaac.1. Iacob.2.

Anſw. We ſee no reaſon, why the firſt ſhould be left out: for, 1. looke how many generations, ſo many degrees: but euery perſon is a generation. 2. And this is the manner of account in Scripture: as Matt. 1. there are fourteene generations reckoned from Abraham, whereof Abraham maketh one, Iude 14. Enoch the ſeuenth from Adam, Adam being the firſt himſelfe in that number. Thus the Scripture numbreth incluſiue, not excluſiue, incluſiuely comprehending alſo the number, from whom the account beginneth. And thus Abraham muſt bee counted the firſt degree, and Iacob, not in the ſecond, but the third from him. The vſe of Scripture for this matter will perſwade more, then any reaſon the Ieſuite can bring. And we ſee that in Scripture not the ſpace betweene the perſons, but the perſons themſelues are counted the degrees.

Thus the Ciuill law accounteth: Cod.lib.6.tit.16.leg.2. Dioclet. Frater auia: The grandmothers brother is in the fourth degree, from the grandchildren. Filius fratris auia: The ſonne of the grandmothers brother, eſt quinto gradu conſtitutus, is ſet in the fifth degree: as by this example it may bee made plaine: Abraham is grandfather to Iacob: Iacob then is in the fourth degree from Haran Abrahams brother, and in the fifth from Lot Harans ſonne: ſo by this account of the Ciuill law, euery perſon ſtandeth for a degree: Iacob 1. Iſaac 2. Abraham 3. Haran 4. Lot 5.

This manner of account is allowed alſo by the Canon law: Cauſ.35.qu.3.c.2. Calixtus: Eos conſanguineos dicimus, quos diuina & imperatorum leges conſanguineos dicunt, &c. We call thoſe kinſmen, or of one blood and conſanguinitie, whom the diuine lawes, and the lawes of the Emperors doe ſo call.

Ibid.qu.5.c.2. Alexander. Quia hæreditates nequeunt deferri, &c. Becauſe inheritances cannot be conueied but from one perſon to another, the ſecular Emperour hath prouided, in ſingulis perſonis ſingulos præſidere gradus, that in euery perſon there ſhould be a degree: but becauſe mariage cannot be without two perſons, therefore the ſacred Canons haue appointed two perſons in euery degree, &c. but it is manifeſt that both theſe kindes of computations, are of one ſentence, and come both to the ſame effect.

Ibid.c.6.declarat.arbor.conſanguinitat. In computatione aſcendentium, deſcendentium concordat vtrunque ius, &c. In the computation of thoſe that aſcend and deſcend both lawes doe accord: for one perſon added to another maketh a degree, &c. Thus we ſee that the computation of the Ciuill law is confirmed by their owne Canons.

The Papiſts.

86.Error. 2. IN the collaterall line, if the parties be equally diſtant from the roote or ſtocke of the generation, looke how many degrees diſtant they are from the ſtock, ſo is the diſtance betweene themſelues:

ſelues: Iacob and Rachel are in the ſecond degree, becauſe each of them is remoued from Bathuel, in the ſecond degree: neither haue they any relation one to the other, but as they are ioyned in the ſtocke, Bellarm.cap.26.

Bathuel.
Rebecca 1.	Laban 1.
Iacob 2.	Rachel 2.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. NEither doe we allow this rule: but rather follow the account of the Ciuill law; which in the collaterall line maketh ſo many degrees as perſons, excepting the ſtocke, which is not to be counted in collaterall degrees, becauſe wee begin not to number there. Wherefore according to the rule aforeſaid, how many generations, ſo many degrees. According then to the account of the Ciuill law, which we here follow, Iacob and Rachel are not in the ſecond, but the fourth degree each from other: Rachel, 1. Laban, 2. Rebecca, 3. Iacob, 4. For in collaterall degrees, we count not the diſtance from the roote or ſtocke, but the mutuall diſtance from themſelues.

2. And by this rule one brother ſhould be as neere another, as they are both to their father: the which nature it ſelfe confuteth: ſeeing there is greater loue and affection, and ſo a neerer coniunction betweene the father and the ſonne, than betweene brethren.

3. By this reaſon alſo, if Coſin germanes be but in the ſecond degree, there ſhould be no degree beyond the ſecond forbidden, Leuit.18. for there is no degree forbidden beyond this: neither is this by name, and directly forbidden.

Bellarm. Firſt, à fratre ad fratrem non tranſitur per patrem,&c. We doe not paſſe from brother to brother by the father: for one brother proceedeth not from another, either mediatly or immediatly: One brother hath no coniunction with another, but conſidered in the father; and therefore from him we muſt ſeeke for the diſtance of brethren. Secondly, in the ſame equall diſtance, there may be notwithſtanding a greater coniunction, as betweene the father and the ſonne, the coniunction is greater, than betweene brethren, yet the diſtance is alike.

Contra. Firſt, in the 1. collaterall line, the computation doth not follow the carnall proceſſion or generation, as in the right line: and therefore, though one brother proceede not in generation from another, yet the computation may proceede from one to the other. 2. And he reaſoneth abſurdly; brethren are conioyned in the father, therefore from him the diſtance muſt bee deriued: for coniunction and diſtance are two diuers things: and the contrary rather is inferred, that becauſe their coniunction is conſidered in the father, the diſtance alſo and diſiunction cannot bee taken from thence. 3. And reaſon it ſelfe ſheweth, that from one brother we cannot account to another, but paſſing by the father in computation.

Secondly, it cannot be that in an equall diſtance, there ſhould be an vnequall coniunction: for the neereneſſe and farneſſe of the blood, maketh the greater or leſſe coniunction: wherefore if brethren be as neere each the other in blood as to the father, the coniunction and affection ſhould be as great: like as in a tree, the neerer the roote the more ſappe; ſo in conſanguinitie, the neerer the roote, the more affection.

The Ciuill law in the collaterall line maketh as many degrees as perſons, the ſtocke onely excepted: Cod.lib.5.tit.57.leg.3.Decius: Soror in ſecundo gradu,&c. The ſiſter in the ſecond degree, the brothers ſonne in the third. Leg.7. Patruus & matertera: The vncle and aunt in the third degree. Tit.58.leg.5.Diocletian.Fratres vterini,&c. Whole brothers are in the ſecond degree. Leg.6. Annunculus: The vncle by marriage in the third degree. The Doway gloſſiſts then are deceiued, who make the vncle or aunt onely in the ſecond degree: Numb.26.39. annot in margin. Conſobrinus, the coſin germane is in the fourth. In all theſe examples, there are ſo many degrees as perſons, beſide the ſtock. This kind of computation hath alſo the approbation of the Canons: Cauſ.35.qu.5.c.2. Alexander.2. Vtraque computatio vno fine concluditur,&c. Both the computations haue the ſame end: for two degrees legall, make but one degree canonicall: as brothers that are by the ſecular lawes in the ſecond degree, are by the Canons in the firſt.

Ibid.qu.5.c.6.declarat.arbor.conſanguinitat. Theſe two rules of the Ciuill computation in the collaterall line are commended: firſt, Quoto gradu quis diſtat a ſtipite, in linea æquali toto duplicato diſtant inter ſe,&c. In what degree any are diſtant from the ſtocke, double ſo much are they diſtant from themſelues: as Iacob and Rachel are in the ſecond degree from the ſtocke (which is not counted for a degree in the collaterall line) and therefore they are diſtant each from the other in the fourth degree. Secondly, another rule is this, in the equall line of collaterals, whether the line be, paris numeri, vel diſparis: Of euen number or odde, the degree is alwaies euen. As the firſt line is odde, the ſecond euen, &c. yet Rebecca and Laban being in the firſt line from Bathuel, are in the ſecond degree, which is an euen number. It is otherwiſe in the Canonicall computation: for in an odde line, they haue an odde degree: as in the firſt line, where Rebecca and Laban ſtand, they haue the firſt degree: yet the firſt computation is commended in theſe words, Bene dicitur ſecundum leges,&c. It is well ſaid according to the lawes, &c.

I will here laſtly adde the teſtimonie of S. Ambroſe, that it may appeare how degrees were accounted in his time: Ad paternum patrueles fratres ſibi quarto gradu ſociantur,&c. Brothers children are ioyned in the fourth degree: hic autem gradus tertius eſt: but this degree is the third, namely, betweene the vncle and his niece.

The

87.Error. 3. THeir third rule is this: In collaterall degrees vnequall, that is, when both are not alike diſtant from the ſtocke, they ſhall differ in that degree, in the which the further of them is remoued from the ſtocke: as in this example, Ioſeph is diſtant foure degrees from the ſtocke, and as many from Nachor, likewiſe from Bathuel and Laban: Bellarm. ibid.

Iſaac 2.	Bathuel 2.
Iacob 3.	Laban 3.
Ioſeph 4.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. NEither is this rule perfect: for by this reaſon, he that is indeed a degree further off, ſhall be in the ſame degree: as Ioſeph ſhall be as neere to Laban as hee is to Nachor, who is three degrees from Laban: but this is againſt common ſenſe, that Ioſeph ſhould be as neere the furtheſt off, as to him that is neerer by three degrees.

Bellarmine anſwereth: The reaſon is, becauſe the perſons that are of the one ſide, Non habent habitudinem ad eos, qui ſunt in altero, niſi ratione ſtipitis: Haue no relation or diſpoſition to the perſons on the other ſide, but in reſpect of the ſtocke wherein they are all ioyned. And therefore looke how farre Ioſeph is diſtant from the ſtocke, ſo farre he is from each of the other ſide.

Contra. If this rule hold in Ioſeph, who is the fourth degree from the ſtocke, why ſhall it not hold in Abraham of the ſame ſide, who is in the firſt degree from the ſtocke, that as Ioſeph is in the fourth degree from Nachor, Bathuel, Laban, becauſe hee is in the fourth degree from Thare, ſo Abraham ſhould be in the firſt degree from Nachor, Bathuel, Laban, becauſe hee is ſo from Thare? But this is not ſo: for you ſay Abraham is but one degree from Nachor, two from Bathuel, three from Laban.

Bellarmine ſaith the reaſon is this; becauſe that if Abraham ſhould be no further diſtant from the collaterall perſons, than he is from the ſtocke, as but one degree from Laban, becauſe he is but one degree from Thare, it would follow, that Laban ſhould be neerer to Abraham, than to the ſtocke, from the which he is remoued three degrees, which is impoſſible.

Contra. 1. Yet by the Ieſuites reaſon alleaged before for Ioſephs account, it muſt be ſo for Abraham: becauſe the collaterall perſons haue no relation or diſpoſition together, but as they meete and are vnited to the ſtocke: why ſhould not then Abrahams account be directed by his diſtance from the ſtocke, as Ioſephs is?

2. As this way there falleth out an impoſſibilitie for Abraham, that Laban ſhould be neerer him then the ſtocke: ſo on the other ſide for Ioſeph, that Laban ſhould be as neere him, as Nachor is, who is three degrees from Laban, and muſt needs be ſo much neerer Ioſeph. This account therefore and meaſuring of degrees according to their blind Canons, is found to be moſt doubtfull and vncertaine: as it may further appeare thus: The Canon law ſaith, Perſona addita perſonæ vſque ad lineam æqualitatis non creſcit gradus: That one perſon being added to another, till the line be equall, the degree is not encreaſed; as in the former example, Laban is added to Bathuel, yet both in the ſame degree from Ioſeph: Cauſ. 35. qu. 5. c. 6. declarat. arbor. conſanguinitat.

Contra. 1. It is abſurd and vnreaſonable that they ſhould be in the ſame degree of conſanguinitie, and that the addition of a perſon or generation ſhould not make a degree: for what elſe is a degree of conſanguinitie, but a generation? ſo that ſo many generations as there are, ſo many degrees there ſhould be.

2. In the degrees of affinitie the rule holdeth well: Perſona addita perſonæ per carnis copulam non mutat gradum ſed genus: One perſon comming or being added to another by carnall copulation, the degree is not changed but the kinde: Ibid. declarat. arbor. affinitat. As the brothers wife, marrying another husband, the ſecond husband is in the ſame degree of affinitie with the brothers wife, though in another kinde: but it is otherwiſe in the line of conſanguinitie.

3. If this were a good rule, that when two differ vnequally from the ſtocke, one two degrees, another foure, they ſhall differ one from another in that degree, which is fartheſt off, that is the fourth: then it would follow very well, they being diſtant in the ſame degree one from another, that if I can not marrie thy daughter, then thou canſt not marrie mine, and ſo alſo affirmatiuely: but this is denied by their Canon: For he that is in the third degree may contract with his daughter that is in the fourth: ſed non è conuerſo, but not contrariwiſe: declarat. arbor. affinit. But if they were in the ſame degree of diſtance, according to their rule one from the other, why ſhould it not follow both affirmatiuely, and negatiuely.

4. Celeſtinus the 3. decreeth contrarie to this rule: Decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 14. c. 3. That whereas there was a certaine indulgence or libertie to marrie in the ſixth degree: and ſo conſequently, he that was in the ſixth degree on the one ſide, might marrie into the ſecond or third degree on the other: Quod videtur poſſe fieri ſecundum regulam, &c. Which it ſeemeth (ſaith Celeſtinus) might be done according to the rule: which is, that how many degrees one is diſtant from the ſtocke, he is diſtant from euery one deſcending frō the ſtock on the other line. And ſo one in the ſixth degree, & another in the ſecond or third in another line, differ from themſelues in the ſixth degree, and conſequently by this indulgence might marrie: yet Celeſtinus determineth, that they muſt not be vnderſtood to bee in the ſixth degree, vnleſſe both of them were diſtant from the ſtocke in the ſixth degree: and ſo he apparantly croſſeth the Canon, by the which they are ſaid to differ in the ſixth degree, if one of them only be remoued from the ſtocke in that degree. Wherefore in collaterals we preferre the Ciuill account of degrees: that is, ſo many perſons, the ſtocke of the kinred excepted, ſo many degrees. Theſe then are the rules for the degrees of mariage.

The rules for the degrees of Conſanguinitie.

1. IN the right line aſcending and deſcending all degrees are forbidden; as aſcending, the father, mother, Grandfather, Grandmother, Leuit.18.7. Deſcending; the ſonne or daughter, the ſonnes daughter, or daughters daughter, Leuit.18.10. and ſo of the reſt.

2. In the collaterall line of conſanguinitie the prohibition reacheth expreſly to the third degree: as it is not lawfull to marrie the Vncle or Aunt, Leuit.18.12. and by way of conſequence to the fourth degree; as to the Vncle or Aunts ſonne or daughter.

3. The ſame degrees are forbidden by way of Analogie, both to the man and woman: as it is not lawfull for the Nephew to marrie the Aunt, Leuit.18.14. So by the ſame reaſon, not for the Niece to marrie her Vncle. And theſe are the rules for the limitation of the degrees of conſanguinitie: The directions alſo for the computation are theſe.

4. In the right line there are ſo many degrees as perſons: as the Ciuill law ſaith: Generata perſona ſemper adijcit gradum: The generation of euery perſon maketh a degree: as before I haue ſhewed, Err.85.

5. In the collaterall line equall, or vnequall, there are ſo many degrees as perſons, not counting the ſtocke: See before Err.86.87.

Of the degrees of Affinitie.

FIrſt of the Computation of the degrees; then of the limitation: the rules for the Computation are theſe:

1. The firſt rule of the Canon law is this: Inter virum & mulierem non contrahitur affinitas, ſed ipſi ſunt affinitatis cauſa: Affinitie is not betweene the man and the woman, but they are the cauſe of affinitie: for affinitie is defined Perſonarum proximitas ex coitu proueniens: The neereneſſe of perſons proceeding of carnall coniunction.

2. Hereupon it followeth, that the neereſt affinitie is in the ſecond or third degree: for if the man and wife be counted as one degree, the firſt affinitie is in the ſecond; if they be reckoned for two, the firſt affinitie is in the third, as the wiues or huſbands, father, brother, daughter, &c.

3. Quoto gradu quis tibi conſanguineus, toto mulier affinis: In what degree thy kinſman is of conſanguinitie, in the ſame degree of affinitie is his wife. The law giueth this reaſon, becauſe they are one fleſh: Cauſ.35.qu.5.c.3. And this rule ſeemeth to be grounded vpon the Scripture: Leuit.18.14. Thou ſhalt not vncouer the ſhame of thy fathers brother, thou ſhalt not goe into his wife, for ſhe is thy aunt. Here the vncles wife is called the aunt, as being in the ſame degree of kinred: hee of conſanguinitie, ſhe of affinitie. By this rule the brother being in the ſecond degree of conſanguinitie, his wife ſhall bee in the ſecond degree of affinitie. I am not ignorant that ſome doe account alwaies the affinitie in a degree further then the conſanguinitie by the which it commeth in; as they place the vncles wife in the fourth degree of affinitie, the vncle being in the third of conſanguinitie, Iun. Annot. in 18. Leuit. And this account I followed in the other edition: the matter is not great, whether way we make our computation: but the firſt ſeemeth to me to be more probable, and according to the rule of the Ciuill law: Generata perſona adijcit gradum, &c. The generation of a perſon maketh a degree: where then there is no generation, but a copulation only or coniunction, there is no new degree.

4. Perſona addita perſonæ per carnis copulam mutat genus, non gradum: One perſon comming to another by carnall copulation, changeth not the degree, but the kinde of affinitie: as the brothers wife is of affinitie in the ſecond degree and firſt kinde: if ſhe marrie a ſecond husband, he is of affinitie in the ſame degree, but in the ſecond kinde: if he marrie another wife, ſhe is of affinitie in the ſecond degree ſtill, but in the third kind.

5. By this rule of the Canon law may another be collected: Perſona addita perſonæ per generationem, mutat gradum, ſed non genus, &c. A perſon added to a perſon by generation, doth change the degree of affinitie, not the kinde. As wee haue an example, Leuitic.18.17. The wiues daughter is in the ſecond degree of affinitie to the husband and the firſt kinde: her daughters daughter is in the third degree and firſt kinde. And theſe are the rules of the computation of the degrees of affinitie.

The rules for the limitation of the degrees of Affinitie.

1. INter affines aſcendentes, deſcendentes, prohibitio extenditur in infinitum: In aſcending or deſcending, affinitie is prohibited infinitely, that is, without any limitation: as Leuit.18.17. It is not lawfull to marrie the wiues daughter, nor daughters daughter, and ſo downward: and likewiſe aſcending, not the wiues father, or fathers father, &c.

2. Affinitatis perpetuum eſt impedimentum, quod durat, mortua perſona, qua mediante contrahitur: Affinitie is a perpetuall impediment, and it holdeth, though the perſon be dead, by whom it was contracted: Cauſ.35.qu.10.c.2. As, though the wife bee dead, yet her kinred is of affinitie ſtill with her husband remaining aliue.

3. Affinitas non habet prohibitionem niſi in primo genere: Affinitie is not forbidden, but in the firſt kinde: declar. arbor. affinit. Affinitie in the firſt kinde continueth, till it be changed, by a new coniunction in mariage: as the brothers wife is of affinitie in the firſt kinde, but if ſhe marrie againe, her ſecond husband is of affinitie in the ſecond kinde, and with him mariage is not prohibited.

4. In collaterall affinitie mariage is inhibited till the third degree, counting the man and wife for one, or to the fourth, making them two degrees, Leuit. 18.14. the Vncles wife is of affinitie in the third degree, the vncle being in the ſame degree of conſanguinitie.

5. Inter conſanguineos viri & conſanguineos vxoris, nulla affinitas: Betweene the kinred of blood on the mans ſide, and the kinred of blood on the womans ſide there is no affinitie? and therefore two brothers may marrie with two ſiſters; the father and the ſonne, with the mother and the daughter.

6. In conſanguinitie it followeth, the father is my kinſman, therefore his ſonne, but not in affinitie: for the father marrying my ſiſter, and hauing a ſonne by her, hee is of conſanguinitie, but not of affinitie vnto me; if he haue a ſonne by another wife, though the father be my kinſman in affinitie by his firſt mariage, yet the ſonne is neither of affinitie nor conſanguinitie.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER ANY OF the degrees prohibited in the law may be diſpenſed withall.

The Papiſts.

88. Error.

THey ſay not that the Pope may diſpenſe with all, but with ſome of them, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.24. can.3. As they tooke vpon them to diſpenſe with King Henry the 8. mariage with his brothers wife: their reaſon is, becauſe ſome of thoſe prohibitions were only iudiciall and poſitiue conſtitutions, not grounded vpon the law of nature.

*Argum.*1. If it be the law of Nature not to marrie within thoſe degrees, it ſhould haue been in force before the law was made: but ſo was it not: for Abraham married his brothers daughter, and Iacob two ſiſters, Bellarm. cap.27.

*Anſw.*1. As Auguſtine ſaith of the mariage and copulation of Adams children, brothers and ſiſters together: Factum eſt compellente neceſſitate: It was for neceſſitie ſake because there were then no more women: ſo alſo may it be in ſome ſort true of thoſe Patriarkes, that hauing a neceſſitie to marrie amongſt their owne kinred, and not with the Gentiles; there was no choice to be had of women of their owne kinred further off in degree.

2. Although this example of theirs, both in marrying many wiues and ſo neere of kinne, cannot bee altogether excuſed or iuſtified in them: yet becauſe the law of nature was not yet ſo cleerely knowne, as afterward by the giuing of the law, which is nothing elſe but an expoſition of the law of nature; the offence was not ſo great in them, but might better be tollerated; becauſe, as Auguſtine ſaith, It was neither contra morem illorum temporum, nec contra præceptum: neither againſt the cuſtome of thoſe times, nor againſt any flat precept. And to conclude, although thoſe holy men had their imperfections, yet wee muſt not iudge them in theſe things according to the euill and corrupt diſpoſition of men in theſe daies, which might vſe this great libertie in mariage, better then many vſe lawfull mariage now: as Auguſtine ſaith, Caſtius habebant plures, quàm nunc vnam: They vſed many wiues more chaſtly, then many now vſe one, De bon. coniug. cap.13.

Bellarmine replieth: Firſt, he denieth that Iacobs mariage and the reſt, were facta diſpenſante Deo, were diſpenſed with of God: for it appeareth, Geneſ.28. 2. that it was the cuſtome of the place, to giue two ſiſters to one man: neither would Iacob haue ſo eaſily 3. yeelded to it, if it had been an vnwonted thing: 4. and beſide there was no neceſſitie in it, that they ſhould marrie their kinſwomen.

Secondly, if they had ſinned in theſe mariages, 1. then ſhould they haue continued all their life in ſinne, which the ſeruants of God doe not: 2. and by this meanes their children ſhould haue been baſtards, being borne in vnlawfull Matrimonie: Bellarm. c.27. reſponſ. ad probat. 2.

Contra. Firſt, Bellarmine is 1. contrarie to himſelfe in denying that the mariages of the Patriarkes were diſpenſed with: for he affirmed before, c.11. propoſ.4. Diſpenſatio circa polygamiam eſt indicata patribus, &c. The diſpenſation concerning polygamie, or multitude of wiues, was declared to the Fathers by God, &c. Their Canons affirme the ſame, Decret. Gregor. lib.4. tit.19. c.4. Nulli licuit ſimul plures vxores habere, niſi cui fuit diuina reuelatione conceſſum, &c. It was lawfull for none to haue many wiues at once, but to whom it was granted by diuine reuelation, &c. that as Iacob from lying, the Iſraelites from theft, Sampſon from murther; ſo they are excuſed from adulterie: and as in taking many wiues, ſo alſo in marrying in their neere kinred, it was by the ſame toleration permitted, though not by diſpenſation authorized or warranted,

2. Geneſ.29. There 1. appeareth no ſuch cuſtome, to giue two ſiſters to one man, but the manner was not to marrie the younger before the elder, v.26. 2. Though there had beene ſuch a cuſtome, it was in an idolatrous Country, and therefore could not make it lawfull. Gen.29.26.

3. Iacob 1. deſired but one, and had a purpoſe onely to marrie Rachel; but being deceiued, he was driuen to this ſtrait, that hee muſt either take both, or elſe be depriued of her whom hee chiefly loued. 2. Iacobs affection herein is no excuſe of his infirmitie. 3. And the vnlawfulneſſe of ſuch marriage, there being yet no poſitiue law, was not ſo fully reuealed vnto them. 4. Wherefore that which Iacob might doe either of infirmitie, or ignorance, maketh not the thing lawfull.

4. Their neceſſitie was ſuch, that they muſt either marrie their kinſwomen, or elſe the daughters of Canaan, which was vnlawfull and forbidden, Geneſ.28.6. Gen.28.6.

Secondly, 1. Gods ſeruants doe not continue in any ſinne which they know, without repentance; but a ſinne of ignorance or infirmitie may remaine in them: for how ſhould they correct that which they knew not: it was a weakneſſe in Abraham to cauſe Sara to diſſemble, as though ſhee were not his wife; yet did not Abraham know it, but continued in it; for he committed the ſame error twice: and Iſaac his ſonne by his example did the like. 2. Neither can it bee denied, but that there was baſtardie in ſome of their ſeed: ſuch were the two ſonnes of Thamar which ſhee had by Iudah her father in law: But we denie, that though thoſe marriages in themſelues were vnlawfull, that therefore all their ſeed was illegitimate; both 1. becauſe the poſitiue law was not yet giuen, which iudgeth of baſtardie: 2. And beſide, they married not for luſt, but for procreation and propagation of the Church: 3. As alſo the vnlawfulneſſe of theſe marriages was tolerated in reſpect of the neceſſitie and condition of thoſe times. 4. And by lawfull marriage ſucceeding, in continuance of time, the firſt ſtaine and blot was extinct and worne out.

*Argum.*2. Deut.25.5. The law giueth this libertie, that if a brother die without iſſue, his brother ſhould take his wife, and raiſe vp ſeed to his brother. This law commandeth nothing againſt nature, becauſe God is the author of nature, who made this law, and doth nothing againſt nature: therefore that is no naturall law, Leuit.18. that a man ſhould not marrie his brothers wife; neither is it ſimply euill ſo to doe, for then God would not haue commanded the contrarie: but it is only a iudiciall law, afterward abrogate by Chriſt: *Bellar.cap.*27. Deut.25.5.

Anſwere. 1. That the law, Leuiticus 18. was grounded vpon nature, and endured euen after Chriſts comming, it appeareth, in that Iohn Baptiſt (Chriſt being then come, and entred into his office) reprooued Herod for marrying his brothers wife. 2. That libertie graunted, Deuteron.25. is an exception from the other law, which ſerued onely for thoſe times, for the continuance of carnall kindred, and maintenance of their tribes and families, which were to hold till the comming of the Meſſia: but now the cauſe of that exception ceaſing, the libertie alſo is taken away. 3. Neither doth it follow, that if the other law, Leuiticus 18.16. bee grounded vpon nature, that this exception ſhould be againſt nature: for not ſimply the marrying of the brothers wife, but the vncleane affection in vncouering the brothers ſhame by ſo doing, maketh it vnnaturall, as it is in the law expreſſed: but in marrying the brothers wife in this caſe onely, to raiſe vp ſeede to him, and onely at that time during the ſtate of that people, was not to vncouer but to recouer his ſhame, and raiſe vp his name and honour in Iſrael, wherefore it was not vnnaturall. 4. God is aboue nature, and aboue the law: and who may better expound the law than the law-giuer: and by the ſame right might the Lord in this caſe onely graunt libertie to marrie the brothers wife, notwithſtanding the other generall law, as Phinehes did ſlay the adulterer and adultereſſe, and Samuel the King of Amaleck, notwithſtanding the law, Thou ſhalt not kill. Neither doth it follow, that becauſe God did in that one caſe diſpenſe with his law: Ergo, man hath authoritie to doe the ſame. 5. Laſtly, if it bee anſwered, that in this exception, Deut.25.5. the next kinſman who might marrie the widowe by law, not the brother, is to be vnderſtoode: for neither doth the word in that place ſignifie a brother properly: and we ſee the practiſe accordingly, Ruth.4. where not the brother but the kinſman performeth this dutie. This anſwere might ſuffice to remoue the Ieſuites force: but wee rather receiue the former.

Bellarmine replyeth: Firſt, this exception ſheweth, that to marrie the brothers wife, is not ſimply euill of it ſelfe, for then it could not bee made good and lawfull by any circumſtance. Secondly, hee denieth it to bee an exception; for not God, that knoweth all things, doth vſe to make exceptions after a law made, but men, when they ſee the law cannot otherwiſe bee kept. Thirdly, neither is it a diſpenſation, for a diſpenſation is no lawe, but onely a qualifying of the lawe in ſome particular caſe. Fourthly, this kinde of marriage is againſt the law of nature, no otherwiſe than killing is, which by ſome circumſtance may be made lawfull, and ſo may the other. *Bellar.c.*27.

Contra. Firſt, to marrie the brothers wife of a fleſhly minde, and carnall luſt, is ſimply euill, and cannot be made lawfull by any circumſtance: but to marrie her according to the law, onely to raiſe vp ſeed to the brother, for the continuance of the tribes and families, which were then Gods people, was not euill, not proceeding of any ſuch carnall deſire to the brothers wife, but of obedience to the law: like as to kill a man in malice is ſimply euill, and is neuer made lawfull, yet Phinehes killing not in malice, but in the zeale of Gods glory, was commended.

Secondly, as man may make exceptions againſt mans law, ſo to God only it belongeth to take exception againſt his owne law: for who dare preſume to adde any thing to Gods law, but himſelfe? neither doth God giue exceptions againſt his law for want of foreſight, but for the profite and vtilitie of men, as this exception was for the commoditie of the Iewes.

Thirdly, neither was this a perpetuall law, but onely for that nation and for that time, and therefore hath the right nature of a diſpenſation.

Fourthly, 1. As killing with a malitious minde and of priuate reuenge, is againſt nature, and cannot bee made lawfull; ſo is the marrying of the brothers wife with an vncleane affection: but to kill to the glory of God, is diſpenſed with in the word: ſo is this marriage done onely in obedience to the law, and vtilitie of the people of God. 2. Againe, as the lawfull kinde of killing (as by publike authoritie) is allowed by the ſame law-giuer; ſo alſo the caſes and exceptions that allow the marriage of the brothers wife, muſt be warranted by Gods word. 3. Wherefore Bellarm. granting that this kind of marriage is as much againſt nature as killing is, doth confeſſe as much as wee doe deſire: neither hath hee gained any thing but loſt; ſeeing that as no man hath power to diſpenſe with killing but God, ſo neither is this marriage lawfull, but in caſes limited and appointed by God: ſo that neither the Pope nor any other mortall man hath power to diſpenſe in this caſe.

The Doway Collegials ſet downe this poſition, that all marriages in the right line, and in collaterall the firſt degree, as betweene the brother and ſiſter are onely forbidden by the law of nature; all other degrees depend on poſitiue lawes, which haue beene, and may be altered: their reaſons are theſe, and to like effect.

1 By the law of Moſes, the brother was to marrie the brothers wife that died without iſſue.

2 Such marriages were permitted among the Gentiles; who followed the law of nature, which was knowne vnto them by the diſcourſe of reaſon, as it may appeare by Laban, who followed the cuſtome of the place.

Leuit. 18.18.

3 The law forbiddeth one to marrie a woman and her ſiſter, while ſhe liued, not prohibiting ſuch marriage after his wife were dead.

4 The tranſgreſſion in the right line, and firſt collaterall degree, was puniſhed with death, not the other, which ſheweth, that the former were prohibited by the law of nature, not the other.

5 Abraham married his brothers daughter, Iacob his two ſiſters, two ſonnes of Iudah the ſame woman, Amram his fathers ſiſter, and yet all theſe were bleſſed of God: which ſheweth, that all theſe degrees were not forbidden by the law of nature: to this effect theſe Colledge men of Doway.

Lib. de monogamia.

Contra. 1. To this argument ſee the anſwere before, reſponſ. ad argum. 2. to the which I will adioyne Tertullians reaſons of that law, which are theſe three. 1. Quia vetus illa benedictio decurrere habebat, &c. Becauſe that olde benediction was yet to take place, encreaſe and multiply, &c. 2. Quoniam patrum delicta a filijs exigebantur, &c. The fathers ſinnes were required of their children. 3. Quoniam ſteriles ignominioſi habebantur, The barren were counted ignominious, and therefore leaſt they which died without iſſue might be thought to bee accurſed: Vicaria & quaſi poſthuma ſoboles illis ex ſuo genere ſupparabatur, &c. A poſteritie in their ſtead, and after their death out of their kinred was prepared for them, &c. and ſo hee concludeth, Quod ceſſauit valere, ceſſante ratione, non poteſt alij argumentationem accommodare, &c. That which is now ceaſed to be in force, the reaſon thereof ceaſing, cannot be an argument to ſerue anothers turne, &c. ſo then theſe particular reaſons, agreeable to the law of nature, for the propagation of that nation, doe not ouerthrow the generall law, but that, this caſe excepted, diſpenſed by the author of nature, the rule ſhould hold ſtill for the vnlawfulneſſe of ſuch marriages euen by the law of nature.

2 The Gentiles had their reaſon darkned and obſcured, and vnderſtoode not aright the lawe of nature, but did many things contrarie to it: neither doth it appeare, that Labans Countrey had ſuch a cuſtome of marrying two ſiſters, but that the younger ſhould not marrie before the elder.

3. 1. The meaning of that place is not, Thou ſhalt not take a woman and her ſiſter, but not one woman to another, for ſo is that phraſe taken, Ezech. 1. 9 the wings were ioyned, iſhah el achothah, the woman to her ſiſter, that is one to another, in the verie ſame phraſe, which is vſed here: 2 For otherwiſe, there ſhould bee an apparant contradiction, betweene this law, and that other verſ. 16. which maketh it vnlawfull to marrie the brothers wife, and ſo by the ſame analogie, the wiues brother or ſiſter. 3. And yet allowing the other ſenſe, Thou ſhalt not take a woman and her ſiſter to vexe her during her life: It followeth not, that one may take his wiues ſiſter after her death: but it ſheweth that it is more vnlawfull to doe it, while the wife liueth with a minde to vexe her: for ſuch an one ſinneth both wayes, in taking his wiues ſiſter, and that in her life time, with an intent to vexe her: and to this purpoſe the ordinarie gloſſe, as though there be not emulation betweene thoſe, that are not ſiſters: This therefore is ſaid, ne hoc animo fiat, vt in zelum ſororis ſoror ſuperducatur, Leaſt it ſhould be done of purpoſe with this minde, that a ſiſter bee brought in to vexe her ſiſter, &c. ſo one reaſon is vnderſtood of the vnlawfulneſſe of this marriage, according to the generall law before preſcribed, another is expreſſed, of the vexing of one another.

4. 1. Neither doth the argument follow, the tranſgreſſions of other prohibited degrees are not puniſhed by death, as the other two are, therefore they are not againſt the lawe of nature: for one ſinne may bee more againſt nature then another, and ſo worthie of greater puniſhment: as euerie tranſgreſſion of the morall law, which is grounded vpon the law of nature, is not ſentenced by death.

2. Euen the tranſgreſſions in other collaterall degrees beſide the firſt, are puniſhed by death: as it appeareth by the phraſe, of bearing their iniquitie, which is vnderſtood of the puniſhment of death, as v.17. he that taketh his ſiſter to wife, ſhall be cut off, he ſhall beare his iniquitie: ſo hee, that marrieth his Aunt, his father or mothers ſiſter, ſhall beare his iniquitie, v.19. which phraſe often in Scripture is taken for the puniſhment by loſſe of life, as Leuit.24.15. Numb.9.13. where to be cut off, and to beare his iniquitie, are ioyned together. And againe, c.18.29. it is ſaid, Whoſoeuer ſhall commit any of theſe abominations, &c. ſhall be cut off from his people, which Lyranus thus expoundeth, per iudicium humanum ſi fuerit conuictus, per iudicium diuinum, ſi euaſerit humanum: By the iudgement of man, if he be conuict, by the diuine iudgement, if he eſcape the humane, &c. Leuit.24.15. Numb.9.13. Leuit.18.29.

5 See this argument anſwered before, reſponſ ad argum.1.

The Proteſtants.

WE affirme, that it is vtterly vnlawfull for any Chriſtian to marrie within the degrees prohibited: neither can any humane power diſpenſe with ſuch marriages: but the equitie of that law being grounded vpon nature, is in force for euer. Wherefore the Pope of Rome ſheweth himſelfe plainly to be Antichriſt, in diſpenſing againſt the law of God.

Argum.1. Leuit.18.24. The reaſon of that law is giuen concerning the forbidden degrees: They ſhould not defile themſelues in any one of thoſe things, becauſe the Gentiles defiled themſelues thereby, and were caſt out before them for it. Wherefore it is a naturall and perpetuall law, otherwiſe the Gentiles had not beene bound vnto it. Leuit.18.24.

Bellarm. anſwereth: Firſt, the Gentiles were puniſhed for other greater ſinnes, as idolatrie, adulterie, mentioned before; v.21.22. and not onely for theſe marriages. Secondly, the Gentiles did marrie in their kinred without any reſpect, and no circumſtances conſidered, and therefore offended againſt the law of nature: for the Patriarkes married within the degrees prohibited, as Abraham, yet were not puniſhed, Bell.c.27.reſp.ad argum.1.proteſtant.

Contra. Firſt, the words are, In all theſe the nations are defiled: therefore theſe vnlawfull marriages are comprehended among the reſt: and although they had other ſinnes, for the which they were puniſhed, yet theſe alſo raigned among them, and conſequently were vnnaturall. Secondly, the marriages here forbidden are ſimply propounded without any circumſtance, and therefore no circumſtance of mans deuiſe, not allowed in the law, can diſpenſe with the vnlawfulneſſe of theſe marriages. Thirdly, the ſinnes of the Gentiles are noted, wherewith they did then pollute themſelues: the marriages of the Patriarkes were before the law, and in reſpect of the neceſſitie of thoſe times, their chaſtitie and fidelitie tolerated.

Argum.2. Mark.6.18. Iohn ſaith to Herod, It is not lawfull for thee to haue thy brothers wife: Ergo, the law was not abrogate, being in force in our Sauiour Chriſts time. Neither are they to alledge, that Herodes brother was yet liuing, or that he had a childe by Herodias, and therefore it was not lawfull for him to marrie her; for all this being granted, which cannot be proued, yet it is plaine out of the text, that Iohn reproueth him in no other name, but becauſe hee married his brothers wife. Mark.6.18.

Argum.3. Saint Paul reproueth the inceſtuous young man that had his fathers wife, 1.Cor.5.1. and excommunicateth him for it: but this is not forbidden any where in the new Teſtament, but onely by vertue of Moſes law: Ergo, that law concerning degrees of kinred continued in force ſtill. Neither is it a good anſwere to ſay, as Bellarmine doth, that in ſome degrees that law holdeth, and not in other; ſeeing that all the degrees there named, Leuit.18. are with the like ſtrictneſſe, and in the ſame forme of words prohibited: neither can the Ieſuite ſhew, where any part of that law is reuerſed. The words are, v.24. Ye ſhall not defile your ſelues in any of theſe things: ſo then all the degrees there expreſſed are forbidden. Neither doth it helpe him to ſay, that this inceſtuous perſon did keepe his fathers wife while his father liued: which is vncertaine, for as it is by ſome affirmed, ſo it is by other denied, as Theodoret: howſoeuer it were, the Apoſtle deſcribeth his ſinne to be this, that he had his fathers wife: ſo that we ſee, that the Leuiticall prohibition was perpetuall, and in force vnder the Goſpell. 1.Cor.5.1. Leuit.18.24.

Auguſtine is againſt them, who ſpeaking of the marriage of Conſobrines or Coſin germanes, which had beene ſometime in vſe, Quia id nec diuina prohibuit, & nondum prohibuerat lex humana: It was as yet thought lawfull, becauſe neither the diuine law forbad it, neither was it yet prohibited by mans law. If that then be thought lawfull, which Gods law manifeſtly forbiddeth not, that ſure is vnlawfull which it plainely forbiddeth. Wherefore to marrie within any of the degrees directly forbidden, Leuit.18. is vtterly vnlawfull. De ciuitat. Dei.lib.15. cap.16.

We haue the full conſent of antiquitie, Concil. Agathenſ.61. Hos inceſtus cenſemus eſſe, ſi quis relictam fratris, aut germanam vxorem duxerit, &c. Theſe we count inceſts, if a man marrie his brothers wife, or his owne ſiſter, his mother in law, his Aunt, &c. as it followeth in Moſes law.

Synod. Epaunenſ. can.30. Aurelianenſ.2.cap.10. Arelatenſ. ſub Carolo can.21. Gregor.3. decret.9.

Neocaeſar.can.2. In all theſe Councels and decrees it is in flat termes decreed, that it ſhall not be lawfull for any man to marrie his brothers wife.

Concil.Parrhiſienſ.can.4. Nullus illicita coniugia contra praeceptum Domini ſortiri praeſumat, vt fratris relictam, nouercam,&c. Let no man preſume to make any vnlawfull marriage contrarie to the commandement of God, as to marrie his brothers widow, his mother in law,&c.

And that it is not lawfull for the Pope to diſpenſe in this caſe with the marriage of the brothers wife; heare the determination of the Pope himſelfe: Zacharie of that name thus writing to Bonifacium, who required his aduiſe concerning one that had married his Vncles wife, who affirmed that he was diſpenſed with by Gregorie the 3. his Predeceſſor; Pope Zacharie maketh this anſwere: Abſit hoc, vt praedeceſſor noſter ita praeciperet, nec enim ab Apoſtolica ſede illa diriguntur, quae contraria canonum ſtatutis eſſe perhibentur: Farre be it from my predeceſſor to make any ſuch law, for the Apoſtolike ſea hath no authoritie to decree any thing contrarie to the auncient Canons, Epiſtol.ad Bonifacium. But for a man to marrie his brothers wife, is contrarie to the Canons, as we haue ſeene: Ergo, in this caſe the Pope cannot diſpenſe.

We haue the approbation of the Imperiall lawes, Cod.lib.5.tit.5.leg.4.5.Valent.Theodoſ. Fratris vxorem ducendi, vel duabus ſororibus coniungendi penitus licentiam ſubmouemus,&c. We do denie licence to marrie the brothers wife, or to bee ioyned to two ſiſters: ibid.leg.9. Anaſtaſius: Reſcripta omnia viribus carere decreuimus,&c. Wee decree, that all diſpenſations, licences of the Prince,&c. ſhall be voide, which doe giue leaue to marrie the brothers wife,&c. Wherefore ſeeing the lawes of Princes doe concurre with the law of God, in the prohibition of ſuch marriages, it followeth that they are meere morall precepts, and agreeable to the law of nature.

De religion. Muſcouit.

The rude Muſcouites herein exceede the Romaniſts: there was none euer found among them, as Ioannes Faber writeth, qui in quarto gradu contraxerit, which contracted matrimonie in the fourth degree, neither is any therein diſpenſed with: And therefore they condemne the Romaniſts, quia conſanguineas in matrimonium ducunt, becauſe they marrie their kinſwomen.

2 The Æthiopike Church at this day doe not marrie any of their blood vntill the ſeuenth degree, neither is it lawfull for their Patriarke therein to diſpenſe with any.

Harm.ſect.18. pag.541.

3 Confeſſ.of Heluetia the latter. c.29. Wee teach, that marriages ought to be made lawfully in the feare of God, and not againſt the lawes which forbid certaine degrees to ioyne in matrimonie, leaſt the marriages ſhould be inceſtuous.

4 Their owne Canons alſo are euident, Cauſ.27.qu.2.c.11.& decret.Gregor.lib.4.tit.1.c.4. Sponſam fratris frater habere non poteſt: The brother cannot haue to wife his brothers ſpouſe: how much more cannot he haue his brothers wife, that was not eſpouſed onely, but married to him.

Cauſ.35.qu.3.c.8. Non relictam fratris: It is not lawfull to marrie the brothers widow, c.12. Nec relictam fratris vxoris: Nor the wiues brothers widow.

Qu.5.c.3. Vxorem propinqui mei ita me oportet attendere,&c. I muſt ſo regard my kinſmans wife, of what degree ſoeuer, as though ſhe were in the ſame degree of mine owne kinred. By this rule it is no more lawfull for a man to marrie his brothers wife, then his owne ſiſter. And the Canon goeth further, Qui aliter ſentiunt Antichriſti ſunt, they that think otherwiſe, are Antichriſts: ſo conſequently the Pope is by their owne Canons an Antichriſt, for allowing ſuch inceſtuous marriages.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER ANY OTHER DEgrees may be by humane law prohibited, beſide thoſe directly forbidden in the law.

The Papiſts.

89.Error.

1. THey affirme, that by the law of Moſes, thoſe degrees onely are vnlawfull to marrie in, which are directly and by name ſet downe: and therefore it is not vnlawfull, by Moſes law, for the Vncle or Aunts husband to marrie his Niece, becauſe it is not by name prohibited: as Abraham married his brother Arams daughter: for Sara was his Niece. The marriage alſo of Coſin germanes was lawfull by Moſes law, and practiſed, Numb.36. The daughters of Zelophehad married their Vncles ſonnes. Therfore by Moſes law no degrees are forbidden, which are not directly named. Bellar.c.27.

The Collegials of Doway giue inſtance of Othniel who maried Achſah his brother Calebs daughter: Iud.1.18. whereupon they giue this note, that though the Nephew could not marrie the Aunt, yet it was not forbidden for the Vncle to marrie his Niece, becauſe although there bee the ſame degree, yet there is not the ſame inconuenience, becauſe the ſame perſon remained ſubiect, that was inferiour before marriage,&c.

The Proteſtants.

1. COncerning Abrahams marriage what is to be thought, wee haue ſhewed before, reſponſ.ad argum.1. that although this marriage of Abraham is neither commended, nor ſimply allowed in Scripture: yet it was tollerated both in reſpect of the neceſſitie 1. of thoſe times, when as they could not marrie in further degrees of kinred, vnleſſe they would haue taken them wiues from the idolatrous heathen. 2. Likewiſe the liberty then was greater, there being then no law to the contrary.

3. And their chaſtitie and ſobrietie did ſomewhat beare them out, who as Auguſtine ſaith, Non laſciuiendi, ſed gignendi cauſa illis fœminis vtebantur: They did not vſe thoſe women for luſt, but for generation ſake: *de bon. coniug.c.*25. but this example of Abraham notwithſtanding, now after the law giuen, it is a plaine caſe, that the Vncle is no more to marrie his Niece, than the Nephew his Aunt: and this being by name prohibited, Leuit.18.14.20.2. the other alſo is neceſſarily included: for the ſame rules for degrees of kinred, doe proportionably hold both in men and women; wherefore ſuch marriage is vnlawfull, neither to be contracted; and if it be, to be diſſolued.

The like iudgement is to be giuen, of the marriage of two ſiſters; that as the brother is forbidden to marrie his brothers wife, ſo the ſiſter not to ioyne her ſelfe to the ſiſters husband. And whereas Bellarmine vrgeth that place, Leuiticus 18.18. Thou ſhalt not take a wife with her ſiſter, to vexe her during her life: thereby prouing, that the law onely forbiddeth to marrie two ſiſters together, not ſucceſſiuely one after another. I anſwere, that the text is rather to be read thus, Thou ſhalt not take a woman to her ſiſter, that is, one woman to another: Firſt, the word אשה, ſignifieth a woman, as well as a wife: as in the next verſe following 19. and in many other places. Secondly, the true reading is, to a ſiſter, not, with a ſiſter; ſo the prepoſition אל ſignifieth: Then thus to reade, Thou ſhalt not take a wife to her ſiſter, hath no ſenſe: to take the ſiſter to thy wife, by inuerting the words, were to better ſenſe. Thirdly, the phraſe is ſo taken in Scripture, Geneſ.26.31. They did ſweare, vir fratri, a man to his brother, that is, one to another: for otherwiſe, Iſaak and Abimelech were not brethren. Likewiſe Ezech.1.10. Their wings were ioyned, fœmina ad ſororem, the woman to her ſiſter, that is, one to another: where the verie ſame words in the verie ſame conſtruction are vſed: ſo then in this Text, not the marriage of two ſiſters together, but Polygamie or Bigamie, the hauing of two wiues or women together, is forbidden.

Leuit.18.18.

Now then, that by the ſame analogie, the prohibition giuen to one ſexe, doth binde the other, it may thus appeare: Firſt, becauſe all the rules of prohibited degrees are preſcribed namely to the male; ſo that if the other ſexe were not included alſo, none of the prohibitions ſhould concerne them. Secondly, to giue an inſtance, Leuiticus 18.11. Thou ſhalt not diſcouer the ſhame of thy fathers wiues daughter: If the analogie did not hold in the other ſexe, then it might be lawfull to marrie the fathers wiues ſonne. Thirdly, concerning theſe degrees which are in queſtion; firſt, to marrie with the Vncle, is forbidden in direct words, Thou ſhalt not vncouer the ſhame of thy fathers brother, verſ.14. Secondly, for the marrying of ſiſters, ſeeing degrees further off in affinitie are forbidden, as to marrie the wiues daughters daughter, the neerer cannot be lawfull: now the wiues ſiſter is neerer then the wiues daughters daughter.

Leuit.18.11.

Further, concerning mariage betweene the vncle and his niece, I will adioyne the moſt excellent teſtimonie of Ambroſe, who writeth hereof at large to one Paternus, *epiſtol.*66. Tu copulare paras filium, &c. You would ioyne together your ſonne, and his ſiſters daughter. 1. Non ipſe te reuocat ſonus nominum, &c. Doth not the very ſound of the names call you backe? for thus you ſhall bee both a grandfather, and a father in law. 2. The diuine law doth forbid brothers children to marrie, which are in the fourth degree, &c. but theſe are in the third. 3. But you will pretend, that it is permitted by the diuine law, becauſe it is not forbidden: Ego autem & prohibitum aſſero, but I ſay it is forbidden, becauſe lighter matters are forbidden, de patruelibus fratribus, of brothers children, &c. Neither doe you finde it forbidden, that a man ſhould marrie his daughter, quia interdictum eſt lege naturæ, becauſe it is forbidden by the law of nature. 4. What is ſo common, as for the vncle to kiſſe his niece? Hoc inoffenſæ pietatis oſculum ſuſpectum facies: You will make ſuch kiſſes of loue to be ſuſpicious, if ſuch be admitted to mariage. 5. But if you regard not the diuine law, yet the Emperours law might moue you. Theodoſius forbiddeth, that coſin germanes ſhould come together in mariage. Thus much Saint Ambroſe.

2 Concerning the marriage of brothers and ſiſters children, there is a greater queſtion. Firſt, it cannot be proued that Zelophehads fiue daughters married their Vncles ſonnes, that is, their Coſin germanes: for the Hebrewes call the nephewes, ſonnes: as Iethros daughters are called the daughters of Raguel their Grandfather, Exod.2.17. So it might bee that their husbands were their Vncles ſonnes ſonnes: or of ſome other family of that tribe, as in the 12. verſe it may be gathered, where the text ſaith, They were married into the families of the ſonnes of Manaſſes, and though they married their Coſin germanes, this was by ſpeciall diſpenſation for the preſeruation of their inheritance, as the brother by a ſpeciall priuiledge was permitted to marrie his brothers wife to raiſe vp ſeede vnto him: Deut.25. But as touching the queſtion in hand, the mariage of Coſin germanes ſeemeth alſo by ſome analogie to be forbidden by Moſes law: for if the degrees of affinitie be limited to the third or fourth degree; as it is not lawfull for a man to marrie his wiues daughters daughter, Leuitic.18.17. why ſhould not the line of conſanguinitie hold to the fourth degree likewiſe? And ſo neither the ſonne to marrie his fathers brothers daughter, or the daughter the ſonne: for here are alſo foure degrees: the ſonne, one: the father, two: the fathers brother, three: the brothers ſonne, foure. Againe, the Vncles ſonne is as neere as the Vncles wife, the one being of affinitie, the other of conſanguinitie: and therefore the firſt being forbidden, Leuit.18.14. why not the other alſo? Yet this we grant, that this analogie or proportion is not ſo ſtrong, nor doth conclude ſo neceſſarily as the other. Wherefore wee thus determine of this matter, that it is well that the marriages of Coſin germanes are reſtrai-ned by humane law, and ſo they ought to be: which kinde of marriages may lawfully be hindered, and the contract looſed: but the marriage being conſummate and finiſhed, it is not for this cauſe to be diſſolued.

So was it decreed, Concil. Lateranenſ. part. 6. cap. 30. Matrimonium in quarto gradu conſanguinitatis iam conſummatum non debet diſſolui: Marriage in the fourth degree of conſanguinitie (ſuch as the marriage of Coſin germanes is) being conſummate and finiſhed, muſt not be diſſolued.

De ciuitate Dei, lib. 15. cap. 16.

Auguſtine alſo writeth very well of this matter: Quis dubitet, honeſtius hoc tempore conſobrinarum prohibita eſſe coniugia, —cui enim debet cauſa propinquitatis verecundum honorem, ab ea contineat quamuis generatricem libidinem? Who doubteth, but that the marriage of Coſin germanes is honeſtly forbidden? for to whom a man oweth a ſhamefaſt reuerence for kinred ſake, from her he ought to refraine his luſt.

3 That inſtance of Othaniels mariage of Achſah is very impertinent: there are two readings of that place. 1. Some read thus, Othniel the ſonne of Kenaz the brother of Caleb, the younger, that is, the younger ſonne of Kenaz Calebs brother: ſo the Septuagint, and Vatablus, who thinketh that Othaniel was the Nephew, not the ſonne of Kenaz, and that Kenaz and Caleb were brethren by the mother ſide: but this interpretation is refuſed: for theſe reaſons. 1. Caleb could not bee Kenaz brother, becauſe he is called a Kenazite, Ioſua. 14. 6. but one brother vſed not to take his appellation of another. 2. Neither doth the Scripture count genealogies and kinred by the mothers ſide but the fathers. 3. Maſius well obſerueth out of Nehemannus, that theſe words of agnation muſt be referred to the principall firſt alleaged, as Iſay. 32. 7. Iſay the ſonne of Amos the Prophet, that is, with Iſay, not Amos, was a Prophet: ſo in this place, the brother muſt be referred to Othaniel firſt named, not vnto Kenaz.

Maſius in 15. c. Ioſuæ.

2 The other reading is, Othaniel the ſonne of Kenaz, brother of Caleb the younger: that is, which Othaniel was brother of Caleb: thus readeth the vulgar Latine, Andreas Maſius, Maritanus, Pagnine, Iunius: but in diuers ſenſes: firſt Othaniel could not bee the naturall brother of Caleb, as Lyranus and Burgenſis, and our Doway men hold: both becauſe that Caleb was the ſonne of Iephuneh, not of Kenaz: Ioſua 14. 6. and againe, it was flatly againſt the law, for the Vncle to marrie the Niece, which though it bee not namely forbidden, yet it is included in the like prohibition, that the Aunt ſhould not marrie her Nephew: as Maſius well obſerueth, one of their writers: and the reaſon alleaged by Lyranus, confirmed by Paulus Burgenſis, which is the ſame propounded before by the Doway men, hee ſaith, is argutior quam probabilior, more wittie then pithie or probable: that it is more againſt the reuerence of nature for the Aunt to be wife vnto her Nephew, and ſo ſubiect vnto him, then for the Niece to marrie the Vncle: for by this reaſon, if more reſpect were to be had to the decencie of ſubiection of the one to the other, then of the diſtance of the degrees, then it would bee lawfull for the husband to marrie his wiues daughter, becauſe the inferiour partie remaineth in ſubiection ſtill, though it be in that regard vnfit for the ſonne to marrie the fathers wife.

Iunius in 1. Chron. c. 4. tabul. 3. Maſius in Ioſu. c. 14. 6. & c. 15. v. 17.

3 Wherefore I reſolue rather with our Iunius, and their Maſius, that Kenaz was the Grandfather both vnto Othaniel, and Caleb, and that brother is taken according to the Hebrew phraſe for a kinſman: ſo that Othaniel and Caleb were Coſin germanes: and Othaniel is ſaid to bee younger, not in the degree of his brotherhoode, but ſimply in regard of his age, for Caleb was much elder, as both Iunius and Maſius well expound, and Vatablus herein concurreth with them.

Let vs ſee the conſent of antiquitie: Gregor. 3. decr. 6. Si quis neptim, nurum, nouercam duxerit, &c. anathema: If any man marrie his Niece, his daughter in law, or mother in law, accurſed bee he, &c. As then it is vnlawfull for the Nephew to marrie his Aunt, ſo is it for the Vncle to marrie his Niece.

As for the marriage of Coſin germanes, the Canons euery where forbid it: Agathenſ. can. 61. Epaunenſ. can. 30. Aurelianenſ. 3. cap. 10. it is decreed, that no man ſhall marrie conſobrinam, his Coſin germane.

Antiſiodorenſ. can. 31. Non licet conſobrinam, hoc eſt, quæ de duabus ſororibus, aut duobus fratribus procreatur, in coniugium accipere: It is not lawfull to marrie a Coſin germane, which commeth of two brothers, or two ſiſters. Turonic. 2. 22. Wormatienſ. c. 78. it was decreed that none ſhould marrie in the 4. degree, &c.

Arelatenſ. ſub Carolo. can. 11. Ne quis conſobrinam, vel filiam auunculi ducat: That no man marrie his Coſin germane, or Vncles daughter. Thus wee ſee how that our aduerſaries, that make ſhew of antiquitie, are the onely enemies to antiquitie.

Now further I will ſhew the conſent both of the Ciuill and Canon law for the vnlawfulneſſe of marriage: firſt, with the Vncle: ſecondly, the wiues ſiſter; thirdly, the Vncles daughter.

Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 17. Diocletian. Nemini matrimonium contrahere liceat cum ſororis filia: No man muſt contract Matrimonie with his ſiſters daughter, that is, his Niece.

Cod. lib. 6. tit. 20. leg. 19. Iuſtinian. Whereas in the conferring of dowries and other gifts, ſome ſeemed to make a difference betweene Vncles and Aunts: Aſſerebant in perſonis auunculorum, non etiam patruorum, materterarum, vel amitarum locum habere: They affirmed that it tooke place in the perſons of the Vncles by the mothers ſide, not of the Vncles by the fathers ſide, or of the Aunts: the law proceedeth, Talem ſubtilem dubitationem amputantes: We cutting off this ſubtiltie and doubt: and ſo maketh the condition of vncles and aunts to bee alike: As then in this caſe, there was no difference betweene vncles and aunts, ſo why not alſo in mariage?

Decret.par.2.cauſ.27.qu.2.c.12. Gregorie decreeth againſt one, qui deſponſatam nepotis virginem duxit, which married one eſpouſed to his nephew: how much more doe the Canons forbid the mariage of the niece by blood?

Cauſ.35.qu.3.c.8. Si quis relicta, vel filia auunculi: It is not lawfull to marrie the vncles wife or daughter: how much more vnlawfull is it to marrie the vncle himſelfe?

Secondly, the mariage of two ſiſters is contrarie to the Imperiall lawes: Cod.lib.5.leg.5. Valent. Theodoſ. Duabus ſororibus coniungendi, &c. We giue no licenſe to marrie the brothers wiſe, or two ſiſters.

Thirdly, concerning the vnlawfull mariage of Coſin germanes, that is, brothers or ſiſters children, I finde not the like ſtrict prohibition in the Imperiall lawes: for by the law of Antoninus: Cod. lib.6. tit.25 leg.2. and the conſtitution of Arcadius, lib.5.tit.4.leg.19. the mariage of conſobrines, and coſin germanes is made lawfull: Yet degrees as farre off are inhibited; as lib.5.tit.4.leg.17. Nemini liceat: No man is to contract Matrimonie with the brothers daughter, vel ex ea nepte, or his daughters daughter. Theodoſius alſo made a law againſt the mariage of coſin germanes, as before out of Ambroſe: yea and the Canon law is very ſtrict againſt ſuch mariages: Cauſ.35.qu.3.c.20. and Cauſ.32.qu.7.c.20. Brothers and ſiſters children are inhibited to marrie.

Decret.Greg.lib.4.tit.2.c.12. Non debet cum conſobrina propter publicæ honeſtatis iuſtitiam permanere: He muſt not remaine or dwell with his Coſin germane for publike honeſtie ſake, whether hee hath knowne her, or not.

Thus we ſee: firſt, that the two firſt degrees are euen by the law of the Gentiles inhibited, as being vnnaturall, that is, the mariage with the vncle, or with the wiues ſiſter. Secondly, a difference we finde betweene theſe, and the mariage of coſin germanes, which though it be not conuenient, yet is not ſo vnnaturall, nor prohibited by the Imperiall lawes. Thirdly, the Canon law ſeparateth coſin germanes after carnall knowledge: but that is too hard a ſentence: it is ſufficient to hinder mariage contracted, but not conſummate by carnall coniunction, as I haue ſhewed before.

But, becauſe ſome in theſe daies without any ſcruple at all of conſcience, haue taken vnto themſelues great libertie to marrie their coſin germanes, therein giuing great offence vnto others: it ſhall not be amiſſe, ſomewhat more at large to diſcuſſe this doubt, touching the mariage of the firſt coſins, which are brothers and ſiſters children: And here I finde diuers opinions.

De coniugio Cor.7.art.21.

1. Some thinke, that it is as lawfull to marrie in this degree, as in any other not expreſſely forbidden: of this opinion ſeemeth Bucanus to be, that in the tranſuerſe collaterall line, being equall: Matrimonie is only forbidden betweene brothers and ſiſters.

2. Others on the contrarie thinke that it is directly forbidden by the diuine law, as Ambroſ. epiſtol.66. who is alleaged before.

3. Others in the meane betweene both, are of opinion, that although it bee not forbidden in it ſelfe in the word, either expreſſed or vnderſtood, yet it is not conuenient, to auoid the offence of thoſe that are weake. See the Annotat. vpon the Harmonie of Confeſſions: obſeru.2. vpon the confeſſion of Saxonie: ſo their opinion is, licere, ſed non expedire, that it is lawfull, but not expedient to marrie in this degree of conſanguinitie.

4. Auguſtine thinketh, it is not forbidden by the diuine law, but by a poſitiue conſtitution, which he wiſheth to be obeyed: as he is cited before.

What is to be held concerning the mariage of coſin germanes. Iun annot. in Leuit.18. in computatione graduum.

5. But the ſoundeſt opinion is, that although the mariage of coſin germanes be not expreſſely forbidden in the law, nor yet by an exact analogie, as the marrying of the Vncle with the niece is held to be prohibited, becauſe the nephew is forbidden to marrie his Aunt; yet by ſome conſequence, and neceſſarie diduction out of Scripture it is reſtrained; this is Iunius opinion, who thinketh this degree to be forbidden, becauſe mariage with the Vncles wife is inhibited, which is but of affinitie, whereas the Vncles daughter is of conſanguinitie. Now for the ſtrengthening of this opinion, and to ſhew not only the inconueniencie, but vnlawfulnes of ſuch mariages, our reaſons are theſe.

1. No man muſt come neere the kinred of his fleſh, Leuit.18.6. but the Vncles ſonne is of the kinred of the fleſh, Leuit.25.49. beyond this degree, they are not properly kinſmen, but in courteſie: the other only are called coſin germanes, that is true coſins.

2. Where any degree of affinitie is reſtrained, there conſequently the conſanguinitie which commeth by that affinitie is likewiſe reſtrained: as the father cannot marrie his ſonnes wife, nor conſequently his ſonnes daughter by that wife: but becauſe exception will be taken that this is in the right line; where there is no ſtinting or limitation of degrees, the prohibition holding perpetually, both in aſcending and deſcending; ſo it is alſo in the collaterall line: it is not lawfull to marrie the brothers wife, and ſo conſequently not the brothers daughter: in like ſort it is vnlawfull to marrie the Vncles wife, and ſo alſo the Vncles daughter by that wife.

3. This degreee of mariage ſeemeth to bee reſtrained euen by the law of nature, for that the wiſer ſort of the Gentiles, who were only guided by the light of nature, did prouide againſt ſuch mariages: as Plutarke ſheweth that of a long time it was not lawfull to marrie in this degree among the Romanes, and that for theſe three reaſons: firſt, that by marrying they might encreaſe kinred, and multiplie affinitie, whereas coſine germanes are of the kinred without mariage. 2. For feare, leſt in the diſcord of ſuch married perſons, beſide the violating of matrimoniall loue, the law of nature ſhould alſo therein be wronged. 3. Or to this end, that if women ſhould be hardly vſed of their husbands, they might haue ſo many helpers and defenders, as they had of their kinred. But afterward this law was altered vpon this occaſion: A certaine man, being well thought of, was ſuſpected to haue for his wife a coſin germane, by whom he ſhould haue a great dowrie, thereupon hee was called into the law, but the people fauouring him vpon that occaſion made it lawfull to marrie the coſin germane, and ſo releaſed him: but, ſaith he, of ancient time, Romani non copulabant ſibi matrimonio ſanguine iunctas: the Romanes did not couple in mariage thoſe which were ioyned in blood. This reaſon alſo is alleaged in the Annotations vpon the Harmonie of Confeſſions, why this degree ſhould be forborne, ſeing that euen certaine prophane lawmakers haue forbidden this degree.

Sect 18.obſeru 2. vpon the confeſſion of Saxonie.

4. Adde hereunto the continuall practiſe and conſent of the Church in all ages, which haue miſliked the mariage of coſin germanes: as before, the decrees of ſeuen Councels are alleaged, and ſome of them very ancient, as the Synode of Agatha held about anno 450: the Epaunenſ. anno 500. Aurelianenſ. 3. anno 550. Antiſiodorenſ. anno 600. We haue ſeene alſo before the iudgement of Ambroſe and Auguſtine: vnto the which ſhall be aioyned Gregorie the 1. who ſaith: Sacra lex prohibet cognationis turpitudinem reuelare: The ſacred law forbiddeth to diſcouer the nakednes of the kinred, &c. he ſpeaketh of brother or ſiſters children. Bernard alſo agreeth, who thus writeth of Lodouicus the King of France: Qua fronte alijs tantopere de conſanguinitate praſcribere laborat, homo cum ſua, tertio conſanguinitatis gradu ferme permanens conſobrina: With what face can he preſcribe vnto other touching conſanguinitie, ſeeing himſelfe keepeth with his coſin germane almoſt in the third degree of conſanguinitie. The moderne Churches of the world doe all diſlike theſe mariages: as the practiſe of the Greeke and Æthiopike Church is ſhewed before, err. 88. in the end. The reformed Churches concurre: as of Saxonie, Confeſſ. artic. 18. they allow of the rules of the Canon law touching the degrees of mariage: See the obſeruation alſo vpon that place, which cauſeth ſuch mariages to be forborne for offence ſake. It is great preſumption then to goe againſt the conſent of the Church decreeing according to Scripture, or at the leaſt not againſt it.

Cauſ.35.3.20.

Harm.confeſ. ſect.18.p.565.

5. Further, the reaſons are here to be conſidered, why the mariage of conſobrines was forbidden: 1. One reaſon was, cohabitatio, cohabiting together: that all ſuch of the kinred, which vſed to cohabite and keepe in one familie, ſhould not marrie one with another, ne matrimonium incentiuum libidini praſtaret: leſt that mariage might be an occaſion to kindle luſt. 2. Another reaſon is, multiplicatio amicitia, the multiplying of friendſhip, which is hindred by the mariage of ſuch, who are kinſmen, and ſo friends alreadie: and this reaſon is giuen in the law, why they which are neere in alliance ſhould not be married, for they are thy kinsfolkes. 3. Ambroſe vſeth this reaſon againſt the mariage of the vncle and niece, which alſo may ſerue here: Interroga nominum religionem, &c. ipſe ſonus nominum te reuocat: Aske the religious reſpect of the names, — the very ſound of the names will call thee backe, &c. As in that inſtance, the ſame perſon is both brother and ſonne in law to his ſiſter, whoſe daughter he marrieth, ſo here he is both nephew to his aunt, and ſonne in law, whoſe daughter he marrieth, and to his wife he is both husband, and coſin germane. 4. By this meanes no familiaritie ſhall be without ſuſpition with the coſin germane, where mariage is permitted: as Ambroſe in the ſame place reaſoneth againſt that degree giuen in inſtance of the mariage of the vncle and niece: Quid tam ſolenne, quam oſculum inter auunculum & neptim? What is ſo ſolemnely vſed, as for the vncle to kiſſe his niece, &c. hoc inoffenſa pietatis oſculum ſuſpectum facies: this kiſſe of loue without offence, thou wilt make ſuſpitious, &c. So in this caſe, what is more common then for one Coſin to ſalute another with a kiſſe? which ſalutations now are made ſuſpitious. 5. The Councel of Wormes giueth this reaſon: In the coupling of the faithfull we define no number of generation, but wee doe order, that it ſhall be lawfull for no Chriſtian to take a wife of his kinred, vſq; dum generatio recordatur, &c. as long as the generation is remembred and knowne, &c. but vntill coſin germanes the kinred is freſh in memorie and knowledge, but after it weareth away and groweth out.

6. We muſt giue none offence according to S. Pauls rule, neither to the Grecians (he meaneth Gentiles) nor to the Church of God: but the mariage of coſin germanes is an offence to both; it being giuen, and not taken, in a thing, at the leaſt in their owne opinion indifferent: and here that rule in the Ciuill law hath place: In rebus dubijs pars tutior ſequenda: In doubtfull matters the ſafer way is to be followed: So in this caſe, it being doubtfull whether ſuch mariages be lawfull, the ſafer way is, not to vſe ſuch mariages at all.

But here it will be obiected, that if coſin germanes may not marrie by the law of God, then ſuch mariages may be diſſolued, and the iſſue of ſuch mariages ſhould be held to be not legitimate.

To this obiection I anſwere negatiuely, that neither the one or other inconuenience followeth vpon that ſuppoſall: and for further explanation of this anſwere, I will remember diuers opinions of this matter: 1. Some are ſo ſtrict, that they will ſimply haue ſuch mariages diſſolued: as the Councell of Mentz is ſo ſeuere, that they will haue ſuch to be ſeparated, & vlterius nunquam in coniugio copulari: and neuer after to be married againe, &c. 2. Gregorie excepteth onely ſuch, as were Neophyti, newly called to the faith: he would haue ſuch mariages borne with in them, but not in others: and ſo he ſendeth his directions to Auſtine then here in Britannie, how he ſhould deale with the Britons.

Cauſ.32.7.20.

ſons. 3. The Councell of Wormes giueth a larger ſcope, that they which marrie in the fourth degree ſhould bee ſeparated; vbi poſt interdictum factum fuerit, if any ſuch thing be done after ſuch interdiction: they beare with all ſuch mariages before. 4. But that in this caſe is the moſt reaſonable opinion, which was reſolued vpon, in the Laterane Councell, that Matrimonium conſummatum in quarto gradu conſanguinitatis non debet diſſolui: Matrimonie conſummate in the fourth degree of conſanguinitie muſt not bee diſſolued, &c. It may bee hindred being contracted only, but not being once conſummate: like as the conſent of parents is required by the law of God, and the want thereof is ſufficient to diſſolue the contract of mariage, but not the conſummation. The like decree is aſcribed to Fabianus: that licuit affinibus contrahere in quinto gradu, &c. It is lawfull for they which are of affinitie to contract mariage in the fifth degree, in quarto reperti non ſeparantur: they which were found in the fourth cannot bee ſeparated: in tertio gradu coniuncti ſeparabantur: they which are ioyned in the third, muſt be ſeparated. Like as then, ſuch as in their mariage neglected the conſent of their parents, may ſo remaine ſtill, yet confeſſing their error and ouerſight, not maintaining or iuſtifying their fact: ſo ſuch as are married in this degree of conſanguinitie, either ignorantly, or not ſo well informed, may vpon their repentance of their error, if they ſee it, or did it ignorantly, find comfort in their mariage, and their iſſue proſper. But I doubt, ſuch as doe iuſtifie ſuch mariages, as holie and lawfull, will not finde ſuch comfort and contentment: as Gregorie ſaith of ſuch, Experimento didicimus ex tali coniugio ſobolem non poſſe ſuccreſcere: We haue learned by experience, that the iſſue of ſuch mariage cannot thriue, &c. This I ſpeake not to entangle the conſcience of ſuch as are ſo married, but to giue a caueat to ſuch as are to marrie, not to aduenture vpon ſuch neerenes of blood willingly, which may afterward breed ſcruple of conſcience. And thus much by way of digreſſion of this matter.

The Papiſts.

1. IT is lawfull for the Church to reſtraine other degrees of affinitie and conſanguinitie, beſides thoſe preſcribed by Moſes, and that the decrees of the Church in ſuch caſes doe binde in conſcience, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 24. can. 3. As to prohibite mariage vnto the ſeuenth degree in naturall kinred, and afterward to the fourth. 2. Alſo their Canons doe make a ſpirituall kinred, that commeth in by Baptiſme and Confirmation; and ſuffer not the godfather to marrie the godchild, or the godfather the godmother. 3. Likewiſe they haue found out an affinitie that commeth in by eſpouſals only of Matrimonie, which bindeth (ſay they) in the firſt degree by the Canon law, which is the firſt and ſecond by the Ciuill law: as that it is not lawfull for the brother to marrie her which was eſpouſed to his brother. 4. Alſo another kinred and affinitie, by fornication and vnlawfull fleſhlie knowledge, which bindeth in the ſecond degree Canonicall, which is the third and fourth Ciuill; as it is not lawfull for the ſonne to marrie his fathers baſtard, Bellarm. cap. 24. cap. 30.

90. Error.

91. Error.

92. Error.

Bellarmine thus reaſoneth for the reſtraint of conſanguinitie and affinitie: firſt, to the ſeuenth degree, and afterward to the fourth.

Argum. 1. There is a peculiar ſhamefaſtnes and reuerence of nature due to kinſmen, which is violated in mariage. 2. If kinſmen might marrie together, they could not vſe cohabitation, or any familiaritie together without ſuſpition: but whereas mariage is inderdicted betweene kinſmen, there is no danger. 3. For the propagation of loue and charitie vnto others, mariage is forbidden in theſe degrees, wherein their affinitie or conſanguinitie is a ſufficient bond of loue, without mariage. 4. If kinſmen ſhould marrie together, their loue would be too inordinate, the loue of mariage being ioyned to the naturall loue of kinred, Bellarm. cap. 29.

Contra. Firſt, the wiſedome of man is not to controule the ordinance of God: if the Lord hath not thought good to make a reſtraint of mariage ſo farre, it is preſumption in man to doe it: ſhall it bee thought, that God had not reſpect to the reuerence of nature, propagation of loue, familiaritie of kinred, ſobrietie in mariage, in ſetting downe the mariage law?

Secondly, none of theſe inconueniences need to bee feared in degrees ſo farre off: for whereas the fourth degree in the Canons, is the eighth Ciuill degree: and by the Canons, brethren are in the firſt degree, brethrens children in the ſecond, their childrens children in the third, and their children in the fourth: what kinred can there bee now betweene coſin germanes twice remoued? and there being little or no kinred, there is neither 1. reuerence of nature due as to the kinred of the fleſh: 2. and their familiaritie is no more with ſuſpition, then betweene ſtrangers: 3. nor yet ſhall the propagation of loue be hindred, there being no ſuch ſure bond alreadie out of mariage: 4. and conſequently inordinate loue in the mariage of ſuch is not to be feared, the naturall affection by ſuch long deſcent being extinguiſhed.

The Proteſtants.

1. TO forbid more degrees in mariage, then are either directly or by neceſſarie conſequence prohibited in the law, is a meere Antichriſtian yoke laid vpon the people of God: for the Lord (the author of that law) beſt did know, both what perſons were fit for mariage, and how farre the line of mariage was to extend.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the law of the degrees of mariage was peculiar to the people of the Iewes, vnto whom the mariage of their kinred was not ſo much reſtrained: firſt, becauſe they were but few. Secondly, for the preſeruation of the Tribes and families. Thirdly, that being ſuffered to marrie in their kinred, they ſhould not ſo eaſily put away their wiues. Fourthly, as they were permitted to put away their wiues, and to haue many at once; ſo in like manner to marrie within certaine degrees of kinred, Bellarm.c.29.reſp.ad argum.2.

Contra. Firſt, theſe reaſons are not ſufficient to proue the law of degrees in mariage peculiar to the Iewes: 1. They were a great and populous nation: in Dauids time there were 13. hundred thouſand fighting men in Iſrael and Iuda, 2.Sam.24. In the raigne of Ieboſaphat, Iudah only was able to make 11. hundred thouſand men of warre, 2.Chron.17.14,19. therefore in reſpect of their ſmall number, there was no reaſon to allow them to marrie with their kinred. 2. For the preſeruation of their families there was a ſpeciall prouiſo in the law, that the brother might take the brothers wife to raiſe ſeed to his brother, Deut.25.3. Moſes permitted them (notwithſtanding this law of degrees) to giue vnto their wiues bils of diuorcement: and it is ſeene by experience, that the neerer in degree the married couples are, for the moſt part greater contention falleth out. 4. To put away their wiues was but a toleration: but the law concerning degrees was a commandement, and the tranſgreſſion thereof puniſhed with death, Leuit.20. The hauing of many wiues was directly contrary to the law, Leuit.18.18. Deut.17.17.

2.Chro.17.14.
Leuit.18.18.
Deut.17.17.

Secondly, that this was not a law peculiar to the Iewes, but generall, to binde the people of God vnder the Goſpell: it appeareth both by Iohns Baptiſts reprehenſion of Herode for marrying his brothers wife; and Saint Pauls cenſuring of the inceſtuous perſon that tooke his fathers wife: which are the very degrees forbidden in Leuit.2. Neither can they ſhew any diſpenſation or reuocation in the new Teſtament contrary to that law.

This prohibition of mariage to the fourth degree Canonicall, that is, the eighth Ciuill, is contrarie both to the Imperiall and Canonicall lawes.

Cod.lib.5.tit.4.leg.17.Dioclet. In collaterals both of affinitie and conſanguinitie, the prohibition goeth not beyond the fourth degree: Nemini liceat, a man muſt not contract matrimonie with his Aunt, ſiſters daughter, or niece, that is her daughters daughter; with his brothers daughter or niece: and in affinitie, with his wiues daughter, wiues mother, ſonnes wife, fathers wife, &c. none of theſe exceed the fourth degree Ciuill. The Canon law thus teſtifieth, Cauſ.35.qu.3.c.3.Fabianus: In quarta generatione ſi contracti fuerint, non ſeparentur: They which are married in the fourth generation, let them not be ſeparated; Ibid.c.12.Iulius, Vſque in tertiam progeniem &c. No man muſt marrie a wife to the third degree: Theſe Canons inhibite not mariage in the third and fourth degree Canonicall, much leſſe to the ſeuenth.

Lateranenſ.part.50.c.29. Cognati non ſunt ſeparandi niſi in primo vel ſecundo gradu conſanguinitatis ſint coniuncti: Coſins muſt not bee diuorced, vnleſſe they marrie in the firſt or ſecond degree of conſanguinitie: the ſecond degree by the Canon law, is the fourth degree by the Ciuill law, and after our account: after the fourth degree then mariage is lawfull: it is not then reſtrained till the ſeuenth.

Secondly, the inuention of ſpirituall kinred is but a popiſh tricke, to get the more money for their diſpenſations: for by this reaſon no Chriſtians ought to marrie together, becauſe they are all of one ſpirituall kinred in Chriſt.

Their owne Canons are againſt them: Cauſ.30.qu.3.c.4.Vrban. Poſt compaternitatem geniti, &c. Godfathers children may marrie: Qu.4.c.5.Paſchal. Vxorem compatris ducere licet: A man may marrie his Godfathers wife: Decret.Greg.lib.4.tit.11.c.1. Alexander. Filij duorum compatrum licite contrahant: Godfathers children may contract matrimonie.

Thirdly, the new affinitie that commeth by eſpouſals, is alſo but an humane inuention: for the law ſpeaketh only of the kinred of the fleſh, which ariſeth of carnall knowledge and copulation, not an intent or purpoſe only of mariage, Leuit.18.6.

Leuit.18.6.

We haue the conſent of a generall Councell, Lateranenſ.part.6.can.27. Pope Benedictus decreeth thus: Qui vnam ſororem deſponſauerit, ſi eam non cognouerit, poteſt aliam ſororem ſibi matrimonio copulare: apparet enim virum & mulierem non poſſe fieri vnam carnem, niſi carnali copula ſibi adhæreant: He that eſpouſeth one ſiſter, not hauing knowne her, may marrie her ſiſter; for man and wife are not made one fleſh, but by carnall copulation. Therefore by the eſpouſall words they are not made one fleſh: Propinquitas ſanguinis verbis dicitur, non verbis efficitur: Propinquitie of blood by words is ſaid, by words it is not made. Cur ergo prohibeamus, quod prohibitum nunquam ſcriptura declarauit? Why therefore ſhould we forbid that which is no where in Scripture forbidden? To this agreeth alſo the decree of Pope Alexander, Lateranenſ.part.45.can.5. Non ſunt vna caro vir & mulier niſi carnali copula cohæſerint: Man and wife are not one fleſh but by carnall copulation.

Thus alſo the Ciuill law teſtifieth: Cod.lib.5.tit.4.leg.24.Iuſtinian. Conditio nuptiarum impletur per actum non habitum aut potentiam: The condition of mariage is accompliſhed by the act, not by the habite or poſſibilitie.

Their Canons alſo are euident: Cauſ.27.qu.2.c.17.Iulius: Mulier præter commixtionem ſexuum non pertinet ad matrimonium: A woman without the copulation of the ſexe, belongeth not to matrimonie. C.18.Benedict. Per nuda ſponſionis verba non poſſunt vna caro fieri: They cannot be made one fleſh only by the words of eſpouſall. The reſt of this Canon is recited before.

The Maſter of Sentences maketh this anſwere: That thoſe Canons are vnderſtood of eſpouſals which are made, per verba de futuro, by words not of the preſent, but of the time to come; when there is not, conſenſus de præſenti,ſed ſponſio futuri: not a conſent for the preſent, but a promiſe for afterward.

Contra. Firſt,that diſtinction of the Canon law is but an humane deuice,that there is fides pactionis, fides conſenſus; That faith of mariage is made by couenant and promiſe, or by conſent: the firſt holdeth not,the ſecond is firme euen after carnall ſocietie with another: Cauſ.27.qu.2.c.51. For we ſee the Scripture maketh no difference betweene the couenant of mariage, and conſent: Geneſ.24.57,58. We will call the maide and aske her conſent,&c. Wilt thou goe with this man? and ſhe ſaid,I will goe. Her promiſe by theſe words of the future, I will goe, are called her conſent. So Dauid ſent to Abigail,vt accipiat in vxorem, to take her to his wife: he ſaid not, I doe take thee to my wife: 1.Sam.25.40. Wherefore that ſimple and well meaning age,knew no ſuch difference in contracts.

1.Sam.25.40.

Secondly,the Canons exclude all eſpouſals whatſoeuer from the computation of the degrees of mariage: Propinquitas ſanguinis verbis dicitur, non verbis efficitur: Propinquitie of blood is ſaid by words,not made. He ſpeaketh generally of all words of eſpouſall or contract whatſoeuer: Benedict. cauſ.27.qu.2.c.18. And the queſtion is of a maide that was ſimplicibus verbis deſponſata,&c. eſpouſed by ſimple,that is,plaine and direct words,to a young man; the maide eſpouſed dieth,he is licenſed to marrie her ſiſter, and by warrant of Scripture; becauſe man and woman are not made one fleſh, niſi carnali copula, but by carnall copulation; as the Scripture ſaith, They two ſhall be one fleſh.

We haue ſeene before the Imperiall conſtitutions,which were a rule both for the Eaſt and South Churches: the Canons alſo before alleaged,ſhew the ancient iudgement of the Romane Church: the reformed Churches agree,as that of Saxonie,We make not a mixture of thoſe perſons, which by the law of God are not permitted to couple together. They goe no further, for reſtraint of mariage, then to the law of God.

Harm.ſect.18. artic.18.p.565.

Fourthly, the laſt wee admit, for the ſonne of the father begotten out of mariage,is of his fleſhly kinred,though not lawfully; and therefore in mariage-matters there is reſpect alſo to be had euen of this kinred of the fleſh: as Ruben is curſed of his father becauſe he lay with his concubine,Gen.49.4. which notwithſtanding was not his fathers wife. So alſo the Ciuill law, Cod.lib.5.tit.4.leg.4. Alexander. Concubina patris non debet eſſe uxor filij: The fathers concubine cannot be the ſonnes wife.

Geneſ.49.4.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, OF OTHER impediments of mariage.

THere are ſome impediments which may hinder and diſſolue the contract of mariage,before it be conſummate,but not after: ſome, which both may hinder the contract, and diſſolue the matrimonie euen after carnall knowledge.

The Papiſts.

1. BEllarmine reckoneth vp diuers impediments of both kindes, which may diſanull the contract of mariage,and diſſolue the matrimonie it ſelfe: but he maketh no mention of the conſent of the parents. And indeed it is their opinion,that it is not a neceſſarie thing to be reſpected in mariage: nor of the eſſence thereof,neither can ſuch mariage,as hath the conſent of the children only,either by the parents,or Magiſtrate be diſſolued, Bellarm.c.19.

93.Error.

Argum. Eſau married without his fathers conſent, yet was not his marriage diſſolued: Iacob alſo had not his fathers conſent to the mariage of Lea,and of his two handmaides: Ergo,the parents conſent is not neceſſarie, Bellarm.cap.19.

Anſw. Firſt,concerning Eſau his mariage,wee ſay he did very euill in marrying without his fathers conſent,and it was a great griefe to his parents: yet the mariage being once conſummate, wee ſay not,that then it ought to be diſſolued,for want of the parents conſent,but the contract and eſpouſals onely. Secondly, for Iacob, his maides were not his wiues, and Lea was thruſt vpon him againſt his will: no marueile if hee had not his fathers conſent,when his owne was wanting: but to marrie one of his fathers kinred,as he made choice of Rachel,he had his fathers full conſent.

Argum.2. In the mariage of children without conſent of the parents,the conſent of the parties is preſent,which is ſufficient: for conſenſus facit matrimonium, conſent maketh matrimonie. And if the mariage of ſeruants againſt the will of their maſters be notwithſtanding firme and ſure,much more the marriage of children, &c. Bellarm.cap.19.

Anſw. Firſt, one of your owne writers ſhall make you an anſwere: Conſenſus facit nuptias, ſed eorum, qui ſui iuris ſunt,&c. Conſent maketh marriage, but of ſuch, as are in their owne power: ſo are not children, and therefore their conſent is not ſufficient: Eſpenc.de clandeſtin matrim.cap.11. Secondly,where the maſters are in ſtead of parents, there they haue the ſame right and power to approue or diſſolue the contracts of their ſeruants,which fathers haue: but where ſeruants haue fathers beſide, they are to depend vpon their fathers conſent,and not the maſters: and in this caſe the argument followeth not,for fathers haue greater power in the mariage of their children,then maſters ouer their ſeruants.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, we doe not ſay, that the want of the parents conſent may diſſolue mariage conſummate after mutuall coniunction: but that it may breake off the contract and eſpouſals. Secondly, neither haue the parents power to beſtow their children in mariage without their conſent, Geneſ. 24.57. And this is agreeable to the law of nature: according to the conſtitution of the Heathen Romane Emperours: Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 12. Dioclet ian. Nec filium familias inuitum ad vxorem ducendam cogi, &c. The diſcipline of the lawes doe not permit, that the ſonne ſhould be compelled againſt his will to take a wife. Thirdly, neither muſt the parents exerciſe a tyrannicall power ouer their children in forbidding them mariage, but muſt alway haue reſpect vnto their need. And thus doing their conſent is neceſſarie, and without it the contract hath no validitie, 1. Cor. 7. 37, 38. The parent hath power to giue in mariage or not to giue.

1. Cor. 7. 37, 38.

Exod. 22. 16.

Argum. Exod. 22. 16. The law is this, That if a man lie with a maide not betrothed, and her father refuſe to giue her vnto him to wife, he ſhall pay money. Here the full authoritie of giuing or not giuing the daughter in mariage, is committed to the father.

Bellarmine anſwereth: That this is in ſuch caſes where there is no contract: but the law ſaith not, that the father may refuſe after the contract made.

Numb. 30. 4.

Contra. 1. As though their mutuall carnall knowledge be not as forcible to ioyne them, as a bare contract, this being but in word, the other in deed. Secondly, Numb. 30 4. The father may breake his daughters vow made vnto God: Ergo, much more her promiſe and contract made to man.

Bellarm. It is to be vnderſtood of ſuch an one, as is in ætate puellari, yet vnder age, a young maiden, which is not yet fit for mariage.

Contra. 1. In this chapter there be three eſtates or degrees of women ſet downe: a maide, a wife, a widow: of theſe three only the widow hath power to make a vow: ſhe that is not a widow, is either vnder her husband, if ſhe be married, or vnder her father, if ſhe bee not: So then the law meaneth all maides vnmarried, vnleſſe you can finde out a fourth kinde, that is neither of maides, wiues, nor widowes. 2. Againe, here are to be vnderſtood rather maides of yeeres and diſcretion, to make a vow, then of tender and young yeeres, who knew not what a vow meaneth. 3. And beſides, the word here vſed, verſ. 4. אשה ſignifieth a woman, not a girle or young maide. 4. Laſtly, a writer of their own thus concludeth vpon this place: Ergo vota à filiabus Deo nuncupata poterant parentes diſſoluere, ſponſalia, &c. Therefore might the parents diſſolue vowes made by their daughters vnto God, and could they not retract eſpouſals made to men? Eſpenc. c. 1. de clandeſtin. matrimon.

Deut. 7. 3.

Argum. 2. Deuter. 7. 3. Ye ſhall not make mariages with the Heathen, thou ſhalt not giue thy daughter to his ſonne, &c. Hence the ſame author concludeth thus: Eam legem fruſtra laturus, &c. This law had been made in vaine, if mariages had been free for the children without the fathers conſent. Againe, whereas the Iſraelites had ſworne, that they would not giue their daughters to the Beniamites to wife, Iudg. 21. 1. and therefore were very much perplexed and grieued for that tribe, ſaying, verſ. 7. How ſhall we doe for wiues to them that remaine? The daughters might haue helped their parents in this perplexitie, if notwithſtanding their parents oth, they might haue married of themſelues. Thus much Eſpenc. and much more, lib. de clandeſtin. matrimon. c. 1. 2.

Iudg. 21. 1.

Wee haue alſo the conſent of antiquitie: to omit thoſe ancient Canons, which are very many, which doe enioyne that children ſhould not bee married without their parents conſent: vnto the which Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſo much he granteth, yet it followeth not, that the contract ſhould for that defect and want be diſſolued: we will therefore bring foorth ſuch Canons, as annihilate and diſanull the contract, where the parents conſent is not.

Euariſtus epiſtol. 1. Non ſit coniugium niſi ab his, &c. There is no mariage made, but by them that haue power ouer the woman: let the wife be demaunded of her keepers and tutors, and eſpouſed by her parents, and the neereſt of her kinred: otherwiſe it is adulterie rather and whoredome, then lawfull mariage.

Celeſtin. decret. 4. Quod parentes, fratres, &c. ita vt ſi non interſint, & conſenſum non adhibuerint, ſecundum leges nullum fiat matrimonium: That the parents, brethren, kinsfolkes of both ſexes be admitted to teſtifie their conſent for their ſonne or daughter, and ſo to eſtabliſh or breake off their mariage: who if they be not preſent, neither giue conſent, according to the law, let it be counted no mariage, &c. What plainer euidence can we haue for this matter?

Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 7. Gordian. Minus legitima coniunctio, ceſſante patris voluntate, &c. It is no lawfull coniunction, the fathers will being wanting, leg. 12. Diocletian. Sociare, &c. Thou art not hindred to aſſociate thy ſelfe to what mariage thou wilt, vt contrahendis nuptijs patris conſenſus accedat, ſo that thy fathers conſent bee to the contracting of mariage: leg. 18. Valent. Theodoſ. Viduæ intra vigeſimum quintum, &c. Widowes vnder 25. yeeres, in ſecundas nuptias ſine patris ſententia non conueniant, muſt not enter into ſecond mariage without the ſentence of their father: tit. 6. leg. 6. If a man marrie an orphane or pupill, whoſe father is dead, being vnder 25. yeeres of age, nec matrimonium habuiſſe, it is to be counted no matrimonie, nor they children, that are borne in ſuch mariage, vnleſſe the father dying willed it.

Likewiſe the Canons: Cauſ. 32. qu. 2. c. 13. Conſulitur puella non de ſponſalibus, &c. The maiden is not asked concerning the eſpouſals; for therein ſhe expected the iudgement of her parents, but ſhee is conſulted with about the day and time of her iourney: This is ſpoken of Rebecca. The ſame Canon alleageth Euripides, thus ſpeaking in the perſon of the woman, [illegible] ponſalium meorum pater meus curam ſubibit, &c. For my eſpouſals my father ſhall take care, it appertaineth not to me, &c. Thus we ſee that it is agreeable to the law of nature, that the marriage of children ſhould not bee attempted without the conſent of the parents.

Cauſ.36.qu.2.c.11.gloſſ. This law is alleaged out of the Digeſts, tit. de nuptiar. ritu, leg.2. Conſiſtere non poſſunt nuptiæ, &c. Marriages cannot ſtand, vnleſſe they conſent, in whoſe power they are.

Diuers of the learned Papiſts condemne ſuch marriages, as are enterpriſed without the conſent of the parents: Gropperus, in inſtitut. Colonienſ. Gentianus, in his booke ſet forth of this matter, alleageth a certaine Greeke Canon to this effect: Quæ ſine ijs, qui habent poteſtatem matrimonia fiunt, fornicationes ſunt: They are fornications, no marriages, which are done without them that haue the power, &c. Likewiſe Catharinus, Irrita eſſe velim, nec vera eſſe matrimonia, &c. I iudge them to bee no true, but void marriages: Eſpenc. lib. de clandeſtin. matrim. c.15.

There are notwithſtanding certaine caſes excepted by the law, wherein the ſonne or daughter haue free libertie to marrie without conſent.

1. Si vtroq; orba parente: If both the parents be dead. Cod. lib.5. tit.4. leg.20. Honor.

2. Cod. lib.3. tit.28. leg.19. Poſt viginti quinq;, &c. After 25. yeeres children might marrie without the parents conſent.

3. Ibid. leg.20. Poſt matris pœnitentiam, &c. If the mother ſhall giue conſent, the father being dead, and afterward repent her, yet the marriage ſhall be good.

4. Cod. lib.5. tit.4. leg.25. Filij furioſi, &c. The ſonnes of mad men may marrie without conſent.

Other caſes there are beſide, as when the ſonne is manumitted; that is, ſet free by his father, or hath borne any publike office of Magiſtracie or gouernment, Eſpenc. c.16. de clandeſtin. matrim. But theſe irregular and extraordinarie caſes excepted, the power of parents is not to be infringed, but their conſent to be expected in the eſpouſals of their children.

For the Greeke Church, ſee the conſtitutions of the Greeke Emperours before alleaged: the Muſcouites at this day obſerue this vſe, Impetrato parentum conſenſu nuptijs dies dentur, A day is appointed for the marriage, the conſent of the parents being obtained.

De religion. Ruſſor. ad D. Chytræum.

Tertullian ſheweth the practiſe of the auncient Africane Church: Nec in terris filij ſine conſenſu patrum rite & iure nubunt: Neither in earth doe the ſonnes rightly and lawfully marrie without conſent of parents, &c.

Lib.2. ad vxorem.

So the reformed Churches: Saxon. confeſſ. artic.18. In affiances euen according to the auncient lawes, we will haue the conſent of the parents alſo. Wittemberg. c.21. Alſo we teach, that they which are young, ought not to marrie without the authoritie of their parents, —otherwiſe it is not to be counted ratified.

Harm. ſect.18. pag.565. Pag.571.

B. Rhenanus vpon that place of Tertullian before cited, hath this note: Vtinam Theologi & Iuriſconſulti, &c. I would Diuines and Lawyers would admoniſh the Biſhop of Rome, Cæſar, and other Kings and Princes hereof, that this miſchiefe may be met with in ſeducing ſimple maides without the conſent of their parents.

Our Doway men here alſo are ſomewhat indifferent: as they giue this note, that children ought not to marrie without the good liking of their parents. And againe, Eſau by marrying againſt his parents will, made a breach from them.

Annot. in Geneſ.24.58. Annot. in Geneſ.25.35.

This trueth alſo is ſealed: Maſter Tindall holy Martyr; Let parents prouide marriages for their children in ſeaſon, teaching them alſo to know, that ſhe is not his wife whom the ſonne taketh, nor her husband whom the daughter taketh, without the conſent or good will of their Elders, or them that haue authoritie ouer them: if their friends will not marrie them, then are they not too blame if they marrie themſelues: let not the fathers and mothers alwayes take the vttermoſt of their authority of their children, but beare their weakneſſe, &c. pag. 1249 col.2. artic.2.

There are alſo other cauſes which may diſſolue contracts and eſpouſals made: as if the honeſt and lawfull condition propounded in the contract be not kept; or if there be an error in the perſon, hee heareth afterward of her diſhoneſtie, whom hee tooke for an honeſt woman: both theſe may make void the contract, but not the marriage, if they be once ioyned together.

The Papiſts.

1. THey ſet downe many impediments, which may make a nullitie of marriage it ſelfe, after it bee conſummate: ſome of them we acknowledge, as afterward it ſhall appeare: but theſe following we doe renounce.

Firſt, the vow of chaſtitie and entring into Orders doe looſe the bond of marriage. Bellarmine to this purpoſe vrgeth that place, 1. Tim.5.12. Hauing damnation, becauſe they haue forſaken their firſt faith: the firſt faith, is the vow of continencie, which was a ſufficient impediment of matrimonie. Bellarm. c.21. propoſ.1.

94. Error. 1. Tim.5.12.

Contra. By the firſt faith, is vnderſtood their faith, which they profeſſed in Baptiſme, to renounce the works of the fleſh, which theſe wanton widowes now follow in forſaking their calling: 1. So the interlinearie gloſſe, and Brune expound this place: ex Eſpenc. in hunc locum. 2. The Apoſtle doth interpret himſelfe, verſ.8. He that prouideth not for his owne, denieth the faith,&c. that is, by his workes he denieth the religion of Chriſt: now to denie the faith, verſ.8. and to violate the faith, verſ.12. doe ſignifie the ſame. 3. The Apoſtle afterward giueth theſe widowes licence to marrie, verſ.14. which he would not haue done, if it had beene damnation, and a breach of the faith to marrie after their profeſſed widowhood: this place both Chryſoſtome and Theophilact expound of widowes profeſſed, vide Eſpenc. in hunc locum. This text then nothing maketh for them.

95.Error.

Secondly, marriages of the faithfull with Infidels are not only vnlawfull, but void, *Bellarmine c.*23. Yet hee confeſſeth that ſuch marriages are not void either by diuine or naturall law, or by any law of the Church, but onely by the cuſtome of the people of God, hauing the force of a law. *propoſ.*2.3.

Argum. Infidelitie in the olde law, and diſparitie of religion did make matrimonie void: Ergo, much more now; for there is greater difference betweene Chriſtians and Infidels, then was betweene the Iewes and Gentiles, Bellarm. argum. 1.

Anſwere. Firſt, if this argument conclude any thing, it ſheweth, that euen by the diuine Law ſuch marriages are void: which notwithſtanding he before denied.

Gal.3.28. Deut.7.4. 1.Cor.7.13. Matth.19.8.

Secondly, the argument followeth not, for this law belonged to the policie of that nation, that they ſhould not marrie with the Gentiles: who were accounted as an vncircumciſed, and vnholy people: but now this wall of partition is taken away; and in Chriſt there is neither Iew nor Grecian, Gal.3.28. Thirdly, the marriage of the Gentiles, was for no other cauſe inhibited the Iewes, but leaſt it ſhould be a meane to withdraw them from the worſhip of God, Deut.7.4. This proueth not, that an Infidell willing to dwell together, and of whom there may be ſome hope, ſhould bee put away, contrarie to S. Pauls rule, 1.Cor.7.13. Fourthly, the Iewes were permitted vpon diuers occaſions to put away their wiues, for the hardnes of their heart, Matth.19.8. wherefore the impediments and diſſolutions of marriage among them doe not binde vs.

96.Error.

Thirdly, the marriage of thoſe which committed adulterie, and did compact together before to marrie after the firſt husbands or wiues death, is actually void. *Bellarm. c.*22.

The Proteſtants.

1. CONcerning the inualiditie of vowes to diſanull marriage, we haue declared the trueth before, Contro.6. de Monachis. For marriage lawfully contracted and conſummate, is onely made void by way of diuorce in the caſe of adulterie, as we haue before proued.

Matth.19.9.

Argum. Matth.19.9. Our Sauiour giueth this perpetuall rule, that no man ſhould diſmiſſe his wife but for fornication: but Orders is no fornication: Ergo, not for entring into Orders is ſhe to be diſmiſſed: and verſ.6. No man muſt put aſunder that, which God hath coupled: but they which are but contracted, are coupled before God: Ergo, no humane ordinance, ſuch as is the ſingle life annexed to Orders, can ſeparate them.

Decret. Gregor. lib.3. tit.32. c.7. Alexander giueth libertie to a woman profeſſed, vt ad religionem tranſeat,&c. to profeſſe religion, or returne to her husband: Ergo, it was lawfull after profeſſion made to returne.

Sext. decretal. lib.3. tit.15. c.1. Bonif.8. Simplex votum non reſcindit,&c. A ſimple vow doth not cut off marriage afterward contracted: and againe he ſaith, Voti ſolennitas ex ſola conſtitutione eſt eccleſiæ: A ſolemne vow is onely by the conſtitution of the Church: and Alexander ſaith, that Votum ſimplex non minus obligat coram Deo, A ſimple vow doth not leſſe binde before God, then a ſolemne and publike vow: it followeth, that a ſolemne vow then, doth not hinder marriage afterward contracted.

Extrau. Ioan. tit.6. c.2. Votum ſolemnizatum per ſacri ſuſceptionem ordinis,&c. A vow ſolemnized by entring into holy orders, is not of force to diſſolue matrimonie before going, though not conſummate with carnall knowledge; wherefore marriage contracted is not hindered or interrupted by the profeſſion of Orders.

Commentar. in 1.Timoth.5.

And further, that the vow of ſingle life cannot hinder marriage contracted, or diſſolue it being conſummate: 1. Of the Greeke Church Theophylact ſhall ſpeake, who thus writeth vpon that place, 1.Timoth.5.14. I will the younger widowes to marrie: Maluiſſem,&c. I had rather theſe widowes had not departed from their couenants made with Chriſt, but ſeeing they had rather marrie, & ipſe aſſentior, I alſo giue conſent,&c: here widowes which profeſſed ſingle life, are licenſed to marrie.

Lib. de Monogam.

2 So Tertullian ſaith: Ad eas dirigit, quales ſupra denotat: Hee directeth his ſpeech to thoſe widowes, whom he noted before, that they had forſaken their firſt faith,&c. euen thoſe the Apoſtle alloweth to marrie.

Harm. ſect.18. p.560. Sect.18. p.569. Harm. ſect.18. pag.570.

3 Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. artic.6. A vow cannot take away Gods commandement. And againe: Although the breaking of a vow might be reprehended, yet it followeth not, that the marriage of ſuch perſons is to be diſſolued. Saxonic artic.21. Vowes, which wrap them in a kinde of life, wherein is the worſhip of Idols, are without doubt fruſtrate, according to the firſt commandement, — thou ſhalt haue no ſtrange Gods. Wittemberg c.21. Neither ought the vow of chaſtitie to be any hinderance herein, becauſe that ſuch a vow being taken vpon a man by humane ſuperſtition, without authoritie of Gods word, and againſt faith, is not acknowledged of God, and wedlocke alſo hath it chaſtitie, that he who hath vowed chaſtitie, and marrieth a wife in the Lord, doth indeede fulfill the vow of chaſtitie,&c.

4 See their owne Canons produced before.

Secondly, neither doth the infidelitie of the one partie make a nullitie of marriage: for S. Paul ſaith, that the woman in that caſe is not to forſake her husband if he will dwell with her: Of this matter ſee more, quæſt.2.part.2. of this Controuerſie. 1.Cor.7.13.

Cod.lib.1.tit.7.leg.16.Leo & Anthem. Si ſponſa coniugium ſponſi propter religionis diuerſitatem recuſauerit: If the ſpouſe refuſe to marrie with him, to whom ſhe is eſpouſed, &c. the law alloweth only a diſſoluing of the contract and eſpouſals for religion ſake, and not otherwiſe.

Diſtinct.10.c.1. Nicolaus, Si religionis cauſa coniugia debere diſſolui dicuntur, ſciendum eſt, quia licet hoc lex humana conceſſit, lex tamen diuina prohibuit: If for religion ſake marriages are ſaid to bee diſſolued, let it bee knowne, that although humane law doth allow it, yet Gods law doth forbid it.

Cauſ.28 c.1. Innocent. Quod Deus coniunxit, homo non ſeparet, &c. What God hath ioyned together, let not man put aſunder: and leaſt he ſhould be thought to ſpeake onely of thoſe, which marrie after Baptiſme, let them remember, that the queſtion was asked by the Iewes, and to the Iewes was the anſwere made, c.8. Auguſt. thus writeth to Pollentius: Tibi videtur infideles à fidelibus dimitti non licere, &c. You think that the Infidels ought not to be diſmiſſed from beleeuers, becauſe the Apoſtle forbiddeth it, but I ſay it is lawfull, becauſe the Lord forbiddeth it not; yet not expedient, Quia hoc ne fiat monet Apoſtolus, becauſe the Apoſtle wiſheth or admoniſheth, that it ſhould not be: here be two opinions, one thinketh it is not lawfull for Infidels to be diſmiſſed, the other that it is not expedient: ſo which opinion ſoeuer is followed, they are not at all to be diſmiſſed. Ibid.c.9. Affert impedimentum ſalutis, &c. The departure of the beleeuer from the Infidell, bringeth an hindrance to his ſaluation.

Decret.Gregor.lib.4.tit.19.c.8.Innocent. Fideles cum infidelibus matrimonialitèr copulati, &c. The beleeuers ioyned in marriage with vnbeleeuers, may freely and lawfully remaine with them.

Decret. Eutychiani. In poteſtate fidelis eſt poſt baptiſmum recipere vxorem, quam infidelis infidelem ante dimiſerat: It is in the power of a beleeuing man to receiue his wife after Baptiſme, which, when they were both Infidels, he diſmiſſed, &c. But if the very bond and marriage knot were diſſolued, as Bellarmine ſaith, how can they come together againe?

Thirdly, neither is the fault committed before the marriage, ſufficient to diſable the marriage once done: for then queſtion might haue beene made of the ſtrength of Dauids marriage with Bathſheba. And Auguſtine doubteth not thus to conclude, Poſſe ſanè fieri nuptias ex malè coniunctis honeſto poſt placito conſequente: That marriage may very well ſtand betweene thoſe, that once had vnlawfull carnall copulation, but afterward an honeſt purpoſe of marriage followed.

Can. Apoſtol.66. Non licitum eſto aliam ducere, quam quis prius ſollicitauit, quamuis paupercula ſit: It ſhall not be lawfull for a man to marrie any other, but her whom he entiſed to folly before, though ſhe be poore.

Concil. Lateranenſ. part.45.can.2. Alexander. Contrahere quis poteſt cum ea matrimonium, quam, viro viuente, adulterio polluerat: A man may contract marriage with her, whom, while her husband liued, he defiled with adulterie. Theſe Canons are directly oppoſite to the Ieſuites opinion.

Now whereas Bellarmine excludeth not all adulterie before going from future marriage, but where the parties were compact and confederate together to marrie afterward; their owne law ſimply maketh it lawfull for a man to marrie his concubine, though hee had promiſed her marriage before: Cauſ.22.qu.4.c.22. Quam prius concubinam habuerat, non eſt peccatum in coniugem ſuſcipere: It is no ſinne to make her his wife, that was before his concubine: cui iuramento firmauit, &c. to whom hee confirmed by an oath, to take her to wife. Cauſ.31.qu.1.c.2. Fieri poteſt coniugium cum quo præceſſit adulterium: Marriage may bee made with whom adulterie was before committed. Decret. Gregor. lib.4 tit.7.c.8. Siquis vxore viuente fide data, &c. If a man, his wife yet liuing, did giue his faith to marrie another, or did contract himſelfe to her, and did not carnally know her, the marriage is not to be diſſolued. So then neither adulterie precedent, nor yet the giuing of faith, or contracting marriage, the firſt husband or wife yet liuing, though theſe are grieuous offences; yet are not ſufficient to diſſolue or breake off Matrimonie.

But there are certaine caſes, wherein Matrimonie vnlawfully contracted, yea conſummate, may be diſſolued: as firſt, if the conſent of either partie bee wanting, as when by tyrannicall coaction and compulſion they come together, and the conſent is ſtill withholden.

Hormiſda decret 4. Filiam inuitam & renitentem, nemo viri alicuius coniugio cogat ſociari: quorum enim vnum eſt corpus, vnus eſſe debet animus: Let no man match in marriage vnto any his daughter againſt her will: for they that haue one bodie, ought alſo to haue one minde. Nicholaus de matrimon.can.1. Si ſolus conſenſus defuerit, cætera cum ipſo coitu celebrata fruſtrantur: If the conſent onely bee wanting, the very carnall copulation, and whatſoeuer elſe beſide, are all fruſtrate and voyd.

Secondly, if the conſent of both be wanting, as in the marriage of children, that are not able to giue conſent.

Nichola.1. de matrimon.can.3. Vbi non eſt conſenſus vtriuſq;, ibi non eſt coniugium, &c. Where each partie conſenteth not, there is no marriage: Therefore they which giue girles to boyes in marriage in the cradle, doe no act at all, vnleſſe both of them when they come to yeeres of diſcretion, conſent.

Thirdly, if there be an error of the perſon, as if one bee thruſt vpon a man in ſtead of another, as Lea was vpon Iacob: or an error in the condition of the partie, as if he or ſhe be an Hermaphrodite, an Eunuch, or ſuch like.

Lateranenſ.part.50.cap.28. Alexander. Sicut puer, qui non poteſt reddere debitum non eſt aptus coniugio, ſic quoque qui impotentes ſunt, minimè apti ad contrahenda matrimonia reputantur: As a childe, which cannot render the debt or dutie of marriage, is not fit for marriage; ſo neither are they fit to contract marriage, that haue any naturall weakneſſe or imbecillitie. In this place it is ſaid further, that although it bee not the cuſtome of the Romane Church, yet the French Church doth diſſolue marriage for frigiditie, and impotencie of nature.

Fourthly, if they marrie within the degrees forbidden by Moſes law. In all theſe caſes, Matrimonie thus vnlawfully begun and ratified, may bee diſſolued. But lawfull Matrimonie cannot be abrogate, but either by naturall death, or lawfull diuorce for fornication. In the caſe of deſertion alſo and long abſence of either partie, after the expecting of his returne ſome terme of yeeres, with probable intelligence of the parties death; or if hee be wilfully abſent, of his lewde and diſhoneſt life, the innocent partie, by the wiſe and deliberate ſentence of the Magiſtrate, may bee pronounced free.

For other matters which are commonly obiected, marriage is not to bee diſſolued: As for long abſence, when the husband is detained in captiuitie, or ſuch like: Leo epiſtol 77.cap.1. Quod fœminæ debeant, quæ captis viris nupſerant alijs, regreſſis de captiuitate viris, prioribus copulari: Women marrying to others while their husbands are captiues, muſt be reſtored vnto them at their returne.

Barrenneſſe is no cauſe of diſſolution: Lateranenſ part.6.cap.25. Ob coëundi poſſibilitatem fieri non debet diuortium: Diuorce muſt not be made, for poſſibilitie of generation.

The leproſie is no cauſe: Lateranenſ.37 part.cap.3. Alexander. Vxores propter lepram non ſunt dimittendæ: ſed illis petentibus debet debitum reddi: Women for leproſie muſt not be put away: but their husbands muſt performe the dutie of marriage if they require it.

So likewiſe in other caſes: Quicquid mulier contra te cogitauerit, vel ſi te accuſauerit, non eſt exceptâ cauſâ fornicationis eijcienda: Though thy wife ſhould conſpire againſt thee, and accuſe thee, yet ſhe muſt not be caſt off except for fornication, Nichol.1.decret.de matrim.6.

Ibid. can.7. Hi qui matrimonium ſani contraxerunt & vni ex duobus dementia, aut furor, aut aliqua infirmitas acceſſerit, non debent coniugia talium diſſolui: They which were ſound when they married, if either of them afterward fall into frenzie, madneſſe, or ſickneſſe, they muſt not for that be diuorced.

Ibid. Similiter ſciendum eſt de his, qui ab aduerſarijs excæcantur, aut membris truncantur, aut à barbaris execti ſunt: The like is to be ſaid of thoſe that haue their eyes pulled out, are maimed, or gelded of their enemies, &c. None of theſe are ſufficient cauſes to breake off marriage. And thus much of this queſtion.

THE FIFTH QVESTION, OF THE COMPARISON BETWEENE VIRGINITIE AND MARRIAGE.

The Papiſts.

VIrginitie is preferred before Marriage, not onely for that it is a more quiet ſtate of life, and freer from troubles in this world, but that it is more conuenient for the ſeruice of God, and that it hath a gratefull puritie and ſanctitie, both of bodie and ſoule, which Marriage hath not, Rhemiſt.

1.Cor.7.32. Argum. 1.Corinth.7.32. The vnmarried careth for the things of the Lord, how ſhe may pleaſe God: Ergo, virginitie is a fitter ſtate of life to ſerue and pleaſe God in, Rhemiſt. ibid.

The Proteſtants.

97.Error. FIrſt, we grant, according to the Apoſtles ſaying in this place, that virginitie is alſo a fitter ſtate of life for the ſeruice of God, yet not ſimply, but for thoſe onely that haue the gift of continencie: for they which cannot abſtaine, may and doe ſerue God with a more quiet minde being married, than many Popiſh virgines which burne in the luſt of concupiſcence. Secondly, yet it followeth not, that virginitie is a more holy and cleane thing in it ſelfe, and more meritorious before God, than marriage is: for this were to make marriage vnholy and vncleane; whereas it is not the act of marriage, but the abuſing thereof, that bringeth vncleanneſſe with it: before God in themſelues, neither is more holy than other.

Argum. It is faith which maketh vs accepted of God, not the merite of any worke: and therefore Apoc.14.4. of all faithfull beleeuers it is ſaid, Apocal.14.4. Theſe are they which were not defiled with women: for they are virgines. And he vnderſtandeth all that are redeemed by Chriſt, from amongſt men, and are the firſt fruits of the Lamb, verſ.4. and not onely thoſe, which properly in common vſe of ſpeech we call Virgines. And thus S. Ambroſe expoundeth: Si ideo putes virgines dictos, quia corpora ſua intaminata ſeruarunt, &c. If you onely vnderſtand virgines, becauſe they haue kept their bodies vnpolluted, then the Saints ſhall be excluded from this glory: for all the Apoſtles, except Iohn and Paul, had wiues, Ambr. in 2. Corinth. 11. True godlineſſe therefore and a ſincere faith, whereby wee are diuorced from the world, and ioyned to God, is the true virginitie.

Auguſtine: Sicut non eſt impar meritum patientiæ in Petro, qui paſſus eſt, & in Iohanne, qui paſſus non eſt: ſic non eſt impar meritum continentiæ in Iohanne, qui nullas eſt expertus nuptias, & in Abraham, qui filios generauit: As there was no greater merite of patience in Peter that ſuffered, than in Iohn, who ſuffered not; ſo there was no greater merite of continencie in Iohn that was neuer married, than in Abraham that begat children. See then, by his iudgement, there is the ſame merite of married and vnmarried perſons.

De bono coniugal. c. 21. tom. 6.

Synod. Gangrenſ. cap. 9. Si quis virginitatem profeſſus tanquam abominabiles nuptias iudicat, anathema ſit: If any man profeſſing virginitie doe condemne marriage, as an abominable thing, let him bee accurſed, &c. But thus doe our aduerſaries, who are carried away with ſuch an extraordinarie liking of their Monkiſh fained chaſtitie, that they deſpiſe marriage, calling it a prophaning and pollution of orders, as we haue ſeene before.

Cod. lib. 8. tit. 58. leg. 1. Conſtant. Whereas there was a law, that, celebs, a ſingle man was not capable of any bequeſt or legacie: the Emperour correcteth that ordinance, and thus enacteth: Sit omnibus æqua conditio capeſſendi, quod quiſque mereatur: Let the ſame condition bee to all, married and vnmarried to receiue, whatſoeuer they are meete or worthie of, &c. This is the equitie of mans law, to make no difference in reward betweene the ſingle and married: ſhall Gods law bee thought to be more vnequall?

Diſtinct. 30. c. 4. Si quis virginitatem, &c. If any man profeſſing virginitie for Gods cauſe, doe arrogantly diſpraiſe thoſe that are married, let him bee accurſed, &c. But the extraordinarie extolling and aduancing of ſingle life, tendeth to the diſpraiſe of marriage.

Cauſ. 32. 44. 9. 4. c. 6. Quis ignorat omnes retro ſanctos eiuſdem fuiſſe meriti, &c. Who is ignorant, that all the Saints in time paſſed, were of the ſame merit, that Chriſtians are? If then the Saints and Patriarches, that were married, be equall vnto Chriſtian virgines; then is not virginitie ſimply to be preferred before marriage.

Wee haue ſeene before. 1. The iudgement of the auncient Greeke Church, in their Synode Gangrenſ. not much vnlike is that ſaying of Ieremie the late Patriarke of Conſtantinople: Si quis admiranda iuſtitia — præpolleat, &c. Though a man excell in admirable iuſtice, ſi tamen cum ſuperbia & aliorum deſpicientia, &c. Yet if it be ioyned with pride, and the contempt of others, it will bring him into meere vanity, &c. the like may be ſaid of virginitie ioyned with pride.

Cenſur. oriental. c. 10.

2 Auguſtine ſaith, Obedientia coniugata, minus obedienti virgini præponenda eſt: Obedience in marriage is preferred before a diſobedient virgine.

Lib. de bono coniugal. c. 24.

3 Confeſſion of Bohemia, c. 19. We muſt not thinke, that the workes of thoſe which are vnmarried in the miniſterie, are to be preferred in merite and dignitie, before the workes of married men, &c. And a little after: Our men doe not ground the worthineſſe, holineſſe, or vertue of the Eccleſiaſticall miniſterie, no more then they doe of Chriſtian ſaluation, vpon either of theſe kindes, to wit, neither vpon the ſtate of ſingle life or wedlocke, &c. Wittemberg. artic. 26. It is euident that ſingle life is not commanded by the word of God: alſo it is euident, that although the ſtate of ſingle perſons be in publique danger more quiet, and more fit and commodious to execute the publique miniſteries of the Church, then is theirs which vſe it not, yet we muſt not thinke, that this kinde of life is of it ſelfe, before the tribunall ſeate of God more excellent, and more holy, then is marriage: for as in Chriſt, there is neither Iew nor Gentile, ſeruant, nor maiſter, as S. Paul ſaith, ſo neither married nor vnmarried, &c.

Harm. ſect. 18. p. 545. 547.

4 Their owne Canons ſee alleadged before.

The concluſion then is this, that virginitie, is both equall, ſuperiour, and inferiour to marriage. 1. Equall in reſpect of God before whom one meriteth not more, then another. 2. Superiour in regard of the cares and encumbrances which the ſingle ſtate is free from; and it is in it ſelfe a more excellent gift. 3. Inferiour in regard of the perſons profeſſing virginitie, if they be not equall in other gifts, of humilitie, obedience, ſobrietie, and ſuch like.

THE SIXTH QVESTION, OF THE TIMES of marriage prohibited.

The Papiſts.

There are certaine ſeaſons in the yeere, wherein for the holineſſe of the feſtiuall times, they hold it vnlawfull to haue marriage ſolemnized: as from the Aduent to the Epiphanie; from Septuageſima Sunday (as it is called) to the octaues of Eaſter: from three dayes afore the Aſcenſion; to the octaues of Pentecoſt, Ruard. Tapper. artic. 20. p. 526. But the Councell of Trent hath ſomwhat moderated this time, & cut it ſhorter, thinking it vnreaſonable that mariage ſhould be prohibited the third part of the yeere (for ſo much the time interdicted ariſeth to, if account be taken of the weekes:) The time of Pentecoſt therefore they haue diſpenſed with: and the time prohibited at Eaſter they would haue begun not from Septuageſima, but from Aſhwedneſday, Seſſ. 24. c. 10. Vpon theſe times they hold it vnlawfull publikely to haue marriage ſolemnized, both for the holineſſe of ſo great feaſts, and becauſe of receiuing the Sacraments, *Bellar.de matrim cap.*31.

98. Error.

Exod 19.15.
1.Sam.21.4.

Argum. God commanded the people to abſtaine from their wiues, when he was to appeare vnto them in Mount Sinai, Exod.19.15. And before the high Prieſt would deliuer the ſhew-bread to Dauid and his companie, he asked if the young men had kept themſelues from women: Ergo, marriage is not lawfull at all times, Bellarm.ibid.

Retract.lib.2. cap.85.

Anſwere. Firſt, theſe places alleaged doe rather proue, that men in thoſe interdicted times ought not at all to come at their wiues, then that the ſolemnization of marriage ſhould be reſtrained: but I thinke they would bee aſhamed to forbid men their wiues companie ſo long together, as fiue or ſixe weekes at the Natiuitie, and eight or nine weekes at Eaſter: why then ſhould not the one be as lawfull as the other? Secondly, the abſtinence from their wiues was commanded then, as a legall and ceremoniall kinde of ſanctification, as was alſo the waſhing of their clothes, Exod. 19.10. And the companie of women was at ſome times counted as a legall pollution, not as a ſinfull or vncleane act of it ſelfe: as the women after childbirth were commanded to purifie themſelues, Leuit.12. from a legall pollution onely, not from any ſinfull or vncleane act: for then it had beene a manifeſt iniurie to that holy birth that Mary purified her ſelfe according to the law. Wherefore ſeeing it was a legall kinde of ſanctification, it is not to be intruded and impoſed vpon Chriſtians now. Thirdly, neither can they proue that this kinde of abſtinence is neceſſarie alwaies before the receiuing of the Sacrament, though ſometimes we denie not but it is conuenient: for it was not alwaies required, no not of the Prieſts in the law, when they were to offer incenſe or ſacrifice. For whereas the high Prieſt, which was alwaies but one, was bound morning and euening to offer incenſe vnto the Lord, hee could not obſerue this rule vnleſſe he had beene inioyned perpetuall abſtinence, which wee ſee by the law was not impoſed vpon them. This doubt ſomewhat troubled Auguſtine: for firſt he ſaith, That it muſt needes follow, ſeeing the high Prieſt was married, and did ſometime goe in vnto his wife, that the offering of incenſe ſhould ſome dayes be intermitted: but in his Retractations he miſliketh his former ſolution, and thus determineth; That the high Prieſt firſt offered the morning incenſe, and afterward went in to his wife, & ſo was vncleane, vſque ad veſperam, but vntill the eeuening, not after the eeuentide, and then he offered the euening incenſe. To take this anſwere for this time, though it be inſufficient: for the Hebrew word, which is tranſlated the eeuen, or eeuentide ערב. ſignifieth the twi-light, when the Sunne is ſet, when light and darkneſſe are mixed together: but the incenſe was renewed before the Sun-ſet: yet I ſay, admitting Auguſtines ſolution, the high Prieſt did not abſtaine one whole day before he offered: much leſſe many dayes, much leſſe many weekes, much leſſe ſome moneths: as the Popiſh Church preſcribeth by interdicting ſo many dayes.

The Proteſtants.

1.Cor.7.5.

THat not onely the publike ſolemnitie of marriage at ſome times may haue intermiſſion, but all Matrimoniall acts ought to ceaſe: as when men either priuately doe giue themſelues to faſting and prayer, 1. Corinth. 7.5. or when publique or generall faſts are by the ſpirituall gouernours thought meete, and by the Chriſtian Magiſtrate proclaimed: wee doe not denie, but in our iudgement allow it, and by our practiſe approue it: but that Matrimonie at ſuch ſet times as an vnholy and vncleane thing is to be forbidden and reſtrained, we take it to be Popiſh ſuperſtition, and an Antichriſtian yoke.

Heb.13.4.
1.Cor.7.14.
Galath.4.10.
Coloſſ.2.16.

*Argum.*2. It diſgraceth the holy inſtitution of marriage, which the Apoſtle calleth honourable, and S. Paul counteth the fruites of marriage, which are the children of the faithfull, holy: How is it then, that there can be any time ſo holy, the which holy Matrimonie is not beſeeming? Againe, in thus doing they make difference of dayes, eſteeming ſome in themſelues more holy than others, contrarie to the Apoſtles rule.

1.Cor.7.5.
1.Tim.4.3.

*Argum.*2. The Apoſtle willeth, that they ſhould not defraud one another, but by conſent for a time &c. 1.Cor.7.5. which though it be eſpecially vnderſtood of married perſons, yet it may be extended to thoſe which are contracted together: how can they obſerue this rule, when their marriage is ſuſpended ten weeks together, from Septuageſima till the octaues of Eaſter? may not Sathan tempt them all this while for their incontinencie? Againe, what is this elſe, but a forbidding to marrie, though not in whole, yet in part; contrarie to the Apoſtle, 1. Timoth.4.3.

*Argum.*3. The Tridentine Chapter maketh but two holy times in the yeere, the Natiuitie, and Eaſter: during which times, they would not haue Matrimonie ſolemnized: and I pray you, why is Pentecoſt left out, is it not as feſtiuall a time as the other? And if they haue power to diſpenſe with the feſtiuall of Pentecoſt, why not with the reſt alſo? wherefore it appeareth to be but an humane deuice. And as the Popiſh Church hath abrogated one of the interdicted times for marriage; ſo it were to be wiſhed, that thoſe reformed Churches, which haue abandoned other ſuperſtitious obſeruations, and yet doe retaine this vſe for the reſtraint of marriage at certaine ſeaſons, would proceede a degree further, and grant a generall liberty to marrie in thoſe inhibited times: firſt, becauſe it is an offence to other reformed Churches, that where the Goſpell is profeſſed, any ſuch yoke ſhould be impoſed. Secondly, if Papiſts haue enlarged this reſtraint, thinking it not reaſonable to enioyne ſo many times of inhibition, much more ought Proteſtants to do that which is moſt agreeable to the liberty of the Goſpel. Thirdly, while by diſpenſation it is made lawfull to marrie in theſe times, for euery one that wil be as the charge therof,& not otherwiſe,it wil be taken only to be an engine to draw aduantage. Fourthly, ſeeing that the Martyrs were perſecuted, for marrying in theſe inhibited times, as Iohn Crimes mentioned afterward: it is very vnfit, and vnbeſeeming, that the people ſhould vnder the Goſpell be encumbred with ſuch things. Fifthly, becauſe the lawes of the Realme doe ſeeme to giue libertie for marriage at all times, in theſe words: That no reſeruation, or prohibition, Gods law except, ſhall trouble & impeach any marriage, without the Leuiticall degrees: ann.32.Henric.8.c.38. If no prohibition, then not the prohibition or reſtraint of time. Laſtly, becauſe this reſtraint of marriage is not grounded vpon the word of God, for then it could not be altered; but is onely an humane conſtitution, and ſeemeth rather to abridge the libertie of marriage, and to be againſt the Apoſtles rule, 1.Cor.7.5. as I haue ſhewed before: in mine opinion it were much better for theſe reaſons alleadged, for this Canon of reſtraint to be diſcontinued, than vrged: and I hope, that the diſcreete officers of our Church, will be more ſparing and moderate therein.

But to returne, let vs ſee a little I pray you, how well they agree together about the times prohibited for marriage: ſome of them beſide the three times of the Natiuitie, Eaſter, Pentecoſt, make alſo a fourth time vnſeaſonable for marriage, and that is at the feaſt of Saint Iohn Baptiſt: Neither do they here agree about the time, ſome preſcribing three weekes before of abſtinence from marriage: Synod. Illerdenſ.decret.1.ex Gratian. Some foureteene daies only, Synod. Salegunſtadienſ.can.3. Some doe adde alſo other times of prohibition, as in the foure Ember faſts, and in the holy daies eeues: when they hold it vnlawful to marrie, Salegunſtad.ibid. Others do abridge the three vſual times of reſtraint, either in part, as reformat.Ratiſpon.artic.21. the laſt weeke only of Aduent is reſtrained for mariage: or in whole, as the reſtraint of Pentecoſt is abridged and cut off in the late Tridentine Chapter. Thus it appeareth to be only an humane tradition, which hath ſo much doubtfulnes, and vncertaintie: as though any time can be too holy for mariage.

Could there be a more holy place then Paradiſe? or a more holy time, than while man was in his innocencie? yet euen then and there Matrimonie was inſtituted.

Laſtly, is not the Sabbath or Lords day an holy feſtiuall time? and as holy as any is? what if I ſaid more holy, for this only immediatly was inſtituted of God: but mariage may notwithſtanding bee fitly ſolemnized vpon that day, the abuſes and diſorders, which commonly fall out in ſuch aſſemblies, being cut off: for Auguſtine is of opinion, that the mariage in Cana of Galile, was die Dominico, vpon the Lords day. And it is moſt fit that Matrimonie ſhould be ſolemnized in the face of the congregation, which is vſually aſſembled vpon that day: Ergo, it may as fitly and conueniently at any time bee kept and ſolemnized, excepting the reſpects aforeſaid. De tempor. ſerm.159.

The Ciuill law for decencie and comelines ſake interdicteth ſome times of mariage to particular perſons: as a woman marrying within a yeere after her husbands death, was counted infamous: Cod.lib.2.tit.12.leg.15.Gordian. but generally to all and for religion the law enioyneth not times of reſtraint.

1. Whereas the ancient Greeke writers had a moſt reuerent opinion of mariage: as Epiphanius ſaith, Sancta Eccleſia nuptias habet venerandas & colit eas: The holy Church doth hold mariage to be reuerenced, and maketh account of them. And Chryſoſtome: Nuptiæ precioſa res & nobis & externis videtur; Mariage ſeemeth to be a precious thing to vs, and thoſe which are without, &c. Theſe counting mariage ſo holy and reuerent a thing, no doubt thought no time too holy for it. Lib.2.tom.2. Hom.12.in 1.ad Corinth.

2. Tertullian ſaith, Prohiberi nuptias nuſquam legimus, vt bonum ſcilicet: Wee reade no where mariage to be prohibited, as being a good thing, &c. If mariage be no where prohibited, then neither at any time to be reſtrained. Lib.1.ad vxor.

3. Auſpurg, artic.5. Humane traditions ought to giue place to times and opportunities, eſpecially in the Church, wherein there ſhould be more regard had of the ſaluation of the godly, and of loue and publike peace, then of humane traditions. This reſtraint of mariage then at certaine times, being but an humane tradition, ought to giue place to publike peace. Sect.18.p.554.

4. The Tridentine Chapter, as is ſhewed before, argum.3. hath taken away one of the times of reſtraint at Pentecoſt, and why not the reſt alſo?

And let it be here obſerued, that the Chriſtian Romaniſts haue bemoned this cuſtome of reſtraining mariage at certaine times of the Pagane Romanes their predeceſſors: for ſo Plutarke writeth, that menſe Maio mulieres non ducuntur, that women are not married in the moneth of May: and that, publicis ferijs mos non eſt nubere virgines, in the publike feries or holy daies, it is the faſhion for virgins not to marrie. Queſtion.Roman.q.86. q.105.

Wee haue here the teſtimonie of the Martyrs: Iohn Lambert holy Martyr: In that they will not ſuffer mariage to bee ſolemnized at all times in the yeere: I think it ſtandeth not with Chriſts rule, but is againſt the ſame; and that they will not ſuffer the banes vpon all holy daies to bee proclaimed, vnleſſe a diſpenſation for money bee purchaſed: All this God forbiddeth: Fox pag.1105. col.1.

Henrie Crimes troubled and perſecuted for marrying his wife on Palme-Sunday eeuen: Fox pag.1917.

THE SEVENTH QVESTION, TO WHOM MAtrimoniall cauſes properly doe belong.

The Papiſts.

99.Error. MAtrimoniall cauſes, as to determine of the degrees of kinred, of diuorces, of the impediments of marriage, of contracts: doe onely belong vnto the Church, and the Magiſtrate may make lawes hereof (approbante principe eccleſiaſtico) by the approbation of the eccleſiaſticall prince (hee meaneth the Pope:) otherwiſe the lawes of Princes are in this behalfe voide: Bellarm. de matrimon. cap. 32.

Matth.19. 1.Cor.7.13. Argum. 1. Our Sauiour Chriſt giueth a law concerning diuorces, Matth. 19. hee ſendeth them not to the Ciuill Magiſtrate: and Saint Paul preſcribeth, what is to bee done in the mariage of beleeuers and Infidels, 1. Cor. 7. 13. Ergo, the officers of the Church are onely Iudges of theſe cauſes: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not: for Chriſt as King of his Church, the Apoſtles as his chiefe Miniſters, by warrant and commiſſion from him, preſcribed and gaue lawes to the Church: no mortall man now is to challenge that authoritie to himſelfe. Secondly, by this reaſon eccleſiaſticall perſons ſhall haue the rule of all cauſes: for Saint Paul deſcribeth the office alſo of Princes, and giueth direction for ciuill cauſes, as for tribute, vſing of the ſword, and ſuch like, Rom. 13. doth it follow then that theſe things doe belong to the Apoſtles ſucceſſors? Thirdly, as the Apoſtles did giue rules and directions for Matrimoniall and other cauſes: ſo it is the Miniſters part alſo, by the word of God to miniſter counſell, and giue direction to the Ciuill Magiſtrate in theſe caſes, but not without authoritie from the ſame power to meddle with the execution thereof.

Argum. 2. Matrimonie 1. is a Sacrament, and therefore belongeth to the knowledge of eccleſiaſticall perſons: 2. and many caſes of conſcience may fall out, wherein recourſe is to be had to the paſtors of mens ſoules: 3. otherwiſe, when there are no Chriſtian Magiſtrates, their ſpirituall cauſes ſhould be brought before Heathen Iudges, if the Church hath no power to diſcerne of them: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, wee denie Matrimonie to be a Sacrament, neither ſhall they be euer able to proue it ſo. Secondly, in caſes of conſcience in Matrimonie the paſtors of ſoules muſt be conſulted with out of the word: but it followeth not, that they therefore ſhould make lawes: and are your Canoniſts and Licentiates paſtors of ſoules, to whome you referre the deciding of theſe cauſes? Thirdly, Heathen Iudges haue 1. made good lawes concerning Matrimoniall matters, as that no man ſhould marrie his fathers concubine, Alexander. Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 4. not without the parents conſent: Dioclet. ibid. leg. 12. Not the ſiſter, ſiſters daughter, aunt, &c. Leg. 17. Dioclet. Not two wiues at once: ibid. tit. 5. leg. 2. Dioclet. 2. But where ſuch lawes faile, they muſt take that courſe which S. Paul did againſt the inceſtuous perſon, to vſe ſpirituall correction.

The Proteſtants.

MAtrimoniall cauſes, ſuch as are before rehearſed, originally do belong to the Ciuill Magiſtrate, by whoſe munificence they haue been granted to eccleſiaſticall perſons, and vnto them properly it doth belong to make Matrimoniall lawes.

Rom.13.4. 1.Timoth.2.2. Arg. 1. This is euident firſt out of the Scripture, for Moſes and not Aaron, did publiſh the lawes concerning the degrees of mariage, Leuit. 18. and other Matrimoniall cauſes. The Magiſtrate is Gods miniſter to take vengeance on them that doe euill, Rom. 13. 4. therefore alſo to cenſure and puniſh all tranſgreſsions and offences in mariage; to him it appertaineth to ſee that men liue in godlineſſe and honeſtie, 1. Tim. 2. 2. Therefore it is part of the Magiſtrates care, that honeſtie and godlines be kept in Matrimonie and Matrimoniall duties and cauſes.

Argum. 2. Secondly, this is proued by the ancient practiſe of the Ciuill power: how the Emperours both Heathen and Chriſtian haue made lawes as concerning the degrees, contracts, diuorce of mariages; ſee Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. de Nuptijs, tit. 5. de inceſto, &c. Beſide their practiſe, the teſtimonie of the law is euident: Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 3. Seuerus. Illicitum matrimonium eorum ſeculari iudice: Vnlawfull mariage muſt be complained of before a ſecular Iudge; whom the law calleth, competentem iudicem, a competent Iudge. If the Secular be competent, the Eccleſiaſticall is incompetent. Ibid. leg. 11. Dioclet. If a mans father detaine his wife, rector prouinciæ, the rector of the prouince ſhall helpe. Leg. 20. Theodoſ. If there be many competitors of a woman, that is an orphane, Iudici deliberare permiſſum eſt; the Iudge ſhall determine whom ſhe ſhall haue.

Argum. 3. It appeareth by the reaſon of the law; firſt, Cod. lib. 3. tit. 8. leg. 1. Alexander. Poteſt vniuerſam incidentem quæſtionem examinare, &c. He before whom any principall cauſe is brought, may examine euery queſtion incident; but ſo cannot an eccleſiaſticall perſon, examine euery matter that falleth in queſtion in the caſe of Matrimonie. Secondly, Ibid. leg. 3. Valerianus: Ciuilis quæſtio & incidens criminalis eadem ſententia terminantur, &c. A ciuill queſtion and criminall falling into it, are ended with the ſame ſentence: but eccleſiaſticall perſons haue nothing to doe with Ciuill cauſes, as with matters of inheritance, debts, dowries, which are incident into Matrimoniall cauſes: Ergo, neither the iudgement of the crimes belongeth to them. Thirdly, Cod. lib. 3. tit. 26. leg. 3. Antonin. Cui denegatur executio, denegatur pronuntiatio: To whom the execution is denied, the pronouncing alſo or giuing of the ſentence is denied: But eccleſiaſticall perſons cannot execute the law in Matrimoniall offences, as in puniſhing of their bodie, or goods: Ergo, neither doth the ſentence originally and properly appertaine vnto them. They being incompetent perſons of themſelues, are made competent by the conſtitution of Princes: as the law ſaith, Cod.lib.3.tit.13.leg.5. Artad. Principis oraculum incompetentem iudicem facit competentem: The oracle of the Prince maketh an incompetent Iudge competent.

Theſe Imperiall conſtitutions do ſhew, what was the practiſe both of the Eaſt and South Church, which were vnder the Emperour.

Confeſſion of Auſpurg, artic. 7. If ſo be they haue any other power or iuriſdiction, and hearing and vnderſtanding certaine caſes, as namely of matrimonie and tithes, they hold it by mans law, &c. Harm.ſect.11. p.367.

Saxonie, artic. 18. Our Ciuill Magiſtrates haue appointed, and doe defend iudgements for mariage matters in their gouernment, &c. Sect.18.p.565.

B.Rhenanus, aduiſeth Diuines and Lawyers to admoniſh the Pope, Emperour, and other Princes to prouide a remedie, that children be not married, inconſultis imo inuitis parentibus, their parents not conſulted with, or againſt their will, &c. Then in his opinion Kings and Princes haue right to meddle with matrimoniall cauſes. Annot.in Tertul.lib.2.ad vxor.in fine.

THE EIGHTH QVESTION, OF THE CEREmonies and rites of Matrimonie.

The Papiſts.

THe Ieſuite reckoneth vp ſeuen. First, they which are to be ioyned in Matrimonie, are bleſſed of the Prieſt. Secondly, oblation is made for them in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe. Thirdly, they are couered with a vaile. Fourthly, they are coupled together vitta purpurea & candida, with a ſcarſe or riband, partly white, partly purple. Fifthly, the Bride giueth to the Bridegroome a ring, firſt hallowed and bleſſed of the Prieſt. Sixthly, he commendeth them to God in his prayers. Seuenthly, he exhorteth and admoniſheth them of their mutuall dutie, Bellarm.cap.33.de Matrimon. 100. Error.

The Proteſtants.

SOme of thoſe rites wee altogether allow and vſe them our ſelues, as the 6. and 7. for both prayers are made vnto God for them, and they are by the Miniſter put in minde of their dutie: and all is done with vs in the vulgar tongue, much more to the edifying of the people, and comfort of the parties themſelues: whereas their idolatrous Prieſt chattereth all in an vnknowne tongue: A goodly exhortation ſure, when the parties exhorted vnderſtand not one word thereof. Some other of theſe rites we vtterly reiect, as the 2.3 4 for oblation or ſacrifice, in their meaning, wee acknowledge none: for the married parties to receiue the Communion, if there be a ſufficient number, we neither hold it neceſſarie as being of the eſſence of mariage, nor yet thinke it vnmeete. But as for that coloured and painted attire of blew and white, we take it fitter for a May-game, then to be ſhewed in a ſolemne aſſemblie of Chriſtians.

Nichol.1.de Matrim.can.4 Vt ligaturam auream, vel argenteam, vel ex quolibet metallo compoſitam, quando nuptialia fœdera contrahunt, in capitibus non deferant: That they weare no billament or plate of gold or ſiluer in their heads, when they celebrate the Matrimoniall contract. Yet ſuch ornaments were more ſeemely, then ſuch gue-gawes, and toyes of blew and white.

Colonienſ.part.7.cap.47. Ludicra illa, quæ in templis poſt benedictionem ſacerdotalem fieri conſueuerunt, veluti in pulſando ſponſo, atque alia eiuſdem generis penitus tollantur: nam res ſeria, quam Deus ipſe inſtituit, agitur: Thoſe light toyes which are accuſtomed to be done in the Church, after the bleſſing of the Prieſt vpon the married couple, as in ſmiting of the Bridegroome, and ſuch like, muſt be left: for a ſerious matter of Gods owne inſtitution is in hand.

Cod.lib.5.tit.4.tit.21.Theodoſ. Milites ſine antiqua ſolennitate, &c. Souldiers haue licenſe to contract Matrimonie without the ancient ſolemnitie. Ibid.leg.22. Si pompa aliaque nuptiarum celebritas omittitur, &c. If the pompe and celebritie of mariage be omitted, nothing is wanting to the firmenes or ſurenes of mariage: Ergo, by the Ciuill law ſuch toyes and vaine pompe are not required, nor neceſſarie. The reſt wee in part allow, as the Ring, ſo it be vſed only as a ciuill ornament, and token of mutuall loue: but that popiſh bleſſing either of the Ring, or of the married couple with the fingers acroſſe, and muttering of ſome few inchaunting words, as though by the very act of popiſh bleſſing, there were a ſecret vertue and qualitie of holineſſe infuſed into the things ſo bleſſed or inchanted; we condemne it as a ſuperſtitious toy. So we conclude, all ſuch rites in Matrimonie, as haue a comely and profitable vſe, tending to edifying, we refuſe not: the reſt wee reiect, and ſend them backe to Rome, from whence they came.

Tertullian ſheweth what ſolemnities were vſed in mariage in his time: I ſuffice not to ſhew the happines of that mariage, quod eccleſia conciliat, oblatio confirmat, obſignatum angeli renuntiant, Pater ratohabet: which the Church doth begin, the oblation cōfirmeth, the Angels ſeale, the Father ratifieth, &c. Their chiefe and only ceremonie of account, was their oblation & communicating in the Sacrament. Lib.2.ad vxor.

Heluetia latter confeſſion, chap. 29. Let them be confirmed publikely in the Church, with prayer and bleſſing of them.

THE

THE SIXTEENTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, OF CONFIRMATION, ORDERS, EXTREAME VNCTION.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF Confirmation.

THe parts of this queſtion are theſe. Firſt, whether it be a Sacrament. Secondly, of the parts thereof. Thirdly, of the Miniſter. Fourthly, of the effect of this ceremonie. Fifthly, of the rites, and whole order thereof.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER it be a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

101.Error. THat Confirmation is properly and truly a Sacrament, it was decreed in the *Tridentin. Concil.ſeſſ. 7.can.*1. and it is their generall opinion.

Act.8.17. Argum. Act 8 17. They did lay their hands vpon them, and they receiued the holy Ghoſt: This impoſition of hands, together with the prayers here ſpecified, was no doubt, the Sacrament of Confirmation: for here is an outward ſigne, and a ſpirituall grace: Ergo, a Sacrament, Rhemiſt.ibid.Bellar. de Confirmat.lib.2.cap.2.

Anſw. Firſt, theſe were miraculous gifts of the holy Ghoſt, as the gifts of tongues, of prophecying, healing, which were beſtowed vpon the Diſciples, whereof the impoſition of hands was a ſigne at that time: but it is impoſſible to ground an ordinarie and perpetuall Sacrament vpon an extraordinarie example: and that they were ſuch viſible graces of the ſpirit, it appeareth, becauſe Simon Magus ſaw that the holy Ghoſt was giuen them by laying on of hands.

Secondly, the holy Ghoſt was obtained by their prayers, verſ.15. and not by the laying on only of hands.

Thirdly, to make a Sacrament, it is not enough to haue a viſible ſigne, and to ſhew ſome ſpirituall grace therewith to bee beſtowed: for then the ſpittle and clay that Chriſt vſed, the napkins alſo and partlets, which were carried to the ſicke from the Apoſtles, and they were healed preſently: all theſe ſhould be ſacraments; for here are outward ſignes, and ſome effect followed: yet becauſe there was no inſtitution of a Sacrament by Chriſt, nor any commandement to vſe them, neither theſe, nor the impoſition of hands can be a Sacrament.

Fourthly, the Apoſtles had an eſpeciall commandement to impoſe hands, and a ſpeciall promiſe by laying on of hands to giue the holy Ghoſt, which we now haue not.

Fifthly, ſeeing the extraordinarie gifts, which the Apoſtles beſtowed by impoſition of hands, are now ceaſed, the ceremonie in that behalfe alſo is expired.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1. The Apoſtles gaue not only the miraculous gifts of the Spirit, but the holy Ghoſt; for all did not ſpeake with tongues, but theſe gifts all the beleeuers had. 1.Cor.12.30. 2. It cannot bee ſhewed, that the Apoſtles had any ſuch ſpeciall commandement or promiſe, but the promiſe is generally made to the Church: I will be with you to the end of the world. 3. Though the viſible ſignes are ceaſed, yet the inuiſible grace, which was giuen by the impoſition of hands, remaineth ſtill: Bellarm. cap.2.

Contra. Firſt, we 1. grant, that by impoſition of hands, the Apoſtles gaue both inuiſible graces and viſible ſignes together, not the one without the other: this notwithſtanding it was an extraordinarie worke of the Apoſtles, and no good ground for an ordinarie Sacrament. 2. Though all beleeuers ſpake not with tongues, yet they had all in thoſe daies ſome eſpeciall or extraordinarie gift for the confirmation of their faith, Mark.16.17. Theſe tokens ſhall follow them that beleeue, &c. 3. Yet it is Mark.16.17. cleare, that all theſe at Samaria receiued extraordinarie gifts, for they had been baptized before and beleeued, and were partakers of the common grace: and they were ſuch graces as Simon ſaw to be giuen: therefore extraordinarie and viſible.

Secondly, it is great boldneſſe to denie, that the Apoſtles had a ſpeciall promiſe to giue the graces of the ſpirit, and a commandement ſo to doe: for he himſelfe granteth, Nunquam ordinariè impoſuiſſent manus: They would neuer ſo ordinarily haue impoſed their hands, if Chriſt had not ſo commanded. 2. Ananias by the commandement of Chriſt laid his hands vpon Paul, not to take away his blindneſſe only (as Bellarmine boldly affirmeth) but that hee might be filled with the holy Ghoſt. Here is both an expreſſe commandement and promiſe. 3. Some generall promiſes were made not only to the Apoſtles, but to the whole Church, as of Chriſts perpetuall preſence and protection: but it is very abſurd, to ſay, that the Apoſtles had no more power to giue the holy Ghoſt, then others ſucceeding them haue; for this were to make all Apoſtles, which S. Paul denieth.

Act.10.17.

1.Cor.12.29.

Thirdly, if the viſible ſignes are ceaſed, which came by impoſition of hands, then haue you loſt your ſacrament, the ſacramentall effect being extinct: the inuiſible graces of the Spirit remaine, but not conferred by impoſition of hands, but by the preaching of the word, and prayers of the Church. Hitherto therefore you haue proued no ſacrament.

The Proteſtants.

WE grant a ceremonie of impoſition of hands vſed in the Apoſtles time, and after, ſo long as the miraculous gifts of the holy Ghoſt continued in the Church: there is alſo another kind of impoſition of hands, ſuch as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, which may haue perpetuall vſe in the Church, which is nothing elſe but a kinde of prayer to be ſtrengthened by the holy Ghoſt, and for the increaſe of grace. But neither this nor the other doe we hold to be a Sacrament.

Heb.6.2.

*Argum.*1. Euery ſacrament muſt haue his appointment from Chriſt, conſiſting both of an outward element, and the word of inſtitution: but the Popiſh ſacrament of confirmation hath none of theſe: the element they vſe, is oyle, the word of conſecration, I ſigne thee with the ſigne of the Croſſe, and anoint thee with the Chriſme of health, in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghoſt: but none of theſe haue their inſtitution by Chriſt or his Apoſtles any where in the new Teſtament, Act.8.19. and in other places wee reade that the Apoſtles vſed impoſition of hands, but there is no where mention made of Chriſme or oyle: neither was this ſuperſtitious deuice in vſe then, whatſoeuer the Ieſuite ſaith, being brought in long after by [a] Syluester, who is reported by Damaſus to be the deuiſer of Chriſme: Ergo, it hauing no inſtitution in the Goſpell, it is no ſacrament.

Act.8.19.

[a] Some aſcribe this inuention to Hyginus before: but it is not like to be ſo ancient: ſee further anſwer to the obiector here, pag.77. Retect.

*Argum.*2. The Scriptures beſide that extraordinarie impoſition of hands vſed by the Apoſtles, make mention of another impoſition of hands, not as of a ſacrament by it ſelfe, but as appertaining to the ſacrament of Baptiſme, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.6.2. The doctrine of baptiſmes and laying on of hands: this externall rite depended vpon baptiſme, it was not a ſeuerall Sacrament by it ſelfe.

To this effect alſo their owne Canon, *p.*3.*diſtinct.*4.*c.*124. Nullus miniſtrorum, &c. None of the Miniſters that hath power to baptize ſhould goe without Chriſme: Quia inter nos placuit ſemel in baptiſmate Chriſmari, &c. Becauſe the vſe is with vs once in baptiſme to be Chriſmed. Chriſmatis non niſi vna benedictio: Chriſme is but once bleſſed or hallowed, &c. Here wee ſee, that Chriſme, which they now vſe in confirmation, went together then with baptiſme.

Auguſtine ſaith, Manus impoſitio quid aliud eſt, quàm oratio ſuper hominem? The impoſition of the hands, what elſe is it but prayer ouer a man? He ſaith not, it is a ſacrament.

De Baptiſm. lib.3.c.16.

Deuſdedit. Papa decret. Scitis quia quomodo ſunt 7. dona ſpiritus ſancti, ita ſunt ſeptem dona baptiſmi, à primo pabulo ſacrati ſalis, & ingreſſus ſanctæ Eccleſiæ, vſque ad confirmationem ſpiritus ſancti per Chriſma: Ye know, that as there are ſeuen gifts of the holy Ghoſt, ſo there are ſeuen gifts of baptiſme, from the firſt ſpirituall nouriſhment of hallowed ſalt, and the entrance to the Church, vnto the confirmation of the holy Ghoſt by oyle, &c. Here confirmation is but a part of Baptiſme, and therefore not a ſacrament of it ſelfe.

*Concil. Arelatenſ. ſub Carolo. can.*18. Vt presbyteri ſub ſigillo chryſma cuſtodiant, genus enim ſacramenti eſt: That the Prieſt keepe the Chriſme vnder ſeale, for it is a kinde of ſacrament, &c. Confirmation miniſtred with Chriſme is a kinde of ſacrament, that is, after a ſort, properly it is not.

In this cauſe ſuffered Maſter Benbridge holy Martyr, for denying Confirmation to be a Sacrament, or that the Biſhop doth giue grace thereby, pag. 2046. col. 2. artic. 3.

The Grecians at this day, as Villamont reporteth, denie the Sacrament of Confirmation: ſo do the Ruſſians alſo, as Sacranus: and they vſe this reaſon, taken from theſe words of the Nicene Creede: I beleeue one baptiſme: if there be but one baptiſme, there is alſo but one vnction. So in the Æthiopike Church, Confirmation and Chriſme is not held for a Sacrament: as Zaga Zabo their Biſhop confeſſeth.

THE

THE SECOND PART, OF THE MATTER and forme of Confirmation.

The Papiſts.

102.Error. THe matter of this popiſh Sacrament, they ſay, is oyle mixed and tempered with balme, Rhemiſt. Act.8.ſect.6. Firſt hallowed and conſecrated by the Miniſter thereof, and ſtriked in manner of a croſſe vpon the forehead of him that is to be confirmed, Bellarm.c.8.

2.Cor.1.21. Argum. 2.Cor.1.21. It is God which eſtabliſheth vs, or confirmeth vs with you in Chriſt, and hath annointed vs. Here the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of confirmation, and of the materiall part thereof, which is holy vnction, or annointing: and this holy Chriſme was prefigured by that precious oyntment, Exodus 30. wherewith the Tabernacle and the Prieſts were annointed: Bellarm.ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, the Apoſtle ſaith not, which hath confirmed, but, which doth confirme: which if it were meant of that externall ceremonie of confirmation, ſee what iniurie you offer to the Apoſtle, that being a confirmer of others, he had need now to be catechized and confirmed himſelfe. Againe, he ſpeaketh not of confirmation wrought by the miniſterie of men: but God (ſaith he) confirmeth vs, that is, eſtabliſheth vs by his ſpirit.

2. It is too too groſſe to vnderſtand by this annointing, your greazie beſmeering mens faces with your Chriſme, ſeeing the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe in the next verſe; He hath ſealed vs, and giues the earneſt of his ſpirit in our hearts, verſ.22. Of this holy annointing of our hearts by the ſpirit, Saint 1.Ioh.2.27. Iohn alſo maketh mention, ſaying, This annointing teacheth you all things. But doth the annointing of the face, I pray you, giue men inſtruction?

3. S. Ambroſe thus expoundeth S. Paul of the ſpirituall annointing: Chriſtus confirmat gentes in fide promiſſa, &c. Christ confirmeth the Gentiles in the faith promiſed to the Iewes, &c. he hath annointed vs, giuing vs regiam honorificentiam, a kingly honour; as Peter ſaith, we are genus regale, of a royall kinde; per vnctionem ſpiritualem, by the ſpirituall annointing: who hath alſo ſigned vs, dando ſpiritum ſuum nobis pignus, giuing his ſpirit as a pledge, that wee ſhould not doubt of his promiſes: Ambroſ.in 1.Cor.2.

Tractat.3.in Epiſt.Ioh.1. Let vs heare Auguſtines expoſition, Chriſtus ſit in corde, vnctio ipſius ſit in corde: — Chriſtus docet, inſpiratio eius docet: Let Chriſt be in your hearts, let his annointing be in your hearts: Chriſt teacheth, his inſpiration teacheth, &c. You may bee aſhamed therefore, ſo groſſely to abuſe the Scripture.

And concerning the oyntment of the Tabernacle: firſt, it is no way anſwerable or like to the popiſh Chriſme: 1. There is no mention made of balme in that confection, Exod.30.33. for the word which Bellarmine vrgeth, בשם beſhem, is a generall name for ſweete ſpices; by the Septuagint tranſlated, ἡδύσματα, by the vulgar Latine, aromata, ſpices: and ſo is it taken in Scripture, Cant.4.16. 5.1. But Cantic.4.16. c.5.6. 2. admit that there was balme there, as ſome thinke, being the chiefe of the reſt, yet had they other ſweete ſpices, Cynamon, Calamus, Caſſia: you muſt mingle theſe alſo with your Chriſme, if you will finde a type here. 3. This oyntment ſerued for the Prieſts; you muſt proue then that Chriſt the high Prieſt of the new teſtament was thus annointed: for if it belonged not to him, neither are we to chal- Luk. 4.18. lenge it: but Chriſt was no otherwiſe annointed then by the ſpirit. 4. They were not to annoint Exod.30.32. any mans fleſh with that oyntment; how then dare you preſume to lay your Chriſme vpon euery mans forehead that is confirmed.

Secondly, ſay that your Chriſme, and that oyntment were in all points agreeable; who taught Coloſſ.2.17. you to borrow ceremonies of the Iewes, ſeeing they were but types and ſhadowes, but the bodie is in Chriſt?

Argum. 1. As for your oyle therefore mixed with balme; Firſt, the true balme you know is not to bee had, and therefore you abuſe the people: As it may appeare, Epiſt. 2. Fabiani ad Orientales: in the which Epiſtle he reprooueth them for not renewing the Chriſme euery yeere: Dicunt enim nec balſamum per ſingulos annos poſſe reperiri: For they alleaged, that they could not get the right balme euery yeere: If they of the Eaſt countrey could not get it where it groweth, how ſhould it come into the Lib.12.c.25. Weſt parts? Plinie alſo ſaith, that the balme, which grew but in two places of Iudæa, is periſhed: yet Bellarmine controuleth him, and ſaith, that there is a kinde of balme brought from India, beſide that which vſed to grow in Iudæa: yet by Bellarmines leaue it cannot be that balme, which grew in Iudæa, which he ſaith the Apoſtles vſed. And Plinie may be credited for this matter, being a curious ſearcher out of the ſecrets of nature. Secondly, make the beſt of it you can, it is but a Iewiſh ceremony. Thirdly, your benediction of it, is but a kinde of magicall inchantment, ſeeing you haue no word of God to conſecrate creatures in that ſort: for all things are ſanctified by the word of God and prayer: Ergo, without the warrant of God there is no ſuch ſanctifying of creatures.

Act.10.44. Act.8.17. Argum. 2. Act.10.44. the holy Ghoſt is giuen without any Chriſme, Act.8.17. 19.5. the Apoſtles laid on their hands, but vſed no Chriſme. Ergo, your Chriſme hath no ground out of Scripture. Kemnitij argum.

Bellarm. 1. In the firſt place alleaged, the holy Ghoſt was giuen by the ſingular priuiledge of God without a Sacrament. 2. Where mention is made of impoſition of hands, Chriſme alſo is vnderſtoode: as where the Apoſtles are ſaid to baptize in the name of the Lord Ieſus, both the father and the ſonne are vnderſtoode: and where the Apoſtle ſaith, Wee are ſaued by the lauacre of regeneration, hee vnderſtandeth alſo the word; though hee make no mention of it: Bellarm. c. 9. reſponſ. ad argum. 1.

Act.19.5.

Contra. Firſt, though 1. the holy Ghoſt came vpon them while Peter preached, yet this is no ſingular or extraordinarie priuiledge, but the vſuall effect of the preaching of the word: as we may ſee in Lydia, Act. 16. and faith ordinarily commeth by hearing. And though the ſpirit was giuen without and before the Sacrament, yet preſently for their further confirmation, they were baptized, but not confirmed with Chriſme: ſo here is a Sacrament miniſtred vnto them, to their further aſſurance and confirmation, but none other, then the Sacrament of Baptiſme.

Act.10.44.
Rom.10.17.

Secondly. 1. we doe not doubt, but that the Apoſtles baptiſed in the name of the whole Trinitie, though compendiouſly the name of Ieſus bee expreſſed, becauſe they were commanded ſo to doe: that although mention bee not made there of the Father, Sonne and holy Ghoſt, yet in other places there is, Matth. 28. 19. 2. And S. Paul alſo elſe-where ioyned the word with the waſhing of water, Epheſ. 5. 25. and in the very ſame place it followeth, by the waſhing of water and renewing of the holy Ghoſt; whereby the operation of the word is ſignified: ſo then if in any other place of Scripture, you could finde your Chriſme to haue beene vſed by the Apoſtles with impoſition of hands, though they be not euery where ioyned together, it might ſeeme probable, that you ſay: but this you are not able to doe, therefore theſe examples are friuolouſly alleaged.

Matth.28.19.

Thirdly, whereas Bellarmine doubteth not to ſay that the Apoſtles vſed Chriſme: other Papiſts more honeſtly denie it, being conuinced with euidence of Scripture: as Synod. Moguntin. c. 18. Sacramentum confirmationis ab initio ſola manuum impoſitione exhibitum: The Sacrament of Confirmation in the beginning was onely exhibited with impoſition of hands.

It cannot be denied, but that there was an vnction vſed of auncient time in the Church: but it was a ceremonie annexed to Baptiſme: and 1. Dyoniſius ſheweth, that it was partly taken from the heathenish annointing, which wreſtlers did vſe, and partly from the law of Moſes: but with what warrant the ceremonies of the law, much leſſe of the heathen may bee retained, that remaineth a queſtion, whereas the Apoſtle doth reproue the Galathians for turning againe to the beggerly rudiments of the world.

De cœleſti Hierarch. De baptiſm.
Galath. 4.9.

2 Tertullian ſaith: Egreſſi de lauacro perungimur benedicta vnctione de priſtina diſciplina, qua vngi oleo de cornu in ſacerdotio ſolebant, &c. Comming out of the lauacre, wee are anointed with the bleſſed vnction according to the auncient diſcipline, whereby they vſed in the Prieſthood to be anointed with oyle out of the horne, &c. If the vnction were annexed to Baptiſme, it could not be the matter of a new Sacrament.

Lib. de baptiſm.

3 Confeſſ. of Wittemberg. c. 10. It is euident, that in the law of Moſes, there was a time for ſhadowes, but now Chriſt being reuealed, it is the time of truth, and the vſe of externall anointing pertaineth to the rudiments of the world, &c.

Harm. ſect. 13. p. 408.

4 Decret. Gregor lib. 1. tit. 16. c. 1. Innocent. 3. Confirmationis ſacramentum non debet in eo iterari, qui per errorem fuit non chriſmate, ſed oleo, delinitus: The Sacrament of confirmation muſt not bee iterated in him, which by error was anointed with oyle, and not with Chriſme: Ergo, Chriſme is not neceſſarie to confirmation.

Some of the Popiſh writers affirme, that balme, whereof their Chriſme is made, is not neceſſarie ad eſſentiam Sacramenti, to the eſſence of the Sacrament: Caietan. 3. par. qu. 72. artic. 2. Dominic. A Soto. lib 4. ſentent. diſt. 7. qu. 1. art. 2. Synod. Arauſican. 1. cap. 1. Qui in baptiſmate Chriſmatus fuerit; in confirmatione ſacerdos commonebitur: nam inter nos Chriſmatis ipſius, non niſi vna benedictio eſt: Hee that was chriſmed, or anointed in Baptiſme, muſt admoniſh the Prieſt thereof in confirmation (that hee be not anointed againe) for with vs Chriſme is but once bleſſed and vſed, &c. Hee then that was baptized with Chriſme, was confirmed without Chriſme: This Chriſme then and conſecrate oyle, was not the matter of confirmation.

The Papiſts.

1. THe forme of Confirmation is in the words which are pronounced, I ſigne thee with the ſigne of the Croſſe, and confirme thee with the Chriſme of ſaluation or health, in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghoſt. Bellarm. cap. 10.

103. Error.

The Proteſtants.

1. THey muſt ſhew the inſtitution of Chriſt, out of the word, for the forme of euery Sacrament; which they cannot doe for this, vnleſſe they runne to their beggerly traditions, which they blaſphemouſly call the word of God vnwritten.

2. Where haue they learned, that men are confirmed and eſtabliſhed with the externall anointing of oyle? ſo ſaid ſome amongſt the Coloſſians, Touch not, taſte not, handle not: to whom the Apoſtle anſwereth, Which things periſh with the vſing, and are after the commandements of men: So is this anointing with oyle, a meere inuention of men, and hath no longer vertue or force, then in the naturall vſe thereof.

Coloſſ. 2. 21. 22.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, wee haue the warrant of the word for the forme of confirmation; for the Act.8.15. the Apoſtles prayed, when they layed on hands, Act.8.15. and the forme of the Sacraments conſiſteth in prayers. Secondly, the oyle is called the oyle of health or ſaluation, as Baptiſme the waſhing of the new birth, becauſe it is an inſtrument thereof, *Bellarm.cap.*10.

Contra. Firſt, prayer 1. is made to God, this forme is pronounced to him that is confirmed, therefore it is not a prayer: 2. Beſide in the forme there is mention made of the ſigne of the croſſe, and of chriſme: can you fetch theſe alſo out of the Apoſtles prayer? 3. And if you make confirmation nothing elſe, but prayer ouer a man, we will not much ſtand with you.

Secondly, 1. we make not Baptiſme a cauſe of regeneration, as you doe the oyle; but a ſeale onely thereof. 2. Neither can yee ſhew the like inſtitution and ordinance of Chriſt for confirmation, as we can for Baptiſme.

*Interrelig.cap.*16. Sacramentum confirmationis initio impoſitione manuum tantum celebratum fuit, &c. The Sacrament of confirmation in the beginning was onely celebrated with the impoſition of hands: It was then no part of the forme of conſecration in thoſe dayes, to ſay, I confirme thee with the Chriſme of health, &c. For at the firſt no oyle or Chriſme was vſed, but onely the impoſition of hands.

See before Error 101. the conſent of the Churches, that confirmation is no ſacrament, then conſequently they denie vnto it the forme of a ſacrament.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE MINISTER of Confirmation.

The Papiſts.

104.Error. THe Papiſts are here diuided: Some thinke that the Biſhop is ſo neceſſarily the Miniſter of confirmation, that it can in no wiſe be committed to Presbyters: *Sic Bonauentur. Durand. Adrian. in 4.diſtinct.*7. Other of them are of opinion that it may extraodinarily be miniſtred by Presbyters, as Thomas, Marſilius, Ruhardus, Paludanus: But the Biſhop is the ordinarie Miniſter thereof by the word of God: of this ſentence is *Bellarmine cap.*12.

Argum. Act.8. Peter and Iohn are ſent to Samaria to lay on their hands, Philip onely baptized, if Philip could haue giuen the ſpirit, what neede the Apoſtles haue beene ſent? the Apoſtles then onely confirmed: Biſhops ſucceede Apoſtles: Ergo.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtles by laying on the hands, gaue the extraordinarie grace of the ſpirit, therefore this place maketh not for confirmation. Secondly, none can ſucceede the Apoſtles, in their Apoſtolike and extraordinarie power in giuing the ſpirit. Thirdly, Philip gaue the holy Ghoſt alſo, though not thoſe viſible ſignes, which belong not to confirmation: for by his preaching they beleeued, and were baptized: and S. Hierome ſaith, Niſi forte Eunuchus à Philippo Diacono baptizatus ſine ſpiritu ſancto fuiſſe credendus eſt: Vnleſſe it is to be thought, that the Eunuch was baptized of Philip the Deacon without the holy Ghoſt: aduerſ.Luciferian. Fourthly, Philip was an [a] Euangeliſt, which was an office before [b] Paſtors: Biſhops are the Paſtors of the Church: will they denie that to an Euangeliſt, which they yeeld to Paſtors? Laſtly, other beſide the Apoſtles were ſent to ſecond the firſt Preachers, and to confirme them in their faith, as Barnabas to [c] Antioch.

[b] Epheſ.4.11.
[c] Act.11.22.23.

The Proteſtants.

WE ſay with Hierome, Si hoc loco queras, quare in eccleſia baptizatus, &c. If you aske in this place, why hee that is baptized in the Church doth not but by the hands of the Biſhop receiue the holy Ghoſt? Know, that this obſeruation, Ad honorem potius eſſe ſacerdotij, quam ad legis neceſſitatem: Is rather for the honour of the Prieſthood, then any neceſſitie of law: otherwiſe, if the holy Ghoſt only be giuen at the prayer of the Biſhop, they are to be bewailed, which in remote places are baptized by Presbyters, and die before they are viſited of the Biſhop: Hieron. aduerſ. Luciferian. He thinketh this difference to be rather an ordinance of the Church, then any diuine inſtitution.

Argum. Ananias a diſciple of Antioch, layd his hands vpon [d] Paul, and at Antioch certaine Prophets and teachers layd on their hands vpon Paul and [e] Barnabas, and none of theſe were Apoſtles.

[e] Act.13.3.

Bellarmine anſwereth: that Ananias layd on his hands, to heale him of his blindneſſe, and not to giue him the holy Ghoſt. Contr. The text it ſelfe is contrarie, Act.9.17. Hee put his hands vpon him, and ſaid, brother Saul, the Lord hath ſent me, that thou mighteſt receiue thy ſight, and be filled with the holy Ghoſt.

Diſtinct.95.c.1.Gregor. Vbi Epiſcopi deſunt, vt Presbyteri, &c. Where Biſhops are wanting, wee grant, that Presbyters may touch thoſe that are baptized with Chriſme in the forehead: par.3.diſtinct.4.c.119.Presbyteris, &c. It is lawfull for Presbyters to annoint thoſe that are baptized with Chriſme, whether they baptize in the preſence of the Biſhop, or without: *c.*125. he that doth receiue the office to baptize, muſt not goe without Chriſme, decret.Gregor.lib.1.tit 4.c.4. Simplices ſacerdotes apud Conſtantinop, &c. Simple Prieſts at Conſtantinople doe confirme; *Concil. Florentin. ſeſſ.*25. Apud Grecos, &c. Among the Greekes, Prieſts not Biſhops doe vſe Chriſme: it is not therefore of any diuine inſtitution.

Gagnin.de relig.Ruthen. And the Muſcouites following the Greeke Church, doe hold, that Biſhops and Prieſts are of the ſame authoritie, in giuing of Chriſme, which is miniſtred together with Baptiſme.

2 Tertullian is of the ſame minde: who reckoneth Chriſme, and impoſition of hands among the rites and ceremonies of Baptiſme: which Prieſts and Deacons haue right to giue as well as Biſhops: Dandi quidem habet ius ſummus ſacerdos, qui eſt Epiſcopus; de hinc Presbyteri & Diaconi,&c. The high Prieſt, who is the Biſhop firſt, hath right to giue Baptiſme, then the Presbyters and Deacons,&c. Lib.de Baptiſm.

3 Confeſſ. of Bohemia. c.12. Such as are thus inſtructed, our Miniſters receiue vnto this couenant of holy Baptiſme, and by the laying on of hands doe teſtifie vnto them,&c. They giue generally vnto their Miniſters this right of impoſing of hands.

4 See the opinion of ſome Papiſts before, that confirmation may bee committed to Presbyters,&c.

Bellarmine himſelfe granteth, that the chiefe Biſhop may giue authoritie to a ſimple Prieſt to confirme, *lib.*1.de matrim.c 5.*reſp.ad argum.*13.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE EFFICACIE AND VERTUE OF CONFIRMATION.

The Papiſts.

THe holy Ghoſt is giuen in confirmation, for force, ſtrength, and corroboration, againſt all our ſpirituall enemies, and to ſtand conſtantly in the confeſſion of our faith, euen to death, with great encreaſe of grace, *Rhemiſt. Act.*8.*ſect.*7. And in this reſpect it giueth more aboundant grace, in ſtrengthening of vs againſt the diuell, then Baptiſme doth, *Bellarm.cap.*11. 105. Error.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, they doe offer great iniurie to the ſpirit of God, tying him as it were, to their beggerly elements, which haue power, as they ſay, to conferre grace. The Scripture ſaith, The ſpirit bloweth where it liſteth, The ſpirit of God is free, and is giuen without Sacraments, as well as with them: but this tradition of yours is no Sacrament: if it were, yet could it not conferre grace, as we haue proued before. Iohn.3.8.

Their owne Maſter of Sentences *lib.*1.*diſtinct.*14.d. proueth that the Apoſtles themſelues gaue not the ſpirit: Orabant quippe vt veniret: They prayed that the ſpirit might come vpon them, on whom they laid their hands, they themſelues gaue it not. And againe, ibid.d. Nos accipere hoc donum,&c. We according to our meaſure may receiue this gift, effundere ſuper alios vtiq; non poſſumus: but wee cannot powre it out vpon others: Ergo, Confirmation doth not conferre the holy Ghoſt.

Secondly, they doe greatly deface the Sacrament of Baptiſme, making it imperfect without confirmation, ſaying, that he which is baptized, ſhall neuer be a perfect Chriſtian, vnleſſe he be confirmed with Chriſme, Gerſon. And that it is to bee reuerenced with greater reuerence then Baptiſme: See *Fulke Act.*8.*ſect.*7. Yea, they depriue Baptiſme of the proper effect and vſe thereof, which is a ſigne vnto vs of the aſſiſtance of Gods ſpirit, to fight manfully againſt the Diuell: for by Baptiſme wee are buried into the death of Chriſt: But Chriſt by his death triumphed ouer the Diuell, Ergo, Baptiſme is a ſigne of our victorie againſt the Diuell: yet they rob Baptiſme of this honour, and giue it to confirmation. And thus they preferre their owne inuentions before the ordinance of God; no Sacrament before a Sacrament. Tileman Heſhuſ. loc. 22. error.22. Rom.6.3. Coloſſ.2.15.

Auguſtine ſheweth, what the Sacrament of Vnction is, Vnctionis ſacramentum eſt virtus ipſa inuiſibilis; vnctio inuiſibilis, ſpiritus ſanctus: The Sacrament of Vnction, is the inuiſible vertue: the inuiſible annointing, the holy ſpirit. What is become now of your Sacrament of Vnction? Tract.3.in Epiſt.Iohan.

1 The Greeke Church alloweth no Chriſme or annointing to be vſed but in Baptiſme: they vrge theſe words of the Nicene Creede, I confeſſe one Baptiſme for the remiſſion of ſinnes: If one Baptiſme, then one Chriſme or annointing,&c. They aſcribe not then any ſacramentall operation vnto confirmation other then that which is exhibited in Baptiſme. Gagnin. de relig.Ruthen.

2 So alſo Tertullian, annexeth vnction and impoſition of hands vnto Baptiſme: Dehinc manus imponitur, per benedictionem aduocans & inuitans ſpiritum ſanctum: Then the hand is impoſed by benediction, calling and inuiting the ſpirit,&c. The grace is not conferred then by the ceremonie, but obtained by prayer and inuocation. Lib.de Baptiſm.

3 Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c.12. The Miniſters by laying on of hands, doe teſtifie to them, that grace is contained (they meane exhibited) in Baptiſme to ſtrengthen them to the warfare of faith,&c. The vertue and efficacie then is in Baptiſme, not in the impoſition of hands. Harm.p.400.

4 And that confirmation maketh no ſupply, or addeth any complement to Baptiſme, their owne Canons teſtifie: *decret.par.*3.*diſtinct.*5.*c.*2.Melchiades; Spiritus ſanctus in fonte tribuit plenitudinem ad innocentiam: The holy ſpirit in Baptiſme giueth fulneſſe tending to innocencie: Continuò tranſituris ſufficiunt regenerationis beneficia: The benefit of regeneration is ſufficient to thoſe that preſently paſſe out of the world: *ibid.c.*5. In the vnction in Baptiſme is ſignified deſcenſio ſpiritus ad habitationem, the deſcending of the ſpirit to dwell with vs: If then by Baptiſme wee haue innocencie, and the ſpirit dwelling in vs, how is it not perfect and abſolute without confirmation?

THE FIFTH PART, OF THE RITES and ceremonies of Confirmation.

The Papiſts.

106.Error. THe ceremonies which they commonly vſe in Confirmation, are theſe. Firſt, the Biſhop muſt breathe vpon the pot or cruze of Chriſme. Secondly, he ſaluteth it in theſe words, Aue ſanctum Chriſma: Haile holy Chriſme. Thirdly, he giueth a kiſſe. Fourthly, he ſtriketh him that is confirmed with his hand, to teach him patience. Fifthly, his forehead is bound about, leſt the Chriſme ſhould runne downe, which teacheth him not to loſe the grace of God. Sixthly, ſeuen daies together hee muſt neither waſh his head nor face. And theſe with ſuch like ridiculous toyes, are practiſed amongſt them, Bellarm. cap.13. lib. de confirmat.

The Proteſtants.

1. SOme of theſe ceremonies we condemne as ridiculous: as the breathing vpon the oyle, the ſtriking of the partie confirmed, which light geſtures become not the grauitie of the Miniſters of 1.Cor.14.40. the Goſpell: all things ſhould be done in the Church in decent and comely order. Concerning this light geſture of ſtriking, the like whereof was vſed in the celebration of Matrimonie, we heard before the iudgement of the Councell of Cullin: how it is counted, inter res ludicras, among ridiculous and wanton toyes. Concil. Colonienſ. part.7. cap.47. vid. ſupra, controu.15. queſt.7. In the like caſe, in the emancipation, or ſetting of men free, they did vſe to ſtrike them: which fooliſh vſe was corrected by the imperiall law, Cod. lib.8. tit.49. leg.6. he biddeth, Iniurioſa raphiſmata, ſuch iniurious ſtrokes to be left, quorũ nullus rationabilis inuenitur exitus, of the which there cã be no reaſonable end: Iubemus circuitus huiuſmodi in poſterum quieſcente, &c. We will ſuch toyes and circumſtances to ceaſe. If in a ciuill act ſuch ridiculous toyes were inhibited, how much more vncomely are they in an act of religion? Secondly, one of them is meerely idolatrous, to ſalute the oyle, as the Angell ſaluted Mary, to ſay, Aue, All haile vnto it, making an idoll of it, being a thing without ſenſe or life. Thirdly, all of them are ſuperſtitious, hauing myſticall and typicall ſignifications and ſhadowes, which agreeth not Coloſſ.2.17. with the nature of the Goſpell: for all ſhadowes are now paſt, the bodie being come. Laſtly, they are ſuperfluous, cumberſome, and burdenous, as Auguſtine ſaith: Ipſam religionem, quam Deus pauciſſimis ſacramentis miſericordia Dei liberam eſſe voluit, ſeruilibus oneribus premunt: They oppreſſe religion with ſeruile burthens (of ceremonies) which Gods mercie hath left free in few Sacraments, &c. Againe, who ſeeth not how thus by their owne traditions they doe euacuate the ordinance of God? for in ſtead of catechizing and inſtructing of the youth in the principles and foundation of religion, as of Heb.6.2,3. repentance from dead workes, faith toward God, of the reſurrection and eternall iudgement, they haue brought in nothing elſe, but oyling, greazing, annoynting of them, breathing vpon them, croſ- Ephes.6.4. ſing, and ſuch like: And whereas S. Paul giueth parents a charge to bring vp their children in the inſtruction of God, they bid them bring their children to be annoynted, croſſed, and chriſmated, as they call it, and they haue done enough.

1. In the Greeke Church they vſed Chriſme of ancient time, but without any ſuch ceremonies. Concil. Laodicen. c.58. Oportet baptizatos poſt baptiſmum ſacratiſſimum chryſma percipere, &c. They which are baptized muſt after their baptiſme receiue holy Chriſme, and ſo be made partakers of heauen, &c.

Lib. de Baptiſ. 2. Tertullian maketh mention of Chriſme and impoſition of hands, but of no ſuch toyes.

3. Wittemberg, confeſſ. cap.20. It is not to be doubted, but that the ceremonies of Moſes, whereof one part is the externall anointing, doe pertaine to the rudiments of the world, &c. much more doe the other toyes belong to ſuch rudiments.

4. Againſt theſe ridiculous ceremonies we haue the iudgement and determination of the Councell of Mentz, cap.18. Sacramentum confirmationis ab initio ſola manuum impoſitione exhibitum: nam cum initio ſpiritus ſanctus, ad euidentiorem recentis adhuc fidei confirmationem, ſigno viſibili influeret confirmatis, externa vnctione tum opus non erat: The ſacrament of Confirmation in the beginning was exhibited onely with laying on of hands: for whereas the holy ſpirit then for the more euident confirmation of faith, did appeare by euident ſignes in thoſe, that were confirmed, there was no neede then of outward anointing, &c. At the firſt, the Apoſtles vſed nothing, but impoſition of hands; all the reſt of the ceremonies came in ſince by men. And this decree maketh directly againſt the Ieſuite, who will needs beare vs in hand, that the Apoſtles vſed oyle and Chriſme together, with impoſition of hands: which is but his braine-ſick coniecture, without any ground.

This truth hath that holy martyr of God Iohn Huſſe, ſealed with his blood: Leuis & breuis confirmatio epiſcoporum cum ritibus ſolennizata, eſt à diabolo introducta: The light and briefe confirmation of Biſhops ſolemnized, with the ſuperſtitious rites thereof, ſeemeth to haue been brought in by the diuell. Quantum ad oleum, quo epiſcopi vngunt pueros, & peplum lineum, quod complexum eſt capiti, videtur, quod ſit ritus leuis: And as for the oyle, wherewith the Biſhops annoynt boyes, and the linen vaile bound to their head, it ſeemeth to bee a ridiculous faſhion, &c. For thus ſaying, and boldly vttering his conſcience, this good man was condemned in the Councell of Conſtance, ſeſſ.15.

THE SECOND QVESTION, of Orders.

THe ſeuerall parts of this queſtion, are theſe: Firſt, whether it be a Sacrament. Secondly, of the materiall part thereof. Thirdly, of the efficacie and vertue thereof. Fourthly, of the ceremonies.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE RECEIuing of Orders be a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

THat holy Orders are a ſacrament rightly and properly ſo called, it was decreed in the Tridentine Councell, Seſſ. 23. can. 3. And that not only the three higher degrees, of Prieſthood, Deaconſhip, Sub-deaconſhip, but the foure inferiour orders, of Exorciſtæ, Acoluthi, Lectores, Oſtiarij, doe belong vnto the ſame ſacrament of orders, and are ſacraments as well as the other: Bellarm. cap. 8 lib. de Sacram. ordinis. 107. Error.

Argum. 1. Timoth. 4. 14. Deſpiſe not that gift which was giuen thee through prophecie, with the laying on of hands. Holy orders giue grace by an externall ceremonie and worke: Ergo, it is a Sacrament, Rhemiſt. in hunc locum. 1. Timoth. 4. 14

Anſw. 1. It cannot bee proued out of this place, that impoſition of hands giueth grace: for this was an extraordinarie gift which Saint Paul ſpeaketh of, and doth not alwaies follow impoſition of hands. Secondly, this gift was not giuen by the very ceremonie of impoſition of hands, but through prophecie and reuelation of the holie Ghoſt: for it was reuealed vnto the Church by the ſpirit of prophecie, that Timothie was a choſen veſſell of God: therefore S. Paul ſaith, That worthie thing which is committed vnto thee, keepe through the holy Ghoſt. 2. Timoth. 1. 14 The holy Ghoſt was both the conferrer of that grace, and the preſeruer of it. Impoſition then of hands was but an outward ſigne of the preſence of Gods ſpirit vpon thoſe that were lawfully ordained: for all vpon whom hands were laide, receiued not the holy Ghoſt, but ſuch onely as were appointed of God: And therefore the Apoſtle chargeth Timothie to lay hands ſuddenly on no man: which caueat was not needfull, if vpon whomſoeuer he had laid his hands, they ſhould immediatly receiue the holy Ghoſt. 1. Timoth. 5. 22 Thirdly, euery promiſe of grace annexed to the outward ſigne maketh not a Sacrament, but it muſt bee the grace of iuſtification, ſuch as is not in Orders.

Bellarmine denieth, that euery Sacrament ſerueth to iuſtification or remiſſion of ſinnes; and he giueth an inſtance in the Euchariſt, which was not inſtituted to take away ſinne, but to conſerue and encreaſe the ſpirituall life, Bellarm. cap. 2. de ſacram ordinis.

Cont. Firſt, that the Euchariſt was inſtituted to aſſure vs of remiſſion of ſinne, it is euident by the Scriptures; for it is a ſhewing forth of the Lords death: 1. Cor. 11. 26. but to what end elſe died Chriſt, but for remiſſion of ſins? Againe, it repreſenteth vnto vs the blood of Chriſt, which (ſaith Chriſt in the inſtitution of this Sacrament) is ſhed for many for remiſſion of ſins. Matth. 26. 28. Secondly, it ſerueth alſo to cõſerue our ſpiritual life, which cannot be without aſſurance of forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: for 1. the life of the ſoule is faith, The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, Rom. 1. 17. and our faith is in the blood of Chriſt. Rom. 3. 25. And 2. what elſe is the life of the ſoule but the happineſſe thereof? But our happineſſe is this, to haue our ſinnes forgiuen, Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiuen. Pſal. 32. 1.

Argum. 2. Deaconſhip is a Sacrament, becauſe it is giuen by impoſition of hands: Bellarm. cap. 6. Sub-deaconſhip likewiſe is a Sacrament, becauſe it is not re-iterable; and ſo of the reſt of the inferiour orders, cap. 7. 8.

Anſw. 1. The Ieſuites reaſon ſtandeth thus: Whatſoeuer is miniſtred by laying on of hands is a Sacrament, but Deaconſhip is ſo miniſtred: Ergo, it followeth then that the little children, vpon whom Chriſt laid his hands and bleſſed them, receiued a ſacrament. Mark. 10. 16. What ſacrament was it, I pray you? not Confirmation, for they were not yet baptized: and Orders, I hope, they will not ſay, they receiued: Ananias laid his hands vpon Paul, and he receiued his ſight. Act. 9. 27. By the Ieſuits reaſon then, the giuing of ſight, becauſe it is miniſtred with laying on of hands, ſhall be a ſacrament: for S. Paul neither receiueth Orders from Ananias, ſeeing he was immediatly called from Chriſt; nor yet was confirmed, not being yet baptized.

Secondly, he hath reaſoned as well for the reſt of the Orders: Whatſoeuer is not re-iterable (ſaith he) is a ſacramẽt: but the creation of the world, the drowning of the ſame by water, are works not iterable, or to be done againe: Ergo, they ſhould be ſacraments, by the Ieſuits reaſon. 2. Orders may be iterated: Toletan. 4 27. Clericus iniuſte depoſitus, ſi in Synodo innocens reperiatur, non poteſt eſſe quod fuerat, niſi gradus amiſſos recipiat de manu Epiſcopi: A Clerke depoſed, if he be cleered in the Synode, cãnot be reſtored to his former ſtate, vnleſſe he do receiue the degree he loſt, at the hãds of the Biſhop.

Our Papizing countrimen of Doway doe thus alſo reaſon for the Sacrament of Orders: the prieſts of the law were conſecrated by a peculiar ſacrament, by certaine determinate externall ceremonies and rites, ſignifying grace giuen them by God, for the due performing of their function: as their waſhing ſignified their puritie, their precious garments their dignitie. Annot. in Leuit. c. 8. verſ. 6.

Contra. 1. If euery ceremonie of the law ſignifying a ſpirituall grace, were a ſacrament in the olde teſtament: there ſhould bee as many ſacraments as ceremonies: not ſo fewe as an hundred. 2. Neither is it true that any ſuch grace was giuen in the conſecration of the prieſthood: what grace, I pray you, had Ophni and Phinehes, that were graceleſſe men, and vnworthie Prieſts. 3. And if they ſignified grace giuen, then they conferred grace, which is decreed by them a little after, where they ſay, that the ſacrament of orders then did onely ſignifie grace, not conferre it. p. 278. but to ſignifie grace giuen and conferred, and to conferre grace, doe not much differ: for if grace be not conferred, it cannot be ſignified to be conferred.

The Proteſtants.

YOur ſeuen Popiſh orders we doe not at all receiue into the Church, much leſſe can we abide, that they ſhould be Sacraments: The lawfull ordaining of Paſtors, Teachers, and Deacons, we doe acknowledge; but no ſacrificing Prieſthood, nor no miniſtring Deaconſhip at the Altar: ſuch orders as we haue notwithſtanding we doe not take to be Sacraments, properly ſo called, much leſſe yours, that are vtterly to be aboliſhed.

Argum. 1 Sacraments muſt haue their inſtitution from Chriſt; ſo haue not your orders: for Chriſt inſtituted only Apoſtles and Diſciples: Presbyters and Deacons were founded by the Apoſtles: who notwithſtanding had no commiſſion to conſtitute new Sacraments. As for the other fiue orders, of Subdeacons, Readers, Acoluthi, Exorciſtes, doore-keepers, they are neither read in Scripture, nor ordained of the Apoſtles, nor heard of for many yeeres after.

Our Sauiour, when he ordained Apoſtles, vſed no impoſition of hands, or did annoint them: therefore Orders giuen by impoſition of hands, is no Sacrament, becauſe it hath no inſtitution from Chriſt. We denie not, but that the miniſterie of the word is Chriſts ordinance, but that it is no Sacrament, becauſe they can ſhew no inſtitution of the outward ſigne from Chriſt: Kemnitij. argum.

Bellar. 1. Chriſt might make Apoſtles without impoſition of hands, becauſe hee was not tyed to the Sacraments: 2. and there is nothing to the contrarie, but that hee might alſo vſe impoſition of hands: 3. Further, ſeeing that in Orders grace is tyed to the outward ſigne of impoſition of hands, it muſt needes bee of God, for no man hath power to annexe grace to the ſigne but God: and that grace is tyed to impoſition of hands, S. Paul teſtifieth, Stirre vp the grace of God which is in thee by the putting on of my hands, Bellar. cap. 2. 2.Tim.1.6.

Contra. First, we doe not ſpeake of Chriſts power, that he can worke without Sacraments, but of his will in ordaining of a Sacrament: for there is no Sacrament of the new Teſtament, which is not grounded vpon his precept and example: but neither can be ſhewed for Orders by impoſition. Secondly, the inſtitution of a Sacrament muſt be expreſſed in Scripture, not implyed or coniecturally collected. Thirdly, in none of the Sacraments grace is annexed to the ſigne, much leſſe in orders, which is no Sacrament: neither hath S. Paul any ſuch meaning, as I haue ſhewed before: Reſponſ. ad argum. 1. Fourthly, an ordinance of the miniſterie by commandement from Chriſt, we grant, but no inſtitution of a Sacrament.

Argum. 2. Secondly, your Sacrament hath neither outward element, nor word of inſtitution: if you ſay, laying on of hands is the externall ſigne: wee anſwere, that the viſible ſigne in a Sacrament muſt not onely be an externall action, but a materiall element, as water in Baptiſme, and bread and wine in the Lords Supper. The forme (you ſay) is in theſe words pronounced by the Biſhop, Accipite poteſtatem offerendi ſacrificium, Receiue ye power to offer ſacrifice: Bellar. cap. 9. We anſwere againe, that this ſacrificing office hath no foundation in Scripture: The Miniſters of the Goſpell are called diſpenſers of Gods myſteries; namely, of the word and Sacraments. Miniſters for Chriſt, not ſacrificers of Chriſt: wherefore neither haue yee any word of inſtitution; and conſequently no Sacrament. 1.Cor.4.1.

And I pray you tell me, if you will make euery one of your orders a Sacrament; then muſt you needes haue as many Sacraments as there are orders: and ſo ſhall you haue ſeuen Sacraments more than you thought; and ſo fourteene in all: for you doe diſtinguiſh all the orders in office and forme of conſecration one from another: and therefore they cannot all make one Sacrament.

Bellarmine anſwereth: that all theſe make but vnum ſacramentum genere, one Sacrament in generall, though they be diuers in ſpeciall, cap. 8. Anſwere. By this reaſon, Baptiſme, Orders, Confirmation, ſhall make but one Sacrament, ſeeing they are all of one kinde or gender, that is, Sacraments irreiterable. But ſeeing all theſe ſeuerall orders doe differ both in matter and forme, it cannot be auoided, but there muſt be diuers Sacraments.

Epiſt.118. cap.1. Auguſtine ſaith, Chriſtus ſacramentis numero pauciſſimis — ſocietatem populi colligauit: Chriſt hath ioyned together his people with moſt fewe Sacraments: and then he nameth Baptiſme, and the Communion: Et ſi quid aliud in Scripturis canonicis commendatur: And if any other be commended in Scripture: Ergo, there is no Sacrament of Orders, becauſe it is not found in Scripture, as wee haue ſaid.

ἄνευ θείων γραφῶν Catech.4. For the Eaſt Church. 1. Cyril ſaith, Not the leaſt of the diuine Sacraments of the faith, muſt be deliuered (without the diuine Scriptures) but Scripture they haue none to make Orders a Sacrament: and Ieremie the late Patriarke of Conſtantinople ſaith, that ſacer ordo — in ipſo Moſe & Aron, &c. Cenſur. oriental. c.7. That holy Orders was by the vniuerſall Lord conſtituted in Moſes and Aaron, &c. How then, can it be a Sacrament of the new Teſtament, hauing beginning in the olde.

2. Tertullian maketh mention but of two Sacraments: of the Euchariſt and Baptiſme, lib.4.cont. Marcion. Orders was then excluded.

3. The reformed Churches alſo admit but two Sacraments, of Baptiſme and the Euchariſt: See before Centur.2.err.104. of the number of the Sacraments.

4. Their owne writers are aginſt them: the Maſter of Sentences ſpeaking of Presbyters, ſaith, Hic ordo à filiys Aaron ſumpſit initium: This order tooke beginning from the ſonnes of Aaron: Lib.4. diſtinct.24.I. And of Exorciſts, ibid.E. Hic ordo à Salomone videtur deſcendiſſe: This order ſeemeth to haue deſcended from Salomon: Ibid.I. Eccleſia ſibi Subdiaconos & Acolythos conſtituit: The Church hath ordained Subdeacons and Acolythes: De his ſolis praeceptum Apoſtoli habemus: Of theſe onely we haue the precept of the Apoſtles: ſpeaking of Deacons and Presbyters. If ſome of theſe were inſtituted before Chriſt, ſome of them ſince Chriſt and the Apoſtles, by the Church; how can they be ſacraments of the Goſpell, which muſt be inſtituted only by Chriſt? Durandus, Caietanus, two learned Papiſts, denie the inferiour orders of Subdeacons and vnder, to be ſacraments.

This doctrine is ſealed: Laurence Maxwell perſecuted, becauſe he denied that the order of Prieſthood is a ſacrament: Fox p.1041.col.2.

OF THE MATERIALL PART, OF ORDERS, which is the impoſition of hands.

The Papiſts.

THis matter is chiefly controuerted among the Papiſts themſelues: Some of them hold, that the impoſition of hands is not an eſſentiall part of orders, but only accidentall; as Dominicus à Soto, diſtinct.24.qu.1.artic.4. Others affirme it to be eſſentiall: Petrus à Soto lect.5.de ordin. Hoſius, confeſſ. Polonic.c.50. whereunto Bellarmine ſubſcribeth, cap.9. 108.Error.

Argum. In the Scripture euery where, when any are ordained, [a] mention is made of the impoſition of hands, and in other places: Ergo, it is an eſſentiall part of this Sacrament: Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, in the election of Matthias to be one of the twelue, there was no impoſition of hands vſed, [b] therefore not euery where. Neither can it bee anſwered, that this ceremonie was omitted, becauſe Matthias was extraordinarily called by the direction of the Spirit, for [c] Paul and Barnabas were called of the Spirit, yet they impoſe hands vpon them. Secondly, theſe places alleaged, onely proue it to be requiſite as a decent ceremonie, not neceſſarie, as an eſſentiall part, without the which there could be no ordination.

[a] Act.6.6. 13.3. 1.Tim.4.14.

[b] Act.1.26.

[c] Act.13.2.

The Proteſtants.

THat impoſition of hands is a comely and decent ceremonie to bee vſed of the Church in ordaining of Miniſters, we willingly grant, and our Church doth retaine it: but we take it not to be of the eſſence of orders, as that without it, vpon no occaſion, there could be any ordination.

Argum. Chriſt, when he inſtituted his Apoſtles, breathed vpon them, he laid not on his hands: the Apoſtles caſt lots for Matthias, no impoſition of hands is mentioned: Ergo, it is not an eſſentiall part of orders, for then it could not be omitted.

1. What here was the iudgement of the Eaſterne Churches, appeareth in the Florentine Councel, to the decrees whereof, they would make vs beleeue, that the Grecians, Iacobines and Armenians, being preſent by their Agents and Ambaſſadors, conſented: there in the decree of the ſeuen Sacraments, in the ſixth Sacrament of order, it is thus reſolued: That is the matter per cuius traditionem confertur ordo: by the deliuering whereof order is conferred, as the order of Prieſthood, by the deliuering of the Chalice with wine, and of the paten with bread, &c. here is no mention made of the impoſition of hands. Bellarmines anſwere here is but ſimple, that the Councell only expreſſeth that materiall part which was ſubſiſtant, (not tranſeant) as water in Baptiſme: or it may bee the Armenians erred only in that point, &c. Contra. In the deſcription of ſome other of their Sacraments, they doe not make the materiall part any ſubſiſting thing, as Confeſſion in penance, is a thing tranſeant and paſſing: and for his other coniecture, fortaſſis, it may be, ſaith hee, wee may anſwere him with another fortaſſis, it may be that they doubted not of that point, for neither the one, nor the other is expreſſed: it is a ſimple ſhift, to put off the manifeſt decree of a Councell, with a fortaſſis, it may be.

Bellar. lib.1.de ſacram.ordin. c.10.ſect. cur autem.

2. In the Æthiopike Church, the Abuna or Patriarke, when he giueth orders, firſt examineth thoſe which are to be ordained, and cauſeth them to read on a booke, and if they can read, and are capable, then he impoſeth his hands, &c. It ſeemeth then that the capabilitie and ſufficiencie of their Clerks, is taken rather to be the materiall part of orders among them, the other is added as an externall rite and ceremonie. Aluares. c.34.

3. Confeſſion of Bohemia, chap.14. In the adminiſtration of which things, they may vſe ſome ſeemely and indifferent ceremonies, that is, which are no way neceſſarie, ſuch as are to lay on hands, or to reach out the right hand, or elſe they may omit them. The ſame is the confeſſion of Wittemberg, artic.35. If impoſition of hands be then an indifferent ceremonie, it is not the materiall part, which is alwaies neceſſarie.

Harm.ſect.11. p.356.

Harm.ſect.17. p.537.

Decret.Greg.lib.1.tit.16.c.1.&c.3.Greg.9. They determine, that orders miniſtred ſine impoſitione manuũ, without impoſitiõ of hands, ſhould not be iterated: Ergo, orders may be miniſtred without it.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE EFFICACIE which they aſcribe to this Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

109.Error. THis Sacrament of orders, as they call it, giueth a double grace. Firſt, it giueth thoſe that are ordained, abilitie and power to execute their office: which is to conſecrate and offer vp the bodie and blood of Chriſt; wherein chiefly the prieſthood conſiſteth, and not in preaching the word: for they may be prieſts, though they preach not, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ 23. can. 1. By holy orders then the holy Ghoſt is actually beſtowed, when thoſe words are pronounced, Accipite ſpiritum ſanctum, Receiue ye the holy Ghoſt, Canon. 4.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, the Goſpell alloweth no externall ſacrificing Prieſthood, but a ſpirituall only, whereby euery Chriſtian is made a King and Prieſt to offer ſpirituall ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiuing vnto God. And the only eſſentiall part of the office of Miniſters vnder the Goſpell, is, to be able diſpenſers of the myſteries of the word and Sacraments.

Apoc.1.6. 1.Cor.4.1. 2.Cor.3.6. In Apocal. hom.2. So Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Quicunque aut Epiſcopus aut Preſbyter, aut etiam laicus frequenter de Deo loquitur, & quomodo ad vitam æternam perueniatur annunciat, meritò Angelus Dei dicitur: Whoſoeuer Biſhop or Presbyter, or a lay man doth ſpeake freely of God, and preacheth the way to eternall life, is an Angell of God. This then is the only principall office of true Paſtors, to teach the way to the kingdome of God.

Secondly, it is alſo a great vntruth, that the holy Ghoſt is ſtraightway giuen to all thoſe, vpon whomſoeuer hands are laid, and they admitted to Orders: For what need then that triall and examination, which ought to be had of thoſe, which are to be ordained, whereof S. Paul ſpeaketh, 1.Timoth.3.22 if the only laying on of hands can make able Miniſters?

Ex veter.teſt. qu.109 inter opera Auguſt. Noſtri ſacerdotes, ſaith one, ſuper multos quotidie nomen Domini & verba benedictionis imponunt, ſed in paucis effectus eſt: Our Prieſts doe lay the word of bleſſing vpon many, calling vpon the name of God, but in few followeth any effect of that bleſſing, &c. And hee giueth the reaſon in another place, Dei eſt, effectum tribuere benedictionis: It belongeth vnto God, to giue effect to prieſtly bleſſing: Ergo, it is not by only act and vſing of the ceremonie beſtowed.

Aquiſgranenſ. cap. 13. Præconis officium ſuſcipit quiſquis ad ſacerdotium accedit: He taketh vpon him the office of a preacher, that commeth to the prieſthood.

Synod. Colonienſ. part. 4. cap. 1. Officium Parochorum in duobus potiſſimum ſitum eſt, diſſeminatione verbi, & adminiſtratione ſacramentorum: The office of pariſh prieſts, conſiſteth eſpecially in two things: in ſowing of the word, and adminiſtration of the Sacraments.

Ibid. part. 6. Verbi miniſterium ſanctiſſim. Apoſtolus cæteris omnibus præfert, &c. The moſt holie Apoſtle preferreth the word before all other things, ſaying to the Corinthians, that Chriſt ſent him to preach, not to baptize, &c. The office then of Miniſters of the Goſpell chiefly ſtandeth in preaching.

And concerning the iudgement of other Churches: that the preaching of the Goſpell is the principall part of the Miniſteriall function: Cenſur. Oriental.c.20. 1. Ieremie the Patriarke ſaith: Mihi prædicandi neceſſitas incumbit, &c. A neceſſitie of preaching is laid vpon me, and woe is vnto me, if I preach not the Goſpel, &c. Which is agreeable to that concluſion of the ſeuenth Synode, therein following Dyoniſius: Subſtantia ſacerdotij vera ſcripturarum diuinarum diſciplina: The ſubſtance of the prieſthood is the true knowledge or diſcipline of the diuine Scriptures, &c. cited diſtinct. 38. c. 6.

Damianus à Goes Indor. legat. 2. What Auguſtines iudgement is herein, is ſeene before: the Africane and Æthiopike Church, haue great ſtore of preachers: Concionatores paſſim eſſe, qui Chriſti fidem populo prædicant: They haue preachers euery where, which preach the faith of Chriſt vnto the people, &c. wherein they are farre to Guagnin. be preferred before the rude Moſcouites, that haue no preachers in their Churches: nay, Concionari obſtinatiſſime prohibent: They obſtinatly forbid any to preach, ſaying, that it breedeth ſects and hereſies. And as their prieſts are ignorant for knowledge, ſo are they rude for manners: they are many times ſo drunke, that they are faine to ſtay and hold them vp, till they execute their office, as in marrying, or ſuch like.

FIrſt, the practiſe of the popiſh Church is contrarie to their owne rules: for I would haue them tell me,whether they tooke not the Prieſthood and annointing from Iohn Huſſe, when with a paire of sheares they clipped off the skin of his head moſt cruelly, as they were buſie in degrading of him, in the Councell of Conſtance: Or when they had groſly abuſed that reuerend Father Biſhop Cranmer, and vnmannerly behaued themſelues in his degradation, and clapt him in a poore beggerly, threadbare Lay-mans gowne; did they not thinke,that they had diſpoyled him of his prieſthood? What is now become, maſters, of your indeleble character? Or is it your meaning, that it may be clipped or ſcraped off onely,but not waſht off,or lightly rubbed away? Your owne cruell deedes doe ouerthrow your popiſh principles. Fox pag.625.

The Papiſts.

THey hold that they are neither Prieſts nor Deacons, which are not ordained of Biſhops,Bellarm.de ſacram.Ordinis,cap.11. he meaneth popiſh Biſhops, ſuch as receiue their conſecration 111.Error.

and other Epiſcopals from Rome: and ſuch Biſhops he ſaith only are Miniſters and conferrers of Orders. Arguments he vſeth none, neither alleageth any teſtimonies at large, but referreth vs to the Controuerſie of the Sacraments in generall: but he forgetteth himſelfe; for in that place there is no ſuch thing handled: but he onely proueth this propoſition, that verus Miniſter ſacramentorum,&c. that the true Miniſter of the Sacraments is not euery man, but hee onely that is lawfully ordained in the Church, lib.1.de Sacram.c.24. which propoſition we willingly grant.

The Proteſtants.

IN this aſſertion of the Papiſts, I note three errors, as it now followeth to be ſhewed. Firſt, whereas Bellarmine affirmeth, that they are no Miniſters or Presbyters which are not ordained by popiſh Biſhops: we doubt not to auouch the contrarie, that they are no true Presbyters that receiue ordination from ſuch: for their Biſhops are vndoubtedly the Miniſters and officers of Antichriſt: which was the very poſition maintained by Iohn Huſſe: Sunt procuratores & diſcipuli Antichriſti: Papa, Cardinales, Patriarchæ, Archiepiſcopi, Epiſcopi,&c. The Pope, Cardinals, Patriarchs, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, are the proctors and diſciples of Antichriſt. One of their owne writers, ſpeaking of their Biſhops, ſaith, they are not Epiſcopi, but apoſcopi: not ouerſeers, but by-ſeers: Eſpenc.præfat.in 2.ad Timoth. Being then the officers of Antichriſt, they cannot create or ordaine Miniſters for Chriſt.

Secondly, neither is it true, that there are no Miniſters but by the ordination of Biſhops: for this were to condemne all thoſe reformed Churches, of Heluetia, Belgia, Geneua, with others, that haue not receiued this forme of eccleſiaſticall gouernment. Vndoubtedly where godly Biſhops are, there no ordination is to bee had without them, as in the Church of England; but euery Church hauing not the ſame office, but others equiualent or correſpondent thereunto, hath full authoritie in it ſelfe, to ordaine Miniſters in ſuch order and manner, as the Church hath receiued, agreeable to the word of God: ſo that wee doubt not but that all the reformed Churches profeſſing the Goſpell, haue true and lawfull Miniſters, though they obſerue not all the ſame manner in the election and ordaining of them. And this is the generall conſent of the Churches themſelues:

Harm.ſect.11. Heluetic. confeſſ.latter. Let the Miniſters of the Church be called and choſen, by a lawfull and eccleſiaſticall vocation or election: that is to ſay, let them be religiouſly choſen of the Church, or of thoſe which thereunto are appointed of the Church, and that in due order.

Heluetic. confeſſ. prior. artic.16. They muſt be choſen either by the diuine ſentence of God, or by the certaine and aduiſed ſuffrage of the Church, or by their ſentence, to whom the Church hath aſſigned this charge.

Confeſſ.Bohem.c.9. They muſt be proued and tried by examination, and ſo afterward prayer and faſting being made, they may be confirmed or approued by the Elders, by laying on of hands.

Confeſſ.Gallic.artic.31. Euery one ought to be admitted thereunto by a lawfull election, ſo neere as may be; and as long, as the Lord giueth leaue,&c. Neuertheleſſe, howſoeuer it be, we beleeue, that this rule is alwaies to be followed, that all Paſtors and Elders ſhould haue a teſtimonie of their calling.

Confeſſ. Anglican. We ſay, that the Miniſter ought lawfully, dulie, and orderly to be preferred to that office of the Church of God.

Confeſſ. Belgic. We beleeue, that the Miniſters, Seniors, Deacons, ought to be called to thoſe their functions, by the lawfull election of the Church: to be aduaunced to thoſe roumes, earneſt prayer being made vnto God, and after the order and manner, which is ſet downe vnto vs in the word of God.

Confeſſ.Scotic.p.22. We affirme lawfull Miniſters to be only they, that are appointed to the preaching of the word,&c. they being men lawfully choſen thereto by ſome Church.

This then is the iudgement of the reformed Churches, that euery Church is not tied to the ſame manner of ordination of Miniſters, ſo that it be agreeable to the word of God: but according to this rule euery Church may make choice of that forme and order which is moſt agreeable to their ſtate: ſo that, where the calling of Biſhops is receiued, by them Miniſters muſt enter; where there are none, the calling of the Church muſt be followed: Our arguments and reaſons are theſe:

Act.13.3. First, out of the Scripture, Act.13.3. certaine prophets and teachers at Antioch lay hands vpon Paul and Barnabas; the Rhemiſts gather hereupon, that they were ordered, admitted and conſecrated by them: Annot.in hunc locum: (which we ſay not, but they were only ſent out to the execution of their office, being before choſen of the ſpirit) but hence it followeth: that as at Antioch, there being no other Apoſtles, but onely prophets and teachers, to lay hands vpon Paul, the reſt did it: ſo in thoſe Churches where there are no Biſhops, the right of ordaining Miniſters may bee executed by others lawfully appointed of the Church.

Argum.2. If it were not ſo, theſe inconueniences would enſue: firſt, that all thoſe reformed Churches ſhould haue no true Miniſters, being without Epiſcopall ordination. Secondly, that they muſt either bee denied to bee Churches, or elſe a true Church may be without the right power of ordination, which in no wiſe is to bee granted. Thirdly, that thoſe excellent men, Luther, Melanct. Caluin, with others, extraordinarily raiſed vp of God, for the propagation of the Goſpell, ſhould not haue been true Miniſters, becauſe they entred not by that ordination.

Argum.3. That euery Church is left to it owne libertie herein, their owne Canons teſtifie: Diſtinct.12. Mihi placet, vt ſiue in Romana Eccleſia,&c. It liketh me well, that whether in the Romane or French, or in any other Church, you finde any thing, which may better pleaſe almightie God, you make choice of it. Ibid.c.13. Auguſtin. Nec eſt vlla diſciplina melior: Neither is there any better diſcipline, then for a man ſo to doe, vt viderit agere eccleſiam, as hee ſeeth the Church to doe, to the which he commeth.

Thirdly, whereas Bellarmine ſeemeth to aſcribe ordination wholly to the Biſhop, hee therein is contrarie to his fellow Papiſts: as the Rhemiſts giue this note, vpon that place 1.Timoth.4.14. By the impoſition of the hands of the prieſthood, as they tranſlate it, the practiſe of the Church giueth vs the ſenſe of this place, which the ancient Councell of Carthage doth thus ſet downe: When a Prieſt taketh orders, the Biſhop bleſſing him, and holding his hand vpon his head, let all the Prieſts preſent lay alſo their hands on his head by the Biſhops hands, &c. Concil. Carthag.4.c.3. This interpretation is receiued by Ioann.Gropperus in Iſagoge, and allowed by Eſpencæus vpon this place.

1.Timoth.4.14

The ſame was the practiſe 1. of the Greeke Church, as many both Biſhops and Presbyters aſſembled together at the election of Origen at Cæſarea, as Euſebius writeth.

Lib.6.c.10.

2. The Africane Church aſſembled in the fourth Councell of Carthage, c.22. thus decreed: Epiſcopus ſine concilio Clericorum Clericum non ordinet: A Biſhop muſt not ordaine a Clerke without an aſſemblie and councell of the Clergie. At this day the practiſe in the Æthiopike Church is ſomewhat otherwiſe: for none hath power to conferre orders, no not the Biſhops, but the Patriarke only called Abuna: as Zago Zabo reporteth: yet hee hath alwaies twelue eccleſiaſticall perſons his aſſiſtants, with whom he conſulteth touching eccleſiaſticall affaires.

3. See the conſent of the reformed Churches before.

4. Their decrees doe further thus teſtifie: Diſtinct.67.c.1. Alij ſacerdotes aſſenſum præbeant: Let other Prieſts beſide rhe Biſhop giue their conſent. Cauſ.12.qu.2.c.38. Vrban. Ordinationes factæ ſine communi conſenſu Clericorum irritæ: Ordinations made without the common conſent of the Clerks, are voide, &c. This alſo is agreeable to the practiſe of the Church of England, which requireth all the Presbyters preſent to lay on their hands together with the Biſhop vpon his head, that is to be ordained.

Againe, Decret.Greg.lib.1.tit.13.c.1. Alexand.3. Ordines minores à non Epiſcopis conferuntur: The leſſe orders (that is, till the Subdeaconſhip) are conferred by them that are no Biſhops. Ibid.tit.14. c.11. Innocent.3. Abbas ſi eſt preſbyter conferre poteſt ordinem clericalem: An Abbot in his Monaſterie, if he be a Presbyter may giue orders. Thus we ſee, that by their owne law, there are other Miniſters of orders beſide Biſhops.

Now becauſe I haue entred to make mention of the calling of Biſhops (and there being two chiefe aduerſaries to this dignitie in our Church; the Papiſts that refuſe it as hereticall; the Schiſmatikes that condemne it as Antichriſtian) before I leaue this place, I will briefly deliuer this honourable calling, from both their ſlanders and accuſations.

THAT THE CALLING OF BISHOPS AS IT IS receiued in the Church of England, is not Antichriſtian.

IN the office and calling of Biſhops, ſomewhat is diuine; ſome things are humane; and in popiſh Biſhops there is ſomewhat Antichriſtian: theſe three points, I purpoſe by Gods grace, briefly to declare in order. Firſt then, that it is a diuine ordinance, that among the Miniſters of the Church, there ſhould bee a ſuperioritie, and that one ſhould be appointed among the reſt, to whom chiefly, though not ſolie, the impoſition of hands, and adminiſtration of diſcipline did appertaine: thus I truſt to make it euident. Firſt, the Scripture euidently ſheweth, that euen among the Apoſtles themſelues there was a certaine order obſerued: as Iames, Peter. Iohn, were counted as the chiefe, and as the pillars among the reſt: as Act.15. the aſſemblie of Apoſtles and Elders was moderated by Iames and Peter. And to this purpoſe ſpeaketh Cyprian. de ſimplic. Cler. The ſame doubtleſſe were the reſt of the Diſciples, that Peter was, hauing an equall fellowſhip with him, both in honour, and power: but the beginning thereof proceedeth from vnitie, to ſignifie to vs, that there is but one Church. Againe, who doubteth but that the twelue Apoſtles were in office and calling ſuperiour to the 70. Diſciples, which were alſo ſent forth to preach, for elſe what needed another to be choſen in Iudas roome, and namely Matthias, ſuppoſed by the ancient writers to haue been one of the ſeuentie, if the Apoſtles office had not been greater? If there had been an equalitie, a ſupplie had not been neceſſarie: neither had it been requiſite or fit to remoue Matthias from his Diſcipleſhip to an office of the ſame equalitie.

Galath.2.10.
Luke 10.1.

Beſide, the ſeuen Epiſtles written to the ſeuen Churches of Aſia, are directed to the Angels, which are the chiefe paſtors of the Churches, who are in the name of the whole Church blamed and commended, as in whoſe hands the Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline chiefly conſiſted. Saint Paul alſo writeth to Timothie, as the chiefe paſtor in Epheſus, to whom chiefly the impoſition of hands appertained, Lay hands ſuddenly on no man: vpon the which place, Beza thus noteth, notandum eſt, it is to be noted out of this place, that Timothie was in the Epheſine Presbyterie or Miniſterie, προεστῶτα, the Preſident, or chiefe Paſtor: And to omit here the teſtimonie of the Fathers, who all with one conſent affirme Timothie to haue bin Biſhop of Epheſus, the ſame is affirmed by the reformed Church of Bohemia, in their confeſſion, Harm. ſect.11. In like ſort Paul writeth to Timothie a Ruler and a Biſhop.

Reuel.2.3.
1.Tim.5.22.

2. Secondly, concerning the difference and ſuperioritie of Biſhops, wee haue plentifull euidence from the ancient Church: Can. Apoſtol.13. Epiſcopus &c. The Biſhop muſt not leaue propriam Parochiam, his proper Church or pariſh; ſo then was his Dioceſſe called: Carthag.4.can.35. Epiſcopus &c. The Biſhop muſt ſit higheſt in the aſſemblie of the Presbyters: Cyprian. lib.4. epiſtol.9. Chriſtus dicit ad Apoſtolos, &c. Chriſt ſaith to his Apoſtles, and conſequently to all gouernours, præpoſitos, which ſucceed the Apoſtles vicaria ordinatione, as their Vicars or deputies by ordination: Hieron. ad Ruſticum: Singuli eccleſiarum Epiſcopi, &c. In euery Church but one or a ſingle Biſhop, one arch-presbyter, one arch-deacon, &c. as in a ſhip but one gouernour, in an houſe one maſter; in an armie, one Captaine. Ambroſe in 1. Timoth.3. after a Biſhop hee ſetteth the ordination of a Deacon, and why? becauſe there is but one ordination of a Biſhop and a Presbyter, for each of them is a Prieſt: Epiſcopus tamen inter Preſbyteros primus: But a Biſhop is the firſt or chiefe among the Presbyters. But the teſtimonies of the fathers concerning the antiquitie of Biſhops is infinite: who liſteth to ſee further, I referre him to the learned treatiſe of a reuerend writer of our Church, written of the perpetuall gouernment of Chriſts Church.

B.Billſon, c.13. p.263. & deinceps.

3. Thirdly, let vs ſee the conſent of the reformed Churches, and the writers thereof. M. Caluin epiſtol.87. written to the Lord Protector of England, Epiſcopi & parochi, &c. Let the Biſhops and the pariſh Miniſters be eſpecially intent, that the Supper of the Lord be not polluted: Epiſtol.190. To the King of Polonia: Eſſent deinde vel prouinciales, &c. If there were prouinciall or citie Biſhops, which ſhould eſpecially be intent to conſerue order, as nature teacheth, that one ſhould bee choſen out of euery Colledge, to whom the chiefe care ſhould belong: and epiſt.199. Fratres noſtri Epiſcopi, &c. Our brethren the Biſhops of England are detained in priſon: So farre was this godly learned man from counting our Biſhops Antichriſtian, that he giueth them the name of brethren. Likewiſe M. Beza, This was eſſentiall in the matter wee haue in hand, that by Gods perpetuall ordinance it hath been, is, and ſhall be neceſſarie, that ſome in the preſbyterie, firſt in place and dignitie ſhould moderate and rule euery action, with that right which by Gods law is giuen vnto him: In reſponſ. ad tract. de Miniſter. gradib. c.23. fol.153. So alſo the reformed Church of Sueueland confeſſeth: Such as haue an earneſt care for the flocke of Chriſt, and doe labour faithfully in the word and doctrine, &c. are acknowledged of our Preachers for true Biſhops; ſuch as the Scripture euery where ſpeaketh of. Thus it appeareth, that to haue ſuperiority among the Miniſters of the Goſpel, that one ſhould be chiefe and aboue the reſt, is by Scripture, conſent of the ancient and new reformed Churches found to be diuine and Apoſtolicall: all other Churches in the Eaſt and South parts profeſſing Chriſtianitie, as of the Grecians, Armenians, Iacobines, Georgians, Æthiopians, haue their Biſhop, as ſuperiour to other Presbyters.

Secondly, I affirmed ſomewhat in the calling of Biſhops, to ariſe rather of humane conſtitution, then of diuine preſcription: as it appeareth by theſe particulars following.

1. Firſt, that Biſhops were ſubiected to their Primates and Metropolitanes, was an ordinance of the Church: as Hierome teſtifieth lib. de 7. ordinibus; or who elſe is the author: Propter hoc & nuper, &c. For this cauſe the Epiſcopal election of late was referred to the Metropolitane, &c. and the chiefe Prieſts begin not of right, but of neceſſitie to ſuffer another Prieſt ouer them.

2. *Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. c.*8. It is thus alleaged out of Iſidore, Solam propter authoritatem, &c. Only for authorities ſake to the chiefe Prieſt is reſerued the ordination of Clerkes, &c.

3. In the ſame place, Conſecratio virginum, the conſecration of virgines is for the ſame cauſe reſerued alſo: but this is now out of vſe in our Church.

4. Of the ſame ſort is confirmation, as Hierome witneſſeth, aduerſ. Luciferian. Si hoc loco quæris, &c. If thou aske in this place, wherefore hee that is baptized receiueth onely the holy Ghoſt by the hands of a Biſhop, know, that this obſeruation is rather for the honour of the Prieſthood, then neceſſitie of any law.

5. Hierome againe in the ſame place, Inde venit, &c. From thence it commeth, that is to auoide ſchiſme, that without the Biſhop bid, neither a Presbyter or Deacon may baptize: but this vſe, as very iniurious to the office of Miniſters, is diſcontinued in our Church.

6. The titles of honour giuen to Biſhops haue the ſame beginning, as Auguſtine witneſſeth epiſtol.19 ad Hieronym. Secundum honorum vocabula, according to the names of honour, which eccleſiaſticall vſe hath obtained, a Biſhops office is greater then a Prieſts.

7. Of the ſame kinde are the poſſeſſions and reuenues of Biſhops, as Auguſtine ſaith, Vix vigeſima particula, &c. That portion which I had from my parents, is hardly the 20. part in compariſon of the mannors of the Church, which I am held now as Lord to enioy, epiſt.5.

8. The diſtinction alſo and diuiſion of Dioceſſes is grounded vpon the ancient cuſtome of the Church: Decret. part.2. cauſ.9. qu.3. c.2. Vnumquemque Epiſcopum, &c. It behoueth euery Biſhop to haue power ouer his owne Dioceſſe, and of the region which is vnder his citie: ex Concil. Antiochen.

9. Certaine cauſes as matrimoniall and teſtamentarie haue by the fauour of Chriſtian Emperours bin reſerued to Biſhops, as Cod. lib.1. tit.6. leg.28. Anthemius thus decreed: That where there is no executor appointed, the Biſhop ſhall diſtribute the goods.

B.Billſon, c.12. pag.237.

10. Hierome ſaith, in 1. cap. epiſt. ad Titum. That wheras at the firſt Presbyters with common aduice, and equall care guided the Church vnder the Apoſtles, Paulatim ad vnum, &c. the whole care thereof was by little and little deriued to one. To this it is further thus added by a reuerent learned man, now a B. of our Church: So at length by cuſtome Presbyters were vtterly excluded from all aduice and counſell, whereof Ambroſe complaineth, and Biſhops onely intermedled with the regiment of the Church: this manner of ſubiection in Presbyters, and prelation in Biſhops grew onely in continuance of time, and not by any ordinance of Chriſt or his Apoſtles: See more of this matter, Contr. 5. qu. 3. part. 2. of the difference of Miniſters.

Theſe and other ſuch like additions, priuiledges and encreaſing of the dignitie of Biſhops, grounded rather vpon cuſtome then any commandement, doe not yet make that function vnlawfull or Antichriſtian: To this we haue the conſent of other reformed Churches: Harm. ſect. 11. Confeſſion of Sweueland; Our Preachers haue great iniurie offered them, in that they are blamed, as though they ſought to bring the authoritie of eccleſiaſticall Prelates to nothing, whereas they neuer forbad them, that worldly gouernement, and authoritie, which they haue; but they haue often wiſhed, that they would come neerer the eccleſiaſticall commandements, &c. ſect. 16. confeſſ. Auſpurg. Wee doe not goe about to weaken the authoritie of eccleſiaſticall power, wee detract nothing from the dignitie of Biſhops, we doe not diſturbe the good order of the Church: Againe, ſect. 17. in the confeſſion of Auſpurg. The Churches doe not deſire of the Biſhops, that they would repaire peace and concord with the loſſe of their honour, which yet good Paſtors ought to doe, onely they deſire, that they would remit vniuſt burdens, &c. If the calling then of Biſhops were Antichriſtian, all theſe Churches ſhould bee no leſſe, that allow them.

Thirdly, I wil now in the third place ſhew the difference betweene Proteſtant Biſhops, and Popiſh Biſhops, that it may appeare wherein indeed theſe are worthily counted Antichriſtian.

1 Popiſh Biſhops receiue their power from the Beaſt, and doe fight vnder Antichriſts banner: ſo doe not our Biſhops, who expect not any forraine ordination, but are made ouer-ſeers by the ſpirit of God, directing and gouerning euery true Church, according to the Scriptures. Act. 20. 28.

2 Popiſh Biſhops are maintainers of corrupt doctrine, and enemies to the faith, contrarie to the Scriptures, Tit. 1. 9. S. Paules Biſhop muſt hold faſt the faithfull word according to doctrine: So are our Biſhops defenders and preachers of the truth.

3 Popiſh Biſhops for the moſt part are vnlearned and vnpreaching Prelates, and iuſtified herein by their owne writers, Rhemiſt. annot. in 1. Tim. v. 17. contrarie to the Scriptures: A Biſhop muſt be apt to teach, But our Biſhops are Preachers; there is not one at this day in the Church of England, 1. Tim. 3. 2. but is both able, and doth preach: which is the moſt weightie part, and giueth greateſt grace to their paſtorall office: for whom we doe pray, that God would giue them grace both in their life and doctrine to ſet forth his holy word: as S. Paul warneth Timothie, Preach the word, be inſtant, in ſeaſon, out of ſeaſon: according alſo to the Canons, Carthag. 4. can. 1. Epiſcopus, &c. A Biſhop muſt onely attend vpon reading, prayer, and preaching of the word.

4 Popiſh Biſhops muſt aſcend by ſeuen ſteps or degrees: firſt, hee muſt be a Dorekeeper, then a Reader, then an Exorciſt, an Acolythiſt, a Subdeacon, Deacon, Prieſt, and laſt of all a Biſhop, ex decr. Gaij. But our Biſhops aſcend but by two degrees, of Presbyters and Deacons, according to the Scriptures, which deſcribe the office onely of Biſhops, vnder them alſo comprehending Presbyters and Deacons, as degrees of the miniſterie. 1. Tim. 3. 2. 12.

5 Popiſh Biſhops are ſuperſtitiouſly conſecrated, with the annointing of oyle, they haue their mitre, pall, croſſe, crozier ſtaffe, with other ſuperſtitious ornaments contrarie to the Scripture. Timothie was ordained onely by impoſition of hands: ſo are our Biſhops conſecrated, with impoſition of 1. Tim. 1. 6. hands and prayer.

6 The Popiſh Prelates doe reſerue vnto themſelues for their aduantage, many ſuperſtitious rites and cuſtomes, as to baptize belles, to dedicate Churches, to annoint with Chriſme, and ſuch like: which things S. Paules Biſhop hath no charge of, 1. Tim. 3. neither haue our Biſhops any thing to doe with ſuch things.

7 Popiſh Prelates are as Lords ouer their flocke, ouer-ruling their faith; and the Clergie and people are as their ſubiects, nay which is more, their ſlaues: contrarie to the Apoſtle: Not that wee haue dominion ouer your faith: and againe, Not as though ye were Lords ouer Gods inheritance. But ſo 2. Cor. 1. 24. 1. Pet. 5. 3. are not our Biſhops, who diſdaine not in the ordaining of Miniſters, to call them brethren: as Hierome faith, Pontifices Chriſti, &c. We reuerence Biſhops, preaching the true faith, not with the feare of Maſters, but with the honour of Fathers; that we may yeeld reuerence to Biſhops as Biſhops, and not vnder one name to ſerue another: Hieron. ad Theophylact.

8 Saint Paules Biſhop muſt be φιλάγαθος, a louer of good men: So are not Popiſh Prelates, who hate Tit. 1. 8. to death the profeſſours of the Goſpell of Chriſt: So doe not our Biſhops; I doubt not but that they are patrons and louers of the truth.

9 Popiſh Prelates take vpon them to diſpenſe Indulgences, to forgiue ſinnes for dayes, moneths, yeares; by their owne power to acquite and diſcharge ſinners. But our Biſhops take not vpon them 1. Cor. 3. 5. to be conferrers or beſtowers of Gods graces or mercies, but according to the Scriptures, to bee as 1. Cor. 4. 1. Miniſters by whom the people beleeue, as diſpoſers of the ſecrets of God, as helpers of our ioy. 2. Cor. 1. 24.

10 Saint Pauls Biſhops muſt bee readie to ſuffer aduerſitie for the truth: ſo doe not Popiſh Pre- 1. Tim. 4. 5. lates, who haue made many martyrs, but themſelues neuer were martyrs of or for the truth; but many

2. Secondly, concerning the difference and ſuperioritie of Biſhops, wee haue plentifull euidence from the ancient Church: Can. Apoſtol.13. Epiſcopus &c. The Biſhop muſt not leaue propriam Parochiam, his proper Church or pariſh; ſo then was his Dioceſſe called: Carthag.4.can.35. Epiſcopus &c. The Biſhop muſt ſit higheſt in the aſſemblie of the Presbyters: Cyprian. lib.4. epiſtol.9. Chriſtus dicit ad Apoſtolos, &c. Chriſt ſaith to his Apoſtles, and conſequently to all gouernours, præpoſitos, which ſucceed the Apoſtles vicaria ordinatione, as their Vicars or deputies by ordination: Hieron. ad Ruſticum: Singuli eccleſiarum Epiſcopi, &c. In euery Church but one or a ſingle Biſhop, one arch-presbyter, one arch-deacon, &c. as in a ſhip but one gouernour, in an houſe one maſter; in an armie, one Captaine. Ambroſe in 1.Timoth.3. after a Biſhop hee ſetteth the ordination of a Deacon, and why? becauſe there is but one ordination of a Biſhop and a Presbyter, for each of them is a Prieſt: Epiſcopus tamen inter Presbyteros primus: But a Biſhop is the firſt or chiefe among the Presbyters. But the teſtimonies of the fathers concerning the antiquitie of Biſhops is infinite: who liſteth to ſee further, I referre him to the learned treatiſe of a reuerend writer of our Church, written of the perpetuall gouernment of Chriſts Church.

B.Bilſon, c.13. p.263. & deinceps.

3. Thirdly, let vs ſee the conſent of the reformed Churches, and the writers thereof. M. Caluin epiſtol.87. written to the Lord Protector of England, Epiſcopi & parochi, &c. Let the Biſhops and the pariſh Miniſters be eſpecially intent, that the Supper of the Lord be not polluted: Epiſtol.190. To the King of Polonia: Eſſent deinde vel prouinciales, &c. If there were prouinciall or citie Biſhops, which ſhould eſpecially be intent to conſerue order, as nature teacheth, that one ſhould bee choſen out of euery Colledge, to whom the chiefe care ſhould belong: and epiſt.199. Fratres noſtri Epiſcopi, &c. Our brethren the Biſhops of England are detained in priſon: So farre was this godly learned man from counting our Biſhops Antichriſtian, that he giueth them the name of brethren. Likewiſe M. Beza, This was eſſentiall in the matter wee haue in hand, that by Gods perpetuall ordinance it hath been, is, and ſhall be neceſſarie, that ſome in the preſbyterie, firſt in place and dignitie ſhould moderate and rule euery action, with that right which by Gods law is giuen vnto him: In reſponſ. ad tract. de Miniſter. gradib. c.23. fol.153. So alſo the reformed Church of Sueueland confeſſeth: Such as haue an earneſt care for the flocke of Chriſt, and doe labour faithfully in the word and doctrine, &c. are acknowledged of our Preachers for true Biſhops; ſuch as the Scripture euery where ſpeaketh of. Thus it appeareth, that to haue ſuperiority among the Miniſters of the Goſpel, that one ſhould be chiefe and aboue the reſt, is by Scripture, conſent of the ancient and new reformed Churches found to be diuine and Apoſtolicall: all other Churches in the Eaſt and South parts profeſſing Chriſtianitie, as of the Grecians, Armenians, Iacobines, Georgians, Æthiopians, haue their Biſhop, as ſuperiour to other Presbyters.

Secondly, I affirmed ſomewhat in the calling of Biſhops, to ariſe rather of humane conſtitution, then of diuine preſcription: as it appeareth by theſe particulars following.

1. Firſt, that Biſhops were ſubiected to their Primates and Metropolitanes, was an ordinance of the Church: as Hierome teſtifieth lib. de 7. ordinibus; or who elſe is the author: Propter hoc & nuper, &c. For this cauſe the Epiſcopal election of late was referred to the Metropolitane, &c. and the chiefe Prieſts begin not of right, but of neceſſitie to ſuffer another Prieſt ouer them.

2. Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. c.8. It is thus alleaged out of Iſidore, Solam propter authoritatem, &c. Only for authorities ſake to the chiefe Prieſt is reſerued the ordination of Clerkes, &c.

3. In the ſame place, Conſecratio virginum, the conſecration of virgines is for the ſame cauſe reſerued alſo: but this is now out of vſe in our Church.

4. Of the ſame ſort is confirmation, as Hierome witneſſeth, aduerſ. Luciferian. Si hoc loco quæras, &c. If thou aske in this place, wherefore hee that is baptized receiueth onely the holy Ghoſt by the hands of a Biſhop, know, that this obſeruation is rather for the honour of the Prieſthood, then neceſſitie of any law.

5. Hierome againe in the ſame place, Inde venit, &c. From thence it commeth, that is to auoide ſchiſme, that without the Biſhop bid, neither a Presbyter or Deacon may baptize: but this vſe, as very iniurious to the office of Miniſters, is diſcontinued in our Church.

6. The titles of honour giuen to Biſhops haue the ſame beginning, as Auguſtine witneſſeth epiſtol.19 ad Hieronym. Secundum honorum vocabula, according to the names of honour, which eccleſiaſticall vſe hath obtained, a Biſhops office is greater then a Prieſts.

7. Of the ſame kinde are the poſſeſſions and reuenues of Biſhops, as Auguſtine ſaith, Vix vigeſima particula, &c. That portion which I had from my parents, is hardly the 20. part in compariſon of the mannors of the Church, which I am held now as Lord to enioy, epiſt.5.

8. The diſtinction alſo and diuiſion of Dioceſſes is grounded vpon the ancient cuſtome of the Church: Decret. part.2. cauſ.9 qu.3. c.2. Vnumquemque Epiſcopum, &c. It behoueth euery Biſhop to haue power ouer his owne Dioceſſe, and of the region which is vnder his citie: ex Concil. Antiochen.

9. Certaine cauſes as matrimoniall and teſtamentarie haue by the fauour of Chriſtian Emperours bin reſerued to Biſhops, as Cod. lib.1. tit.6. leg.28. Anthemius thus decreed: That where there is no executor appointed, the Biſhop ſhall diſtribute the goods.

B.Bilſon, c.12. pag.237.

10. Hierome ſaith, in 1. cap. epiſt. ad Titum. That wheras at the firſt Presbyters with common aduice, and equall care guided the Church vnder the Apoſtles, Paulatim ad vnum, &c. the whole care thereof was by little and little deriued to one. To this it is further thus added by a reuerent learned man, now a B. of our Church: So at length by cuſtome Presbyters were vtterly excluded from all aduice and counſell, whereof Ambroſe complaineth, and Biſhops onely intermedled with the regiment of the Church: this manner of ſubiection in Presbyters, and prelation in Biſhops grew onely in continuance of time, and not by any ordinance of Chriſt or his Apoſtles: See more of this matter, Contr.5.qu.3.part.2. of the difference of Miniſters.

Theſe and other ſuch like additions, priuiledges and encreaſing of the dignitie of Biſhops, grounded rather vpon cuſtome then any commandement, doe not yet make that function vnlawfull or Antichriſtian: To this we haue the conſent of other reformed Churches: Harm. ſect. 11. Confeſſion of *Sweneland; Our Preachers haue great iniurie offered them, in that they are blamed, as though they ſought to bring the authoritie of eccleſiaſticall Prelates to nothing, whereas they neuer forbad them, that worldly gouernement, and authoritie, which they haue; but they haue often wiſhed, that they would come neerer the eccleſiaſticall commandements,&c. ſect.*16. confeſſ. Auſpurg. Wee doe not goe about to weaken the authoritie of eccleſiaſticall power, wee detract nothing from the dignitie of Biſhops, we doe not diſturbe the good order of the Church: Againe, ſect. 17. in the confeſſion of Auſpurg. The Churches doe not deſire of the Biſhops, that they would repaire peace and concord with the loſſe of their honour, which yet good Paſtors ought to doe, onely they deſire, that they would remit vniuſt burdens,&c. If the calling then of Biſhops were Antichriſtian, all theſe Churches ſhould bee no leſſe, that allow them.

Thirdly, I wil now in the third place ſhew the difference betweene Proteſtant Biſhops, and Popiſh Biſhops, that it may appeare wherein indeed theſe are worthily counted Antichriſtian.

1 Popiſh Biſhops receiue their power from the Beaſt, and doe fight vnder Antichriſts banner: ſo doe not our Biſhops, who expect not any forraine ordination, but are made ouer-ſeers by the ſpirit of God, directing and gouerning euery true Church, according to the Scriptures. Act.20.28.

2 Popiſh Biſhops are maintainers of corrupt doctrine, and enemies to the faith, contrarie to the Scriptures, Tit.1.9. S. Paules Biſhop muſt hold faſt the faithfull word according to doctrine: So are our Biſhops defenders and preachers of the truth.

3 Popiſh Biſhops for the moſt part are vnlearned and vnpreaching Prelates, and iuſtified herein by their owne writers, Rhemiſt. annot. in 1.*Tim.v.*17. contrarie to the Scriptures: A Biſhop muſt be apt to teach, But our Biſhops are Preachers; there is not one at this day in the Church of England, 1.Tim.3.2. but is both able, and doth preach: which is the moſt weightie part, and giueth greateſt grace to their paſtorall office: for whom we doe pray, that God would giue them grace both in their life and doctrine to ſet forth his holy word: as S. Paul warneth Timothie, Preach the word, be inſtant, in ſeaſon, out of ſeaſon: according alſo to the Canons, Carthag.4.can.1.Epiſcopus,&c. A Biſhop muſt onely attend vpon reading, prayer, and preaching of the word.

4 Popiſh Biſhops muſt aſcend by ſeuen ſteps or degrees: firſt, hee muſt be a Dorekeeper, then a Reader, then an Exorciſt, an Acolythiſt, a Subdeacon, Deacon, Prieſt, and laſt of all a Biſhop, ex decr.
Gay. But our Biſhops aſcend but by two degrees, of Presbyters and Deacons, according to the Scriptures, which deſcribe the office onely of Biſhops, vnder them alſo comprehending Presbyters and Deacons, as degrees of the miniſterie. 1.Tim.3.2.12.

5 Popiſh Biſhops are ſuperſtitiouſly conſecrated, with the annointing of oyle, they haue their mitre, pall, croſſe, crozier ſtaffe, with other ſuperſtitious ornaments contrarie to the Scripture. Timo- 1.Tim.1.6.
thie was ordained onely by impoſition of hands: ſo are our Biſhops conſecrated, with impoſition of hands and prayer.

6 The Popiſh Prelates doe reſerue vnto themſelues for their aduantage, many ſuperſtitious rites and cuſtomes, as to baptize belles, to dedicate Churches, to annoint with Chriſme, and ſuch like: which things S. Paules Biſhop hath no charge of, 1.Tim.3. neither haue our Biſhops any thing to doe with ſuch things.

7 Popiſh Prelates are as Lords ouer their flocke, ouer-ruling their faith; and the Clergie and people are as their ſubiects, nay which is more, their ſlaues: contrarie to the Apoſtle: Not that wee 2.Cor.1.24.
haue dominion ouer your faith: and againe, Not as though ye were Lords ouer Gods inheritance. But ſo 1.Pet.5.3.
are not our Biſhops, who diſdaine not in the ordaining of Miniſters, to call them brethren: as Hierome ſaith, Pontifices Chriſti,&c. We reuerence Biſhops, preaching the true faith, not with the feare of Maſters, but with the honour of Fathers; that we may yeeld reuerence to Biſhops as Biſhops, and not vnder one name to ſerue another: Hieron. ad Theophylact.

8 Saint Paules Biſhop muſt be φιλάγαθον, a louer of good men: So are not Popiſh Prelates, who hate Tit.1.8. to death the profeſſours of the Goſpell of Chriſt: So doe not our Biſhops; I doubt not but that they are patrons and louers of the truth.

9 Popiſh Prelates take vpon them to diſpenſe Indulgences, to forgiue ſinnes for dayes, moneths, yeares; by their owne power to acquite and diſcharge ſinners. But our Biſhops take not vpon them 1.Cor.3.5.
to be conferrers or beſtowers of Gods graces or mercies, but according to the Scriptures, to bee as 1.Cor.4.1.
Miniſters by whom the people beleeue, as diſpoſers of the ſecrets of God, as helpers of our ioy. 2.Cor.1.24.

10 Saint Pauls Biſhops muſt bee readie to ſuffer aduerſitie for the truth: ſo doe not Popiſh Pre- 1.Tim.4.5.
lates, who haue made many martyrs, but themſelues neuer were martyrs of or for the truth; but many of our Biſhops haue beene faithfull Martyrs, and ſuffered for the truth, as B. Cranmer, Ridley, Hooper, Latimer, Ferrar, of bleſſed memorie.

11 Saint Pauls Biſhop beleeueth and is perſwaded, that the Scriptures ſufficiently containe all 2.Tim.3.15.17 doctrine neceſſarie to ſaluation: So alſo do our Biſhops profeſſe in their conſecration, as is euident in the booke of Orders: but ſo doe not the Popiſh Prelates beleeue, neither are they ſo perſwaded, holding many vnwritten traditions neceſſarie beſide Scripture.

12 Our Biſhops doe profeſſe, when they are conſecrated, To teach nothing as required of neceſſitie to eternall ſaluation, but that they are perſwaded may be concluded, and proued by the Scriptures: according 2.Tim.3.14. as S. Paul ſaith to Timothie. Continue thou in all things which thou haſt learned, and art perſwaded of, knowing of whom thou haſt learned them: But Popiſh Prelates doe binde mens conſciences to obſerue their owne traditions, as the Church of Saxonie complaineth in their confeſſion: The Biſhops take to themſelues authoritie to ordaine new kindes of worſhip, and to binde conſciences, Harmon. ſect. 17.

13 Saint Paules Biſhop is required to be ſober, watching, modeſt; ſo is it demanded of our Biſhops in their conſecration: Will you denie vngodlineſſe and worldly luſtes, and liue ſoberly? Such are not Popiſh Prelates, who forcing themſelues to keepe the violent vow of ſingle life, are many of them detected of incontinent and adulterous life: as Pope Iohn 13. was wounded and ſlaine in adulterie, Luitprand. lib.6. Two adulterous Biſhops of the Tridentine Councell, were ſlaine in adulterie: ex proteſtat. concion. German.

14 Popiſh Prelates take to themſelues authoritie to giue power vnto Prieſts, to make the bodie of Chriſt, and to offer ſacrifice for the quicke and the dead: for this is the very forme of the order of Popiſh Prieſthood inuented by man, and not grounded vpon the word of God: but our Biſhops doe ordaine Miniſters to be faithfull diſpenſers of the word of God, and of his holy Sacraments: agreeable to the 1.Tim.4.13. Scriptures: Giue attendance to reading, to exhortation, doctrine: Preach the word, &c.

2.Tim.4.3. 15 Popiſh Prelates neglecting their Epiſcopall office, take vpon them the vſe of both ſwords: as to be Captaines and leaders of Armies, Muſter-maiſters: Such an one was Henry Spencer, anno 1380. or there about, that was Pope Vrbanes captaine Generall, and in his owne perſon fought the Popes battailes: Fox. p. 446. Such an one was Theodorike Biſhop of Colen, that waged many battailes. Cardinall Ballua vnder Lodouic. 11. King of Fraunce, tooke generall muſter of the ſouldiers at Paris: whereupon one Chabanus a Courtier merrily ſaid to the King: Send me, I pray you, to his Biſhopricke to conſecrate Prieſts, for I may as well doe that, as he muſter ſouldiers: Eſpenc. digreſſ. in 1. ad Tim. lib. 3. *c.*6. And it is not long ſince a Cardinall was Lieutenant of the king of Spaine his forces in the Low 1.Tim.3.3. Countries. But S. Pauls Biſhop muſt be no fighter, neither are the Proteſtants Biſhops ſuch.

16 Popiſh Prelates doe moſt tyrannically compell their Clergie to liue vnmarried, and to forſake their wiues to whom they were coupled, as is euident in the ſtories of Lanfranke and Anſelme Biſhops Heb.13.4. of Canterburie; contrarie to the Apoſtle, Marriage is honourable among all: But our Biſhops enforce no ſuch thing.

17 Popiſh Prelates are moſt groſſe idolatours, falling downe before ſtockes and ſtones, comman-1.Iohn.5.21. ding the people to doe the like: contrarie to the Apoſtle: Keepe your ſelues from idols: But our Biſhops are free from all idolatrie.

18 Popiſh Prelates doe take themſelues and their Clergie to be exempted from the ciuill power: Rom.13.1. contrarie to the Apoſtle. Let euery ſoule be ſubiect to the higher powers: ſo are not our Biſhops, who do moſt willingly ſubmit themſelues to the lawes of the Prince, and at their conſecration bind themſelues by oath thereunto.

19 Popiſh Prelates are capable to be Lord Cardinals, and ſo to inſult aboue their brethren and fellow Biſhops, and to be the Popes agents and factors; contrarie to the Apoſtle, who reproueth *Dio-*Iohn 3.Epiſt 9. trephes for louing to haue the preheminence. And Hierome ſaith, Whereſoeuer a Biſhop is, whether at Rome, Eugubium, Conſtantinople, they are of the ſame merite or worthineſſe of the ſame Prieſthood: Hieron. Euagr. But our Biſhops are capable of no ſuch proud or ambitious title.

20 Popiſh Biſhops and Cardinals are capable of the papacie, the ſeat and throne of Antichriſt and Satan; for they are not true Biſhops: as Antipas was ſlaine, euen where Satans throne was, becauſe he Reuel.2.13. kept the name of Chriſt, and did not ſit in Satans throne. And our Biſhops at their conſecration doe renounce and diſdaine the power and iuriſdiction of all forraine Prelates, Potentates, and ſo doe not communicate at all with that throne of Satan.

In theſe and many other materiall points, doe our Biſhops differ from the Popiſh Prelates: and yet if they agreed with them in all other matters, and diſſented onely in doctrine and faith, it were ſufficient to cleare and diſcharge them from their ſlaunderous accuſation of Antichriſtianiſme: for where Satans throne is not, there cannot Antichriſt ſit: and where Chriſtes name is kept, his faith not denied, but ſincerely taught, there Satans throne is not, Reuel. 2.13. Therefore the Church of England, profeſſing the true doctrine and faith of Chriſt, is not vnder the kingdome of Antichriſt: and ſo I conclude with that ſaying, Nicen. concil. 2. can. 2. Noſtræ Hierarchiæ ſubſtantia, &c. The ſubſtance of our Hierarchie are the heauenly words, that is, the true knowledge of the diuine Scriptures: the Church and Miniſterie then of England hauing the ſubſtance of the true miniſterie, cannot be iudged Antichriſtian: neither are our Biſhops the miniſters of Antichriſt, being Preachers and profeſſours of the true faith. Now I will proceed.

THE FIFTH PART, OF THE Ceremonies.

The Papiſts.

THey doe anoint the hands of ſuch as are ordained, with oyle, and doe enioyne them to ſhaue their crownes. And the higher degree of Prieſthood they haue, ſo much broader muſt their ſhauen crowne be, *Tileman.Heſhuſ.loc.*14.*Err.*5.*Bellarm.cap.*12.

The Proteſtants.

WE haue the ſame opinion of theſe ceremonies, as we haue of the Popiſh orders themſelues, counting them worthie of no place in the Church of God. As for the ſuperſtitious cuſtome of anointing, it is a Iewiſh rite, better beſeeming Aarons order, than the Miniſters of Ieſus Chriſt. Looke how he was anointed, ſo are we: of him it is ſaid, The ſpirit of the Lord is vpon me, becauſe hee hath anointed me: [a] So the inward working of the ſpirit is our anointing. [b] Againe, in diuers places of the Scripture we reade of ordaining by impoſition of hands: [c] But there is no mention at all made of anointing with oyle.

[a] Luk.4.18.
[c] Act.13.3. 1.Tim.4.14. 5.22. 2.Tim.1.6.

And as for the ſhauing of the crowne, it is worſe than a Iewiſh ceremonie: for it ſeemeth to haue taken beginning from the Heathen: and the Iewes were forbidden to cut or make bald their heads: [d] In ſo much, as it was a ſigne of more holineſſe amongſt them not to ſuffer the razor to come vpon their heads, as it is to be ſeene in the law of the Nazarites, Numbers 6. The reſt of the queſtions that concerne the calling of Miniſters, we haue entreated of more at large, Controuerſ.5.of Eccleſiaſticall perſons.

[d] Deut.14.1. Leuit.19.28.

*Concil.Eliberin.can.*55.Sacerdotes, qui tantum ſacrificantium coronam portant, nec ſacrificant idolis, placuit poſt biennium communionem accipere: Prieſts, that haue onely a ſhauen crowne like idolatrous ſacrificers, and yet doe not ſacrifice to Idols, after two yeeres may receiue the Communion, &c. We ſee that by this Canon they are cenſured, that had ſhorne crownes.

1 *Decret.Gregor.lib.*1.*tit.*15.*c.*1 *Innocent.*3. Among the Greekes, Non conſueuerunt pontifices cum conſecrantur inungi: Biſhops, when they are conſecrated, are not anointed, &c. If it were an Apoſtolike inſtitution, it would haue beene generally obſerued in all Churches.

2 Optatus reproueth the Donatiſts, that vſed to ſhaue the heads of their Prieſts: Docete vbi vobis mandatum eſt radere capita ſacerdotum, cum è contra ſint tot exempla propoſita fieri non debere: Shew where it is commanded you to ſhaue the heads of Prieſts, whereas on the contrarie ſide there are ſo many euidences propounded, that it ought not to be. Lib.contra Parmenion.

3 Confeſſ.of Wittemberg.c.10. In the law of Moſes, there was a time for ſhadowes, but now Chriſt being reuealed it is a time of truth, and the vſe of externall annointing pertaineth to the rudiments of the world, &c. Harm.ſect.13. p.428.

4 *Cauſ.*12.*qu.*1.*c.*7.Hanc coronam habent ab inſtitutione Romana eccleſia: They haue their ſhauen crowne from the inſtitution of the Romane Church. Then not from the inſtitution of the Apoſtles.

*Magiſter ſententiar.lib.*4.*diſt.*24.b. Tonſura eccleſiaſtica vſus à Nazaræis exortus videtur: The vſe of Eccleſiaſticall tonſure or ſhauing ſeemeth to haue taken beginning from the Nazarites. How then can it be a ceremonie of the Goſpell, being altogether a Iudaicall rite? Nay, the Iewes neuer ſo abounded in ſuperſtitious obſeruations and fooliſh ſignifications. The Prieſts ſhauing firſt (they ſay) betokeneth that they are as it were Kings of the Church, which is ſignified by the crowne, to rule themſelues and others: And ſo indeede Popiſh Prelates haue taken vpon them to be Kings indeede, exalting themſelues aboue Kings and Princes: *Cauſ.*12.*qu.*1.*c.*7. Secondly, Raſio capitis eſt temporalium omnium depoſitio: The ſhauing of the head ſignifieth the laying aſide of all temporall things: ibid. This did well appeare in their cloiſtered ſhauelings, that had ſcraped together the riches of the land. Thirdly, Denudatio capitis eſt reuelatio mentis: The baring of the head ſignifieth the reuealing of the minde, that they ſhould not bee ignorant of Gods ſecrets: Magiſter ſententiar.ibid. And no maruell, their ſhaueling Prieſts were ſuch great Clerkes. Fourthly, their ſhauing betokened the mortifying of the fleſh, and the ſubduing of vice: Magiſt.ibid. The vncleane ſtories of Monkiſh liues doe well make proofe of their mortification. Thus we ſee how vnlike they are in their workes, to the meaning of their ſhauen crownes vpon their heads. The ſuperſtitious Iewes themſelues may well laugh at ſuch toyes.

To this agreeth the iudgement of the holy Martyrs: Robert Smith holy Martyr: *As for your ſhauing, anointing, greaſing, polling, rounding: there are no ſuch things appointed in Gods booke: and therefore I haue nothing to doe, to beleeue your orders. And as for you my Lord, if you had grace or intelligence, you would not ſo disfigure your ſelfe, as you doe: Fox p.*1693.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF EXTREAME VNCtion. Firſt, whether it be a Sacrament. Secondly, of the efficacie. Thirdly, of the ceremonies.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER EXtreame Vnction be a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

112. Error. THat extreame Vnction is rightly and properly a Sacrament, which is (ſay they) the anointing of thoſe that are extreame ſicke, to aſſure them of remiſſion of their ſinnes: it was concluded in the Chapter of Trent. ſeſſ. 14. can. 1. and is generally maintained by the Church of Rome, Bellarm. cap. 2.

Iames. 5. 14. Mark. 6. 13. Argum. The Sacrament of extreame Vnction in this place is plainly promulgated by the Apoſtle, being inſtituted before by our Sauiour Chriſt: For here is remiſſion of ſinnes promiſed to the outward element, that is, the anointing of the ſicke with oyle: Ergo, a Sacrament, Rhemiſt.

Anſw. 1. This anointing of oyle, was a ſigne onely of the miraculous gift of healing, that was then in the Church, and therefore was no longer to continue, than the gift it ſelfe. But it is not like, will they ſay, that euery one of the Elders had this miraculous gift of healing. Anſw. Though euery particular Elder perhaps had it not, yet the whole companie of the Eldership might haue it, as S. Paul 1. Tim. 4. 14. ſpeaketh of the gift of propheſie giuen to the Elderſhip, And it is not like that the Apoſtle would haue promiſed health by calling for the Elders, if the gift had not beene generall in euery congregation.

Anſw. 2. Neither is remiſſion of ſinnes annexed to the element, but to the exerciſe of prayer made in faith. The prayer of faith, ſaith the Apoſtle, ſhall heale the ſicke.

Bellarmine on the contrarie ſide laboureth to proue, that this place of Iames cannot be vnderſtood of the miraculous gift of healing. Firſt, if it had beene a miraculous gift, it ſhould haue beene more generall, not onely to cure ſicke folke, but the blinde alſo and lame.

Contra. 1. As though there were not diuers miraculous gifts, which were not all in euery one, neither was it requiſite ſo to be. S. Paul diſtinguiſheth the gifts of the ſpirit, as one hath the gift of hea-1. Cor. 12. 9. 10. ling, another the operation of great workes, as to caſt out diuels, to heale thoſe which were borne blinde, and ſuch like: doth it follow now, that he which had the one, muſt needes alſo haue the other? 2. The Ieſuite controuleth the wiſedome of our Sauiour Chriſt, who although hee endued his Apoſtles with a generall power to worke miracles, yet gaue them this gift, that by this ſpeciall meane (the Mark. 6. 13. anointing the ſicke with oyle) they ſhould heale them.

Bellarm. 2. If the Apoſtle had ſpoken of a miraculous gift, he would not haue preſcribed them the matter to worke by, namely oyle.

Mark. 16. 18. Contra. By this reaſon, that gift of healing, which the Apoſtles vſed, Mark. 6. 13. ſhould not bee miraculous, becauſe there alſo, they are preſcribed oyle: nor that, which is promiſed, becauſe there is a preſcription alſo, how they ſhall lay their hands vpon the ſicke, and ſo heale them.

Bellarm. 3 If it had beene a miraculous gift, it ſhould haue neuer failed, but they alwaies ſhould haue recouered bodily health, and ſo none ſhould haue died in the Apoſtles time.

Contra. 1. As though the miraculous gifts, which were then giuen vnto men, were infinite, and not Mark. 3. 15. rather meaſured, and directed according to Gods will: The Apoſtles had power giuen them to caſt Mark. 9. 18. out diuels, yet could they not caſt out a dumbe ſpirit: So that their miraculous gifts, then, and ſo often, and for the moſt part tooke place, when it pleaſed God, when hee ſaw it to be to his glorie, and needfull for his Church. 2. Neither doth it follow, that they which were thus once healed, ſhould alwaies be healed, and ſo neuer die: no more then Lazarus, who was once raiſed out of the graue, was preſerued from death, who afterward notwithſtanding died.

Bellarm. 4. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh in direct termes of forgiuing of ſinnes: therefore ſpirituall health is here vnderſtood, rather than corporall.

Contra. We grant, that remiſſion of ſinnes did concurre with the outward miraculous gift, at the feruent prayers of the faithfull. For how could the diſeaſe be cured, if the cauſe thereof, which was ſinne, were not firſt remoued? but it followeth not, that the gift of bodily health was not therefore miraculous: For Chriſt, whom he healed bodily, to many of them alſo he forgaue their ſinnes, yet did Mark. 2. 5. he heale by miracle, as Chriſt ſaith to the ſicke of the palſey, thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee: he healed him both bodily and ghoſtly: ſhall we ſay therefore, that he was not cured miraculouſly? Wherefore it remaineth, as we anſwered before, that this gift of healing, which S. Iames ſpeaketh of, was miraculous, and ſo proueth no Sacrament: for it is all one with that gift, which the Apoſtles exerciſed, Mark. 6. which cannot be denied but to haue beene miraculous.

Thus much alſo is confeſſed: Interrelig. Caeſarea. cap. 19. Inter initia fidei externa quoque corporis ſanitas, quaſi interna ſanationis ſignum conſequebatur, &c. In the beginning, and ſpringing vp of faith, the outward health of the bodie did follow as a ſigne of the inward healing: Quemadmodum in alijs ſacramentis ad confirmationem rudis fidei interna virtus, externis ſignis & miraculis demonſtrabatur: As in other Sacraments, for the confirmation of their weake faith, the inward vertue was ſhewed forth by outward ſignes and miracles: which are not needfull now,&c. The gift of healing then was a miracle.

The Proteſtants.

EXtreame Vnction is no conuenient ceremonie at all to be vſed in the Church, as tending to ſuperſtition,and breeding a vaine confidence in terrene elements: much leſſe is it to be holden for a Sacrament.

*Argum.*1. It hath no inſtitution from Chriſt: for they themſelues confeſſe, that Mark.6,13. there is but a preparatiue to the Sacrament of extreame Vnction,*Rhemiſt.*the promulgation and publiſhing thereof is ſet forth by the Apoſtle, Iam.5. But this is not to be admitted, that Chriſt was a preparer of Sacraments onely, and that they were perfited and finiſhed by his Apoſtles: nay, they were not to adde any thing to the inſtitution of Sacraments, but to take them as Chriſt deliuered them. 1.Cor.11.23.

The Maſter of the Sentences ſaith: Sacramentum vnctionis infirmorum,&c. The Sacrament of anointing the ſicke, is read to haue beene inſtituted of the Apoſtles. Then is it no Sacrament, for Chriſt onely is the author of the Sacraments: as Bellarmine proueth at large, lib.1. de Sacrament.in genere.c.24. And it was thus decreed, Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.7.c.1. Siquis dixerit Sacramenta noua legis non eſſe omnia à Ieſu Chriſto inſtituta, anathema: If any man ſay that the Sacraments of the new Teſtament were not at all inſtituted of Chriſt, let him be accurſed,&c. How then doth Bellarmine and the reſt auoide this curſe, that doe hold this Sacrament to haue beene inſtituted by the Apoſtles? There are two opinions among them: ſome thinke that the anointing, ſpoken of Mark.6.13. and the other mentioned Iam.5. to be all one: Sic Thomas Waldenſ. Alphonſus de caſtro lib. de Hæreſib. Others of them doe thinke, that that, which Marke ſpeaketh of, was not Vnctio ſacramentalis, a ſacramentall Vnction,but onely a figure and ſhadow of it: ſic Ruardus in explicat.artic.12. Ianſenius in Mark.6.Dominicus a Soto.diſtinct.23.qu.1.artic.1. the Rhemiſts alſo and Bellarmine. Thus we ſee how well they agree among themſelues.

Againe, the place in Iames maketh nothing for their Popiſh aneeling: for the Apoſtle would haue all the Elders called: but one Prieſt is ſufficient to bring your oyntment boxe. Secondly, if any man be ſicke, ſaith S.Iames, though it be not deadly or mortall ſickneſſe, but whenſoeuer he is ſicke: But your Vnction is neuer miniſtred before the point of death. Thirdly, here health is certainly promiſed: But not one amongſt ten recouereth after your Popiſh aneeling.

Argum 2. Chriſt vſed ſometime clay, and ſpettle,ſometime other elements in healing the diſeaſed, as the Apoſtles vſed oyle: why, I pray you then, may not they be Sacraments as well as this? for they were ſignes of healing but for a time: no more was the anointing with oyle.

Bellarmine anſwereth, there is not the like reaſon: firſt, thoſe other ceremonies are not commanded to be frequented as this of oyle is,Iam.5.Secondly,there is no promiſe of ſpirituall grace annexed to them,as vnto this. Thirdly, neither is the certaine Miniſter of thoſe ceremonies deſcribed, as the Elders,that is the Prieſts,are of this,Iam.5.

Contra. Firſt, you cannot proue an inſtitution of a Sacrament out of that place of Iames, ſeeing Chriſt,and not the Apoſtles,is the author of Sacraments: There is no Sacrament of the Goſpel which is not grounded both vpon the example and precept of Chriſt: but ſo is not your aneeling.

Secondly,the other elements, which Chriſt vſed, haue thoſe three things required: firſt, our Sauiour vſed ſpettle diuers times: as in healing the dumbe man, in curing the blinde man, Mark 7.33. Mark.8.23. Here is an iteration of the ſame element. Secondly, it hath alſo an infallible effect: for it healeth both dumbneſſe and blindneſſe. Thirdly,the Miniſter thereof is certaine,Chriſt himſelfe.

Thirdly: firſt,the ſpirituall grace promiſed,is not annexed to oyle, but to the prayer of faith: Iames 5.15. Neither can it be proued, that all thoſe Elders were Miniſters, or, as they call them Prieſts: for diuers of the faithfull, which were not Miniſters, had the gift of healing: as it appeareth, Mark.16.18. Theſe ſignes ſhall follow them that beleeue,&c. they ſhall lay their hands vpon the ſicke, and they ſhall recouer. But all beleeuers were not Miniſters.

Auguſtine ſaith, De latere Chriſti ſacramenta eccleſiæ profluxerunt cum dormiret in cruce: Auguſt.in Pſal.40. The Sacraments of the Church iſſued out of Chriſts ſide when he ſlept on the Croſſe: There guſhed out of his ſide, water and blood: but wee reade not that any oyle was ſhed from him: therefore by Auguſtines argument,Vnction is no Sacrament.

Now to adde the practiſe of other Churches: 1. The Grecians doe denie the Sacrament of confirmation and extreame vnction: Villamont. Lib.2.21.

The Ruſſians doe ſay, that the Sacrament of extreame vnction cannot giue a remedie againſt the ſtaine of ſinne,and that Iames ſpeaking of vnction,did meane, that it was onely to cure and helpe bodily infirmities. Sacranus elucid.error.

2. The Abyſſines hold not extreame vnction for a Sacrament, nor yet vſe it as the Romanes doe: Zaga Zabo. Damianus a Goes.

3. Confeſſ.of the Swizers,c.19.Confirmation and extreame Vnction are mans inuentions,whereof the Church may rid it ſelfe without any dammage, and wee haue them not in our Churches,&c. See to the ſame purpoſe the confeſſion of Saxonie.artic.19.§.2.Harm.p.500.§.16.and of Wittemberg. artic.22. Harm p.505.ſect.16.tit.of extreame vnction.&c.

4 Here we want not plentifull teſtimonie of our aduerſaries, their Ieſuite Suarez confeſſeth,that

Tom.4. diſput. 39.ſect.2. numer.1. it is no ſacrament, if it be not inſtituted of Chriſt: and yet the ſame Suarez confeſſeth, that Hugo de S.Victor. Magiſter, Alenſis, Altiſiodorus, principall ſchoole-men, are of opinion, that it was not inſtituted of Chriſt: whereupon it followeth, that it is no ſacrament.

And whereas they haue but two places to proue their ſacrament of extreame vnction, Mark.6.13. Bellar. lib.1. de extrem.vnction.c.2.§.de prior. Iames 5.14. the firſt place is diſclaymed by Ruardus, Ianſenius, Dominicus à Soto, Bellarmine, as not making mention of that ſacrament: the ſecond is refuſed by Cardinall Caietane vpon that place, as not prouing extreame vnction.

Innocent, 1.Epiſtol.1.can.8. ſaith, that this cuſtome in anointing with oyle, genus eſt ſacramenti, is a kinde of Sacrament. It is not then properly a Sacrament, but after a certaine kinde and manner. This is rehearſed, diſtinct.95.c.3.

We haue alſo the ſeale of the holy Martyrs: Iames Bainham Martyr, being asked what he thought concerning the Sacrament of aneeling: he anſwered: It was but a ceremonie, neither did he wot what a man ſhould be the better for ſuch an oyling and anointing: Fox pag.1028.

Iohn Denley, Iohn Newman, Patricke Pachingham, holy Martyrs, condemned to death, for affirming, that the anointing, and aneeling of the ſicke, was not allowable by the word of God: Fox pag.1684.col.2.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE MATTER and forme of extreame Vnction.

The Papiſts.

112.Error. THe matter is oyle oliue conſecrated by the Biſhop, not ſimple, or vnhallowed, as is water in Baptiſme: the forme is in theſe words: *By this holy vnction, and by his moſt godly mercie, God forgiue you, &c. Bellarm.c.*7.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt as touching the forme; 1. It is not warranted, nor found in Scripture, as the words of conſecration in the other Sacraments are, and therefore we refuſe it. 2. It is blaſphemous, matching the beggerly anointing, and Gods mercie together, and ſo ioyne the creature and Creator in commiſſion together.

Secondly, for the matter: 1. The element is not conſecrated, but in the vſe of the Sacrament: 1.Cor.10.16. 1.Cor.10.16. bread is bleſſed in the breaking: therefore that fore-running hallowing of oyle is ſuperſtitious and ſuperfluous. 2. If ſimple water ſerue for Baptiſme being ſo excellent a Sacrament, much more may ſimple oyle ſuffice for your vnction. 3. Your Canons alſo allow the ſprinkling of water as well as oyle vpon the ſicke, decr.p.3.d.4.c.127. Aſpergi &c. the ſicke are bid to be ſprinkled, &c: As for the iudgement of forraine Churches, ſee in the former queſtion: for they which denie extreame vnction to be a Sacrament, will neither acknowledge matter nor forme.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE EFFECT and vertue of extreame Vnction.

The Papiſts.

113.Error. FIrſt, it giueth health of bodie. Secondly, it wipeth away the reliques of ſinne: And therefore the Prieſt thus ſaith: Per iſtam ſanctam Vnctionem, & ſuam pyſſimam miſericordiam, indulgeat tibi Deus quicquid deliquiſti per viſum, &c. By the vertue of this holy oyntment, and the moſt mercifull fauour of God, the Lord forgiue thee, what thou haſt offended by the ſight, hearing, &c. Bellarmine cap.7.8.

The Proteſtants.

1. YOur Popiſh aneeling is not able to heale the bodie, as wee ſee by daily experience: for more die then liue after your anointing: and they that doe recouer, ſhould doe as well without your aneeling. Wherefore this anointing of oyle is not like to that vſed by the Apoſtles: for then health certainely followed, Iam 5.14.

Here alſo the Papiſts themſelues are deuided: ſome thinke, that the health of the bodie is the proper end of this their Sacrament: *Dominicus à Soto diſtinct.*23.qu.1.art.2. Bell.lib.de extrem.vnction. c.6. Bellarmine with other thinketh, that the health of the ſoule is the peculiar end: and the health of the bodie conditionally, ſo farre forth as it is expedient for the ſoule.

Sotus replieth, many times hee that is aneeled, is more wicked then before, how then is it to the health of his ſoule? Bellarmine, when this falleth out, he obtaineth not health by the Sacrament, but by ſome other naturall meanes. Contra, Then it would follow, that other naturall meanes applied, are more effectuall for the health of the bodie, then your Sacrament is; ſeeing they may giue health, when the Sacrament doth not; ſo then ſeeing your extreame aneeling doth not alwaies giue health, by your owne confeſſion, it is no effect of a Sacrament; for the Sacrament alwaies worketh Sacramentally, where it is not otherwiſe hindred for want of faith: but many a faithfull man may be aneeled, and yet die, in whom there is no ſuch let: and many a wicked man may recouer his health, in whom the impediment is found, namely the lacke of faith.

2. It is alſo a great blaſphemie, to aſcribe remiſſion of ſinnes to a terrene and beggerly element: The Apoſtle ſaith, not the oyle, but the prayer of faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke. The Scripture alſo teſtifieth, that the iuſt ſhall liue by faith. And we walke by faith, not by ſight. But he that aſcribeth remiſſion of ſinnes to oyle or any other externall element, walketh by ſight, not by faith.

Iames 5.15.
Rom.1.17.
2.Cor.5.7.

Heere againe the popiſh Diuines are put to their trumpes; and much ſcanning there is among them, what manner of ſinnes are remitted by extreame vnction: ſome ſay veniall ſinnes; other the aptnes to ſinne that remaineth. Bellarmine thinketh they bee reliques of any ſin veniall, or mortall, and the terror or anxietie of ſoule, which remaineth and perplexeth the ſoule in the point of death. *Bellarm.cap.*8.

*Contra.*1. The Apoſtle ſaith, If he haue committed ſinne, or as the vulgar tranſlation readeth, if he be in ſinne: whereby the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth neither the leſſer ſinnes only, which they call veniall, nor the reliques of ſinne only: but ſinne it ſelfe whatſoeuer that is pardonable.

Iames 5.15.

2. This remitting of ſinnes is not aſcribed to the anointing with oyle, but to the prayer of faith: Acknowledge your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that you may be healed: Here repentance with confeſſion of ſinnes is required in the behalfe of the ſicke; prayer to be performed by the other: by theſe two meanes health is obtained.

Iames 5.16.

3. The ſinne being once pardoned and remitted, there remaineth no more terror of conſcience: Being iuſtified by faith, wee are at peace with God. There is now no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus: and conſequently no feare of condemnation.

Rom.5.1.
Rom.8.1.

4. The anoynting was a ſigne onely of their bodily healing: They anoynted many that were ſicke with oyle, and healed them: but in this place they ſay, the ſame gift of healing is ſhadowed forth, which is deſcribed in S. Iames.

Mark 6.13.

5. Whereas the Apoſtle requireth confeſſion of ſinnes in the ſicke, whereupon followeth remiſſion of ſinnes: they vſe to aneele the ſicke when they are paſt ſenſe, and ſo can ſhew no repentance: as Sext.decret.lib.5.tit.2.c.5: Alexander 4. reproueth the vſe of certaine, qui nullum conſolantur, qui non ſit ſana mentis, &c. which vſe not to comfort any that are not of a right minde and ſound memorie, &c. how then can there be forgiuenes of ſinnes, where no confeſſion goeth before?

1. The Moſcouites at this day following the Greeke Church, doe finde fault with the Romaniſts, in applying extreame vnction to them which in a manner are dead, vrging this reaſon, quaſi corpori anima deſtituto accommodanda ſint ſacramenta: as though the Sacraments are to bee applied to the bodie deſtitute of a ſoule.

Appendix ad Sacran de erroribus.Moſcou. err.15.

2. Zaga Zabo the Æthiopike Biſhop ſaith, that extreame vnction is not in vſe among them, according to the cuſtome of the Church of Rome: but the Church of Rome applieth it for remiſſion of ſinnes: therefore ſo doe not they.

Damianus a Goes.

3. Confeſſion of Saxonie, artic.19.ſect.2. They ſay that ſinnes are forgiuen through theſe anointings, and they adde inuocation of the dead, which alſo of neceſſitie muſt be diſliked, &c. Wittemberg, artic.22. Theſe things were then practiſed profitably, when as yet the Miniſters of the Church were endued with the gift of healing the ſicke corporally and wonderfully: but this gift being ceaſed,— the thing it ſelfe doth witnes, that this ceremony of anointing is now idlely and vnfruitfully vſed: for they which now are anointed, vſe not by this anointing to recouer their health.

Harm.ſect.16. pag.500.
Ibid.pag 505.

4. See the opinion of Dominicus a Soto before rehearſed, that extreame vnction is not to be applied for remiſſion of ſinnes, but for bodily health.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE MINISTER of extreame Vnction, and the ceremonies.

The Papiſts.

First, they giue power onely vnto their anoynted Maſſe-prieſts, to aneele the ſicke with oyle. Lay men haue no authoritie to doe it, nor whoſoeuer are no prieſts, *Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.*14.*ca.*4. Secondly, for the rite and ceremonie, the prieſt comming to the ſicke muſt anoynt his fiue ſenſes; his eyes, eares, noſtrels, mouth, and hands: alſo the reines, which is the ſeate of concupiſcence, and his feete, which are the inſtruments of execution, *Bellarm.cap.*10.

114.Error.
115.Error.

The Proteſtants.

1. This anointing which Saint Iames ſpeaketh of, was done by the whole companie of Elders in euery congregation, which were not all the Paſtors of the Church: and although the Paſtors and Miniſters of the Church, are both more eſpecially bound in reſpect of their dutie to viſite the ſick, and are the fitteſt perſons in regard of their calling to pray for them and comfort them; yet S. Iames much commendeth the prayer not onely of faithfull Paſtors, but of any righteous man, which is auaileable to procure health vnto the ſicke, verſ.16. Yea, and it appeareth by their owne Canons, *Innocent.*1.*Epiſt.*1.*c.*8. that it was lawfull for lay men and all Chriſtians to vſe this anoynting.

Bellarmine anſwereth with Ianſenius, that Innocentius ſpeaketh not of the miniſtring, but receiuing of this oyntment, that it is lawfull for euery lay man to receiue it at the Prieſts hands, and ſo vſe it, *cap.*9.

Contra.1. This place alleaged out of Innocentius troubleth them ſore,and maketh them almoſt at their wits end: Thomas Waldenſ. anſwereth,that lay men may aneele, where there are no Prieſts to be had: but this anſwere miſliketh Bellarmine, becauſe the Prieſt muſt neceſſarily bee the Miniſter of euery Sacrament,vnleſſe it be in Baptiſme. Dominicus a Soto ſaith, that Innocentius ſpeaketh of a kind of conſecrate oyle, which it was lawfull for lay men to vſe,beſide this ſacramentall oyle: this anſwere alſo diſpleaſeth the Ieſuite, for Innocentius ſpeaketh of oyle conſecrated by the Biſhop, which was the matter of this Sacrament. Secondly, therefore Bellarmine hath found out another anſwere,but as vnſufficient as the other: the words of the decree are theſe: Sancto oleo chriſmatis ab Epiſcopo confecto,non ſolum ſacerdotibus, ſed & omnibus vti Chriſtianis licet in ſua aut ſuorum neceſſitate inungendo: The holy oyle of Chriſme made by the Biſhop, it is lawfull not onely for Prieſts, but for all Chriſtians to vſe by anointing, in their, or their friends neceſſitie,&c. This cannot be vnderſtood as the Ieſuite ſuppoſeth: Firſt, it is lawfull for other Chriſtians to vſe oyle, as the Prieſts did vſe it, which was by miniſtring, not receiuing. Secondly, they may vſe it to annoint their friends,as well as themſelues,therefore they miniſtred to their friends.

2. What need the body be anointed in ſo many places? It is meere ſuperſtition: of the like minde was Peter ſometime,when he ſaid to Chriſt, who would waſh his feete; Lord,not my feete only,but my hands and my head. To whom Chriſt anſwered: He that is waſhed,need not ſaue to waſh his feet, but is cleane all. Where,although the words of Chriſt haue a ſpirituall meaning: yet wee ſee the euident and plaine practiſe of them in Baptiſme: In the which Sacrament,we doubt not, but that infants are throughly baptized,though euery part be not touched with water. And euen ſo, if your aneeling were a Sacrament; why might it not ſuffice,in ſome one part of the bodie to be anoynted, and not in ſo many? This we are ſure of,that now you ſpeake without booke: For the Apoſtle maketh no mention of anoynting,eyes, hands, or mouth, but onely generally of anoynting the ſicke. And thus it appeareth that your extreame Vnction is no Sacrament, nor any of the other foure,which you haue inuented. John 13.9.

The Eaſt and South Church holding extreame Vnction to be no Sacrament at all, as is ſhewed before,conſequently denie, that a Prieſt only is the Miniſter thereof, to whom the diſpenſation of the Sacraments only belongeth.

Harm.ſect.16. p.306. Confeſſion of Wittemberg, artic.22. The Miniſters of the Church are bound by dutie to viſite the ſicke,and to pray together with the Church for their health, and to comfort them as well by preaching of the Goſpell,as by diſpenſing of the Lords Supper: and this is a godly anointing,&c.

And whereas Thomas Aquine would proue, that neither Deacons, nor the Biſhop onely,but the Presbyters are the miniſters of extreame Vnction, by that text, Iam.5.14. where mention is made only of the Presbyters: yet Cardinall Caietane ſaith, that from that text the Sacrament of extreame Vnction cannot be proued,either from the words, or from the effects. James 5.14. Commentar. in Iacob. 5.

Againe, whereas the Councell of Florence decreeth, that not only the places of the fiue ſenſes, but the reines and the feete alſo ſhould be anoynted: Bellarmine following Thomas, thinketh it is of the eſſence of the Sacrament, to anoynt onely the fiue ſenſes: and thus in theſe their toyes they are not agreed among themſelues.

THE CONCLVSION OF THIS TREATISE concerning the Sacraments.

THus, I truſt, wee haue made it plaine by Scripture,and euidence of argument,that there are but two Sacraments onely, Baptiſme,and the Supper of the Lord,left and enioyned to the people of God by our Sauiour Chriſt: for foure things are required to make a Sacrament: Firſt, the authoritie of Chriſt in commanding it. Secondly, the element or externall ſigne, as the matter. Thirdly, the word of inſtitution,as the forme. Fourthly,the end and vſe, to be a ſeale of our faith for remiſſion of ſinnes.

1. Concerning the efficient cauſe, wee finde that two Sacraments onely in the new Teſtament, are commanded by Chriſt to bee vſed for euer in the Church, Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper: which both by his owne example and preſence,as alſo his precept and commandement, were eſtabliſhed.

2. There muſt be an outward viſible elementall ſigne, as is water in Baptiſme, bread and wine in the Lords Supper. But ſo is there not in the fiue popiſh ſacraments: For in ſome there is no ſigne at all,as in Matrimonie, where they are driuen to ſay, that the parties that are married are the ſignes. In ſome there is a ſigne, but not viſible, as in abſolution, the audible voyce of the Prieſt pronouncing the words of abſolution is, they ſay, the outward ſigne: but in al the Sacraments of Chriſts inſtitution, we finde a viſible ſigne. In ſome there is an outward ſigne, but it is an action or geſture onely, no materiall element, which is not ſufficient: ſo is the impoſition of hands in giuing of Orders. In ſome there is a materiall ſigne, as Chriſme in Confirmation, oyle in extreame Vnction: but they are not of Chriſts inſtitution.

3. They alſo want a word of inſtitution: In Penance the Prieſt ſaith, I doe abſolue thee, after particular confeſſion made of his ſinnes. In Confirmation the words are, I ſigne thee with the ſigne of the Croſſe, and confirme thee with the Chriſme of ſaluation, in the name of the Father, Sonne, &c. In Matrimonie, I take thee to my wife. In giuing of Orders, Receiue thou power to offer vp the bodie of Chriſt. In extreame Vnction, God by the vertue of this oyle forgiue thee thy ſinne. Theſe, they ſay, are the words of the inſtitution: But they can ſhew no word of God for them: for it is not euery word that ſanctifieth, but only the word of God, 1.Timoth.4. Wherefore, ſeeing they haue no word of inſtitution, they are no Sacraments. 1.Tim.4.5.

Laſtly, they want the true vſe and end of a Sacrament, which is, to ſtrengthen our faith for the remiſſion of ſinnes: for in ſome of theſe there is no relation at all had to the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: As Matrimonie doth but performe, ſay they, the graces of mariage, as fidelitie, mutuall loue, and ſuch like. Orders doe conferre the power of Prieſthood. Here is no ſigne or aſſurance of the grace of iuſtification. In the reſt, remiſſion of ſinnes is aſcribed to other inſtrumentall meanes, then to faith only; as to ſatisfactorie works in Abſolution, to Chriſme in Confirmation, to oyle in extreame Vnction: wherefore we conclude, becauſe they are no ſeales of the righteouſnes of faith, as S. Paul defineth a ſacrament, Rom.4.11. that they are no ſacraments of Chriſts inſtitution, but ſuperſtitious ceremonies deuiſed by men. Rom.4.11.

Contra. 1. This place alleaged out of Innocentius troubleth them ſore, and maketh them almoſt at their wits end: Thomas Waldenſ. anſwereth, that lay men may aneele, where there are no Prieſts to be had: but this anſwere miſliketh Bellarmine, becauſe the Prieſt muſt neceſſarily bee the Miniſter of euery Sacrament, vnleſſe it be in Baptiſme. Dominicus a Soto ſaith, that Innocentius ſpeaketh of a kind of conſecrate oyle, which it was lawfull for lay men to vſe, beſide this ſacramentall oyle: this anſwere alſo diſpleaſeth the Ieſuite, for Innocentius ſpeaketh of oyle conſecrated by the Biſhop, which was the matter of this Sacrament. Secondly, therefore Bellarmine hath found out another anſwere, but as vnſufficient as the other: the words of the decree are theſe: Sancto oleo chriſmatis ab Epiſcopo confecto, non ſolum ſacerdotibus, ſed & omnibus vti Chriſtianis licet in ſua aut ſuorum neceſſitate inungendo: The holy oyle of Chriſme made by the Biſhop, it is lawfull not onely for Prieſts, but for all Chriſtians to vſe by anointing, in their, or their friends neceſſitie, &c. This cannot be vnderſtood as the Ieſuite ſuppoſeth: Firſt, it is lawfull for other Chriſtians to vſe oyle, as the Prieſts did vſe it, which was by miniſtring, not receiuing. Secondly, they may vſe it to annoint their friends, as well as themſelues, therefore they miniſtred to their friends.

Iohn 13.9.

2. What need the body be anointed in ſo many places? It is meere ſuperſtition: of the like minde was Peter ſometime, when he ſaid to Chriſt, who would waſh his feete; Lord, not my feete only, but my hands and my head. To whom Chriſt anſwered: He that is waſhed, need not ſaue to waſh his feet, but is cleane all. Where, although the words of Chriſt haue a ſpirituall meaning: yet wee ſee the euident and plaine practiſe of them in Baptiſme: In the which Sacrament, we doubt not, but that infants are throughly baptized, though euery part be not touched with water. And euen ſo, if your aneeling were a Sacrament; why might it not ſuffice, in ſome one part of the bodie to be anoynted, and not in ſo many? This we are ſure of, that now you ſpeake without booke: For the Apoſtle maketh no mention of anoynting, eyes, hands, or mouth, but onely generally of anoynting the ſicke. And thus it appeareth that your extreame Vnction is no Sacrament, nor any of the other foure, which you haue inuented.

The Eaſt and South Church holding extreame Vnction to be no Sacrament at all, as is ſhewed before, conſequently denie, that a Prieſt only is the Miniſter thereof, to whom the diſpenſation of the Sacraments only belongeth.

Harm.ſect.16. p.506.

Confeſſion of Wittemberg, artic.22. The Miniſters of the Church are bound by dutie to viſite the ſicke, and to pray together with the Church for their health, and to comfort them as well by preaching of the Goſpell, as by diſpenſing of the Lords Supper: and this is a godly anointing, &c.

Iames 5.14.
Commentar. in Iacob. 5.

And whereas Thomas Aquine would proue, that neither Deacons, nor the Biſhop onely, but the Presbyters are the miniſters of extreame Vnction, by that text, Iam. 5.14. where mention is made only of the Presbyters: yet Cardinall Caietane ſaith, that from that text the Sacrament of extreame Vnction cannot be proued, either from the words, or from the effects.

Againe, whereas the Councell of Florence decreeth, that not only the places of the fiue ſenſes, but the reines and the feete alſo ſhould be anoynted: Bellarmine following Thomas, thinketh it is of the eſſence of the Sacrament, to anoynt onely the fiue ſenſes: and thus in theſe their toyes they are not agreed among themſelues.

THE CONCLVSION OF THIS TREATISE concerning the Sacraments.

THus, I truſt, wee haue made it plaine by Scripture, and euidence of argument, that there are but two Sacraments onely, Baptiſme, and the Supper of the Lord, left and enioyned to the people of God by our Sauiour Chriſt: for foure things are required to make a Sacrament: Firſt, the authoritie of Chriſt in commanding it. Secondly, the element or externall ſigne, as the matter. Thirdly, the word of inſtitution, as the forme. Fourthly, the end and vſe, to be a ſeale of our faith for remiſſion of ſinnes.

1. Concerning the efficient cauſe, wee finde that two Sacraments onely in the new Teſtament, are commanded by Chriſt to bee vſed for euer in the Church, Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper: which both by his owne example and preſence, as alſo his precept and commandement, were eſtabliſhed.

2. There muſt be an outward viſible elementall ſigne, as is water in Baptiſme, bread and wine in the Lords Supper. But ſo is there not in the fiue popiſh ſacraments: For in ſome there is no ſigne at all, as in Matrimonie, where they are driuen to ſay, that the parties that are married are the ſignes. In ſome there is a ſigne, but not viſible, as in abſolution, the audible voyce of the Prieſt pronouncing the words of abſolution is, they ſay, the outward ſigne: but in al the Sacraments of Chriſts inſtitution, we finde a viſible ſigne. In ſome there is an outward ſigne, but it is an action or geſture onely, no materiall element, which is not ſufficient: ſo is the impoſition of hands in giuing of Orders. In ſome there is a materiall ſigne, as Chriſme in Confirmation, oyle in extreame Vnction: but they are not of Chriſts inſtitution.

3. They alſo want a word of inſtitution: In Penance the Prieſt ſaith, I doe abſolue thee, after particular confeſſion made of his ſinnes. In Confirmation the words are, I ſigne thee with the ſigne of the Croſſe, and confirme thee with the Chriſme of ſaluation, in the name of the Father, Sonne, &c. In Matrimonie, I take thee to my wife. In giuing of Orders, Receiue thou power to offer vp the bodie of Chriſt. In extreame Vnction, God by the vertue of this oyle forgiue thee thy ſinne. Theſe, they ſay, are the words of the inſtitution: But they can ſhew no word of God for them: for it is not euery word that ſanctifieth, but only the word of God, 1.Timoth.4. Wherefore, ſeeing they haue no word of inſtitution, they are no Sacraments. 1.Tim.4.5.

Laſtly, they want the true vſe and end of a Sacrament, which is, to ſtrengthen our faith for the remiſſion of ſinnes: for in ſome of theſe there is no relation at all had to the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: As Matrimonie doth but performe, ſay they, the graces of mariage, as fidelitie, mutuall loue, and ſuch like. Orders doe conferre the power of Prieſthood. Here is no ſigne or aſſurance of the grace of iuſtification. TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE SIR EDVVARD COKE, LORD CHIEFE IVSTICE OF ENGLAND, AND OF his Maieſties moſt honorable priuie Counſell:

THere bee three things (Right Honourable) whereby Commonwealthes are maintained, Religion, Iuſtice and Fortitude: the firſt in directing, the ſecond in decreeing, the third in defending: the one by the ſacred word, the next by wholeſome lawes, the laſt by the valiant ſword: ſo ſaith Wiſedome: By mee Kings raigne, and Princes decree iuſtice: Kings directed by heauenly knowledge, doe both defend their ſubiects by their power and authority, and guide and gouerne them by iuſtice and equitie. The firſt ſimplie hath the preeminence: as is well ſet forth in that imperiall law: Scientes magis religionibus, quam officijs, & labore corporis vel ſudore rempublicam noſtram contineri: Knowing that our Commonwealth is rather maintained by religion, then by officious adminiſtration, or bodilie execution, &c. For as one well ſaith, A Kingdome by prayer is defended as with a tower, &c. The other two, are equally ballanced the one againſt the other, and are as the two props and pillars of the external ſtate: as Iuſtinian hath thus matched them together, Summa reipublicæ tuitio de ſtirpe duarum rerũ, armorum ſcilicet atq; legum veniens, tam militaris res legibus in tuto collocata eſt, quam ipſæ leges armorum præſidio ſeruatæ ſunt: The chiefe defenſe of the Commonwealth yſſueth from the ſtocke of theſe two, armor and lawes, for as wel the militarie buſines is maintained by lawes, as the lawes are preſerued by armor and defenſe. Neither do they only go on warfare, which vſe ſwords, bucklers, and other armour, as the Emperour Leo ſaith, Militant namque cauſarum patroni: But the Patrons and Pleaders of cauſes alſo play the ſouldiers, &c.

Next then vnto the diuine profeſſion of religion, moſt honourable is the ſtudie of the ſacred lawes: that worthie ſaying of Saint Paul, the law is good if one vſe it lawfully, being firſt vttered of the diuine law, may be extended alſo to humane conſtitutions grounded vpon that law: Any thing, being neuer ſo profitably inuented, may yet be abuſed, and ſo may this excellent ſcience. So is Ambroſe to be vnderſtood who thus writeth, alluding to that place, Cantic.3.2. I ſought him in the ſtreetes and open places, — but found him not, Sponſa Chriſtum nec in foro aut plateis reperire potuit: Chriſtus non eſt circumforaneus: Chriſtus enim eſt pax, in foro lites: The Spouſe could not find Chriſt in the court, or ſtreet: Chriſt haunteth not courts: for Chriſt is peace, in the courts is contention. And Hierome taxeth the abuſe, and not the practiſe ſaying, Quadrante dignam eloquentiã nare ſubſanno: I ſcorne pennie eloquence: But who will not honour ſuch a Lawyer, as Gamaliel was, who ſpake in defenſe of the truth: or ſuch an one, as Plato his Lawyer was among the Eginites, who made a law, that it ſhould be death, if any Athenian came thither: but he pleaded, that the law ſpake of an ordinary man, Plato was more, a great Philoſopher; and ſo hee eſcaped with his life. And worthie is the memorie of that great Lawyer Papiniane, who had rather ſuffer the paines of death, then take vpon him the defence of the vniuſt and cruel fact of the Emperour Caracalla, in killing of his brother Geta.

This I haue done, Vt non tam inſtruam eruditos, quàm incitem paratos: Not to inſtruct, but to incite you, as Tertullian ſaith: In this Worke I haue vſed two kind of proofes eſpecially, the euidence of Scripture: Hoc cuneo veritatis omnis extruditur hereſis, &c. By this wedge of truth al hereſie is extruded: the other is from the teſtimony of the aduerſaries themſelues, which is a ſure and tried way to conuince, as hee againe ſaith: Firmum eſt genus probationis, quod ab aduerſario ſumitur, vt veritas ab ipſis inimicis veritatis probetur: It is a firme kind of proofe, which is taken from the aduerſarie, that the truth may be approoued from the enemies of truth, &c.

Secondly, that they which haue been in ſimplicitie ſeduced, by their ſubtill ringleaders, may learne to reforme their errors: Quis enim nauſeabit ad antidotum, qui hiauit ad venenum: For who will lothe the antidote, which hath gaped for the poiſon: &c. Thirdly, I haue written to aduiſe the Popiſh ſectmaſters themſelues, as Tertullian ſaith, with whoſe words, leſt I be further troubleſome, I will conclude:

Non vos terremus, quia nec timemus, ſed velim, vt omnes ſaluos facere poſſemus, monendo, μὴ θεομαχεῖν: We goe not about to fray you, because we neither are afraid of you, but my will and deſire is to ſaue you all, by admoniſhing you not to fight againſt God, &c. in reſiſting the truth: which God grant may proſper and floriſh for euer.

HERE ENSVE SVCH CONTROVERSIES AND QVESTIONS, AS ARE MOVED CONCERNING THE BENEFITS OF OVR REDEMPTION, purchaſed vnto vs by the death of Chriſt.

HAuing now ſufficiently entreated of all thoſe matters, wherein wee and our aduerſaries diſſent, as touching the propheticall, regall, and prieſtly office of our Sauiour Chriſt: the next place according to our purpoſed order and methode, doth offer vnto vs ſuch queſtions to bee conſidered of, as are handled betweene our aduerſaries and vs, concerning the benefits enſuing by theſe heauenly offices of Chriſt. And this Treatiſe containeth three Controuerſies, which now follow in order: The firſt is of the ſtate of man in his firſt creation, before his fall. The ſecond, of the fall of man, the condition and qualitie thereof. The third, of the reparation of our decayed nature, and our reſtitution by Chriſt.

THE FIRST CONTROVERSIE BEING THE 17. in the whole, of the ſtate of man in Paradiſe.

THis controuerſie containeth three queſtions. Firſt, of the ſtate of mans ſoule by creation. Secondly, of the quality and condition of his body. Thirdly, of the place, namely, of Paradiſe.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE perfection of the ſoule of man.

The Papiſts.

IT is agreed betweene vs, that man was created in his ſoule according to the image of God, both in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe in his will and affections, as S. Paul ſheweth, Epheſ. 4.24. as alſo with the light and perfection of knowledge, and iudgement in the vnderſtanding part, Coloſſ. 3.10. for in theſe two conſiſted the image of God, being thus agreed of the thing it ſelfe, wee diſſent about the manner: for the Papiſts opinion is, that the originall iuſtice and perfection, wherein Adam was created, was not in him a naturall gift, either that it was a part of his nature, or did ariſe or ſpring out of any naturall beginning; as we ſay the ſoule in the body, and the vnderſtanding in the ſoule, are naturall: but that it was meerely a ſupernaturall gift, hauing no naturall beginning: euen as Helias taken vp into heauen in a firie chariot, was a thing ſimply and abſolutely ſupernaturall. They ſay alſo further, that man now hath all the pure naturals that Adam had, and that the humane nature is the very ſame that Adams was: And that Adam if it had not beene for that ſupernaturall gift, ſhould haue beene ſubiect to the like ignorance, and infirmity, and rebellion of fleſh that we are; ſauing that, then in Adam, Ex natura & conditione materiæ profluxiſſet: Thoſe infirmities ſhould haue ſprung out of the very nature of man, and the quality of the mould that he was made: but now in vs, they doe proceede ex originali culpa, of originall ſinne. This then is their ſentence, that Adams nature by creation, and ours now by birth, is all one: Bellarm. de grat. primi homin. cap. 5. And hee further declareth his minde thus: The ſtate of man after the fall of Adam differeth no more from the ſtate of Adam in his pure naturals, then a man that is ſpoiled differeth from a naked man, that is, nothing at all: Neither is mans nature now more ſubiect to ignorance and infirmitie, if you take away originall ſinne, then it ſhould haue bin, being created in the pure naturals: and therefore the corruption of nature is not by want of any naturall gift, or by the acceſſion of any euill quality, but only by the loſſe of that ſupernaturall gift, by reaſon of Adams ſin. Bellar. ibid. So then 1. his opinion appeareth plainly to be this, that as a man ſpoiled differeth not from a naked man in the ſubſtance of the thing, but in the cauſe or maner; for the one is ſpoiled by force, the other is naked without force, yet both without clothing: ſo man in his creation without that ſupernatural gift or grace, was as naked, but now by ſin is as one robbed & ſpoiled. 2. Againe,

1. Error.

Coloſſ. 3.10.

he ſaith: If you take away originall ſinne: If he meane, that our nature is the ſame with Adams but for ſinne, he fighteth with his owne ſhadow; for no man denieth, but that ſinne cauſed this alteration in the nature of man. 3. And he ſpeaketh againſt himſelfe: for if originall ſinne be the cauſe of our corruption, It commeth by the acceſſion of an euill quality, which he before denied: vnleſſe he will denie that ſinne is an euill qualitie. 4. But if hee make exception of originall ſinne, not in regard of the fruites and effects thereof, but as of the cauſe, that Adams ignorance and infirmitie ſhould haue proceeded of another cauſe, then originall ſinne, that is, out of the condition of his owne nature; it is a great error, as afterwards ſhall appeare: let vs ſee ſome of his arguments.

Gen.3.19. *Argum.*1. God ſaid to Adam, Gen.3. Duſt thou art, and to duſt ſhalt thou returne: that is, by nature and creation, had it not beene for that ſupernaturall gift which I gaue, which now thou haſt loſt, thou art mortall. Alſo Pſal.8. the Pſalmiſt ſaith, What is man, &c. thou haſt made him a little lower then the Angels, and crowned him with glory and honour: but Adam being created with a bodily ſubſtance, could not by nature, but by a ſupernaturall gift onely be made like the Angels: And ſo much is implied by theſe words, glory and honour, which are things not naturally inherent, but outwardly added: Argum. Bellarm. cap.6.

*Anſw.*1. To the firſt place wee anſwere thus: that it was ſpoken to Adam after his fall: And the Lord in ſaying, thou art duſt, &c. did not there ſhew the ſtate, wherein he was created, but whereinto he was fallen by ſinne, for by nature he was no more to returne to duſt, then to eate his bread in the ſweat of his browes: for they are both ioyned together. If they anſwere, that this was alſo a ſupernaturall gift to be void of labour and trouble, in ſeeking his food; then was it a ſupernaturall gift alſo in the earth not to bring forth thornes and thiſtles: for theſe are the cauſe that man muſt eate his bread with ſweat, that is, with labour in tilling the ground. But it were abſurd to ſay, that God created the earth in the beginning with an aptneſſe and inclination, to bring forth weedes and vnprofitable hearbs, ſeeing all he made, was excellent good.

2 To the other place alſo we doe thus make anſwere: firſt, why might not God naturally create the ſoule of man like vnto Angels, though it were incloſed in the body, as naturally he hath created the bodies of beaſts in ſtrength, ſenſe, agilitie, ſwiftneſſe, and the like qualities, not onely equall, but farre ſuperiour to the bodies of men, which are ioyned with a reaſonable ſoule, but the bodies of beaſts

Heb.2.15. to an vnreaſonable? Secondly, this place, Heb.2.15. properly is applied to Chriſt, verſ.9. But we ſee Ieſus crowned with honour and glory: but the glory of Chriſt is not accidentall, externall, or ſupernaturall: but altogether in him naturall, which he had with God his father before the world was, Iohn Iohn 17.5. 17.5. Therefore Bellarmine faileth in his collection here.

*Argum.*2. If Adams integritie and innocencie were naturall, then they ſhould haue remained after his ſinne: as the ſame naturals in diuels doe ſtill remaine: but ſo doe they not, Ergo.

Anſwere. Firſt, the argument followeth not in naturall qualities: for Adam had knowledge without ignorance, memorie without obliuion before his fall, which were naturall in him, but ſo hath he not now: ſo the naturall qualities are corrupted and decayed by ſinne, but the naturall ſubſtance and ſubiect as of the ſoule and body remaineth ſtill, though much depraued and corrupted by ſinne.

Secondly, yet this naturall integritie of Adam is not vtterly by ſinne extinct, for there is in man a law of nature, which is a remainder of that law of perfection, whereby a mans thoughts doe either

Rom.2.14. accuſe him or excuſe him. Rom.2.14.

Thirdly, neither doe the ſame naturall qualities remaine in the reprobate ſpirits, which they had before their fall: for they haue alſo loſt the integritie and innocencie of nature; yea and in other qualities of the ſpirituall nature are inferiour to the elect Angels.

Fourthly, the reaſon is not like betweene man and ſpirits: for the decay of perfection in ſpirits is helped by their ſpirituall nature, and long continuance, and therefore it is no maruell, that euill ſpirits, are in vnderſtanding, memorie, knowledge, agilitie of nature farre beyond the ſoules of men, which are both clogged with terrene bodies, and by the mortalitie thereof abridged of the courſe of experience.

The Proteſtants.

THat the gifts of integritie and innocencie were in our firſt parents by nature of their creation; yet not without Gods gift (for euen naturall things are of Gods grace; that is, the generall grace and gift of the creation, which is not properly called grace, *Lombard. diſt.*25. *lib.*2.) and that their naturals were not the ſame, but much more pure and perfect then ours are; neither that they were the ſame in them before and after their fall, thus we proue it.

*Argum.*1. If Adams naturals were the ſame that ours are, then it would follow that the concupiſcence of the fleſh, which is in vs by nature, was alſo naturall in Adam, and that Adam ſhould haue beene as prone by nature vnto all kinde of vice, as wee are: which if it be granted, this were to make God the author of ſinne, and his workmanſhip imperfect, if he had not made man ſuch an one by creation, as could not ſinne.

Bellarmine anſwereth: granting, that the concupiſcence of the fleſh was by nature in Adam, and that if he had beene created in his pure naturals onely, he ſhould haue beene as prone to ſinne as wee are: But God (ſaith hee) did take away, ſuſtulerat concupiſcentiam, this concupiſcence, and bridle

it by a ſupernaturall gift. Secondly, it followeth not, that God ſhould haue beene the author of euill, for concupiſcence is not properly ſinne: neither if God had created man in his pure naturals, ſhould it follow, that he made concupiſcence: Quæ præter intentionem agentis ex conditione materiæ conſequuta fuiſſet: Which ſhould haue proceeded from the condition or qualitie of the mould or matter, whereof man was made, beſide the purpoſe or intention of the Creator: Bellar. cap. 7. reſponſ. ad 1. 9. & 10. obiection.

Contra. First, it is falſe that Adam ſhould haue beene as prone to ſinne, continuing in his pure naturals, as we are: ſeeing that neither we ſhould haue beene made ſinners, if Adam had remained in his naturals, and not added the actuall ſinne of diſobedience, which ſinne, and not his pure naturals, made both him, and vs ſinners, as S. Paul ſheweth, Rom. 5. 19. By one mans diſobedience many were made Rom. 5. 19.
ſinners: he ſaith not, by his naturals. Secondly, he ſaith, that God tooke away Adams naturall concupiſcence: then God did correct his owne workmanſhip, and ſo it ſhould be imperfect. And againe, the Ieſuite here forgetteth his owne rule, that, Nullum naturale principium aut donum corrumpitur: That no naturall part or gift can be corrupted or changed in man; and yet here he ſaith, that God took away or ſuppreſſed Adams naturall concupiſcence: ſo then the generation or infuſing of a ſupernaturall gift, was the corruption and deſtruction of the naturall. Thirdly, neither can it be auoided, that God ſhould not be the Author of ſinne: for concupiſcence is properly ſinne, as the Apoſtle ſaith, hee knew not ſinne but by the law: and then it followeth, I had not knowne luſt, vnleſſe the law had ſaid, thou ſhalt not luſt: ſo that luſt is ſinne. Neither is it like, that any thing can fall out beſides the intention and purpoſe of the Creator: for God cannot be deceiued, who worketh all things according to the counſell of his owne will, Epheſ. 1. 11. All things are wrought according to the counſell, purpoſe, and inten- Epheſ. 1. 11.
tion of God: Ergo, nothing falleth out beſide, or contrarie vnto it.

Argum. 2. Euery gift and grace beſide the generall grace of creation, is giuen by the mediation of Chriſt, and the merite of his paſſion, Epheſ. 4. 8. He led captiuitie captiue, that is, by his death, and Epheſ. 4. 8.
gaue gifts to men: but as Auguſtine ſaith, Adam in illis bonis in quibus creatus, Chriſti morte non eguit: Adam in thoſe gifts wherein he was created, had no neede of Chriſtes death: De corrept. grat. c. 11. Ergo, the graces which Adam had in the ſtate of his innocencie, did belong to his creation.

Argum. 3. Whatſoeuer Adam had by creation, hee had by nature: for as our birth is vnto vs, ſo was Adams creation to him: and as well that was naturall to him, which was giuen by creation; as that naturall to vs which we haue in our birth: But Adam by his creation was made righteous, Eccleſ. 7. verſ. 31. Ergo, his perfection and originall iuſtice was in him in his creation, through the gift Eccleſ. 7. 31.
of the Creator, naturall.

Bellarm. First, it is true that God made man righteous; but it was by a ſupernaturall gift beſide the worke of the creation. Secondly, if man had beene created onely in his pure naturals, hee might be ſaid to be made right or perfect, becauſe as yet there was no euill in him, but onely a poſſibilitie and ſubiection thereunto; like as an iron ſword is ſubiect to ruſt, Bellar. c. 5. & c. 7. reſp. ad argum. 10.

Anſw. First, that man by the very worke of his creation, was made perfect and righteous, it is euident by the Scripture; for hee was created according to Gods image, Geneſ. 1. 26. and the image of Gen 1. 26.
God is expounded by the Apoſtle, to be in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, Epheſ. 4. 24. Gods generall gift Epheſ. 4. 24.
and grace beſtowed vpon man in his creation, wee grant, but of any other grace beſide conferred in the worke of the creation, we reade not.

Secondly, as yron, becauſe it is but a baſe mettall, is ſubiect to ruſt; but the more perfect and precious mettals, as of ſiluer and gold are not: ſo if man by creation had an inclination to ſinne, hee could not be perfect. This then is the difference betweene vs: they ſay, that man was created like yron, that is made bright, and kept from ruſting with oyle; ſo man in his creation was vpheld from falling and ſinning by a ſupernaturall gift: we rather ſay, that man was created as gold, without any aptneſſe or inclination by nature to corruption, if he had not fallen away by ſinne from his ſtate of innocencie.

Laſtly, we reaſon thus: Whatſoeuer was in Chriſt as touching his humanity, was of the nature of man: for in all things he was made like vnto vs, ſinne onely excepted: and as the firſt Adam was in his perfection, ſo was the laſt: for the firſt Adam was a figure of him that was to come, Rom. 5. 14. Rom. 5. 14.
But Chriſt as he was man had a perfect ſoule: Ergo, perfection was of the nature of man, in his ſtate vncorrupted. So Auguſtine ſaith: Mente humana perfecta, &c. God onely is greater than a perfect Cont. Maxim. humane ſoule, ſuch as was in Chriſt, &c. He calleth a perfect and righteous ſoule, an humane ſoule: Arrian. lib. 3. and whatſoeuer is humane, is of or belonging to the nature of man. cap. 23.

Interrelig. Cæſarea. cap. 1. Deus creauit hominem ad imaginem ſuam, & fecit per originalem iuſtitiam, vt eſſet tum corporis, tum animi viribus rectus: God created man according to his image, and made him by his originall iuſtice, perfect, or right in body and ſoule.

Synod. Moguntin. cap. 3. Deus ab initio creauit hominem ad imaginem ſuam, intus in animo prauis motibus vacuum, &c. God in the beginning created man after his image, in his ſoule void of euill motions, &c: Ergo, man by nature in his creation, was endued with a perfect and righteous ſoule.

Cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 2. c. 31. Hanc imaginem in ſpiritu mentis impreſſam perdidit Adam per peccatum: This image of God imprinted in the ſoule of man, Adam loſt by his ſinne. From hence I reaſon thus: Adams ſoule receiued the print or image in the creation; (vnleſſe they will ſay, that Adams ſoule was created bare and naked: but the righteouſneſſe and holineſſe of Adam was this print or image: Ergo, he receiued it in the creation.

Lib.3.Dialog. Cyrill of Alexandria ſaith, Diuinam notitiam in anima hominis fundatam fuiſſe, & ei genuinam omnis boni, & ad ſalutem neceſſarij cognitionem immiſiſſe dicimus: Wee ſay that Diuine knowledge was founded in the nature of man, and that the Creator did ſend into him the true knowledge of euery good thing, needfull to ſaluation, &c. he thinketh that man had all this by creation.

Homil.13.in 1.Timoth. c.5. So alſo Chryſoſtome maketh this definition of man: Homo fuit iuſtus, verax, pius, &c. Man was iuſt, true, pious, &c. This were no fit definition of man, if it had not pertained to his nature.

Harm. ſect 4. pag. 67. Confeſſ. of Bohemia. c.4. The grace of God, and thoſe good gifts of iuſtice, and the image of God, which in his creation were engraffed in him, he partly loſt them, and partly corrupted & defiled them, &c. Theſe things more engraffed that in man, in his creation.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE QVALITIE AND CONDITION OF THE BODY OF MAN BY CREATION.

The Papiſts.

2.Error. BEllarmine his opinion is, that the immortalitie of Adams body was a ſupernaturall gift: and that by nature his body was created mortall, but that this naturall mortalitie was taken away, by the ſupernaturall gift of immortalitie, Bellar. de grat. primi homin. cap.9.

*Argum.*1. His beſt reaſon is drawne from that place of Scripture, which he alleaged before: Duſt thou art, &c. which the Ieſuite would haue vnderſtood of Adams creation: becauſe the reaſon is rendred, Thou ſhalt returne to duſt, becauſe thou waſt taken out of duſt.

Anſ. This was ſpoken to Adam, after that by his tranſgreſſion he had deſerued death. And whereas the Lord ſaith, For out of the duſt thou waſt taken, it ſheweth not that he was created mortall: but that he had a poſſibilitie onely of mortalitie, into the which he might fall by ſinne, and ſo loſe the immortalitie of nature, wherein he was created: for this is the difference betweene the immortalitie of man by creation, and the immortalitie which we ſhall haue by grace through Chriſt; that man in his creation had power, poſſe non mori, not to die, if he would: that is, if hee kept himſelfe in obedience: but in the kingdome of heauen we ſhall haue a gift, non poſſe mori, not to haue power or poſſibility to die. And Auguſtine ſaith, Bina iſta quid inter ſe differunt, diligenter intuendum eſt, &c. We muſt diligently conſider, what difference is betweene theſe two: Poſſe non peccare, & non poſſe peccare, To be able not to ſinne, and not to be able to ſinne: To haue power not to die, and not to haue power to die: The firſt man was able not to ſinne, not to die; but we cannot ſay, non potuit mori, he had no power to die, or to ſinne: De correp. & grat. c.11. If Adam before his fall had power not to die, then had he power to be immortall; then conſequently he was not created mortall.

*Argum.*2. Adam in his creation was made apt to generation, for God ſaid vnto him, encreaſe and multiply: he had need alſo both of meate and drinke: Ergo, he was created mortall, Bellar. c.9.

Reſp. Firſt, aptneſſe to generation proueth not mortalitie, but ſuch generation only as is by concupiſcence and ſinne procured: 1. as the tree of life in Paradiſe was alſo encreaſe and multiply, but it ſhould not haue beene corruptible: 2. Eua by a kinde of generation was produced out of Adam, ſhe ſhould notwithſtanding haue beene immortall. 3. Some affirme, that the ſoule commeth into the body by a kinde of generation, ex traduce, yet they hold notwithſtanding, the immortalitie of the ſoule. 4. Chriſt had a generation, as God, will ye conclude him therefore to be mortall? He alſo had a generation according to the fleſh, yet was hee not ſubiect at all to corruption, nor to death of neceſſitie, but of his owne will.

Secondly, the Angels did eate and drinke, yet were not their bodies mortall, wherein they appeared: therefore not euery eating and drinking proueth mortality, but to eat & drink with hunger, thirſt, and of neceſſitie: but Adam in Paradiſe ſhould neither haue felt hunger nor thirſt, heat or colde, as Auguſtine ſaith, In Paradiſo abſit vt credamus aliquid fuiſſe, vnde ſenſum aut dolor pungeret, &c. Farre be it from vs to thinke, that there was any thing in Paradiſe, whereby either griefe ſhould offend the ſenſe, or labour wearie the body: Cont. Iulian. lib 5. c.8.

The Proteſtants.

THat Adam was by nature created immortall, if he had not ſinned, we by theſe reaſons doe make it good.

*Argum.*1. The ſoule of Adam was immortall, and therefore it was meet and requiſite, that a bodie alſo immortall ſhould be ioyned vnto it.

Bellar. Yea, an immortall body is moſt meet for an immortall ſoule: but the functions of the bodie, which are now exerciſed, and ſhould haue beene in the ſtate of innocencie, doe require a bodie temperated together of diuers humors and qualities, which muſt needes make it mortall, Bellarm. c.9.

Contra. Firſt, if an immortall body had beene a fitteſt companion for the ſoule, and yet was not giuen vnto it: then by their ſentence, God did not that which was moſt meete and conuenient. Secondly, what manner of qualitied body humane actions require now, it skilleth not: certaine it is, that if man had not ſinned, he ſhould haue done no other things then were beſeeming an immortall bodie, ſuch as he had by creation.

Argum.2. Auguſtine ſaith, Conſtat inter Chriſtianos veraciter Catholicam tenentes fidem, etiam ipſam nobis corporis mortem non lege naturæ,—ſed merito inflictam eſſe peccati: It is euident among Christians rightly holding the Chriſtian faith, that euen the death of body is laid vpon vs, not by the law of nature, but by deſert of ſinne. S. Paul alſo ſheweth, that death came in by ſinne, Rom.5.17. Ergo, before man had ſinned, he was not ſubiect to death. Lib.13.de ciuitate Dei cap.15.

Bellarm. anſwereth, that death came in by ſinne, becauſe by ſinne that ſupernaturall gift was loſt, whereby man was preſerued from mortalitie.

Contra. Yet hath he not ſufficiently anſwered: for if man remaining in his pure naturals was ſubiect to death; then ſhould there haue been death in the world without ſinne, which S. Paul denieth, for death is the wages of ſinne, Rom.6.23. Rom.6.23.

Argum.3. Chriſts bodie had no poſſibilitie of corruption, Act.2.24. It was impoſſible he ſhould be holden of death: the reaſon is giuen, verſ.27. Thou wilt not ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption. Chriſts holineſſe and freedome from ſinne preſerued him from corruption: Ergo, Adam in the ſtate of innocencie was freed from the poſſibilitie of mortalitie and corruption. Act.2.24,27.

Concil. Mileuitan.cap.1. as it is alleaged part.3.diſt.4.c.152. Quicunque dicit Adam primum hominem mortalem factum ita, vt ſiue peccaret, ſiue non peccaret, moreretur in corpore: hoc eſt de corpore exiret, non peccati merito, ſed neceſſitate naturæ, anathema ſit: Whoſoeuer ſaith, that Adam was created mortall, ſo that, whether he ſinned or not, hee ſhould die in the bodie; not by the merit of ſinne, but the neceſſitie of nature, let him be accurſed: Ergo, Adam was created immortall, if hee had not ſinned.

Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Perfunctos obedientiæ munere, &c. Our parents hauing performed their dutie of obedience: angelica eos immortalitas, &c. the euangelicall immortalitie had followed them, ſine interuentu mortis, without death comming betweene, de ciuitat. Dei, lib.13.c.1. But how could angelicall immortalitie haue ſucceeded mortalitie without any change by death? and angelicall immortalitie hath no poſſibilitie at all of mortalitie: Adam ſhould haue had an angelicall immortalitie: Ergo.

Cyrill of the Ægyptian Church ſaith, Erat corpus immortale, &c. His bodie was immortall, for the Creator had put life into him. Lib.3.cont. Iulian.

Tertullian ſaith, Mortem non ex natura ſecutam hominem, ſed ex culpa: That death came not of mans nature, but by his fault. Lib.de anima.

Heſychius of the Eaſt Church: Quando Adam per inobedientiam cecidit procul dubio terrenus effectus eſt, &c. When Adam was fallen by diſobedience, he became terrene, and therefore it was ſaid vnto him, Duſt thou art, &c. He was not then ſubiect to corruption before his fall. Lib.2.in 8.cap. Leuit.

Confeſſion of Bohemia, chap.4. God made man iuſt, holy, immortall, and a moſt pleaſant temple for his heauenly ſpirit. Harm.ſect.4. pag.66.

Our Doway tranſlators doe thus confeſſe: God made man in ſome ſort an immortall bodie, that if he had kept Gods commandements he had liued long, &c.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE PLACE WHERE Adam was created: namely, Paradiſe.

The Ieſuite affirmeth, that Paradiſe, where Adam was placed, was a terreſtriall place: which we grant: and ſuch a place, as was not knowne to any; and therefore hee miſliketh their opinions, that would define where Paradiſe ſhould be: Some think, that Paradiſe is taken for the whole world, as Ioſephus: ſome, that it is a place diuided from the world beyond the Ocean ſea: others imagine it to be a high ſituated region, reaching euen vnto the globe of the Moone: others thinke it was in Meſopotamia: But Bellarmine approueth none of theſe opinions, but ſaith ſtill that Paradiſe was a place vnknowne, yet that it remaineth ſtill vnto this day, Bellarmin.cap.12.& 14. This queſtion then hath two parts: firſt, whether that Paradiſe were a place alwaies vnknowne to men: Secondly, whether that Paradiſe doth remaine to this day. 3.Error.

The Papiſts.

That Paradiſe was a ſecret place kept from the knowledge of men, the Ieſuite would ſeeme to proue it thus.

Argum.1. If Paradiſe were ſituate in a knowne place, it is moſt like by the deſcription to haue been in Meſopotamia; but there it was not: for the text ſaith, that out of Eden went a riuer, which afterward was diuided into foure heads: but there is no ſuch riuer, that hath his beginning in Meſopotamia: Ergo, Bellarm.cap.12.

Anſw. The text ſaith not, that this riuer had his beginning in Eden, but went out from Eden, that is, it might haue the beginning before, and ſo runne through Eden: neither are we to vnderſtand the place ſo, as though this riuer, as ſoone as it was runne through Eden did diuide it ſelfe into foure heads: but theſe foure heads or branches doe come from two riuers, Tigris, and Euphrates, which running aſunder till they come to Eden, make two heads, which in the text are called Hiddekel and Perath, and ſo ioyning together, as they paſſe through Eden, doe againe diuide themſelues, and ſo make two heads more, Phiſon and Gihon, and ſo runne into the Perſian gulfe.

*Argum.*2. How could Paradiſe bee a knowne place being kept of the Cherubims by a fierie ſword?

Anſw. First, the keeping of it with the fierie ſword, doth ſhew that it was a place inacceſſible, and not inhabited before the flood: for ſo long was it ſo kept: but it might be knowne where it was ſituate, though the paſſage thereunto were ſtopped. Secondly, after that the beautie of Paradiſe was deſtroyed by the flood, it needed not any more the cuſtodie or watch of Angels: but the place where Paradiſe was planted then lay open to man and beaſt, being both knowne and inhabited.

The Proteſtants.

THat Paradiſe, otherwiſe called Eden, was planted in a knowne place of the world, which was moſt like to be Meſopotamia; thus we make it plaine.

*Argum.*1. The two riuers mentioned in the deſcription of Eden, namely, Hiddekle, which is Tigris; and Perath, which is Euphrates, are found to runne through Meſopotamia: Ergo, there alſo was Paradiſe.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the two other heads of the riuer, namely Phiſon and Gihon, are the two riuers Ganges and Nilus, which come not neere Meſopotamia, and therefore it is not like, that the two other riuers make the other two heads, cap. 12.

Contra. First, Phiſon and Gihon cannot be the knowne riuers Ganges, whoſe beginning is in the mountaines of Scythia; and Nilus, which ſpringeth from the mountaines in Æthiopia: for Phiſon and Gihon are two heads of one Fountaine and Riuer: but Ganges and Nilus haue two ſeuerall heads or fountaines, many thouſand miles aſunder; Ganges in Aſia, and Nilus in Africa.

Secondly, if Ganges and Nilus be theſe two heads, which are knowne Riuers, and their fountaines alſo knowne, then muſt Eden alſo be knowne, where the Ieſuite ſaith the riuer hath his beginning.

Bellarmine replieth, that Phiſon and Gihon cannot bee two heads ſpringing from Tigris and Euphrates. 1. Becauſe thoſe two heads are ſaid to compaſſe diuers nations; but the branches of thoſe two riuers doe runne by a ſtraight courſe into the Perſian Sea. 2. The mappes doe ſhew, that Tigris and Euphrates after their coniunction are not diuided againe, but runne together into the Sea. Ierem.2.18. 3. Ierem. 2.18. the Septuagint reade thus, What haſt thou to doe in the way of Ægypt to drinke the water of Geon? Geon then is Nilus the riuer of Ægypt. Againe, Eccleſiaſtic. 24.31. Gihon is ſaid to ouerflow in the time of vintage, and ſo doth Nilus. 4. Hierome, Ambroſe, with others, doe take Phiſon and Gihon, for Ganges and Nilus, Bellarm. cap. 12.

Contra. First, it is euident, that Phiſon and Gihon the neather ſtreames of Tigris and Euphrates, doe paſſe through and compaſſe in a manner the lands Hauilah, where gold is; and Cuſh, which is Arabia deſerta, before they fall into the ſea.

Secondly, if he view the Mappe better, or follow the beſt deſcription, he ſhall finde that the riuers Tigris and Euphrates part againe, before they runne into the ſea.

Thirdly. 1. in Ierem. 2.18. the Hebrew hath not Geon, but Sichar, which ſome doe take for Nilus, others vpon better ground, for a riuer, that paſſing by Arabia Petrea, falleth into the lake Sirbon, and Ioſu.13.3. diuideth the Land of promiſe from Ægypt, Ioſu. 13.3. neither doth the vulgar Latine reade Geon, but aquam turbidam, troubled water.

2. It is 1. no good argument, that Geon ſhould bee Nilus, becauſe it ouerfloweth in the time of Vintage: as though it is not vſuall for riuers to riſe twice in the yeere, in the Spring, and in Autumne: Deut.11.10. 2. and yet Nilus greateſt ouerflowing is in ſeede time, which is in the ſpring, Deut. 11.10. 3. I vrge not beſide, that this booke is not canonicall; for the other anſwers are ſufficient beſide.

Fourthly, Hierome and Ambroſe doe follow the opinion of the Greekes, who were herein deceiued by the tranſlation of the Septuagint: as Ambroſe de Paradiſ. cap. 3. Phiſon Ganges eſt ſecundum Græcos: Phiſon is the riuer Ganges according to the Greekes, &c. And Epiphanius ſaith, Ego vidi aquas Geon, &c. I haue ſeene with mine eyes the waters of Geon, meaning Nilus, and then he alleageth Ierem. 2.18. where the Septuagint ſo reade: epiſt. ad Ioann. Hieroſolym. So that this conceit of the Greekes was grounded vpon the erroneous tranſlation of the Septuagint.

Fifthly, this opinion is contrarie to Scripture, 1. Phiſon and Gihon come out of one riuer, and haue Geneſ.2.10. the ſame beginning: Geneſ. 2.10. But Ganges and Nilus are many hundred miles diſtant. 2. Gihon Geneſ.2.13. compaſſeth the whole land of Cuſh. Geneſ. 2.13. Which they take to be Æthiopia: but Nilus compaſſeth Ægypt, not Æthiopia, taking his beginning only from thence: ſo that Cuſh here is not taken for Æthiopia, but for Arabia deſerta, for it is a general name to them both. 3. Whereas Epiphanius ſaith, he had ſeene Geon, and that he had drunke of the great riuer Euphrates: the riuers of Paradiſe being ſo well knowne, how could Paradiſe be a place vnknowne?

*Argum.*2. Againe, Eden is deſcribed by the countries next adioyning as Aſſyria, Geneſ. 2.14. So Charran and Eden are ioyned together, Iſai. 37. verſ. 12. Cain alſo is ſaid to haue dwelled on the Eaſt ſide of Eden: But theſe countries were well knowne: Ergo, ſo was Eden, Bellarmine anſwereth, that this Eden in theſe places mentioned, was another Eden, beſide that, out of the which Adam was throwne: vnleſſe you will ſay, that Cain was ſent and baniſhed into Paradiſe, Bellarm. cap. 13.

Anſw. Firſt, the Ieſuite cannot ſhew vnto vs any other Eden out of the ſtorie of the Bible: Gen.2.14. that Eden is ſpoken of, which is neere to Aſſhur: Iſai.3.7. that Eden, which is ioyning to Charran: But Aſſhur and Charran were not farre aſunder, Ezec.27.23. therefore it was one and the ſelfeſame Eden. Secondly, the text ſaith not, that Cain was exiled into Paradiſe, or that hee dwelt in Paradiſe, but by the Eaſt ſide of Paradiſe.

Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Epiſt.42. Ioſephus hiſtoriographus, &c. Ioſephus the Hiſtoriographer ſaith, that Paradiſe is a place full of trees and plants, and is watered with a riuer, which is diuided into foure ſtreames. How could Ioſephus deſcribe Paradiſe, if it had been an vnknowne place? And if they will haue Paradiſe ſo ſecret a place, let them ſay with their Maſter, that Paradiſe was ſituate in a region, that reached vp to the circle of the Moone: lib.2.d.17.lit.e. Ianſenius a learned Papiſt witneſſeth with vs, that Paradiſe was ſituate in Meſopotamia, but afterward defaced and deſtroyed by the flood, in cap.143. concord. Euangelic. So alſo Vatablus, Oleaſter. in 2. Geneſ.

Tertullian ſaith; Peculiarem protoplaſtis, æternæ vitæ mundum quendam paradiſum in oriente conſtituit: God planted to our firſt parents Paradiſe in the Eaſt, as a certaine world of eternall life, &c. It ſeemeth then by the ſituation of it, that Paradiſe was not planted in a place altogether vnknowne.

Lib. de Trinit.
παράδεισον αἰσθητόν, qu. orthod. 76.

Iuſtinus Martyr calleth it, ſenſible paradiſe: and he thinketh that Homer in the deſcription of Alcinous garden, imitated Moſes deſcription of Paradiſe, and calleth it εἰκόνα, an image or repreſentation of Paradiſe: but he could not haue taken his deſcription from an obſcure and vnknowne place.

Cohortat. ad Græcos.

Some of our beſt new writers of the reformed Churches, held Paradiſe to haue been ſituate in a part of Meſopotamia, or Chaldea.

Pet. Martyr cleſ.1.c.12.29.
Iun. in 2. Gen. numer.24. cum alijs.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS QVESTION, whether the terreſtriall place of Paradiſe doe yet remaine.

The Papiſts.

THeir beſt argument is this: Henoch and Helias doe yet remaine aliue in Paradiſe in their bodies: Ergo, there is a Paradiſe, cap.12.

4. Error.

Anſw. Firſt, that Henoch and Helias doe liue with God we denie not, but whether in their bodies or no, the Scripture ſaith not. Secondly, but that they liue in an earthly and terreſtriall place, ſuch as hee imagineth Paradiſe to be, it is contrarie to Scripture, which ſaith, that Elias went vp in a whirle-winde to heauen, 2. Kings 2.11. Ergo, hee is not in earth. Thirdly, Paradiſe is now no terreſtriall but a celeſtiall place in heauen: for Saint Paul taketh Paradiſe and heauen for all one, 2. Corinth.12.4.

2. King.2.11.
2. Cor.12.4.

The Proteſtants.

THat the terreſtriall Paradiſe is not now extant vpon the earth, but long agoe, as it is moſt like, deſtroyed by the flood: we thus ſhew it.

*Argum.*1. The waters in the flood couered the whole earth, and preuailed ouer all the mountaines that are vnder the heauen, fifteene cubites, Geneſ.7.20. wherefore it is moſt like, that Paradiſe was then deſtroyed.

Gen.7.20.

Bellarm. Firſt, hee ſaith, that all thoſe mountaines were couered with waters, where ſinners and mortall men dwelt, whom the Lord purpoſed to deſtroy; ſo that the mountaines and regions of Paradiſe are excepted.

Contra. Firſt, but the text ſaith all the mountaines were couered vnder the whole heauens: how then dare he make the holy Ghoſt a lier, and ſay, as it were correcting the text, no, all were not couered. Secondly, thus to vphold his fancies, he runneth to forged miracles: for the waters being fifteene cubites aboue other mountaines, and yet not ouerflowing Paradiſe, muſt needs compaſſe it about as a wall, and ſtand as a collar of a coate round about it: But what authoritie hath he thus to coyne miracles beſide Scripture?

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it had been a greater miracle to ſee Henoch and Elias hanging in the ayre to bee kept from the waters, for they could not haue liued in Paradiſe, being ouerflowen, as it is certaine they doe.

Contra. Why Bellarmine? Elias was taken vp into heauen, as wee prooued out of Scripture, and therefore he needed not to haue feared the flood vpon the earth. Thirdly, if Paradiſe were not ouerflowen, God might haue ſpared the making of the Arke, for Noah with his familie and all the cattell might haue been more ſafely kept in Paradiſe.

Bellarmine ſaith, it was no place for ſinners.

Anſw. Why Noah was a faithfull man, and no more a ſinner now, then Henoch was, when he was taken vp: might not Noah therefore as well haue been kept there as Henoch? eſpecially ſeeing hee was not to continue there, but to remaine only for a time, till the deluge were ouerpaſt?

Secondly, Bellarmine denieth the argument: it followeth not, that Paradiſe ſhould bee vtterly deſtroyed, though it were ouerflowen: for the deluge did not change the ſituation of the place, nor the diſpoſition of the ayre, &c. Bellarm. cap.14.

Anſw. Firſt, the ouerflowing of water, which many times caſteth downe hils, and filleth vp valleyes, leyes, which maketh ſtanding pooles where it was drie land, muſt of neceſſitie bring great alteration, both for the pleaſant ſituation, and the temperate ayre. Secondly, we ſay not, that by the flood Paradiſe was vtterly made deſolate: for it remained a pleaſant and fertile ſoile euen afterward, Geneſ. 10. 10. The land of Sodome and Gomorrha, before it was deſtroyed, is ſaid to haue been like the Lords garden, which was Eden: But yet the beautie and excellencie of Paradiſe was by the flood decayed.

Geneſ.10.10.

*Argum.*2. That Paradiſe is now onely remaining, which is the receptacle of the bleſſed ſoules of the Saints after this life: This day (ſaith Chriſt) ſhalt thou be with me in Paradiſe, Luke 23.43. the Goſpell ſpeaketh not of any other Paradiſe. But this can be no terreſtriall place: for the ſoules of the righteous goe to heauen: and Paradiſe, in the Ieſuites iudgement, is a receptacle of bodies, not of ſoules: Ergo, there is no ſuch terreſtriall Paradiſe.

Luke 23.43.

Saint Ambroſe witneſſeth with vs: Tum ſaluus ero, &c. Then I ſhall be ſafe, when I ſhall be in Paradiſe, where I ſhall liue inter electos Angelos, among the elect Angels: *ſerm.*15. *in Pſal.*119. Againe, in 2.*Corinth.*12. Vltra omnia mundi ſydera raptus intelligitur, &c. Paul is ſaid to be rapt or taken vp beyond all the ſtarres, &c. and into that Paradiſe, of the which the Lord ſpake to the theefe, euen where the citie Ieruſalem is, the mother of vs all, &c. Paradiſe then is no other where now but in heauen.

Of this iudgement is Chryſoſtome, who thinketh, that before Chriſts death none aſcended into Paradiſe but the theefe: latro primus cum Chriſto intrauit, the theefe firſt entred with Chriſt, &c. It is not then any terreſtriall place, where they imagine Henoch and Elias to be kept in their bodies: which is one of their chiefe reaſons, that the earthly Paradiſe ſhould remaine ſtill. Damaſcene ſaith of Helias, that he is ὀυρανοφοίτης, an heauen walker: he thinketh not then, that he is in any terreſtriall place.

2. And Tertullian alſo thinketh the Paradiſe now remaining to be a place for ſpirits, not for bodies: he calleth it, locum diuinæ amænitatis recipiendis ſanctorum ſpiritibus deſtinatum: a place of diuine pleaſure appointed for the receiuing of the ſpirits of the Saints.

3. Of this opinion are our [a] Proteſtant writers, that the terreſtriall Paradiſe was diſſolued by the flood, or before [b] immediatly after mans fall.

4. And ſome of their owne beſt writers doe concurre herein with vs, as Eugubinus, Oleaſter, Vatablus, in their annotations vpon the 2.chap. of Geneſis: [c] Ianſenius, who all are of opinion, that the earthly Paradiſe was defaced by the flood.

The Doway Commenters doe giue this note, whether this Paradiſe bee now extant is vncertaine, &c.

AN APPENDIX OR THIRD PART OF THIS QVEſtion, concerning the tree of life in Paradiſe.

The Papiſts.

5.Error.

BEllarmine rehearſeth two opinions of this matter: ſome thinke that it was called the tree of life, becauſe by eating thereof Adam might be preſerued from death, and his ſubſtance, which might decay, in time be reſtored: ſic Auguſtine. Others are of opinion that it was appointed to bee a meane to bring Adam to perfect immortalitie, ſuch as we ſhall haue after the reſurrection: Of this minde is Bellarmine.

Geneſ.3.22.

He groundeth his opinion vpon that text, Geneſ. 3.22. Leſt hee put foorth his hand, and eate of the tree of life, and liue for euer: Ergo, the tree of life had power to giue eternall life to the eaters thereof.

Ironia, is a figure, when one meaneth contrary to the ſignification of the word or ſentence.

*Anſ.*1. This ſpeech here vttered by the Lord, is ironically to be vnderſtood, that is, God in ſo ſaying, meaneth not, that indeed, by eating of this fruite, Adam ſhould liue eternally: but as in the former part of the verſe the Lord derideth the follie and ſimplicitie of man, who thought by eating the forbidden fruite to haue been as God, and was deceiued: Behold, (ſaith God) the man is become as one of vs, to know good and euill: that is, he thought in his owne opinion and conceit, &c. So the ſame ſpeech is continued in this part of the verſe: leſt he liue for euer, that is, hee may in his ſimplicitie be ſeduced to thinke hee may haue eternall life by eating of the tree of life, as hee was made to beleeue before, that he ſhould by taſting of the forbidden fruite in knowledge be like vnto God.

2. Or if we take the words ſimply as they are ſpoken: the meaning is this, that ſeeing Adam was by his tranſgreſſion depriued of life, he ſhould alſo loſe the ſigne thereof: it was therefore called the tree of life, not ſo much becauſe it gaue life, as that it was a ſigne thereof: And to this purpoſe the ordinarie gloſſe, this was a iuſt puniſhment after ſin, interclusus ad ſapientiam aditus, &c. The way vnto true wiſedome was ſhut vp, till by Gods mercie he ſhould be reuiued, that was dead, &c. Other expoſitions are giuen of this place: as that the meaning ſhould be, leſt man indeed taking of the fruite ſhould liue for euer: ſo Tertullian: Ne viuens in æternum — circumferret in pœnā ſui immortale delictum: Leſt liuing for euer, he ſhould beare about as a puniſhment his immortall ſinne, &c. This ſenſe followeth the Interliniarie gloſſe, and Bellarmine: but Lyranus reaſon taketh away this interpretation, cum homo incurriſſet neceſſitatem moriendi: ſeeing man had incurred and was fallen into a neceſſitie of dying, the tree of life could not now continue his life; ſome giues a cleane contrarie ſenſe, not making it a prohibition, but a promiſe rather and permiſſion: that man was ſent forth into the labours of this life, vt aliquando porrigat manum ad arborem vita, that hee might ſtretch forth his hand to the tree of life, that is the croſſe of Chriſt, and ſo liue for euer: ordinar. gloſſ. but the very forme of the words, and phraſe of ſpeech ſheweth, that it is a prohibition: ſome other therefore doe thinke, that, by for euer, here is not meant, true eternitie, but onely ſome prolonging of daies, which the fruite of this tree might of Gods goodneſſe worke, though man was now fallen: Lyran. Vatabl. Borrhaius: but I preferre the two firſt expoſitions, for the reaſons before alleaged.

The Proteſtants.

THat the tree of life was not ordained to preſerue Adam from mortalitie, and to endue him with a new kind of immortalitie, but that it was principally a ſigne or ſymbole of life receiued of God: though it might alſo haue ſome vertue to preſerue the bodie in perfect health: thus we ſhew it.

Argum. 1. This tree, which was in the middeſt of Paradiſe, was no otherwiſe the tree of life, then the other was of the knowledge of good and euill: but this was not ſo called, becauſe it actually gaue knowledge, but was a ſeale and ſigne vnto them of that miſerable knowledge and experience, which by tranſgreſſing of Gods commandement in eating of that fruit, they ſhould fal into. And this is confeſſed by their Maſter, that it was called the tree of good and euill, becauſe man by tranſgreſſing in eating thereof, experiundo diſceret, ſhould learne by experience what difference there was betweene good obedience and euill diſobedience, lib. 2. diſt. 17. To this purpoſe Lyranus and the ordinarie gloſſe following Auguſtine, ſo alſo Vatablus ſaith, it was ſo called ab euentu, from the euent, either becauſe God thereby ſhould haue experience of mans obedience, or man rather by experience ſhould find, what good he had loſt, and what euill he was fallen into: to this purpoſe our orthodoxall interpreters, Iunius, Calvin, Borrhaius, Pellican with the reſt: Ergo, the other tree was a ſymbole or pledge of life. So in the Reuelation, 22.2. mention is made of the tree of life, which is Chriſt Ieſus: Hee is indeede the true tree of life, becauſe hee verilie giueth life, this was but a ſigne and ſymbole of life. Reuel.2.22.

Argum. 2. Spirituall graces are not obtained by corporall and carnall meanes: for as we cannot vſe carnall weapons againſt ſpirituall euils, 2.Cor.10.4. ſo can wee not by externall and corporall meanes procure celeſtiall and ſpirituall bleſſings: but immortalitie was a ſpirituall gift, eating of the fruit was but an externall action: Ergo, it could not giue immortalitie. 2.Cor.10.4.

By this reaſon Lyranus confuteth Ioſephus opinion, who thinketh it was called the tree of the knowledge of good and euil, becauſe the fruit thereof had vertue, acuendi vſum rationis, of ſharpening the vſe of reaſon: but ſaith he, ad hoc ſe non extendit virtus corporalis: a corporall vertue doth not extend it ſelfe to any ſuch thing: ſo neither any corporall fruite of a tree, could conferre immortalitie which is a ſpirituall gift, &c.

Argum 3. If the tree of life had been able to giue immortalitie, and God foreſeeing the fal of man, would not haue him in that eſtate to be partaker of immortalitie: God would not haue permitted vnto man the vſe of that tree as he did, but rather haue giuen him a prohibition to eate thereof: but this the Lord did not, giuing them onely a charge concerning the tree of knowledge: Ergo, it is not like that tree had any ſuch force.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1. that neither Adam nor Satan did know which was the tree of life: for Satan 1. would haue tempted him to haue eaten alſo thereof, that he might haue bin eternally miſerable: but Adam 2. might haue eaten of it by chance, as the text is, ne fortè, leſt perhaps he put forth his hand, &c. Geneſ.3.22. 2. Though Adam had knowne it, hee would not haue been curious to eate thereof before the time appointed, Bellarm. cap. 29. Geneſ.3.22.

Contra. Firſt, 1. Satan had no reaſon to tempt them to eate of the tree of life, becauſe it was not forbidden: for they might haue eaten freely of euery tree in the garden, cap.2.16. the tree of the knowledge of good and euill onely excepted: In eating then of any other tree they ſhould not haue tranſgreſſed: but Satans driſt was to bring them into tranſgreſſion. 2. And the Hebrew particle פן, pen, is not ſo to be tranſlated, ne fortè, leaſt perhaps, but rather as the 70. reade μήποτε, nequando, leaſt at any time. Likewiſe, Iſay 27.3. I will keepe it, leaſt any aſſaile it: but the enemies would aſſaile it, not by chance, but of purpoſe and pretended malice. The words alſo that follow exclude this collection of chance, ne extenſa manu, leſt he ſtretch out his hand: But he that ſtretcheth out his hand, doth it not at aduenture, but wittingly and of purpoſe. 3. Adam could not be ignorant which was the tree of life: 1. both in reſpect of his great knowledge, wherby he knew the nature of al creatures, and ſo of plants and trees. 2. And becauſe they had libertie to eate of all the trees in the garden: vnleſſe they wil ſay, he eat hee knew not what: 3. and for that the tree of life was ordained only for Adams vſe, as they thinke, to bring him to immortalitie, as we ſay, to be a ſymbole vnto him of Chriſt; howſoeuer the vſe of this tree ſpecially concerning Adams ſtate, was not to be kept from his knowledge. Iſay 27.3.

Secondly, if Adam had knowne this tree to be able to giue immortalitie, hee would ſooner haue eaten thereof, being not prohibited, then to haue touched the forbidden fruit, ſeeing that the eating thereof alſo would haue brought him to greater happines, then the other tree: that giuing immortalitie; the other but the knowledge of good and euill. Wherefore the tree of life could not giue immortalitie to thoſe that eat thereof, but onely was a ſigne of true immortalitie in Chriſt.

And that the tree of life was principally a ſymbole of Chriſt our true life, and could not actually conferre immortalitie, but onely a ſtabilitie of the bodie, conſeruing it in perfect health without ſickneſſe or decay, thus further it is manifeſted.

Lib.4. peri arch.in princip.

1. Origene ſaith, Quis ita idiotes inuenitur vt putet— vt corporalibus dentibus manducans quis ex ea arbore vitam percipiat, &c. Who is ſuch an idiote to thinke, that one eating with corporall teeth of that tree ſhould haue life, &c. And his reaſon is, becauſe, he that ſhould eat of the other tree, preſently ſhould not haue knowledge. Auguſtine thinketh that the tree of life had this vſe, ne illum ſenecta diſſolueret, to preſerue man from decay and old age: and this we are not againſt, but that there was ſuch vertue in that tree to keep the body in perfect health without infirmity: as S. Iohn alluding to that tree of life, ſaith that the leaues of the tree of life ſerued to heale the nations with. But Auguſtine further ſaith, Erat lignum vitæ ſicut petra Chriſtus: The tree of life ſignified Chriſt, as the rocke did; erat in cæteris lignis alimentum, in illo ſacramentum: in the other trees was aliment, in this a ſacrament.

THE SECOND CONTROVERSIE, OF THE FALL OF MAN.

THis Controuerſie is diuided into theſe queſtions: Firſt, of the difference of veniall and mortal ſins. Secondly, whether ſin any way ſtandeth with the wil of God. Thirdly, of the ſin of Adam, whether it were pride or infidelitie, whether a venial, or mortal ſin. Fourthly, of originall ſin: of the nature thereof, what it is, the beginning thereof, from whence it ſpringeth, the effects therof, the puniſhment thereof, with other parts of this queſtion.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE DISTINCTION and difference of veniall and mortall ſinnes.

The Papiſts.

6.Error.

MOrtall ſinnes are thoſe which doe caſt men out of Gods fauour, and are worthie of eternall damnation: veniall ſinnes doe ſomewhat diſpleaſe God, yet deſerue not eternall death, but are pardonable of their owne nature, Bellarm. lib.1. de amiſſ. gratia, cap.2. & cap.9. in princip. Rhemiſt. annotat. Roman.1.11. They define alſo in particular which are veniall ſinnes. Firſt, all inuoluntarie and ſudden paſſions of the mind, as of anger, concupiſcence, and ſuch like, Bellarm. cap.3. ad finem: for all ſinne, they ſay, is voluntarie, and therefore theſe paſſions hauing not conſent of will, are farre from ſin, neither are imputed to any man, neither for them need he ſay vnto God, forgiue vs our ſinnes, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom.7 ſect.8.9.

Secondly, thoſe are venial ſinnes, which though they be done with conſent of the mind, yet are but ſeene in ſmall and light matters: as if a man ſteale a halfepennie, ſpeake an idle word, laugh immoderately, or ſuch like. But the contrarie to theſe are mortall and deadly ſinnes, as periurie, adultery, murder, &c.

Now to prooue that theſe veniall ſinnes, as they call them, are in their owne nature pardonable, and deſerue not eternall damnation; theſe arguments they bring out of Scripture.

1.Cor.3.12.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, that they which build hay or ſtubble, &c. though their worke burne, yet they themſelues ſhall bee ſafe, yet through the fire: By hay and ſtubble the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth veniall ſinnes, which doe bring detriment or loſſe, but not deſtruction: for hee ſhall bee ſafe, Bellarm. cap.9.

Anſw. Not to ſtand at this time to ſift out the right meaning of this place, where the Apoſtle intreateth not in generall of the good or euill workes of Chriſtians, but onely of the preaching of the Goſpell, which when it is ſincerely preached, both for the matter and manner, then doe they build vpon the foundation, which is Ieſus Chriſt, gold and ſiluer, &c. but when Chriſt is taught for vaine glorie, or contentiouſly, or with any other ſiniſter affection, ſuch doe build vp hay and ſtubble. Now we anſwere: firſt, to preach Chriſt, but impurely, and not ſincerely, which is compared heere to a ſtraw-building, is no veniall or light offence, but a ſinne worthie of death: for Chriſt ſhall ſay vnto them in the day of iudgement, that preached and propheſied in his name, but not ſincerely: Verily I know you not, depart from me ye workers of iniquitie.

Againe, veniall ſinnes, ſaith the Ieſuite, facili negotio expiantur, are eaſily purged and done away, cap.2. but ſo is not this ſinne of impure preaching: hee ſhall bee ſafe, yet as through the fire, that is, with ſome hardneſſe and difficultie: and ſo the phraſe is vſed, Epiſt. Iud. 23. Others ſaue with feare, as pulling them out of the fire: but haue compaſſion of others in putting difference: Theſe are ſuch as ſinne of infirmitie: the other are more notorious offenders, which are as it were in the fire, that is, in great danger.

Iud.23.

2 But admit theſe are veniall ſinnes, ſuch as are forgiuen at Gods hands: yet is it not hence proued, that they are veniall of their owne nature, but are pardoned in Chriſt: for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch which keepe the foundation, that is, Chriſt Ieſus, though their building bee not perfect and ſound.

Argum.2. Matth. 5.22. Onely hee that ſaith to his brother, foole, is worthie of hell fire: hee that ſaith raca, or is but angrie, is but culpable of iudgement, or of a Councell, &c. Ergo, euery ſinne is not worthie of hell fire; Bellarm. cap.9.

Matth. 5.22.

Anſwere. Firſt, this place doth ſhew a difference and degree of euerlaſting puniſhment, according to the qualitie and diuerſitie of ſinnes: but another kinde of puniſhment beſide, it ſheweth not: ſo then, iudgement, a councell, hell fire, doe but ſignifie three degrees of the ſame puniſhment: hell fire is due to the reſt, but it is added onely for diſtinction, to ſhew both a difference of the ſinne and puniſhment.

Secondly, this is euident by theſe reaſons: firſt, becauſe iudgement, [illegible], is taken in Scripture for euerlaſting puniſhment or condemnation, Rom. 2.3. how ſhalt thou eſcape the iudgement of God? Secondly, euery ſin is a tranſgreſſion of the law; And euery tranſgreſſion is vnder the curſe: But theſe are tranſgreſſions of the law, Thou ſhalt not kill: as here our Sauiour expoundeth; Ergo, they are vnder the curſe of the law, and ſo ſubiect to death. Thirdly, S. Paul ſaith, No rayler can inherite the kingdome of God, but he that ſaith, raca, is a rayler: for the word ſignifieth a light head, or cockbraine, being deriued of [illegible] raiak, which ſignifieth to euacuate or emptie: wherefore he that ſaith raca, ſhall not inherite the kingdome of heauen.

1 Iohn.3.4.
Galath 3.10.
Cor.6.10.

Argum.3. Luke 12.59. Thou ſhalt not depart thence, till thou haſt paid the vtmoſt farthing. Theſe are veniall ſinnes, which ſhall be purged in Purgatorie, and not bee puniſhed in hell, Bellarm. ibid.

Luk.12.59.

Anſwere. Firſt, our Sauiour in this place ſpeaketh of offences among men, and giueth a rule in this place onely how to eſcape the iudgement of man, and the troubles of this life. Secondly, if it be ſpiritually applied, by priſon, hell is vnderſtood: and ſo is it taken for the place of the wicked and diſobedient. Thirdly, they ſhall not come out, till they haue paid the vtmoſt farthing, that is neuer, becauſe it is impoſſible to pay or anſwere the debt vnto God. Fourthly, our Sauiour ſpeaketh of vncharitable perſons, ſuch as deferre and refuſe to be reconciled, and to agree with their brethren: but want of charitie deſerueth hell.

1.Pet.3 19.
Matth.18 34.
Matth 5.25.

Argum.4 S. Iames ſaith, When luſt hath conceiued, it bringeth forth ſinne, and ſinne when it is finiſhed bringeth forth death: Ergo, ſinne is not mortall, but when it is conſummate and finiſhed: Rhemiſt. in hunc locum. Bellarm. cap 9.

Iames.1.15.

Anſwere. Out of this place it is gathered, that there are degrees of ſinne, and that the more haynous ſinne is, it is worthie greater death, and is more hardly forgiuen: and therefore ſinne conſummate or finiſhed is ſaid to bring forth death, rather then ſinne but conceiued onely, namely, in compariſon and reſpect of ſmaller ſinnes, the greater are neereſt to death. Otherwiſe to ſpeake ſimply, death is the wages of all ſinne.

Rom 6.23.

2 If by ſinne conſummate we vnderſtand continuance in ſinne without repentance, which is the right conſummation of ſinne: then the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of ſinne as it is in it ſelfe, but as it is accounted of before God, who in his mercie forgiueth ſins not conſummate or finiſhed, but broken off by repentance, and in his iuſtice iudgeth and condemneth ſinnes conſummate by hardneſſe of heart and impenitencie.

Where although the Apoſtle haue not that vniuerſall terme all, yet the propoſition being indefinite, is equiualent: ſee this obiection further anſwered: Retect. p.225.

3 Otherwiſe luſt and concupiſcence it ſelfe is worthie of death: The world paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof; (which verſ. 16. is ſaid to be the luſt of the fleſh, and the luſt of the eyes) but he that fulfilleth the will of God, abideth for euer: he that hath the luſt of the fleſh, which is the luſt of the world, fulfilleth not the will of God: Ergo, he abideth not for euer, and conſequently is ſubiect to death.

1.Iohn.1.17.

Argum 4. Our Doway men doe thus diſpute for their veniall ſinnes: as the excuſe which the Hebrew Midwiues made, they ſay was an officious lye, but a leſſe ſinne, and more eaſily pardoned, and purged by good workes, &c. ſo they make Moſes ſinne, which hee committed at the waters of ſtrife, to be but a veniall ſinne, for the which, he was temporally puniſhed, in not going ouer to the land of Canaan: ſo the officious lye of Rahab, they ſay was a veniall ſinne, yet ſhe was iuſtified by her faith in God and good workes, &c.

The Proteſtants.

WE confeſſe that there is a great difference of ſinnes, both in their nature and in the puniſhment due vnto them: that as ſinnes are greater or leſſe in themſelues, ſo they are worthie of greater or leſſe puniſhment. And therefore wee deteſt their error, that thinke all ſinnes to be equall and alike: but yet wee cannot admit this Popiſh diſtinction of veniall and mortall ſinnes, as though ſome ſinnes were veniall in their owne nature: for euen the leaſt ſinne deſerueth death, if God ſhould deale with vs according to the exact rule of his iuſtice: yet all ſinnes, not onely the leaſt but the greateſt are veniall by grace and faith in Chriſt, vnto the faithfull and beleeuers, and not otherwiſe: Wee proue it thus.

Deut 27.26. Ezech.18.20. Iam.2.10. 1.John 3.4. *Argum.*1. That all ſinnes in themſelues are worthie of death, the Scripture ſpeaketh plainly: Curſed is euery one that continueth not in all things written in this law: The ſame ſoule that ſinneth ſhall die: He that faileth in one point of the law, is guiltie of all: Euery tranſgreſſion of the law therefore deſerueth death: but all ſinne is a tranſgreſſion of the law, Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that all thoſe are vnderſtood of mortall and great offences, not of the ſmaller ſinnes which he calleth veniall: for in the firſt place, the words are (written in this law) and in that law are onely forbidden the greater ſinnes, as adulterie, idolatrie, murther, and ſo likewiſe Ezech.18. the more hainous ſinnes are reckoned vp.

Contra. This poore clauſe (this law) cannot helpe the Ieſuite: for S. Paul alleaging this place, ſaith, Curſed is, &c. that continueth not in all things written in the law, not this law: ſhewing hereby that all tranſgreſſions generally of the whole law, or any part thereof, are ſubiect to the curſe of the law: ſo alſo is the Prophet to be vnderſtood.

To the place in Saint Iames hee anſwereth thus: Hee that offendeth in one point, that is, not in any one point, but ſuch an one, as whereby charitie or loue is broken; and then it is no veniall but a mortall ſinne.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, Whoſoeuer ſhall keepe the whole law, and yet faile in one point: hee ſpeaketh not of any great and apparant tranſgreſſion, for how ſhould the man that doth it, ſeeme to keepe the whole law: but of ſome ſecret and ſmaller offence rather, which notwithſtanding he is taken for a good keeper of the law. Secondly, the Apoſtle himſelfe putteth an example, If thou committeſt not adulterie, and yet killeſt, thou art a tranſgreſſor: but he onely killeth not that ſlayeth; but Math.5.22. he alſo that is angrie vnaduiſedly, or calleth Racha, as our Sauiour Chriſt expoundeth this commandement: therefore he that faileth in theſe points killeth, and ſo is a tranſgreſſor of the law. Thirdly,
Rom.13.10. all veniall ſinnes doe faile alſo in charitie: for charitie is the fulfilling of the law: hee therefore that breaketh not charitie doth keepe the law, and tranſgreſſeth it not: But he that committeth any veniall ſin, tranſgreſſeth the law, otherwiſe it were no ſin, and therefore faileth alſo in charitie: S. Iames therefore by this one point vnderſtandeth veniall ſinnes, as well as other.

Iohn.13.8. *Argum.*2. Beſide, our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith to Peter, If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part in me, If all ſinnes exclude vs from hauing part in Chriſt, and conſequently from the kingdome of God; then conſequently all ſinnes are mortall, and in their owne nature worthie of death.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that veniall ſinnes doe not ſimply exclude from the kingdome of God, but onely for a time, till they be purged and waſhed, *reſp. ad obiect.*3.

Contra. Firſt, if then veniall ſinnes be neuer waſhed, they ſhall ſimply exclude from the kingdome of heauen. Secondly, the force of the argument remaineth vnanſwered: for if all ſinnes muſt bee waſhed away in Chriſt, or elſe we haue no part in him, and Chriſt died only to take away thoſe ſinnes
Heb.2.14. which deſerued death, as the Apoſtle ſaith: That he might deſtroy through death him, that had power ouer death: verſ.15. And, that hee might deliuer them, which for feare of death were all their life time ſubiect to bondage. They then that were ſubiect to death by reaſon of their ſinnes, were deliuered by Chriſts death: Ergo, all ſinnes for the which Chriſt died, were worthie of death.

*Argum.*3. If all ſinnes are not mortall, then Chriſt died not for all ſinnes: for he by his death did Iohn.1.29. ſatisfie onely for ſinnes that deſerued death: but Chriſt died for all ſinnes.

Againe, originall ſinne, which is leſſe then any actuall ſinne, ſuch as their veniall ſinnes are, is worthie of death, and there by death raigneth euen ouer children, which ſinne not actually as Adam did; did, Ergo, veniall ſinnes which proceede from originall ſinne, doe much more deſerue death. S. Paul Rom.5.14.

alſo further thus ſaith: If I doe that I would not, then is it not I any longer that doe it, but ſinne that dwelleth in me; He calleth it ſinne, though he conſent not to it, which is againſt the Rhemiſts, that will Rom.7.20.
haue no motion or paſſion in the minde, ſinne, vnleſſe it be voluntarie: and ſay further, that we neede not aske forgiueneſſe for ſuch ſinnes.

Let Auguſtine here ſpeake: Peccata ignorantiæ vel negligentiæ melius accuſantur vt puniantur, quam In Pſal.105.
excuſantur vt maneant, meliusq́; purgantur inuocato Deo, quam firmantur irritato Deo: The ſinnes of ignorance and negligence are better accuſed, then excuſed; better by praying to God to purge them, then by prouoking God to confirme them: Ergo, forgiueneſſe muſt bee asked at Gods hand for voluntarie ſinnes, ſinnes of ignorance.

Alſo he ſaith, Propter omnia peccata baptiſmus inuentus eſt, propter leuiora oratio dominica: For all ſinnes Baptiſme is a remedie, and the Lords prayer for the leſſe, de ſymbol. lib. 1. 6. Ergo, theſe leſſer ſins are in their owne nature guiltie of death, and not of themſelues pardonable: for otherwiſe we neede not ſay the Lords prayer for them, nor aske God forgiueneſſe, as the Rhemiſts themſelues confeſſe, annotat. Rom. 7. ſect. 8. 9.

Wee haue alſo the conſent of antiquitie; Gelaſius. tom. anathemat. Eſt peccatum ad mortem in eodem peccato manentibus; eſt peccatum non ad mortem ab eodem peccato recedentibus: There is a ſinne vnto death, to them that continue in it: there is a ſinne not vnto death: to them that depart from it.

Nicen. 2. can. 5. Peccatum ad mortem eſt, quoties aliqui peccantes ſe non emendant: A ſin vnto death is, when they that ſinne doe not amend themſelues. Repentance wee ſee, maketh all ſinnes veniall: want of repentance maketh all ſinnes mortall. None therefore are veniall of their owne nature, but by repentance.

Decret. distinct. 25. c. 3. gloſſ. ex Auguſtin. Nullum peccatum eſt veniale, quod non fiat criminale dum placeat. No ſin is ſo veniall, which is not made criminall, if it doe pleaſe: that is, if the ſinner continue in it. Cauſ. 33. distinct. 1. c. 47. Venialis culpa, quam ſequitur confeſſio delictorum: That fault is veniall, which the confeſſion of ſinnes followeth. This ſentence is rehearſed and approued by the Maſter of Sentences, lib. 4. distinct. 17. a.

The Maſter hath many ſentences to the like effect: Lib. 2. distinct. 24. l. Totus homo damnabitur, &c. Whole man ſhall be condemned, vnleſſe thoſe ſinnes, which without any will or purpoſe of working, but with a delight onely of the minde, are committed in thought, are remitted by the fauour of the Mediatour: But theſe, by their owne definition, are onely veniall ſinnes, which haue not the conſent of the will. Lib. 3. distinct. 38. a. A lye made to ſaue another, is a veniall ſinne to the weake, but to the perfect it is damnable. If the ſame ſin be veniall to one, and damnable to another, then is it not in it owne nature veniall. Lib. 4. diſt. 20. b. Quædam peccata mortalia in pœnitentia fiunt venialia: Some mortall ſinnes, are by repentance made veniall. Therefore they are not veniall or worthie of forgiueneſſe in themſelues, but by repentance and mercie in Chriſt.

The concluſion of all is this. 1. That there are difference and degrees of ſinnes, which accordingly deſerue greater or leſſe puniſhment.

2 That ſome ſinnes may be ſaid to be veniall, pardonable, ſome mortall, either comparatiuely, becauſe they are more eaſily forgiuen ſome then others, or in reſpect of the euent, becauſe to the faithfull all ſinnes are veniall in Chriſt.

3 That no ſinnes are veniall in their owne nature, as being all the fruites of originall ſinne, which brought in death.

4 God neuer condemneth onely for the veniall and ſmaller ſinnes: becauſe in the wicked and impenitent, they are alwaies accompanied with greater ſinnes: and to the faithfull they with the greater ſinnes are pardoned.

THE SECOND QVESTION, WHETHER SINNE any way may ſtand with the will of God.

The Papiſts.

7.Error.

NO ſin ſtandeth with the will or intention of God, but is directly againſt it, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom.3. ſect.4. And therfore Chriſts death was Gods act no otherwiſe, then by permiſſion, Act.3. ſect.2. Neither is God the author of ſin, otherwiſe then by permiſſion and with-holding of his grace: annot. Iam.1.13. Sic etiam Bellarm. de ſtatu peccat. lib.2. cap.3.

But our faith is this, grounded vpon Scripture, that whatſoeuer is done in the world, is not done by Gods permiſſion only, but ſtandeth alſo with his knowledge: Hell and deſtruction are before him, how much more the hearts of men? Prou.15.11. With his will and pleaſure: whatſoeuer pleaſed the Lord, that did hee in heauen and in earth, Pſal35.6. With his eternall ordinance and decree: So the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt was deliuered vp according to the determinate counſell of God, Act.2.23. And not only ſo, but all things in the world are done by the power of God: Shall there be euill in a Citie, and the Lord hath not done it? Amos 3.6. yea, at the bidding & commandment of God: the Lord hath bidden him to curſe Dauid, 2.Sam.16.10. Therefore euill actions are not done onely by the permiſſion of God. And yet for all this God ſhall not be the author of ſin.

Zuinglius ſerm. de prouid. cap.5.

Beza Aphoriſ.31.

Caluin. aduerſ. Libertin. cap.14.

For firſt, God is not the author of any euill action, as it is euill, either by willing, decreeing, bidding it, or mouing thereunto, but only as he giueth power, as our Creator, to his creatures, to moue or work this or that: Therefore a ſinfull worke: Quatenus Dei eſt authoris, opus eſt, crimen non eſt, quantum autem hominis eſt, crimen eſt, ſcelus eſt: As it commeth of God the author, it is a work only, and no ſin: as it is of man, it is ſin & wickednes. Againe, God is no otherwiſe to be reſpected in a ſinfull work and action, but as a iuſt Iudge, which puniſheth ſin by ſin: for it is a iuſt thing before God to recompence one ſin by another: and ſo it is to be conſidered, not ſo much, tanquam peccatum, quàm pœna peccati, as it is a ſin, as a puniſhment of ſin. Thirdly, in the ſame action, God propoundeth one end, as the exerciſing of his children, and manifeſtation of his mercie, as in the tentation of Iob: the inſtrument whereby he worketh, reſpecteth ſome euill end, as Satan laboured the ſubuerſion of Iob, and the euill affection and purpoſe of the inſtrument maketh the action euill; but God is free, and vnſpotted: God therefore is not any wayes the author of ſin. Let vs now ſee what arguments our aduerſaries bring: firſt, againſt our opinion, and then for the confirmation of their owne.

Argum.1. Bellarmine ſetteth downe foure great abſurdities, that (he ſaith) muſt needes follow of our opinion. Firſt, if God be the author of euery action good or bad, and if wicked men are his inſtruments to accompliſh his will: God muſt of neceſſitie be the author of ſin, ſeeing hee willeth and commandeth it, cap.4. Secondly, God is not in thus doing the author only of ſin, but he himſelfe alſo ſhould properly and truly commit ſin, being conſenting, and ſetting his helping hand to ſinfull actions, cap.5. To the like purpoſe the Doway men obiect. p.172. Thirdly, God by this meanes ſhould not onely be guiltie of ſin, but the onely perſon in the world that properly ſinneth: for if that neither Adam, nor any of his poſteritie could chuſe but ſin, ſeeing it was ſo ordained of God: and no man is ſaid to ſin, in that which he cannot ſhunne and auoyde: therefore no man properly is guiltie of ſin; and ſo it would light wholy vpon God, cap.6. Laſtly, ſeeing then that man ſinneth not, becauſe what he doth, is by the power, will, and commandement of God: and yet God himſelfe is no wayes the author of ſin, as the Proteſtants affirme: then it would follow, that ſin is nothing at all, as the Libertines hold, but onely an imagined and deuiſed thing, being no where to be found: And if ſin be nothing, then hell is nothing, and Chriſts death in vaine, Bellarm. cap.7.

Anſwere. Firſt, theſe obiections are eaſily remoued by that which we anſwered before: that God is no otherwiſe the author of euill actions, or the willer and commander of them, then as the power of working is of God: but the euill qualitie and condition of the action, is to bee imputed onely to the inſtrument: ſo that men committing euill, as they receiue a generall and abſolute power of God, to moue, to liue, &c. are onely, paſſiua inſtrumenta, paſſiue inſtruments: as they are workers of euill, they are onely, actiua inſtrumenta, actiue and working inſtruments. Wee will make this plaine by ſome example: as when the Sunne beames beat vpon ſome carrion, by the heat thereof there is raiſed a ſtinch, yet the Sunne beames ſtinke not, but the euill ſauour ariſeth only of the corrupt matter:

And as when we ſee a lame man walking, and halting as he goeth; the ſoule and life that is in man giueth motion to the lame part, yet the lameneſſe thereof commeth of the infirmitie of the member it ſelfe: Euen ſo the Lord may be the cauſe of euill actions, and yet not guilty of the euill.

Bellarmine obiecteth that theſe examples are vnlike; for the Sunne, and the ſoule of man are onely generall cauſes, not particular of theſe actions: but God (as you ſay) is not onely an vniuerſall, but a ſpeciall cauſe of euery action, Bellarm.cap.5.

Anſwere. The ſoule in the body is both an vniuerſall and particular cauſe of the power of mouing in euery part: for as the ſaying in Philoſophie is, anima eſt tota in toto, & tota in qualibet parte: The ſoule is both vniuerſally whole in the whole body, and ſpecially whole in euery part. But of the lameneſſe and defect in mouing it is no cauſe at all, vnleſſe it be the generall and furtheſt remoued cauſe: ſo we doe ſay alſo of the working of God in euill actions.

2 In one and the ſame action God doth reſpect a good and profitable end, whereas the inſtrument may haue a miſchieuous purpoſe and intent, which maketh the action euill: and ſo the ſinne is proper onely to the inſtrument.

Anſwere. This is againſt S. Pauls rule, who ſaith, wee muſt not doe euill, that good may come thereof: therefore the good intent, which God propoundeth to himſelfe, cannot iuſtifie the euill action, wherein he is a partie, Bellarm.cap.4.

Contra. God is not a partie in the euilneſſe of the action at all, as we haue ſhewed: wherefore it is falſe that he doth euill to a good end. Nay, both the action it ſelfe is good as it commeth of God, and the end alſo good: which the Lord reſpecteth.

3 The iudgements of God are alwaies iuſt: and therefore ſinnes, as they are puniſhments of former ſinnes are iuſt: and ſo may be of God. Anſw. Yea, but Adams ſinne was not a puniſhment of a former, for he was created without ſinne, therefore his ſinne muſt be imputed to God, Bellar.c.4.

Contra. Yea, but Adam had free will by creation, to chuſe good or euill, and therefore ſeeing it was his voluntarie choiſe to ſinne, he onely is to be blamed for it. How Adams ſinne ſtroue with the will of God.

Obiect. Adams fall is fore-ſeene of God, and hee could not otherwiſe chuſe: how then can hee be guilty of that ſinne, which was not in his power to auoyde?

Anſwere. Indeede Adam in reſpect of Gods appointment and fore-knowledge, did ſinne neceſſariò, neceſſarily, but not coactè, he was not conſtrained: but in reſpect of his owne free will, he did neither, neceſſariò vel coactè, ſed voluntariè peccare: he did neither ſinne of neceſſitie or by conſtraint, but voluntarily.

S. Auguſtine doth anſwere this obiection to the full: It will bee ſaid that Pharaoh could doe no other, becauſe it was ſo fore-ſeene of him: It is anſwered, ſaith he, Dei præſcientiam non cogere hominem vt talis ſit, qualem præſciuit Deus, ſed præſcire talem futurum, qualis futurus erat, quamuis ſic eum non fecerit Deus: qui ſi hoc præſcierat eſſe, quod non eſt, præſcientia iam non eſt: The preſcience of God doth not make a man to be that, which he is fore-ſeene to be, but doth onely fore-know him to bee ſuch, as he ſhould haue beene, though God had not made him ſuch: for if God ſhould haue fore-ſeene that which is not, it were no fore-knowledge at all, De prædeſtinat. & gratia. lib.1.15.

Thus we ſee how ſinfull actions may ſtand with the wil, decree & power of God: and yet God ſhal neither be the author of ſin, nor himſelfe thereby be made either properly, or onely to ſinne, not yet ſin to become nothing. Now let vs examine the reaſons which our aduerſaries bring of their part.

Argum.2. The Scripture ſaith, that God loueth not, or willeth not iniquitie: He will not the death of a ſinner; And many ſuch places there are to the like purpoſe: Ergo, God giueth no conſent vnto ſinne, much leſſe commendeth it, Bellarm.cap.8. Pſal.5.4. Ezech.18.32.

Anſwere. 1. Firſt, theſe places alſo make as ſtrong againſt Popiſh permiſſion: for if God hate iniquitie, he will not permit it: for he that permitteth any thing which he hateth, either ſheweth his impotencie, in that he is not able to hinder it, but is conſtrained to permit it: or elſe declareth his mutabilitie in louing that which before he hated.

2 We alſo grant, that God neither willeth nor worketh iniquitie: hee willeth the worke, but the iniquitie of the worke is of man: And he willeth not the death of a ſinner; that is, hee procureth not, nor worketh the death of any, which is wrought by ſinne, with the which the Lord hath no fellowſhip: As Auguſtine ſaith: Cupiditates peccantium Dei prædeſtinatio non excitauit, ſuaſit, aut impulit, ſed prædeſtinauit iudicium ſuum, quo vnicuiq; prout geſſit, retributurus eſt: Gods predeſtination doth not ſtirre vp, perſwade, or enforce the deſires of ſinners: but God hath onely predeſtinate his iuſt iudgements, whereby he will render to euery man, as he hath done, and as the ſinnes, which hee hath committed, doe deſerue. Articul.falſ. impoſit.10.

3 Laſtly, theſe places in Scripture, God will not the death of a ſinner, and he will all men to be ſaued, and ſuch like, are to bee vnderſtood of the reuealed will of God: who notwithſtanding in his ſecret will hath caſt his lots ouer euery man, either to life or death: yet the externall meanes of ſaluation are offered to all. 1.Timoth.2.4.

Obiect. 1. You confeſſe then that there is a reuealed will of God in the Scripture, from whence then doe ye know his ſecret will? ſurely, ſaith the Ieſuite, Satis oſtendunt ſe eam non ex ſcripturis, ſed ex proprio capite deduxiſſe: By this you declare, that this ſecret will you learne not out of Scripture, but gather it out of your owne head, Bellarm.cap.8.

Anſwere.1. Wee grant the Ieſuites conſequent, you learne it not out of Scripture: Ergo, it is an inuention of your owne head: for hereby he condemneth all inuentions and traditions, beſide Scripture, which elſe-where he moſt ſtifly maintaineth. 2. We denie the antecedent: for this diſtinction of the ſecret and reuealed will of God, we learne euen out of Scripture: for where wee reade, Ego Deus creans malum, I am the God that create euill: And againe, Non Deus volens iniquitatem tu es: Thou art not a God which loueſt iniquitie: how ſhall theſe places be reconciled, to ſpeake one truth, vnleſſe wee make a difference betweene the ſecret and reuealed will of God? but becauſe, this place cited out of Iſay may bee vnderſtoode of that which is called malum pœna, the euill of puniſhment, which God in his iuſtice is the author of: there is yet a more cleare place, for the proofe of this diſtinction of Gods ſecret and reuealed will: as Deuter. 29.29. The ſecret things belong vnto the Lord our God, but the things reuealed belong to vs, and our children for euer, that wee may doe all the words of this Law.

Iſay.45.7.
Pſal.5.4.
Deut.29.29.

Obiect.2. If God haue a ſecret will, whereby he willeth one thing, and a reuealed will, whereby he nilleth the ſame: then hath God two contrarie wils, which cannot be both true, and thus you make God a lyer, Bellar.ibid.

Anſwere. Firſt, we doe not ſay that God hath two wils, but one and the ſelfe ſame will, that hath diuers reſpects: and if in reſpect of vs God ſeeme to will one thing which in reſpect of his ſecret counſell he nilleth, he is no more contrarie to himſelfe, than our Sauiour Chriſt was, who made ſhew to his two Diſciples as though he would goe further, and yet had a purpoſe to ſtay with them. But concerning this diſtinction, S. Auguſtine putteth vs out of doubt: Remota hac diſcretione, quam diuina ſcientia intra ſecretum iuſtitiæ ſuæ continet, ſynceriſſimè credendum eſt deum omnes ſaluari velle: Setting apart that difference of men, which the diuine knowledge hath locked vp in the cloſet of iuſtice, it is ſincerely to be beleeued, that God would haue all men ſaued. There is then another difference of men in the ſecret counſell of God, then is outwardly and apparantly knowne. This diſtinction of Gods ſecret and reuealed will, the Maſter of Sentences very well approueth out of Auguſtine lib.1.diſt.47.b.Multa non fieri præter voluntatem Dei, quæ fiunt contra voluntatem: That many things are done contrary to the will of God, which are not done beſide his will: that is, many things may be committed againſt Gods precepts, which are his will, and yet not againſt his omnipotent and euerlaſting will: Contra eam quippe nihil fit, for nothing is done againſt that will: the one is called voluntas ſigni, the ſigned will of God, which is teſtified by outward ſignes, as precepts and prohibitions in Scripture: the other is voluntas beneplaciti, the will of Gods Counſell, or purpoſe. And ſo Auguſtine concludeth, Quantum ad ipſos attinet, quod Deus noluit, fecerunt, quantum ad omnipotentiam Dei, nullo modo facere voluerunt: In reſpect of themſelues, ſinners doe that which God would not; but in regard of Gods omnipotent will, they could not.

Argum.3. S. Iames ſaith, Let no man ſay, when he is tempted; I am tempted of the Lord, and Saint Paul; God will not ſuffer you to be tempted aboue that you are able: Ergo, much more doth not God tempt any man, or compell him to ſinne, ſeeing hee doth not ſuffer his children to be tempted, &c. Bellarm.c.8.loc.4.

1.Cor.10.13.

Anſwere. Firſt, this profeſſed diſputer forgetteth the point in queſtion, and fighteth with his owne ſhadow, forcing a concluſion, which no man denieth, and ſo trauaileth with winde: For we confeſſe, that God neither tempteth, prouoketh or compelleth any man to ſinne. Secondly, there is a temptation, which is of God, which is nothing but the triall of a mans faith: as the Lord is ſaid to haue tempted Abraham, that is, to haue made triall and proofe of his faith: any other way God tempteth not. Thirdly, theſe three wayes we acknowledge Gods power in the ſinfull actions of men. 1. In forſaking them, and giuing men ouer to themſelues to follow their owne luſts: as he tooke his good ſpirit from Saul; by the abſence of which ſpirit he fell into moſt grieuous ſinnes. 2. God as a Creator giueth life and power to euery thing to moue, to liue, to worke, In him we liue, we moue and haue our being. 3. He as a iuſt Iudge doth puniſh ſinners by their owne ſinne, For this cauſe God gaue them ouer to vile affections: So that ſinne, as it is a conſequent of deſertion, a worke of the creature, a iudgement and puniſhment; is not without the will of God: yet the Lord is no way acceſſarie to the euilneſſe of ſinne, nor the author thereof. In this ſenſe we miſlike not that diſtinction of Origen: Multa ſine voluntate Dei geruntur, nihil ſine prouidentia; prouidentia eſt, qua diſpenſat, & prouidet; voluntas, qua vult, aut non vult aliquid: Many things are done without the will of God, nothing without his prouidence; that is his prouidence, wherewith he doth diſpenſe, diſpoſe, and prouide or fore-ſee; that is his will, whereby he willeth or nilleth any thing, &c. wherefore though ſinne be not agreeable to the will of God, yet it ſtandeth with his prouidence.

The Proteſtants.

WE affirme, that ſinne neither ſtandeth abſolutely with the will of God, for hee made not ſinne, nor yet created man to ſinne, neither properly or directly doth God ſuffer or permit ſinne, as it is ſinne, to be done in the world: but he ſuffereth the creatures, without coaction or conſtraint to vſe their naturall faculties, which are of themſelues prone to ſinne: ſo that in ſinfull actions God worketh otherwiſe then by permiſſion onely, or with-holding of his grace: for he is to be conſidered both as a Creator, that giueth power to euery thing, to moue, to liue, to doe this or that, and as a iuſt Iudge, puniſhing and iudging men in and by their owne ſinnes.

*Argum.*1. S.Peter ſaith, that Chriſt was deliuered vp according to the determinate counſell of God. Gods determinate counſell is more then his ſufferance or permiſſion.

Acts 2.23.

Anſw. The meaning of the Apoſtle is this: that God had decreed and determined, that Chriſt ſhould die to redeeme the world: but that Iudas ſhould betray him, or Pilate condemne him, or the ſouldiers crucifie him, God decreed not it ſhould be done, but to ſuffer it to be done, *Bellarm.cap.*11. ſic etiam Rhemiſt.

Contra. 1. God did not onely permit the Iewes to worke their malice vpon Chriſt, but moſt iuſtly and moſt holily hee vſed their malice to bring his purpoſe to paſſe. 2. For if God ſuffered and permitted that to be done, which he might haue hindred, he thereby ſhould be made acceſſary with the Iewes of his ſonnes death. And 3. againe, where the Apoſtle ſaith, definito conſilio, he was deliuered vp by the determinate counſell of God; it ſheweth an actiue, not a permiſſiue power of God, and a reſolute decree of God for the deliuering vp of his ſonne, not a foreknowledge onely. 4. Neither is it the Lords manner to decree to ſuffer, but to doe: for, What ſoeuer the Lord will, is done in heauen and in earth. 5. But if he ſhould ſuffer that to be done which hee willeth not, then not whatſoeuer the Lord willeth, is done; but he ſhould be conſtrained to yeeld to the will of others.

Pſal.35.6.

*Argum.*2. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, that God bid Shemei curſe. And the Lord ſaith to the euill ſpirit, that offered himſelfe to goe and deceiue Ahab: Vade & fac, & praeualebis: Goe and doe ſo, and thou ſhalt preuaile,: But bidding and commanding is more then ſuffering: Ergo.

2.Sam.16.11.

Anſw. Firſt, God may be ſaid to bid or command to doe euill, in ſuffering the inſtruments which he vſeth to doe euill. Secondly, becauſe he not onely ſuffereth the wicked ſo to doe, but leaueth and forſaketh them, and withholdeth his grace. Thirdly, and beſide theſe two waies, Praeſidet etiam Deus ipſis voluntatibus malis, eaſque regit & gubernat, ac flectit in eis inuiſibiliter operando, vt licet vitio proprio malae ſint, tamen à diuina prouidentia ad vnum potius malum, quàm ad aliud, non poſitiue, ſed permiſſiue ordinentur: God ſitteth euen in the wicked purpoſes of men, gouerning and ruling them, and ſo by his inuiſible power working in them, doth turne them, that although they be euill of themſelues, yet they are by the diuine prouidence of God ordained to doe one euill rather then another, not poſitiuely, that is abſolutely, appointing them thereto, but by way of permiſſion: As God is ſaid to haue commanded Shemei to curſe, becauſe he inclined his will, being euill, to curſe Dauid: And he inclined him, not by compelling, but by opening him a way to this ſinne, and ſtopping the way to other ſinnes, *ſic Bellarm de amiſſ.grat.lib.*2.*cap.*13.

Contra. Concerning the two firſt waies of permitting and withholding of grace, they haue not any place here: for to bid and command, is more then either of theſe. Concerning the third, firſt, the Ieſuite is contrarie to himſelfe, he ſaith that God doth gouerne, turne, and rule, and incline the mindes of wicked men, and yet concludeth, that all this is done by permiſſion: inclinauit, id eſt, permiſit, hee inclined, that is, ſuffered: which are cleane contrarie: for to incline is an action, to permit is a thing paſſiue. Secondly, what differeth now this third way from the firſt? for here hee runneth to permiſſion. Thirdly, in ſaying that God incſineth to euill by opening a way to euill, and ſtopping the paſſage to other ſinnes; hee runneth into that inconuenience, which he moſt of all ſhunneth, to make God the author of ſinne: for how can it be auoided, ſeeing God openeth a way to ſinne, poynteth to it, and ſheweth the meane: and might as well hinder the way to this ſinne, as hee doth to others? Therefore how much better and more ſafe is our aſſertion, that God in bidding Shemei to curſe, was himſelfe an agent in this action, ſo farre as it tended to good: namely, vſing this wicked inſtrument in reſpect of himſelfe after a moſt holy and iuſt manner, for the triall of Dauid, and the manifeſtation of his iuſt iudgement vpon this wicked man. And thus ſpeaketh Auguſtine: Deus voluntatem eius proprio ſuo vitio malam in hoc peccatum iudicio ſuo iuſto & occulto inclinauit: God by his iuſt and ſecret iudgement, did incline his will, being corrupt of it ſelfe, vnto this miſchiefe. Loe, he ſaith, inclinauit, he did incline his will, which is more, then permiſit, he did ſuffer him.

De grat.& lib. arbit.cap.20.

*Argum.*3. God is ſaid in Scripture to harden mens hearts, and to blinde their eyes: as Exod 7.3. I will harden Pharaohs heart. Ioſua 11:20. It came of the Lord to harden their hearts, that they ſhould come againſt Iſrael. 1.Sam.2.25. They obeyed not the voyce of their father, becauſe the Lord would kill them. Iſay 63.17. Why haſt thou made vs to erre from thy waies? Ioh.12.39. They could not beleeue, becauſe Eſaias ſaith, he hath blinded their eyes and hardened their heart: Rom.1.28. God gaue them vp to a reprobate minde.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, God is not the author of induration or excaecation poſitiuely, but onely negatiuely: that is, permittendo, deſerendo, by ſuffering them to bee hardened, and by forſaking them. Secondly, in Scripture thoſe things are ſaid to harden, or to blinde, which are but the occaſions only, as gifts are ſaid to blind the eyes of the wiſe: ſo God is ſaid to harden, occaſionaliter, by miniſtring the occaſion, by abuſing whereof men are hardened: as Pſal.105. God turned the hearts of the Ægyptians, ſo that they did hate his people: God did not peruert the hearts of the Ægyptians, but by ſhewing mercie to his people, they tooke occaſion thereby to hate them. *Bellarm.c.*13.& 14. *obſeruat.*5.

Pſal.105.25.

The Doway Colledge men doe frame the like anſwere: as that God hardened Pharaohs heart onely by permiſſion, as he is ſaid to haue caſt Pharaoh and his chariots into the Sea, Exod.15.4. And further, as a father by not puniſhing is ſaid to ſpoile, ſo God to indurate: and Pharaoh abuſing Gods

Annot.in 7.Exod p.175.

Pag.171.173. in the margen. Pag.758. benefits hardened his heart: and Gods patience is made by euill hearts vnprofitable: and he did indurate Pharaohs heart in not mollifying it: ſo God permitted the diuell only to deceiue Ahab.

Contra. Firſt, Thomas Aquinas, whom Bellarmine alleageth, granteth, that God doth inclinare malas voluntates, non ſolum permittendo, ſed poſitiue, incline the euill willes of men, not onely by permiſſion, but poſitiuely: in Comment. c. 9. ad Roman. that is, not by ſuffering onely, but by doing and working.

Secondly, neither can it ſafely be affirmed, that God miniſtreth occaſion to men to be hardened or to ſinne: ſeeing 1. that Balaam is reproued for teaching Balaak to put a ſtumbling blocke before the Reuel.2.14. children of Iſrael, Reuel. 2. 14. Shall wee thinke then, that God putteth ſtumbling blocks before men to fall at? 2. And this were to make God the worker of tentation, as Satan is, who tempteth occaſionaliter, by ſetting the occaſion or motiue before mens eyes; as hee ſhewed Chriſt the whole world. 3. But if they ſay, that the occaſion which God miniſtreth, is good, but men abuſe it, and are thereby hardened: as when through Gods patience men are made worſe. Here God doth miniſter no occaſion at all, but they take occaſion to be hardened, where there is none offered: and thus God cannot any way be ſaid to harden mens hearts.

Thirdly, Auguſtine hath foure opinions of this matter. 1. God is ſaid to harden Pharaohs heart, becauſe he miniſtred the cauſe, whereby Pharaoh his heart was hardned, vt cauſæ (quibus animus propellitur) exiſtunt, vel non exiſtunt, non eſt in hominis poteſtate ſed veniunt ex occulta prouidentia, &c. That the cauſes (wherewith the minde is forced) ſhould be or not be, it is not in mans power, but in Gods ſecret prouidence, &c qu. 18. in Exod. But this (as I ſhewed) is not ſufficient. 2. Indurare Deus dicitur, quem mollire noluerit: God is ſaid to harden, whom hee will not mollifie, de prædeſtinat. & grat. c. 4. Thus God ſhould be ſaid to harden the hearts of all wicked men. 3. That God is ſaid to harden Pharaohs heart, Non ad operationem Dei, ſed præſcientiam pertinere monſtratur: It muſt be vnderſtood of Gods preſcience only and foreknowledge, not of his working, de prædeſtinat. & grat. c. 6. this were to confound Gods knowledge and works. 4. Wherefore in the fourth place he ſaith, Deus indurauit per iuſtum iudicium, Pharao per liberum arbitrium: God did indurate Pharaohs heart, by his iuſt iudgement; Pharaoh by the freeneſſe of his corrupt will: de lib. arbit. & grat. cap. 23. To this ſentence of Auguſtine we conſent, that God doth not harden mens hearts only, by permiſſion, deſertion, occaſion, preſcience; but, as a iuſt Iudge, hee puniſheth ſinne by ſinne, and giueth them ouer to the hardneſſe of their heart: and Bellarmine vnawares confeſſeth as much, that when God in Scripture is ſaid to indurate, id facit vt iuſtus iudex, he doth it as a iuſt Iudge, c. 14. obſeru. 5 This is more then to doe it by permiſſion only or deſertion. Laſtly, Origen doth very well expreſſe this matter, by this ſimilitude: Sol duplicis videtur eſſe virtutis, &c. The Sunne ſeemeth to be of a double vertue, one to illuminate, another to burne or harden, but according to the matter and ſubiect: ſo God hardened Pharaohs heart, becauſe it was by his corrupt thoughts of an earthly nature, as the Sunne hardeneth the clay: Hom. 2. in Cantic. So then as the Sunne, not by withdrawing his light, or by ſuffering, but effectiuely hardneth the clay; ſo God likewiſe: but the cauſe of all is in the corruption of mans heart. So then to conclude this whole matter, I ſay with Auguſtine; firſt, Non cuiuſquam peccati author eſt Deus, ſed naturæ Creator, qua cùm poteſtatem habuit non delinquendi, ſponte deliquit: God is not the author of ſinne, but the Creator of nature, which when it had power not to ſinne, ſinned willingly, articul. 5. falſ. impoſ. Auguſtin. Secondly, Diuina diſpoſitio non peccatores facit, ſed ordinat, cum peccauerunt: The diuine diſpoſition maketh not ſinners, but diſpoſeth of them, when they haue ſinned: in Pſal. 7. So God in the worke of ſinne is to be conſidered as a Creator, from whom the creature hath power to doe this or that; and as a iuſt Iudge, that ordereth and diſpoſeth of ſinne, directing it to the iuſt puniſhment of the wicked.

1. Tertullian thus reaſoneth againſt Hermogenes, who to excuſe the Creator from being the author of euill, preſuppoſeth that the matter whereof God made all things, was alwaies, and made to Gods hand: and ſo the euill which is done, is to be imputed vnto the euilnes of the matter, not to the goodneſſe of the Creator: Tertullian thus impugneth this opinion: Si non author, ſed aſſentator mali inuenitur Deus: By this meanes, God though not the author, yet is found to be a fauourer and flatterer of Lib.cont.Hermogen. euill: aut enim potuit emendare, ſed noluit, aut voluit, verum non potuit, infirmus Deus ſi potuit, & noluit, malus ipſe; quia malo fauit, &c. for either he could haue mended the matter, but would not, or he would, yet could not, then he ſhould be a weake God, and if hee could and would not, hee ſhould be euill himſelfe, as fauouring euill, &c. The like may be ſaid concerning Gods permiſſion of ſinne, if he haue no other hand in it: that he in permitting ſinne, ſhould want power in not hindring it, or aſſent vnto it, being able to ſtay it, and yet ſuffering it.

2. Cyrillus of Ieruſalem doubteth not to ſay, that God doth turne the wicked will of the minde, Catech.8. to be an occaſion of the ſaluation of the faithfull, &c. which he ſheweth by the example of Ioſephs brethren, whoſe hatred was an occaſion of his aduancement: this is more then to ſuffer or permit.

Harm.ſect.3. pag.57. 3. French Confeſſ. artic. 8. What ſoeuer they doe euilly, as he hath iuſtly ordained, he turneth to good. Ibid.pag.61. Latter confeſſ. of Heluetia, chap. 8. When God is ſaid in Scripture to harden, to blind, &c. it is to be vnderſtood, that God doth it as a iuſt Iudge and reuenger, &c. Hee is more then a permitter or ſufferer only.

4. Cauſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 23. Cùm aliquos à Deo traditos deſiderijs, aut obduratos legimus, &c. When we reade of any giuen vp to their luſts, and obdurate, &c. We confeſſe that they had ſo deſerued by their great ſinnes, &c. Where then there is an euill deſert preceding, and hardneſſe of heart followeth as a puniſhment, there God is not to be conſidered only as a beholder or ſufferer, but as a iuſt Iudge.

Cauſ.24.qu.3.c.39. The Colluthians are numbred among Heretikes, Qui dicunt Deum non facere mala: Who ſay that God doth not euill, contrarie to the Scripture, I the Lord create euill: the Papiſts excluding the power of God from euill, but onely by the way of permiſſion; are not farre from this hereſie.

The Maſter of the Sentences is a plentifull witneſſe with vs; ſhewing diuers waies out of Auguſtine how ſinne ſtandeth with the will of God. 1. Becauſe mala fieri bonum eſt, it is a good thing, that euill ſhould be done: for by this meanes Gods power and goodneſſe is ſeene, in turning euill to good, lib.1.diſt.46.g. 2. Voluntas Dei de nobis impletur, ſed tamen non implemus eam, cum peccamus: The will of God is fulfilled of vs, though we fulfill not the will of God, when wee ſinne: lib.1. diſt.47.i. that is, Gods wil euen in ſinners is fulfilled to their puniſhment. 3. Actus mali, in quantum actus ſunt, bona ſunt & à Deo authore: Euill actions, as they are actions, are good, and ſo of God: lib. 2.diſt.35.d. 4. Ea quæ peccata ſunt & pœna peccati, &c. That which is both a ſin and a puniſhment of ſin, is of God as it is a puniſhment, for all puniſhmēts of ſin are iuſt: lib.2.diſt.36.b. So likewiſe lib. 2.d.32. Concupiſcentia in quantum pœna peccati deum habet authorem: Concupiſcence, as it is a puniſhment hath God the author, but as it is a ſin or fault, it hath the diuell for the author. 5. Lib.2. diſtinct 44.b. Poteſtas mali eſt à Deo: The power of euill, or whereby euill is done, is of God: Potentiam Deus tribuit, elationem potentiæ malitia noſtræ mentis inuenit: God giueth power to worke, but the abuſe of the power is of the malice of our owne minde. Thus farre the Maſter of the Sentences agreeth with vs: whereby it is euident in what ſenſe God in ſinfull acts is to bee conſidered, not as a ſufferer only, but as a worker and diſpoſer.

THE THIRD QVESTION, CONCERNING the ſinne of Adam.

This queſtion hath three parts. Firſt, whether Adams fall were any other way, then by Gods permiſſion only. Secondly, what Adams ſinne was, whether pride or infidelitie. Thirdly, what kind of ſinne, whether veniall or mortall.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER ADAMS FALL was any other way, then by Gods permiſſion.

The Papiſts.

Bellarmine affirmeth, that God only ſuffered Adam to be tempted and ſo to fall, and that God no way willed or decreed it: De ſtat.peccat.lib.3.c.2. 9. Error.

Argum. 2.Pet.3.9. God would haue none periſh, but to come to repentance: Therefore God no way willed, or decreed the fall of man. Againe, the Apoſtle ſaith, We muſt not doe euill, that good may come of it, Rom.3.8. Ergo, God would not Adams fall, that hee might afterward bee ſaued by Chriſt. 2 Pet.3.9. Rom.3.8.

Anſw. Firſt, the fall of man tended not to his deſtruction, but to his further ſtrengthning and raiſing vp in Chriſt: as Ambroſe well ſaith, Iuſta eſſet hæc accuſatio, ſi vulnera noſtra immedicabilia eſſent: This accuſation were iuſt, if our wounds were remedileſſe *de Paradiſ.cap.*8. Neither was Adams fall euil, as it was foreſeene and fore-ordained of God, the cauſe thereof was euill, namely Adams rebellion and diſobedience: but God in his moſt holy counſell, knew how to turne Adams ruine and fall, to his benefit.

The Proteſtants.

Neither doe we affirme that Adams ſinne was appointed in the will and decree of God, but it proceeded from the libertie of Adams will: but the fall of Adam was both foreſeene of God, and decreed to be, not permitted only.

*Argum.*1. As Chriſts death was decreed and determined, Acts 2.23. So was the fall of Adam; for the end of Chriſts death, was to reſtore Adams fall: and if the end be decreed, then thoſe things alſo, which are neceſſarilie referred to that end. Againe, Epheſ.1.4. The Saints were choſen in Chriſt before the foundation of the world, who hath predeſtinate vs to be adopted through Ieſus Chriſt. From whence I reaſon thus: The adoption of Gods children in Chriſt was predeſtinate and fore-ordained before the world: there could be no adoption, if Adam had not fallen: for what needed a reſtitution, if there had been no tranſgreſſion or preuarication? Ergo, Adams fall was decreed. Acts 2.23. Epheſ.1.4.

Auguſtine ſaith, Tenenda eſt inconcuſſe hæc regula: This rule muſt ſurely be held, that ſinners, in malis proprijs præſcitos non prædeſtinatos, pœnam autem ijs prædeſtinatam, were foreſeene in their ſins, not predeſtinate; but their puniſhment was predeſtinate, lib.6. Hypognoſtic. Wherefore Adams fall being a puniſhment of his ſinne, was predeſtinate, and before ordained. Concerning Adams ſin, how it may ſtand with the will of God, I haue ſhewed at large before, queſt.2.part.2.

Againe, Auguſtine ſaith: Creauit Deus hominem & prædeſtinauit, vt ſi obediens eſſet — ſin autem

inobediens

Lib. de prædeſtinat. cap. 2. inobediens ſententiam mortis ſubiret: God created man, and predeſtinate, that if he were obedient he ſhould continue in life: if diſobedient, he ſhould vndergoe the ſentence of death, &c.—the fall of man and ſentence of death thereupon was a part of Gods decree.

μετὰ νόμου τῦ ὑπ' αὐτῦ κρίνεσθ. Dial. cum Tryphon. in fine. Iuſtine Martyr ſaith, that God created Angels and men with free will,—yet with this law and condition, to be iudged of him, if they did any thing contrarie to right and reaſon, &c. The fall of man then and ſentence of death for his tranſgreſſing of the law of reaſon, was appointed of God, as a iuſt iudgement.

Confeſſion of Belgia, artic. 16. God hath declared himſelfe mercifull and iuſt (after the whole offſpring of Adam was caſt headlong into perdition, through the fault of the firſt man) mercifull in deliuering thoſe,—iuſt in leauing others in that their fall and perdition, &c. Harm. ſect. 5, pag. 87. Euery thing which God doth in iuſtice was ſo appointed and decreed by him: therefore mans fall being iuſt for ſinne, was ſo decreed.

Thomas Aquine ſaith: that reprobation is not a ſole preſcience, ſed includit voluntatem permittendi aliquem cadere in culpam & inferrendi damnationis pœnam: Pag. 1. q. 23. art. 3. 2. but it includeth a will of permitting ſome to fall into the fault, and of inferring the puniſhment of damnation: then as Adams ſinne then was by Gods permiſſion, ſo his fall and ruine was by his will and decree.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER PRIDE, OR infidelitie were the firſt ſinne of Adam.

The Papiſts.

10. Error. THe Ieſuites opinion is, that neither intemperancie, luſt of the fleſh, infidelitie, or any other, but pride onely was the firſt offence into the which Adam fell: who being tickled with ſelfe-loue, and an ambitious deſire to better their eſtate, when the diuell had ſaid vnto them (eritis, ſicut Dij) ye ſhall be as Gods: afterwards alſo fell into infidelitie, in giuing eare to Satan, and not beleeuing the words of God, Bellarm. de ſtat. peccat. lib. 3. cap. 4.

Eccleſiaſtic. 10. 14. Argum. 1. We reade in Eccleſiaſticus, 10. 14. that pride is the originall of ſin: Ergo, it was the firſt offence, from the which other flowed, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, the authoritie of this booke doth not binde vs, becauſe we doe not acknowledge nor receiue it for Scripture. Secondly, it is apparant by the text it ſelfe, that pride hath alſo his beginning, and therefore is not the originall of all tranſgreſſion: as verſ. 13. The beginning of mans pride is to fall away from God: therefore by this ſentence, diſobedience is ſet before pride, as the beginning and begetter thereof. Thirdly, the Canonicall Scripture ſpeaketh contrarie: for S. Paul ſaith, that not pride, but couetouſneſſe or the loue of money, is the roote, that is, the beginning and cauſe of all euill, 1. Tim. 6. 20. 1. Timoth. 6. 20

Rom. 5. 19. Argum. 2. S. Paul ſaith, Rom. 5. 19. By one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners: but diſobedience, that is, not to be ſubiect to the commandement of another, is the firſt act of pride: Ergo, the firſt ſinne of Adam was pride.

Anſw. Firſt, Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth, that the diſobedience of our firſt parents was tertius actus, the third act of their tranſgreſſion, infidelitie the ſecond, pride the firſt, cap. 9. but now hee turneth his ſpeech, and ſaith, that diſobedience was the firſt act, which he maketh a part of pride. Secondly, by diſobedience in this place, the Apoſtle meaneth not any one particular offence committed by our firſt parents, but the whole lumpe or maſſe of ſin rather, which did concurre in their tranſgreſſion: And this appeareth, by ſetting againſt Adams diſobedience, the obedience of Chriſt: whereby is vnderſtood, not any one vertue but the whole righteouſneſſe, and perfection of Chriſts obedience: whereby many (ſaith the Apoſtle) are made righteous: but we are made righteous, not by the partiall, but whole and entire obedience of Chriſt. As Chriſts obedience then is taken for his whole and perfect obedience; ſo is Adams diſobedience likewiſe.

Thirdly, diſobedience to God proceedeth from infidelitie firſt of all, which afterward is accompanied with pride: as the vnbeleefe of the Iſraelites is rendred as the cauſe of their diſobedience: Pſal. 78. 22. becauſe they beleeued not in God, nor truſted in his helpe, &c. and hereof it is that the ſame Greeke word ἀπειθὴς ſignifieth one that is refractarie and diſobedient, and one that is without beleefe, ἄπιστος.

The Proteſtants.

THough it bee not a point greatly materiall, whether pride or infidelitie in Adams tranſgreſſion was the firſt, ſeeing it is on each ſide confeſſed, that both of them were preſent; yet becauſe it is good, ſo farre as is poſſible, to ſearch out euery truth: we will alſo declare, which of theſe opinions commeth neereſt the truth: firſt, it is to be conſidered, that many ſinnes conſpired as it were, and were heaped together in the tranſgreſſion of Adam: Auguſtine reckoneth vp theſe fiue: 1. Sacrilegium, there was Sacrilege, that is, they robbed God of his honour, in that they beleeued not his word. 2. Homicidium, Homicide, in being guiltie of their owne death. 3. Fornicatio ſpiritualis, Spirituall fornication, in giuing credit to the diuell. 4. Furtum, Theft, in eating fruite which was prohibited, and ſo none of theirs. 5. Auaritia, Couetouſnes, plus quam ſufficit expetendo, in deſiring more then was ſufficient: Auguſt. Enchirid. cap 45. And in another place he ſetteth downe three more: Gulam, cupiditatem, ſuperbiam: Gluttonie, for they ſaw that the fruite was pleaſant to the eye, and therefore deſired to eate of it: Concupiſcence, or carnall deſire, they perceiued themſelues to be naked,&c. Pride,in ambitiouſly ſeeking to be like vnto God: Ad fratres in Eremo ſerm.68. Vnto theſe we may adde the excuſing of their ſin, and in Adam, his credulitie,in giuing too light eare to Eua her ſuggeſtion: The firſt of all theſe,which are tenne in number, was their infidelitie, which Auguſtine calleth ſacrilege,not their pride: and we ſhew it thus.

*Argum.*1. Infidelitie,and forgetting of God is the beginning of all ſinne,as the Pſalme ſaith: The foole hath ſaid in his heart, there is no God: and then it followeth: They haue corrupted, and done an abominable worke. The forgetfulnes of God therefore,which commeth of infidelitie, begetteth and bringeth foorth other vngodly workes. And our Sauiour ſaith, that from within, out of the heart, (which is the ſeate of infidelitie) proceed fornications,murthers,&c. Therefore pride followeth infidelitie,for the foole will neuer lift vp himſelfe againſt God,if he had not firſt forgotten the Maieſtie, eternitie,and power of God. Pſal.14.1. Mark.7.21.

*Argum.*2. We doe thus alſo demonſtrate it: Eua ſinned before Adam: Eua her ſinne was by ſeduction: ſhe could not be ſeduced,but by giuing eare to the ſeducer: the ſeducer lied vnto her, and made the word of God falſe: promiſing they ſhould become as Gods,by eating the forbidden fruite, whereas the Lord had ſaid, they ſhould die the death if they did eate: Satan therefore could neuer haue ſeduced them,vnleſſe they had giuen credit to him, which was their infidelitie. Our argument then is this: That,whereby they were ſeduced,was before that whereto they were ſeduced: for the cauſe is alway before the effect, the meane and inſtrument before the end: but infidelitie is that whereby they were ſeduced, in giuing credit to Satan: pride and diſobedience, that, whereunto, namely,to eate the forbidden fruite,and ſo to be like vnto God: the firſt was the obiect of their diſobedience,the other of their pride: *Ergo,*their infidelitie was firſt.

*Argum.*3. Faith is the beginning of righteouſneſſe, *Ergo,*infidelitie is the roote of ſinne: argum. Caluin.

Bellarmine. It followeth not,for the foundation of the houſe is firſt laid,but it is laſt deſtroyed: the heart is the firſt that liueth,and the laſt that dieth; *cap.5.obiect.*2.

Contr. Where an houſe is at once deſtroyed,and brought to vtter ruine,it is firſt vndermined at the foundation: ſuch was that vniuerſall ouerthrow of mankinde, which began at the very foundation,namely the decay of faith, in not beleeuing Gods word: ſo likewiſe for the other ſimilitude, in the naturall end of man,the heart is the laſt that dieth, but where the death is violent, and haſtened, the wound is firſt made in the heart,to procure a more ſpeedie diſpatch: and ſo Satan gaue firſt our parents a deadly wound in the heart and life of their ſoules,namely their faith: thus his owne examples are turned againſt him.

2. Hee is very bolde thus to contradict their owne Canons: *Clementin.lib.3.tit.16.Clemen.*5. thus decreeth in the generall Councell of Vienna: Vnde vulnus eſt ortum, prodijt & medela; vnde mors ſubijt,inde vita euenit: Where the wound began,the cure was made, where death entred, there life proceeded: But our life and cure beginneth from faith in Chriſt: *Ergo,*in his faith man was firſt maimed and wounded.

Let Auguſtine ſpeake: Eua ſerpenti credidit vt libidine corrumperetur: Eue beleeued the ſerpent to be corrupted with luſt: *Cont.Iulian.lib.6.cap.*10. The corruption of their mindes then bred luſt: which was two-fold,luſt to eate the fruite,which was a ſpice of gluttonie; luſt and deſire thereby to be made like God,which was their pride: theſe two did ariſe of the corruption of their minde. Their minde then was corrupted firſt: and that was by infidelitie.

Hereof alſo we haue further euidence: Tertullian lib.2. in Marcion. He doubteth not, Adæ delictum hæreſin,&c. to call Adams ſinne hereſie, which he committed by preferring his owne ſentence before Gods. What was this elſe but a kinde of infidelitie,not to giue credence vnto the ſentence of God?

Againe,he ſheweth how in that precept giuen to Adam, Omnia præcepta condita recognoſcimus, we acknowledge all the precepts to be contained: and ſo hee proceedeth to ſhew how they were all in that one tranſgreſſed: if he had loued God, *contra præceptũ eius non feciſſent,*they had not done againſt his precept: then they committed homicide in falling from immortalitie,theft,in eating ſecretly of the fruite; and,if they had not coueted that which was not theirs, de fructu illicito non guſtaſſent, they had not taſted of the vnlawfull fruite: But the firſt of all theſe, was the not louing of God, as they ought,which proceeded of their want of faith. Lib.de præſcript.aduerſ. Iudeos.

2. Gregorie Nazianzene ſaith, Traditi mandati homo oblitus: Man was forgetfull of the commandement deliuered: ſo alſo Ieremie the Patriarke: Adam ſi recenti memoria tenuiſſet præceptum,&c. If Adam had kept in freſh memorie the precept,—he had not been caſt into ſo great euill,&c. but his want of faith cauſed this forgetfulnes. Orat.in Theophania. Cenſur.cap 29.

3. Confeſſion of Bohemia,chap.4. Man therein tranſgreſſed the commandement of God,in ſo much as he obeyed the diuell,and thoſe lying ſpeeches of his,and gaue credit vnto them,&c. Confeſſ.of Belgia, artic.14. Giuing eare to the words and ſubtilties of the diuell he did tranſgreſſe,&c. Harm.ſect.4. pag 66. Ibid.pag.72.

4. Our Doway tranſlators affirme,that the diuell in tempting of Eue began with ſuch a queſtion, as might bring her into ſuſpition of Gods affection toward man,&c. and he got ſo much of her, that ſhe was firſt diſpleaſed with the precept,—and in reporting the puniſhment as doubtfull,&c. but Annot.in Geneſ.3.1.

all this proceeded from incredulitie, ſuſpition of God, diſcontent, doubtfulneſſe.

Likewiſe in their owne law: Clementin.lib.3.tit.16. Guſtus ſauciauit, guſtus ſanauit: The taſte woundeth, the taſte healeth, that is, the taſte of Chriſts fleſh giueth health, as the taſte of the forbidden fruite gaue the firſt wound: diſobedience then, which was the fruite of infidelitie, was the firſt tranſgreſſion, for they would neuer haue eaten of the tree, if they had beleeued the word of God, that they ſhould haue died.

The Maſter of the Sentences ſaith: In quo verbo locum dedit tentandi, cùm dixit, ne fortè moriemini: In which word the woman gaue way to the tempter, when ſhe ſaid, Leſt perhaps yee die: Attende ordinem & progreſſum humana perditionis: Conſider the order and progreſſe of mans perdition: Firſt, God ſaith, In what day ye eate thereof ye ſhall die: then the woman ſaid, Leſt ye die, laſt of all the Serpent, Ye ſhall not die: God affirmed, the woman doubted, the diuell denied: Ergo, the womans doubting, which proceeded of infidelitie, was the beginning of the tranſgreſſion.

Certaine alſo of the Schoolemen, as Bonauenture, Scotus, in 2.ſenten diſt inct.21.22. denie that pride was the firſt ſinne or offence of our firſt parents.

Laſtly, S. Ambroſe thus teſtifieth, Peccatum Adæ non longe eſt ab idololatria, præuaricauit ſe hominem putans futurum Deum, ſecutus magis quod diabolus ſuaſit, quam quod Deus iuſſit: The ſinne of Adam is not farre from idolatrie: he ſinned thinking that man might be God, following rather that which the diuell perſwaded, then that which God commanded: in Luk.13. If Adams ſinne were idolatrie, it proceeded from infidelitie.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER ADAMS ſinne were veniall or mortall.

The Papiſts.

11.Error. THe Ieſuite denieth that the ſinne of Adam was veniall: his reaſon is this, becauſe, Culpa venialis non tollit gratiam aut amicitiam Dei: Veniall faults doe not depriue men of the fauour or friendſhip of God. But God was angrie with Adam, and thruſt him out of Paradiſe: and by his tranſgreſſion he loſt his innocencie: Ergo, it was no veniall ſinne: cap.8.

The Proteſtants.

IF the Ieſuite take veniall ſinnes for thoſe, which in their owne nature are pardonable, and deſerue not death, as he doth elſewhere; in this ſenſe neither was this ſinne of Adam, nor any other, no not the leaſt ſinne, which is committed in the world, veniall: for by nature euery ſinne deſerueth death. Rom.6.23. But if by veniall ſinnes wee vnderſtand thoſe, which, howſoeuer they are in their owne nature, yet through Gods mercie are pardoned: ſo we affirme, that both this ſin of our firſt parents, and all other, which the children of God fall into, are veniall: And though for this ſinne God was offended with Adam, and temporally puniſhed him; yet was he againe, through Gods mercie, reſtored to fauour or grace. Thirdly, if by veniall ſins, wee vnderſtand the ſmaller and lighter offences; ſo wee denie alſo, that Adams ſin was veniall: for it was an huge and grieuous treſpaſſe; yet hee was by grace thereof acquited. Theſe two points then are briefly to be declared: firſt of the greatneſſe of Adams ſinne: ſecondly, of his recouerie by repentance, and his vndoubted ſaluation.

Firſt it appeareth, that the ſinne of our firſt parents was a grieuous and great offence, euen in the higheſt degree. 1. In reſpect of the partie offending: Adam receiued power if hee would, not to ſinne, therefore his ſinne was the greater. 2. His ingratitude doth augment the ſinne, in that ſo ſoone he had forgotten the vnſpeakeable benefits, beſtowed vpon him in his creation. 3. In reſpect of the commandement it ſelfe, which was very eaſie: for in ſuch abundance of all kinde of moſt pleaſant fruites, he was only forbidden to eate of one: and therefore, as Auguſtine ſaith: Tam leue preceptum ad obſeruandum, tam breue ad memoria retinendum,— tanto maiore iniuſtitia violatum eſt, quanto faciliori poſſet obſeruantia cuſtodiri: Lib.14.de ciuitat.Dei,c.12. A commandement ſo eaſie to keepe, ſo ſhort to be remembred, was with ſo much the greater vnrighteouſnes violated, as it might more eaſily haue been obſerued. 4. The fourth circumſtance, is the iſſue of this ſinne, whereby Adam did not only hurt himſelfe, but brought a miſerable ſtate vpon his poſteritie, both in the propagation of ſinne, and the puniſhment thereof. 5. Laſtly, the great puniſhment laid vpon this tranſgreſſion, ſheweth the greatneſſe thereof: for beſide the ſpirituall wretchedneſſe of the ſoule, being not onely depriued of thoſe excellent graces of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, wherein it was created, but alſo made ſubiect to euerlaſting damnation; there was a three-fold puniſhment laid vpon them in their bodies: vpon the woman, in bringing foorth with paine and trauell: vpon the man, in getting his liuing in the ſweate of his browes, that is, with paine and ſorrow: vpon them both, in returning to the duſt, and yeelding to mortalitie and corruption. Theſe circumſtances then, being weighed together, doe plainly ſet foorth the ſtate and qualitie of Adams tranſgreſſion: that it was an high offence before God.

Now concerning the ſecond point: wee doe, notwithſtanding the greatneſſe of their ſinnes, vndoubtedly hold, againſt the hereſie of the Tatianes, who blaſphemouſly affirmed that Adam was condemned, that our firſt parents were the children of Gods election. The Ieſuite alſo affirmeth the ſame: but vpon very weake ground: as that Adam and Eue did make them couerings of fig leaues, in ſtead of ſackcloth, in ſigne of repentance: alſo becauſe that Adam by certaine ancient writers is affirmed to haue beene buried in the ſame place, where Chriſt was crucified, and ſhed his blood: which is an vncertaine tradition beſide Scripture. But our arguments for the ſaluation of our firſt parents are theſe.

*Argum.*1. The firſt promiſe of the Meſſiah was made to our parents immediatly after their tranſgreſſion: The ſeed of the woman ſhall breake the ſerpents head: Ergo, they haue their intereſt and part of this promiſe: for which of all the Prophets or Patriarkes was there, to whom Chriſt was promiſed, to whom the promiſe of grace appertained not? Gen.7.3.15.

*Argum.*2. The firſt Adam was a figure of the ſecond: But it cannot bee ſhewed that euer any reprobate was ordained, or appointed of God, to be a figure of his ſonne Chriſt, the Meſſiah to come: Ergo, Adam was no reprobate. Rom.5.14.

*Argum.*3. S. Luke in ſetting downe the genealogie of our Sauiour Chriſt, ſaith, he was the ſonne of Adam, who was the ſonne of God. Thus then we reaſon: Adam was the ſonne of God: Ergo, he was no reprobate, not a childe of perdition, but an heire of ſaluation. Other arguments wee haue for Adams election, but theſe at this time, and in this place may ſuffice. Luk.3.38.

That Adams ſin was veniall, Hilarie teſtifieth: Adam confeſſum, veniæ reſeruatum: that Adam confeſſed, and was reſerued to pardon, *in Pſalm.*119.*cap.*8. and S. *Ambroſe lib.de Paradiſ.cap.*14. Veniabilis Euæ culpa, quam ſecuta ſit delicti confeſſio: Eua her fault was veniall, which the confeſſion of her ſin followed. Lib. de pœnitent.

1. Of the ſame iudgement, that Adam was ſaued are *Ireneus, lib.*3.*c.*34. *Epiphanius, cont. heręſ.*46. Claſſ.3.1.c.n. 37.

2. Likewiſe *Auguſtine, epiſt.*99. ad Euodium, and before him Tertullian, who ſaith, that Adam, exomologeſi reſtitutus in paradiſum ſuum, that Adam by confeſſion was reſtored into Paradiſe. Comment.in Luc.3.

3. Of our owne Writers, P. Martyr hereunto inclineth: and Bullinger doth collect ſo much vpon that place, Luk.3.38. which was the ſonne of God. In 2 ſentent. diſtinct.21.

4. Scotus is of opinion, that Adams ſin was veniall, and others, that follow him.

AN APPENDIX, TO THIS PART, OF THE greatneſſe of Adams ſinne.

BEllarmine hath foure poſitions of this matter. Firſt, that Adam was not properly ſeduced but *Eue, lib.*3.*de ſtat.peccat.c.*7. Secondly, that Adams ſin was greater than the womans, *cap.*9. Thirdly, that in their tranſgreſſion they loſt their faith, *cap.*6. Fourthly, that Adams ſin, was aliquo modo, in ſome reſpect the greateſt of all ſins: firſt, both becauſe hee might eaſily haue kept himſelfe from tranſgreſſion, there being but one precept giuen him: ſecondly, in reſpect of his great ingratitude, hauing receiued ſo many benefites from God: thirdly, for that Adams ſin redounded to the hurt of all his poſteritie, as no other ſin doth: *cap.*10. 12.Error. 13.Error.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, that Adam was not properly ſeduced, but Eue, wee acknowledge, the Scripture ſo affirming: Adam was not deceiued, but the woman was deceiued. 1.Tim.2.14.

Secondly, that Adams ſin in ſome reſpect was greater, as in regard of his perſon, then Eua her ſin was, we alſo grant; but ſimply it was not: ſo this point wee partly affirme, and partly denie it: ſee the appendix to the ſecond part of the fourth queſtion following.

Thirdly, that our firſt parents loſt their faith in their tranſgreſſion, wee hold it an error: for beſide that, the faith of the Saints cannot be vtterly extinct by their ſin, for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance: That Adam had not loſt all faith, appeareth: firſt, by the conſcience and ſhame of ſin, in that they hid themſelues, being afraide of Gods preſence: ſecondly, becauſe the promiſe of Chriſt was preſently vpon their fall exhibited to them, which without faith, they were not capable of. Rom.11.29.

Fourthly, firſt, the three reaſons alleaged, ſhew Adams ſin to haue been a very great and grieuous tranſgreſſion, but not the greateſt that euer was: ſecondly, the Maſter of the Sentences well anſwereth, that becauſe all mankinde is hurt by Adams ſin, it was not for that his ſin was greater, then all other, but in reſpect of Adams perſon, in whom the whole humane nature then conſiſted. Thirdly, the ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt is greater, which ſhall neuer be forgiuen: the ſinnes of the reprobate and damned are greater, being puniſhed with euerlaſting damnation. Lib.2.diſt.33.

Thomas Aquinas ſaith, that Adams ſin was not ſimply the greateſt, but in reſpect of ſome circumſtance, as, propter conditionem perſonarum & perfectionem ſtatus, becauſe of the condition of their perſons, and perfection of their ſtate. 2.2.q.163. art.3

They which hold Adam to be ſaued, conſequently affirme, that his ſin was not the greateſt, for then it ſhould not haue found pardon: ſee the queſtion next before.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, CONCERNING originall ſinne.

There are diuers points of this queſtion, which are on each ſide confeſſed: wee will firſt ſet them downe briefly, and then come to the points of difference and diſagreement betweene vs.

First we are agreed, that originall ſin is verily propagated by generation from our parents, and is a corruption ingraffed in vs by nature: not as the Pelagians did hold, that Adams tranſgreſſion was onely hurtfull to his poſteritie by imitation: for S. Paul ſaith directly; In quo omnes peccauerunt: That in Adam all haue ſinned, Rom.5.12. Secondly, wee confeſſe, that originall ſin hath not onely made the body ſubiect to death and mortalitie, which is the opinion of Iacobus Faber, and ſome others; but hath alſo polluted and defiled the ſoule of man: So the Apoſtle ſaith, that not onely death hath reigned ouer all: but all men by Adams diſobedience are made ſinners, verſ.19. and ſinne is the death of the ſoule. Thirdly, for the originall of the ſoule, we thinke it a more probable opinion, and agreeable to Scripture, that the ſoules of men ſhould bee created as they are infuſed into the bodies, conceiued, and prepared in the wombe, then that the ſoules ſhould be produced by generation from the parents, as the bodies are: for the Scripture ſeemeth to make a diuers beginning of the ſoule and the body: as the Preacher ſaith, that duſt, that is, the bodie returneth to the earth, and the ſpirit to God, that gaue it: So by the Prophet Zacharie the Lord ſaith, that he formeth the ſpirit in the midſt of man: And the Apoſtle to the Hebrewes, ſeemeth to make a flat oppoſition betweene the fathers of the bodies, and the father of the ſpirits. Yet becauſe this queſtion is not plainely determined in the Scripture, we thinke it more ſafe, being not a point of faith, to wonder at it as a great myſterie, and not raſhly to pronounce any thing, as of a common and knowne matter: And the rather, becauſe the Preacher ſaith, that no man knoweth the way of the ſpirit: And thus Auguſtine contented himſelfe; writing in theſe words of the woman in the Machabees, that ſaid to her children, I know not how you came into my wombe: Ego, inquit neſcio, ille ſcit, qui formauit, vtrum ſimul animam formarit, an iam formatis dederit: ſic ego dico de anima mea, me neſcire, quomodo venerit in corpus meum: I know not, ſaith ſhe, as if ſhe ſhould ſay, I know not, but he knoweth that formed the ſpirit, whether he framed it together with the body, or gaue it to the body framed before: So I ſay of my ſoule, I cannot tell how it came into my body.

Rom.5.12.
Rom.5.14.

Zach.12.1.
Heb.12.9.
Eccleſ.11.5.
2.Machab. 7.22.
Auguſt. de anim.origin. lib.1.cap.15.

Fourthly, this being concluded and determined, that the ſoule hath the beginning of God, and not of the parents: yet wee are able to anſwere that obiection which is made concerning originall ſin; for thus they reaſon: Sinne is an adiunct of the ſoule, not of the body: it cannot then be in the body before the ſoule come; and in the ſoule it is not, becauſe it is created of God pure and vnſpotted: vnleſſe therefore the ſoule ſhould be deriued from the parents, we cannot know where to place originall ſin.

Anſw. Originall ſin is neither proper to the body, nor to the ſoule, but it is hominis peccatum, a ſin of the whole man: who conſiſteth of body and ſoule: and it commeth not of the body alone, or of the ſoule alone, but of the coniunction of them both together: ſo that now neither the body muſt be reſpected alone, nor the ſoule alone, but as they doe ioyntly make one man: and ſo enter into one condition, and are partakers each of others woe or welfare.

How originall ſinne is deriued.

If it be further obiected, that it ſtandeth not with Gods iuſtice, to thruſt a pure ſoule into an vncleane body: We further anſwere: Firſt, that the ſoule and body are not of God reſpected as ſingle ſubſtances, but as they are ioyned together, to make one man: and therefore there is but one condition of both. Secondly, the ſoule in reſpect of Gods creation, is a pure creature, yet it continueth not in that ſtate one moment: for it is created in the midſt of the body, in an vncleane and polluted place: and forth-with being coupled to the body, beginneth to bee vncleane. S. Auguſtine alſo doth anſwere very well: Vt anima recens creata, ab omni delicto immunis, paſſiones carnis, diuerſoſque cruciatus, etiam dæmonum incurſus in paruulis ſuſtinere cogatur — hoc ſi iuſtum oſtenditur, ſic oſtendi poteſt, qua iuſtitia, in carne quoque peccati ſubeat originale peccatum: That the ſoule newly created, and void of all offence, yet ſhould endure in infants the paſſions and vexations of the fleſh, yea the inuaſion of diuels (which were ſuffered to torment children) if it may be ſhewed to be iuſt, ſo it may be ſhewed how it ſtandeth with the rule of iuſtice, that the ſoule in ſinfull fleſh ſhould be touched alſo with originall ſin.

De natur.& grat.cont.Pelagian.lib.3. cap.10.

Fifthly, it is of each ſide concluded, that originall ſin doth appertaine as well by nature to the ſeed of the faithfull, as of Infidels: for Dauid confeſſeth, who no doubt was borne of faithfull parents, that in ſinne his mother conceiued him.

Pſal.51.5.

Sixthly, that not all the ſinnes of our parents and fore-fathers, but the offence onely of Adam is deriued & propagated to poſteritie: ſo ſaith the Apoſtle, The fault came of one offence, namely Adams, to condemnation, but the gift is of many offences to iuſtification.

Rom.5.16.

Seuenthly, that originall ſin is no ſubſtance, nor hath any naturall being of it ſelfe, but is only a deprauation, defect and corruption of nature: for euery creature of God is good, Ergo, originall ſin is no ſubſtance created of God, being euill: S. Paul alſo ſaith, I know that in me dwelleth no good thing. Originall ſin then hath the ſeat and dwelling in man, it hath no being of it ſelfe.

Originall ſin no ſubſtance.
1.Tim.4.4.
Rom.7.18.

Laſtly, we doe diſtinguiſh betweene originall and actuall ſin; for Infants and young children cannot commit any actuall ſin, but yet they are guiltie of originall: the firſt is euident, Rom. 9. 11. the Apoſtle ſpeaking of Eſau and Iacob, ſaith, that they yet had done neither euill nor good: the ſecond is alſo proued, Rom. 5. 14. that children do ſin, though not after the tranſgreſſion of Adam, that is, actually. Rom 9.11. Rom.5.14.

Theſe then are the ſeuerall points, wherein wee and our aduerſaries are agreed: the difference betweene vs in this queſtion of originall ſin, is in theſe particulars following: firſt of the nature and qualitie of originall ſin. Secondly, of the beginning of originall ſin. Thirdly, whether it remaine after Baptiſme. Fourthly, whether it be hurtfull to the regenerate after Baptiſme. Fifthly, of the ſeat of concupiſcence. Sixthly, of the puniſhment of originall ſinne.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NATVRE AND definition of originall ſinne.

The Papiſts.

THe Ieſuite defineth originall ſin, to be nothing elſe, but, Priuatio ſeu carentia doni iuſtitiæ originalis, vel habitualis auerſio à Deo: A priuation or wanting of the gift of originall iuſtice: or, an habituall auerſion or turning away of the minde from God: but he denieth, that reatus culpæ, or, pœna, that the guilt of the offence of our firſt parents, or of the puniſhment, is any part of originall ſin. His reaſon is, becauſe, to be guiltie of the offence, or of the puniſhment, are the effect or ſequell of ſin, rather then any ſin it ſelfe: and therefore it is no part of originall ſin, which hath, Veram & propriam peccati rationem, The true and proper nature and condition of ſin: Bellarm. de amiſſion. grat. lib. 5. cap. 19. §. reatus culpa, &c. 14. Error.

Anſwere. In the affirmatiue part of Bellarmines definition, there is a double fault: for he ſaith that originall ſin is onely the defect or wanting of iuſtice, whereas there is in it beſide a ſupply of naturall corruption and prauitie: there is not onely a grace wanting, but an euill preſent. Secondly, he calleth it an habituall or potentiall turning aſide of the minde from God, whereas there is an actuall rebellion of nature, and deprauation of the minde, as euen now ſhall be ſhewed.

Neither is the Ieſuites reaſon good, why reatus culpæ, the guiltineſſe of the offence, that is, the ſtaine or blot of Adams ſin remaining in his poſteritie, ſhould be no part of originall ſin, becauſe it is the effect of ſin, not properly ſin it ſelfe: for he might ſo reaſon againſt originall ſin: It is the effect of ſin: Ergo, no ſin; which were no good conſequent: For it is, peccatum, & pœna peccati, both ſinne, and the puniſhment of ſin; as Auguſtine ſaith: Primo homini, quod erat pœna, natura nobis eſt: That which was a puniſhment to our firſt parents, is a naturall euill in vs: in Pſal. 37. So this naturall ſtaine or blot of ſin, in reſpect of Adam, it is a puniſhment of his tranſgreſſion laid vpon his poſteritie, in reſpect of vs it is ſinne.

The Proteſtants.

WE define originall ſin generally to be that euill, which is ingraft in our nature, wherein wee are conceiued and borne: which S. Paul calleth, peccatum inhabitans, the ſin that dwelleth in vs. This originall euill or ſin, hath two parts: for firſt thereby wee are made guiltie of the ſin and diſobedience of our firſt parents, which is made ours by propagation: as the Apoſtle ſaith, By one mans diſobedience many are made ſinners: And together with the fault or offence, the puniſhment is propagated: that is, death is gone ouer all, in as much as all haue ſinned. This is the firſt part of this naturall euill, which is denied by our aduerſaries, but confirmed as we ſee, by euident teſtimonies of Scripture. By this then, two Popiſh aſſertions of our aduerſaries are ouerthrowne: one of Albertus Pighius, and Catharinus, that Adams ſin is ours onely by imputation: which opinion Bellarmine taketh paines to confute, cap. 16. the other is maintained by the Ieſuite himſelfe, that Adams ſin is ſaid to be ours, becauſe we were then in Adams loynes when he ſinned, cap. 18. But wee affirme that wee are guiltie of the ſin of Adam, not by bare imputation, nor yet potentially onely in Adams loynes, but really, verily, and in ſome ſort actually by propagation. As by this reaſon may appeare: Looke how death, the puniſhment of Adams ſin, is deriued to his poſteritie, ſo is his ſin: but death reigneth ouer vs verily and indeede, not by imputation, or potentially onely: The firſt part is proued by the Apoſtles words: By one man ſinne entred into the world, and death by ſinne: they entred therefore both after the ſame manner. The ſecond part experience maketh good: for wee ſee that children are ſubiect to die, and are taken away by death: Ergo, Adams ſin really and indeede is transfuſed to his poſteritie. This then is the firſt part of originall ſin, reatus culpæ, & obligatio ad pœnam: Whereby we are made guiltie of the ſin of Adam, and the puniſhment. Rom.5.19. Verſ.12. Rom.5.12.

The other part is, beſide this reall communicating vnto vs, the ſin of our parents, a generall deprauation and corruption of the whole nature of man, both in his ſoule, and in his bodie: in the ſoule there is the blindneſſe of the minde, the loſſe of free will, the vnrulineſſe of the affection, the proneneſſe to vice; in the body, the concupiſcence and rebellion of the fleſh. 12. Error.

And here concerning this part of originall ſin, wee affirme and maintaine two points againſt the Ieſuite: firſt he ſaith that originall ſin is no poſitiue qualitie, or any inherent euill diſpoſition of nature: but whatſoeuer is euill in vs, it doth ſpring onely, Ex carentia iuſtitiæ originalis, non ex inſita Bellarm. cap. 15.

aliqua qualitate, from the loſſe or want of originall iuſtice, not from any inherent qualitie. Contra. But the contrarie may be ſhewed out of S. Paul, who calleth this naturall euill, peccatum inhabitans, Rom.7.20.24. Rom.7.20. & corpus mortis, a body of death, or ſinne, verſ.24. but how could it haue a being or dwelling, and be as a body, a maſſe or lumpe of ſin, if it were not an inherent qualitie, but a priuation or defect onely? So Auguſtine ſaith: Quod in membris corporis huius inobedienter mouetur, totumq́; animum in ſe deiectum conatur attrahere, &c. hoc eſt malum peccati, in quo naſcitur omnis homo: That which is in the members of our body diſorderly moued or ſtirred, and laboureth to captiuate the minde vnto it, this is that euill of ſinne, in the which euery man is borne: de peccator. merit. & remiſſ. contr. Pelag. 1.29. This ſin which he ſpeaketh of, mooueth, and is moued: wherefore it is ſomewhat that hath a being, and is capable of motion; and for this cauſe not a priuation onely, or a defect.

Secondly, the Ieſuite defineth originall ſinne: Habitualem auerſionem à Deo: An habituall forſaking, or turning aſide from God, cap.19. as though it were onely in habite, nothing in act, and did but giue a promptneſſe or inclination to euill onely.

Contra. Although we doe admit the diſtinction of originall and actuall ſinnes: for theſe are by vs done and committed, the other come into the world with vs: yet this originall and natiue ſin is neuer idle in vs but alwaies working, and ſheweth it ſelfe euen in infants: This S. Paul calleth, Rom.7.23. the law of his members rebelling againſt the law of his minde. Rebellion of nature is an actuall thing, but this is the fruite of originall ſin. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Concupiſcentia lex peccati cum paruulis naſcitur: This concupiſcence, which is the law of ſin, is euen borne with children: cont. Pelag. 2.4. And this rebellion of nature doth bewray it ſelfe in children, by thoſe vnreaſonable motions, & ſtirrings which are ſeene in them: Qui non ratione, ſed dolore interdum cohibentur: Which are not ſtayed by reaſon, but ſometime with paine and griefe, as Auguſtine ſaith: and therefore he thinketh that Chriſt in his infancie, was voyd of them: cont. Pelag. lib.2. cap.29.

Concil. Arauſican. 2. can. 1. Si quis per offenſam præuaricationis Adami, non totum ſecundum corpus & animam dicit hominem in deterius commutatum, &c. anathema ſit: If any man ſay, that by the offence of the tranſgreſſion of Adam, man is not both in bodie and ſoule changed to the worſe, let him be accurſed, &c. The nature of man therefore by ſin is actually corrupted, it is not potentially, or in habite onely: for there is, actus primus, & ſecundus, the firſt act, and the ſecond: the firſt is inward: and ſo we ſay that man is inwardly by originall ſin actually corrupted, ſin being yet as in the roote, or ſeede. The ſecond act is externall, when this bitter roote of ſin within bringeth forth euill fruite in the life.

In Pſal. 50. Auguſtine further ſaith, what is it, that he ſaith, he was conceiued in iniquitie, Niſi quia trahitur iniquitas ex Adam, etiam ipſum vinculum mortis cum ipſa iniquitate concretum eſt: but that iniquitie is drawne from Adam, yea and the bond of death, is ioyned together with iniquitie, &c. he affirmeth originall ſin to be a concrete, and exiſtent thing.

ἐν ἑαυτῷ συνιστή-σατο τὴν κακίαν. lib.4. orthod. c.21. Damaſcene ſaith, when the creature is become diſobedient vnto him that created it, it conſtituteth euill in it ſelfe: ſin then, though it be no ſubſtance, as Damaſcene affirmeth in the ſame place, yet it hath a kinde of exiſtence and conſtitution.

Harm. ſect.4. p.73. Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. artic. 2. We meane by originall ſinne — that guilt, whereby all that come into the world, are through Adams fall ſubiect to Gods wrath, — and that euery corruption of mans nature deriued from Adam: And this corruption of mans nature comprehendeth both the defect of originall iuſtice, — as alſo concupiſcence.

Paulus Burgenſis maintaineth againſt Lyranus, that originall ſin is not onely a priuation, but habitus corruptus, a corrupt habite like vnto a diſeaſe, which beſide the priuation of health hath humores male diſpoſitos, the humors ill diſpoſed.

Decret. par. 2. cauſ. 33. diſt. 3. c. 25. This Canon ſheweth, that originall ſin is not onely habituall but actuall: firſt it ſaith, Iniquitas eſt habitudo mentis iniuſta: Iniquitie is the habite of an vnrighteous minde. Againe, Peccatum eſt opus iniquitatis; iniquitas autem operatrix culpa, aut delicti: Sinne is the worke of iniquitie; iniquitie is the worker of the guilt or of the ſin, &c. Thus then originall ſin, which is here called iniquitie, is not onely in habite but in act.

And that originall ſinne is not onely a priuation of originall iuſtice, but a reall deprauation of our nature, not priuatiue onely but poſitiue, many of the learned Popiſh writers doe affirme: as Henricus quodlib. 2. qu. 11. Gregor. Arimin. in 2. diſt. 3. qu. 1. Ioann. Driedo. 1. lib. de grat. & liber. arbitrio.

Likewiſe, Hyeronim. Hangeſt. c.3. & 13. Ex Adæ delicto, &c. ſecuta eſt plaga atque iuſtitiæ originalis ablatio, & originalis culpæ incurſus: The plague or wound that followed of Adams ſin, is the ablation of originall iuſtice, and the inuaſion of originall ſin. Originall ſin then is ſomewhat elſe beſide the priuation of originall iuſtice.

But among the reſt the Maſter of the Sentences is moſt reſolute in this point: lib. 2. diſt. 30. f. Originale peccatum culpa eſt: Originall ſin is a fault. g. Fomes peccati, lex membrorum, languor naturæ, ſiue tyrannus, &c. The nouriſhment of ſin, the law of the members, the diſeaſe of nature, a very tyrant. All this ſheweth more then a priuation onely. Diſtinct. 35. l. Aliquid ponit, &c. He ſheweth that originall ſin is poſitiue, and not a priuation onely. Thus the truth wanteth not the teſtimonie of the aduerſaries thereof.

THE

THE SECOND PART, OF THE BEGINNING of originall ſinne, whether it be deriued from Adam or Eue.

The Papiſts.

THe Ieſuite thinketh that originall ſinne is onely deriued from Adam: his beſt and onely reaſon is grounded vpon S. Pauls words: By one man ſinne entred into the world, Rom.5.12. And, as in Adam all dye, ſo in Chriſt are all made aliue, 1. Cor.15.22. Ergo, the propagation of ſin is onely from Adam: Bellar.cap.13.lib.4 de ſtat.peccat. 15. Error.

Anſwere. Firſt, the word, that the Apoſtle vſeth, ἄνθρωπος, homo, both in the Latine and Greeke indifferently ſignifieth a man, or a woman. Secondly, ſinne is ſaid to haue entred by one man, that is, by Adam, becauſe the man is the chiefeſt inſtrument of generation: as the Apoſtle ſaith: The man is not of the woman, but the woman of the man. 1.Cor.11.14. And therefore in the law the males onely were circumciſed, becauſe the beginning of the carnall generation, was from them. Thirdly, in reſpect of Adams perſon, who was the more worthie and excellent: and although in diuers reſpects the womans ſinne was not inferiour to his, yet becauſe the tranſgreſſion was not perfected nor conſummate but by the conſent of Adam, it is chiefly imputed to him. Fourthly, if Adam alone brought in ſinne, the Scripture ſhould be contrary, that ſaith, The woman was firſt in the tranſgreſſion: 1.Tim.2.14. Fifthly, Auguſtine alſo giueth another anſwere: The ſinne came by two, and the Apoſtle ſaith, it entred by one: becauſe they two now made but one: They two ſhall be one fleſh. Hypognoſt. lib.2. art.2. cont.Pelag. Gen.2.24. Laſtly, the Maſter of Sentences giueth theſe reaſons why ſinne is ſaid to enter by one, and yet both ſinned: Quia per mulierem intrauerit de viro factam: Becauſe it entred by the woman made of man: Or, becauſe if man had not ſinned, humane kind had not beene corrupted, lib.2.diſtinct.22.g.

The Proteſtants.

THough wee grant that Adam was the chiefeſt in ſome reſpects, though not the firſt in the tranſgreſſion, yet was he not alone: his ſin indeed was greater than the womans, for theſe cauſes: Firſt, he was ſtronger than the woman, and more able to reſiſt the tentation. Secondly, the woman encountred with a ſtronger enemie, for ſhe was ſeduced by the Serpent, in whom the diuell ſpake: but Adam obeyed onely the voyce of his wife. Gen.3.13.17. Thirdly, becauſe the commandement was giuen by the Lord to the man, Gen.2.16. and by the man to his wife: Gen.2.16. wherefore the mans offence ſeemeth the greater in tranſgreſſing the commandement: yet although the man were the chiefe tranſgreſſor, as by theſe and other circumſtances may appeare: yet they were both authors and beginners of originall ſinne.

*Argum.*1. As ſin entred into Paradiſe, ſo is it entred into the world: for it is the ſame ſin which was in our firſt parents, and is in vs, in them actually, in vs originally: and the ſame ſin muſt haue the ſame beginning: but ſin entred into Paradiſe both by the man and woman: nay the woman was deceiued, and was firſt in the tranſgreſſion: Ergo, by them both ſin came vpon vs.

*Argum.*2. By whom death entred into the world, by them alſo ſinne entred: but death entred both by the man and woman: for being guiltie of one ſinne, they receiued one common puniſhment, Duſt thou art, and to duſt ſhalt thou returne. Eccleſiaſticus alſo ſaith (which is good Scripture againſt our aduerſaries) Through the woman we all dye: Eccleſi.25.26. Yea, ſaith the Ieſuite, per illam, through her, becauſe ſhe gaue occaſion of the tranſgreſſion, but not in illa, in her, as we are ſaid to dye in Adam. Anſ. Saint Paul vſeth both theſe phraſes, to dye in Adam, or death came in by or through Adam: Therſore there is no ſuch difference in the words: Rom.5.12,16. ſo whether we ſay, we dye in or by the woman, all is one matter.

Auguſtine laſtly anſwering an obiection of the Pelagians, whether ſinne entred by one or two, doubteth not to ſay, hauing alleaged that ſaying, Eccleſiaſtic.226. of the woman came the beginning of ſinne, Ecce factum eſt tibi ſatis, per duos homines pertranſiſſe peccatum: Behold, this may ſatisfie you that ſinne entred by two, the man and the woman. *Hypognoſt.lib.*2.

Iuſtine Martyr ſaith directly, that Eue being an incorrupt virgine, conceiuing by the word of the Serpent, (brought forth diſobedience and death. παρακοὴν καὶ θάνατον ἔτεκε. Dialog. cum Tryphon.

Confeſſ. of Scotland. From which honour and perfection man and woman did both fall, —both conſpiring againſt the Soueraigne Maieſtie of God,—by which tranſgreſſion commonly called originall ſinne, was the image of God vtterly defaced in man, &c. Artic. of the creation and of originall ſinne.

*Synod.Moguntin.cap.*5. Primorum hominum peccatum propagatione in omnes homines tranſire, ac ſecum pœnam ſuam trahere, &c. That the ſinne of the firſt men (not of the firſt man, as of one) is deriued by propagation vnto all men, and draweth the puniſhment with it, &c. Ergo, the ſinne ſpringeth from both our firſt parents.

S. Ambroſe ſaith, Adam & Eua primi illi vt generis, ita erroris parentes: Adam and Eue, the firſt parents as of our generation, ſo of our error. In Luc.13. This is agreeable to the law of nature: Cod.lib.3.tit.32. leg.7.Philipp.Partus ſequitur matrem, &c. The birth followeth the mother: as if a free man haue a childe by a bond-woman, the childe alſo ſhall be bond and not free. Sext.decret.lib.5.tit.2.c.15.Boniſac. Hæreticorum filij puniuntur ſecundum tam matris quam patris lineam: The ſonnes of heretikes are puniſhed as well after the line of generation by the mother, as by the father.

Laſtly, the Maſter of Sentences thinketh, that Eue her ſinne was the greater, lib.2.diſt.22. and that Adam was not ſeduced: then it will follow, that the womans ſinne being the greater cannot be excluded, and the mans ſinne, which was the leſſe, to bee taken onely to giue beginning to originall ſinne.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER THE SINNE OF Adam or Eue were the greater in the tranſgreſſion.

That Adams ſinne was greater.

THis queſtion is not ſo much controuerted betweene the Papiſts and Proteſtants, as betweene the ancient fathers of the Church, who haue written diuerſly of this matter. S. Ambroſe doth amplifie Adams ſinne; S. Chryſoſtome and S. Auguſtine doe ſeeme to exaggerate the tranſgreſſion of the woman: I will propound the arguments on both ſides, and then briefly determine of the truth. Firſt, S. Ambroſe thus reaſoneth againſt Adams ſinne: Inſtitut. virgin. c. 4.

1 Illam decepit ſuperior creatura, &c. A ſuperiour creature deceiued the woman, that is, an euill Angell: but a woman deceiued Adam: he had a weaker tempter.

2 If Adam could not keepe the commandement, which he heard of God, how ſhould the woman that heard it not?

3 The man is rebuked, the woman but asked the queſtion.

Gen.3.13. 4 The woman firſt confeſſed her fault, The Serpent beguiled me.

5 The woman accuſeth the Serpent, the man more vnkindly accuſeth the woman.

6 The woman in her puniſhment findeth mercie: Ex remuneratione pœnam inuenit: Shee findeth a reward in her puniſhment: though ſhe was to bring forth in ſorrow, yet by her fruit ſhe ſhall be deliuered.

But theſe reaſons may thus eaſily be anſwered: Firſt, Ambroſe himſelfe confeſſeth, that homo ſerpentis perſuaſione deceptus: That man was deceiued by the perſwaſion of the Serpent, ſerm. 7. in Pſal. 119. So then the diuell tempted the woman, and the diuell by the woman tempted Adam: Adams then was the ſtronger tentation.

2 The woman knew as well as the man, that they were not to eate of the forbidden tree, ver. 3. God hath ſaid, Ye ſhall not eate of it, &c.

3 The woman is both rebuked and firſt puniſhed.

4 The woman confeſſeth her fault, no otherwiſe than Adam did, by poſting it off to another.

5 The man ſpake but the truth, that the woman gaue him to eate, as the woman ſaith ſhe was beguiled of the Serpent.

6 The benefit of the promiſe concerning the womans ſeede redoundeth to the man, as well as to the woman: and the promiſe is firſt pronounced before her puniſhment is inflicted.

THAT THE SINNE OF THE WOMAN WAS IN it ſelfe not inferiour to Adams tranſgreſſion, but rather greater.

FIrſt, the Maſter of the Sentences thus reaſoneth: Plus videtur peccaſſe mulier, &c. The woman ſeemeth to haue ſinned more, becauſe ſhe preſumptuouſly deſired the diuine equalitie, and beleeued it would come to paſſe: but Adam did not ſo beleeue, being onely entiſed by his wife, &c. diſtinct. 22. lib. 2.

2 Mulier plus peccauit, quia grauius punita: The woman offended more, becauſe ſhe was puniſhed more: vpon the man is inflicted labour and ſorrow; vpon the woman trauaile and paine in labour: Thom. Aquin. 22. qu. 163, artic. 4.

3 Mulier in ſe, proximum, & Deum peccauit; vir in ſe tantum & Deum: The woman ſinned againſt her ſelfe, againſt God, againſt her husband: the man onely againſt God & himſelfe: de Geneſ. lib. 11. c. 42. Auguſtin.

4 Saint Ambroſe alſo vſeth this reaſon: Mulier ſciens prudenſq́, peccauit, &c. The woman ſinned willingly, and wittingly, in that after ſhe knew ſhe had ſinned, ſhe drew alſo her husband into error, de Paradiſ. cap. 6.

5 As their ſinnes were in degree and order, ſo was the puniſhment: firſt the Serpent is curſed, as being the firſt ſeducer: next the woman is chaſtiſed, as being in the ſecond degree of offence: the man is reſerued to the laſt and leaſt puniſhment.

6 But the beſt reaſon of all is grounded vpon S. Pauls words: Adam was not deceiued, but the woman was deceiued, and was found in the tranſgreſſion: Whereupon Chryſoſtome giueth this note: Heua amplius deliquerat, &c. Eue ſinned the more, in ſo much that Adams ſinne compared with it is not counted tranſgreſſion, Hom. 31. ad Rom. And S. Ambroſe thus enforceth it: Viro mulier, non mulieri vir author erroris: The woman to the man, not the man to the woman is author of error. The concluſion of the queſtion is this, that Adams ſinne in reſpect of the dignitie and excellencie of his perſon was the greater: as Auguſtine ſaith, Adam plus peccauit, quia omni bono abundauit: Adam ſinned more, becauſe hee had more excellent graces, and better ſtrength to reſiſt: But in regard of the qualitie of the

1.Tim.2.14.

De ver. & falſ. pœnit. c. 14.

the ſinne in it ſelfe, it is euident, that the ſin of the woman was tempered with a greater meaſure both of infidelitie and ambition, then Adams was. And here I will not refuſe the reſolution of Thomas Aquine, who maketh the ſinne of Adam, both ſuperiour to the ſinne of Eue, equall and inferiour: 1. Superiour, quia fuit perfectior muliere, becauſe he was perfecter then the woman. 2. Equall, quantum ad genus peccati, in reſpect of the kinde of ſin: 3. but inferiour, quantum ad ſpeciem ſuperbiæ, in reſpect of the diuers kinde and degree of pride: for in the woman there was a greater pride, becauſe ſhe beleeued the Serpent, affecting a greater perfection, but the man gaue credit to the woman: and the woman induxit ad peccandum, did firſt induce the man to ſinne. I end this matter with that concluſion of Auguſtine, in the like caſe: that as one being fallen into a pit, thus anſwered him, that asked, how hee fell in: Cogita quæſo quomodo hinc me liberes, non quomodo huc ceciderim quæras: Bethinke your ſelfe how you may deliuer me hence, aske not how I came hither, &c. So it is needleſſe for vs to be inquiſitiue of the beginning, entrance, qualitie and degree of the ſin of our parents: but let vs rather ſeeke and labour by what meanes to be deliuered from it.

2.2.q.163.artic.4.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER ORIGINALL ſinne remaine after Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine in flat words denieth, that the corruption of nature, or concupiſcence, which remaineth in the regenerate after Baptiſme, is originall ſinne, nor yet any ſinne of it ſelfe, nor yet doth make them guiltie, in whom it is found: Bellarm.lib.5. de ſtat.peccat.cap.7. The like alſo the Rhemiſts affirme, that concupiſcence remaining after Baptiſme, is not properly a ſinne, nor forbidden by commandement: it is called ſinne, becauſe it is the matter, effect, and occaſion of ſin, Rhemiſt.Rom.6. ſect.6.

16.Error.

*Argum.*1. S.Iames ſaith, That luſt when it hath conceiued, bringeth foorth ſinne, and ſinne when it is finiſhed, bringeth foorth death. The Apoſtle here calleth not luſt or concupiſcence ſinne, but ſaith it bringeth foorth ſinne: Sic Bellarm.cap.7.Rhemiſt.in hunc locum.

Iames 1.15.

*Anſw.*1. The argument followeth not, concupiſcence bringeth foorth ſin: Ergo, it is no ſin: nay, it ſhall the rather be ſinne, as one Serpent bringeth foorth another: ſo both the mother and daughter are ſinne.

2. We may better conclude out of this place, that concupiſcence is ſinne: A good tree (ſaith our Sauiour) bringeth foorth good fruite, and an euill tree, euill fruite; but concupiſcence bringeth foorth euill fruite. Euery man is tempted (ſaith the Apoſtle) when he is drawne away of his concupiſcence, &c. Ergo, concupiſcence is an euill tree.

Matth.7.17.

*Argum.*2. S.Paul ſaith, Now it is no more I that doe it, but ſinne that dwelleth in me: for I know that in me, that is, my fleſh, dwelleth no good thing. Hence it is proued, firſt that this ſin, which S.Paul ſaith, is not his, is not imputed to the Apoſtle. And againe, it is in his fleſh, therefore no ſinne, for the fleſh properly is not capable of ſin, Bellarm.ibid.

Rom.7.17,18.

Anſw. By the fleſh and the minde, Saint Paul doth not here vnderſtand the two parts, whereof man naturally conſiſteth, namely, the bodie and the ſoule: but he ſpeaketh of a man new regenerate: by the fleſh vnderſtanding whatſoeuer is carnall, either in the ſoule or bodie: by the minde or ſpirit whatſoeuer is ſpirituall and regenerate. And therefore as he is regenerate, he ſaith, the ſinne in him is not imputed: but yet it is ſinne ſtill.

*Bellarm.*obiecteth: 1. Though ſometime the fleſh be taken for the whole man, yet is it not ſo here: for that which he nameth fleſh, he calleth the bodie of death, but by the mortall bodie, both the parts of man cannot be vnderſtood: for the ſoule is not mortall.

Verſ.24.

Contra. By death here the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth not the mortalitie of the bodie, but that death which commeth by ſin both to the bodie and ſoule: as the Prophet ſaith, That ſoule that ſinneth, ſhall die. There is then a death of the ſoule, as there is of the bodie: the bodie then of death, is nothing elſe but the bodie, that is, the whole lumpe and maſſe of ſinne, which bringeth death both to bodie and ſoule.

Exech.18.18.
Rom.6.6.

*Bellarm.*2. Saint Paul heere ſpeaketh of the inner man, verſ.22. but that is the ſoule of man; as it is taken, Though our outward man periſh, yet our inward man is renewed daily: the outward man then is the bodie.

Rom.7.22.
1.Cor.4.16.

Contra. By the inward man in this place, the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth the regenerate part through the whole man, both in bodie and ſoule: which in other places he calleth the new man, and the outward man is the old man. And as here he ſaith, our outward man periſheth: ſo elſewhere our old man is crucified with him. And by the old man, hee vnderſtandeth the workes of the fleſh, not only outward, as, Lie not one to another, ſeeing you haue put off the old man, but inward: Caſt off the old man, and be renewed in the ſpirit of your minde, Epheſ.4.23.

Rom.6.6.
Coloſſ.3.9.
Epheſ.4.23.

*Bellarm.*3. Againe, Saint Paul doth in very direct words diſtinguiſh betweene the minde and the fleſh: In my minde I ſerue the law of God, in my fleſh the law of ſinne. By the minde, vnderſtanding the ſoule of man: by the fleſh, the bodie, Bellarm.

Rom.7.25.

Anſw. Saint Paul ſpeaketh indeede of a minde regenerate, not ſetting it againſt an vnregenerate bodie: for if Saint Pauls minde were regenerate, ſo alſo his bodie in ſome ſort muſt be partaker of the 1.Cor.6.20. ſame regeneration: for he himſelfe ſaith, Glorifie God in your bodies, and in your ſpirits, for they are the Lords. The regenerate are renewed both in bodie and ſoule, and in them both doe glorifie God: therefore the fleſh cannot be here taken for the bodie, ſeeing the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of himſelfe, who 1.Cor.9. no doubt was mortified in his bodie, and did beate it downe. Neither can the minde ſimply ſignifie Epheſ.4 24. the whole, or all the regenerate part: for as there is a regenerate minde: Be renewed in the ſpirit of your Coloſſ.2.18. minde, ſo there is a fleſhly mind. Wherfore the Apoſtle by the mind muſt either vnderſtand the whole regenerate part, which is to the vnregenerate part, as the ſoule to the bodie, and therefore the rege- 1.Cor.2.15. nerate man is called the ſpirituall man: or elſe by the minde regenerate which is the principall part of regeneration, incluſiuely the whole regeneration is inſinuated, a part figuratiuely being taken for the whole.

Hauing now anſwered the Ieſuites obiections, wee will ſet downe ſome of our reaſons, why this place is to be vnderſtood, as we ſaid, not of the two naturall parts of man, the bodie, and the ſoule: but that by the fleſh the Apoſtle meaneth the whole vnregenerate part: by the minde or ſpirit, the part regenerate.

By fleſh both the ſoule and bodie not regenerate is vnderſtoode.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, The euill I would not, that doe I, verſ.21. I ſerue in my fleſh the law of ſinne, verſ.25. And againe, I ſee a law in my members leading me captiue to ſinne, verſ.23. Theſe ſpeeches are not vttered of the regenerate part: if of the vnregenerate, which muſt needes bee granted, yet not of the bodie or fleſh by it ſelfe conſidered without the ſoule: for the fleſh of it ſelfe is a dead thing; how can the Apoſtle ſerue in his fleſh, or doe any thing in his fleſh, without the operation of the ſoule? And therefore by the fleſh muſt wee vnderſtand the part vnregenerate both in bodie and ſoule.

Argum. 2. The fleſh of it ſelfe without the ſoule is no fit place for ſin: but in the fleſh ſin dwelleth, as the Apoſtle ſaith: Ergo, fleſh is not here to be conſidered without the ſoule.

Argum. 3. A perfect man conſiſteth of bodie and ſoule, but that which is regenerate is called the inner man: Ergo, regeneration is both in bodie and ſoule.

Argum. 4. The fleſh is the ſame, which S. Paul calleth the bodie of death, verſ.24. The bodie of Rom.6.6. death is all one with the bodie of ſin. The bodie of ſin, or ſinfull bodie of the fleſh, is the whole cor- Coloſſ.2.11. ruption of man both in bodie and ſoule, ſo much as is put off by the ſpirituall circumciſion of Chriſt: Ergo, the fleſh in this place is the corrupt and vnregenerate part of the whole man.

Rom.7.23. Argum. 5. The Apoſtle calleth concupiſcence the law of his members, verſ.23. what members he Coloſſ.3.5. meaneth, hee ſheweth elſe-where: Mortifie your earthly members, fornication, vncleanneſſe, inordinate affection: but theſe are not members of the bodie, but of the whole corrupt maſſe of bodie and ſoule in man: Ergo. Thus much for our anſwere to Bellarmines ſecond argument.

Rom.8.1. Argum. 3. The Apoſtle ſaith, There is no condemnation to them, that are in Chriſt: But if concupiſcence remaining in thoſe that are iuſtified were ſin, then there ſhould be ſome matter of condemnation ſtill in them, contrarie to the Apoſtle, Bellarm.lib.5.cap.7.

Anſw. There is no condemnation either for concupiſcence, or any other ſin, becauſe though in it ſelfe it be worthie of damnation, yet the guilt thereof is taken away in Chriſt.

Bellarm. The guilt of ſin cannot be ſeparated from the thing, that in it ſelfe deſerueth condemna- Ezech.18.21. tion: neither can ſin be forgiuen, as long as the foundation thereof remaineth: Forgiueneſſe is remitted, if the wicked will turne away from his iniquitie. If iniquitie ſtill remaine, there is then no forgiueneſſe, ibid.

Rom.7.25. Contra. 1. The Apoſtle himſelfe had ſaid in the next words before: In my minde I ſerue the law of God, in my fleſh the law of ſinne: He is not aſhamed to confeſſe, that ſin remained in his members, yet was he one of thoſe, that are in Chriſt.

1.Iohn.1.9. 2. S. Iohn ſaith, If we ſay we haue no ſinne, we deceiue our ſelues: if we acknowledge our ſinnes, hee is faithfull to forgiue them, &c. Here the Apoſtle ſheweth, that to haue ſin, and to haue forgiueneſſe of ſin, may both ſtand together: wherefore it is falſe which he ſo boldly affirmeth, that the guilt of ſin cannot be ſeparated from the ſin it ſelfe: the guilt is taken away by forgiueneſſe in Chriſt, and yet after forgiueneſſe obtained, he is a lyar, that ſaith he hath no ſin.

3. The turning from iniquitie, which Ezechiel ſpeaketh of, is by repentance, and by ceaſing to commit the act of ſin: the ſtaine or blot of ſin is one thing, the act and worke of ſin another: though Rom.6.12. ſin raigne not in vs, that we obey the luſts thereof, yet there is ſin ſtill dwelling in vs, ſo long as we haue Rom.7.20. our habitation in theſe houſes of clay.

4. If there remaine then in the regenerate no ſinne at all; how farre are they from the opinion of the Pelagian heretikes, Anabaptiſts, Libertines, which hold that a man may attaine in this life to a ſtate of perfection? And if the regenerate haue no ſinne, what neede they ſay that petition in the Lords prayer; Forgiue vs our treſpaſſes? But I thinke they will bee aſhamed of ſo great impudencie: as Auguſtine ſaith, Neſcio vtrum quiſpiam vel hæretica prauitate reperiri poſſit. &c. I thinke no man can be found, though of a moſt hereticall proud ſpirit, which will (I ſay) not openly profeſſe, but thinke ſecretly within himſelfe, that he neede not ſay this petition, Forgiue vs our treſpaſſes, &c. cont. Creſcon.lib.2.c.28.

The Doway Doctors would thus proue concupiſcence in the regenerate not to be ſin: 1. Out of Auguſtine, becauſe in no wiſe it can be ſinne, if it bee not voluntarie. 2. It was no ſinne in Eue to bee tempted of the Serpent, nor in Adam to be tempted of Eue, but they ſinned, when they conſented to the euill ſuggeſtion. Annot. in Geneſ. c 3.1.

Contra. 1. Auguſtines definition muſt be vnderſtood of actuall ſinne, for originall in infants is not voluntarie, and ſo it would follow by this rule, that neither in the regenerate nor vnregenerate, there ſhould be any originall ſinne, becauſe it is not voluntarie: it was once voluntarie in our firſt parents, that tranſgreſſed, but now in our corrupt nature by propagation from Adam, it is become neceſſarie.

2. The caſe is not like betweene Adam and Eue, and the regenerate now, for ſinne was not yet in the world, when they were tempted, and vntill they gaue conſent, they ſinned not: but now euery one is borne with originall corruption: and ſo he hath ſinne, before he commeth to capacitie to be able to conſent: in them the ſuggeſtion was externall, but in vs it is internall, and from within vs: now euery one is tempted of his owne concupiſcence, when he is drawne away by it, and is entiſed. Iam. 1.4.

The Proteſtants.

THat concupiſcence, and the corrupt inclination of nature, euen in the children of God, is verily and properly ſinne, and in it ſelfe worthie of damnation, but that both it, and all other ſins, are remitted in Chriſt to the faithfull, and ſo not imputed: thus it is proued by the word of God.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul calleth it ſinne dwelling in him, Ergo, it is ſinne. Rom. 7.17.20.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, it is a ſinne improperly ſo called, not becauſe it is a ſinne indeede, but either the cauſe or effect of ſinne: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that this ſinne dwelleth in his fleſh: but the fleſh is not the ſeate or place of ſinne: Bellarm. lib. 5. cap. 10. reſponſ. ad obiect. 1.

Contra. 1. Let it be noted, that the Apoſtle giuing concupiſcence, at the leaſt tenne ſeuerall times the name of ſinne in this one chapter, yet ſpeaketh improperly, and muſt now learne of Bellarmine to ſpeake. 2. By the fleſh S. Paul, as before we ſhewed at large, vnderſtandeth not the bodie, but the whole part of man not renewed as well of the ſoule, as the bodie: therefore his reaſon for the place of ſinne is nothing. 3. But that concupiſcence hath the very proper nature of ſinne, it may appeare further by Saint Pauls deſcription: Firſt, hee denieth it to bee good, verſ. 18. Secondly, he ſaith it is euill, verſ. 19. Thirdly, hee ſaith hee hateth it, verſ. 15. Fourthly, it maketh him to crie out, O wretched man that I am, &c. verſ. 24. It bringeth wretchedneſſe, which is the fruite of ſinne: Ergo, it is ſinne. Verſ. 15.18. 19.24.

Bellarmine anſwereth: that it is an euill, but no ſinne.

Contra. Well then, it is an euill by the Ieſuites confeſſion, and S. Paul ſaith it is ſinne: Ergo, it is an euill that is ſinne. 2. What will he anſwere to this place: I knew not ſinne but by the law: for I had not knowne luſt, except the law had ſaid, thou ſhalt not luſt, verſ. 7. Luſt and concupiſcence is forbidden by the law: Ergo, it is verily and properly a ſinne. Verſ. 7.

Bellarmine before diſtinguiſhed of ſinne, but that not ſeruing his turne here, for hee dare not denie but that the tranſgreſſion of the law is ſin: he hunteth about for another diſtinction: Concupiſcence forbidden by the law (thou ſhalt not couet) is not originall, but actuall concupiſcence: and therefore it is not pertinent to the matter: for the one we confeſſe to be ſinne, but not the other.

Contra. Firſt, Saint Paul ſaith, that ſinne tooke occaſion by the law to worke all manner of concupiſcence, verſ. 8. Ergo, all concupiſcence, originall or actuall, is forbidden by the law. Secondly, Sinne wrought in me all manner of concupiſcence: By ſinne, ſaith the Ieſuite, he vnderſtandeth originall concupiſcence: the Apoſtle then calleth the working concupiſcence ſinne, the concupiſcence wrought he ſetteth downe by the name of concupiſcence ſtill: ſo then we reaſon thus: That is ſinne properly, which is rather ſinne, then that which no man doubteth to be ſinne: but concupiſcence wrought in vs by our aduerſaries owne confeſſion is ſinne: yet the working concupiſcence is rather ſin, becauſe the Apoſtle calleth it ſin, and not the other: Ergo, it is properly ſin. Thirdly, Bellarmine ſaith, that Voluntarius actus concupiſcendi prohibitus eſt lege: That is, the voluntarie act of concupiſcence which is forbidden by the law: ſo that inuoluntarie motions, in his iudgement, are not againſt the law. But Saint Paul ſheweth the contrarie: If I doe that which I would not, I conſent to the law, that it is good, verſ. 16. His inuoluntarie motions were againſt the law: for in obeying them againſt his will, hee did in iudgement and conſent approue the law, though in practiſe he went againſt it. Fourthly, if originall concupiſcence be euill, as the Ieſuite confeſſeth, then muſt it needs be contrarie to the law, which is good, and ſo forbidden by the law: or elſe the law ſhall not be a perfect rule of righteouſnes, and goodneſſe. Verſ. 16.

Argum. 2. The Apoſtle calleth the law of his members a law rebelling againſt the law of his minde: but whatſoeuer rebelleth, or is contrarie to the law, is ſinne.

Bellarm. 1. Euery thing that rebelleth, or is contrarie to the law, is not ſinne: for man, when he ſinneth, reſiſteth the law; and yet man is not ſinne. And againe, in that the Apoſtle calleth it a law, hee ſheweth that it is not properly ſinne, but a law or rule rather of ſinning: reſponſ. ad obiect. 6.

Contra. 1. The Ieſuites inſtance is very ridiculous, and bewraieth the nakednes of his cauſe, which he is faine to bolſter out with ſuch ſillie anſwers: Man reſiſting the law is not ſinne it ſelfe, yet is he a ſinner: the queſtion is of that, which formally is contrarie to the law. 2. That euery tranſgreſſion of the law is ſinne we ſhew it vs: Sinne onely deſerueth the eternall curſe of God: for the proper wages and

Rom.6.23. and ſtipend of ſinne is death,and nothing is found worthie of death but ſinne : but euery tranſgreſſion
Galath.3.10. of the law,falleth vnder Gods curſe : Ergo,it is ſinne. 3. Concupiſcence is the law of ſinne,therfore it is not ſinne. Anſw. Yea,but by this reaſon it is worſe then ſinne : As the law of God commanding
Rom.7.11. things holie,iuſt,and good is it ſelfe much more holie,righteous, and good ; ſo the law of ſinne preſcribing that which is euill, vniuſt, wicked,is it ſelfe more vniuſt, euill, and wicked. If then concupiſcence be not ſinne,and yet by your argument is worſe then ſinne, what haue you gained?

Rom.7.18,24. *Argum.*3. Verſ.18. To will is preſent with me,but I finde no meanes to performe that which is good:
but he that performeth not that which is good, ſinneth. Againe,verſ.24. O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliuer me, from this bodie of death? that which maketh a man wretched,and bringeth death, is ſinne : Ergo,concupiſcence working theſe things,is ſinne.

*Bellarm.*1. Wretchedneſſe in Scripture is attributed to puniſhment rather then to the fault.

2. If a man performe not that good,which he cannot doe,he is leſſe good, but not euill : as not to couet in the fleſh,is not in mans power.

3. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of euerlaſting death,but of the miſerie and mortalitie of the bodie:
*Bellarm.c.*10.reſp.ad 7.& 8.obiect.

*Contra.*1. Wretchedneſſe and miſerie is the puniſhment it ſelfe, but iſſuing out from ſinne: for [a] Pſal.32.1. 1. as the forgiuenes of ſinne maketh [a] happie,ſo ſinne maketh wretched. 2. And that which the Apoſtle would be deliuered from,made him wretched : but from concupiſcence, which he calleth the bodie of death,he deſireth to be deliuered : Ergo, his concupiſcence made him wretched, and ſo conſequently is properly ſinne.

2. It 1. is not in a mans power to doe any good thing,but all our power is of God,it would follow then vpon this anſwere,that it is no ſinne to leaue any good thing vndone : and further it is euident, [b] Ioh.16.9. that it is ſinne to leaue that vndone,which is not in our power : as Iohn, [b] The ſpirit ſhall reproue the world of ſinne, becauſe they beleeue not in me ; now to beleeue is not in mans power,but it is the [c] Ioh.6.29. worke of God,[c].

[d] Rom.8.1. 3. Saint Paul 1. ſpeaketh directly of condemnation, which is the ſecond death, [d] There is no condemnation to thoſe,which are in Chriſt. 2. Though hee ſhould ſpeake onely of outward miſerie and [e] Rom.5.12. mortalitie,they are the fruites of ſinne, [e] Death came in by ſinne, therefore concupiſcence bringing death,is ſinne.

[f] Rom.8.7. *Argum.*4. [f] Rom 8.7. The wiſedome of the fleſh is enmitie againſt God : [g] The imaginations of the [g] Geneſ.6.5. thoughts of mans heart are euill continually : Ergo, concupiſcence is ſinne.

*Bellarm.*1. Theſe places are vnderſtood of actuall, not originall ſinne. 2. And the Scripture thus deſcribeth the wicked,in whom concupiſcence remaineth and raigneth,*reſponſ.ad obiect.*9.

Contra. Firſt,theſe places cannot be otherwiſe vnderſtood, then of originall ſinne. 1. The Apoſtle oppoſeth the wiſedome of the fleſh to the wiſedome of the ſpirit,which he ſaith is life and peace, verſ.6.but the wiſdome of the ſpirit is the inward ſanctifying of the ſoule,and the renewing of the ſpirit, [h] Epheſ.4.23. [h] Ergo,the wiſedome of the fleſh,is the inward ſecret corruption of the heart. 2. It is the ſame, which verſ.2.he calleth the law of ſinne and death : as the wiſedome of the ſpirit is there called the [i] Rom.7.23. law of the ſpirit : but the law of ſinne is concupiſcence [i]. 3. Moſes alſo ſpeaketh of originall corruption, [k] Geneſ.8.21. ſaying 1. the imagination of the thoughts of the heart : but there is no actuall ſinne before the thoughts. 2. And [k] the thoughts of mans heart are euill from his youth : but the infancie is no fit [l] Matth.15.19. age for actuall ſin. 3. Our Sauiour alſo expoundeth this place, [l] Out of the heart come euill thoughts : the fountaine of euill thoughts is originall ſinne.

Secondly, 1. Moſes as he ſpeaketh in this place eſpecially of the inhabitants of the old world : ſo
Geneſ.8.21.hee deſcribeth the naturall ſtate of all men in generall ; that their thoughts are euill.
2. S.Paul alſo ſheweth this to bee the condition euen of the children of God, that they are not ſuffi-
[m] 2.Cor.3.5. cient to thinke any thing of themſelues which is good [m]. So that the ſame corrupt inclination remaineth euen in the regenerate,yet bridled and gouerned by grace. 3. That euen in the righteous and regenerate the ſinne of concupiſcence remaineth : theſe places following doe manifeſtly ſhew.

[n] Pſal.51.10. *Argum.*5. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, 1. Create in me a new heart [n] : S.Paul ſaith, 2. [o] Be renewed
[o] Epheſ.4.23. in the ſpirit of your minde, [p] Mortifie your earthly members,fornication,vncleanneſſe,&c. Ergo,the re-
[p] Coloſſ.3.3. generate had need ſtill to be renewed,and cleanſed from the old man : Ergo, the ſin of concupiſcence
[q] 1.Ioh.1.9. ſtill remaineth in the regenerate. 3. [q] If we ſay that we haue no ſinne,wee deceiue our ſelues : the Apoſtle ſaith,*If we ſay that we haue,&c.*ſhewing,that ſinne that continually remaineth,which is originall ſinne : for other ſinnes are not alwaies in the regenerate,argum.Luther.Caluin.

Bellarmine anſwereth : Firſt,to the 1.and 4.places, that they muſt be vnderſtood of actuall ſinnes, which the regenerate are daily ſubiect vnto. 2. Secondly, there are ſome reliques of originall ſinne in the regenerate,in reſpect whereof,they had need daily to be renewed. 3. Thirdly,the regenerate muſt mortifie their earthly members, that they giue not conſent thereunto,and fall into fornication, vncleanneſſe : which is all one with that, which the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere, that ſinne ſhould not [r] Rom.6.12. raigne in their mortall bodie [r], *Bellarm.c.*11.*lib.*5 *reſponſ.ad loc.*2.8.9.12.

Contra. Firſt,it is euident,that the Prophet Dauid ſpeaketh of originall ſinne. 1. He ſaid before, verſ.5. In ſinne hath my mother conceiued me : from the which he deſireth to be purged,verſ.7. 2. The creation of the heart anew is expounded by S.Paul to be the putting off of the old man, and putting on on the new, which after God is created in righteouſneſſe[f]. Now the image of God, which the Prophet prayeth to be created in him, is defaced and deformed by originall concupiſcence: therefore againſt that hee directeth his prayer. 2. Thoſe reliques of ſinne in the regenerate, are either belonging to actuall or originall ſinne; but in the ſpirit of the minde, there can bee no actuall ſinne: Ergo, it is originall: and the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, what it is to be renewed, &c. [a] To caſt off the old man which is corrupted through deceiueable luſts. What is the old man, but the originall deprauation and corruption of nature?

[a] Epheſ.4.22.

3. If the regenerate muſt mortifie their earthly members, that is, their carnall concupiſcence, then is not concupiſcence dead or extinct in them, for then it need not be mortified: and whatſoeuer is to be mortified in vs is euill and ſinfull: that whereto we muſt be dead, is ſinne[b]: neither is there feare that the ſinne of concupiſcence ſhould raigne in our mortall bodie, if it be not at all there.

[b] Rom.6.11.

4. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not only of actuall but of original ſinnes. 1. He ſaith, [c] If we ſay we haue no ſinne: and afterward verſ.10. If we ſay we haue not ſinned: there he pointeth at that ſinne, which we alwaies haue in vs, which is none other, but originall ſinne, in the other place he ſpeaketh of that ſinne which hath been committed, noting actuall ſins, wherein the regenerate continue not. 2. Hee meaneth ſuch ſins, wherein a man may be deceiued, and thinke he hath none: but none of the regenerate are ſo groſſe to thinke they haue no actuall ſin. 3. He ſpeaketh of all ſins, for the which Chriſt is our reconciliation, [d] If any man ſinne, &c. but Chriſt died, and ſo is our reconciliation by his death; not only for actuall, but originall ſinne: Ergo, Thus we ſee how friuolous and inſufficient this Diſputers anſwers are.

[c] 1.Ioh.1.10.

Laſtly, let Auguſtine ſpeake: Omnium malorum reatu caret, qui baptizatur; non omnibus malis: nunquid caret ignorantia malo? He that is baptized is cleered from the guilt of all euils or ſins, but not from the euils themſelues: for ſhall we thinke that he is void of ignorance? Againe he ſaith: Dimittuntur in baptiſmo omnia peccata, & originaliter tracta, & ignoranter vel ſcienter adiecta: All ſins are forgiuen in Baptiſme, both originall, and ſins cōmitted ignorantly or wittingly. Original ſin then is no otherwiſe taken away in Baptiſme, then other ſins are: but the guilt only of other ſins is remitted in Baptiſme, the blot or ſtaine remaineth ſtill: Ergo, originall ſin ceaſeth in reſpect of the guilt only: for neither it, nor any other ſins ſhall be imputed to thoſe, which are iuſtified in Chriſt: but yet it is a ſin ſtill, as the reſt are. Auguſtine alſo dare call it a ſin: Concupiſcentia peior eſt ignorantia: Concupiſcence is worſe then ignorance: contr. Iulian. lib.6. cap.5. And in another place, Ignorantia in ijs, qui intelligere noluerunt, peccatum eſt, in ijs qui non potuerunt pœna peccati: Ignorance in them that are able to learne and will not, is ſin; in thoſe that cannot, a puniſhment of ſin: Epiſtol.105. If ignorance then be ſin, concupiſcence, which is worſe then ignorance, is much more.

Cont. Iulian. lib.6. cap.5.

Ibid. cap.6.

I will adde one other notable ſentence out of this father: Hoc malum quod in nobis remanet, non ſubſtantia, ſed ſubſtantiæ vitium; Dei gratia nos regenerante non eſt imputandum, Dei gratia iuuante frænandum, Dei gratia commorante ſanandum: This euill, which remaineth in vs, being not a ſubſtance, but a vice of or in our ſubſtance or nature, by the grace of God regenerating vs ſhall not bee imputed, by the grace of God helping vs is bridled, by the grace of God in the end crowning or rewarding vs ſhall be healed. Firſt Auguſtine calleth here concupiſcence euen in the regenerate, malum & vitium, a vice and an euill. And what difference, I pray you, betweene vice and ſinne? Vitium, ſaith Bellarmine, eſt nomen habitus mali, peccatum operationis malæ: Vice is the name of an euill habite, ſin the name of the euill action. Vice and ſin then are coſin germanes: and if concupiſcence be a vice or a vicious habite, it is in the next doore to ſin. Againe, Auguſtine ſetteth downe a three-fold change of concupiſcence: it is not imputed, it is brideled, in the end it is healed. In the two firſt changes, though it be not imputed; yet it ceaſeth not to be ſin: but only when it is healed, that is cleane taken away, which is not in this life, but when the time of our reward commeth: Ergo, it is ſin ſtill in the regenerate, yet brideled in them, and not imputed.

Propter hoc paruuli, qui nihil in ſeipſis peccatorum committere potuerunt, adeo in peccatorum remiſſionem veraciter baptizantur, vt in eis regeneratione mundetur, quod generatione traxerunt: For this cauſe children, which haue as yet done no ſin in themſelues, are truly baptized for the remiſſion of ſins, that it may be purged by regeneration, which they tooke in their birth, &c. If originall corruption be not properly a ſin, then children, who are as yet guiltie of no other ſin, ſhould not be baptized for remiſſion of ſins.

2. Iſychius ſaith, Pollutionem non motus naturales faciunt; ſed peccatum de quo David, ecce in iniquitatibus, &c. The naturall motions doe not make pollution, but ſin, whereof David ſpeaketh, Behold I was conceiued in iniquitie, &c. Decret.par.3.diſtinct.4.c.2. In baptiſmo caro peccati euacuatur,&c. In Baptiſme the fleſh or body of ſin is euacuate; not that concupiſcence ſhould wholly be conſumed, ſed ne obſit mortuo,quæ oberat nato: but that it bee not hurtfull to him,that is dead vnto it, which was hurtfull to him in his birth. *Auguſt.*alſo thus alleageth out of Hilary,lib.2.cont.Iulian. Apoſtolis licet verbo fidei emundatis non deeſſe malitiam, per conditionem communis originis: Euen in the Apoſtles, though cleanſed with the word of faith,there was not wanting malice or euilnes by the condition of the common originall or birth: *Ergo,*by this ſentence euen in the Apoſtles, the euilnes or malice of concupiſcence by nature remained.

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER ORIGINALL ſinne be hurtfull to the regenerate after Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

17.Error.

THe Rhemiſts doe not only denie concupiſcence in the regenerate to be ſin,but they affirme alſo that the motions of the fleſh in a iuſt man,whereunto the minde conſenteth not,cannot any whit defile the operations of the ſpirit,but make them often more meritorious, for the continuall combat that he hath with them: for it is plaine that the operations of the fleſh and the ſpirit do not concurre to make one act: *Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.7.ſect.*10. So the Doway men ſay,that it is matter of exerciſe in the iuſt,and if we reſiſt,of merit.

Annot.in 3. Geneſ.1.

*Anſw.*1. The combat betweene the fleſh, cannot make the operations of the ſpirit meritorious: firſt,wee cannot merit at all by any good action wrought in vs, becauſe it is not of our ſelues,but wholly of God: Thus I liue, (ſaith the Apoſtle) not I now, but Chriſt liueth in me. Secondly,the reſiſtance of the fleſh,is ſo farre from encreaſing our reward,that it maketh our debt greater: for whoſe is the fleſh? is it not ours? Who ſhall anſwere for that which is euill done in the fleſh? ſhall not we? It is therefore our owne fault, that our fleſh is rebellious, and that wee doe not wholly yeeld to the working of the ſpirit.

Galath.2.20.

2. Though the operations of the fleſh concurre not with the ſpirit to make one act: yet the fleſh concurreth,or rather occurreth,and reſiſteth the ſpirit in euery good act: and doth hinder the works of the ſpirit from perfection,and ſo defile them.

The Proteſtants.

THe luſt or concupiſcence remaining,but not raigning in the regenerate,doth greatly hinder the good proceeding of the ſpirit in them.

*Argum.*1. Concupiſcence kept the Apoſtle from doing that good, which he deſired: *That good that I would doe I not: Ergo,*it was an hindrance to the working of the ſpirit.

Rom.7.19.

Argum 2. If concupiſcence were any way profitable to goodneſſe,it were a thing to be loued, not hated; to be deſired,not wiſhed to be taken away. But S.Paul hateth it: What I hate, that doe I, and longeth till he be rid from it: *O wretched man that I am,who ſhall deliuer me from the body of this death? Ergo,*concupiſcence is not good,nor any way helping vnto goodneſſe.

verſ.15.24.

Auguſtine thus writeth of theſe ſmaller and leſſe ſinnes: Quibus peccatis licet occidi animam non credamus,ita tamen eam veluti quibuſdam puſtulis—deformem faciunt, vt eam ad amplexum ſponſi aut vix,aut cum grandi confuſione venire permittant: By the which ſinnes, though the ſoule bee not ſlaine,yet the face is deformed,as with pimples,that they either not at all,or with great bluſhing will permit it to come to embrace her ſpouſe,&c. THE FIFTH PART, OF THE PLACE OR ſeate of concupiſcence in the regenerate.

The Papiſts.

B*ellarmine* granteth, that ſometime fleſh is taken in the Scripture for the whole man corrupted, both in bodie and ſoule: but then it is vnderſtood onely of the wicked, and not of the godly: Bellarm. de ſtat. peccat. lib.5. cap.7 reſponſ. ad argum.2. caution.6. And therefore hee expoundeth that place of S. Paul, There dwelleth not in me, that is, in my fleſh, any good thing, of the bodie: and hence would proue that concupiſcence in the regenerate is no ſinne, becauſe it is in the bodie: cap.10. reſponſ. ad argum.1. His opinion then is, that concupiſcence in them remaineth onely in their bodie. And where S. Paul ſaith, I am carnall, he thus expoundeth it: Quia nondum ſpirituale corpus habeo: Becauſe he had no ſpirituall bodie, ſuch as he ſhould haue in the reſurrection: cap.10 reſponſ. ad obiect.6. So then in his opinion, the minde onely of the regenerate is renewed, not their bodie: he reaſoneth thus.

18. Error.

Argum. S. Paul ſaith, In my minde I ſerue the law of God; in my fleſh the law of ſinne: Heere the minde regenerate or renewed, is oppoſed or ſet againſt that part which is not renewed, namely the fleſh, which ſhall be renewed in the reſurrection: Bellar. cap.7. reſponſ. ad Bezam.

Anſwere. First, that this place is to be vnderſtood of the minde regenerate, we grant: but thereby, as a principall part, the whole regenerate man is expreſſed both in bodie and ſoule: ſo where S. Paul ſaith, Be renewed in the ſpirit of your mindes [a]: he vnderſtandeth a renouation of the whole new man: and put on the new man, ſaith he: And S. Peter ſpeaking to the women, that the hid man of the heart ſhould be vncorrupt: In the ſame place exhorteth them to ſoberneſſe and modeſtie of apparell, which is outward in the [b] bodie. So in this place, by the minde, the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth the whole new or regenerate man. Secondly, how could S. Paul, ſpeaking of himſelfe, by fleſh, vnderſtand a body not regenerate: ſeeing the Apoſtle was a mortified man, and was much exerciſed in the taming and beating downe of his [c] bodie? Thirdly, the bodies of the Saints ſhall be renewed, we grant, in the reſurrection: which is called the [d] regeneration: but it followeth not, they ſhall be regenerate then from all mortalitie and corruption: Ergo, they cannot now be renewed, and ſubdued from ſin: the ſoule alſo then ſhall be cleanſed and made pure, like the Angels, yet for all this, the ſoule while it is in the bodie, is dayly renewed. As it is called the regeneration, ſo is it alſo the redemption of our [e] bodies, becauſe then our redemption in body and ſoule, ſhall be perfectly accompliſhed: notwithſtanding it is begun in this life.

The Proteſtants.

THat concupiſcence dwelling in the regenerate, remaineth both in their bodies and their ſoules, and that as their regeneration is of the whole man, both in bodie and ſoule; ſo there is ſome fleſhly part in both, reſiſting againſt the ſpirit, which in the Scripture is called fleſh: thus wee are perſwaded.

Argum.1. Saint Paul ſaith, I am carnall, ſold vnder [f] ſinne: if this ſhould be meant of Saint Pauls body: what could be ſaid more of the body of an adulterer, murtherer, glutton, or whoſe body elſe is giuen ouer to all wickedneſſe, then that it is ſolde vnder ſinne? If S. Paul then, where he ſaith, I am carnall, or, in my fleſh I ſerue the law of ſin, verſ.25. doth vnderſtand his bodie: is it not all one, as if hee had ſaid, he had giuen his members ſeruants to ſinne? to ſerue ſinne in the body, and to giue the members ſeruants to ſin, is all one: But neither S. Paul nor any other regenerate man is a ſeruant of ſin in his body: for, ſaith he, When ye were ſeruants of ſinne, yee were freed from [g] righteouſneſſe: And as ye haue giuen your members ſeruants to vncleanneſſe: hee ſpeaketh of the time before their calling: therefore S. Paul ſpeaketh not of his body.

[f] Rom.7.14.

[g] Rom.6.20.

Auguſtine writing of thoſe words of the Apoſtle, It is no more I that doe it, but ſinne that dwelleth in me, ſaith thus: Quod ille dicere non poteſt, qui aut cordis conſenſione decernit, quod concupiſcit, aut corporis miniſterio perficit: which S. Paul could not ſay, if either he had conſented in his heart, to that whereunto his concupiſcence led him, or by the miniſtery and ſeruice of his body had done it. The Apoſtle then did not giue the miniſterie or ſeruice of his body to ſinne.

Cont. Iulian. lib.2. in fine.

2. Man hath ſometime his denomination of the minde, but not of the bodie: S. Paul ſaith not, my body is carnall, but I am; and afterward, in me, that is, my fleſh. S. Pauls fleſh is himſelfe, but he himſelfe conſiſteth both of bodie and ſoule: Ergo, the fleſh is in them both: ſee more of the expoſition of this place, part.3. iſtius quaeſtion. argum.2.

Argum.2. There is a moſt euident place for this purpoſe, Gal.5.17. the fleſh luſteth againſt the ſpirit, and the ſpirit againſt the fleſh: The Apoſtle by fleſh here vnderſtandeth the corrupt part both of body and ſoule: for a little after, among the workes of the fleſh, hee nameth not onely ſinnes of the body, as adulterie, vncleanneſſe, but the ſinnes alſo of the ſoule, as hatred, emulation, hereſies, verſ.20. And all this while the Apoſtle ſpeaketh to and of the regenerate: theſe are contrarie each to other, ſo that ye cannot doe the ſame things ye would: this he writeth to the faithfull among the Galathians. So to the beleeuers among the Coloſſians, he ſaith, Mortifie your earthly members, fornication, vncleanneſſe, couetouſneſſe: which ſins are as well in the minde as the body: wherefore they are not members onely of the body, but of the olde man vnregenerate both in ſoule and body: And thus, I truſt, it appeareth, that the fleſh, euen in the regenerate, doth comprehend the corruption remaining in them, both in ſoule and body.

Galath.5.17.

Shall Auguſtine now ſpeake: Hac eſt lex membris omnium inſerta mortalium, qua repugnat legi mentis—cogitationum ſpinas cœpit & tribulos germinare: This is the law ingraft in the members of all mortall men, which rebelleth againſt the law of the mind or ſpirit: which beginneth to bring forth thornes and thiſtles of euill thoughts, de tempor. ſerm. 47. Out of theſe words I reaſon thus: There concupiſcence the law of the members is, where euill thoughts ariſe; but they are bred in the minde, not in the body: Ergo, concupiſcence is as well in the minde as in the body.

Concil. Arauſican. 2. cap. 2. Si quis dicit ſoli Adæ præuaricationem ſuam nocuiſſe, &c. nec peccatum, quod mors eſt animæ, per vnum hominem in omne genus humanum tranſiſſe, &c. If any man ſay that Adams tranſgreſſion onely hurt himſelfe, and that ſin, which is the death of the ſoule, did not through one man come vnto all mankinde, let him be accurſed. Originall ſin then is the death of the ſoule: Ergo, it hath the place in the ſoule, where it worketh.

And for further euidence. 1. Origen ſaith, Hom. 8. Leuitic. Audi Dauidem dicentem, &c. Heare Dauid ſay, I was conceiued in iniquitie, ſhewing, that Quæcunque anima ex carne naſcitur, &c. That euery ſoule is borne of the fleſh, and is polluted with iniquitie: if the ſoule then be polluted with originall ſin, then it followeth, that it hath the place and ſeate in the ſoule.

2. Cor. 4. 16.

Tertullian alſo is here a very direct witneſſe: for whereas, ſome denying the reſurrection, vrged that place of S. Paul, Though the outward man periſh, yet the inward man is renewed dayly: And thereupon affirmed, that the ſoule ſhould onely bee renewed in the reſurrection, not the bodie: hee maketh this anſwere, Nec anima per ſeipſum homo, &c. That neither the ſoule by it ſelfe is man, which is infuſed into the figment or frame called man, Nec caro ſine anima homo, &c. Neither is the fleſh man without the ſoule, which after the ſoule is exiled, is called a carcaſſe, &c. And againe, vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle, That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith, &c. Hee thus inferreth: In cordib. dicens, quæ ſubſtantiua ſunt carnis, iam & ipſum interiorem hominem carni deputauit, quem in corde conſtituit: Saying in the heart, which is a ſubſtantiall part of the fleſh, hee doth alſo aſcribe the inner man to the fleſh, ſeeing he placeth him in the heart, &c. And yet more euidently: Si ſine anima nullius eſt ſenſus, intellige ſenſum carnis ad animam eſſe referendum, carni interdum deputatum, &c. If without the ſoule there be no ſenſe of any thing, know that the ſenſe is referred to the ſoule, ſometime alſo imputed to the fleſh, becauſe it is exerciſed by the fleſh: and therefore he ſaith that ſin dwelleth in the fleſh, Quia & anima, à qua delinquentia inducitur, inquilina eſt carnis, &c. Becauſe the ſoule, whereby ſinne is brought in, is a ſoiourner of the fleſh, &c. heere directly he maketh the ſoule the originall ſeate and place of ſinne.

THE SIXTH PART, OF THE PVNISHMENT of originall ſinne.

THe puniſhment due to originall ſinne, is double, either temporall or eternall: firſt, of the eternall puniſhment, then of the temporall.

OF THE ETERNALL PVNISHMENT due to originall ſinne.

The Papiſts.

19. Error.

BEllarmine affirmeth, that Infants dying without Baptiſme in originall ſinne, are eternally puniſhed: but their puniſhment, is, damni, non ſenſus, ſine ignis ſenſibilis, Of loſſe only becauſe they are excluded from heauen, not of any ſmart or outward paine of fire: ſuch as the damned ſuffer in hell. Concerning the firſt point, whether infants not being baptized, are damned; we haue before intreated, in the twelfth Controuerſie, and the third queſtion of the neceſſitie of Baptiſme.

Yet thus much of it here, that the popiſh opinion, in holding all infants dying without Baptiſme, to bee in the ſtate of damnation; is very cruell, and moſt vncharitable: whereby it both reſtraineth Gods power, as though hee were not able to ſaue infants without the Sacrament; and obſcureth his mercie, and impugneth his iuſtice, in ſuffering ſo many, hauing not yet ſinned in act, to be loſt.

Our opinion rather is this, agreeable to Scripture, and the rule of charitie: firſt, that although all infants in themſelues, being borne with that maſſe of originall corruption, are ſubiect to damnation; yet that many of them are ſaued, both by the couenant made to their faithfull parents, both or either of them, and to their ſeede: and that both immediatly, if their next parents were beleeuers, and mediatly ſometime, when their former predeceſſors haue beleeued, though their next progenitors are Infidels, (for Gods promiſe made to them that loue him, extendeth to a thouſand generations, Exodus 20.) as alſo ſuch as are not within the couenant, ſo many as God hath ordained to life, are ſaued by the free election of grace.

Secondly, as wee denie not, but that if any infants ſo dying are damned (which God beſt knoweth) he doth it moſt iuſtly: ſo Christian charitie bindeth vs to hope and thinke the beſt of the children of beleeuing parents dying in their infancie, and to preſume that they are ſaued: ſeeing God preuenteth them, leſt that they ſhould bee ouertaken of the wickedneſſe of this life: for which cauſe Henoch is ſaid to haue been taken vp, Sapient. cap.4. Conſul. Iunium de grat. reſponſ. ad ratione 8.

But now to the ſecond point, concerning the manner of the puniſhment of infants, Bellarmine reaſoneth thus.

Argum. 1. We reade in the Apocalypſe, As much as ſhe glorified her ſelfe and liued in pleaſure, ſo much giue you vnto her torment and ſorrow: but infants neuer glorified themſelues, or liued in pleaſure; therefore they ſhall haue neither torment nor ſorrow, Bellarm. de ſtat. peccat. lib.6. cap.4. Apoc.18.7.

Anſw. Firſt, the Ieſuite abuſeth this place to ſignifie the torments of hell: it is a prophecie of the temporall deſtruction of the ſecond Babylon, which is the ſeate of Antichriſt, (and Rome by your leaue) as we haue at large proued, in the fourth Controuerſie of the Pope: therefore the plagues are numbred which ſhall fall vpon her for pride, verſ.8. In one day ſhall come vpon her, death, ſorrow, famine: but famine, I thinke, is none of the plagues in hell. But, ſecondly, if you will needs haue this place to be vnderſtood of hell torments: what haue you gained by it? Surely, by your owne confeſſion, your Babylon and confuſed Antichriſtian kingdome is appointed to that place. Secondly, the argument followeth not: they that liue in pride or pleaſure, ſhall be tormented in hell: Ergo, they that doe not liue in theſe ſinnes, ſhall not be tormented: for by this reaſon not only infants ſhall be excuſed, that are guiltie only of originall ſin, but all other ſinners, that offend not in the foreſaid ſins.

The Proteſtants.

The due and wages of originall ſinne, is eternall death, which is the puniſhment both of body and ſoule in hell: And hell in the Scriptures is alwaies taken for a place of torment: if infants then dying before Baptiſme are condemned to hell, as the Ieſuite ſaith, they cannot there bee exempted from torment.

Argum. 1. Chriſt ſhall ſay to the goates on the left hand, that is, to thoſe that are condemned; Depart from me ye curſed into euerlaſting fire, prepared for the diuell and his angels. But of this number are infants which are condemned to hell: Ergo, they ſhall ſuffer torment in euerlaſting fire. Bellarmine ſaith, that the forme of iudgement is here preſcribed whereby they onely ſhall bee iudged which were of the Church, for they are not condemned becauſe they had no faith, which is the cauſe of the condemnation of Infidels, and thoſe which are out of the Church, but for want of good works: wherefore this place appertaineth not to children, that die without Baptiſme, which were not of the Church, Bellarm. cap.5. Matth.25.41.

Contra. 1. The failing or want of good works, is cauſe of condemnation to all men, whether within the Church, or without; as S. Paul ſheweth, Know you not that the vnrighteous ſhall not inherit the kingdome of God, as fornicators, idolaters, adulterers: and he reckoneth vp other workes of the fleſh: and ſuch, ſaith he, were ſome of you, &c. he ſaith not for want of faith, but of good workes, that before they beleeued, they were in ſtate of damnation. 1.Cor.6.11.

2. But to put this matter out of doubt: the text ſaith plainly, that in the day of iudgement all nations ſhall be gathered before Chriſt: Ergo, all ſorts of men, both within and without the Church: then conſequently infants alſo are included. Matth.25.32.

Argum. 2. Apocal.20.15. Whoſoeuer was not found written in the booke of life, was caſt into the lake of fire: Ergo, infants alſo that are condemned: and if they be in the lake of fire, how are they not tormented? Apoc.20.15.

Bellarmine: They ſhall be caſt, we grant, into the lake of fire, that is, the place where fire is, but ſhall not be burnt of the fire, either becauſe they ſhall be in a higher place, or that the fire ſhall haue power only detinendi, non vrendi, to keepe them as it were in hold, but not to burne or conſume them.

Contra. Who ſeeth not what vaine and ſophiſtical ſhifts the Ieſuite vſeth to obſcure the truth? but none of them can helpe him. Firſt, the text ſaith, they ſhall be caſt into the lake of fire, not into a place neere to, or higher then the fire, where they ſhall ſee but not feele it: but they ſhall haue their part in the lake, Apoc.21.8. And againe, It is ſaid to burne with fire and brimſtone, that is, to burne moſt hotly, and moſt fiercely, that whoſoeuer is in it, muſt needs be burned and tormented therein. Secondly, the Ieſuites anſwere here is contrarie to his doctrine elſewhere: for he ſaith, that Limbus infantium, the dungeon of infants, is higher then Purgatorie: and that Purgatorie is betweene it and hell, ſo that hell fire cannot come vnto it, Bellarm.de purgator.lib.2.cap.6. If it be ſo, as he imagineth, then cannot infants any way be caſt into hell fire, ſeeing there is ſuch a great ſpace and diſtance betweene hell and their priſon: wherefore if the Scripture be true, then Bellarmine muſt be the lier.

1. Auguſtine thus anſwereth Iulian the Pelagian, who obiected, that if children bee borne in the ſtate of damnation, their parents, that are the cauſe of their birth, are no better then murtherers of their owne children: Cur non tale aliquid ipſi potius (ſaith he) hominum creatori dicitur, quàm genitoribus, nam quos praeſciuit ignibus aeternis arſuros, creare non deſinit? he might better obiect this vnto the creator of men, then to their begetters, for whom hee foreſaw ſhould burne in euerlaſting fire, he ceaſeth not daily to create, cont.Iulian.5.9. Children then, and whoſoeuer are borne and die in the ſtate of damnation, ſhall burne in euerlaſting fire. Further, he ſaith, Lacus inferni plenus eſt tenebrarum — ignis inextinguibilis — vindictae perennis: The lake of hell is full of darknes, of vnquenchable fire, of perpetuall reuenge, &c. Whoſoeuer then is condemned to hell, ſhall be perpetually reuenged in fire, which ſhall not be quenched.

The Maſter of Sentences is of opinion, that infants ſhall haue ſenſe of inward paine and of the worme of conſcience: quod Dei viſione carebunt in perpetuum; becauſe they ſhall want the ſight of God for euer: lib.2.diſt.33.e. If they haue ſenſe of inward paine, why not alſo of outward.

THE SECOND POINT OF THE TEMPORALL puniſhment of originall ſinne.

THere are many euils and plagues which are laid vpon men in their minde, and all the parts thereof, the will, vnderſtanding, and affections, and in their bodies, ſome externall calamities alſo of the life, which all are iuſt puniſhments of originall ſinne: firſt in the vnderſtanding there is great ignorance not onely in naturall things, but much more of heauenly and ſpirituall. Secondly, the fooliſhnes and fatuitie of the minde, the priuation or want of wit, which many children are borne withall, more then any beaſt in their kinde. Thirdly, the difficultie and great labour in attaining to knowledge and learning. Fourthly, the curioſitie of the minde, and the deſire that man hath to know things that are hid, and not belonging to him. Fifthly, the vanitie of the minde, which is occupied many times in fooliſh and idle thoughts: and ſuch other defects there be in the minde.

Secondly, in the will and affections: firſt, there is philantia, ſelfe-loue, whereby euery man is addicted to himſelfe. Secondly, the frowardnes of the will, in inclining to euill rather then good; chuſing vice, rather then vertue. Thirdly, the careleſneſſe of men to follow after heauenly things. Fourthly, the too great deſire and coueting of earthly things. Fifthly, the inconſtancie and mutabilitie of the will. Sixthly, diſcontentment, murmuring, and repining, no man contented with his owne eſtate. Seuenthly, the weakenes of our affections, in being ſoone prouoked to anger, enuie, reuenge. Laſtly, the concupiſcence and luſt of the affections, ſeeking to ouer-rule reaſon.

Thirdly, in the bodie theſe infirmities are remaining: firſt, naturall defects and wants: as ſome are borne blinde, ſome deafe, ſome lame, &c. Secondly, the infinite diſeaſes and ſickneſſes, which our bodies are ſubiect vnto. Thirdly, the difficult, hard and vnpleaſant meanes in recouering our health.

Fourthly, the great labour and toyle of the body for the preſeruation thereof. Fifthly, the ſhortneſſe of our life, and the mortalitie of our bodies, with the continuall feare of death imminent, and hanging ouer our heads.

Fourthly, beſide theſe, there are externall calamities without vs: firſt, by nature being the children of wrath, we are vnder the power of Sathan. Secondly, man is become by reaſon of his ſin, one an enemie, yea, as the Preacher ſaith, a beaſt, to another. Thirdly, the vnreaſonable creatures, whom man in his creation was made Lord of, are now become rebellious, and diſobedient. Fourthly, the reſt of Gods creatures, as the heauens, the elements, the earth are armed againſt vs: as when men are plagued with drowth, famine, peſtilence, mill-dewe, lightening, and ſuch like. Eccleſ.3.18.

Theſe and many more calamities ſin hath brought vs vnto, and they are iuſt puniſhments for our rebellion and diſobedience againſt God: As S. Paul ſaith, Tribulation and anguiſh, indignation and wrath, ſhall bee vpon the ſoule of euery one that doth euill. Rom.2.9. Auguſtine alſo thus writeth, after hee had ſhewed that the cauſe of theſe euils which men ſuffer, is not for the ſinnes done in another life, before the ſoule came into the bodie, as ſome Philoſophers haue thought; he inferreth thus, Quid reſtat, niſi vt cauſa iſtorum malorum ſit aut iniquitas, aut impotentia Dei, &c. It remaineth then that the cauſe of theſe euils is either Gods impotencie or iniuſtice, or that it is a puniſhment of the firſt tranſgreſſion: but becauſe God is neither vniuſt nor impotent, wee muſt needes confeſſe, that this grieuous yoke ſhould not bee layde vpon the ſonnes of Adam, but for originall ſinne: Contra. Iulian. lib. 4. *ca.*16.

And thus farre we and our aduerſaries are agreed: that, wherein we varie and diſagree, is this point, as followeth.

The Papiſts.

THere are three other effects, which we affirme to be the fruites of originall ſin, but Bellarmine denieth them. 20.Error. Firſt, the loſſe of free will to doe good, which we ſay is vtterly decayed by Adams tranſgreſſion, which Bellarmine gaine-ſayeth. Secondly, the corruption of nature, which is ſuch euen in the regenerate, that they cannot chuſe but ſin: but the Ieſuite affirmeth, that man by grace may receiue power to keepe the law. Thirdly, the third effect, as doubt, deſpaire, hatred of God and ſuch like: The two firſt the Ieſuite vtterly reiecteth, denying that there be any ſuch effects at all: and herein referreth vs to the treatiſes of free will, and iuſtification which follow: and for thoſe places we will alſo reſerue this matter. Concerning the third, he granteth, that ſuch effects there be, yet not properly cauſed by originall ſin, *Bellarm. cap.*16.

Argum. Theſe motions are in ſome that haue not originall ſin, as in diuels, and are not in other, that haue: Ergo, they are not the proper effects of originall ſin, Bellarm. ibid.

*Anſwere.*1. As it followeth not, heat and light are proper to the Sunne, therefore not to the fire: for as the Sunne hath one kinde of heat and light, ſo the fire hath another: After the ſame manner, it is no good conſequent, Lying and murther are proper to the diuell, and ſo likewiſe, deſpaire, diſtruſt, hatred of God, and the reſt: Ergo, they are not proper to men: Iohn 8.44. for though theſe ſinnes in both beare the ſame name, yet are they not of the ſame nature, neither came they of one beginning: for theſe ſins in the damned ſpirits are alwaies actuall, and in the higheſt degree ſpringing from their proud and wilfull apoſtaſie: but man was ſeduced and deceiued by Sathan, and ſo tranſgreſſed; whoſe fall was neither ſo grieuous, as the apoſtaſie of the Angels, nor his ſinnes either originall or actuall ſo hainous.

2 There are ſome proper effects of originall ſinne by the Ieſuites owne confeſſion, that are not to bee found in children: as curioſitie in the minde, whereby men are more readie to behold other mens ſinnes then their owne, *Bellarm. cap.*9. he maketh this the ninth wound of the vnderſtanding: there is alſo malitia & peruerſitas, the frowardneſſe and malice of the will, which Bellarmine maketh the fifth wound or diſeaſe in the will of man, *cap.*10. But theſe defects are not in children, becauſe as yet they want ſuch acts of the will and vnderſtanding: wherefore either theſe are not proper effects of originall ſinne, as the Ieſuite affirmeth they are, or elſe there may bee ſome fruits of this ſinne, that are not actually or preſently in children, which is moſt true, becauſe they want ſuch inſtruments and meanes, whereby thoſe effects ſhew themſelues. Therefore Bellarmines argument is not good: theſe motions of the minde, deſpayre, diſtruſt, are not in children; Ergo, they are not proper fruits of originall corruption.

The Proteſtants.

THat theſe euill motions of the minde, whereof we ſpeake, are the immediate and proper effects of originall ſinne: it may thus appeare.

*Argum.*1. Rebellion of the fleſh againſt the ſpirit, is a proper fruit of originall concupiſcence, But deſpayre, diſtruſt, murmuring and ſuch like, are nothing elſe but the rebellion of the fleſh: Ergo. Rom.7.23.

*Argum.*2. Theſe euill motions that ariſe ſuddainely in the minde without conſent of the will, doe ſpring immediately from originall ſinne: for there is no euill in man, but hath it beginning either from the corruption of our nature, or by the conſent of will, or from both: But theſe euill motions, deſpayre, diſtruſt, &c. in the regenerate haue no conſent of will: for Saint Paul ſaith, The euill which I would not, that doe I, Rom.7.19. And David did theſe things in haſte, as we heard before: Ergo, they doe ariſe immediately from originall ſinne.

Auguſtine ſaith: Operatur in nobis peccatum deſideria illicita, quibus ſi obedimus & nos operamur; ſi non obtemperamus non illud nos operamur, ſed quod in nobis habitat peccatum: Sinne worketh in vs vnlawfull deſires: which if we obey by conſenting vnto them, then doe wee alſo worke together with ſin: but if we obey them not, not we, but ſinne worketh it in vs, *in Pſalm.*118. *concion.*2. Ergo, All vnlawfull deſires and motions wrought in vs without conſent of the will, are the fruites and effects of originall ſin.

Serm. quod Deus non ſit author malorum. De oration. Dominic. 2. Baſile, as he is before alleaged, among other effects and fruites nameth, inconſiderantia, timiditas, raſhneſſe, timiditie, or fearefulneſſe. Gregorie Nyſſenus ſaith, that man by his fall libertatem—cum noxia ſeruitute peccati mutauit, changed his libertie with the hurtfull ſeruitude of ſin, &c. Imaginis etiam abolitio facta eſt, and the image (of God) was aboliſhed.

Commentar in Luc.15.c.13 4. Maldonate the Ieſuite confeſſeth, that Auguſtine, Bed. Euthym. Bernard, doe interprete the ſubſtance which the prodigall childe loſt, of free will, which Adam was depriued off by his fall.

THE THIRD CONTROVERSIE, BEING THE NINETEENTH IN THE WHOLE, OF THE REPARATION AND RESTORING of man by Chriſt.

THis Controuerſie hath foure parts: firſt, of our Predeſtination: Secondly, of our vocation, vnto the which belong the Treatiſes of grace and free-will: Thirdly, of our iuſtification, and the fourth part is of ſanctification, that is, of good workes that follow our iuſtification, as neceſſarie fruites thereof.

THE FIRST PART, OF PREdeſtination.

THis part is diuided into foure queſtions: firſt, what predeſtination is. Secondly, who they are which be predeſtinate. Thirdly, the cauſe of predeſtination. Fourthly, of the certaintie, and aſſurance thereof.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE DEfinition of predeſtination.

The Papiſts.

21. Error. BEllarmine thus defineth predeſtination: Prædeſtinatio eſt prouidentia Dei, &c. Predeſtination is a certaine prouidence, or fore-knowledge of God, whereby certaine men elected, are by infallible meanes and wayes directed vnto life eternall, *Bellarm. lib.*2 *de grat. & liber. arb. cap.*9.

In this definition wee finde a double fault: firſt, becauſe Bellarmine defineth predeſtination to be fore-knowledge or preſcience. Secondly, for that he affirmeth it to be onely of the elect. But of this latter fault more ſhall be ſaid in the next part. As for the firſt, Bellarmine maketh predeſtination to be a ſpecies, a kinde or part of Gods prouidence: and further ſaith, that predeſtination partly belongeth to the will of God, partly to his knowledge and vnderſtanding, but moſt principally to his knowledge: Vbi (ſaith he) prædeſtinationis ratio & eſſentia conſiſtit: Wherein conſiſteth the very eſſence of predeſtination. He reaſoneth thus.

Rom.11.1. 2.Timoth.2.19 Argum. S. Paul ſaith, God hath not caſt away his people whom he knew before: The foundation of God remaineth ſure, the Lord knoweth who are his. Bellarm. from hence he concludeth, that predeſtination is a fore-ſight or fore-knowledge of God, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, theſe places doe euidently proue, that God fore-ſaw in his diuine prouidence thoſe that ſhould be ſaued: and that his preſcience is certaine and infallible; but that predeſtination is the verie preſcience and fore-knowledge of God, it is not hence proued. Secondly, Saint Paul himſelfe doth diſtinguiſh them in the place alleaged, The foundation of God remaineth ſure (ſaith he) and hath this ſeale; the Lord knoweth, &c. Hee calleth predeſtination, the foundation, and preſcience the ſeale thereof: the foundation then, and the ſeale are not the ſame. Thirdly, wee anſwere with Auguſtine: Aliquando prædeſtinatio ſignificatur nomine præſcientiæ, vt Rom. 11. non repulit Deus plebem ſuam, quam præſcivit: Sometime predeſtination is ſignified by the word preſcience, as in the 11. to the Romanes, God hath not reiected his people whom he knew before, de bon. perſeuerant. lib. 2. cap. 18. In this place therefore preſcience may be taken for predeſtination.

The Proteſtants.

THat predeſtination is alwaies ioyned with the prouidence and preſcience of God, we grant: but that predeſtination properly iſſueth out from Gods will, being an act and effect thereof, and not of his knowledge, it may partly appeare by the name: for prædeſtinare, προορίζειν, doth properly ſignifie, to define and determine, which requireth rather the conſent of the will, then light of vnderſtanding. We therfore define it thus: Prædeſtinatio eſt decretum Dei, &c. Predeſtination is the decree of God, touching the ſaluation and condemnation of men: our arguments are theſe.

Argum. 1. If the preſcience of God giue the eſſence, nature and kinde vnto predeſtination, as the Ieſuite ſaith, then is it the cauſe thereof, and the other is the effect; but Gods preſcience is not the cauſe of predeſtination: for he alſo confeſſeth, Homines gratis à Deo electos, ante omnem operum præuiſionem: That men are freely elected of God, before any foreſight of their works, cap. 10. Ergo, Gods preſcience giueth not the eſſence and nature of predeſtination. And here by the way, note the Ieſuits contrarie and repugnant ſayings; election, he ſaith, goeth before preſcience, and yet Gods knowledge is the cauſe of election: but how can the effect goe before the cauſe?

Argum. 2. Saint Paul ſpeaketh euidently, that predeſtination proceedeth of Gods good will and pleaſure, which is the only cauſe thereof: He hath predeſtinate vs according to the good pleaſure of his will, Epheſ. 1. 5. and according to his good pleaſure, which hee had purpoſed in him, verſ. 9. predeſtinate according to the purpoſe of him, which worketh all things, according to the counſell of his own will, verſ. 11. Ephеſ. 1. 5, 9, 11
Theſe three words, beneplacitū voluntatis, propoſitum voluntatis, conſilium voluntatis, the good pleaſure of his will, the purpoſe of his will, the counſell of his will, haue no relation at all, to the knowledge or vnderſtanding of God, but onely to his will. Saint Peter alſo putteth a manifeſt difference betweene preſcience, and predeſtination, when he ſaith, that Chriſt was deliuered vp according to the determinate counſell and foreknowledge of God: the decree or determination is ioyned to his counſell or will, not to his foreknowledge. Act. 2. 23.

1. Auguſtine, ſpeaking of the free election of the children of God, ſaith thus: Sed diuinæ voluntatis eſt hoc donum, non humanæ fragilitatis meritum: — Audi, qui omnia operatur ſecundum conſilium voluntatis ſuæ: But this is the gift or grant of the diuine will, not a merit or deſert of humane frailtie; hearken what the Apoſtle ſaith, which worketh all things according to the counſell of his owne will, &c. He maketh election a free worke of Gods will. Hypognoſt. lib. 6, articul. 6.

2. Theodoret ſaith, Cum nos ab initio prædeſtinaſſet, ad hanc vitam ſorte elegit, qui quæcunque vult, facit: When he had predeſtinate vs from the beginning, he elected vs vnto this life, who doth whatſoeuer he will, &c. Gods will then is the cauſe of predeſtination. In 1. cap. ad Galatas.

3. Latter confeſſion of Heluetia, cap. 10. God hath from the beginning freely and of his meere grace, without any reſpect of men, predeſtinate or elected the Saints, &c. Gods preſcience then and foreknowledge of man induced not him to elect man, but his free and gracious will. Harm. ſect. 3. pag. 84.

4. Thomas Aquin directly maintaineth this poſition, that predeſtination nihil ponit in prædeſtinato, doth ſuppoſe nothing in the predeſtinate, &c. but if it iſſued foorth of Gods preſcience rather then his will, by preſcience ſomewhat in the creature ſhould be foreſeene, for the which it ſhould be predeſtinate. 1. p. qu. 23. artic. 2.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THOSE WHICH are predeſtinate, whether ſome are ordained to damnation, as other are elected vnto life.

COncerning this point, there are foure opinions: Some thought that all men in the end ſhould be ſaued; yea the diuels and all: which error is attributed to Origen: whom with the reſt of this opinion, Auguſtine confuteth at large, lib. 21. de ciuitate Dei, cap. 17. ad 24. Some other held, that God ordained grace and mercie for all, and was not any way the cauſe of the reprobation of men: This was the hereſie of the Pelagians, euery where confuted by Auguſtine in his learned workes written againſt the Pelagians: and I am afraid it hath too many fauourites and friends in theſe daies. The third opinion is of the Papiſts, who denie not, but that reprobation doth proceed in ſome reſpect from the will, and decree of God, but that it is not ſo properly Gods act, as election is. The fourth opinion is ours, that predeſtination is both of the elect to ſaluation, and of the reprobate to damnation. Againſt two of theſe opinions, we will deale briefly at this time: firſt, againſt the Papiſts, then againſt the error of the Pelagians.

THE FIRST PART, OF REPROBATION.

The Papiſts.

22.Error. GOd intendeth no mans damnation,ſay they,directly,or abſolutely,but in reſpect of their demerits,Rhemiſt.annot. Rom.9.ſect.9. And againe,God is not the cauſe of any mans reprobation or damnation,ibid.ſect.1. Of the ſame opinion is Bellarmine,who,although he ſimply denieth not reprobation,as afterward wee ſhall ſee: yet maketh God farre otherwiſe the author of it,then of election: yea he excludeth it out of the definition of predeſtination; which hee defineth to be the prouidence of God onely to direct thoſe that are elected,to eternall life, lib.2.de grat.cap.9. Their arguments are theſe.

1.Tim.2.4. 2.Pet.3.9. Ezech.18.23. *Argum.1. God would haue all men to be ſaued, and come to the knowledge of the truth. God would haue no man to periſh, but would haue all men to come to repentance. God will not the death of a ſinner: Ergo,*the death and damnation of men,ſtandeth not properly with the will of God.

Anſw. 1. God is ſaid not to will or deſire the death of a ſinner: not becauſe in his ſecret counſell, he hath not decreed it at all,but becauſe,God in their condemnation hath reſpect to his owne glorie, which is the chiefe and principall end both of election and reprobation: And God is ſo tender of his owne honour and glorie,that in reſpect of it,he is ſaid not to will or deſire other things: hee willeth not death or damnation, that is, not as the chiefe end of his will or purpoſe, but intendeth a further thing, then their damnation, that is, the ſetting foorth of his owne glorie: as the Apoſtle ſaith, that God hath ſet vp Pharaoh to ſhew his power in him: So Auguſtine ſaith, Ita plenitudo diuinæ præſcientiæ in alios manante iuſtitia,in alios gratia profluente completa eſt: So the fulnes of Gods preſcience is accompliſhed,his iuſtice being ſhewed vpon ſome,and vpon others,grace and mercie: de Prædeſt.& gratia,cap.13.

2. God is ſaid not to will the death of any,becauſe no man is to impute his damnation vnto God, becauſe the wicked are iuſtly puniſhed for their ſins,without any reſpect had to the ſecret counſell of God: Gods eternall decree then,is not the next and immediate cauſe of damnation,but the ſinnes of men: therefore he may truly ſay,God will not the death of a ſinner, becauſe he no waies willeth ſin, which is the cauſe of their death. But as Auguſtine ſaith,Prædeſtinauit ſolum iudicium ſuum, quo vnicuique prout geſſit,retributurus eſt: He hath predeſtinate onely his iudgements,to giue to euery man as he hath done: articul.falſ.impoſit.10.

Enchirid. cap.103. 3. Whereas Saint Paul ſaith, God would haue all men ſaued,&c. Auguſtine expoundeth it thus: Omnes homines,omne genus hominum intelligamus: By all men,wee may vnderſtand all ſorts of men, not euery particular man. And this is very agreeable to the Apoſtles meaning, which a little before exhorted men to pray for Kings and Princes: and then hee giueth this reaſon,becauſe God would haue all men to be ſaued,that is,high and low,Kings and people,men of all ſorts.

4. We muſt vnderſtand theſe and the like places,not of the ſecret,but of the reuealed will of God, who offereth vnto all the outward meanes of ſaluation: there is,*voluntas medij vel ſigni,*and,voluntas finis: the will of God concerning the end, and concerning the meanes leading to the end: So although God haue willed and determined euery mans end, ſome one way,ſome another,yet the externall meanes of ſaluation are denied to none. And that this is the Apoſtles meaning,that which
2.Pet.3.9. followeth doth declare: *God would haue all men come to the knowledge of the truth,*verſ.4.and to come to repentance. Thus alſo Auguſtine expoundeth theſe words: Remota hac diſcretione,quam diuina ſcientia intra ſecretum iuſtitiæ ſuæ continet, ſynceriſſimè credendum eſt,&c. Setting apart the conſideration of the ſecret counſell of God,it is ſincerely to bee beleeued, that God would haue all men to be ſaued: that is,offering to all the outward meanes of ſaluation,as his word and Sacraments: cont.articul.falſ.impoſit.articul.2. To this purpoſe Saint Ambroſe lib.2.de vocat.Gent.c.1. Quamuis omnes dominus ſaluos fieri,&c. Although God would haue all men ſaued,and come to the knowledge of the truth: non tamen ſibi diſpenſationum ſuarum abſtulit poteſtatem,&c. yet hath hee not taken away the power of his diſpenſation, that the order of his counſell ſhould runne otherwiſe,then he in his ſecret iudgement had appointed.

5. Saint Ambroſe alſo ſheweth another way, how this is to bee expounded,lib.1.de vocat.Gent. cap.3. Habet populus dei, plenitudinem ſuam,&c. The people of God haue a certaine plenitude or fulnes,and in the elect there is a ſpeciall kinde of vniuerſalitie: like as when the Scripture ſpeaketh of the wicked,Ea,quæ de parte quadam dicuntur,&c. Thoſe things, which are ſpoken but of a part, doe ſeeme to appertaine to all: as Philip.2. All ſeeke their owne,&c. Videmus ergo pro parte hominum omnes homines nominari: We ſee then that for a part of men,all men are named. After the ſame manner may the Apoſtle be vnderſtood,when he ſaith,God would haue all men to be ſaued.

6. Saint Ambroſe alſo hath another expoſition of this place: Vult Deus omnes ſaluari: ſed ſi accedunt ad eum,&c. God would haue all to be ſaued; but if they come vnto him: non ſic vult, vt & nolentes ſaluentur: he ſo would it not,as that they againſt their wils ſhould be ſaued,&c. but all men are not willing to be ſaued: *Ergo,*God would not ſuch to be ſaued: Ambroſ.in 1.Tim.2. Among ſo many expoſitions of this place,there is none of them,that enforceth theſe words to ſignifie a generall decree and purpoſe in God to ſaue all.

The Proteſtants.

GOd as he hath made all men, ſo hath he freely diſpoſed of their end, according to the counſell of his owne will, ſelecting ſome to be veſſels of honour, and reiecting others to be veſſels of wrath: And this very well ſtandeth both with the mercie and iuſtice of God, to ſaue ſome and reiect others: for he might iuſtly condemne all to eternall death. So Auguſtine ſaith, Nemo iuſtitia Deum arguat, ſi vni indebitam donauerit gratiam, alteri reddiderit debitam pœnam: Let no man ſeeme to challenge Gods iuſtice, if he giue vnto one grace vndeſerued, and to another puniſhment due and deſerued: *De Prædeſt.& grat.cap.*4.

Further, wee ſay with Auguſtine: Præſcientiam non cogere hominem vt talis ſit, qualem præſcinit Deus, &c. That Gods preſcience compelleth not a man to be ſuch, as he foreſaw him to be: *De Prædeſtinat.& grat.cap.*15. And againe, Ab illo eſſe quod ſtatur, non ab illo eſſe quod ruitur: Of him it is that we ſtand, of him it is not that we fall: *artic.falſ.impoſ.*15. Wee ſo then affirme the reprobation of the wicked, as that we thinke none ordained to condemnation, which they haue not iuſtly deſerued by their ſin, and that God only hath decreed and willed their puniſhment, but not their ſin, that bringeth them vnto it.

*Argum.*1. God hath made the wicked for the day of euill. They were before of old ordained to this condemnation. The Prophet Iſai ſaith, Topheth, that is, hell is prepared of old. And euerlaſting fire is ſaid to be prepared for the diuell and his angels. If hell were prepared of old, then they were alſo prepared of old, that ſhould be tormented in hell: for hell was not made for nought.

Prou.16.4.
Iude 4.
Iſai.30.33.
Matth.25.41.

*Argum.*2. But of all other places this is moſt euident in the ninth to the Romanes: out of the which chapter, for this matter we gather diuers arguments: Firſt, the Apoſtle alleageth the example of Eſau, and Iacob, I haue loued Iacob, and hated Eſau: which was ſpoken before they were borne: Ergo, God in his eternall decree electeth ſome, and reiecteth others. It cannot be anſwered here, that this is only to be vnderſtood of the temporall reiection of Eſau, and election of Iacob, concerning the promiſed land: for the Apoſtle throughout this chapter reaſoneth of Gods eternall election, and reprobation, as it appeareth by the example of Pharaoh: yea, and this Bellarmine liberally confeſſeth: that the example of Eſau and Iacob is to bee applied vnto eternall election, and reprobation, *lib.*2. *de grat.cap.*10. But he hath another euaſion, making a diſtinction betweene negatiue and poſitiue damnation, which ſerueth not his turne here, as afterward ſhall be ſeene.

We haue Auguſtines iudgement alſo of this matter: Et reprobi in Eſau demonſtrantur Iudæi, & prædeſtinati in Iacob apparent Chriſtiani: The reprobate Iewes are ſhewed in Eſau, and the elect Chriſtians appeare in Iacob. He vnderſtandeth this example of election, and reprobation.

De ſymbol. lib.2.cap.2. tom.9.

Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, that as the veſſels of mercie are prepared to glorie, ſo the veſſels of wrath are prepared to deſtruction: And that God hath as great right and power ouer his creature, as the Potter hath ouer the clay, to make of it a veſſell of honour or diſhonour.

Thirdly, verſ.17. The Lord ſet vp Pharaoh, to ſhew his power in him, Prou.16. The Lord hath made all things for himſelfe, and the wicked againſt the euill day: The damnation of the wicked then, doth as well ſet forth the glorie of God, as the ſaluation of the elect: for God hath done both for his owne ſake: Ergo, both are the Lords proper acts, the one, as well as the other.

Prou.16.4.

1. Auguſtine ſaith, Filius perditionis dictus eſt traditor Chriſti, perditioni prædeſtinatus: The betraier of Christ is called the childe of perdition, becauſe he was predeſtinate or ordained to perdition: *Tract.in Iohan.*107.

Againe, he ſaith, Tenenda eſt inconcuſſe hæc regula,—impios in peccatis antequam eſſent in mundo præſcitos eſſe tantum, non prædeſtinatos, pœnam autem iis prædeſtinatam, &c. This rule we muſt vndoubtedly hold, that the wicked were onely foreſeene or foreknowne of God in their ſinnes, not predeſtinate, but their puniſhment was predeſtinate, *Hypagnoſt.articul.*6. So then God ordaineth not men to ſinne, but he ordaineth men to puniſhment for their ſinnes: yet are not the wicked to complaine, for they are iuſtly forſaken of God, becauſe of their rebellion, and diſobedience. Neither are the godlie and faithfull by this doctrine to be diſcouraged: foraſmuch as God hath not denied them the grace of his ſpirit, but hath giuen them faith and repentance, and ſtrength to walke before him, in his feare: all which are pledges vnto them of their free election, and ſaluation in Chriſt.

Tertullian ſaith: Prælatio alterius ſine contumelia alterius non poteſt procedere, quia nec electio ſine reprobatione: The preferring of one cannot bee without the reproch of another, neither is election without reprobation, &c. He ſpeaketh of the election and reprobation among men: but the ſame rule holdeth in all elections and reiections, the one is not without the other.

2. Iſychius: Omnes dicit vocari quidem a Chriſto, ſed non omnes iuſtificari: quia multi vocati, pauci electi: he ſaith, that all are called of Chriſt, but all are not iuſtified, becauſe many are called, few elected, &c. If ſome only are elected, conſequently the reſt are reiected.

Lib 6.in 23. cap.Leuit.

3. Latter confeſſion of Heluetia, chap.10. In Chriſt, and for Chriſt, did God chuſe vs, and they who now are engraft into Chriſt by faith, the ſame alſo were elected: but ſuch as are without Chriſt, were reiected.

Harm.ſect.5. pag.84.

4. We want not the teſtimonie of ſome of their owne writers for the reprobation of the wicked: *Magiſter ſent.lib.*3.*diſtinct.*4.e. Dicuntur filij gehennæ, non ex illa nati, ſed in illam præparati: They are called the children of hell, not becauſe they are borne of hell, but ordained, or prepared vnto it.

Lib.3.diſt.32.liter.e. De reprobis, qui præparati ſunt non ad vitam, ſed mortem, quæritur,&c. It may be aſked concerning the reprobate,which are not prepared to life,but vnto death,whether it may bee granted,that God did loue them from the beginning: we ſay then, that it muſt be granted onely of the elect,that God loued them from the beginning,&c.but of the not elected it muſt be ſimply granted,that God did hate,that is,reprobate them,&c. A more euident teſtimonie we cannot haue.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE VNIuerſalitie of the grace of God.

23.Error.

In epiſt.Proſper ad Auguſt.

IT was the error of the Pelagians, as Auguſtine noteth, that the grace of God was not onely in reſpect of the outward meanes,generally offered to all,but in Gods eternall decree and purpoſe ordained for all,if they would receiue it: for thus they affirmed: Quantum ad Deum, omnibus paratam eſſe vitam æternam,quia vult omnes ſaluos fieri: quantum ad arbitrij libertatem attinet,ab iis eam apprehendi,qui ſponte Deo crediderunt: On Gods behalfe, they ſay,life eternall is prepared for all, becauſe God will haue all men ſaued: and as for the freedome of the will, ſo many apprehend or lay hold of eternall life,as of their owne accord doe beleeue in God. It followeth vpon this opinion,that Chriſt alſo died in the purpoſe and intention of God,for all men generally, and not for beleeuers only,ſuch as are ordained vnto life.

Bellarmine confuteth this error, and would make vs beleeue that he himſelfe is farre from it: yet elſewhere he ſeemeth to affirme it in theſe words: Si ſanguis Chriſti dandus eſſet omnibus pro quibus fuſus eſt,dandus eſſet omnibus omnino hominibus,etiam Turcis,Iudæis,Ethnicis, quibuſcunque impijs: ſanguis enim ille pro omnibus fuſus eſt: If the blood of Chriſt ſhould be giuen to all, for whom it was ſhed,it ſhould be giuen generally to all men,Turks,Iewes,Ethnikes,to all wicked men: for his blood was ſhed for all, Bellarm. de Euchariſt. lib.4. cap.25. This ſhould ſeeme alſo to haue been the iudgement of the elder Papiſts: for Iohn Careleſſe Martyr was charged by a popiſh Doctor, that he ſhould hold,that Chriſt did not die effectually for all men, Fox pag.1920. It ſhould appeare then, that hee himſelfe thought that the benefit of Chriſts death was ordained and purpoſed for all: and therefore that he died effectually for all.

There be at this day three ſundrie opinions maintained by ſome concerning the vniuerſalitie of grace: The firſt is,Chriſtum ſine vllo diſcrimine pro omnium hominum peccatis eſſe mortuum, & omnia hominum peccata non modo ſufficienter verum etiam efficienter expiaſſe,&c. That Chriſt hath died for all men,without any difference,and hath actually purged all mens ſinnes,not only ſufficiently,but effectually: abſque vllo fidei vel incredulitatis reſpectu, without any reſpect to their faith, or incredulitie: Huberus theſ.19. Againe, Omnes reprobos,& electos æque per Chriſtum ſaluatos ſiue credant, ſiue non: That the reprobate as well as the elect are ſaued by Chriſt,whether they beleeue or not, Huber, theſ.270. That Chriſt died as well for the damned and reprobate,as for Peter and Paul: Iacobus Andre.colloq. Mompelgartenſ.p.548. yet are not the reprobate ſaued,becauſe they deſpiſe this grace offered,and ſo are depriued of this reconciliation purchaſed by Chriſt, Huber.theſ.245.

The ſecond opinion is, Omnes & ſingulos homines beneficio & gratia vniuerſali ſummi patris eſſe per Chriſtum ſeruatos: That all men,and euery one by the vniuerſall grace of God the Father in Chriſt, are ſaued: yet not without reſpect had to their faith; but they ſay further, Fidem in Deum naturalem eſſe,omnibus inditam & innatam: That this faith in God is naturally giuen vnto all: ſic Puckſius præfation. So that in effect they affirme the ſame thing,which the other doe,that by nature all men are actually ſaued by Chriſts death,if they doe not afterward wilfully reiect this grace.

The third opinion is: Quod ſit Dei propoſitum ſaluare omnes, & elegerit eos & prædeſtinarit vitæ æternæ,ſeruata tamen conditione: That it is Gods purpoſe,that all men ſhould be ſaued, and that hee hath elected and predeſtinate them to eternall life, the condition kept, that is,if they beleeue: Hemming.de gratia vniuerſal.p.20. So alſo Suecanus: Deus vniuerſaliter omnium in Chriſto miſertus aſſumpſit humanum genus in reconciliationis fœdus: That God hauing mercie vpon all, hath receiued whole mankinde into the couenant of reconciliation, *de Prædeſtinat.*480. That is, as many as beleeue: which gift to beleeue they acknowledge to be of God,and the ſame not denied to any, but offered generally to all; and that it is in mans power to giue aſſent vnto grace offered,and to beleeue:

Voluntatem à Deo doctam, & motam à ſpiritu ſancto poſſe ſe applicare ad gratiam,aſſentiri Euangelio, credere: That the will being taught of God,and ſomewhat ſtirred of the ſpirit, may applie it ſelfe to grace,giue aſſent to the Goſpell,beleeue,&c. Hemming.de libero arbit.

Theſe three opinions, though in ſome circumſtances differing from themſelues,as the firſt holdeth all men actually by nature to be ſaued by Chriſt, without any reſpect to their faith; the ſecond by nature, not excluding faith; the third by grace and faith, which they ſay is offered of God and apprehended of mans free will: yet all theſe herein agree, that Chriſt was not giuen of his father to dye for a certaine and definite number of the elect, which they denie, but vniuerſally for all men in the world.

Ioh.3.16.

The firſt opinion, applying Chriſts death to all, as well vnbeleeuers as beleeuers, doth manifeſtly impugne the Scripture,which ſaith, God ſo loued the world,that he hath giuen his only begotten ſonne, &c.that whoſoeuer beleeueth in him ſhould not periſh,&c.

The ſecond, making faith a naturall gift, is contrary alſo to the word: for that which is naturall is common to all: but all men haue not faith. 2.Theſſ.3.2.

The third, aſcribing power to mans free will to receiue and apprehend grace offered, gainſaieth the truth which ſaith, Without me you can doe nothing. Ioh.15.5.

But leauing the ſeuerall abſurdities of theſe opinions, we will deale againſt them all in that wherein they agree, concerning the vniuerſalitie of grace: and eſpecially againſt the latter, which ſeemeth to be much approued euen of ſome of our owne countrey men, and alreadie hath gotten ſome patrones and defenders in our Church. Wherefore this matter being waightie in it ſelfe, and dangerous for feare of further infection, wee will not lightly paſſe ouer this place, but take ſome paines, firſt to anſwere the arguments vſed by the aduerſe part, and then bring foorth our owne.

Their arguments are of two ſorts, either drawne directly from ſome places of Scripture, or from ſome ſhew and apparance of reaſon: of the firſt in the firſt place.

*Argum.*1. Firſt, they obiect ſuch places of Scripture, where it is directly affirmed, that Chriſt died for all men.

1. God will that all men ſhall be ſaued. Chriſt gaue himſelfe a ranſome for all men: Huber.theſ.70. Puck.ration.83. 1.Tim.2.4,5.
2. Chriſt died for all: Huber.theſ.87. Pucks.ration.79. 2.Cor.5.15.
3. The Lord would haue no man periſh, but would haue all men come to repentance: Pucks.ration.90. Huber.theſ.93. 2.Pet.3.9.
4. Chriſt gaue himſelfe for vs all. Rom.8.32.
5. Chriſt did taſte death for all men. Heb.2.9.

Out of theſe and ſuch like places of Scripture, they inferre and conclude, that Chriſts death is effectuall to all, and that in the purpoſe of God he was giuen generally for all men.

Contra. Firſt, to theſe places we will anſwere in generall, and then in particular: that Chriſt died for all men, the Scripture ſo affirming, we denie not: but becauſe elſewhere the Scripture ſaith, that Chriſt gaue his life for his ſheepe[a]: [b]for the Church. He prayeth not for the [c]world, much leſſe died for it: leſt now the Scripture ſhould ſeeme to be contrarie to it ſelfe, wee muſt not take the letter, but follow the ſenſe, where wee finde mention made of the vniuerſalitie of Chriſts death: Chriſts death therefore is ſaid diuerſly to be vniuerſall, or to be giuen for all men. [a]Ioh.10.11. [b]Epheſ.5.25. [c]Ioh.17.9.

1. The death of Chriſt, ſecundum ſufficientiam, in reſpect of the ſufficiencie and the fulnes of redemption thereof, hath ſatisfied for all men: but ſecundum efficientiam, it is efficacious and effectuall only to thoſe, which were fore-ordained to life in Chriſt; thus Auguſtine diſtinguiſheth: Quod ad magnitudinem & potentiam pretij, ſanguis Chriſti redemptio eſt totius mundi: quoniam tamen non omnes captiuitate eruti ſunt, redemptionis proprietas haud dubie penes illos eſt, qui membra ſunt Chriſti, &c. In reſpect of the greatneſſe and price, the blood of Chriſt is the redemption of the whole world: but becauſe all are not redeemed from captiuitie, the proper effect of redemption is only wrought in the members of Chriſt, Tom.7.ad articul.falſo.impoſit.

Obiect. This is a vaine diſtinction of ſufficiencie, and efficacie: Quia nil magis requiritur ad ſufficientiæ veritatem, quàm efficacitas: For there can bee no ſufficiencie, vnleſſe the ſame bee effectuall: *Pucks.ration.*2.

*Reſponſ.*1. There is as great difference betweene ſufficiencie, and efficacie, as betweene δύναμις, ϗ ἔργον, facultie or abilitie, and the worke: as a tree firſt is good, there is the ſufficiencie; then it bringeth foorth good fruite, which is the efficacie: the tree may bee good, though it haue not alwaies good fruite: ſo there may be a kinde of ſufficiencie without efficacitie. Secondly, wee ſay that the death of Chriſt is both ſufficient and efficacious in it ſelfe, though it be not to thoſe that periſh for want of beleefe: and it is efficacious alſo to them in ſome ſort, for through Chriſt they enioy what good thing ſoeuer they haue, though not after that ſingular manner, as it is to the faithfull: ſic Iunius ad ration.3. Puckij.

To this purpoſe Saint Ambroſe lib.3.de fide cap.4. Ille quidem miſericordia ſua omnibus natus eſt, ſed perfidia hæreticorum fecit, vt non omnibus naſceretur, qui omnibus natus eſt: He in mercie was borne for all, but the vnfaithfulnes of the heretikes is the cauſe, that he, which was borne to all, is not borne for all. Likewiſe, lib.5.in Luc.c.7. Si Chriſtus pro omnibus mortuus eſt, pro nobis tamen ſpecialiter paſſus eſt: If Chriſt died for all, yet more ſpecially he hath ſuffered for vs. What is this ſpeciall ſuffering of Chriſt but his effectuall dying only for the elect?

Magiſt.ſentent.lib.3.diſtinct.20.liter.c. Chriſtus pretium noſtræ redemptionis obtulit pro omnibus quantum ad ſufficientiam, ſed pro electis tantum, quantum ad efficaciam: Chriſt offered vp the price of our redemption for all in reſpect of the ſufficiencie, but for the elect only as concerning the efficacie. This diſtinction is receiued by Thomas, Lyra, and the whole ſchoolemen: Eſpenc.in 1.Tim.p.36.

2. Chriſt is ſaid to haue died for all, and that effectually, that is, for all the elect: for as there is an vniuerſalitie of the wicked, as the Apoſtle ſaith, All ſeeke their owne, and not that which is Ieſus Chriſts, that is, all falſe teachers: ſo there is an vniuerſalitie of the faithfull: as Chriſt ſaith, When I am lift vp from the earth, I will draw all men vnto me, meaning all beleeuers; Omnes prædeſtinatos ad ſalutem: All ordained to ſaluation, as Auguſtine expoundeth it, *Tractat.*53. Likewiſe, They ſhall be all taught of God: that is, all the faithfull. So one ſaith, Et populus Dei ſuam habet plenitudinem, &c. in Philip.2.21. Ioh.12.32. Iſai.54.13.

electis & praeſcitis ſua quadam cenſetur vniuerſitas, vt de toto mundo totus mundus, & de omnibus hominibus omnes homines videantur aſſumpti: The people of God hath a certaine fulneſſe, and there is a kinde of vniuerſalitie in the elect, that out of the whole world, a whole world, and from among all men, all men in ſome ſort ſhould be deliuered, Ambroſ. de vocat. Gent. lib. 1. cap. 3.

3. Chriſt is ſaid to haue died for all: and all men are ſaid to be redeemed by his death, becauſe as many as are redeemed, doe obtaine redemption onely by Chriſt: ſo is that place to be vnderſtood, 1.Cor.12.6. God worketh all in all, not euery man hath all gifts; but becauſe, what good gift ſoeuer there is in any man, it commeth only of God. So Auguſtine ſaith, Dictum eſt, omnes iuſtificari per Chriſtum, non quia omnes iuſtificantur in Chriſto, ſed qui iuſtificantur non aliter iuſtificantur, quam in Chriſto; vt dicimus omnes homines intrare in domum per vnam ianuam, — quia nemo intrat niſi per ipſam: It is ſaid, many are iuſtified by Chriſt, not becauſe all are iuſtified in Chriſt, but they that are iuſtified, are not otherwiſe iuſtified, then in Chriſt, as we ſay, all men went into the houſe by that doore, becauſe none went in, but by it: Auguſtin. contra Iulian. lib. 6. cap. 12.

4. When the Scripture vſeth in this caſe theſe generall termes, omnes, omnia, all men, all things, we muſt not vnderſtand them vniuerſally, as comprehending euery particular, but indefinitly, as for omnes homines, all men, we vnderſtand omnia hominum genera, all ſorts of men: this is Auguſtines rule alſo, tractat. in Iohan. 53. So it is ſaid, that Chriſt healed omnem morbum, euery diſeaſe, that is, euery kinde of diſeaſe.[a] Decimatis omne olus: You tithe all herbes, that is, euery kinde.[b] Omnis Iudea exibat: All Iudea went foorth vnto Iohn[c], that is, out of euery part of Iudea.

[a] Matth.4.23.
[b] Luke 11.42.
[c] Mark.1.5.

5. Chriſt is ſaid to haue died for all: in reſpect of the externall preaching of the Goſpel, and common oblatiō of grace vnto al, which notwithſtanding is not auailable or effectual in al: as in the Goſpell the mariage feaſt was prepared for all; but all that were called came not: For many are called (ſaith our Sauiour) few choſen[d]. So the grace of God, ex peccato euocat omnes communiter, ſuos excitat ſingulariter, doth call all men from ſinne generally, but his elect hee ſtirreth vp after a ſingular manner, and effectually.

[d] Matth.22.14.

Obiect. If God doe offer Chriſt outwardly to all, and yet all be not thereby called, he ſhould ſeeme to mocke and diſſemble with men, Pucks. ration. 57.

Reſponſ. Firſt, the calling of God in it ſelfe is effectual to al, if al had grace to lay hold of it: now, if God giue grace vnto ſome to obey their calling, and thereby to be conuerted, and not to others, we muſt not be inquiſitiue to ſearch, but leaue it vnto God, whoſe iudgements may be hid and ſecret, but they are alwaies moſt iuſt: for he hath mercie on whom he will. Secondly, though the calling of God worke not it proper and naturall effect in the incredulous, vnto their conuerſion; yet it is effectuall, more accidentario, accidentally, being made vnto them, through the hardneſſe of their owne heart, the ſauour of death vnto death. Thirdly, S. Ambroſe witneſſeth for this diſtinction of generall and effectuall calling: lib. 2. de vocat. Gentium, cap. 8. Praeter illam generalem gratiam parciùs & occultiùs hominum corda pulſantem, excellentiore opere, largiore munere, potentiore virtute vocatio ſpecialis exeritur, &c. Beſide the generall grace more ſparingly and ſecretly beating vpon mens hearts, there is a ſpeciall calling more excellent in working, of a larger gift, and more mightie in vertue.

THE PARTICVLAR ANSWERE TO the former places.

TO the firſt, that God would haue all men to be ſaued, wee haue anſwered before, queſt. 2. of this Controuerſie, part 1. and to this effect, that it cannot be literally vnderſtood, that God would abſolutely haue all men to be ſaued, for why then ſhould not all be ſaued? For who hath reſiſted Gods will[e]? Neither can it be anſwered here, as ſometime by the old Pelagians, that Gods will is not fulfilled, becauſe man will not: for this were to make men mightier then God. The meaning then of the place is this: firſt, that God offereth the externall meanes of ſaluation to all: which if they refuſe, they are in fault themſelues, God is not to be blamed. Secondly, the Apoſtle, as Auguſtine ſaith, by all men, vnderſtandeth all ſorts of men: as high and low, Kings, Princes, and the people, as it may appeare by that which goeth before in this place. Thirdly, in the ſame ſenſe Chriſt is ſaid to giue himſelfe a ranſome for all men, that is, for all ſorts of men, or for all the elect, or ſufficiently for all in generall.

[e] Rom.9.19.

In the ſecond place,[f] the Apoſtle ſheweth, that howſoeuer the death of Chriſt is ſufficient for all, yet it is effectuall only to the faithfull, to them, That from henceforth liue not to themſelues, but to him that died for them, verſ. 15. and to ſuch as are new creatures, verſ. 17. But all are not new creatures in Chriſt, therefore for all and to all Chriſts death is not effectuall.

[f] 2.Cor.5.15,17

In the third place S. Peter ſpeaketh to the faithfull, whom hee calleth, verſ. 1. beloued, and God is patient toward vs, ſaith he, verſ. 9. and would haue no man periſh: that is, none of vs, none of the faithfull and elect: Sic Iunius reſponſ. ad ration. 90. And againe, The patience, long ſuffering, and bountifulneſſe of God, leadeth euery man to repentance[g]: But thou (ſaith the Apoſtle) after thine hardneſſe, and heart that cannot repent, &c. They therefore which abuſe and deſpiſe the patience of God, are themſelues the cauſe of their deſtruction: God is not to be charged with it.

[g] Rom.2.4.

In the fourth place, the Apoſtle ſaying, Chriſt gaue himſelfe for vs all, meaneth the vniuerſalitie of the faithfull and elect: whom he hath predeſtinate, called, iuſtified, verſ. 30.

Rom. 8. 32.

In the fifth place, where the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt did taſte death for all men, he afterward expoundeth himſelfe, verſ. 10. ſaying, That Chriſt brought many children to glory, ſuch as are ſanctified, verſ. 11. whom Chriſt vouchſafeth to call his brethren, verſ. 12. and his children, verſ. 13. Theſe are not vniuerſally all men, but the faithfull and elect only: Chriſt only is the Prince of their ſaluation, whom he bringeth to glory, verſ. 10.

Heb. 2. 9. 10. 12. 13.

Argum. 2. Their ſecond generall argument is drawne from ſuch places of Scripture, where mention is made of the whole world, in the benefit of redemption: as [a] Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the ſinne of the world: [b] The bread that I will giue is my fleſh, which I will giue for the life of the world: [c] I came not to iudge the world but to ſaue the world: [d] God was in Chriſt, and reconciled the world to himſelfe. Theſe places are alleaged by Hemingius lib. de vniuerſalitate gratiæ. Huberus, lib. theſe. Puckſius ration. 60. 91. to proue the vniuerſality of the benefit of Chriſts death to all.

[a] Iohn 1. 29.
[b] Iohn 6. 51.
[c] Iohn 12. 47.
[d] 2. Cor. 5. 19.

Anſwere. Firſt, Chriſt is ſaid to take away the ſinnes of the world, in reſpect of the ſufficiencie of his death, which is able to ſatisfie in it ſelfe, not onely for the ſinnes of the world, but, as Thom. Aquinas ſaith, Si plures mundi eſſent, If there were many worlds: yet is his death effectuall onely to thoſe that beleeue, and are ordained vnto life. Epiſtol. decret. Gaij. Effuſio iuſti ſanguinis Chriſti tam diues fuit ad precium, vt ſi vniuerſitas captiuorum in redemptorem ſuum crederet, nullum diaboli vincula retinerent: The ſhedding of Chriſts righteous blood, was ſo rich to pay our ranſome, that if all the captiues did beleeue in their redeemer, none of them ſhould be held in the diuels bonds. Secondly, the world in Scripture is not alwayes taken for the vniuerſall companie of men both good and bad, but as it is ſometime taken onely for the wicked: as [e] the Prince of this world commeth, &c. And [f] the world hath hated them: ſo alſo doth it ſometime ſignifie onely the elect companie diſperſed ouer the world: [g] as that the world may know that thou haſt ſent me. And againe, The world hath not knowne thee, but I haue knowne thee, and theſe haue knowne that thou haſt ſent me. So then there is a world that hath not knowne Chriſt, namely the wicked world: there is a world that hath knowne Chriſt, that is, the company of the elect: ſo Abraham is called the heire of the world, [h] that is, the father of the faithfull, verſ. 11. Auguſtine alſo thus writeth, Tract. euangel. Ioan. 52. Mundus appellatur in malis hominibus, qui toto terrarum orbe diffuſi ſunt: — appellatur mundus in bonis, qui ſimiliter toto terrarum orbe diffuſi ſunt: vnde dicit Apoſtolus, Deus erat in Chriſto mundum reconcilians ſibi: The world is vnderſtood of wicked men, that are diſperſed ouer the world: the world alſo is named of good men, that are ſo likewiſe diſperſed; as the Apoſtle ſaith, God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelfe. This world Chriſt came to ſaue, not to iudge, he gaue himſelfe for the life of this world: this is the reconciled world, as Auguſtine againe ſaith, Mundus damnatus quicquid præter Eccleſiam: mundus reconciliatus Eccleſia: The reconciled world is only the Church: the damned world all thoſe that are beſide the Church.

[e] Iohn 14. 30.
[f] Iohn 17. 14.
[g] Ioh. 17. 23, 25.
[h] Rom. 4. 13.

Obiect. But Saint Iohn ſaith, Chriſt is the propitiation for our ſinnes, and not for our ſinnes onely, but for the ſinnes of the whole world, Chriſt then dyed not for the elect onely, (not for our ſinnes only, ſaith the Apoſtle) but for all in the world: and therefore he ſaith the whole world: ſic Huber. theſ. 131.

Iohn 2. 2.

Contra. Firſt, S. Iohn in ſaying (not for our ſinnes onely, but, &c.) meaneth that Chriſt hath not ſatiſfied by his death, for our ſinnes that now beleeue, ſaith the Apoſtle, but for as many as ſhall beleeue, while the world ſtandeth: as our Sauiour ſaith, I pray not for theſe alone, but for them alſo which ſhall beleeue in me through their word. Secondly, by the whole world the Apoſtle may here as well vnderſtand the vniuerſall company of the faithfull, as he ſaith, The whole world lyeth in wickedneſſe, meaning the wicked only. Therefore Auguſtine writeth well, Epiſtol. 48. Totus mundus in maligno poſitus eſt propter zizania, quæ ſunt per totum mundum, & Chriſtus propitiatio eſt peccatorum totius mundi propter triticum, quod eſt per totum mundum: The whole world lyeth in euill, becauſe of the tares throughout the whole world, and Chriſt is the propitiation of the ſinnes of the whole world, becauſe of the good wheat throughout the world.

Iohn 17. 21.
1. Iohn 5. 19.

Argum. 3. Their third generall argument is grounded vpon ſuch places of Scripture, where the fall of mankind by Adam, and the redemption by Chriſt are compared together: As by the offence of one the fault came vpon all to their condemnation: ſo by the iuſtifying of one the benefit abounded towards all men, &c. And againe, As in Adam all die, ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made aliue: Chriſts redemption then is as generall, as Adams fall; vnleſſe ye will ſay, that Adams ſinne exceedeth the merite of Chriſt. But all are dead in Adam: Ergo, all are redeemed by Chriſt: Huber. Theſ. 48. Snecan. de prædeſt. pag. 486. 492. 494. & alibi.

Rom. 5. 28.
1. Cor. 15. 22.

Anſwere. 1. Auguſtines expoſition may here ſafely be admitted, that all men are ſaid to be iuſtified by Chriſt, not that all men are actually iuſtified by him, but becauſe all that are iuſtified, are not otherwiſe iuſtified, then by him: as all that are dead, are dead in Adam: Auguſt. de natur. & grat. cap. 40. And againe he ſaith, Sicut in Adam omnes, &c. as in Adam all die, &c. Nemo ad mortem niſi per Adam, nemo ad vitam niſi per Chriſtum. As none die, but in Adam; ſo none are made aliue, but in Chriſt. Auguſt. So then as all that pertaine to Adam, in the firſt generation, are dead in Adam; ſo all that by regeneration and new birth are engraft into Chriſt, are made aliue by him. 2. The Apoſtle ſaith, that all they which are iuſtified by Chriſt, ſhall raigne in life by Chriſt, verſ. 17. but all that are of Adam ſhall not inherite eternall life: Ergo, all are not vniuerſally iuſtified by Chriſt, neither dyed

Chriſt in that ſenſe for all. 3. Neither doth it follow, that if more periſh by Adam, then are redeemed by Chriſt, that the grace of Chriſt ſhould be of leſſe force, then the ſinne of Adam. Firſt, becauſe they which haue no fruite in Chriſts death, are depriued thereof through their owne vnbeliefe, not for want of any ſufficiencie in the ranſome and price of redemption. Againe, though ſo many ſhould be ſaued by Chriſt, as are dead in Adam, yet herein grace ſhould be but equall to the ſinne of Adam; as many for as many: But now the Apoſtle preferreth grace, not in reſpect of multitude or number of the redeemed, but in a double regard. Firſt, Adams ſinne brought death, grace by Chriſt giueth life: now it is an eaſier thing for many to periſh, then for one to be reſtored: Adam alone loſt himſelfe and all the world: but all mankinde ioyned together cannot ſaue a ſoule: grace therefore is preferred in reſpect of the difficultie of the worke. In this ſenſe the Apoſtle ſaith: If through the offence of one, death raigned; much more ſhall they, which receiue abundance of grace, reigne in life, &c. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, The fault came of one offence to condemnation, verſ. 16. that is, onely originall ſinne, which we deriue from Adam, maketh vs guiltie of condemnation: but the gift is of many offences to iuſtification: in Chriſt not onely our originall, but actuall ſinnes alſo are pardoned. This then is the preeminence of grace. Which further is thus ſet forth by Primaſius: Maior eſt redemptio Saluatoris, quam perditio tranſgreſſoris, &c. The redemption of the Sauiour is greater, then the perdition of the tranſgreſſour, becauſe all ſinnes are remitted by Chriſt, not onely originall, but actuall, &c. Theodulus alſo ſaith: Gratia Dei adeo exuberauit, vt & ipſum Adami peccatum deleret, &c. The grace of God hath ſo abounded, that it hath taken away the very ſinne of Adam, and not onely that, but all other ſinnes, &c. and not onely ſo, Sed ad iuſtitium omnes deduxit, But hath brought all to iuſtice, &c. In three things hee placeth this preeminence and excellencie of grace. 1. In that euen Adams ſinne was thereby pardoned. 2. And not onely originall, but actuall. 3. And not onely ſinnes committed, but righteouſneſſe imparted: ſee further heereof elſewhere.

In c.5. ad Roman.

Hexapl. in 5. ad Roman. qu. 35. 36.

1. Cor. 15.22.

The other place is either to be vnderſtoode of the reſurrection, or rather of the life of the Saints in glorie: for the Apoſtle ſaith, All ſhall be made aliue in Chriſt: not that they alreadie are: And in this ſenſe it maketh nothing for the vniuerſalitie of grace. And if wee vnderſtand it of redemption purchaſed by Chriſt, by (all) here, the elect onely are ſignified, namely, they which are of Chriſt, as verſ. 23. And ſo Ambroſe vpon this place expoundeth it, vpon theſe words, 1. Cor. 15. Sicut in Adam, &c. As in Adam all die: Sicut Adam peccans mortem inuenit, & omnes ex eius origine tenuit: ita Chriſtus mortem vincens, omnibus qui ſunt ex eius corpore vitam acquiſiuit: As Adam ſinning wrought death vpon all of his off-ſpring; ſo Chriſt hath purchaſed life to all that are of his body: vel ſicut, &c. or as in Adam all, both iuſt and vniuſt doe die: ſo in Chriſt all, both beleeuers and vnbeleeuers ſhall riſe, though vnto puniſhment.

Argum. 4. Their fourth argument out of Scripture, is from ſuch places, which ſeeme to extend the benefites purchaſed by Chriſts death generally to all.

Iohn. 1.9.

Firſt they vrge that place, This is the true light, that lighteneth euery man which commeth into the world: Ergo, the light of grace is common to all: Pucks. ration. 55.

Anſwere. Firſt, this place muſt be vnderſtood not of that ſingular and eſpeciall light of grace, which is giuen onely to the elect, but of the light of nature, or common grace, which is infuſed into all: for what light he meaneth, is plainely ſhewed before, verſ. 4. In it was life, and the life was the light of men: he ſpeaketh of the naturall life and light, and that capacitie of reaſon, which is in all by nature. Secondly, if we ſhould vnderſtand the light of peculiar grace, then it would follow, that not onely grace is offered, but receiued of all: for this light is ſaid verily and indeed to lighten all. Thirdly, Auguſtines expoſition may here ſafely be receiued; by all men wee may vnderſtand all ſorts of men, Enchirid. c. 103. or thus: Illuminat omnem hominem, quia nullus hominum illuminatur niſi lumine illo veritatis: He lighteneth all men, becauſe there is none lightened but by that true light: de peccator. merit. & remiſſ. lib. 1. c. 25.

Rom. 11.32.

Obiect. 2. God hath ſhut vp all vnder vnbeliefe, that hee might haue mercie vpon all. Mercie then is ordained for all.

Anſw. The meaning of the place is this, God will haue mercie vpon all, that is, both Iewes and Gentiles: for of them the Apoſtle entreateth throughout the whole chapter: Intelligitur (ſaith Auguſtine) de Iudæis & Gentilibus quos Deus prædeſtinauit: It is to be vnderſtood of thoſe of the Iewes and Gentiles, whom God hath predeſtinate: de ciuitat. dei. lib. 21. cap. 18. & 24.

Coloſſ. 1.20.

Obiect. 3. It pleaſed God the Father, &c. by him to reconcile all things to himſelfe, &c. both the things in earth, and the things in heauen, through the blood of his croſſe: Ergo, Chriſt dyed for all: Pucks. 82.

Anſw. Firſt, if they will ſo ſtrictly vrge this word, omnia, all things, Chriſt ſhall not onely be the redeemer of men, but of all things in the world. Secondly, this word therefore is to be reſtrained, according to the matter or ſubiect, whereof the Apoſtle entreateth: who hauing firſt ſet downe the work of the creation, whereby all things viſible and inuiſible were created, verſ. 16. he commeth then to the worke of redemption, which he extendeth not to all things viſible, and inuiſible, as he did the creation, but reſtraineth to the Church, whereof Chriſt is the head, verſ. 18. which Church conſiſteth of two parts, of the Saints in heauen, and the Saints in earth, verſ. 20. As the Apoſtle ſaith elſe-where:

Of whom is named the whole family in heauen, and in earth. The benefit of redemption therefore belongeth onely to the Church and family of the Saints.

Ephes.3.15.

*Obiect.*4. Iohn 17.2. Thou haſt giuen him power ouer all fleſh, that hee ſhould giue eternall life to all them that thou haſt giuen him: Ergo, all fleſh is reconciled vnto God by Chriſt: *Huber. theſ.*161.

Iohn 17. 2.

Anſwere. Firſt, it followeth not, Chriſt hath power ouer all fleſh, therefore all fleſh is reconciled by Chriſt: for he hath power ouer all creatures in heauen and earth, euen ouer bruit beaſts, yet they haue no part in this reconciliation. Secondly, it is one thing to haue power giuen ouer all fleſh, another thing to haue men giuen vnto Chriſt out of the world, as Auguſtine ſaith: Poteſtatem quidem omnis hominis accepit, vt liberet, quos voluerit; damnet, quos voluerit: ſed eos ſibi eſſe datos oſtendit, quibus omnibus det vitam æternam: He hath receiued power ouer all men to deliuer whom he will, and to condemne whom he will: but they onely are giuen vnto him, to all whom he giueth eternall life: In Iohan. tractat. 111. Thirdly, that not all men, but onely ſome in this ſenſe are giuen vnto Chriſt, hee himſelfe witneſſeth: I haue declared thy name vnto the men, whom thou gaueſt me out of the world. All the world therefore was not giuen vnto Chriſt, but a certaine number choſen out of the world. And thus much of their obiections out of Scripture: let vs now ſee ſome other of their arguments.

Iohn 17.6.

*Argum.*2. Their ſecond generall argument is drawne from thoſe abſurdities and inconueniences, which doe follow, as they imagine, vpon this doctrine, that God in his eternall counſell hath predeſtinate ſome vnto damnation, as he hath ordained others to life.

*Obiect.*1. If God haue appointed ſome vnto damnation, and it is impoſſible that ſuch ſhould not ſinne, neither can Gods ſentence be altered: it ſhould ſeeme then, that they are not in fault themſelues, ſeeing they can no wayes eſcape the wrath of God: how then can it be auoided, but that God ſhould be the author of ſinne? *Sic Huberus in theſib. Snecan. p.*483. & 500.

*Anſw.*1. I anſwere with Auguſtine: Qui a pietate deficiunt, non ex opere Dei, ſed ex voluntate ſua deficiunt, nec impelluntur vt cadant, nec eiiciuntur vt deſerant; caſuri tamen ab eo, qui falli non poteſt, præſciuntur: They which fall away from pietie, doe not fall away, by any thing that God doth or worketh, but of their owne will and voluntarie inclination; they are neither compelled to fall, nor caſt off to that intent they ſhould forſake God: but God, who cannot be deceiued, onely fore-ſaw they ſhould fall, &c. The fall of man therefore is voluntarie, and none the cauſe of it but himſelfe: God fore-ſeeth (from whoſe eyes nothing can be hid) that ſinne ſhould be committed in the world: but he decreed it not, but onely fore-ordained the puniſhment of ſinne: And although ſinne be euill, yet the puniſhment thereof, as it is appointed of God, is iuſt and good: Non ipſe ignis æternus, qui cruciaturus eſt impios, malus eſt, habens modum & ordinem ſuum, — ſed cruciatus eſt damnatis malus, quorum peccatis eſt debitus: Auguſtin. Euerlaſting fire, which ſhall torment the wicked, is not euill it ſelfe, being not without ſome meaſure, and order, but the torment is euill to the damned, to whoſe ſinnes it is due.

De natura boni cap. 37.

Tim.6.

Let vs heare for this matter the teſtimonie of Snecanus a Patron alſo of vniuerſall grace: Deum indurare, aut iuſto odio deſtinare, quos vult; & homines interea ſponte, non coacte malefacere, &c. ſimul ſubordinata non pugnantia: Theſe two ſayings, for God to harden; and ordaine to be hated, whom he will; and for men notwithſtanding to doe euill willingly, not of conſtraint, are not contrarie: but one ſeruing and ſubordinate to another. Noſtræ voluntates manent liberæ ſub diuina prouidentia: poſita prima cauſa, non tolluntur mediæ cauſæ, ſed potius ſtabiliuntur: Our owne wils remaine free vnder Gods prouidence, the firſt cauſe doth not take away the ſecond, but rather eſtabliſheth them: *hæc ille de prædeſtinat. pag.*622. His meaning is this, that though Gods will and decree be the firſt cauſe of all things, and ſo of the ſaluation, or damnation of men; yet are there ſecond cauſes, whereby Gods will is effected: as the corrupt will of man is the cauſe of ſinne, and ſinne the cauſe of damnation. It is not Gods will, that any man ſhould come to condemnation, who firſt willingly falling into ſinne, doth not iuſtly deſerue the ſame. So then Gods decree is not the cauſe of ſinne, but the corruption onely of mans will. Thus haue we the teſtimonie of an aduerſarie very cleare on our ſide.

S. Ambroſe alſo thus teſtifieth, *lib.*2. *de vocat. Gentium. c.*4. Æterna Dei cognitio nulla nos vrget neceſſitate peccandi, &c. The eternall knowledge of God, doth not vrge any neceſſitie to ſinne, neither doth iniquitie proceede from whence commeth equitie, &c. From the free will of men tranſgreſſion firſt tooke beginning.

Magiſt. ſenten. thus *lib.*1. *diſt.*41. liter. E. Non reprobatio ita eſt cauſa mali, ſicut prædeſtinatio cauſa boni, neq; obduratio ita facit hominem malum, ſicut miſericordia bonum. Reprobation is not ſo the cauſe of euill, as predeſtination is the cauſe of good: neither doth obduration ſo make a man euill, as mercie maketh him good.

*Anſwere.*2. But if God would (they ſay) men might be preſerued from ſinne: why ſhould he rather giue his grace to one, then to another? Auguſtine alſo very well anſwereth this matter: Inueſtigabilis miſericordia, qua cuius vult, miſeretur, nullis eius præcedentib. meritis: inueſtigabilis veritas, qua quem vult indurat, eius præcedentib. meritis, ſed cum eo cuius miſeretur, plerunq; communib. His mercie is vnſearchable, whereby he hath mercie on whom he will, without any his merites going before, and his truth is vnſearchable, whereby hee hardeneth, whom he will, his merites going before, but for the moſt part common with him, of whom he hath mercie. *de bon. perſeueren.*2. 11.

The Apoſtle alſo may reſolue vs herein, who ſaith, according as God ſpake to Moſes, I will haue mercie vpon whom I will haue mercie, and will haue compaſſion vpon whom I will haue compaſſion: Rom.9.15. Other reaſon we muſt not be deſirous to know, neither ſhall we be euer able to comprehend.

*Obiect.*2. But why ſhould God ſaue ſome, and not others, ſeeing they are all his creatures and workmanſhip? how is not God vniuſt, or partiall in ſo doing, and an acceptor of perſons: Snecan p. 480. de prædeſtinat.

*Anſwere.*1. Saint Paul herein doth ſatisfie them to the full: firſt hee ſaith, Who art thou O man, that pleadeſt againſt God? It is an vnreaſonable thing, that the creatures ſhould call the Creator to account, or demand a reaſon of his doings. Secondly, he ſheweth by the example of the Potter, that God may with better right diſpoſe of his creature, as it pleaſeth him, than the Potter maketh of one lumpe, veſſels of honour and diſhonour. Thirdly, the Apoſtle giueth a reaſon, which may content vs, why hee electeth ſome, namely, to ſhew the richneſſe of his mercie, and why he reiecteth others, namely, that his power may be knowne, verſ.22. Gods glorie then, which ſtandeth partly in mercie, partly is ſeene in his iuſtice, cannot appeare to the full, but in the ſaluation of ſome, and damnation of others: hee therefore that thinketh Gods dealing herein to be vniuſt, is an enemie to the glorie of God.

Rom.9.20.

*Anſwere.*2. Auguſtine hath a ſingular ſpeech of this matter: Quis in tantam inſaniam—vt iniuſtitiæ Deum arguat, ſi vni indebitam donauerit gratiam, alteri reddiderit debitam pœnam: an audebit debitor creditorem iniquitatis arguere, ſi alteri donans, ab eo, quod debebat, exegerit? Who will be ſo mad as to accuſe God of iniuſtice, if he giue grace to one vndue, and to another render puniſhment due and deſerued: ſhall the debtor accuſe the creditor of vniuſt dealing, if hee forgiue one his debt, and exact of thee that which thou oweſt? *de prædeſt. & grat. c.*4. Neither can God bee charged with partialitie, or hauing reſpect of perſons, in that of his free grace and mercie he ſaueth ſome, and leaueth the reſt in their ſinnes: he is ſaid to reſpect perſons, that for ſome qualitie or outward circumſtance preferreth one before another: as the Iudge is ſaid to reſpect the perſon, when hee heareth the rich and the great men, before the ſmall and the poore: As Samuel being ſent to annoint one of Ieſſe his ſonnes, reſpected the outward comely perſon of the elder brethren: But with God there is no ſuch reſpect of any ſuch outward condition or qualitie. God is no acceptor of perſons, but in euery nation he that feareth God, &c. that is, God reſpecteth not the perſon of men, that is, of what kindred or Country they are: So is it likewiſe taken: There is no reſpect of perſons before God: that is, whether they be Iewes or Gentiles. It is not therefore of any thing in men themſelues, that ſome are ſaued and not others, but of the free mercie of God: God ſeeth nothing in man: thereby to bee moued to ſhew him mercie: therefore he reſpecteth no mans perſon: but all is of grace.

Deut.1.17.

Act.10.35.

Rom.2.10.

*Obiect.*2. The perſon of man betokeneth not onely ſome externall qualitie, or outward reſpect in man, but the eſſence and ſubſtance of man alſo: As in the Trinitie, the name of perſon is taken ſubſtantially. Therefore if God be no acceptor of perſons, one man cannot any waies be preferred before another: *Snecan. de prædeſtinat. p.*480.

Anſwere. Firſt, the perſon of God and the perſon of man, are not well compared together: for as much as there is nothing accidentall in God; but whatſoeuer, is belonging to his eſſence: but ſo is it not in man, in whom many things are accidentall, and ſubiect to change. Secondly, though the perſon in the Trinitie be ſubſtantiall, yet is it not all one with the ſubſtance of the Trinitie: for there is but one ſubſtance of the Trinitie; and if the perſon were the ſubſtance, then ſhould there be but one perſon alſo, which were great hereſie to affirme, and ſo are they ouerthrowne by their owne example. Thirdly, if they will ſo ſtrictly exclude all reſpect of man on Gods behalfe; how commeth it to paſſe, that beleeuers are ſaued, all vnbeleeuers damned? vnleſſe the reſpect of their faith make a difference betweene them, through the gracious and free acceptation of God. Wherefore God is ſaid not to accept the perſons of men no otherwiſe than I haue ſaid, that is, not to regard any thing in man, or of man, whereby originally one man ſhould haue a preeminence to another.

How God is ſaid not to haue reſpect of perſons.

And to ſpeake yet more diſtinctly of this point: in the acception of perſons three things are to be conſidered. 1. The gift, what is beſtowed. 2. The cauſe why. 3. The manner how? Firſt, in donis gratuitis, free gifts which are not due, there is no accepting of perſons properly: but when as that which is equally due, is not equally giuen, that is partialitie: now election vnto life is not due vnto any as a debt, but it is a franke gift of grace: Secondly, then ones perſon is accepted, when for any reſpect to the perſon, and ſome cauſe on his behalfe, a difference is made: but they which are elected, are not preferred for any thing, which God ſeeth in them, but of his meere grace. Thirdly, the reſpector of perſons offendeth, when he giueth vnto, or doeth for one, with the iniurie of another: but God in electing ſome, doth no wrong vnto thoſe, which are not elected: wherefore in this caſe there is with God, no reſpect of perſons: ſee more of this point elſe-where, &c.

*Hexapl. ad Rom. qu.*23. & addit. 3. to the doctrines.

3. They are all Gods creatures, we grant: but what then: muſt either all be ſaued, or ſhould God refraine from creating thoſe, whom hee fore-ſaw ſhould fall? No, it is ſufficient that God is not the cauſe of their fall. And if God in his preſcience ſaw they ſhould fall, & ſhould for this cauſe deſiſt from creating them, that they might not fall: then ſhould the preſcience of God be deceiued in foreſeeing that to be, which ſhal neuer be. Auguſt. alſo doth very well touch this point: Creat vt ſint homines—ſecundũ conſilium bonæ voluntatis ſuæ, reparaturus in multis, quod ipſe fecit, & puniturus, quod non fecit: God

Contr. artic. falſ. impoſit. 3. 4.

God did create men to repaire according to the counſell of his good will, in them that, which he had made, and to puniſh that, which he made not.

Obiect.3. If it be ſo, that God hath caſt lots ouer euery man, and hath alreadie decreed concerning their ſaluation or damnation; then all exhortation and preaching, and all endeuour to liue a godly life, is in vaine; for de vnoquoque fiet ut prædeſtinatus eſt, it ſhall befall euery man, as he is predeſtinate. So the Pelagians obiected: de perſeuer.lib.2.15.

Anſw. 1. The doctrine of predeſtination doth no more hinder godly endeuour and exhortation, then the doctrine of Gods preſcience and foreknowledge: Sicut non deterremur, (ſaith Auguſtine) a confitenda præſcientia Dei, &c. As we are not terrified, or fraied from confeſſing Gods preſcience, becauſe whether men liue well or euill, tales erunt, quales præſciuit Deus, they ſhall be none other then God foreſaw they ſhould be: ſo, ſaith he, wee ought not for this cauſe to be driuen from confeſſing predeſtination: Auguſt.in.ibid.

2. Auguſtine alſo in another place putteth this example: As (ſaith hee) though the Apoſtle confeſſe that God worketh in vs both the will and the deede, yet hee ceaſeth not euery where to exhort vs both to will and worke thoſe things that pleaſe God. Our Sauiour Chriſt alſo biddeth vs to beleeue in him: Ye beleeue in God, beleeue alſo in me. Nec tamen eius falſa eſt ſententia: And yet it is Ioh.14.1. true which our Sauiour ſaith, That no man can come vnto him, vnleſſe his Father draw him: for faith De perſeuerant.lib.2.c.14 is the gift of God. So men notwithſtanding ought to endeuour themſelues to walke in obedience before God, although they be predeſtinate thereunto.

3. Chriſt alſo (ſaith Auguſtine) teaching his Apoſtles to pray, further telleth them, that God knoweth what is needfull for vs, before we aske, and yet wee ought to pray notwithſtanding. So although God foreſaw and did predeſtinate the end of euery man, yet wee muſt exhort and ſtirre vp one another to all holineſſe of life, thereby to make ſure our election, as S. Peter ſaith. 2.Pet.1.10.

4. I will alſo adioyne Maſter Philpots learned and godly anſwere: Some (ſaith he) for an extreme refuge in their euill doing runne to Gods predeſtination and election, ſaying: If I be elected of God to ſaluation, I ſhall be ſaued, whatſoeuer I doe: but ſuch be great tempters of God, and abominable blaſphemers of Gods holy election, and caſt themſelues downe from the pinacle of the temple, in preſumption, that God may preſerue them by his Angels through predeſtination. Such verily may reckon themſelues to be none of Gods elect children, that will doe euill that good may enſue; whoſe damnation the Apoſtle ſaith, is iuſt: Gods predeſtination ought with a ſimple eye to bee conſidered, to make vs more warily to walke according to Gods word: for this is the end and fruite of our election, That we ſhould be holy and blameleſſe in his ſight: Epiſtol.ad congregat.Chriſtian.pag.1832. Epheſ.1.

Gregorie hath an excellent ſaying, which may ſerue as a full anſwere to this obiection: as he is alleaged, Cauſ.23.qu.4.c.21. Obtinere nequaquam poſſunt, quæ prædeſtinata non fuerunt, &c. Thoſe things cannot be obtained, which are not predeſtinate: but thoſe things, which holy men effect by their prayer, were predeſtinate to be obtained by prayer: for predeſtination is ſo diſpoſed of God, that they which are elected ſhould come vnto it by labour, &c. Wherefore predeſtination doth not take away the meanes, as prayer, inſtruction, exhortation, which tend vnto it.

I will here adde the reſolution of Thomas Aquine, who ſetteth downe theſe poſitions of this matter, the queſtion being thus propounded, whether predeſtination may be helped by the prayers of the Saints: 1. he reſolueth, that predeſtination, quoad ordinationem, in reſpect of the ordination and decree, cannot be helped, but only in the execution: as Iacob was predeſtinate, yet he was obtained by 1.p.qu.24. artic.5. the prayers of Iſaak and Rebecca. 2. Yet this is not propter defectum virtutis, for want of any power in God, but becauſe he vſeth, cauſis medijs, meane cauſes, to effect his will. 3. Yet although by prayers, exhortations and other meanes the execution of Gods decree may bee furthered, yet can it not be altred and changed or hindred.

Obiect.4. To what end commanded Chriſt, that the Goſpell ſhould be preached to euery creature, if it were not Gods meaning that all men ſhould come to the knowledge of the truth, and ſo be ſaued: otherwiſe the Lord ſhould ſeeme to purpoſe one thing and doe another? Sic.Huber, in theſib.

Contra. Firſt, God calleth all men generally by the preaching of the Goſpell, neither is God to be blamed, if they obey not their calling, which in it ſelfe is ſufficient, but they only are in fault that refuſe it: As S. Ambroſe well ſaith, In alijs præualuiſſe gratiam, in alijs reſiluiſſe naturam: That in ſome grace preuaileth, in ſome their owne nature reſiſteth, &c. He ſpeaketh of thoſe, to whom the Goſpell is preached, lib.2.de vocat.Gent.cap.8. Secondly, it followeth not, that becauſe the Goſpel is preached to all, God hath decreed to ſaue all: for Chriſt commanded his Apoſtles to preach vnto thoſe the Math.10.13. Goſpell of peace, that ſhould notwithſtanding neither heare them nor receiue it. So Ezechiel is ſent Ezech.2.5. to a people that will not heare. And why may not the Goſpell be preached in like ſort to many that ſhall periſh? Thirdly, the cauſes therefore why the Goſpell is preached to all, and yet all are not ordained to be ſaued, are theſe two chiefly: firſt, becauſe the elect and the reprobate are mixed together in earth, neither is it knowne vnto men, whether euery man appertaineth, therefore is the Goſpel offered to all, that ſome might bee ſaued. And it is more agreeable to Gods mercie, that euen the reprobate ſhould haue the externall meanes of ſaluation offered vnto them for the elects ſake among them, then that the elect ſhould be defrauded thereof becauſe of the other. Of this Auguſtine writeth well: Correptio medicinaliter adhibetur, etiamſi ſalus ægrotantis incerta ſit: vt ſi is, qui corripitur ad *numerum prædeſtinatorum pertinet, ſit ei correptio ſalubre medicamentum; ſi autem non pertinet, ſit pœnale tormentum; de correpţ.grat.cap.*13. The medicine muſt bee giuen to all, though it be vncertaine who ſhall haue their health: that if he that is rebuked bee of the predeſtinate, his chaſtiſement ſhall be healthfull to him; if not, it ſhall be a penall torment, &c. So then the ſecond reaſon is, that the wicked may be left inexcuſable, when as the word of God is preached vnto them, and they regard it not.

Huberus heere obiecteth, *theſ.*304. If it be ſo, that the word of God be vnto ſome the ſauour of death vnto death, it were better neuer to heare it, then that the hearing thereof ſhould be to ſome to their condemnation.

Contra. 1. It is an abſurd conſequent, that the word ſhould not be preached at all, becauſe ſome profit not by it: by the ſame reaſon, becauſe ſome in the Sacrament doe eate and drinke their owne damnation, it might bee inferred, that it were good for none to receiue it: or becauſe ſome abuſe meate and drinke to gluttonie and drunkenneſſe, that therefore none ſhould eate or drinke. 2. That it were better for the wicked, neuer to haue knowne the way of righteouſneſſe, then after they haue 2.Pet.2.21. knowne it to turne away, &c. as S.Peter ſaith, we grant: but it followeth not, that it were better not to haue it knowne at all: It is better, that by the preaching of the Goſpell ſome ſhould be ſaued, though other be left without excuſe, then by not preaching, to helpe to excuſe vnbeleeuers, none ſhould be ſaued.

*Obiect.*5. This obiection is not much differing from the former: Seeing that Baptiſme is offered Matth.28.19. to all: Goe and baptize all nations, grace alſo together with Baptiſme is offered: for God would neuer haue inuited all men to Baptiſme, if he would not impart vnto them that grace, which is ſealed by Baptiſme: *Sic Heming.de vniuerſal.grat.pag.*75.

Matth.16.16. Ioh 6.29. Acts 13.48. Contra. 1. That Baptiſme is auaileable only to thoſe that beleeue, the Scripture teſtifieth, He that beleeueth, and is baptized, ſhall be ſaued. And to beleeue is the worke of God: And to them only, that are ordained to euerlaſting life, is it giuen to beleeue. Therefore to them only is Baptiſme of efficacie. 2. As before wee ſaid of the preaching of the Goſpell, ſo now of Baptiſme: that they are offered to all, that amongſt many, ſuch as are ordained to life, ſhould be ſaued: for it were not meete, that becauſe ſome are found abuſers and prophaners of the Sacraments, therefore they ſhould be denied to all. 3. If all in Baptiſme are verily partakers of grace, how are not all ſaued? If they anſwere, that through their owne negligence this grace is loſt, which is their onely anſwere here, *Heming.pag.*75. they ſpeake contrarie to the Scripture, which teſtifieth, that whom God loueth, hee loueth to the Iohn 13.1. Rom.11.29. end. And that the gifts of God are without repentance, Rom.11. But of this more God willing afterward.

*Obiect.*6. The doctrine of predeſtination, ſay ſome, is a doctrine of deſpaire: for if it bee ſo, that God hath decreed ſome to damnation from the beginning, what comfort now remaineth to thoſe that are in deſpaire, and diſtreſſe of conſcience, if we cannot aſſure them, that the mercie and grace of God is free for all men, and not denied to any?

Anſw. 1. The doctrine of predeſtination, is a true and ſound doctrine, yet not at all times, nor in 1.Cor.3.2. the hearing of all perſons to be vttered: for ſo Saint Paul ſaith, That hee gaue vnto ſome milke, not ſtrong meate, for they were not able to beare it. The doctrine of predeſtination is ſtrong meate, and therefore not to be miniſtred to the weake and bruſed conſcience. Hæc vna eſt cauſa tacendi verum, De perſeuer. lib.2.cap.16. (as Auguſtine ſaith) ne peiores faciamus, qui non intelligunt, dum volumus eos, qui intelligunt, facere doctiores: This is one cauſe of concealing the truth, leſt wee make them worſe, that vnderſtand not, while we would teach thoſe, which are of better capacitie, &c. He preſcribeth alſo the manner how predeſtination ſhould be taught and handled: namely, in the hearing of the faithfull, to entreate onely of election: But if any man be diſpoſed likewiſe to touch the other part of reprobation: Non de ipſis, qui in populo audiunt, dicendum eſt per ſecundam perſonam, ſed de alijs ad ipſos per tertiam: He muſt in no wiſe ſpeake in the ſecond perſon to thoſe that are preſent, but of others in their hearing in the third perſon, *lib.*2.*de perſeuer.cap.*23.

2. This doctrine notwithſtanding, there is ſufficient place for comfort: If any man doubt of his ſaluation, wee muſt neither build vpon a falſe ground, to comfort them; as to beare them in hand, that God hath a purpoſe to ſaue all men: nor yet referre them to Gods eternall decree, which is too ſtrong meate for them in that weake eſtate to beare: But as if a man ſhould denie that the fire is hot, or that the Sunne ſhineth, we would vſe no better argument to perſwade him, then by experience of the effects, as how the fire burneth, and the Sunne giueth light: ſo in this caſe to aſſure a man of ſaluation, we would exhort him to vſe the ſecondarie meanes, as faith, repentance, to beleeue in Chriſt, and, as the Apoſtle ſaith, to make his election ſure by good workes: And by the experience of Gods mercie and goodneſſe, which he hath felt, to grow vp vnto the aſſurance of his fauour.

3. I will conclude with Auguſtine, who thinketh this doctrine of predeſtination to be a doctrine not of deſpaire and diſtruſt, but of comfort and confidence: Abſit à vobis ideo deſperare de vobis, quoniam ſpem veſtram in ipſo habere iubeamini, non in vobis: An verendum eſt, ne tum de ſe homo deſperet, quando ſpes eius ponenda demonſtratur in Deo? God forbid that you ſhould deſpaire of your ſelues, becauſe ye are willed to put your truſt in God, & not in your ſelues: Is it to be feared, leſt man ſhould then deſpaire of himſelfe, when he is taught to place his hope and truſt in God? *de perſeuer.lib.*2.*c.*22.

For this the doctrine of predeſtination teacheth vs, that whatſoeuer is in vs, that is good, it neither is of our ſelues, nor yet commeth vnto vs by chance, but is beſtowed vpon vs freely, as God in mercie in the beginning had appointed.

Huberus further obiecteth thus: If it be ſo that Chriſt died not for all, but onely for ſome, then all comfort and conſolation is taken away: as if a man ſhould thus reaſon: Some men are elected to ſaluation in Chriſt, I am a man: Ergo, I ſhall be ſaued. This were a weake argument of comfort, concluding only vpon particulars, *Huber.p.*20.97.

Contra.1. If wee ſhould draw our comfort immediatly from Gods eternall will and decree; our aduerſaries muſt needs fall into the ſame ſtraits of particularities: for it is certaine, that in the day of iudgement all ſhall not be ſaued, but ſome muſt goe into euerlaſting paine, others to eternall life, as God in the beginning had decreed. Wherefore there muſt bee a certaine number of ſuch as are ordained to life. 2. To aſſure our ſelues then of our ſaluation before God, wee muſt not runne immediatly vnto Gods ſecret decree and counſell, as though by ſome extraordinarie ſpeculation or reuelation, we could attaine to the knowledge thereof: but wee muſt iudge of our election, by the fruites and effects thereof, as our faith, vocation, ſanctification: and this Snecanus ſheweth at large, pag. 466. Our argument then of comfort grounded vpon the word of God, is this: Whoſoeuer beleeueth in Chriſt, ſhall be ſaued, I beleeue in Chriſt: Ergo, I hope to be ſaued: So then our comfort ariſeth not from any particulars, but from the vniuerſall promiſes of God made to all thoſe which beleeue. But in the aſſumption of this argument, two things may trouble vs: firſt, if Satan ſhall tell vs, that we beleeue not, how we may aſſure our ſelues of faith. The remedie againſt this tentation is this: We muſt examine our faith by the fruites thereof: as 1.Ioh.2.3. Hereby we are ſure we know him, if we keepe his commandements. Neither are wee to bee diſmaied, though we finde in our ſelues ſome contrarie motions of feare, doubtfulnes, and ſuch like. But though our faith be yet imperfect, we muſt conſider how Chriſt did ſuccour and cheriſh the weake in faith, as it was written of him, that he ſhould not breake the bruiſed reede, nor quench the ſmoaking flaxe: as alſo wee muſt pray continually with the Apoſtles, Lord encreaſe our faith; and with him in the Goſpell: Lord I beleeue, helpe my vnbeleefe, Mark.9. The ſecond thing that may trouble vs, is, to know how we attaine to faith: for all haue not faith, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 2.Theſſ.3.2. Our remedie here, is to acknowledge faith, and all other gifts to come from God, not to thinke it ſtandeth in our owne power to beleeue: and therefore by faithfull prayer to ſeeke for this precious gift at Gods hands.

Iſay 42.3.
Luke 17.5.
Mark.9.24.
2.Theſſ.3.2.

3. Who ſeeth not then, but that this is a more ſure and readie way vnto comfort, as we haue ſhewed, then to beare men in hand, that God would haue all men to be ſaued, and that Chriſt died for all? So their argument of comfort ſtandeth thus: Chriſt died for all, euen for thoſe that ſhall be damned; therefore he died for me. What comfort now can a troubled conſcience reape by the death of Chriſt, ſeeing that notwithſtanding he may be damned: and that Chriſt hath done as much for thoſe that ſhall be damned, as for other? May not the diſtreſſed conſcience iuſtly ſay vnto ſuch, Miſerable comforters are ye, and phyſitions of no value? Iob 13 4. And thus farre of their arguments, and obiections, that doe maintaine the vniuerſalitie of the grace of God. Now we will come, by euident teſtimonies of Scripture, and other effectuall reaſons to eſtabliſh and make knowne the truth.

Iob.13.4.

THAT CHRIST DIED ONLY for the elect.

OVr ſentence then is this, that whereas all men were by nature the children of wrath, and like to periſh in themſelues, God from the reſt hath according to his good pleaſure elected ſome, to whom he hath appointed Chriſt Ieſus to be their Mediatour and Redeemer. And here we are to conſider, firſt the beginning of election: ſecondly, the progreſſe thereof: laſtly, the end. The beginning, in that God according to his good pleaſure, elected his in Chriſt before the foundation of the world. The progreſſe, in that he hath giuen the elect vnto Chriſt to be ſaued, and redeemed by him: He hath predeſtinate vs to be adopted through Ieſus Chriſt. The end is, that whom he hath predeſtinate, (that is the beginning) called, iuſtified, (there is the progreſſe) them alſo he hath glorified, he hath purpoſed to bring them to glorie: that is the end. That now Chriſt onely was giuen to die for the companie of the elect: not that it is not ſufficient for the whole world in it ſelfe, but becauſe the efficacie and benefit of Chriſts death is only applied by faith vnto the beleeuers: and faith onely is of the elect: That therefore Chriſt died only for the elect, it remaineth now to be proued. Our arguments wee will diſtribute into three places: firſt we will produce direct places of Scripture for our purpoſe. Secondly, reaſons grounded vpon Scripture. Thirdly, we will ſhew the abſurditie of the aduerſarie opinion.

Epheſ.1.4.5.
Rom.8.30.

First, our euident teſtimonies out of Scripture are theſe: Firſt, Ioh.10.15. Chriſt laieth downe his life for his ſheepe: the elect only are his ſheepe: Ergo.

*Argum.*1.
Ioh.10.15.

Huberus denieth the aſſumption: ſaying, that all men are Gods ſheepe, and inheritance; who, if afterward they ſtray away from the Lords ſheepfold, the fault is in themſelues, theſ.1069.

Contra. But our Sauiour ſpeaketh of ſuch ſheepe, as doe heare his voyce, and follow him, and they will not follow a ſtranger, verſ.5. They therefore that fall away, & follow any other, are not the ſheep of Chriſts fold: therefore for ſuch ſheepe only he died, as finally are his: thoſe are the elect only.

Ioh.10.5.

Ioh.11.52. 2. Chriſt died not for the nation only, that is, of the Iewes, but, That he might gather together in one the children of God that were ſcattered. But the elect only are the children of God: of whom hee

Ioh.10.16. ſpeaketh againe, namely, of theſe diſperſed and ſcattered children: Other ſheepe I haue alſo, which are not of this folde, them alſo I muſt bring, &c. Theſe are the predeſtinate, as Auguſtine ſaith: Erant prædeſtinati, nondum congregati: They were predeſtinate, though not yet gathered together: Auguſtin. ſerm. 50. de verbis Domini in Iohan.

Ioh.15.13. 3. Ioh.15.13. Chriſt died only for his friends; the elect only, and ſuch as ſhall be ſaued, only are Rom.5.10. the friends of Chriſt. And if that place of the Apoſtle be obiected, That Chriſt died for vs, when wee were yet enemies: We anſwere with Bernards diſtinction, Serm. 10. de Pſalm. Qui habitat: Chriſtus ſecundum tempus pro impijs & inimicis mortuus eſt, ſecundum prædeſtinationem autem pro fratribus & amicis: Chriſt according to the diſpenſation of time died for the wicked and his enemies: but in reſpect of his predeſtination, for his friends and brethren.

Epheſ.5.26. 4. Saint Paul teſtifieth, that Chriſt gaue himſelfe for his Church, that he might ſanctifie it, &c. and verſ.23. he is the Sauiour of his bodie, verſ. 23. But the elect only, and ſuch as ſhall be ſaued, are members only of his body: Ergo, for ſuch only he died.

Contra. Huberus anſwereth, that the Church is here taken, for the whole aſſemblie of beleeuers, and vnbeleeuers, who all were ſanctified and waſhed with the blood of Chriſt, but afterward are defiled againe by their vnbeleefe: Huber. theſ. 1088.

Anſw. That Church which Chriſt ſanctifieth, and cleanſeth with his blood, he alſo glorifieth: to verſ.27. make it a glorious Church (ſaith the Apoſtle) without ſpot or wrinckle, verſ. 27. But the elect onely and predeſtinate vnto life ſhall be glorified: Ergo, they only are the true Church, and liuely members of Chriſts body. Secondly, our reaſons and arguments grounded vpon the word of God, are theſe, and ſuch like which follow.

Ioh.3.16. 1. Chriſt died only for thoſe that ſhould beleeue in him; But it is not giuen to all to beleeue in Chriſt, except only to the elect, which are ordained to life: Ergo, for them only Chriſt died. That faith

Matth.13.11. is only of the elect, it is thus proued: firſt, To you it is giuen to know the ſecrets of the kingdom, to thē it is not giuen: this knowledge then is not giuen to all. Contra. The meaning is, not that God in his eternall decree, had ordained knowledge vnto ſome, and denied it to others, but that the miniſterie of the word being offered to all, ſome through their incredulitie refuſed the ſame, and ſo their hearts

Act.13.46. were iuſtly hardened: as the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere, That they did put away from them the word of God, which it was neceſſarie ſhould haue been firſt ſpoken vnto them, and ſo iudged themſelues vnworthie of euerlaſting life. The reſt, which did not abuſe their naturall gifts of hearing and vnderſtanding, but willingly gaue eare vnto Chriſt, had power to beleeue in Chriſt, and to continue therein: Sic Huber. theſ. 826. Snecan. p. 522. Anſ. 1. That they which loue not the truth, are iuſtly giuen ouer of

2.Theſſ.2.10. God to a reprobate ſenſe, we grant, as S. Paul ſheweth: Becauſe they would not receiue the loue of the truth, God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſions, &c. 2. Yet men are not ſo the cauſe to themſelues of their beleefe, as they are of their incredulitie: but the cauſe and beginning is of God, as our Sauiour teſti-

Matth.11.26. fieth, It is ſo, O Father, becauſe thy good pleaſure was ſuch. The cauſe then why ſome vnderſtand the myſterie of the kingdome, is not in their willingnes, but in the good pleaſure of God: It is not a gift equally offered to all, which all may receiue, if they will; it is giuen to you, ſaith Chriſt, it is not giuen to them.

To this purpoſe S. Ambroſe: Qui veniunt dei auxilio diriguntur, qui non veniunt ſua poteſtate reluctantur: They that come are directed by Gods helpe; they which come not, by their owne power doe reſiſt, lib. 2. de vocat. Gent. c. 9. And againe, Tales fuerunt, qui ſunt attracti, quales hi, qui in ſua duricie ſunt relicti, ſed illis tribuit gratia ſtupenda quod voluit, iſtis retribuit veritas iuſta, quod debuit, &c. They were the ſame, that are drawne, which they were, that remained in their hardnes: but grace giueth vnto them, as God would; iuſtice rendreth to the other as they deſerue. Wherefore though a man reſiſting the calling of grace, is the cauſe why he beleeueth not, yet in them which obey their calling, it is of the grace of God that they beleeue.

Ioh.10.26. Againe, Chriſt ſaith, You beleeue not, for you are not of my ſheepe. It is not therefore giuen to all to beleeue in Chriſt, but to his ſheepe only, that is the elect, to whom he giueth eternall life, verſ. 28.

Act.13.48. Thirdly, As many, as were ordained to eternall life, beleeued: To beleeue therefore is giuen only to the elect, which are ordained vnto life.

Contra. Huberus thus expoundeth this place: they beleeued, which were ordained to life, that is, which followed the order appointed of God, whereby men ſhould be ſaued, that is, by the preaching of the Goſpell: for this, ſaith he, is the ordinance of God, that they that beleeue the Goſpell ſhould be ſaued, Huber. theſ. 834.

Anſw. 1. If this be the meaning, that they beleeued that were ordained, that is, followed Gods ordinance, which was to beleeue, it is all one to ſay, they beleeued, that beleeued; and ſo there ſhould be a needleſſe repetition of the ſame thing. 2. If we vnderſtand it of faith and beleefe, yet it includeth an act of the ordainer, and they paſſiuely are ordained to beleeue: whereupon it will enſue, that they only beleeued that were ordained to beleeue; for whereas they aſcribe vnto man an actiue power to beleeue; but this, to be ordained, is actiue in God, and paſſiue in man, it cannot be vnderſtood ſimply of the act of beleefe, but of the ordinance of God before going. 3. Though God as well ordaine the meanes, as the end, to the which the meanes doe leade; yet becauſe the end is here directly mentioned, namely, to eternall life, wee are thereby directed to vnderſtand the ordinance of the end, rather, or as well as of the meane: ſo that this muſt be the ſenſe, they that were ordained, that is, appointed of God to be ſaued eternally, beleeued: life eternall is the end, beleefe in Chriſt is the meane, the ordinance or foreappointment of God is the cauſe or beginning. Other not ſatiſfying themſelues with the former expoſition, haue found out a new: As many as were ordained, &c. that is, many of the Gentiles, according to the ordinance of God, beleeued. So they vnderſtand this word (quotquot, as many, as) not of their particular perſons, that beleeued, but by way of diſtribution, of euery kinde and ſort of men preſent: that is, euen the Gentiles alſo as well as the Iewes (as God had foreordained) beleeued: for it is not like, ſay they, that all, in the citie of Antioch, which ſhould bee ſaued, were at this time conuerted, but ſome at one time, ſome at another: Sic Heming. p. 33. Snecan. p. 527.

Anſw. Firſt, they now are conſtrained to vſe that diſtinction, which they will not allow vnto vs: for whereas we interprete S. Pauls ſaying, God would haue all men to be ſaued, of all ſorts of men, they vtterly reiect that ſenſe, and yet are driuen heere to vſe it themſelues. Secondly, yet the word there vſed, πάντες omnes, will better beare that ſenſe, then the word ὅσοι, quotquot, (as many, as) which wee reade here: for the word (omnis) all, ſometime in Scripture ſignifieth, not euery particular, but euery kinde, as Decimatis omne olus, You tithe euery herbe, that is, euery manner of herbe. But wheresoeuer you ſhall reade, ὅς, ὅσοι, quiſquis, quotquot, (as many as) it includeth euery particular, as, Sell all that thou haſt: As many as the Lord your God ſhall call: As many as had lands, ſold them: that is, euery one: and ſo muſt it be taken here. Thirdly, it cannot bee vnderſtood here of euery kinde, that is, both Iewes and Gentiles: for they were all Gentiles that beleeued heere, the Iewes openly reſiſted the Apoſtles. Fourthly, to their reaſon wee anſwere: that it is not neceſſarie to reſtraine this ſpeech, As many as were ordained to life, beleeued, to that preſent time: but as S. Luke ſaith, God added from day to day to the Church ſuch as ſhould be ſaued: ſo this may be ſpoken indefinitly, that by the preaching of the Apoſtle, ſo many firſt and laſt beleeued, as ſhould be ſaued. And yet if wee applie it to the preſent auditorie then, not to the whole citie, (for all the citie heard him not at once) wee know nothing to the contrarie, but that euery one of them that was ſaued in that aſſemblie, at that inſtant beleeued.

Luke 11.42.
Luke 18.22.
Acts 2.39.
Acts 4.34.
Acts 2.47.

Our ſecond argument out of Scripture is this: for whom Chriſt is a Redeemer, for them alſo he is a Mediatour and aduocate: but he is an aduocate only for the elect, not for the reprobate: I pray not for the world, but for thoſe which thou haſt giuen me: Ergo, Chriſt by his death onely redeemed the elect.

Argum.2.

Contra. 1. Huberus anſwereth, that Chriſt prayeth not for the world, that is, that the workes and endeuours of the wicked and vnbeleeuers ſhould be approued: yet ſaith he, Pro mundo orandum eſt, vt conuertatur: We muſt pray for the world, that it may be conuerted: theſ. 925.

Anſw. 1. Chriſt ſo farre foorth prayeth not for the world, as he prayeth for his; but for his owne he prayeth, that they may be ſaued: verſ. 24. I will that they which thou haſt giuen me, to be with me where I am: Therefore in that ſenſe he prayeth not for the world, that it ſhould bee conuerted or ſaued: and therefore ſeeing the world hath no part in Chriſts mediation, and interceſſion, neither haue they any benefit by his redemption.

verſ. 24.

2. Chriſt prayeth onely for thoſe, which were giuen him out of the world, verſ. 6, 9. But all the world was not giuen vnto Chriſt to be ſaued: for how can the world be giuen out of the world? Againe, Chriſt giueth glorie, that is, eternal life to thoſe that are giuen him, verſ. 22. but the whole world hath not eternall life, but thoſe only that are elected thereunto: Ergo, the world is not giuen Chriſt to be ſaued, neither doth he pray for them.

Ioh.17.6,9.
verſ. 22.

3. Though we in charitie may pray for the conuerſion of Turks, Iewes, Infidels, out of the world: yet it followeth not that Chriſt did pray for the world: for hee knew who they were that ſhould be ſaued, and ſo doe not we, and therefore we are to hope the beſt, euen of thoſe which are in the world.

4. Origen thus expoundeth this place, Hom. 9. in Leuitic. Non exorat Chriſtus pro his, &c. pro illis exorat tantum, qui ſunt ſors Domini: Chriſt prayeth not for them, &c. but only for thoſe which are the Lords lot or portion.

Contra. 2. Hemmingius anſwereth, that by the world heere wee muſt vnderſtand the peruerſe and obſtinate companie of the Iewes, which had alreadie wilfully refuſed grace offered vnto them, and ſo had committed ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, for thoſe Chriſt prayeth not, pag. 42.

Mark 3.30.

Anſw. That Chriſt by the world vnderſtandeth not onely the wicked of that time, but all vnbeleeuers to the end of the world, it is thus ſhewed: As they are, which are giuen Chriſt, for whom hee prayeth; ſo is the world to be vnderſtood, for them which he prayeth not: but by thoſe that are giuen him he vnderſtandeth all beleeuers, not onely at that time, but to the end of the world. Therefore by the world our Sauiour meaneth all vnbeleeuers whatſoeuer; and not the obſtinate onely of that time.

Ioh.17.20,24.

Cont. 3. Snecanus de prædeſtinat. p. 660. ſaith, that by the world Chriſt vnderſtandeth thoſe that doe contemne the benefit of Chriſts death, as, If the world hate you, it hated me before you: and ſo they exclude themſelues from grace offered in Chriſt, not that any ſimply are excluded before their vnbeliefe.

Ioh.15.18.

Anſw. 1. Firſt, it is true, that there are none elected in the eternall counſell of God, but are ordained in time to beleeue, nor none excluded, but doe afterward by their owne malice and frowardnes iuſtly exclude themſelues from beleefe: yet it is certaine, that the number and companie of beleeuers is foreſeene and preordained of God, and ſo conſequently of the other alſo: as it may thus appeare; Chriſt praying for thoſe, that ſhall beleeue in him, verſ. 20. ſaith, verſ. 22. I haue giuen them the glorie, &c. and verſ. 24. I will, that they which thou haſt giuen me, &c. They which as yet beleeued not, but ſhould beleeue, are alreadie giuen vnto Chriſt, and euen now glorified: what is this elſe, but that they are preordained of God, which ſhould beleeue in Chriſt, and that they are alreadie giuen vnto him, and glorified in the purpoſe of God? Secondly, wee will adioyne alſo the teſtimonie of Auguſtine:

1.Cor.11.32. Eſt mundus de quo ſcriptum eſt, ne cum mundo hoc damnemur: pro iſto mundo non rogat, neque enim quo ſit prædeſtinatus, ignorat: eſt mundus, de quo Apoſtolus, Deus erat in Chriſto mundum ſibi reconcilians, pro iſto mundo rogat, &c. Tractat. in Iohan. 110. There is a world, of the which it is written, that we be not damned with the world: for this world Chriſt prayeth not; for hee was not ignorant to what end it was predeſtinate: there is a world, of the which the Apoſtle ſaith, God was in Chriſt reconciling the world, &c. for this world Chriſt prayeth: Ergo, for this world Chriſt only died.

Argum. 3. Ioh.17.19. Our third argument is this: Chriſt only died for thoſe, to whom the benefit of his death verily and indeed is applied, and which finde life by his death: For their ſakes ſanctifie I my ſelfe (that is, to be an acceptable ſacrifice vpon the croſſe) that they alſo may be ſanctified. And verſ. 2. Chriſt giueth eternall life to all that were giuen him: But all the world is not ſanctified, or regenerate by Chriſt, nor yet commeth to eternall life, but onely thoſe that ſhall be ſaued: Ergo, Chriſt died not for the whole world, but for the elect only, that ſhall be ſaued. Neither can it be anſwered, that Chriſt died for all, becauſe all may, if they will, beleeue; and ſo be ſaued: for Chriſt ſpeaketh not of a power or poſſibilitie only to be ſanctified, and ſo ſaued, but of an actuall ſanctification, and ſaluation: they are verily ſanctified, for whom Chriſt ſanctifieth himſelfe, and hee giueth eternall life indeed to all them that are giuen him: wherefore ſeeing that all men are not ſanctified, nor brought to eternall life, but ſuch as are indeed ordained to ſaluation; it followeth, that for them only Chriſt died.

Argum. 4. Chriſt died only for thoſe that are appointed to ſaluation, for the death of Chriſt is a ſubordinate meane for the ſaluation of thoſe, whom God would haue ſaued: But all men in the world are not appointed to ſaluation, therefore Chriſt died not for all. It will be anſwered, that it is Gods will, that all men ſhould be ſaued by Chriſt, with this condition, ſo that they beleeue in him, and that God hath not made any ſpeciall election and ſeparation of ſome from the reſt, which ſhould be ſaued, but that indifferently all men are comprehended vnder Gods conditionall decree of election, that is, as many as ſhall beleeue. If then wee can proue out of the word of God, that Gods election vnto life is not conditionall, but abſolute, in ſetting a certaine number apart, who onely ſhould haue power to beleeue, and ſo only be ſaued by Chriſt, and none beſide, then it will appeare manifeſtly, that for them Chriſt only died.

Gods election abſolute, not conditionall.

1. Our firſt place to proue an abſolute and particular election of ſome only vnto life, is, that Many are called, but few choſen: which place ſheweth, that although the externall meanes of ſaluation be offered to many, yet not all of them, but ſome only are elected and choſen vnto life.

Matth.22.14.

Hubertus anſwereth, that there is a generall election, and ſpeciall: the generall election is of all, which are called to the kingdome of God, and outwardlie profeſſe obedience: the ſpeciall election is of thoſe which doe obey their calling, and indeede perſeuere and continue in the faith to the end, theſ. 734. So then his meaning is, that few are elected, not in reſpect of any election and ſeparation made in the counſell and decree of God, but becauſe ſome amongſt many perſeuere to the end.

Contra. Firſt, there can bee no ſuch generall election: for what choyce is there, when all indifferently are receiued? An election therefore implieth a receiuing of ſome, and a refuſing of others: all therefore cannot bee elected. This were alſo to confound vocation, and election: Many are called, but not many are choſen: to ſay therefore that many are choſen, where Chriſt ſaith, A few only are choſen, were to contract his words. Secondly, if the ſpeciall election depend vpon mans perſeuerance and continuance, not this rather vpon the other; if ſome are ſaid to be elected, becauſe they perſeuere, and not rather to perſeuere becauſe they are elected; then are men the cauſe of their owne election, and they chuſe God firſt. But Chriſt ſaith contrarie, you haue not choſen me, but I haue choſen you: and S. Iohn ſaith, not that we loued God, but he loued vs firſt. Saint Paul alſo ſaith, Who hath ſeparated thee? 1.Cor.4.7. It is God that electeth and ſeparateth men one from another, and diſtributeth vnto them his gifts. And againe, in the parable, Is it not lawfull for me to doe as I will with mine owne? The election therefore of ſome dependeth not vpon their owne will, but vpon the good will and pleaſure of God.

Ioh.15.
1.Ioh.4.10.
1.Cor.4.7.
Matth.20.15.

Matth.20.23. 2. The ſecond place, The kingdome of God ſhall be giuen vnto them, for whom it is prepared of my father: The kingdome of God then is not prepared for all, but for ſome. S. Paul alſo ſheweth, That there are veſſels of wrath prepared to deſtruction, and veſſels of mercie prepared vnto glorie: All therefore are not veſſels of mercie, neither are all prepared to glorie.

Rom.9.22.

Snecanus anſwereth, pag. 602. that theſe places proue not any particular exception or reſtraint of ſome certaine men prepared to glorie, or of others to deſtruction, but that generally and indifferently, ly, the kingdome of God is prepared for all that ſhall beleeue, and they that beleeue not, are prepared by their owne incredulitie to deſtruction.

Contra. Wee alſo grant, that none but beleeuers are prepared to glorie: but wee make beleefe a conſequent and effect of their election and preparation to glorie: ſo that the number of beleeuers is as certaine before God, as certainly he hath decreed who ſhall be ſaued: for I aske, whence commeth it that wee haue faith? it is not of our ſelues, but it is the gift of God. And, it is the worke of God to beleeue. Epheſ.2.9. Ioh.6.29. If faith then be Gods gift, how is it that all haue not faith? but becauſe God giueth it not to all. And why is it not giuen to all? but that God in mercie hath choſen ſome, whom he purpoſeth to ſaue in Chriſt: And vnto theſe only faith is giuen. If ye ſay, God giueth faith to all, but all receiue it not: then is Gods will reſiſted: for if he would haue all men beleeue, and they will not; then doth the will of man fruſtrate Gods will.

Huberus anſwereth, that all men are elected and adopted in Chriſt, *theſ.*748. And that God giueth faith, conuerteth the heart, illuminateth, worketh effectually in all that are ſo elected, and made the veſſels of mercie, *theſ.*867. But yet ſo that the veſſels of honour thus prepared of God, may bee made the veſſels of diſhonour *theſ.*903. So the ſame veſſels are prepared of God to honour, of themſelues and Satan to deſtruction, *theſ.*870.

Contra. Firſt, thus it ſhall come to paſſe, that the veſſels of honor ſhall be prepared to deſtruction, which is contrarie to the text alleaged, That the kingdome of heauen ſhall be giuen vnto them for whom it is prepared: But by his ſaying, they that are prepared for it ſhall not haue it. Secondly, by this meanes alſo Satan is made ſtronger then God: for whom he prepareth to glorie, the other prepareth to deſtruction. But Chriſt ſaith otherwiſe, none is able to plucke them out of mine hand, Ioh.10.28.

3. The third place: They only are ordained to life, that are giuen to Chriſt: Ioh.17.2. Chriſt giueth eternall life to all, that are giuen him: Ioh.17.2. but a certaine number taken out of the world, not the whole world is giuen to Chriſt, verſ.6. thou gaueſt them me out of the world, thine they were, &c. Ergo, the number is certaine and definite before God, of them that ſhall be ſaued.

Snecanus anſwereth: Firſt, Chriſt ſpeaketh not here of eternall election, but of ſuch as were giuen him out of the world to be his Apoſtles, of which number Iudas was one, who was giuen vnto Chriſt, and yet periſhed; but they that by eternall election are giuen vnto Chriſt, periſh not, pag.724.

Contra. Firſt, that Chriſt ſpeaketh of thoſe that were giuen him eternally, it is plaine; becauſe, to them Chriſt giueth eternall life, verſ.2. he glorifieth them, verſ.22. hee will haue them to be where hee is, Ioh.17.22.24. verſ.24. But ſuch are eternally elected. Secondly, though Iudas may be ſaid in ſome ſenſe to be giuen to Chriſt in reſpect of his Apoſtleſhip; yet was hee not giuen as the reſt of the Apoſtles: for of them Chriſt ſaith, that they kept his word, verſ.6. that hee was glorified in them, verſ.10. they were not of the world, verſ.14 But Iudas neither kept Chriſts word, neither yet was Chriſt glorified in him; and he was of the world: therefore they were giuen eternally to Chriſt, though Iudas was not.

Snecanus. Secondly, though we vnderſtand here eternall election, whereby ſome were giuen vnto Chriſt, yet it implieth not a ſpeciall exception and choice of ſome perſons, but that all indifferently were giuen vnto Chriſt, that ſhould beleeue in him: Snecan.ibid.

Contra. Firſt, Chriſt ſaying, the men, which thou gaueſt me out of the world, aſſigneth ſome ſpeciall perſons, that were giuen vnto him, namely his Apoſtles, as it is cleere by the text: And if ſome particular perſons were giuen vnto him, why may there not bee a particular aſſignement, and cogniſance alſo before God of the reſt that are giuen vnto him? Secondly, where Chriſt ſaith, ſpeaking of his Apoſtles, thine they were, and thou gaueſt them me, verſ.6. it ſheweth an abſolute election before God, Ioh.17.6,8. without any reſpect of their faith: for firſt, Chriſt ſaith, they are thine, that is, by election; and then they are giuen to him, to know him, and beleeue in him, verſ.8.

4. The fourth place: Whoſe names are in the booke of life: Whoſe names are not written in the booke Philip.4.3. of life from the foundation of the world: Apocal.17.8. Therefore ſome were elected in the beginning before God, ſome not elected.

Huberus anſwereth: that all are elected in Chriſt, and written in the booke of life, but with a condition; ſo that they beleeue, and continue in faith: whereupon it commeth to paſſe, that they which beleeue not, doe loſe their ſaluation, and ſo are as not written in that booke, but are raſed out of it, *theſ.*917.

Pucksius alſo anſwereth to the ſame effect, that not to be written in the booke of life muſt be vnderſtood poſitiuely, not priuatiuely, that is, they are written and declared through their contumacie or contempt worthie of damnation: *ration.*96.

*Cont.*1. The text is, They are not written in the booke of life from the foundation of the world: which firſt ouerthroweth Huberus anſwere, that ſaith, they were written, but after raſed out: for they were not written from the foundation of the world, not from the beginning, that is, neuer.

2. Secondly, it meeteth with the other cauill: for in that they were not written from the foundation, &c. it ſheweth, that they were ſhut out of the booke of life, before their contumacie or infidelitie appeared; and therefore their contumacie which appeared in the world, could not be the cauſe of their names not writing in the booke of life, which was done before the foundation of the world: And thus much of our reaſons and arguments deduced out of Scripture.

Laſtly, that Chriſt died onely for the elect, this euidence we haue of antiquitie. 1. Origen hom. 9. Leuit. alleaged before, affirmeth, that Chriſt prayeth only, pro illis, qui ſunt ſors Domini, for the, that are the Lords lot or portion: Homil. 1. in Cantic. Eccleſiam dicimus omnium cœtum ſanctorum: By the Church vnderſtand the companie of all Saints. If the Saints only make the Church, and Chriſt died only for his Church, Epheſ. 5. 25. then conſequently he died only for the Saints. Epheſ. 5. 25.

2. S. Ambroſe lib. 5. in Luc. c. 7. Chriſtus pro omnibus mortuus, pro nobis tamen ſpecialiter paſſus: Chriſt died for all, but more ſpecially ſuffered for vs. In 2. Cor. 5. Omnibus qui ſunt ex eius corpore vitam acquiſiuit: He procured life to all of his bodie.

3. S. Auguſtine ſaith, Electi ſunt ad regnandum cum Chriſto: They were elected to raigne with Chriſt, de corrept. & grat. c. 7. but Chriſt only died for thoſe that ſhall raigne with him, Father I will, that they, which thou haſt giuen me, be with me, where I am. Againe, Chriſt died onely, and gaue his life for his ſheep. The elect only are the ſheep of Chriſt, as Auguſtine ſaith, De ouibus iſtis, nec lupus rapit, nec fur tollit, nec latro interficit: Of theſe ſheepe, neither the woolfe ſnatcheth, nor the theefe taketh, nor the robber killeth, Tract. 48. in Ioann. Ioh. 17. 24. Ioh. 10. 11.

4. Cyrillus: Chriſt was made ſubiect to his father, ſed pro ſolis credentibus in eum, pro quibus ſeipſum tanquam immaculatum agnum patri obtulit, but only for thoſe that beleeue in him, for whom he offered vp himſelfe an immaculate Lambe to his father. Lib. 10. theſaur. c. 8.

5. Maximus ſaith: Chriſtus omnibus natus, ſed fidelibus dat ſalutem: Chriſt was borne for all, but he gaue ſaluation to the elect. Hom. 4 de Chriſt.

6. Primaſius: Pro omnibus effuſus eſt ſanguis Chriſti, ſed credentibus prodeſt: The blood of Chriſt was ſhed for all, but it is profitable to the beleeuers, &c. That is, his death was ſufficient for all, but effectuall only for beleeuers. In 2. c. ad Tim.

7. Theodulus: Hos & illos gratiæ participes fore dixit, non tamen ſimpliciter, verum credentes, &c. Theſe and them he ſaid ſhould be partakers of grace, yet not ſimply, but the beleeuers. In 3. c. ad Rom.

8. Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. c. 14. Chriſtus eccleſiam, quam precioſo ſuo ſanguine redemit, nunquam deſerturus eſt: Chriſt will neuer forſake the Church, which he hath redeemed with his precious blood: but they, which are neuer forſaken, are the elect.

9. Concil. Wormatienſ. præfat. Eccleſiam catholicam precio ſui ſanguinis redemptam, cum eo credimus in perpetuum regnaturam: We doe beleeue that the Catholike Church redeemed with the price of his blood, ſhall raigne with him for euer: but the elect only ſhall raigne with him for euer.

10. Bernard. ſerm. 9. in Pſal. 90. Chriſtus ſecundum tempus pro impijs mortuus, ſecundum prædeſtinationem pro fratribus & amicis: Chriſt in reſpect of the time died for the wicked; in reſpect of predeſtination only, for his brethren and friends.

11. Cauſ. 33. diſt. 4. c. 8. ex Auguſtino: Illi Chriſto intelliguntur dari, qui ordinati ſunt in vitam æternam: They are vnderſtood to be giuen to Chriſt, which are ordained to eternall life: as our Sauiour himſelfe ſaith, This is the will of my Father, that of all, which hee hath giuen me, I ſhould loſe nothing: and againe, Chriſt died to gather together in one, the children of God, which were ſcattered: hee died then only for the children of God, that is, the elect. Ioh. 6. 39. Ioh. 11. 52.

12. Magiſt. ſententiar. lib 3. diſtinct. 19. g. Chriſtus omnes fideles per mortem reconciliauit: Chriſt reconciled the faithfull by his death: diſt. 31. d. Chriſtus electos tantum ſicut ſe dilexit, eorumque ſalutem optauit, &c. Chriſt loued only the elect as himſelfe, and deſired their ſaluation.

13 Thomas Aquine witneſſeth the ſame: that God was appeaſed by the death of Chriſt for all the offences of mankinde, quantum ad illos qui Chriſto paſſo coniunguntur: in reſpect of thoſe which are ioyned to Chriſt, &c. And againe, men are deliuered both from common and particular ſinnes, communicando per fidem & ſpem eius paſſioni, by communicating by faith and hope with his paſſion, &c. 3. p. q. 49. artic. 4. 5.

14. We want not here the conſent of other reformed Churches: Confeſſ. Heluet. former, chap. 11. Chriſt hath reconciled to his heauenly father all the faithfull, and purged their ſinnes, &c. but faith is only of the elect: as in the ſame confeſſ. the latter, chap. 10. Chriſt hath predeſtinate the Saints, whom he will ſaue in Chriſt. And chap. 15. God alone of his power doth giue faith to the elect, — as S. Luke witneſſeth, as many as were ordained to life beleeued, &c. Thus then the argument ſtandeth, Chriſt died only for the faithful, and ſuch as beleeue in him: but the elect only haue faith: Ergo, for them only Chriſt died. Harm. ſect. 6. pag. 92. Ibid. p. 84. ſect. 5. pag. 245.

15. The preſent Æthiopike Church putteth theſe two together, ſpeaking of Chriſtian parents and their children: Electi ſunt & conſecrati ex corporis & ſanguinis noſtri Ieſu Chriſti communicatione: They are elect and conſecrate by the communication of the bodie and blood of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. Zaga Zabo apud Damianum a Goes.

THE THIRD GENERALL ARGVMENT, AGAINST the vniuerſall and confuſed communitie of Redemption by Chriſt, drawne from the manifold inconueniences and abſurdities, which neceſſarily enſue and follow vpon this opinion.

A*Bſurdum* 1. Firſt in affirming that Chriſt dyed vniuerſally for all that ſhould beleeue, and not for any ſpeciall elected ſort, they conſequently doe hold, that God ſpecially and particularly elected none vnto ſaluation, but onely in generall, and indifferently all that ſhould beleeue. And thus in effect, they take away predeſtination, making it to be a confuſed and conditionall decree of God to ſaue whomſoeuer: This we are then to proue, that Gods election is certaine and definite, and that he knoweth and decreeth the number of the choſen.

Firſt, we reaſon thus, whatſoeuer God did fore-ſee, that he was to doe in the world, that alſo he decreed and ordained: Some things he fore-ſeeth only, namely, ſuch things as are done in the world, and not by him, as euill and ſinfull workes: But whatſoeuer God doth in the world, he both fore-ſaw and decreed; as Auguſtine ſaith, Prædeſtinatione ea Deus praſcierat, quæ erat facturus, præſcire autem potest, quæ non eſt facturus: God in predeſtinating did fore-ſee, that is, did both predeſtinate and fore-ſee, whatſoeuer he was to doe in the world; but he onely fore-ſaw the things that he was not to doe, as all ſinnes whatſoeuer, *lib.2.de perſeuerant.cap.*10. But God in the beginning did fore-ſee the particular end of euery man in the world: The Lord knoweth who are his: that is, he knoweth the definite and certaine number of the elect: as Auguſtine alſo witneſſeth, Non temere quenquam creat Deus, aut quid de illis boni operetur ignoret: God createth no man raſhly, neither is ignorant to what good vſe or purpoſe he hath made them, cont.Iulian.lib.5.cap.3. Ergo, God hath defined and decreed the particular number of ſuch, as ſhall be ſaued.

2.Tim.2.19.

And for better proofe of the propoſition: firſt, we ſay further, that ſeeing the knowledge and will of God, are infinite, as he himſelfe; and that the attributes of God, receiue neither magis vel minus, more or leſſe, his will is not greater then his knowledge, nor this more ample then the other, in their proper obiects: hereupon it followeth, that ſeeing God by his knowledge knoweth all things, which are to be knowne, ſo by his will he decreeth all things, that doe fall vnder his decree, namely, ſuch things as are good, and to his glory: ſuch is the particular election of thoſe, that are ſaued: Ergo, by him it is decreed. 2. Further, there can be but two kindes of things, which are without the compaſſe of Gods decree, either what he knoweth not, or what he doth not; of the firſt ſort there is none, becauſe God knoweth all things; of the ſecond, are all euill and ſinfull workes, which God hath no part in; But the particular election of men, is neither vnknowne nor vnwrought by God, but both knowne of him, and wrought by him: Ergo, alſo decreed. 3. The particular end of the elect dependeth either of ſome fatall neceſſitie, ſome accidentall chance, or of the will of man, or it ſtandeth by Gods euerlaſting decree: there can be aſſigned no other cauſe: Not the firſt, for that were to tie God vnto ſecondarie cauſes, for ſuch was the ſtoicall deſtinie; not the ſecond, for that were to ouerthrow Gods prouidence, by the which all things are gouerned, and not by chance: not the third, which were to aduance the creature aboue his Creator: and S.Paul ſaith, It is not of the willer, nor the runner, &c. Ergo, Gods ſpeciall and definite decree muſt ſtand: As Auguſtine alſo concludeth: Certe hic, vbi nulla eſt fati immobilitas, nulla fortunæ temeritas, nulla perſonæ dignitas, quid reſtat niſi miſericordiæ & veritatis profunditas? Certainly in this caſe, where neither things are gouerned by fatall neceſſitie, nor by raſh vnaduiſed chance, what other cauſe remaineth then the profunditie of Gods mercy and truth? *Cont.Iulian.6.cap.*5. Fourthly, it skilleth not, concerning the matter in hand, namely, the particular and perſonall election of thoſe that ſhall be ſaued, whether we vrge Gods preſcience onely or predeſtination: for if God did onely fore-ſee in particular, who, and how many, and of what condition, ſhould beleeue in Chriſt, and be ſaued; and that as God fore-ſaw, ſo it muſt be, that the ſame, ſo manie, no other, no more ſhall beleeue, then God fore-ſaw; then muſt the number of the elect and beleeuers be as certaine, definite and determined, as if they yeelded to Gods decree herein: wherefore they muſt either doubt of Gods preſcience, or confeſſe a certaine determination of the number of the elect.

Rom.9.16.

That there is a certaine and definite number of the elect.

Secondly, we haue direct places of Scripture for particular election: Chriſt calleth his ſheepe by name: they are all knowne particularly, and aſſigned to ſaluation as by name: The Apoſtles were perſonally elected of God, & giuen vnto Chriſt: And as ſome of the elect be, ſo are the reſt, for there is one condition of them all. S.Paul ſpeaking of certaine perſons his fellow labourers, amongſt whom hee nameth Clement, ſaith, Their names are written in the booke of life: Ergo, they were ſpecially and particularly elected. Further, the Scripture ſaith, that God calleth the ſtarres of the skie by their names; how much more the ſonnes of men, the children of ſaluation are particularly knowne vnto him: and if the haires of their head are numbred, much more themſelues.

Iohn 10.3.

Iohn 17.6.

Philip.4.3.

The Preacher alſo ſaith: I know, that whatſoeuer God ſhall do, it ſhall be for euer: to it can no man adde, and from it can none diminiſh: But the election of ſuch as ſhall be ſaued is one of Gods works: Ergo, to it can no man adde, or take from it, and ſo conſequently the number of the elect is certaine and determined:

Eccleſ.3.14.

mined:

Gen.28.9. daughters of Canaan, went and tooke to wife the daughter of Iſmael. So that nothing elſe kept Eſau
Gen.27.4. in ſome awe to his father, but onely a hope of ſome temporall bleſſing. But Iſaac loued Eſau, would Gen.25.28. he loue him whom God hated? Anſw.1. It was a fatherly and in ſome ſort a carnall loue: he loued him, for veniſon was his meate: Eſau was an actiue and valiant fellow, and a good hunter, therefore Iſaac made account of him: he loued Eſau only as a father, but Iacob beſide as a Prophet. 2. Iſaac loued
Gen.17.18. Eſau, as Abraham loued Iſmael, and prayed, that he might liue in Gods ſight, yet both of them were refuſed: ſo Samuel being ſent to annoint Dauid King, liked other of his brethren before, whom God liked not: theſe holy Prophets and Patriarches were men, and had their naturall affections.
Thirdly, what if Iſaac did not ſee fully into the ſtate of his children as yet: for he did but as in a cloud
Malach.1.2. behold things to come: ſo much was not reuealed to him, as afterward to the Prophets, Iacob haue
I loued, Eſau haue I hated: And more to the Apoſtles, who doubt not to call him a prophane perſon, Heb.12.16. Hebr.12.16. for as the Patriarches and Prophets liued neerer to the times of our Sauiour Chriſt, ſo were their reuelations more full, and their viſions cleerer.

Now whereas it is ſaid, that Iſaac by faith bleſſed Iacob and Eſau; this doth no whit priuiledge
Eſau: for it was Iſaacs faith, not Eſaus: and though he bleſſed both, yet not alike; for Iacob hath both a ſpirituall and temporall bleſſing: Eſau had only a temporall, the ſpirituall he could not obtaine, no not with teares. Thus whatſoeuer can be ſaid for Eſau, is eaſily remoued. Now againſt him thus much
Gen.25.24. may be alleaged out of Scripture: firſt, Eſau contemned his birth-right, and held it not ſo deare as a meſſe of pottage: wherefore the Scripture calleth him a prophane perſon: this is firſt a fearefull ſigne Heb.6.6. of eternall damnation, to contemne and deſpiſe holy things: for ſuch as make a mocke of Chriſt (as Heb.10.29. Eſau did that deſpiſed this birth-right in Chriſt) and deſpite the ſpirit of grace: there remaineth nothing
Gen.27.41. elſe, but a fearefull looking for of iudgement, verſ.27. Secondly, Eſau hated Iacob, he is become a perſecutor of the righteous, he hateth thoſe, whom God loueth. So Iſmael perſecuted Iſaac, he that was Gal.4.29. borne after the fleſh, him that was after the ſpirit. Thirdly, Eſau was diſobedient to his parents, hee maried heatheniſh women, daughters of Infidels, to vexe his parents withall: As the Apoſtle ſaith of Rom.1.29.30. the Gentiles, God gaue them ouer to a reprobate minde, to doe thoſe things that were not conuenient; as being full of enuie, murther, (ſo was Eſau toward Iacob) diſobedient to parents, ſo was he toward Iſaac and Rebecca. Fourthly, Eſau expecteth, and wiſheth his fathers death: the dayes of mourning for my father will come ſhortly: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, I hope my father will not liue long; then will I ſlay my Gen.27.41. brother Iacob: Thus enuie in Eſau bringeth forth murther: and this murtherous heart continued toward Gen.31.38. Iacob twentie yeares: for ſo long ſerued Iacob in Labans houſe. And after at his returne he ſent a meſſenger to bee reconciled to his brother Eſau, who came againſt him with foure hundred men
Gen.32.6. with a purpoſe to haue ſlaine him: but that at the inſtance of Iacobs prayer, by the mightie power of Prouer.22.1. God, (in whoſe hands the hearts of kings are, to turne them, as the veſſels vpō the waters, his heart was Gen.33. mollified, and his affection relented towards his brother. Laſtly, S. Paul intreating of Gods eternall election, bringeth in the examples of Iacob and Eſau, the one loued, the other hated of God.

Thus by more euident coniecture, and likely arguments we are able to proue out of Scripture the finall reiection of Eſau, then they can ſhew the contrarie: And ſo conſequently, notwithſtanding all theſe humane deuiſes, we haue a moſt firme and euident teſtimonie for particular and perſonall election in this place, drawne from the example of Iacob and Eſau. And thus much of the firſt inconuenience that muſt needes enſue vpon this opinion concerning vniuerſall grace, which ouerthroweth the foundation of Gods predeſtination: which they doe as it were hang in the ayre, affirming that it is nothing elſe but an vniuerſall confuſed decree, as though God either did not know the particular end of euery man, or knowing the ſame willed it not.

Now laſtly, that God hath from the beginning made a particular and abſolute election of ſome, and that Gods election is not generall and conditionall, it hath beene the auncient doctrine of the Church.

1 Ambroſe. 1. Tim.5. Electos Angelos dicit, quia ſunt alij reprobi, non Dei Angeli, ſed diaboli, &c. He ſaith elect Angels, becauſe there are ſome reprobate, not the Angels of God, but of the diuell. As there be then among the Angels ſome elect, ſome reprobate, ſo is it among men: but the election and reprobation of Angels was particular and certaine: Ergo, ſo is the election and reprobation of men.

2 Againe, de vocat. Gentium lib.1.c.7. Multi diſcretionem illam. qua Deus alios eligit, alios non eligit, &c. That diſcretion or ſeparation, whereby God hath choſen ſome, and not choſen others, many do aſcribe to mans will. Et lib.2.c 8. Hac altitudine diſcretionis dei non conturbabitur cor noſtrum, &c. By this depth of Gods ſeparation or diſcerning of men our heart ſhall not be troubled, if we ſtedfaſtly beleeue that Gods iudgement is iuſt, &c. If there be then a ſeparation, and diſcerning of men in Gods euerlaſting decree; then are not all generally and conditionally elected: for this were not to make a ſeparation, but a confuſion of all together.

3 Auguſtine to this purpoſe writeth very directly: Tract.14. in Iohan. Eſt quidam populus natus ad iram dei, & ad hoc praecognitus, &c. There is a certaine people borne to the wrath of God, and foreſeene to this end.

4 Tract.43. Iſti—morti aeterna praedeſtinati reſpondebant, &c. Thoſe which were predeſtinate to euerlaſting death, anſwered, Thou haſt a diuell.

5 Tract.48. How ſaid he to thoſe, You are not of my ſheepe, Quia videbat eos ad ſempiternum exitium itium preparatos,&c. Becauſe he ſaw that they were prepared to euerlaſting deſtruction, and not redeemed to eternall life by his blood. By theſe places it is euident what Auguſtines iudgement was, that Gods election was not indefinite or vncertaine, but that the end of euery man, whether to life or death, was determined and decreed in particular.

6 And yet more directly he ſaith of the predeſtinate, Quorum ita certus eſt numerus, vt nec addatur eis quiſquam, nec minuatur ex eis: Whoſe number is ſo certaine, that neither any can be added vnto them, nor none diminiſhed, &c. De corrept.& grat.c.13.

7 The ſame was the opinion of Iuſtine Martyr, long before, that the finall conſummation of the world is deferred, that the number of thoſe, which were fore-knowne of God, may be fulfilled. ἡ συντελεια ὁ ἀριθμὸς Apolog.2 pro Chriſtian.

8 The reformed Churches, now teach the ſame doctrine, of the certaintie of the number of the elect. Latter confeſſ. of Heluetia, c.10. The Saints are choſen in Chriſt by God, vnto a ſure end. Confeſſ. of Baſile: art.1.§.3. We confeſſe, that God before hee had created the world had choſen all thoſe, to whom he would freely giue the inheritance of eternall bleſſedneſſe. Harm.5. ſect. p.84. Ibid.p.86.

9 Proſper and Hilarius, do report this to haue been one of the errors of the Pelagians, Electorum numerum augeri & minui poſſe, That the number of the elect may bee encreaſed and diminiſhed, &c. which error is by them condemned. Epiſtol. ad Auguſtin.

10 Thom. Aquine concurreth with Auguſtine, who concludeth, that, numerus prædeſtinatorum eſt Deo certus, non ſolum formaliter, ſed materialiter: The number of the predeſtinate is certaine before God, not only formally, that is in reſpect of the knowledge of God, but materially in regard of their election. T.Aqui.1.pars. queſt.23.art.7.

11 Magiſt. ſenten. lib.1. diſt.43.E. Non vult Deus omnes homines iuſtificari, & tamen quis dubitat eum poſſe: God will not iuſtifie all men, and yet who doubteth but he can. Lib.2. diſt.21.f. Humana natura, ex parte redempta eſt: Mans nature is redeemed but in part. If all be not redeemed, then all are not elected. Lib.3. diſt.32.a. Magis diligit rationales creaturas, & de illis eas amplius, quæ ſunt membra vnigeniti: God loueth reaſonable creatures more than vnreaſonable; and among the reaſonable, thoſe which are the members of his onely begotten ſonne, &c. If all men be not loued alike, then are they not all elected alike.

THE SECOND INCONVENIENCE THAT followeth the opinion of vniuerſall grace.

ABſurd.2. The ſecond inconuenience that iſſueth out of this doctrine of vniuerſall election, is this, that Gods election ariſeth ex præuiſa fide, from the fore-ſight of their faith which ſhall bee ſaued: Huberus theſ.786. Deus electionem ſuam non abſolutè ſtatuit, ſed defixit eam in filio ſuo, vt qui credunt in eum, ſalui fiant: God hath not abſolutely made any election, but hee hath founded it in Chriſt, that they which beleeue in him ſhould be ſaued; they that beleeue not, ſhould be damned. So Hemingius ſaith: Præſcientia Dei regula eſt electionis & prædeſtinationis: The preſcience of God is the rule of election and predeſtination, pag.21. And againe, Non quia præſciti & electi ſumus, credimus, ſed quia credimus, præſciti & electi ad vitam cenſemur: We doe not beleeue, becauſe we are foreſeene and elected, but becauſe we beleeue we were fore-ſeene and elected vnto life, pag,27. Snecanus, though he ſeeme in words to confeſſe, that æternum eligendi propoſitum non dependet ex vlla noſtra fidei, vel bonorum operum præuiſione: That the eternall purpoſe of election dependeth not of the fore-ſight of our faith or workes, pag.461. yet hee is driuen by the ſtreame of words to affirme as the reſt doe, that fides continetur in Dei propoſito, that faith is included in the purpoſe of Gods election, p.463. and that God vniuerſally ordained to ſaluation all that ſhould beleeue, pag.480. They would ground this their opinion concerning the fore-ſight of faith vpon theſe and ſuch like places of Scripture: as, thoſe which he knew before, he predeſtinate to be like the image of his ſonne: Predeſtination then is grounded vpon the fore-knowledge of God: Hemingius de vniuerſalit. grat. pag.29. Rom.8.29.

*Contra.*1. We grant with Auguſtine, that prædeſtinatio eſt quæ ſine præſcientia eſſe non poteſt, Predeſtination is that which cannot bee without preſcience in God, lib.1. de prædeſtinat. ſanctor. cap.10. And thus are they ioyned together in this place: but it followeth not, that one is the cauſe of another. 2. The text maketh directly againſt them: for he ſaith not, whom he knew before ſhould be like the image of his ſonne he predeſtinate; but, whom he knew before he did predeſtinate to be like his ſonne: ſo that this conformitie by faith vnto Chriſt is an effect and conſequent of their predeſtination. 3. Though we admit the former reading, yet haue they gained nothing: for the conformitie to the image of Chriſt conſiſteth in being made partakers of Chriſts ſufferings, whereof S. Peter intreateth, 1.Pet.4.13. vnleſſe they therefore will affirme, that the fore-ſight of mens afflictions is the cauſe of their election, and ſo ioyne in opinion with the olde Pelagians, that grounded election vpon the fore-ſight of good workes, this place is not for their turne. 4. By the knowledge of God in Scripture, the loue, liking, and approbation of God is often ſignified; as, The Lord knoweth the way of the iuſt; that is, approoueth it; Pſal.1.6. I am the good ſhepheard, and know my ſheepe, that is, loue them: ſo in this place, whom he knew before (whom he loued and fauoured) he did predeſtinate. Iohn 10.14.

Againe, they obiect that place: He hath choſen vs in him before the foundation of the world: that is, God hath choſen thoſe whom he fore-ſaw ſhould beleeue in Chriſt, Hemming. fol.26. pag.2. Epheſ.1.4.

Ioh.11.52. 2. Chriſt died not for the nation only, that is, of the Iewes, but, That he might gather together in one the children of God that were ſcattered. But the elect only are the children of God: of whom hee
Ioh.10.16. ſpeaketh againe, namely, of theſe diſperſed and ſcattered children: Other ſheepe I haue alſo, which are not of this folde, them alſo I muſt bring, &c. Theſe are the predeſtinate, as Auguſtine ſaith: Erant predeſtinati, nondum congregati: They were predeſtinate, though not yet gathered together: Auguſtin. ſerm. 50. de verbis Domini in Iohan.

Ioh.15.13. Rom.5.10. 3. Ioh.15.13. Chriſt died only for his friends; the elect only, and ſuch as ſhall be ſaued, only are the friends of Chriſt. And if that place of the Apoſtle be obiected, That Chriſt died for vs, when wee were yet enemies: We anſwere with Bernards diſtinction, Serm. 10. de Pſalm. Qui habitat: Chriſtus ſecundum tempus pro impijs & inimicis mortuus eſt, ſecundum predeſtinationem autem pro fratribus & amicis: Chriſt according to the diſpenſation of time died for the wicked and his enemies: but in reſpect of his predeſtination, for his friends and brethren.

Epheſ.5.26. verſ.23. 4. Saint Paul teſtifieth, that Chriſt gaue himſelfe for his Church, that he might ſanctifie it, &c. and he is the Sauiour of his bodie, verſ. 23. But the elect only, and ſuch as ſhall be ſaued, are members only of his body: Ergo, for ſuch only he died.

Contra. Huberus anſwereth, that the Church is here taken for the whole aſſemblie of beleeuers, and vnbeleeuers, who all were ſanctified and waſhed with the blood of Chriſt, but afterward are defiled againe by their vnbeleefe: Huber. theſ. 1088.

Anſw. That Church which Chriſt ſanctifieth, and cleanſeth with his blood, he alſo glorifieth: to verſ.27. make it a glorious Church (ſaith the Apoſtle) without ſpot or wrinckle, verſ. 27. But the elect onely and predeſtinate vnto life ſhall be glorified: Ergo, they only are the true Church, and liuely members of Chriſts body. Secondly, our reaſons and arguments grounded vpon the word of God, are theſe, and ſuch like which follow.

Ioh.3.16. 1. Chriſt died only for thoſe that ſhould beleeue in him; But it is not giuen to all to beleeue in Chriſt, except only to the elect, which are ordained to life: Ergo, for them only Chriſt died. That faith
Matth.13.11. is only of the elect, it is thus proued: firſt, To you it is giuen to know the ſecrets of the kingdom, to the it is not giuen: this knowledge then is not giuen to all. Contra. The meaning is, not that God in his eternall decree, had ordained knowledge vnto ſome, and denied it to others, but that the miniſterie of the word being offered to all, ſome through their incredulitie refuſed the ſame, and ſo their hearts
Act.13.46. were iuſtly hardened: as the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere, That they did put away from them the word of God, which it was neceſſarie ſhould haue been firſt ſpoken vnto them, and ſo iudged themſelues vnworthie of euerlaſting life. The reſt, which did not abuſe their naturall gifts of hearing and vnderſtanding, but willingly gaue eare vnto Chriſt, had power to beleeue in Chriſt, and to continue therein: Sic Huber. theſ. 826. Snecan. p. 522. Anſ. 1. That they which loue not the truth, are iuſtly giuen ouer of
2.Theſſ.2.10. God to a reprobate ſenſe, we grant, as S. Paul ſheweth: Becauſe they would not receiue the loue of the truth, God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſions, &c. 2. Yet men are not ſo the cauſe to themſelues of their beleefe, as they are of their incredulitie: but the cauſe and beginning is of God, as our Sauiour teſti-
Matth.11.26. fieth, It is ſo, O Father, becauſe thy good pleaſure was ſuch. The cauſe then why ſome vnderſtand the myſterie of the kingdome, is not in their willingnes, but in the good pleaſure of God: It is not a gift equally offered to all, which all may receiue, if they will; it is giuen to you, ſaith Chriſt, it is not giuen to them.

To this purpoſe S. Ambroſe: Qui veniunt dei auxilio diriguntur, qui non veniunt ſua poteſtate reluctantur: They that come are directed by Gods helpe; they which come not, by their owne power doe reſiſt, lib. 2. de vocat. Gent. c. 9. And againe, Tales fuerunt, qui ſunt attracti, quales hi, qui in ſua duricie ſunt relicti, ſed illis tribuit gratia ſtupenda quod voluit, iſtis retribuit veritas iuſta, quod debuit, &c. They were the ſame, that are drawne, which they were, that remained in their hardnes: but grace giueth vnto them, as God would; iuſtice rendreth to the other as they deſerue. Wherefore though a man reſiſting the calling of grace, is the cauſe why he beleeueth not, yet in them which obey their calling, it is of the grace of God that they beleeue.

Ioh.10.26. Againe, Chriſt ſaith, You beleeue not, for you are not of my ſheepe. It is not therefore giuen to all to beleeue in Chriſt, but to his ſheepe only, that is the elect, to whom he giueth eternall life, verſ. 28.

Act.13.48. Thirdly, As many, as were ordained to eternall life, beleeued: To beleeue therefore is giuen only to the elect, which are ordained vnto life.

Contra. Huberus thus expoundeth this place: they beleeued, which were ordained to life, that is, which followed the order appointed of God, whereby men ſhould be ſaued, that is, by the preaching of the Goſpell: for this, ſaith he, is the ordinance of God, that they that beleeue the Goſpell ſhould be ſaued, Huber. theſ. 834.

Anſw. 1. If this be the meaning, that they beleeued that were ordained, that is, followed Gods ordinance, which was to beleeue, it is all one to ſay, they beleeued, that beleeued; and ſo there ſhould be a needleſſe repetition of the ſame thing. 2. If we vnderſtand it of faith and beleefe, yet it includeth an act of the ordainer, and they paſſiuely are ordained to beleeue; whereupon it will enſue, that they only beleeued that were ordained to beleeue; for whereas they aſcribe vnto man an actiue power to beleeue; but this, to be ordained, is actiue in God, and paſſiue in man, it cannot be vnderſtood ſimply of the act of beleefe, but of the ordinance of God before going. 3. Though God as well ordaine the meanes, as the end, to the which the meanes doe leade; yet becauſe the end is here directly mentioned, namely, to eternall life, wee are thereby directed to vnderſtand the ordinance of the end, rather, or as well as of the meane: ſo that this muſt be the ſenſe, they that were ordained, that is, appointed of God to be ſaued eternally, beleeued: life eternall is the end, beleefe in Chriſt is the meane, the ordinance or foreappointment of God is the cauſe or beginning. Other not ſatisfying themſelues with the former expoſition, haue found out a new: As many as were ordained, &c. that is, many of the Gentiles, according to the ordinance of God, beleeued: So they vnderſtand this word (quotquot, as many, as) not of their particular perſons, that beleeued, but by way of diſtribution, of euery kinde and ſort of men preſent: that is, euen the Gentiles alſo as well as the Iewes (as God had foreordained) beleeued: for it is not like, ſay they, that all, in the citie of Antioch, which ſhould bee ſaued, were at this time conuerted, but ſome at one time, ſome at another: Sic Heming. p.23. Snecan.p.527.

Anſw. Firſt, they now are conſtrained to vſe that diſtinction, which they will not allow vnto vs: for whereas, we interprete S. Pauls ſaying, God would haue all men to be ſaued, of all ſorts of men, they vtterly reiect that ſenſe, and yet are driuen heere to vſe it themſelues. Secondly, yet the word there vſed, πάντες, omnes, will better beare that ſenſe, then the word ὅσοι, quotquot, (as many, as) which wee reade here: for the word (omnis) all, ſometime in Scripture ſignifieth, not euery particular, but euery kinde, as Decimatis omne olus, You tithe euery herbe, that is, euery manner of herbe. But whereſoeuer you ſhall reade, ὅστις, ὅσοι, quiſquis, quotquot, (as many as) it includeth euery particular, as, Sell all that euer thou haſt: As many as the Lord your God ſhall call: As many as had lands, ſold them: that is, euery one: and ſo muſt it be taken here. Thirdly, it cannot bee vnderſtood here of euery kinde, that is, both Iewes and Gentiles: for they were all Gentiles that beleeued heere, the Iewes openly reſiſted the Apoſtles. Fourthly, to their reaſon wee anſwere: that it is not neceſſarie to reſtraine this ſpeech, As many as were ordained to life, beleeued, to that preſent time: but as S. Luke ſaith, God added from day to day to the Church ſuch as ſhould be ſaued: ſo this may be ſpoken indefinitly, that by the preaching of the Apoſtle, ſo many firſt and laſt beleeued, as ſhould be ſaued. And yet if wee applie it to the preſent auditorie then, not to the whole citie, (for all the citie heard him not at once) wee know nothing to the contrarie, but that euery one of them that was ſaued in that aſſemblie, at that inſtant beleeued.

Argum.2. Ioh.17.19.

Our ſecond argument out of Scripture is this: for whom Chriſt is a Redeemer, for them alſo he is a Mediatour and aduocate: but he is an aduocate only for the elect, not for the reprobate: I pray not for the world, but for thoſe which thou haſt giuen me: Ergo, Chriſt by his death onely redeemed the elect.

Contra. 1. Huberus anſwereth, that Chriſt prayeth not for the world, that is, that the workes and endeuours of the wicked and vnbeleeuers ſhould be approoued: yet ſaith he, Pro mundo orandum eſt, vt conuertatur: We muſt pray for the world, that it may be conuerted: theſ.925.

Anſw. 1. Chriſt ſo farre foorth prayeth not for the world, as he prayeth for his; but for his owne he prayeth, that they may be ſaued: verſ.24. I will that they which thou haſt giuen me, to be with me where I am: Therefore in that ſenſe he prayeth not for the world, that it ſhould bee conuerted or ſaued: and therefore ſeeing the world hath no part in Chriſts mediation, and interceſſion, neither haue they any benefit by his redemption. verſ.24.

2. Chriſt prayeth onely for thoſe, which were giuen him out of the world, verſ.6,9. But all the world was not giuen vnto Chriſt to be ſaued: for how can the world be giuen out of the world? Againe, Chriſt giueth glorie, that is, eternal life to thoſe that are giuen him, verſ.22. but the whole world hath not eternall life, but thoſe only that are elected thereunto: Ergo, the world is not giuen Chriſt to be ſaued, neither doth he pray for them. Ioh.17.6,9. verſ.22.

3. Though we in charitie may pray for the conuerſion of Turks, Iewes, Infidels, out of the world: yet it followeth not that Chriſt did pray for the world: for hee knew who they were that ſhould be ſaued, and ſo doe not we, and therefore we are to hope the beſt, euen of thoſe which are in the world.

4. Origen thus expoundeth this place, Hom.9. in Leuitic. Non exorat Chriſtus pro his, &c. pro illis exorat tantum, qui ſunt ſors Domini: Chriſt prayeth not for them, &c. but only for thoſe which are the Lords lot or portion.

Contra. 2. Hemmingius anſwereth, that by the world heere wee muſt vnderſtand the peruerſe and obſtinate companie of the Iewes, which had alreadie wilfully refuſed grace offered vnto them, and ſo had committed ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, for thoſe Chriſt prayeth not, pag.42. Mark 3.30.

Anſw. That Chriſt by the world vnderſtandeth not onely the wicked of that time, but all vnbeleeuers to the end of the world, it is thus ſhewed: As they are, which are giuen Chriſt, for whom hee prayeth; ſo is the world to be vnderſtood, for them which he prayeth not: but by thoſe that are giuen him he vnderſtandeth all beleeuers, not onely at that time, but to the end of the world. Therefore by the world our Sauiour meaneth all vnbeleeuers whatſoeuer; and not the obſtinate onely of that time. Ioh.17.20,24.

Cont. 3. Snecanus de prædeſtinat. p.660. ſaith, that by the world Chriſt vnderſtandeth thoſe that doe contemne the benefit of Chriſts death, as, If the world hate you, it hated me before you: and ſo they exclude themſelues from grace offered in Chriſt, not that any ſimply are excluded before their vnbeliefe. Ioh.15.18.

Anſw. First, it is true, that there are none elected in the eternall counſell of God, but are ordained in time to beleeue, nor none excluded, but doe afterward by their owne malice and frowardnes iuſtly exclude themſelues from beleefe: yet it is certaine, that the number and companie of beleeuers is foreſeene and preordained of God, and ſo conſequently of the other alſo: as it may thus appeare; Chriſt praying for thoſe, that ſhall beleeue in him, verſ. 20. ſaith, verſ. 22. I haue giuen them the glorie, &c. and verſ. 24. I will, that they which thou haſt giuen me, &c. They which as yet beleeued not, but ſhould beleeue, are alreadie giuen vnto Chriſt, and euen now glorified: what is this elſe, but that they are preordained of God, which ſhould beleeue in Chriſt, and that they are alreadie giuen vnto him, and glorified in the purpoſe of God? Secondly, wee will adioyne alſo the teſtimonie of Auguſtine: 2.Cor.11.32. Eſt mundus de quo ſcriptum eſt, ne cum mundo damnemur: pro iſto mundo non rogat, neque enim quò ſit prædeſtinatus ignorat: eſt mundus, de quo Apoſtolus, Deus erat in Chriſto mundum ſibi reconcilians, pro iſto mundo rogat, &c. Tractat. in Iohan. 110. There is a world, of the which it is written, that we be not damned with the world: for this world Chriſt prayeth not; for hee was not ignorant to what end it was predeſtinate: there is a world, of the which the Apoſtle ſaith, God was in Chriſt reconciling the world, &c. for this world Chriſt prayeth: Ergo, for this world Chriſt only died.

Argum. 3. Ioh.17.19. Our third argument is this: Chriſt only died for thoſe, to whom the benefit of his death verily and indeed is applied, and which finde life by his death: For their ſakes ſanctifie I my ſelfe (that is, to be an acceptable ſacrifice vpon the croſſe) that they alſo may be ſanctified. And verſ. 2. Chriſt giueth eternall life to all that were giuen him: But all the world is not ſanctified, or regenerate by Chriſt, nor yet commeth to eternall life, but onely thoſe that ſhall be ſaued: Ergo, Chriſt died not for the whole world, but for the elect only, that ſhall be ſaued. Neither can it be anſwered, that Chriſt died for all, becauſe all may, if they will, beleeeue; and ſo be ſaued: for Chriſt ſpeaketh not of a power or poſſibilitie only to be ſanctified, and ſo ſaued, but of an actuall ſanctification, and ſaluation: they are verily ſanctified, for whom Chriſt ſanctifieth himſelfe, and hee giueth eternall life indeed to all them that are giuen him: wherefore ſeeing that all men are not ſanctified, nor brought to eternall life, but ſuch as are indeed ordained to ſaluation; it followeth, that for them only Chriſt died.

Argum. 4. Chriſt died only for thoſe that are appointed to ſaluation, for the death of Chriſt is a ſubordinate meane for the ſaluation of thoſe, whom God would haue ſaued: But all men in the world are not appointed to ſaluation, therefore Chriſt died not for all. It will be anſwered, that it is Gods will, that all men ſhould be ſaued by Chriſt, with this condition, ſo that they beleeue in him, and that God hath not made any ſpeciall election and ſeparation of ſome from the reſt, which ſhould be ſaued, but that indifferently all men are comprehended vnder Gods conditionall decree of election, that is, as many as ſhall beleeue. If then wee can proue out of the word of God, that Gods election vnto life is not conditionall, but abſolute, in ſetting a certaine number apart, who onely ſhould haue power to beleeue, and ſo only be ſaued by Chriſt, and none beſide, then it will appeare manifeſtly, that for them Chriſt only died.

Gods election abſolute, not conditionall.

1. Our firſt place to proue an abſolute and particular election of ſome only vnto life, is, that Many are called, but few choſen: Math.22.14. which place ſheweth, that although the externall meanes of ſaluation be offered to many, yet not all of them, but ſome only are elected and choſen vnto life.

Hubertus anſwereth, that there is a generall election, and ſpeciall: the generall election is of all, which are called to the kingdome of God, and outwardlie profeſſe obedience: the ſpeciall election is of thoſe which doe obey their calling, and indeede perſeuere and continue in the faith to the end, theſ. 734. So then his meaning is, that few are elected, not in reſpect of any election and ſeparation made in the counſell and decree of God, but becauſe ſome amongſt many perſeuere to the end.

Contra. Firſt, there can bee no ſuch generall election: for what choyce is there, when all indifferently are receiued? An election therefore implieth a receiuing of ſome, and a refuſing of others: all therefore cannot bee elected. This were alſo to confound vocation, and election: Many are called, but not many are choſen: to ſay therefore, that many are choſen, where Chriſt ſaith, A few only are choſen, were to contract his words. Secondly, if the ſpeciall election depend vpon mans perſeuerance and continuance, not this rather vpon the other; if ſome are ſaid to be elected, becauſe they perſeuere, and not rather to perſeuere becauſe they are elected; then are men the cauſe of their owne election, and they chuſe God firſt. But Chriſt ſaith contrarie, you haue not choſen me, but I haue choſen you: Ioh.15. and S. Iohn ſaith, not that we loued God, but he loued vs firſt. 1.Ioh.4.10. Saint Paul alſo ſaith, Who hath ſeparated thee? 1.Cor.4.7. It is God that electeth and ſeparateth men one from another, and diſtributeth vnto them his gifts. And againe, in the parable, Is it not lawfull for me to doe as I will with mine owne? Math.20.15. The election therfore of ſome dependeth not vpon their owne will, but vpon the good will and pleaſure of God.

2. The ſecond place, The kingdome of God ſhall be giuen vnto them, for whom it is prepared of my father: Math.20.23. The kingdome of God then is not prepared for all, but for ſome. S. Paul alſo ſheweth, That there are veſſels of wrath prepared to deſtruction, and veſſels of mercie prepared vnto glorie: Rom.9.22. All therefore are not veſſels of mercie, neither are all prepared to glorie.

Snecanus anſwereth, pag. 602. that theſe places proue not any particular exception or reſtraint of ſome certaine men prepared to glorie, or of others to deſtruction, but that generally and indifferently, ly, the kingdome of God is prepared for all that ſhall beleeue, and they that beleeue not, are prepared by their owne incredulitie to deſtruction.

Contra. Wee alſo grant, that none but beleeuers are prepared to glorie: but wee make beleefe a conſequent and effect of their election and preparation to glorie: ſo that the number of beleeuers is as certaine before God, as certainly he hath decreed who ſhall be ſaued: for I aske, whence commeth it that wee haue faith? it is not of our ſelues, but it is the gift of God. And, it is the worke of God to beleeue. If faith then be Gods gift, how is it that all haue not faith? but becauſe God giueth it not to all. And why is it not giuen to all? but that God in mercie hath choſen ſome, whom he purpoſeth to ſaue in Chriſt: And vnto theſe only faith is giuen. If ye ſay, God giueth faith to all, but all receiue it not: then is Gods will reſiſted: for if he would haue all men beleeue, and they will not; then doth the will of man fruſtrate Gods will.

Ioh.6.29.

Huberus anſwereth, that all men are elected and adopted in Chriſt, *theſ.*748. And that God giueth faith, conuerteth the heart, illuminateth, worketh effectually in all that are ſo elected, and made the veſſels of mercie, *theſ.*867. But yet ſo that the veſſels of honour thus prepared of God, may bee made the veſſels of diſhonour *theſ.*903. So the ſame veſſels are prepared of God to honour, of themſelues and Satan to deſtruction, *theſ.*870.

Contra. Firſt, thus it ſhall come to paſſe, that the veſſels of honor ſhall be prepared to deſtruction, which is contrarie to the text alleaged, That the kingdome of heauen ſhall be giuen vnto them for whom it is prepared: But by his ſaying, they that are prepared for it ſhall not haue it. Secondly, by this meanes alſo Satan is made ſtronger then God: for whom he prepareth to glorie, the other prepareth to deſtruction. But Chriſt ſaith otherwiſe, none is able to plucke them out of mine hand, Ioh.10.28.

3. The third place: They only are ordained to life, that are giuen to Chriſt: Ioh.17.2. Chriſt giueth eternall life to all, that are giuen him: but a certaine number taken out of the world, not the whole world is giuen to Chriſt, verſ.6. thou gaueſt them me out of the world, thine they were, &c. Ergo, the number is certaine and definite before God, of them that ſhall be ſaued.

Snecanus anſwereth: Firſt, Chriſt ſpeaketh not here of eternall election, but of ſuch as were giuen him out of the world to be his Apoſtles, of which number Iudas was one, who was giuen vnto Chriſt, and yet periſhed; but they that by eternall election are giuen vnto Chriſt, periſh not, pag.724.

Contra. Firſt, that Chriſt ſpeaketh of thoſe that were giuen him eternally, it is plaine; becauſe, to them Chriſt giueth eternall life, verſ.2. he glorifieth them, verſ.22. hee will haue them to be where hee is, verſ.24. But ſuch are eternally elected. Secondly, though Iudas may be ſaid in ſome ſenſe to be giuen to Chriſt in reſpect of his Apoſtleſhip; yet was hee not giuen as the reſt of the Apoſtles: for of them Chriſt ſaith, that they kept his word, verſ.6. that hee was glorified in them, verſ.10. they were not of the world, verſ.14 But Iudas neither kept Chriſts word, neither yet was Chriſt glorified in him; and he was of the world: therefore they were giuen eternally to Chriſt, though Iudas was not.

Snecanus. Secondly, though we vnderſtand here eternall election, whereby ſome were giuen vnto Chriſt, yet it implieth not a ſpeciall exception and choice of ſome perſons, but that all indifferently were giuen vnto Chriſt, that ſhould beleeue in him: Snecan. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, Chriſt ſaying, the men, which thou gaueſt me out of the world, aſſigneth ſome ſpeciall perſons, that were giuen vnto him, namely his Apoſtles, as it is cleere by the text: And if ſome particular perſons were giuen vnto him, why may there not bee a particular aſſignement, and cogniſance alſo before God of the reſt that are giuen vnto him? Secondly, where Chriſt ſaith, ſpeaking of his Apoſtles, thine they were, and thou gaueſt them me, verſ.6. it ſheweth an abſolute election before God, without any reſpect of their faith: for firſt, Chriſt ſaith, they are thine, that is, by election; and then they are giuen to him, to know him, and beleeue in him, verſ.8.

Ioh.17.6,8.

4. The fourth place: Whoſe names are in the booke of life: Whoſe names are not written in the booke of life from the foundation of the world: Therefore ſome were elected in the beginning before God, ſome not elected.

Philip.4.3.
Apocal.17.8.

Huberus anſwereth: that all are elected in Chriſt, and written in the booke of life, but with a condition; ſo that they beleeue, and continue in faith: whereupon it commeth to paſſe, that they which beleeue not, doe loſe their ſaluation, and ſo are as not written in that booke, but are raſed out of it, *theſ.*917.

Puckſius alſo anſwereth to the ſame effect, that not to be written in the booke of life muſt be vnderſtood poſitiuely, not priuatiuely, that is, they are written and declared through their contumacie or contempt worthie of damnation: *ration.*96.

*Cont.*1. The text is, They are not written in the booke of life from the foundation of the world: which firſt ouerthroweth Huberus anſwere, that ſaith, they were written, but after raſed out: for they were not written from the foundation of the world, not from the beginning, that is, neuer.

2. Secondly, it meeteth with the other cauill: for in that they were not written from the foundation, &c. it ſheweth, that they were ſhut out of the booke of life, before their contumacie or infidelitie appeared; and therefore their contumacie which appeared in the world, could not be the cauſe of their names not writing in the booke of life, which was done before the foundation of the world: And thus much of our reaſons and arguments deduced out of Scripture.

Laſtly, that Christ died onely for the elect, this euidence we haue of antiquitie. 1. Origen. hom. 9. Leuit. alleaged before, affirmeth, that Chriſt prayeth only, pro illis, qui ſunt ſors Domini; for the, that are the Lords lot or portion: Homil. 2. in Cantic. Eccleſiam vero omnium coetum ſanctorum: By the Church vnderſtand the companie of all Saints. If the Saints only make the Church, and Chriſt died Epheſ. 5. 25. only for his Church, Epheſ. 5. 25. then conſequently he died only for the Saints.

2. S. Ambroſe lib. 5. in Luc. c. 7. Chriſtus pro omnibus mortuus, pro nobis tamen ſpecialiter paſſus: Chriſt died for all, but more ſpecially ſuffered for vs. In 1. Cor. 15. Omnibus qui ſunt ex eius corpore vitam acquiſiuit: He produced life to all of his bodie.

3. S. Auguſtine ſaith, Electi ſunt ad regnandum cum Chriſto: They were elected to raigne with Chriſt, de corrept. & grat. c. 7. but Chriſt only died for thoſe that ſhall raigne with him, Father I will, Ioh. 17. 14. that they, which thou haſt giuen me, be with me, where I am. Againe, Chriſt died onely, and gaue his life Ioh. 10. 11. for his ſheep. The elect only are the ſheep of Chriſt, as Auguſtine ſaith, De quibus iſtis, nec lupus rapit, nec fur tollit, nec latro interficit: Of theſe ſheepe, neither the woolfe ſnatcheth, nor the theefe taketh, nor the robber killeth, Tract. 48. in Ioann.

4. Cyrillus: Chriſt was made ſubiect to his father, ſed pro ſolis credentibus in eum, pro quibus ſeipſum Lib. 10. theſaur. c. 8. tanquam immaculatum agnum patri obtulit, but only for thoſe that beleeue in him, for whom he offered vp himſelfe an immaculate Lambe to his father.

Hom. 4 de Chriſt. 5. Maximus ſaith: Chriſtus omnibus natus, ſed fidelibus dat ſalutem: Chriſt was borne for all, but he gaue ſaluation to the elect.

In 2. c. ad Tim. 6. Primaſius: Pro omnibus effuſus eſt ſanguis Chriſti, ſed credentibus prodeſt: The blood of Chriſt was ſhed for all, but it is profitable to the beleeuers, &c. That is, his death was ſufficient for all, but effectuall only for beleeuers.

In 3. c. ad Rom. 7. Theodulus: Hos & illos gratiæ participes fore dixit, non tamen ſimpliciter, verum credentes, &c. Theſe and them he ſaid ſhould be partakers of grace, yet not ſimply, but the beleeuers.

8. Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. c. 14. Chriſtus eccleſiam, quam precioſo ſuo ſanguine redemit, nunquam deſerturus eſt: Chriſt will neuer forſake the Church, which he hath redeemed with his precious blood: but they, which are neuer forſaken, are the elect.

9. Concil. Wormatienſ. præfat. Eccleſiam catholicam precio ſui ſanguinis redemptam, cum eo credimus in perpetuum regnaturam: We doe beleeue that the Catholike Church redeemed with the price of his blood, ſhall raigne with him for euer: but the elect only ſhall raigne with him for euer.

10. Bernard. ſerm. 9. in Pſal. 90. Chriſtus ſecundum tempus pro impijs mortuus, ſecundum prædeſtinationem pro fratribus & amicis: Chriſt in reſpect of the time died for the wicked; in reſpect of predeſtination only, for his brethren and friends.

11. Cauſ. 33. diſt. 4. c. 8. ex Auguſtino: Illi Chriſto intelliguntur dari, qui ordinati ſunt in vitam æternam: They are vnderſtood to be giuen to Chriſt, which are ordained to eternall life: as our Saui- Ioh. 6. 39. our himſelfe ſaith, This is the will of my Father, that of all, which hee hath giuen me, I ſhould loſe no- Ioh. 11. 52. thing: and againe, Chriſt died to gather together in one, the children of God, which were ſcattered: hee died then only for the children of God, that is, the elect.

12. Magiſt. ſententiar. lib 3. diſtinct. 19. g. Chriſtus omnes fideles per mortem reconciliauit: Chriſt reconciled the faithfull by his death: diſt. 31. d. Chriſtus electos tantum ſicut ſe dilexit, eorumque ſalutem optauit, &c. Chriſt loued only the elect as himſelfe, and deſired their ſaluation.

13 Thomas Aquine witneſſeth the ſame: that God was appeaſed by the death of Chriſt for all 3. p. q. 49. artic. 4. 5. the offences of mankinde, quantum ad illos qui Chriſto paſſo coniunguntur: in reſpect of thoſe which are ioyned to Chriſt, &c. And againe, men are deliuered both from common and particular ſinnes, communicando per fidem & ſpem eius paſſioni, by communicating by faith and hope with his paſſion, &c.

14. We want not here the conſent of other reformed Churches: Confeſſ. Heluet. former, chap. 11. Harm. ſect. 6. pag. 92. Chriſt hath reconciled to his heauenly father all the faithfull, and purged their ſinnes, &c. but faith is only of the elect: as in the ſame confeſſ. the latter, chap. 10. Ibid. p. 84. Chriſt hath predeſtinate the Saints, whom he will ſaue in Chriſt. And chap. 15. ſect. 5. pag. 245. God alone of his power doth giue faith to the elect, — as S. Luke witneſſeth, as many as were ordained to life beleeued, &c. Thus then the argument ſtandeth, Chriſt died only for the faithful, and ſuch as beleeue in him: but the elect only haue faith: Ergo, for them only Chriſt died.

Zaga Zabo apud Damianum a Goes. 15. The preſent Æthiopike Church putteth theſe two together, ſpeaking of Chriſtian parents and their children: Electi ſunt & conſecrati ex corporis & ſanguinis noſtri Ieſu Chriſti communicatione: They are elect and conſecrate by the communication of the bodie and blood of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

THE THIRD GENERALL ARGVMENT, AGAINST the vniuerſall and confuſed communitie of Redemption by Chriſt, drawne from the manifold inconueniences and abſurdities, which neceſſarily enſue and follow vpon this opinion.

ABſurdum 1. Firſt in affirming that Chriſt dyed vniuerſally for all that ſhould beleeue, and not for any ſpeciall elected ſort, they conſequently doe hold, that God ſpecially and particularly elected none vnto ſaluation, but onely in generall, and indifferently all that ſhould beleeue. And thus in effect, they take away predeſtination, making it to be a confuſed and conditionall decree of God to ſaue whoſoeuer: This we are then to proue, that Gods election is certaine and definite, and that he knoweth and decreeth the number of the choſen.

Firſt, we reaſon thus, whatſoeuer God did fore-ſee, that he was to doe in the world, that alſo he decreed and ordained: Some things he fore-ſeeth only, namely, ſuch things as are done in the world, and not by him, as euill and ſinfull workes: But whatſoeuer God doth in the world, he both fore-ſaw and decreed: as Auguſtine ſaith, Prædeſtinatione ea Deus præſcierat, quæ erat facturus, præſcire autem poteſt, quæ non eſt facturus: God in predeſtinating did fore-ſee, that is, did both predeſtinate and fore-ſee, whatſoeuer he was to doe in the world; but he onely fore-ſaw the things that he was not to doe, as all ſinnes whatſoeuer, lib. 2. de perſeuerant. cap. 10. But God in the beginning did fore-ſee the particular end of euery man in the world: The Lord knoweth who are his: that is, he knoweth the definite and certaine number of the elect: as Auguſtine alſo witneſſeth, Non temere quenquam creat Deus, aut quid de illo boni operetur ignoret: God createth no man raſhly, neither is ignorant to what good vſe or purpoſe he hath made them, cont. Iulian. lib. 5. cap. 3. Ergo, God hath defined and decreed the particular number of ſuch, as ſhall be ſaued.

2.Tim.2.19.

And for better proofe of the propoſition: firſt, we ſay further, that ſeeing the knowledge and will of God, are infinite, as he himſelfe; and that the attributes of God, receiue neither magis vel minus, more or leſſe, his will is not greater then his knowledge, nor this more ample then the other, in their proper obiects: hereupon it followeth, that ſeeing God by his knowledge knoweth all things, which are to be knowne, ſo by his will he decreeth all things, that doe fall vnder his decree, namely, ſuch things as are good, and to his glory: ſuch is the particular election of thoſe, that are ſaued: Ergo, by him it is decreed. 2. Further, there can be but two kindes of things, which are without the compaſſe of Gods decree, either what he knoweth not, or what he doth not; of the firſt ſort there is none, becauſe God knoweth all things; of the ſecond, are all euill and ſinfull workes, which God hath no part in; But the particular election of men, is neither vnknowne nor vnwrought by God, but both knowne of him, and wrought by him: Ergo, alſo decreed. 3. The particular end of the elect dependeth either of ſome fatall neceſſitie, ſome accidentall chance, or of the will of man, or it ſtandeth by Gods euerlaſting decree: there can be aſſigned no other cauſe: Not the firſt, for that were to tie God vnto ſecondarie cauſes, for ſuch was the ſtoicall deſtinie; not the ſecond, for that were to ouerthrow Gods prouidence, by the which all things are gouerned, and not by chance: not the third, which were to aduance the creature aboue his Creator: and S. Paul ſaith, It is not of the willer, nor the runner, &c. Ergo, Gods ſpeciall and definite decree muſt ſtand: As Auguſtine alſo concludeth: Certe hic, vbi nulla eſt fati immobilitas, nulla fortunæ temeritas, nulla perſonæ dignitas, quid reſtat niſi miſericordiæ & veritatis profunditas? Certainly in this caſe, where neither things are gouerned by fatall neceſſitie, nor by raſh vnaduiſed chance, what other cauſe remaineth then the profunditie of Gods mercy and truth? Cont. Iulian. 6. cap. 5. Fourthly, it skilleth not, concerning the matter in hand, namely, the particular and perſonall election of thoſe that ſhall be ſaued, whether we vrge Gods preſcience onely or predeſtination: for if God did onely fore-ſee in particular, who, and how many, and of what condition, ſhould beleeue in Chriſt, and be ſaued; and that as God fore-ſaw, ſo it muſt be, that the ſame, ſo manie, no other, no more ſhall beleeue, then God fore-ſaw; then muſt the number of the elect and beleeuers be as certaine, definite and determined, as if they yeelded to Gods decree herein: wherefore they muſt either doubt of Gods preſcience, or confeſſe a certaine determination of the number of the elect.

Rom.9.16.

That there is a certaine and definite number of the elect.

Secondly, we haue direct places of Scripture for particular election: Chriſt calleth his ſheepe by name: they are all knowne particularly, and aſſigned to ſaluation as by name: The Apoſtles were perſonally elected of God, & giuen vnto Chriſt: And as ſome of the elect be, ſo are the reſt, for there is one condition of them all. S. Paul ſpeaking of certaine perſons his fellow labourers, amongſt whom hee nameth Clement, ſaith, Their names are written in the booke of life: Ergo, they were ſpecially and particularly elected. Further, the Scripture ſaith, that God calleth the ſtarres of the skie by their names; how much more the ſonnes of men, the children of ſaluation are particularly knowne vnto him: and if the haires of their head are numbred, much more themſelues.

Philip.4.3.

The Preacher alſo ſaith: I know, that whatſoeuer God ſhall do, it ſhall be for euer: to it can no man adde, and from it can none diminiſh: But the election of ſuch as ſhall be ſaued is one of Gods works: Ergo, to it can no man adde, or take from it, and ſo conſequently the number of the elect is certaine and determined: But if Gods election were left at large for all, then is it in mans power to adde vnto it, or take from it, as they are many, or few that apprehend and lay hold of their election.

Rom.9.13. Thirdly, we vrge that place of the Apoſtle: I haue loued Iacob, and hated Eſau: which the Apoſtle referreth to the purpoſe of Gods free election before the children were borne, or had either done good or euill, verſ.11. Hence we conclude, that Gods election is not generall and indefinite, but particular and perſonall.

First, it is here anſwered, that the particular perſons of Eſau and Iacob are not here vnderſtood, but that they are types of two people, the one of the Iſraelites, of whom Meſſiah ſhould come; the other of the Idumeans: that two people are here ſignified, their reaſons are theſe: Firſt, the Lord ſaith to Gen.24.23. Rebecca, two nations are in thy wombe: Secondly, the elder ſhall ſerue the younger, which was accompliſhed in their poſteritie, for Iacob in his owne perſon ſubmitted himſelfe to Eſau, Huber theſ. 675. Snecan. p. 565. Thirdly, theſe words, Iacob haue I loued, and hated Eſau, were vttered by the Prophet Malachy, about 1400. yeares after the birth of the children, and therefore it cannot be, that the Prophet ſhould vnderſtand onely the perſons of Iacob and Eſau, that were dead ſo long before, Snecan. p. 566. Fourthly, becauſe S. Paul ſpeaking of Iſmael and Iſaac, Galath.4. vſeth the word type or allegorie, in like manner Eſau and Iacob may be ſet forth for types in this place, Snecan. 533.

The example of Eſau and Iacob, belong to the decree of Gods eternall election and reiection.

Contra, 1. To admit that in Iacob and Eſau two people are prefigured, yet it followeth not, that their perſons are to be excluded: for whatſoeuer was fore-tolde of their poſteritie, it was firſt and in part true in them: As where it was ſaid, Two nations are in thy wombe: Iacob and Eſau were not bare types of two nations, but the beginners and progenitors, and two nations were euen now in their loynes: The elder ſhall ſerue the younger: ſo Eſau ſolde vnto Iacob his birth-right, and reſigned vnto him in his owne perſon the ſoueraigneſhip. So in like manner, where God ſaith, Iacob haue I loued, and hated Eſau. Firſt, this diſtinction of loue and hatred appeared in Iacob and Eſau, and then in their poſteritie. Secondly, there are two ſorts of types, there is, typus hiſtoricus, ſeu factus, an hiſtoricall type which was done, typus poeticus ſeu fictus, a deuiſed and inuented type. In types of the ſecond kind, that which is prefigured is not neceſſarie to bee firſt true in the type: as Chriſt for the ſuddainneſſe of his comming is compared to a thiefe, though the type in all reſpects properly agree not vnto him: 1.Cor.10.11. In types of the firſt kinde, firſt, the example muſt be true, then the thing exemplified: as the olde Iſraelites that were puniſhed for their fornication, are types and examples to admoniſh vs, that we commit not fornication as they did, and bee puniſhed likewiſe with them. So Iſaac and Iſmael are ſet forth as types, Galath.4. but firſt the thing exemplified by them is true in the types: As verſe 29. Gal.4.29. As then he that was borne after the fleſh perſecuted him that was borne after the ſpirit, ſo it is now: after the ſame manner Iacob and Eſau are ſet forth as examples, the one of Gods loue, the other of his hatred: which firſt muſt agree to their owne perſons. Thirdly, Pharaoh is ſet forth an example of the ſame thing, whereof Eſau is, namely, of the hatred of God: the perſon therefore of Eſau can be no more exempted here, then the perſon of Pharaoh. And that both the perſons of Iacob and Eſau are to be vnderſtood, it appeareth by theſe circumſtances: Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the conception of theſe children in their mother Rebecca, and of their birth: but Eſau and Iacob perſonally were thus conceiued and borne, not the whole nations: ſecondly, vnto them this loue and hatred belongeth, that had yet neither done good, or euill: but this is ſpoken of the perſons of Eſau and Iacob verſe 11. Ergo, alſo the other.

Secondly, it is anſwered, that this loue & hatred, are to be vnderſtood only of temporall bleſſings, becauſe Iacob was made heire of the promiſed land, and Eſau refuſed; and in this reſpect the one was loued, the other hated, not that Eſau was eternally, but only temporally refuſed: Snecan. p. 550. Hubertus theſ. 697. their reaſons are theſe: firſt, Iacobs bleſſing pronounced by his father, is only of tempo- Gen.27.28. rall things, God giue thee the dewe of heauen, and the fatnes of the earth, &c. Secondly, Eſau is bleſſed as well as Iacob: But if Iacob only had beene heire of the ſpirituall bleſſings, they ſhould haue beene denied to Eſau.

Contra, 1. That Iacob and Eſau are ſet forth as examples in ſpirituall things, it appeareth by the ſcope of the place; for how agreeth it with the Apoſtles purpoſe, to bring in examples of temporall things? verſ.8. he bringeth in a diſtinction, of the children of the fleſh, and the children of promiſe; theſe hoping to be iuſtified by faith, and to be partakers of the promiſe in Chriſt, the other remaining ſtill in their carnall ignorance and vnbeliefe: of thoſe two kinds, he propoundeth Iacob and Eſau as examples, the one of the children of promiſe, the other of the childrē of the fleſh: As Eſau had the carnal prerogatiue, but Iacob was made heire by promiſe. And that Iacob and Eſau do exemplifie theſe two generations, it is confeſſed by Hemingius de grat. vniuerſ. p. 33. and by Snecanus p. 533. Secondly, that theſe examples doe ſhadow forth ſpirituall things, it thus further appeareth: the Apoſtle to the Heb.11.20. Hebrewes ſaith, that by faith Iſaac bleſſed Iacob and Eſau concerning things to come: but faith is ſeene in things ſpirituall not temporall, it is of things inuiſible, not viſible, verſ.1. Againe, Eſau is called a pro- Heb.12.16. phane perſon, becauſe he ſold his birth-right. It is not prophanenes to contemne things temporal, but ſpirituall. S. Ambroſe doth take Iacob and Eſau for examples of Gods eternall election and reiection, In 9. ad Roman. vnum elegit preſcientia, alterum ſpreuit, Eſau 1. & Iacob. He did chuſe one in his preſcience, and deſpiſed another. The Maſter of the Sentences doth ſet them forth as examples of eternall election and reprobation, lib. 3. diſt. 32. e. Thirdly, now as touching their reaſons: firſt, Iacob is not only ly bleſſed in things temporall, but in ſpirituall alſo: for he ſaith, Bleſſed be he that bleſſeth thee, and curſed be he that curſeth thee. In the very ſelfe ſame words, wherein the promiſe of Chriſt is made to Abraham, ſo that this muſt needes be ſpiritually vnderſtood: for other wiſe we ſhall obſcure the moſt manifeſt promiſes of the Meſſiah, which were made to Abraham. Secondly, though Eſau haue a ſhare with his brother in his temporals, yet hath he no part in his ſpirituall bleſſing: Eſau alſo ſhall haue of the fatneſſe of the earth, and of the dewe of heauen: but Iſaac ſaith not vnto him, as before vnto Iacob, Bleſſed be he that bleſſeth thee, &c. Therefore the Apoſtle to the Hebrewes concerning this ſpirituall bleſſing ſaith, that when Eſau would haue inherited the bleſſing, he was reiected: neither found he any place of repentance, though he ſought it with teares: that is, his father by no meanes would reuoke that bleſſing, which he had giuen to Iacob: Eſau therefore was not bleſſed in like ſort as Iacob was.

Gen. 27.29.
Gen.12.3.
Heb.12.16.

Thirdly, it is anſwered: that theſe words, Iacob haue I loued, Eſau haue I hated, are to bee vnderſtood comparatiuely, not as though Eſau and his poſteritie were abſolutely reiected of God: but that God rather made choice of Iacob, of whoſe ſeede the promiſed Meſſiah ſhould come, then of Eſau and his ſeede, Snecan.p.568. Heming.p.34. Their reaſons are theſe: firſt, it is not neceſſarie in euery place in Scripture, where we reade of election and reiection, or reprobation, to referre it to eternall ſaluation or damnation; as, He refuſed the tabernacle of Ioſeph, and choſe not the tribe of Ephraim, but choſe the tribe of Iuda and mount Sion, which he loued: Becauſe God preferred Iuda, it followeth not that the other tribes were condemned: So in this place though in compariſon of Iacob, Eſau be refuſed, yet is he not abſolutely reiected: Huber.theſ.720.

Pſal.78.67.68.

Anſw. Firſt, we grant that the loue and hatred here ſpoken of in the perſons of Iacob and Eſau are comparatiuely to be vnderſtood: that Eſau is ſaid to be hated, not that God ſimply hateth any, but becauſe Iacob is elected, and the other pretermitted; the one choſen, the other neglected: yet comparatiuely, not in reſpect of any ſuch temporall preeminence, but concerning eternall election, or pretermiſſion. Secondly, becauſe election ſometime implieth a temporall preferring onely in reſpect of ſome ſpeciall and peculiar benefit, and is not neceſſarily alwaies referred to eternall ſaluation; it is therefore to be interpreted according to the ſcope and circumſtance of the place: as in the Pſalme alleaged, it is plaine, that the Pſalmiſt meaneth, that in reſpect of the Sanctuarie, which was placed at Ieruſalem, Iudah was elected, and Ephraim refuſed: So in this place the Apoſtle treating through the whole chapter, of the mercie of God vpon ſome, and his wrath vpon others, not in this or that reſpect, but ſimply, as they ſtand before God, would haue vs ſo to vnderſtand the inſtance of loue & hatred in the perſons of Iacob and Eſau: So is Pharaoh brought in an example of eternall hatred and reiection: ſo the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of veſſels of mercie prepared to glorie, and veſſels of wrath prepared to deſtruction: ſo are we to vnderſtand the loue of Iacob and hatred of Eſau.

Secondly, that Eſau was eternally hated, or reiected of God, it cannot be vnderſtood of Eſau his poſteritie: for then all his offſpring ſhould haue been caſtawaies: which is not true, for Iob is thought to come of Eſau his ſtocke, Snecan.pag.574. Neither is it true of Eſau his perſon: for if he had beene eternally reiected, to what end was he circumciſed? Snecan.p.574. he liued alſo in his fathers houſe, who loued him, and he was obedient to his father: what reaſon had Iſaac to loue whom God hated? Huber.theſ.709. Iſaac alſo is ſaid by faith to haue bleſſed Eſau: which his bleſſing had been in vaine, if Eſau had beene eternally reiected of God, Snecan.p.588.

*Anſw.*1. If in Eſau and Iacob, not their perſons onely, but their whole generations are to be conſidered, which if it be rightly vnderſtood, we will not greatly gaine-ſay: yet it followeth not, that all of Iacobs carnall linage ſhould be likewiſe loued, and Eſaus poſteritie hated: for in Iacob we vnderſtand all the children of promiſe, though they be not of his carnall offſpring; and in Eſau, all the children of the fleſh, though not deſcending of his ſtocke: So that in this ſenſe, as all they are not Iſrael, which are of Iſrael, as the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ.6. ſo all are not Eſau, that are of Eſau. And therefore Iob, though of Eſau after the fleſh, yet is he the ſon of Iacob by promiſe: And thus Hemingius expoundeth this place, de vniuerſ.grat.p.33.

2. Concerning Eſau his perſon; how he ſtandeth before God, whether in the ſtate of ſaluation, or damnation, though we hold it the ſafeſt, to leaue him vnto God, before whom he ſtandeth, or falleth; nor to affirme any thing raſhly without warrant: yet we may be bold to proceede ſo farre herein, as we haue the word of God to goe before vs. Firſt therefore their reaſons, which they bring in defenſe of Eſau, are very inſufficient: for Eſaus outward and temporall circumciſion, cannot exempt him from this hatred, no more then Iſmael was priuiledged by his circumciſion: Who notwithſtanding was borne after the fleſh, and was a perſecutor of him that was borne after the ſpirit: Gal.4. The Apoſtle himſelfe alſo diſtinguiſheth of circumciſion: that there is a circumciſion of the fleſh, and a circumciſion of the heart. The firſt Eſau had, the other he had not: for though he had the ſigne of the couenant, yet the couenant it ſelfe he deſpiſed in ſelling his birth-right. As touching Eſau his obedience to his father, firſt, it was not ſuch, as it ought to be; for then hee would not haue married two wiues of the daughters of the Hittites, to vexe his parents withall. Secondly, it was but in hypocriſie: as it may appeare, in that hee purpoſed to ſlay his brother Iacob after his fathers death: which hee would not haue done, if he had truely reuerenced his father: for he would haue loued his brother for his fathers ſake. Againe, when he vnderſtoode that his father gaue his ſonne Iacob charge, not to marrie with the daughters of Canaan: Eſau like an hypocrite already diſpleaſed his parents, in marrying with the

him, for veniſon was his meate: Eſau was an actiue and valiant fellow, and a good hunter, therefore Iſaac made account of him: he loued Eſau only as a father, but Iacob beſide as a Prophet. 2. Iſaac lo-

were refuſed: ſo Samuel being ſent to annoint Dauid King, liked other of his brethren before, whom God liked not: theſe holy Prophets and Patriarches were men, and had their naturall affections.
Thirdly, what if Iſaac did not ſee fully into the ſtate of his children as yet: for he did but as in a cloud were their reuelations more full, and their viſions cleerer.

Now whereas it is ſaid, that Iſaac by faith bleſſed Iacob and Eſau; this doth no whit priuiledge
Eſau: for it was Iſaacs faith, not Eſaus: and though he bleſſed both, yet not alike; for Iacob hath both a ſpirituall and temporall bleſſing: Eſau had only a temporall, the ſpirituall he could not obtaine, no not with teares. Thus whatſoeuer can be ſaid for Eſau, is eaſily remoued. Now againſt him thus much
Gen.25.24. may be alleaged out of Scripture: firſt, Eſau contemned his birth-right, and held it not ſo deare as a

Gen.27.41. elſe, but a fearefull looking for of iudgement, verſ.27. Secondly, Eſau hated Iacob, he is become a per-ſecutor of the righteous, he hateth thoſe, whom God loueth. So Iſmael perſecuted Iſaac, he that was and Rebecca. Fourthly, Eſau expecteth, and wiſheth his fathers death: the dayes of mourning for my election, bringeth in the examples of Iacob and Eſau, the one loued, the other hated of God.

Thus by more euident coniecture, and likely arguments we are able to proue out of Scripture the finall reiection of Eſau, then they can ſhew the contrarie: And ſo conſequently, notwithſtanding all theſe humane deuiſes, we haue a moſt firme and euident teſtimonie for particular and perſonall election in this place, drawne from the example of Iacob and Eſau. And thus much of the firſt inconuenience that muſt needes enſue vpon this opinion concerning vniuerſall grace, which ouerthroweth the foundation of Gods predeſtination: which they doe as it were hang in the ayre, affirming that it is nothing elſe but an vniuerſall confuſed decree, as though God either did not know the particular end of euery man, or knowing the ſame willed it not.

Now laſtly, that God hath from the beginning made a particular and abſolute election of ſome, and that Gods election is not generall and conditionall, it hath beene the auncient doctrine of the Church.

1 Ambroſe. 1.*Tim.*5. Electos Angelos dicit, quia ſunt alij reprobi, non Dei Angeli, ſed diaboli,&c. He ſaith elect Angels, becauſe there are ſome reprobate, not the Angels of God, but of the diuell. 3 Auguſtine to this purpoſe writeth very directly: *Tract.*14. in Iohan. Eſt quidam populus natus ad iram dei, & ad hoc praecognitus,&c. There is a certaine people borne to the wrath of God, and foreſeene to this end.

By theſe places it is euident what Auguſtines iudgement was, that Gods election was not indefinite or vncertaine, but that the end of euery man, whether to life or death, was determined and decreed in particular.

6 And yet more directly he ſaith of the predeſtinate, Quorum ita certus eſt numerus, vt nec addatur eis quiſquam, nec minuatur ex eis: Whoſe number is ſo certaine, that neither any can be added vnto them, nor none diminiſhed, &c. De concept. 2. grat. c. 13.

9 Proſper and Hilarius, do report this to haue been one of the errors of the Pelagians, Electorum numerum augeri & minui poſſe, That the number of the elect may bee encreaſed and diminiſhed, &c. which error is by them condemned. Epiſtol. ad Auguſtin.

10 Thom. Aquine concurreth with Auguſtine, who concludeth, that, numerus prædeſtinatorum eſt Deo certus, non ſolum formaliter, ſed materialiter: The number of the predeſtinate is certaine before God, not only formally, that is in reſpect of the knowledge of God, but materially in regard of their election. If all men be not loued alike, then are they not all elected alike.

THE SECOND INCONVENIENCE THAT followeth the opinion of vniuerſall grace.

ABſurd. 2. The ſecond inconuenience that iſſueth out of this doctrine of vniuerſall election, is this, that Gods election ariſeth ex præuiſa fide, from the fore-ſight of their faith which ſhall bee ſaued: Hubertus theſ. 786. Deus electionem ſuam non abſolutè ſtatuit, ſed defixit eam in filio ſuo, vt qui credunt in eum, ſalui fiant: God hath not abſolutely made any election, but hee hath founded it in Chriſt, that they which beleeue in him ſhould be ſaued; they that beleeue not, ſhould be damned. So Hemingius ſaith: Præſcientia Dei regula eſt electionis & prædeſtinationis: The preſcience of God is the rule of election and predeſtination, pag. 21. And againe, Non quia præſciti & electi ſumus, credimus, ſed quia credimus, præſciti & electi ad vitam cenſemur: We doe not beleeue, becauſe we are fore-ſeene and elected, but becauſe we beleeue we were fore-ſeene and elected vnto life, pag, 27. Snecanus, though he ſeeme in words to confeſſe, that æternum eligendi propoſitum non dependet ex vlla noſtra fidei, vel bonorum operum præuiſione: That the eternall purpoſe of election dependeth not of the fore-ſight of our faith or workes, pag. 461. yet hee is driuen by the ſtreame of words to affirme as the reſt doe, that fides continetur in Dei propoſito, that faith is included in the purpoſe of Gods election, p. 463. and that God vniuerſally ordained to ſaluation all that ſhould beleeue, pag. 480. They would ground this their opinion concerning the fore-ſight of faith vpon theſe and ſuch like places of Scripture: as, thoſe which he knew before, he predeſtinate to be like the image of his ſonne: Predeſtination then is grounded vpon the fore-knowledge of God: Hemingius de vniuerſalit. grat. pag. 29. Rom. 8.29.

Contra. 1. We grant with Auguſtine, that prædeſtinatio eſt quæ ſine præſcientia eſſe non poteſt, Predeſtination is that which cannot bee without preſcience in God, lib. 1. de prædeſtinat. ſanctor. cap. 10. And thus are they ioyned together in this place: but it followeth not, that one is the cauſe of another. 2. The text maketh directly againſt them: for he ſaith not, whom he knew before ſhould be like the image of his ſonne he predeſtinate; but, whom he knew before he did predeſtinate to be like his ſonne: ſo that this conformitie by faith vnto Chriſt is an effect and conſequent of their predeſtination. 3. Though we admit the former reading, yet haue they gained nothing: for the conformitie to the image of Chriſt conſiſteth in being made partakers of Chriſts ſufferings, whereof S. Peter intreateth; vnleſſe they therefore will affirme, that the fore-ſight of mens afflictions is the cauſe of their election, and ſo ioyne in opinion with the olde Pelagians, that grounded election vpon the fore-ſight of good workes, this place is not for their turne. 4. By the knowledge of God in Scripture, the loue, liking, and approbation of God is often ſignified; as, The Lord knoweth the way of the iuſt; that is, approueth it; I am the good ſhepheard, and know my ſheepe, that is, loue them: ſo in this place, whom he knew before (whom he loued and fauoured) he did predeſtinate. 1. Pet. 4.13. Pſal. 1. 6. Iohn 10.14.

Againe, they obiect that place: He hath choſen vs in him before the foundation of the world: that is, God hath choſen thoſe whom he fore-ſaw ſhould beleeue in Chriſt, Hemming. fol. 26. pag. 2. Epheſ. 1.4.

*Contra.*1. The Apoſtle meaneth not, that we were ſo choſen in Chriſt, that is, for the fore-ſight of our faith in him, but that Chriſt was appointed of God, as the foundation, by whom our election ſhould be accompliſhed: as in the next verſ. Hee hath predeſtinate vs to be adopted through Chriſt: We were not firſt adopted in Chriſt, and then predeſtinate; but firſt predeſtinate, and then choſen in Chriſt, verſ.11. In whom we were choſen, when we were predeſtinate according to the purpoſe of him, &c. Firſt, therefore there is the decree of election and predeſtination, grounded only vpon the good pleaſure of God, verſ.5. then followeth the accompliſhment and execution of that decree by our adoption in Chriſt.

How we are ſaid to be elected in Chriſt.

2 Auguſtine vpon theſe words, He hath choſen vs in him that we ſhould be holy, groundeth a cleane contrarie argument: Elegit nos — vt eſſemus ſancti, non quia futuri eramus, ſed vt eſſemus: Hee hath choſen them before the beginning of the world that they ſhould be holy, not becauſe they were holy, *de prædeſtinat. ſanctor. c.*18. So then faith, holineſſe, ſanctification, are fruits and effects of election, not cauſes thereof.

3 Chriſt Ieſus, or our faith in Chriſt fore-ſeene, cannot be the cauſe of our predeſtination, ſeeing Chriſt himſelfe, in reſpect of his office of redemption, and mediation, was predeſtinate, and preordained of God: the ſame thing then cannot be the cauſe of predeſtination and the obiect together, Chriſt Ieſus as the head, with his bodie, which is the whole companie of the elect, are the obiect of predeſtination, that is, thoſe which were predeſtinated: Ergo, he is not the cauſe. Auguſtine alſo ſaith,

De prædeſt. lib.1.cap.15.

*Chriſtus præclariſſimum lumen eſt gratiæ prædeſtinationis, qui, vt hoc eſſet, quibus tandem ſuis, vel operum vel fidei meritis, natura humana, quæ in illo eſt, comparauit? ſicut ergo prædeſtinatus ille vnus eſt, vt caput noſtrum eſſet, Rom.*1.4. qui prædeſtinatus eſt filius Dei, ita multi prædeſtinati ſumus, vt membra eius eſſemus: Chriſt is a notable light of the grace of predeſtination, in whom his humane nature deſerued not by the merit of his workes, or faith, to be ioyned to his Godhead: As he therefore was predeſtinate to be our head, Rom.1.4. predeſtinate the Sonne of God (that is in reſpect of his office and humanity) ſo are we predeſtinate to be his members, that is, without reſpect to our faith or workes, onely according to the good pleaſure of his will. And this ſhall be our firſt argument on the contrarie ſide, againſt this reſpectiue election, and further we proue it thus:

Rom.1.4.

Luk.12.31.

Luk.12.31. It is your fathers pleaſure to giue you a kingdome: There is no other reaſon to be rendred, why God hath elected his children, and appointed them a kingdome, but this: Complacuit patri, it was your fathers pleaſure.

Iohn 15.16.

Iohn 15.16. You haue not choſen me, but I haue choſen you: Whereupon Auguſtine thus writeth: Quod ſi autem ipſi primò crediderunt in eum, elegerunt eum, ipſe non elegit eos: But if ſo be that they firſt beleeued in him, they choſe him, he choſe not them, &c. Their onely anſwere here is, that this is to be vnderſtood not of their eternall, but temporall election to the office of their Apoſtleſhip.

Anſw. To this alſo Auguſtine anſwereth: Elegit eos de mundo cùm hîc ageret in carne, ſed iam electos in ſeipſo ante mundi conſtitutionem: He choſe them indeede out of the world when he liued in the fleſh: but they were choſen in himſelfe before the world was made, *de prædeſtinat. ſanctor. cap.*17. Our Sauiour alſo ſaith, I haue choſen you, and ordained you, that you goe and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit remaine: This ſheweth that he ſpeaketh of their eternall election to ſaluation.

Rom.9.11.

Thirdly, we haue a moſt direct place, where the Apoſtle ſaith, That before the children were borne, and had done either good or euill, the Lord pronounced of them, Iacob haue I loued, Eſau haue I hated: Ergo, in Gods eternall election, which goeth before our birth, there is no reſpect had vnto any thing that followeth after the birth, either faith, or workes: for the reaſon is generall againſt both.

Anſw. Snecanus anſwereth, that (theſe words) I haue hated Eſau, are as much, as odiſſe decreui, I haue decreed to hate, for God really and verily hateth none but for their ſinne, pag 567. And therefore where the Scripture calleth Eſau a prophane perſon, the formall cauſe is added, for ſelling his birth-right, Heb.12.16. *Snecan. pag.*590.

Heb.12.16.

Contra. 1. We grant that no man is verily condemned (which is the reall reprobation) but for his owne ſin and wickednes: but here the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the decree it ſelfe, not of the execution; the decree is before all time, the execution of the decree followeth in the time appointed: the execution followeth after the birth, and after men haue done good or euill. This therefore, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, which was determined before their birth, and before they had done any thing, is the abſolute decree of God. Neither is that place to the Hebrewes any thing like vnto this: for there the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of any purpoſe or decree of God concerning Eſau, before any euill done, as he doth here; but only of an act of prophaneneſſe committed in his life. And though we admit his interpretation, I haue hated, that is, decreed to hate: yet we muſt vnderſtand the decree ſtill: that although reall hatred be cauſed by their owne ſin, yet hatred or loue decreed, is grounded only vpon the will & purpoſe of God: as the Apoſtle ſaith, that the purpoſe of God might remaine, &c. by him that calleth, ver.11. but if election ſhould be becauſe of faith fore-ſeene, it ſhould ſtand as much by the called, as him that calleth. But here I deſire there may be no miſtaking: although it be affirmed that Gods decree both of election and reiection be abſolute, without any fore-ſight either to faith or vnbeliefe, good works or euill: yet there is a difference: for wee make, Maſſa corrupta & damnata, The corrupt and damned Maſſe of all mankinde, loſt in Adam, the ſubiect of election and reiection: that out of this Maſſe God of his free grace elected ſome, and left the other in that ſtate of corruption, wherein they were foreſeene: as Auguſtine well putteth the caſe of two debtors, if the owner doe vnto one forgiue the debt, habet quod gratuletur, he hath wherein to be thankfull; of the other hee exacteth the debt, non habet quod criminetur: he hath not whereof to complaine.

2. Now that this pronounced concerning Eſau and Iacob is to be vnderſtood only of Gods eternall decree and free purpoſe without the foreſight of faith, or workes, not as the execution of the decree, alone, or of them both together; as Sneccanus ſeemeth ſometime to affirme, pag. 57: thus it ſhall appeare by the opening of that which followeth.

Verſ.14. The Apoſtle anſwereth an obiection, Is there vnrighteouſneſſe then with God? God forbid. Which obiection ariſeth vpon the former examples: If God then doe elect one and reiect another, neither of them hauing done either good or euill, but both being alike, how is hee not vnrighteous, in that he ordaineth not alike vnto thoſe that are in the ſame caſe? But if ſo that God preferreth ſome becauſe of their beleefe, and reiecteth others for their vnbeleefe, there were no ſuch occaſion to complaine of God as vnrighteous, or ſo to obiect, becauſe the cauſe of difference in Gods election is apparant, namely, the reſpect to their faith: and it is a iuſt and righteous thing, that God ſhould preferre beleeuers before vnbeleeuers: therefore if election depended vpon any ſuch foreſight, and not abſolutely vpon the will and purpoſe of God, there could be no ſhew of vnrighteouſnes in God, nor any cauſe ſo to obiect.

Hemingius maketh the meaning of the obiection to be this: that God ſhould ſeeme to be vniuſt, becauſe he doth not adopt and elect Iſmael and Eſau for his children for the merit of their workes, as well as Iſaac and Iacob, pag. 47.

Contra. The merit of faith is as well excluded as the merit of workes: and if God ſhould elect vpon the foreſight of faith, the ground of this obiection is as well remoued, as if he did elect vpon the foreſight of workes: for then God ſhould ſee ſomewhat more in thoſe that are elected, then in the other, that is, their faith, and ſo they ſhould haue no colour to charge God with vnrighteouſnes: This appeareth alſo by the verſe following.

Verſ.15. I will haue mercie on him, to whom I will ſhew mercie. And verſ.18. He hath mercie on whom he will, and whom he will he hardeneth: that is, ſaith Hemingius, God ſheweth mercie vpon thoſe that beleeue, who are ſaued only by faith, through the mercie of God in Chriſt, and hee reiecteth all that refuſe to beleeue, and ſuffereth them to be hardened, Heming. fol. 49. p. 1. Sneccan. 698. & alibi. Rom.9.15,18.

Contra. 1. Thus they applie theſe places onely to the execution of Gods decree, and vnderſtand them onely of that temporall difference, which God maketh in this world betweene beleeuers and vnbeleeuers: whereas the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of that difference, which God maketh in his eternall election: as may appeare by the examples of Iacob and Eſau, betweene whom there was a diſtinction made before they were borne: and to this end he bringeth in the ſimilitude of the potter, verſ. 21. that as he hath power to make his veſſels not yet made, how he will; ſo God may appoint his creatures to ſuch purpoſes, as him pleaſeth, euen before they are: he hath not power to diſpoſe of them only after they are made and borne. 2. If Gods mercie bee decreed vpon the foreſight of faith, I aske them, whence is this faith? Is it of themſelues that beleeue, or of God, or of both? if it be of man, then God hath not mercie on whom he will, but vpon whom man will: becauſe it is (ſay they) in mans power to beleeue; and if he will beleeue, then will God ſhew mercie, and not elſe. And againe, whereas they ſay, God would haue all men to beleeue, and ſo be ſaued; it followeth that God hath mercie vpon all, conditionally if they beleeue: but the Apoſtle ſaith contrarie, that he hath mercie vpon ſome, not vpon all, and that he withholdeth his mercie from others, whom in his iuſt iudgement he hardeneth. But if faith be of God, and none can haue it, vnleſſe he giue it, what other reaſon is there, that hee giueth it not to all, but becauſe he hath not elected all?

3. Neither is God ſaid to harden ſome mens hearts onely by ſuffering them to be hardened, but as Auguſtine ſaith of Pharao: Deus indurauit per iuſtum iudicium, Pharao per liberum arbitrium: God hardened his heart by his iuſt iudgement, Pharao by his free will. And againe, where David ſaith, that God bade Shemei curſe him, Auguſtine ſaith thus: Vtique non iubendo dixit ei, ſed quod eius voluntatem proprio ſuo vitio malam, in hoc peccatum iudicio ſuo iuſto & occulto inclinauit: He did not command him ſo to doe, but becauſe by his iuſt and ſecret iudgement, hee did incline his will of it ſelfe corrupt, and wicked, to this ſinne: de grat. & liber. arbit. cap. 20. & 23. God therefore only permitteth not as a looker on, but is an agent and a doer as a iuſt Iudge, yet without ſinne.

Verſ.16. It is not in him that willeth or runneth, but in God that ſheweth mercie: that is (ſaith Hemingius) it is not in him that willeth or runneth after the fleſh, but in him that willeth and runneth by faith, which is grounded vpon the mercie of God; who of meere loue gaue his ſonne to be the redeemer of the world, pag. 48. Rom.9.16.

Contra. 1. The oppoſition here is not betweene man willing by nature, and man willing by faith, but betweene man willing or running, and God ſhewing mercie. If it be all one for man to will according to faith, and for God to ſhew mercie, then is it Gods grace and mercie, that ſome men haue faith: for if to will according to the fleſh be one thing, and to will according to faith another, ſeeing all men are the ſame naturally and according to the fleſh, whence is it then, that ſome mens will is regenerate by faith? is it not of the grace and mercie of God? Mercie therfore is firſt ſhewed, and then faith is giuen: the foreſight then of faith is not the cauſe of grace and fauour. 2. It is Gods mercie, you ſay,that Chriſt was giuen for the redemption of the world : but this is a common mercie, as yee hold,that Chriſt died for all men : is it not alſo a mercie of God to giue faith to beleeue in Chriſt? If you affirme onely that common mercie : then is it not true,which the Apoſtle ſaith,that God hath mercie only on ſome,and hardeneth others ; but God is mercifull to all alike, in offering Chriſt both to beleeuers and vnbeleeuers. And concerning faith, if it bee not Gods mercie that we haue it,then Gods mercie in giuing Chriſt, is nothing without our owne mercie vpon our ſelues in beleeuing in Chriſt : yea our owne mercie ſhall exceede Gods mercie, in as much as beleeuers haue more mercie then vnbeleeuers. If it be of Gods mercie,that we haue faith,why is not this mercie ſhewed to all, but that it pleaſed not God to elect all, but to receiue to fauour onely his choſen ? Theſe patrons of vniuerſall and common grace,are neuer able,holding their opinion,to make all ſound here.

Rom.9 19.20. Verſ.19. Thou wilt ſay vnto me,why doth hee yet complaine, who hath reſiſted his will? verſ.20. But who art thou ô man,that pleadeſt againſt God? ſhall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power of the clay to make of the ſame lumpe one veſſell to honour, another to diſhonour? Hence we conclude, that euen ſo in the beginning God had power by ſpeciall election to appoint ſome vnto honour, pretermitting others and leauing them in diſhonour,and this of his owne free will and purpoſe,not hauing any reſpect at all vnto man.

Hemingius anſwereth : That this ſimilitude holdeth not in euery point, but is brought in by the Apoſtle to ſhew the power of God, that hee is able to puniſh the contemners of his word,and vpon

Ierem.18.6. their repentance to renew them againe, as the potter, &c. And ſo is it applied by Ieremie,chap.18: for otherwiſe ſimply God maketh not the wicked,as the potter doth the baſer veſſels : pag.50.30.

Contra. 1. The obiection here moued,Who hath reſiſted his will? ſtandeth not with this interpretation,nor with Hemingius opinion : for if God would haue all men to beleeue,and ſo be ſaued; then is Gods will ouerthwarted,and his purpoſe is gainſaied,and his will reſiſted,for he would haue all ſaued,and yet all are not ſaued. But the Apoſtle hauing ſet downe this principle,that God in the beginning elected whom he would,and left the reſt,whom he would not receiue to mercie : then this obiection is made,that ſeeing Gods will is performed in both,that whom he would, are ſaued; whom he would not, remaine as they were : why then ſhould there bee any complaint made of their diſobedience? vnleſſe therefore we make the Apoſtles ſcope to be this,the obiection hath no coherence at all with the precedent part.

2. This ſimilitude we doe not vrge in all points : for man is otherwiſe by creation,then a piece of clay,but ſo farre only, as it is applied by the Apoſtle,as we haue ſhewed. Ieremie vſeth the ſimilitude ſomewhat to a diuers purpoſe,then the Apoſtle doth: for the Prophet ſetteth forth Gods power in the externall workes of his prouidence in the gouernment and adminiſtration of the world; as in the planting,and deſtroying of nations : the Apoſtle entreateth of the workes of Gods election,and predeſtination,verſ.11. That the purpoſe might ſtand according to election. Therefore Gods power is not heere ſet forth toward thoſe that are now contemners,or beleeuers,but before they were ſuch.

3. As touching his reaſon : Though God make veſſels to diſhonour,that is,ordaine wicked men to puniſhment,yet he maketh them not wicked : they are wicked of their owne making, but the puniſhment due to their wickedneſſe, which is eternall ſhame and diſhonour, is made and ordained of Prou.16.4. God : as,God made the wicked againſt the euill day.

Rom.9.22. Verſ.22. What if God to ſhew his power,&c. the veſſels of wrath prepared to deſtruction, and to declare the riches of his glorie vpon the veſſels of mercie,which he hath prepared to glorie? Ergo, from the beginning ſome were prepared to glorie,ſome to deſtruction.

Suecanus ſaith,That none abſolutely before God are appointed to be veſſels of honour or diſhonour,but conditionally in Chriſt,pag.686. that is,as they ſhould beleeue or not beleeue in him. Huberus ſaith,That God indeed prepareth the veſſels of mercie,giuing them faith,and illumination, but they are made the veſſels of wrath of themſelues,and by Satan. And therefore the Apoſtle changeth the phraſe, ſaying, that God prepareth the veſſels of mercie, but the other are prepared : *theſ.*868. 869.870.

Contra. 1. The veſſels of honour and diſhonour are ſimplie,not conditionally formed : elſe the Apoſtles ſpeech were impertinent,verſ.20. Shall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it,why haſt thou made me thus? But now if they were formed only conditionally, which condition is performed not by the former, but by the thing formed; then are they formed by themſelues : but the Apoſtle ſaith they are formed of God : all condition then on their part is excluded. 2. Againe,as the potter of the ſame lumpe maketh veſſels of honour,or diſhonour,ſo God doth ordaine men of the ſame maſſe and condition in themſelues,ſome to honour,ſome to diſhonour: but now if God ſhould reſpect the faith of ſome,and the vnbeleefe of others,and ſo according to this foreſight ordaine them,they ſhould not be one lumpe,or of one mould,but diuers.

To Huberus we anſwere : firſt,if God prepare the veſſels of mercie,and worke effectually in them, one of theſe two muſt needs be granted; that God either prepareth all men generally for the veſſels of mercie,and they afterward are made by themſelues the veſſels of wrath,(which ſeemeth to be his opinion) then is the will of God reſiſted. If they ſay Gods will is conditionall,if they beleeue,yet this helpeth them not : for God giueth faith to all (as he ſaith) & ſo would haue all to beleeue: ſeeing then all do not beleeue, Gods will is gainſaied,and ouerruled : Or elſe if God prepare ſome & not others, by giuing faith and grace, whereof commeth this difference, but that God hath ſorted out ſome from the reſt by his eternall election?

2. Huberus ſeemeth to note a myſterie, in that the Apoſtle ſpeaking of the veſſels of wrath, vſeth another word, and in the paſſiue voyce, ſaying, σκεύη κατηρτισμένα, veſſels fitted or compoſed to deſtruction: but of the other he ſpeaketh actiuely, which God hath prepared, προητοίμασεν. Firſt, for the change of the voyce which hee obiecteth, it is nothing: for is it not all one to ſay, which hee prepared, or which are prepared of him? And, both the kingdome of God, and euerlaſting fire are ſaid paſſiuely to be prepared of God. And for the word, both that which is here pronounced of the veſſels of mercie, is vſed in the Scripture of the preparation to deſtruction, Matth. 25.41. And on the contrarie, the other word applied to the veſſels of wrath, is attributed to the faithfull, Be ye knit together, κατηρτισμένοι: and he ſpeaketh to thoſe which are ſanctified in Chriſt, and Saints by calling, verſ. 2.3. So that heere the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not, how men by their owne wickedneſſe are fitted to damnation, but how they ſtand in the decree of God, how they are vnder the hands of the potter: the reddition of the ſimilitude muſt anſwere to the propoſition: the potter maketh himſelfe both kinde of veſſels, he maketh not the one, and the other maketh it ſelfe: ſo God decreeth both concerning the elect and reprobate.

1. Cor. 1.10.

Thus haue wee opened the true ſenſe of this chapter, and freed it from the corrupt gloſſes of the contrarie minded: And ſo haue we a moſt cleere teſtimonie of the Apoſtle, for Gods free and gracious election, without any foreſight of faith or any thing elſe in vs. And thus Auguſtine expoundeth it: Apoſtolus non ſolū fratres, ſed geminos, nec geminos ſolū, ſed vno concubitu fuſos in vtero comparauit, vt quoniam in nondū natis, nondumq; aliquid operatis nulla eſſe poterant momenta meritorum, nec ex parentum quidem meritis, quæ diuerſo tempore varia eſſe potuerunt, aliquod contra gratiam relinqueretur obſtacuum: —itaque Apoſtolus eos vaſa miſericordiæ vocat, vt totum quicquid eſſent, ſecundum miſericordiam ſe eſſe cognoſcerent: De prædeſtinat. & grat. cap. 7. The Apoſtle doth compare together not brethren only, but twinnes borne at one birth: that becauſe in thoſe which were not yet borne, neither as yet had done any thing, there could be no difference of merit, neither by their parents merits, which might haue been at diuers times vnlike, grace might haue any impediment: the Apoſtle therefore calleth them veſſels of mercie, that they might acknowledge all, whatſoeuer they had, to be of mercie, &c.

Saint Ambroſe in Tit. 3. vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle, Secundum miſericordiam ſuam, &c. According to his mercie he ſaued vs: Hoc bonum quod in Chriſtianis florere cernimus, de radice diuinæ pietatis oritur, &c. This goodneſſe, which doth floriſh in Chriſtians, doth ariſe of the roote of the diuine pietie, or loue, for God by his mercie hath ſaued vs in Chriſt.

Againe, de vocat. Gent. lib. 1. cap. 3. Non omnis Iſrael reprobatus, nec omnis electus, ſed partem cæcitas voluntaria auertit, partem ſibi illuminatio gratuita reſeruauit: All Iſrael was not reprobated, nor all elected: but part through their voluntarie blindnes is turned aſide, part by gracious illumination is reſerued.

Hieron. apolog. ad Ruffinum: Non ait Apoſtolus elegit nos, &c. cum eſſemus ſancti, ſed vt eſſemus: The Apoſtle ſaith not he hath choſen vs, when we were holie, &c. but that we ſhould be holie.

Proſper writing to Auguſtine of the reliques of the Pelagian hereſie, nameth this to be one, they affirmed God only to haue predeſtinate thoſe, quos dignos futura electione, &c. præuidiſſet, whom hee foreſaw would be worthie of his election, &c.

Epiſt. ad Auguſtin.

Theodoret ſaith, thoſe, whoſe purpoſe hee foreſaw, hee predeſtinate, ſed nemo præſcientiam horum cauſam eſſe dicat, non enim præſcientia eos tales effecit, ſed Deus, vt Deus, quæ futura erant, procul proſpexit: But let no man ſay, that Gods preſcience is the cauſe hereof, for his preſcience did not make them ſuch, but God as God, did foreſee a farre off, what ſhould be, &c.

In 8. c. ad Rom

The reformed Churches thus confeſſe: Some are no better then others, till ſuch time as the Lord doth make a difference, according to that immutable counſell, which he had decreed in Chriſt Ieſus, before the creation of the world, &c.

Harm. ſect. 5. pag. 87.

Thomas Aquine doth very well reſolue of this point: that preſcience is not the cauſe of predeſtination: that ſome in generall are elected, ſome reiected, the cauſe is the demonſtration of Gods mercie in ſauing the one, and his iuſtice in puniſhing the other: but in particular he doth elect ſome, and reprobate others, nulla ratio in creatura eſt, there is no reaſon or cauſe in the creature: neither is there iniquitie with God, if he giue vnequall things to them, that are not vnequall: quia prædeſtinationis effectus, non ex debito redditur, ſed ex gratia datur: becauſe the effect of predeſtination is not rendred of debt, but giuen of grace, &c.

1. p. qu. 23. artic. 5.

Thus Auguſtine thought in the end of the grace of free election, though he had been ſometime of another minde, that God, though he elected not by the foreſight of workes, yet, elegit fidem, vt quem ſibi crediturum præſciret, ipſum eligeret: yet he elected their faith, that is, whom hee foreſaw ſhould beleeue, him he elected. This ſometime was Auguſtines opinion, which he afterward retracted: Sed nondum (inquit) diligentius quæſiueram, nec inueneram, qualis ſit electio gratiæ: But yet I had not diligently ſearched, or found out, what to thinke of the election of grace: lib. 1. de prædeſtinat. ſanctor. cap. 3.

Auguſtine therfore being better reformed in iudgement thus writeth: Miſericors Deus vocat nullis hoc vel fidei meritis largiens, quia merita fidei ſequuntur vocationem potius quam præcedant: The mercifull God calleth, not for any merits of faith, becauſe the merits of faith doe follow rather our vocation, then goe before: qu.2.ad Simplician.

So I wiſh that they, which thinke now, as a Auguſtine ſometime did, would not be aſhamed with Auguſtine to correct their erroneous opinion. It was counted in time paſt Semi-Pelagianiſme, to aſcribe election to the foreſight of faith. Bellarmine a patrone of poperie yet abhorreth this opinion, and proueth at large, nullam eſſe cauſam in nobis prædeſtinationis: that there is no cauſe in vs of our predeſtination, neither that God hath elected vs vpon the foreſight of our workes: aut propter bonum vſum liberi arbitrij, aut gratiæ: or for the good vſing of free will, or grace: Lib.2.de grat.& liber.arbit.cap.10. Is it not therefore a ſhame for Proteſtants, euen in a popiſh error to be more ſtiffe and reſolute, then a popiſh profeſſor? And thus much of this ſecond abſurditie: We will be ſhorter in the reſt.

THE THIRD INCONVENIENCE or Abſurditie.

ABſurd.3. The patrones of vniuerſall grace, who affirme that God conditionally hath appointed all men to ſaluation, if they will beleeue, and that he would haue all men to beleeue: Heming. de vniuerſal.grat.pag.58. And that if all beleeue not, it is not for any defect of grace, but through their owne fault: Snecan.de liber.arbit.pag.408. They thus holding are driuen to confeſſe, that to beleeue, man hath power of himſelfe, by his free will: for God offereth grace and faith to all, and it is in mans power to receiue, or refuſe it.

Hemingius further deliuereth his opinion thus: That faith is both the gift of God, becauſe it is wrought by his holy ſpirit in thoſe that deſire it; it is alſo of mans free will, becauſe it is in the will of man to giue or withhold his conſent to and from the calling of God: And yet (ſaith he) this will, whereby we beleeue, is alſo Gods gift, becauſe it appertaineth to free will, which was giuen in the creation: ſo there are foure things, which concurre vnto faith, to heare the Goſpell, to conſent vnto it, to deſire grace offered, and to beleeue God, which promiſeth: all theſe are voluntarie in man: De vniuerſ.grat.pag.57. So hee concludeth, that faith is partly the gift of God, becauſe hee giueth his word, and inwardly moueth the heart; partly the worke of man, becauſe man, volens credit, beleeueth willingly, being once moued of the ſpirit, a bonitate obiecti, by the goodneſſe of the obiect: pag.56. So his opinion is, That the will of man is not only paſſiue, but alſo actiue in the conuerſion of man: De libero arbit.pag.118. And as God worketh by teaching, inſpiring, mouing; ſo man worketh, by willing, conſenting, endeuouring: pag.120.lin.1.2. So the beginning and occaſion of faith is of God, but the act and perfection of faith, in man.

Yet Hemingius much forgetting himſelfe, alloweth that ſaying of Auguſtine: Liberi arbitrij eſt velle, tamen bene velle, gratiæ Dei eſt: That it is in our free will, to will; but well to will, is of grace: De liber.arbitr.pag.98. And that of Bernard alſo he alloweth: Deus eſt author ſalutis, liberum arbitrium tantum capax, nec dat illam niſi Deus, nec capere valet niſi liberum arbitrium: God is the author only and worker of ſaluation, free will is only capable, none giueth but God, nor nothing is capable of it, but free will; pag.120. Thus he confeſſeth with theſe fathers, that mans free will is meerely paſſiue in diuine things, and onely receiueth, worketh nothing. And further he confeſſeth, That a man regenerate and taught of God, may will that is good, by his free will, which hee hath of grace: pag.114. lin.17. Here he ſaith, that free will to good is of grace: and thus he is contrarie to himſelfe.

Snecanus likewiſe runneth in a maze, and confoundeth himſelfe: One while he ſaith, That grace and mans will worke together: and that men may reſiſt God, and of their owne motion giue aſſent vnto him, Quantum ad ipſam naturalem volendi actionem in creatione inditam attinet: By the very naturall action of the will, as it was giuen in the creation: De liber.arbitr.pag.405. Yet with the ſame breath he ſaith, that mans will is no efficient, or working cauſe of his conuerſion, but onely a principall ſubiect, wherein the ſpirit of God worketh: And that in ſpirituall actions, as in faith, regeneration, A man vnregenerate neither vnderſtandeth, nor is able to doe or will any thing: pag.398. And that the whole benefit of our conuerſion, in the beginning, midſt, and end, is neither begun nor finiſhed by our ſtrength, but is only of grace: pag.405. Thus they ſpeake and write contrarie things, and blow hot and cold with one breath. But for all this, they cannot thus ſhuffle vp the matter, but we further vrge them thus.

Contra. They that affirme that God offereth grace and faith equally to all, and that God would haue all men to beleeue, and if they beleeue not, it is not for want of grace, but the fault is onely in themſelues; doe conſequently hold, that to beleeue is either wholly or in part in mans power. The firſt, to affirme that faith is in mans power wholly without the gift of God, is Pelagianiſme, and maketh man the author of his owne ſaluation. Yet ſo holdeth Puckſius, one of the patrones of this opinion: but Hemingius and Snecanus, or other vniuerſall men, are not yet ſo groſſe. Their opinion is then, that faith is partly of God, partly of man, that cōſenteth vnto the calling of God by his free will. Againſt the which opinion wee haue the decree of the Arauſican.Concil.2.can.5. Si quis ſicut augmentum, ita & initium fidei, ipſum credulitatis affectum, &c. If any man ſay, that as the encreaſe, ſo the beginning of faith, likewiſe the very inward diſpoſition to beleeue, whereby wee beleeue in him, that iuſtifieth the vngodly, is not giuen vs by grace, and the inſpiration of the holie Ghoſt, which conuerteth our will from infidelitie to faith, but that it is naturally in vs, is contrarie to the Apoſtle, who ſaith, We truſt that he which hath begun this worke in you, will finiſh it vntill the day of the Lord. This decree maketh both againſt thoſe, that affirme faith to be naturally in vs, as Puckrius, as alſo againſt them which aſcribe either the beginning of faith, or the increaſe, or the diſpoſition to free will, and not all to grace, as Hemingius. The abſurditie of which opinion, we further declare thus.

1. If it be in mans power to beleeue, whether doe you vnderſtand man regenerate, or vnregenerate? Man vnregenerate is not able to beleeue, for the naturall man perceiueth not the things of the ſpirit of God. And this is partly confeſſed by Hemingius and Suecanus, as wee haue ſeene before. If man muſt firſt be regenerate before he can beleeue, how commeth it to paſſe, that ſeeing an equall meaſure of faith, and grace is offered on Gods behalfe vnto all, that all men are not regenerate? You will ſay, ſome are regenerate by grace: But why doe ſome apprehend the grace of regeneration more then other? there is no power yet in their will, becauſe it is vnregenerate: muſt it not then be needes confeſſed, that God giueth a greater meaſure of grace to ſome, ſuch as he hath elected, then to other? And this the Apoſtle notably prooueth, where he ſaith, God is the Sauiour of all men, eſpecially of thoſe which beleeue. But if God for his part offer grace no more to beleeuers, then vnbeleeuers, but in that they accept of grace offered themſelues, how is he after a more eſpeciall ſort the Sauiour of beleeuers, more then of others? This place then inferreth of neceſſitie a more ſpeciall grace and fauour of God toward them that beleeue.

1.Cor.2.14.
1.Timoth.4.10

2. That all cannot haue faith, but ſuch as are ordained and elected thereunto: theſe Scriptures are our warrant: Ye beleeue not, for ye are not of my ſheepe. They could not beleeue, becauſe God had blinded their eyes. As many as were ordained to eternall life, beleeued. Their anſwers to theſe places wee haue ſeene before, that we need not to repeate them againe.

Ioh.10.26.
Ioh.12.39.
Act.13.48.

3. That faith and euery good gift, the beginning, perfection and end, is only of God, thus alſo it is teſtified in the word of God: It is not of him that willeth, or runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercie. It is God that worketh both the will and the deed. Without me you can doe nothing. No man can come vnto me, except my father draw him. Hemingius anſwereth, that God draweth, by ſetting before vs the promiſes of eternall life, and by miniſtring ſo excellent an obiect: pag.57. But after this manner God (you ſay) draweth all men: and ſuch drawing men may reſiſt, for all that are thus drawne by this common grace, follow not: But they that are drawne of God, as here our Sauiour ſpeaketh, muſt needs come vnto Chriſt, verſ.37. All that the Father giueth me, ſhall come to me.

Rom.9.16.
Philip.2.13.
Ioh.15.5.
Ioh.6.44.

To conclude this place, theſe patrones of common grace doe fall into a flat point of Pelagianiſme, whoſe aſſertion was this: Vitam eternam omnibus paratam eſſe, quantum ad Deum, quantum ad arbitrij libertatem, ab eis eam apprehendi, qui ſponte Deo crediderunt: That life eternall, on Gods behalfe is prepared for all, and as for the libertie of free will, they lay hold of eternall life, that of themſelues beleeue God: In epiſtol. Proſper. ad Auguſtinum. This did the old Pelagians hold, this doe the new Vniuerſaliſts affirme.

Now to requite vs againe, for this charge, they accuſe vs of Manicheiſme, the Manichees tooke away the vſe of free will altogether, and affirmed all things to be done of neceſſitie, and conſequently made God the author of ſinne: to this opinion they ſay, we come neere.

Hemingius pag 109.

Contra. We defie the monſtrous ſect of the Manichees and all Manicheiſme. Firſt wee affirme, not all things to be done of abſolute neceſſitie: for though God haue decreed the end of euery man, yet this no more bringeth a ſtoicall and fatall neceſſitie, then to ſay that God hath foreſeene all things (which they themſelues affirme:) for whether God onely foreſeeth, or beſide predeſtinateth, things cannot otherwiſe fall out, then he hath foreſeene or appointed: yet it followeth not, that the yoke of abſolute neceſſitie is therefore laid vpon vs: for neither Gods preſcience nor predeſtination taketh away ſecond meanes and cauſes, as the libertie of mans will, and ſuch like, but rather eſtabliſheth them: for as God did foreknow and ordaine things to be done, ſo hee willed and decreed, and foreſaw the meanes whereby they ſhould be done.

2. We make not God the author of ſinne, though he haue not elected all: for the not elected, being left to themſelues by the corruption of their owne will, fall into ſinne, which God foreſaw, but willed not, but the puniſhment of ſinne, he decreed before, and in his time will ſee executed.

3. Neither doe we take away free will: which we ſay is the beginning and fountaine of ſinne in man: ſo man hath a free will, that is without conſtraint to doe euill. And in good things wee exclude not the will of man: but man (we ſay) willeth, and by grace his will is reformed to will that that is good: So grace worketh, the will of man is wrought: Man then hath a will in good things, but altogether paſſiue: yet God otherwiſe worketh in man, then in bruite beaſts, for they haue no will or vnderſtanding at all, man hath, though corrupted. Hence are all thoſe precepts, and exhortations in Scripture, not that man of his owne accord is able to receiue them: but God ſpeaketh to men as a reaſonable creature, that naturally doth will, and vnderſtand, that they ſhould bee ſtirred vp by ſuch exhortations, to ſeeke for further grace at Gods hand, to reforme and regenerate their wils to the obedience of his holy precepts. Thus then it appeareth, that wee are no Manichees. Other obiections concerning free will, because they are common to the Papiſts, and theſe new free will men (which differ not much in this matter) I will referre to the treatiſe of free will, which followeth. And yet, what ſaid I? that they much differ not? Nay, of the two thoſe Vniuerſall free men are more erroneous concerning this point of free will, then the Papiſts.

1. The Papiſts make a diſtinction of ſufficient and effectuall grace on Gods behalfe. Bellarm.lib.1. de grat.cap.2. But theſe Vniuerſaliſts ſay, that on Gods behalfe, like effectuall grace is giuen to all, but their free will maketh the difference, whereby ſome beleeuing, make this common grace to themſelues more effectuall: So they aſcribe more to free will, namely, to make grace effectuall, then the Papiſts doe. 2. The Papiſts ſay, we haue free will (yet aided and aſſiſted by God) to doe good workes: theſe Vniuerſaliſts ſay, we haue free will to beleeue, which is a greater gift, then to doe good workes, which are a neceſſarie conſequent of faith. 3. The Papiſts ſay, that the firſt grace whereby we are iuſtified, that is the beginning of iuſtification, is meerely of grace both in the giuer and receiuer: theſe Vniuerſaliſts ſay, that God indeede offereth grace, by mouing, and ſtirring the heart, but man by his free will giueth conſent to his calling: ſo that the beginning of their calling is but free in behalfe of the caller, but it is of themſelues, that they are effectually called. And thus much of this third inconuenience.

That it is not in a mans power to beleeue, Saint Ambroſe thus further witneſſeth, in 4. ad Galat. vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle: Seeing ye know God, or rather are knowne of God: Cum enim hi non quærerent Deum, aduocauit eos ad ſuam gratiam: For when they did not ſeeke God, hee called them to his grace. Lib.1.de vocat.Gentium, cap.9. Licet inſit homini bonum nolle, tamen niſi donatum non habet bonum velle: illud contraxit natura per culpam, hoc recipit natura per gratiam: Although it be in man to nill that is good, yet he cannot will that is good, vnleſſe it be giuen him.

Auguſtine ſaith, Datur poteſtas, &c. Power is giuen them to be the ſonnes of God, which beleeue in him, cum hoc ipſum datur, vt credant in eum, ſeeing this is giuen them to beleeue in him, which power vnleſſe it be giuen them of God, it cannot be of free will, &c. Cont.2.epiſt. Pelag.lib.1.c.3

Chryſoſtome ſaith, Nihil noſtrum eſſe putemus, quandoquidem & ipſa fides non eſt noſtrum opus: Let vs not thinke any thing to be ours, ſeeing that faith is not our worke. Hom.30.in 14. cap.Act.

Theodoret: Deus horum bonorum cauſa eſt, ipſe enim firmam nobis fidem in Chriſtum donauit: God is the cauſe of theſe good things, for he hath giuen vnto vs firme faith in Chriſt. In 2.Cor.c.1.

Confeſſion of Bohemia, chap.10. Only through the pure Goſpell, and the preaching thereof, is faith ſowed inwardly by the holy Ghoſt. Latter confeſſion of Heluetia, chap.16. This faith is the meere gift of God, becauſe God alone of his power doth giue it to his elect. Harm.ſect 7. pag.205. Harm.ſect.9. pag.244.

Thomas Aquine directly affirmeth, that to beleeue, oportet ponere Dei gratiam interius mouentem: We muſt preſuppoſe the grace of God inwardly mouing: and ſo he concludeth, that, credere eſt in voluntate hominis, quæ præparatur per gratiam, vt credat, &c. to beleeue is in the will of man, which is prepared by grace to beleeue, &c. 2.2.q.6.artic.1.

THE FOVRTH INCONVENIENCE
or abſurditie.

Abſurd.4. Another conſequent of their opinion is, that as it is in mans power to beleeue, and obey his effectuall calling, ſo may he reſiſt it if he will. So Hemingius pag.117.lin.17. The will of man being moued by the word of God, and the holy Ghoſt, may both obey and reſiſt the ſame. The ſame is affirmed by Snecanus de libero arbitrio, pag.405. for they ſay, that the cauſe why all beleeue not that are called, is not at all for any want of grace on Gods behalfe, but it is only in themſelues, that refuſe grace offered: Snecan.pag.919.

Argum. Our Sauiour ſaith, O Ieruſalem, &c. how often would I haue gathered thy children together, &c. and thou wouldeſt not? Matth.23. Wherefore if they would, they might haue been ſaued: It is therefore in mans power to reſiſt his vocation: ſic Heming.pag.117. Matth.23.37.

Contra. 1. True it is, that it is not for any defect or want of grace on Gods behalfe, that many being called, beleeue not, but the defect is in themſelues: there is no defect properly in God: his calling is ſufficient vnto all; but that it is effectuall to ſome and not to others, it commeth of their owne corruption, and euilnes of nature, which God taketh away and healeth in whom he pleaſeth, and ſuffereth the reſt to remaine in their hardnes of heart.

2. There is a ſufficient calling for all, when God offereth the externall meanes of ſaluation, whereby all might come to ſaluation, if they had grace to apprehend: this calling may be reſiſted by men, whom God iuſtly leaueth to themſelues. There is alſo an effectuall calling, when as God worketh inwardly by the efficacie of his ſpirit, and draweth his elect, of vnwilling making them willing, to obey their calling: and thus are the elected only called, and this calling cannot be reſiſted. So ſaith our Sauiour, Many are called, namely, ſufficiently on Gods behalfe, but few are choſen, that is, effectually called, as the elect only are: The firſt calling was offered to Ieruſalem.

Here it will be obiected: firſt: This generall calling of God, if it be not effectuall to all, how is not God to be charged with the periſhing of thoſe, to whom it is not effectuall?

Anſw. God in no wiſe is chargeable therewith: for Gods calling in it ſelfe is ſufficient to all, it is for want of grace in themſelues, that it is not effectuall to them.

*Obiect.*2. But why doth not God by the powerfull operation of grace, make it effectuall to all as to ſome? is he not now partiall?

Anſw. God is a debter to none: but whereas all by nature haue made themſelues the ſeruants of ſinne, if God in his iuſtice would leaue them all to themſelues, he were not therefore to be iudged vniuſt. But now ſeeing he of his infinite mercie ſaueth ſome, and giueth them his grace, it is not partialitie in him, who findeth nothing in man to be reſpected, but a worke of his meere grace and fauour: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, he hath mercie on whom he will, and whom he will he hardeneth.

3. That Gods effectuall and gracious calling of election cannot be reſiſted, thus the Scripture beareth witneſſe: No man hath reſiſted Gods will: But as the Pſalme ſaith, Whatſoeuer it pleaſed him, that did he in heauen and earth. Whom it pleaſed God therefore to ſaue, and call by his grace, they ſhall be ſaued and called. Rom. 9.19.

All that my father giueth me, ſhall come vnto me.: And euery man that hath heard, and hath learned of the father, commeth vnto me: Not that God ſaueth any man againſt his will, but, as Auguſtine ſaith, Ex nolentibus volentes facit: Of vnwilling hee maketh them willing. Auguſtine further alſo writeth notably of this matter: *Non poteſt effectus miſericordiæ Dei eſſe in hominis poteſtate, vt fruſtra ille miſereatur, ſi homo nolit: quia ſi vellet etiam reluctantium miſereri, poſſet ita vocare, quomodo illis aptum eſſet, &c. Illi ergo electi, qui congruenter vocati, non reſpuunt: — Cæteri non electi, quia non ſecuti, quamuis vocati: ad Simplician. lib.*1. *quæſt.*2. It cannot be in mans power to fruſtrate the efficacie of Gods mercie, if man will not: for if God alſo would haue mercie of thoſe, that ſtriue againſt his mercie, he could alſo call them, as it were meete for them; They therefore are elected of God, who are agreeably or conueniently called, that they refuſe not their calling: the reſt are not elected, which are called, but obey not, &c. And thus much alſo of this inconuenience, that if man may fruſtrate Gods effectuall calling, that God ſhall not haue mercie, vnleſſe man will, then is the will of man ſtronger and of greater power, than Gods will is. Iohn 6.37.45.

Laſtly, concerning theſe three points: firſt, that there is a generall calling which is ſufficient to all, and beſide that a ſpeciall calling effectuall onely in ſome. Secondly, that the generall calling by the hardneſſe of mans heart may be made fruſtrate. Thirdly, that the effectuall calling of God cannot be reſiſted. S. Ambroſe doth thus witneſſe euidently.

Firſt, hee ſaith, lib. 1. de vocat. Gent. c. 2. Credimus ſecundum ſcripturas, &c. Wee beleeue according to the Scriptures, that Gods prouidence was neuer wanting to the vniuerſall companie of men: Qualicet exceptum ſibi populum ſpecialibus ad pietatem direxerit inſtitutis, &c. Which prouidence of God did yet giue ſpeciall directions vnto godlineſſe to his people, which hee had excepted from the reſt.

For the ſecond he thus teſtifieth: Si quis non credit in Chriſtum, generali beneficio ipſe ſe fraudat, vt ſi quis clauſis feneſtris radios ſolis excludat: If any man beleeue not in Chriſt, hee doth defraud himſelfe, as if a man ſhould ſhut the windowes to keepe out the Sunne-beames: *lib.*2.*cap.*2.

Thirdly, lib. 1. de vocat. Gent. cap. 10. Nihil obſiſtere diuinæ gratiæ poteſt, quo minus id, quod voluerit impleatur: Nothing can reſiſt the diuine grace, that it ſhould not fulfill whatſoeuer it would. And againe, cap. 9. Quantumlibet impiorum malignitas accuſetur reſiſtens gratiæ, &c. Although the malignitie of the wicked bee accuſed, as reſiſting grace; ſhall it bee thought, that they deſerued grace, vpon whom it was conferred, or that grace, which ſubdued whom ſhe would, could not conuert thoſe, which remaine vnconuerted? they which were called, were the ſame, which they are that remaine in their hardneſſe of heart: Sed illis tribuit gratia ſtupenda, quod voluit; iſtis retribuit veritas iuſta, quod debuit: but grace gaue vnto them, what ſhe would; and iuſtice rendred to the other, what was due.

Auguſtine alſo thus witneſſeth: Volenti ſaluum facere nullum hominum reſiſtit arbitrium: Mans will is not able to reſiſt God, being willing, or purpoſed to ſaue: *De corrept. & grat. cap.*14. Non eſt dubitandum voluntati Dei — voluntates humanas reſiſtere non poſſe: It is not to bee doubted, but that mans will cannot reſiſt Gods will, who hath done, whatſoeuer hee would in heauen and earth: ibid.

Likewiſe: 1. Auguſtine maketh two kindes of vocation: writing vpon theſe words, Whom he hath predeſtinate, he hath called, Hæc vocatio ſecundum propoſitum, eſt, hæc eſt ſine pœnitentia: This calling is according to Gods purpoſe, that is without repentance, &c. Non ſunt in iſta vocatione, &c. They are not in this calling, which walke in faith a while, but perſeuere not. Epiſt. 59. ad Paulin.

Tertullian agreeth: vt lapides filij Abrahæ fient, ſi in fidem Abrahæ inſeruntur, & genimina viperarum fructum pœnitentiæ facient — hæc erit vis diuinæ gratiæ, potentior vtiq; natura, habens in nobis ſubiacentem ſibi liberi arbitrij poteſtatem, &c. Both ſtones ſhall become Abrahams children, if they be planted into the faith, and the ſprigges of vipers ſhall bring forth fruites of repentance, if they ſpet out their venome: this is the power of the diuine grace, mightier then nature, hauing ſubiect vnto it the power of free will. Lib. de anim. cap. de cæteris naturalib. animæ.

2. Cyrill ſaith, that faith worketh aboue the ſtrength of man: mans ſtrength then is not able to reſiſt the grace of God. ὑπὲρ ἀνθρωπίνην ἰσχύν.

3. Confeſſ. of Heluetia, the former, artic. 19. Except the Lord doe giue encreaſe in the heart of the hearer, the doctrine to him which hath no faith, is as it were a watring and planting, but ſuch as is without Catechiſ. 5. Harm. ſect. 11. pag. 350.

out efficacie and vnfruitfull, but being receiued by faith into good ground, and being trimmed by the inward husband man the holy Ghoſt, doth worke meruailouſly, and profit,&c. There are then two kindes of calling, one externall, which is not alwaies effectuall, one internall, which alwayes worketh effectually.

4 Thom. Aquine: this queſtion being propounded, whether grace can be more in one, then another, granteth, that it may ex parte ſubiecti, on the behalfe of the ſubiect: Prout vnus perfectius illuſtratur lumine gratia quàm alius: As one may be more perfitly lightened with the light of grace then another: and the firſt reaſon of this diuerſitie is on Gods part, Qui diuerſimode ſua dona diſpenſat, who diuerſly diſpenſeth his gifts,&c. ſo then there are diuers kindes of callings, which are not alike effectuall to all.

2.1.qu.112, artic.4.

THE FIFTH ABSVRDITIE.

A*Bſurd.5.* Theſe patrones of vniuerſall and conditionall election and grace, which affirme that men are no otherwiſe elected, but with condition if they beleeue, and ſo long are they elected, as they continue in faith, doe conſequently alſo hold, that men may both loſe their election, and loſe their faith: and of the veſſels of honour, if they fall from faith, become veſſels of wrath: Heming. pag.30. And they which are written in the booke of life, may be raſed out of it: Huber.theſ.757. The ſame alſo is maintained by Snecanus, that the elect may finally fall away from Chriſt. pag.976.

Argum.1. That election may be loſt, they would thus proue it out of Scripture: Moſes ſaith vnto God: If thou wilt not pardon them, raſe me out of the booke which thou haſt written: The Lord anſwered, Him that ſinneth will I put out of my booke. Neither Moſes would haue asked an impoſſible thing, neither would God haue ſo anſwered, if that they could not be raſed out of the booke of life that are written there: Huber.theſ.766.

Exod.32.32.

Anſw.1. Moſes being carried away with an extraordinarie zeale of Gods glory, and loue to the people, forgetting himſelfe and his owne eſtate, wiſheth, that himſelfe ſhould periſh, rather then the people: yet it followeth not, that hee could periſh: For after the ſame manner S. Paul with the like zeale wiſheth he were accurſed, ſo the Iewes might be ſaued, yet the Apoſtle was ſure that he could not periſh, nor be ſeparated from the loue of God: And he knew there was a crowne of glory laid vp for him. No ſuch thing therefore can be inferred vpon theſe extraordinarie examples of zeale. 2. But the Lord anſwering Moſes, ſaith, hee will put out,&c. though Moſes might be carried away in zeale ſo to ſpeake, yet the Lord ſpeaketh aduiſedly. Anſw. Firſt, the Lord applieth his ſpeech vnto Moſes infirmitie at this time, and by way of conceſſion, ſaith vnto him, that if it were ſo, that ſome were to be put out of his booke, yet Moſes ſhould not, but they rather that ſinned. Againe, it is a metaphoricall ſpeech, for God hath indeede no ſuch booke, ſuch putting in or putting out: but by writing in that booke, the decree of ſaluation is ſignified; by not writing or blotting out, the decree of damnation: God will put them out that ſinne, that is, hath decreed their iuſt damnation: for otherwiſe to ſpeake properly they were neuer written in the booke of life. Here wee haue a direct teſtimonie, that ſuch as are loſt, were neuer written in the booke of life; how dare then any man wreſt the Scripture to a contrarie ſenſe, and ſo make it ſpeake contrary things? Or as Auguſtine interpreteth, Non ſic accipere debemus, quòd quenquã Deus ſcribat in libro vitæ & deleat illũ, ſi homo dixit, quod ſcripſi, ſcripſi;—Deus quenquam ſcripſit & delet?—quomodo ergo ibi delentur, vbi nunquam ſcripti ſunt? hoc dictum eſt ſecundum eorum ſpem, quia ibi ſe ſcriptos putabant. We muſt not ſo take it, as though God writeth any in the booke of life, and blotteth them out againe: for if a man ſaid, what I haue written, I haue written (ſo Pilate ſaid concerning the inſcription of the Croſſe) doth God write any, and blot out again? how are they then blotted out, where they were neuer written? It is ſo ſaid in reſpect of their hope, becauſe they thought they were written there.

Reuel.17.8.

They alſo obiect that place, I beate downe my body, leaſt,&c. I my ſelfe ſhould be a reprobate,&c. Ergo, the elect may become a reprobate: Pucks.rat.77.

1.Cor.9.27.

Anſw.1. That Paul was aſſured he could not be a reprobate, we haue ſhewed before, for hee knew that there was a crowne of righteouſnes laid vp for him. 2. It is not then to be referred to the perſon of Paul, as though he feared any reprobation before God, but to his miniſterie, leaſt, if he ſhould doe himſelfe otherwiſe then he preached to others, his miniſterie ſhould be diſgraced, and reproued.

Argum.2. Now that faith alſo may be loſt, they ſhew it thus: Through thy knowledge ſhall the weake brother periſh for whom Chriſt dyed: Ergo, a man may loſe his faith and ſo periſh: Heming. pag.24.

1.Cor.8.11.

Anſwere.1. None can finally or eternally periſh, whom Chriſt hath redeemed by his death: for Chriſt cannot loſe any thing of that which is giuen him. 2. Therefore the Apoſtle here by periſhing vnderſtandeth not a finall deſtruction, but a ſhaking or weakning of their faith, which verſe 12. hee calleth a wounding of their conſcience: now it is one thing to wound, another to ſlay: that this is the meaning, it may appeare by comparing this place with the like: Deſtroy not him with thy meate for whom Chriſt dyed: where the ſame word is vſed, μὴ ἀπόλλυε, deſtroy not: that is, thy brother is grieued, verſ.15. hee ſtumbleth, is offended, or made weake, verſ.21. And againe, verſ.20. Deſtroy not the worke of God for meates ſake: the word is, κατάλυε: ſo then, ἀπόλλυε, and κατάλυε, deſtroy not, with the Apoſtle are all one: and to build vp is contrarie to deſtroy, as they are oppoſed: If I build againe the things that are deſtroyed: So then, as to build vp and edifie our brother, is nothing elſe but to inſtruct and confirme his faith, ſo to deſtroy, is not to periſh his perſon, but to impaire his faith. 3. Or thus we may reade, Through thy knowledge thy weake brother ſhall periſh: that is, as much as in thee lyeth, by thy meanes thy weake brother might periſh, not that ſimply or abſolutely he doth periſh. 4. Laſtly, S. Paul ſpeaketh not here of the eternall purpoſe of God, in them for whom hee hath giuen Chriſt to die, but that, as he himſelfe giueth the rule, Loue hopeth all things: ſo we ſhould thinke none other of our weake brother that beleeueth, but that Chriſt dyed for him: And that the Apoſtle thus ſpeaketh, not in reſpect of Gods ſecret decree in the death of Chriſt, but of that hope and opinion, that we ought one to haue of another, it appeareth, Rom. 14.4. where the Apoſtle ſpeaking of Gods ſecret decree, ſaith, Euery man ſtandeth or falleth to his owne maſter: euery man ſtandeth not, but ſome ſtand, ſome fall; But in reſpect of the iudgement and charitable opinion of men, he ſaith, verſ. 3. God hath receiued him: verſ. 4. He ſhall be eſtabliſhed: for God is able to make him ſtand: yet in the ſame verſe, he ſaith, before God he ſtandeth, or falleth: but in the iudgement of men, euery beleeuer ſtandeth, is eſtabliſhed, and receiued: and ſo conſequently for him Chriſt died, verſ. 15.

Contra. Now on the contrarie ſide, that both our election is ſure before God, neither that the faith of the elect, though it may faile, and impaire, yet cannot vtterly be loſt, thus we are aſſured by the euident teſtimonie of Scripture.

Argum. 1. The gifts and calling of God, are without repentance: Ioh. 13. 1. Whom God loueth he loueth to the end: My father is greater then all, and none is able to take them out of my fathers hand: Ergo, the elect cannot periſh.

Rom 11. 29.
Iohn 10. 29.

Hemingius pag. 65. anſwereth, that no man by violence can plucke the elect from God, yet they willingly may fall away; Snecanus alſo graunteth, that on Gods behalfe our election is ſure and immoueable, but not on mens behalfe, vnleſſe they continue, and holde faſt their faith to the end: pag. 976.

Contra. 1. The text is, My father is ſtronger then all: he is then ſtronger then our ſelues, that neither willingly nor vnwillingly the elect cannot depart from God: For I giue vnto them eternall life, ſaith Chriſt, and they ſhall neuer periſh: They can in no wiſe periſh, neither by force, nor by voluntarie declining from God: I will put my feare into their hearts, that they ſhall neuer depart from me: I will marrie thee for euer vnto me in righteouſneſſe.

Iohn 10. 28.
Ierem. 32. 40.
Hoſh. 2. 19.

2 That Gods election is abſolutely ſure both on his owne behalfe, and on their part that are elected: our Sauiour teſtifieth: This is my fathers will, that of all which he hath giuen me, I ſhould looſe nothing, but ſhould raiſe it vp at the laſt day. All that are elected, ſhall be aſſuredly raiſed vp to life eternall: And God, to ſuch, as he hath choſen, will giue grace to continue. They therefore that finally fall away, were not elected in the beginning: And that faith, which ſome haue made ſhipwracke of: is not the iuſtifying faith of the elect, but a temporarie, or hiſtoricall faith. Mens falling away from faith then, cannot make Gods election voyd: as the Apoſtle ſaith: Shall their vnbeliefe make the faith of God without effect? Rom. 3. 3.

Iohn 6. 39.
1. Tim. 1. 19.

3 We notwithſtanding confeſſe, that Gods election ſtandeth faſt, and is immutable in them that are elected, not by their owne ſtrength, but by the grace and gift of God, for of our ſelues we are mutable and changeable, readie to fall away, but that we ſtand by grace, as Ambroſe ſaith, lib. 2. de vocat. gentium c. 9. Si defectura erat fides tanti Apoſtoli, niſi pro eo Chriſtus oraret, inerat ei profecto mutabilitas, &c. If the faith of ſo great an Apoſtle ſhould haue failed, if Chriſt had not praied for him, there was mutabilitie in him, for the vnchangeable firmeneſſe of the minde is not to be found here.

Obiect. If they, whom the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, made ſhipwracke only of a temporarie faith, that is, a faith in ſhew, or imagined, then they loſt nothing: And is it a ſinne worthie of eternall puniſhment, to loſe the image onely, and ſhew of faith? Againe, where S. Paul ſaith, In the latter times ſome ſhall depart from the faith: they may as well here alſo vnderſtand, a diſſembled and imagined faith: Huber. theſ. 243.

Anſw. Firſt, though thoſe, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, had not a true iuſtifying faith, and therefore could not make ſhipwracke of that which they had not, yet had they more then a bare image of faith: for they had a forme of knowledge, and the profeſſion of the truth. Men alſo in ſome ſort may be lightened, Taſte of the heauenly gift, be partakers of ſome gifts of the holy Ghoſt, taſte of the word of God, and of the powers of the world to come: Hebr. 6. 4. 5. And theſe things not in ſhew onely, but in their kinde and meaſure in ſome ſort indeede, for it is but a taſte (as the Apoſtle ſaith) not as it were a full draught: and yet for all this they haue not a iuſtifying faith, which if they had, they could not finally fall away. Therefore though they haue but an image or ſhew of the liuely iuſtifying faith, which they indeed haue not, but ſeeme onely to haue, Luk. 8. 18. yet a kinde of faith they haue indeed, which they make ſhipwrack of. Secondly, the Apoſtle here vnderſtandeth not a right iuſtifying faith, which worketh * alwaies by loue, Galath. 5. 6. and is ioyned with a good conſcience, Rom. 5. 1. 1. Timoth. 1. 19. But theſe firſt had put away a good conſcience, and then made ſhipwracke of their faith. To this purpoſe Saint Ambroſe, lib. 2. de vocat. Gentium c. 2. Dignus erat perdere inutilem fidem, qui non exercuerat charitatem: Hee was worthie to looſe an vnprofitable faith, which did not exerciſe charitie: ſuch a fruitleſſe faith then may be loſt. Thirdly, by faith in the place alleaged, the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth the forme of true doctrine, as it appeareth by the oppoſite member, they ſhall depart from the faith, that is, from the doctrine of the truth, and giue heede to the doctrine of diuels: So in 2.Tim.2.18. this place Hymenæus maketh ſhipwracke of faith, that is, concerning the truth hath erred, And the Apoſtle ſheweth wherein he erred, ſaying, the reſurrection is paſt alreadie. Thus by making ſhipwrack of faith, the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth, the leauing of the truth, and falling into error. Fourthly, and for this Apoſtaſie from the truth, they deſerued eternall puniſhment, without their repentance: although the Apoſtle ſpeake not here of eternall damnation, but ſaith onely he had deliuered them to Sathan, that is, excommunicated them, for their amendment, to learne not to blaſpheme: as he decreed concerning the inceſtuous young man, 1.Corinth.5.5. who notwithſtanding afterward repented, and was reſtored.

2.Tim.2.19. Argum.2. The foundation of God remaineth ſure, the Lord knoweth who are his. Wee then thus reaſon: Gods preſcience cannot be deceiued: but God fore-ſaw in the beginning not onely in generall, but in particular, who ſhould bee ſaued: Ergo, the ſame, and no other ſhall be ſaued: therefore Lib.de correp.& grat. cap.7. none of the elect can periſh. So Auguſtine writeth: Horum, qui electi ſunt, ſi quiſpiam perit, fallitur Deus, ſed nemo eorum perit, quia non fallitur Deus: horum ſi quiſpiam perit humano vitio vincitur Deus, ſed nemo eorum perit, quia nulla re vincitur Deus: If any of the elect ſhould periſh, God is deceiued, but none of them periſheth, becauſe God is not deceiued: if any of them periſh, God is ouercome by the infirmitie of man; but nothing can ouercome God: therefore none of them periſheth, &c. This argument drawne from the definite certaintie of Gods preſcience, hath not yet beene anſwered by any of theſe Vniuerſaliſts: neither ſhall they euer be able to anſwere it.

Obiect. Doe we not ſee by experience, that many which beleeued, fall away; how is not faith then loſt, and election withall? We anſwere with Auguſtine: Firſt, they that finally fall away, neuer were endued with a right faith, nor elected of God: Nec nos moneat, quod quibuſdam filijs ſuis Deus non dat perſeuerantiam, abſit vt ita eſſet, ſi de illis prædeſtinatis eſſent — qui verè ſunt filij promiſſionis: Let it not moue vs that vnto ſome, which appeared to be Gods children, God giueth not grace to perſeuere, it ſhould not be ſo, if they were of the number of the predeſtinate, which are the true children of promiſe. Secondly, but concerning the elect he ſaith: Horum fides aut omnino non deficit, aut ſi qui ſunt, quorum deficit, reparatur, antequam vita iſta finiatur: Their faith either faileth not at all; or if it doe, it is reſtored before their life be ended: Lib. de correpț. & grat. cap.7.9.

S. Ambroſe alſo ſaith, in 8. ad Roman. Qui credere videntur & non permanent in fide, à Deo electi negantur: They which ſeeme to beleeue, and continue not in faith, are not elected of God: Eſt qui ad tempus eligitur, ſicut Saul & Iudas, non de præſcientia, ſed de præſenti iuſtitia: there is, that is choſen for a time, as Saul and Iudas, not of preſcience, but according to their preſent iuſtice.

Obiect. If then the elect cannot finally periſh, nor bee depriued of their faith, to what end are all thoſe admonitions in Scripture, Let him that ſtandeth take heed leaſt he fall: to him that ouercommeth will I giue a crowne, &c. Snecanus to this anſwereth well, that theſe exhortations doe ſerue as meanes to preſerue our faith, and doe ſtirre vp in vs a care of godlineſſe, whereby wee may riſe vp in aſſurance daily of our election: pag.470. for though our election be alwaies ſure before God, yet is it not other- 2.Pet.1.10. wiſe aſſured to vs, but by the effects and workes of our calling: And though our ſaluation bee certainely decreed before God, yet is it by meanes, ſuch as he hath appointed, accompliſhed toward vs. As S. Ambroſe witneſſeth, lib.2. de vocat. gent. cap.10. Quamuis quod ſtatuit Deus, nulla poſſit ratione non fieri, ſtudia tamen non tolluntur orandi, nec per electionis propoſitum liberi arbitrij deuotio relaxatur: Although that which God appointeth cannot be but done, yet the ſtudie or deſire of prayer is not taken away, nor the deuotion of mans free-will releaſed by election.

And for the certaintie of election he further thus teſtifieth: Lib.2. de vocat. gent. c.9. Sicut nullus infidelium in hac ſorte numeratus, ita nullus piorum ab hac ſorte diſcretus: de plenitudine quippe membrorum corporis Chriſti, præſcientia Dei, quæ falli non poteſt nihil perdit, &c. As no vnbeleeuer is numbred in this lot, ſo none of the godly is ſeparated from it; for the preſcience of God, which cannot be deceiued, doth looſe nothing of the fulneſſe of the members of Chriſt.

Hierome Epiſt. ad Pammach. & Ocean. rehearſeth this to be one of the errors of Origene: that in the end after diuers worlds, idipſum fore Gabrielem, quod diabolum; Paulum, quod Caipham: Gabriel ſhall bee the ſame, that the diuell; and Paul, that Caiphas: Huberus hath the like ſaying, as I haue ſhewed before, that Paul and Peter were no more elected, then Iudas.

De fid. ad Petrum. c.39. 1. Auguſtine yet more directly ſaith: Firmiſſimè tene neque perire poſſe aliquem eorum, quos Deus prædeſtinauit ad regnum cœlorum, &c. Vndoubtedly hold, that none of them can periſh, whom God hath predeſtinate to the kingdome of heauen, nor any of them can bee ſaued, that are not predeſtinate.

εἱμαρμένην ἀπαραίτητον. 2. Iuſtinus Martyr calleth it, an ineuitable fate, that they which doe well ſhall be rewarded, they which doe euill puniſhed.

Apolog.2. pro Chriſtian. 3. Confeſſ. of Heluetia the latter. c.10. The Saints are choſen in Chriſt by God to a ſure end.

Harm. ſect.5. pag.84. 4. Thomas reſolueth well, that it is poſſible for a man predeſtinate being in himſelfe conſidered to die in mortall ſinne: but it is impoſſible, Prout ponitur eum eſſe prædeſtinatum: as he is affirmed to be predeſtinate.

1.p.q.23.ar.6. And thus much of this inconuenience, which they are driuen to confeſſe, namely, that election and faith may bee loſt: whereupon follow many abſurdities, as wee haue ſeene: Firſt, that by this meanes the preſcience and fore-knowledge of God may be deceiued, if election, which he both foreſaw and decreed, may be altered. Secondly, Gods purpoſe of ſaluation is by mans infirmitie ouerthrowne: that if he hold not, neither doth the decree hold. Thirdly, it breedeth vncertaintie of ſaluation, and ſo deſpaire: for by this meanes the ſtrength of our hope is ſtayed vpon mans free-will; a miſerable hold for a diſtreſſed conſcience to ſtay vpon. Fourthly, the Vniuerſaliſts herein are more erronious then the Papiſts: for they confeſſe an abſolute and determinate certaintie of our election before God, though they denie a full perſwaſion and aſſurance thereof vnto men: but theſe denie both: Let vs now finiſh the reſt.

THE SIXTH INCONVENIENCE.

A*Bſurd.*6. In ſaying that God only purpoſed to ſaue thoſe that ſhould beleeue, and to condemne all vnbeleeuers, they conſequently affirme, that, Incredulitas ſit vnica cauſa condemnationis, that incredulitie is the only cauſe of condemnation: *Huber.theſ.*187. And ſo they extenuate other ſinnes, as Puckſius: In ſimplice ignoratione, aut incredulitate nullum eſt ſcelus: In ſimple ignorance and vnbeleefe, there is no ſinne, *ration.*56. And againe, Reſpectu peccati originalis, neminem æterna morte plecti: That no man is puniſhed eternally for originall ſinne: *ration.*13. That mortalitie and other miſeries of this life, are only the puniſhment of originall ſinne: *ration.*1 & 5. Snecanus alſo ſaith, that the originall corruption of mans nature, is not the foundation of reall reprobation, but the contempt of the grace of God: His reaſon is, becauſe then euery man ſhould be reiected, becauſe there remaineth originall corruption in all: *De prædeſtin.pag.*655.

*Contra.*1. That ſimple ignorance or incredulitie excuſeth not, S. Paul ſheweth, As many as haue ſinned without the law, ſhall periſh without the law. And verſe 14. They hauing not the law, are a law to themſelues. Rom.2.12,14. Here the Gentiles are not accuſed of wilfull contempt of grace, which was not preached vnto them, but onely of ſimple ignorance, yet are they worthie of condemnation. Secondly, that originall ſinne in it ſelfe deſerueth eternall death, it is at large declared by the Apoſtle, By one man ſinne entred into the world, and death by ſinne. Rom.5.12,16. And afterward he ſheweth what death, The fault came of one offence to condemnation. Thirdly, that originall ſinne is not the ground or cauſe of reall reprobation, and actuall condemnation, in part it is true, in part falſe: It is true, becauſe by the mercie of God it is not imputed to thoſe which are ſaued by Chriſt, as no other ſinnes are: It is falſe, firſt, becauſe, though originall ſinne be not imputed of grace, yet in it ſelfe it hath ſufficient matter of condemnation: againe, it is the ground of all actuall ſinne, and ſinne is the ground or cauſe of damnation: thirdly, vnto ſome it is the ground of reprobation, as vnto ſuch children of Infidels, as are not ſaued by election of grace.

Now concerning wilfull incredulitie, and contempt of grace, that it is not the onely cauſe of reprobation, I will briefly ſhew by theſe two arguments, ab incommodo, which follow.

Firſt, it will follow vpon this opinion, that all thoſe nations of the Gentiles, which had no knowledge of God, were freed from damnation, becauſe the Goſpell was not preached vnto them, as, In times paſt God ſuffered the Gentiles to walke in their owne wayes, verſe 17. hee notwithſtanding left not himſelfe without witneſſe, in that he gaue them rayne from heauen, &c. Act.14.16,17. They had no other witneſſe but the teſtimonie of the creatures: the word they had not, The time of this ignorance God regarded not. Act.17.30. Seeing therefore that grace was not offered them, they could not bee contemners of grace, and ſo conſequently by their opinion, were free from damnation.

Snecanus goeth about here rather to make an anſwere, then indeed anſwereth: All theſe nations which were ſtrangers from Iſrael, and from the promiſe, in the beginning contemned the grace of redemption offered, and refuſed the promiſe, and therefore were worthily reiected: *De prædeſtinat. pag.*665.

Contra. Let it be granted, that all nations at the firſt deſpiſed the promiſe (yet ſhall he neuer bee able to proue, that in the time of the law, grace was vniuerſally offered to all people) how could their poſteritie after them be counted contemners of grace, which they neuer heard of? The parents actuall ſinnes, though they may be the cauſe of temporall puniſhment vpon the children, yet can they not, in the iuſtice of God, be the ground of their eternall reiection. And as for their originall corruption, it is confeſſed already, that it cannot be the foundation of reall reprobation. This obiection therefore we expect a more ſufficient anſwere.

This obiection is ſtrongly vrged and enforced by S. *Ambroſe; lib.*1.*de vocat.gent.cap.*5. Liberatur pars hominum parte pereunte, &c. Part of mankinde is deliuered, the reſt periſheth; and if wee will aſcribe this to the wils of men, that grace neglected the euill, and did chuſe the good: Reſiſtet nobis innumerabilium cauſa populorum: The condition of innumerable people will gaine-ſay vs, vnto whom for many ages no light of heauenly doctrine did ſhine: neither can wee ſay, that their poſteritie was better, of whom it is ſaid, the people, that ſate in darkneſſe, ſaw great light. As Ambroſe concludeth, that the Gentiles were not called for their merites, becauſe they ſate in darkneſſe, and had no heauenly light: ſo it may be inferred, that they could not contemne or deſpiſe that light which did not ſhine vnto them.

Secondly, wee obiect, concerning the infants of infidell parents, that if vnbeliefe onely exclude from election, then are they not excluded, for they are not capable of faith, and therefore cannot deſpiſe faith and grace. To this obiection diuers anſweres haue beene deuiſed, but none of them ſufficient.

Firſt it may be, and is anſwered of ſome, that infants are iudged according to the fore-ſight of their beliefe or vnbeliefe, if they had liued.

2.Cor.5.10. De prædeſtinat. Sanctor. cap.12.

Contra. Auguſtine confuteth this, by that place of S.Paul, 2.Cor.5.10. That euery man ſhall receiue according to the things done in the body: Geſſit inquit, non adiunxit, vel geſturus fuit: Hee ſaith, what he hath done, not what he ſhould doe. Againe, Chriſt vpbraiding the vnthankfull Cities that ſaw his workes, and repented not, ſaith, If the great workes which haue beene done in them, had beene done in Tyrus and Sidon, they had repented, &c. By this reaſon Tyrus and Sidon ſhould not haue beene iudged, becauſe of the fore-ſight of their repentance.

Secondly, it may be ſaid, that infants dying, though they be not ſaued, becauſe they haue no faith, yet are they not damned, but they ſhall haue a certaine kinde of beatitude, though not in the kingdome of heauen.

Rom.5.16.

Contra. But this alſo is ouerthrowne by S.Paul, Rom.5. where he ſheweth, that by one mans ſin, death came vpon all to condemnation: and therefore children, if they bee not ſaued, are neceſſarily damned. This alſo is confuted by Auguſtine lib. de bon. perſeueran. cap.12.

Gen.17.7. 1.Cor.7.14.

Thirdly, Snecanus anſwereth concerning the children of the faithfull, that they are all elected, and belong vnto the promiſe: I will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeede: S.Paul alſo calleth them holy, p.667. As for the children of infidels, he leaueth them vnto God, who may deale with them (he ſaith) extraordinarily, and further he defineth not their ſtate: pag.675.

Infants of beleeuing parents ſaued.

Contra. 1. Concerning the children of the faithfull that dye in their infancie, we affirme that they all by nature are ſubiect to eternall damnation, and if God adiudge any of them to condemnation hee doth it iuſtly: which we leaue vnto Gods ſecret iudgemēt: yet we are of charitie rather to iudge, that the infants of ſuch, whom God calleth to himſelfe, and ſo preuent the curſe of ſinne, are ſaued, becauſe they are vnder the couenant. And here we vnderſtand not onely thoſe children to be vnder the couenant, whoſe immediate parents were beleeuers, but if any of their predeceſſors in former times beleeued, for the promiſe of grace is made to a thouſand generations, Exod.20. But whereas Snecanus holdeth all the children of the faithfull, both thoſe that dye, and they that remaine, that they are elected; whereas we ſee, that many righteous mens children doe fall away from God: how can it be? vnleſſe they will affirme, that men may fall away from election, which how abſurd it is, wee haue ſhewed before. Againe, though the children of the faithfull be ſaued by the couenant of grace, yet are they not by faith: faith then alone is not the obiect of election, as they affirme.

Exod.20.

2 Concerning Infidels children, it is ſtrange that Snecanus ſo much forgetteth himſelfe, as to ſend vs to Gods extraordinarie and ſecret working; whereas he telleth vs, I am ſure aboue an hundred times in his booke, De prædeſtinatione; that God dealeth not with vs in the matter of predeſtination, Secundum abſolutam ſuam, aut extraordinariam potentiam, according to his extraordinarie power, pag.677. aut occulta ſua voluntate, or after his ſecret will, ſed ex lege ſui fœderis in ſacra ſcriptura patefacti, pag.633. but after the law of his couenant ſet forth in Scripture: What meaneth he then in the predeſtination of infidels children to ſend vs to Gods extraordinarie worke, and ſecret will? hee ſhould haue ſhewed vs ſomewhat reuealed in Scripture.

But to helpe him a little: we affirme, that euen ſome children of Infidels, whom it pleaſeth God, may ordinarily be elected: for, ſuch children of Infidels, whoſe immediate parents were vnbeleeuers, but their former anceſtors were faithfull, may be ſaued by the couenant of grace, which is made to a thouſand generations: the reſt indeed that are ſaued, whoſe progenitors were altogether Infidels, are ſaued by Gods ſecret election, and ſomewhat extraordinarily: vnto the which Snecanus is faine to flye for the reſolution of this queſtion. And thus much alſo of this inconuenience.

S. Ambroſe thus enforceth this obiection concerning infants: Lib.1. de vocat. Gent. cap.5. Reſpice ad vniuerſalem multitudinem paruulorum, &c. Looke vnto the vniuerſall multitude of little ones: which all before the vſe of vnderſtanding and free-will, ſome goe vnto eternall happineſſe being regenerate, others to perpetuall miſerie being not borne againe: If you confeſſe originall ſinne, they are all guiltie: if you ſeeke for innocencie, they are all without fault: Non inuenit, quod diſcernat humana iuſtitia, ſed habet, quod eligat inenarrabilis gratia: Humane iuſtice can finde nothing, to diſcerne or make difference, but the vnſpeakable grace findeth ſomewhat to elect, &c. The election of children is grounded only vpon the grace of God, here is no fore-ſight, or reſpect had vnto faith.

Lib.6. Hypognoſtic.

And that onely infidelitie is not the cauſe of damnation. 1. Auguſtine teſtifieth of the Africane Church: this rule muſt be firmely held peccatores in malis proprijs, antequam eſſent in hoc mundo, præſcitos non prædeſtinatos, &c. That ſinners were fore-ſeene in their proper euils, not predeſtinate, before they were in the world, but their puniſhment was predeſtinate according to that, which they were fore-ſeene, &c. the reprobate then haue their proper and peculiar ſinnes, not all one common ſinne of infidelitie onely.

Qu.64. in Geneſ.

2 Theodoret. God being good, Non vult punire ex ſola præſcientia ſed expectat operum conſummationem, & ita omnib. oſtendit, quàm iuſte puniat: Will not puniſh all according to his preſcience only, but hee expecteth the conſummation of their workes, and ſo he ſheweth vnto all how iuſtly he puniſheth, &c. ſo then not only infidelitie, but other euill workes condemne.

3. Confeſſion of Belgia, artic. 16. God is mercifull and iuſt, mercifull by deliuering, &c. iuſt in leauing others in that their fall and perdition, whereunto they had throwne themſelues headlong, &c. they make originall ſinne the firſt ground of reprobation, then not infidelitie only. Harm.ſect.5. pag.87.

4. Thomas thus determineth the queſtion, whether infidelitie be a ſinne, if it bee taken only negatiuely, as in them which neuer heard any thing of the faith: it is rather a puniſhment of ſinne, then ſinne it ſelfe: and they which are iuſtified elſe in this ſenſe, damnantur quidem propter alia peccata; non autem propter infidelitatis peccatum, they are damned for other ſinnes, which yet cannot be remitted without faith, and not for the ſinne of infidelitie, &c. Infidelitie then in his opinion is not the only cauſe of condemnation. 2.2.qu.10. artic.1.

THE SEVENTH INCONVENIENCE.

ABſurd.7. If it were ſo, that God elected ſo many, as he foreſaw ſhould beleeue, and vpon this foreſight cauſed the Goſpell to be preached vnto them, and that God reiected thoſe whom hee foreſaw would not beleeue, and therefore ſuffered them to abide in ignorance ſtill, it were no myſterie or ſecret at all in our faith, why God hath choſen ſome, and refuſed others: for the reaſon is apparant, becauſe ſome beleeue, and others doe not. But Saint Paul acknowledgeth here a great and vnſearchable myſterie, that ſeeing all are ſhut vp in vnbeleefe, and ſo are in the ſame common caſe, yet God hath mercie only on whom he will. Whereupon the Apoſtle in admiration of this great ſecret, crieth out, O the deepnes of the riches of the wiſedome and knowledge of God! how vnſearchable are his iudgements, and his waies paſt finding out? To this place our aduerſaries anſwere diuerſly. Rom.11.33.

Firſt Puckſius ſaith, that the Apoſtle crieth not out in admiration, as not finding a ſolution concerning the queſtion, why ſome were choſen, others refuſed: for it had been a thing vnworthie ſo great an Apoſtle, ſo to leaue his diſputation imperfect: but thus rather, hauing fully diſcuſſed this doubt, that the cauſe why ſome are refuſed, is their diffidence only and diſtruſt, he giueth thanks to God for the finding out of this ſolution, from whoſe wiſedome he had learned it ration.76.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle bringeth no ſuch ſolution here, as he dreameth of, as though the cauſe were in the beleefe or vnbeleefe of men, why God had mercie on ſome, and not on others: nay rather the contrarie appeareth, becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, All men are ſhut vp in vnbeleefe: they are all by nature alike, none in themſelues more worthie of fauour then other: And therefore all is aſcribed to Gods mercie: but mercie is free, and therefore not cauſed by any deſert of faith, or works. 2. That the Apoſtle falleth into an admiration, the manner of his ſpeech declareth; and he plainly confeſſeth this doctrine farre to exceed all humane reach: Gods waies (he ſaith) are vnſearchable, and paſt finding out: Is not this cauiller therefore aſhamed, to confeſſe that doctrine to be eaſie and plaine, which the Apoſtle calleth deepe, profound, and vnſearchable? 3. Neither doth the Apoſtle leaue his diſputation imperfect, but it is perfect and abſolute: (if wee vnderſtand ſuch perfection, as man in this life may attaine vnto) for otherwiſe if the knowledge of the greateſt Prophets and Apoſtles in this life be compared with the reuelations of the life to come, it is imperfect: We know in part, and prophecie in part, when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part ſhall be aboliſhed. Neither doth Saint Paul commit any thing vnworthie his Apoſtleſhip, in ſubiecting himſelf to the depth of Gods iudgements: but here ſheweth himſelfe an example of that, which hee teacheth others, That no man preſume to vnderſtand aboue that, which is meete to vnderſtand, but that he vnderſtand according to ſobrietie. Neither was it a diſgrace to the Apoſtle to be ignorant of ſome part of Gods counſell, no more, then where elſe he ſaith, he heard words which cannot be ſpoken, which are not poſſible for men to vtter. If he could not vtter that which he heard and ſaw, how much more that, which was not at all reuealed vnto him, but kept ſecret in Gods counſell? 1.Cor.11.9,10 Rom.12 3. 2.Cor.12.4.

Secondly, Hemingius ſaith, The waies of God are here ſaid to be vnſearchable, becauſe they cannot be found out by the wit of man: For the naturall man perceiueth not the things that are of God: But yet it followeth not, but that in the word of God, whatſoeuer is neceſſarie to ſaluation to bee knowne is reuealed: as Saint Paul ſaith, We haue the minde of Chriſt: Sic Hemingius pag.52. Suecan. pag.762. 1.Cor.2.16.

Contra. Firſt, that all things neceſſarie to ſaluation are reuealed in the Scriptures, we grant, for they are able to make vs wiſe to ſaluation, and perfect to all good workes. But to know the cauſe why God electeth ſome, and not others, is not any part of this neceſſary knowledge, but rather a point of curioſitie. Secondly, that the myſterie of ſaluation, though not reuealed to fleſh and blood, yet is diſcerned by the ſpirituall man in the Scriptures we grant, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh: yet are there ſome ſecrets of God which are not reuealed in this life, neither to the regenerate, nor vnregenerate, of the which ſort this is, whereof the Apoſtle here ſpeaketh: he meaneth that theſe waies of God, concerning the ſecrecie of election, are ſimply vnſearchable of all; as it may appeare by that which followeth: Who hath knowne the minde of God, or who was his counſeller, or who hath giuen vnto him, firſt? &c. But no man either naturall or ſpirituall hath been Gods counſeller, to know his minde, or hath giuen vnto him firſt: where the Apoſtle ſecretly excludeth all manner foreſight in our election, of 2.Tim.3.15,17 1.Cor.2.10,16.

faith or workes in men; for then they ſhould haue giuen vnto God firſt, which here is denied. Laſtly, the Apoſtle breaketh out into this admiration, not in the perſon of the carnall man, but in his owne perſon as ſpirituall, and confeſſeth, that euen vnto himſelfe the waies of God herein were vnſearchable.

Thirdly, Huberus anſwereth firſt, after a ſcoffing manner; that wee may as well aske thus in other queſtions concerning faith & the Sacraments, as why all men profit not by hearing the Goſpell preached, why all that are baptized, are not ſanctified, why all doe not receiue the Euchariſt worthily, we may anſwer in theſe queſtions, as in this of election, very compendiouſly, ô abyſſus, ô abyſſus: O depth! but afterward he giueth vs a more ſober anſwere: There be, ſaith he, two ſort of profound things in the works of God. Some things ſo profound, that God hath kept the knowledge thereof to himſelfe, whereof there is nothing reuealed in Scripture. Another ſort of profound things there is, when as we know that God hath done this or that, but the cauſe thereof we know not, neither are able to ſearch: we know them, τὸ ὅτι, that they are, but not διότι, why they are: As in this example whereof the Apoſtle intreateth: that the Gentiles were firſt reiected, and the Iewes called, and afterward the Gentiles choſen and the other refuſed, we know it ſo to be done, but wherefore we know not, the cauſe thereof is vnſearchable, Huber. theſ. 937. 947. 948. So Snecanus ſaith, that the Apoſtle here doth reſtraine humane raſhnes, that we ſhould not be too buſie in ſearching out the cauſe of Gods workes. Pag.762.

Contra. 1. Huberus ſcorneth not vs, but ſcorneth the Apoſtle, who though in all other queſtions in religion, he were able to giue a diuine anſwere, as appeareth notably in his heauenly epiſtles, yet in this caſe of Gods ſecret iudgements, giueth no other anſwere but this, ô abyſſus! We in like manner, in other matters concerning our faith, where the word of God goeth before vs, wee truſt by Gods grace, are able to frame ſome reaſonable anſwere, and neede not to ſay abyſſus: (As to the queſtions propoſed) the effect of preaching, the efficacie of Baptiſme, the ſacramentall grace, are extinguiſhed in vnworthie men through their vnbeleefe and other ſinnes, whereof they haue not repented, which although they bee not the chiefe cauſe of their reiection, yet are they of their actuall condemnation; yet in this profound matter, why God hath mercie on ſome, and not on other ſome, we are not aſhamed to anſwere with the Apoſtle, ô abyſſus! Secondly, their diſtinction we miſlike not: it maketh for vs, and againſt them; for vs, we acknowledge in the worke of election, τὸ ὅτι, that God hath in his eternall counſell elected ſome, and not others, but διότι, why and for what cauſe God hath ſo done, we know not, but hold it to be vnſearchable: And particularly who are damned, who are ſaued, it is ſimply a profound ſecret: we neither know, ὅτι, that this man, or that, is ſaued or damned (though there be a meanes for euery man to know it in himſelfe) much leſſe doe we know, διότι, the cauſe or reaſon thereof. It maketh againſt them, for they take vpon them to ſet downe the cauſe of the election of the Gentiles, and reiection of the Iewes, and generally of all men, the foreſight of faith in the one; and vnbeleefe or contempt of grace in the other: And ſo they make the iudgements of God eaſie and plaine, and not vnſearchable at all.

I will conclude this place with that ſaying of Ambroſe, or who elſe was the author of that booke, Altitudo diuitiarum ſapientiæ & ſcientiæ Dei, cuius imperueſtigabiles viæ, ſic ſemper miſericordiam & iudicium temperauit, vt ſecretiſſima æterni conſilij voluntate noluerit in omnibus, ſuper omnes generationes, aut ſuper omnes homines, æquales donorum ſuorum eſſe menſuras. Quæ autem cauſæ ſint harum diſſimilitudinum ſanctis ſcripturis non loquentibus quis loquetur? patienter & æquanimiter ignoretur, tam remotum ab humana cogitatione ſecretum, in quo ſcientia Pauli Apoſtoli, à diſputatione tranſijt ad ſtuporem: The depth of the riches of the knowledge and wiſedome of God, whoſe waies are vnſearchable, hath ſo tempered his mercie and iudgement, that in the ſecret will of his eternall counſell, he would not haue an equall meaſure of his gifts to be beſtowed vpon all men: but what might bee the cauſe of this difference, the Scriptures not ſaying any thing, who can ſpeake? Let vs with patience bee content to bee ignorant of ſo great a ſecret: wherein the knowledge of the Apoſtle Paul giueth place, and leauing to diſpute beginneth to wonder, &c. Thus doth this father expound this place of the Apoſtle. De vocat. gent. lib. 2. c. 3.

Saint Auguſtine likewiſe counteth the doctrine of predeſtination a great ſecret: Cur hoc illi operetur, illi non operetur, metuentem me & trementem iudicia eius inſcrutabilia nolo interroges, quia quod lego credo & veneror, non autem diſcutio: Why hee worketh in one and not in another, aske not me that feare and tremble at his vnſearchable iudgements: what I reade I beleeue and reuerence, I diſcuſſe not: who art thou man, that ſhouldeſt anſwere God? Hypognoſt. cont. Pelag. lib. 3.

Saint Hierome alſo thus writeth: ad Cteſiphont. Quam quidem quæſtionem Apoſtolus ad Romanos, ſcribens ventilat, ignorans hæc, & Dei concedens ſcientiæ, &c. Which queſtion the Apoſtle handleth to the Romanes, being ignorant of this ſecret, and giuing place to the knowledge of God.

Origen hom. 12. in Geneſ. Cur antequam ex vtero procederent, &c. Why it is ſaid by the Prophet, Eſau haue I hated, Iacob haue I loued, before they came out of their mothers wombe? Hæc ſupra noſtram linguam ſunt, & ſuper auditum veſtrum, &c. Theſe things exceede my tongue, and your hearing.

Cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 4. c. 8. ex Auguſtin. in talibus rebus exclamamus, quam inſcrutabilia ſunt iudicia eius, &c. In theſe matters, we crie out, How vnſearchable are his iudgements? &c.

Magiſt. lib. 1. diſt. 40. d. Non aperit, ſed miratur Apoſtolus dicens, ô altitudo, &c. The Apoſtle doth not open this matter, but wondreth at it, and crieth out, O the depth of the riches of the wiſedome of God &c.

Laſtly, Saint Ambroſe thus moſt excellently writeth: Cum Apoſtolus hac diuinorum operum myſteria quadam mentis ſua profudiſſet exceſſu, &c. When the Apoſtle had in the exceſſe of his minde or meditation vttered theſe myſteries, he endeth his expoſition with aſtoniſhment, and wondring at that he had ſaid, he exclaimed, O the depth, &c. omitting nothing of theſe things, whereof we muſt not be ignorant, and handling nothing, which it is not lawfull to know: for there are many things in the adminiſtration of Gods workes, whoſe effects only are ſhewed, the cauſes lying hid, vt cum pateat quid geritur, non pateat cur geratur; that when it is apparant what is done, yet it appeareth not wherefore it is done, &c.

Theodulus ſaith: Ne petamus rationem eorum quæ agit Deus — nam infinita & inſcrutabilis iudiciorum Dei natura eſt: Let vs not aske a reaſon of Gods workes, — for the nature of his iudgements is infinite and inſcrutable, &c. In qu. c.ad Roman.

French confeſſ. Some are no better then others, till ſuch time, as the Lord doe make a difference, according to that immutable counſell, &c. This then is a great counſell, and ſecret to vs, why God maketh ſuch a difference betweene one another. Harm. ſect.5. pag.85.

Lyranus, vpon theſe words: his iudgements are incomprehenſible, ſaith: Supra capacitatem naturæ intellectualis ſunt exceſſiua: They exceede the capacitie of the intellectuall nature: and the interlineario gloſſe, ne putes comprehendi poſſe: thinke not they can be comprehended; and the gloſſe ordinarie; if any aske why they are ſo ſaued, Hoc ſe neſcire innuit per admirationem: he ſignifieth by his admiration, that he knoweth not. In 11.c.ad Roman.v.33.

And thus hitherto in the Church of God, hath the doctrine of predeſtination beene taken for a great ſecret, and hidden myſterie; which now in the opinion of theſe men, is an eaſie, plaine and common point of religion: and thus by humane reaſon they will comprehend the deepe things of God, and therefore becauſe with the Apoſtle, we ſay that Gods iudgements in electing whom he will, and refuſing as it pleaſeth him, are vnſearchable, they ſcorne and deride both vs and our faith. But wee hold this in religion to be a great abſurditie, to meaſure diuine myſteries by humane wit, and by reaſon to vnderſtand that which is by faith to be beleeued. Thus farre of the abſurdities, and ſtrange concluſions, which the patrons of vniuerſall ſauing grace doe maintaine.

1. That God hath created men without any particular knowledge or determination of their ende.
2. That God electeth vpon the fore-ſight and fore-knowledge of faith.
3. That it is in mans power by the ſtrength of his free-will to beleeue.
4. That a man may reſiſt the the effectuall calling of God.
5. That the elect may become reprobates, and ſo loſe both their election and faith.
6. That contempt of grace is the onely cauſe of reprobation, whereas many nations neuer had grace offered, and ſo could not contemne it: and infants beſide are not capable of faith, which therefore they cannot deſpiſe.
7. They affirme the doctrine of Predeſtination to be eaſie and plaine, and within the compaſſe of mans vnderſtanding: All theſe inconueniences they are forced to grant, who affirme, that Chriſt died effectually for all men vniuerſally, and not for thoſe only whom he ordained to life.

To theſe we may adioyne other abſurdities: firſt, that if Chriſt died for all, and yet all be not ſaued by Chriſt, it followeth, that Chriſt for ſome died in vaine: this Huberus willingly granteth, *theſ.*1123. But the Scripture ſaith, that Chriſt loſeth nothing of all, that is giuen him: but all that hee gaue himſelfe for, are giuen vnto him. Secondly, that the efficacie of Chriſts death may be made fruſtrate by man: confeſſed by *Huberus theſ.*1124. denied by S. Paul, ſhall their vnbeliefe make the faith of God without effect? Thirdly, that in reſpect of Chriſt there is no difference betweene the reprobate and the elect, ſeeing he died effectually for both, granted by *Huberus pag.*1127. denied by the Apoſtle, God is the Sauiour of all men (for he ſaueth both men and beaſt, as being the preſeruer of that which he hath made) ſpecially of thoſe that beleeue: Ergo, God hath done ſomewhat more ſpecially for beleeuers as their Redeemer, then for other men, as their Creator. Iohn 6.39. Rom.3.3. Toſſan.theſ.21 1.Tm.4.10.

I will then conclude this place with that ſaying of Auguſtine, Quomodo iſtis dixit, non eſtis ex ouibus meis? quia videbat eos ad ſempiternum exitium præparatos, non ad vitam æternam ſui ſanguinis precio comparatos: How did our Sauiour ſay vnto ſome, you are not of my ſheepe? becauſe he ſaw, they were prepared to euerlaſting deſtruction, not appointed to life eternall by the price of his blood: *Tractat. in Iohan.*48. Here Auguſtine teſtifieth two things, both that the wicked and vnbeleeuers are ordained to euerlaſting death, and that the blood of Chriſt was onely ſhed for the heires of ſaluation.

Laſtly, I will adioyne the ſeale of this doctrine, that is the teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs: Iohn Careleſſe thus profeſſeth his faith, I beleeue that Chriſt did effectually dye for all thoſe that effectually beleeue, and repent, and for none other, Fox, pag.1920. col.1.

Thus haue I ſufficiently (I truſt) maintained this auncient truth concerning the efficacie and benefits of Chriſts death ordained onely for the elect: wherein (I doubt not) but that they which are ſomewhat wauering, and not yet ſetled in iudgement, may ſoone be reſolued, if on the one ſide they doe conſider the ſubſtantiall grounds, and euident demonſtration of the truth, and on the other the weakneſſe of their prooſes, the diuerſitie of opinion in themſelues, and the neceſſary conſequence of ſo many abſurdities, that follow vpon the opinion of vniuerſall or common grace. Wherefore I wonder, that ſome heretofore throughly perſwaded of the truth, ſhould now begin to ſtagger in opinion: Gal.1.6. to whom may be applied that ſaying of the Apoſtle, I maruell that ye are ſo ſoone remoued away to a- Gal.3.1. nother Goſpell: Againe, Who hath bewitched you, that you ſhould not obey the truth, to whom Ieſus Chriſt was before deſcribed in your ſight? Wherefore the death of Chriſt being ſo euidently deſcribed vnto vs in Scripture, to appertaine only to the elect: let vs therein reſt, and leauing all other ſtrange and new opinions, which may diſturbe our peace, and diſtract ſimple mindes, let vs from henceforth follow the truth in loue: which God grant.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE cauſe of Predeſtination.

The Papiſts.

24.Error. OVr aduerſaries are not all of one opinion concerning this matter. The Rhemiſts affirme, that God doth neither elect nor reprobate any, but in reſpect of their workes either good or euill: Concerning election thus they write, Chriſt doth not appoint any by his abſolute and eternall election, to be partakers of the fruit of his redemption, without any reſpect or condition of their owne workes, obedience of free-will. Rhem. Heb.5.ſect.9. Concerning reprobation alſo, thus they ſay: God doth not hate or reprobate any man, but for ſinne, or the fore-ſight thereof, Rhem. Rom.9.ſect.2.

Bellarmine is of a contrarie iudgement to the Rhemiſts, ſo well they agree together: for hee confeſſeth that the election of Gods Children dependeth onely of the gracious will of God without any reſpect to their workes: he granteth, electos eſſe gratis, ante omnem operum præuiſionem, that they are elected freely, before any fore-ſight of their workes, *lib.2.de grat.cap.*10. And he doth not onely affirme it, but proueth it by many arguments, and at large confuteth the contrarie opinion. But for reprobation, his ſentence is this, Partim ad ſolam Dei voluntatem, partim ad peccata præuiſa referendam eſſe: That is partly to be referred to the will of God, partly to the fore-ſight of ſinne: not wholy to either, but in part to both. *cap.*16.

And further he explaneth his minde thus: There is, ſaith he, reprobatio negatiua, a negatiue reprobation; as thus, God hath no will or purpoſe to ſaue the wicked: There is alſo reprobatio poſitiua, a poſitiue reprobation, as when God doth ordaine ſome, not onely not to be ſaued, but to be condemned: the firſt act of reprobation dependeth onely of the will of God, without any reſpect had vnto men: the ſecond is cauſed by the fore-ſight of ſinne, ibid.

And here we doe not much miſlike the Ieſuites opinion in this matter as agreeable to ours, and not much differing from the truth, as euen now ſhall be ſeene: ſo that in this place we haue no great cauſe to contend with Bellarmine: but our whole buſineſſe is with the Rhemiſts.

First, for their ſentence concerning election, that it ariſeth only from the fore-ſight of our workes, Heb.5.9. they reaſon thus, the Apoſtle ſaith, Hee is made the author of ſaluation, to all that obey him: They are not elected we ſee, without condition of obedience: To the ſame purpoſe alſo is alleaged by ſome 2.Tim.2.20. that place of the Apoſtle: In a great houſe, &c. and ſome veſſels are for honour, ſome for diſhonour, if any man purge himſelfe from theſe, he ſhall be a veſſell of honour: here we ſee, that by free will and good workes a man is made a veſſell of honour.

Anſwere. Firſt, God in deede electeth all that ſhall bee ſaued, not with any condition on their owne behalfe, but on his owne behalfe; for vnto them, whom he chuſeth he will giue grace to obey, will to beleeue, and power to doe that he appointeth.

Rom.8.30. Secondly, good workes are the effects and fruites that follow Predeſtination: Whom he hath predeſtinate he hath called, whom he hath called, he hath iuſtified, &c. Therefore they can be no cauſe of election.

Bellarm.cap. 13.reſponſ.ad 2.teſtimon. Thirdly, a better anſwere cannot be found, then that which Bellarmine maketh: the Apoſtle ſaith not, that a man by purging himſelfe from vice is made a veſſell of honour, but only, that he is, or ſhall be: that is, is knowne ſo to be, for our faith and obedience are no cauſe why the Lord elected vs: but they are meanes certificatorie, and infallible arguments to aſſure vs of our election: as S. Peter ſaith, Make your election ſure, &c. Epiſt.1.10.

Rom.8.29. *Argum.*2. Rom.8.29. Thoſe which he knew before, he predeſtinate to be made like to the image of his ſonne, &c. Ergo, Gods preſcience is the cauſe of predeſtination.

Anſw. Firſt, God in deede doth know in his preſcience all thoſe, which are predeſtinate to life: for how can they be predeſtinate, if they be not knowne. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith not hee knew them before to be like, &c. but he did predeſtinate them to be like his ſonne: this conformitie then is an effect of their Predeſtination, not a cauſe. Thirdly, Gods preſcience here may bee taken for the John 10.14. knowledge of approbation: as Chriſt is ſaid to know his ſheepe, that is to loue them, approue them: Pſal.1.6. So God is ſaid to know the way of the righteous.

Matth.20.8. *Argum.*3. Matth.20. Call the labourers and giue them their reward, Ergo, heauen is ordained for mens good workes.

Anſw. Firſt, this place ſheweth that good works are the way vnto heauen, wherein we muſt walk; but not, that the decree of life hath reſpect to good workes: There is difference then betweene the decree of predeſtination, and the execution thereof: good workes goe before the poſſeſſion of heauen, but not before the decree and ordination.

Secondly, S. Ambroſe out of this place frameth a contrary argument, prouing thereby, that election is altogether of grace without any reſpect to workes. Lib.1.de vocat.gentium.c.5. Hora vndecima intromiſſi in vineam,&c. They which were ſent into the vineyard at the eleuenth houre, by the diuine indulgence were made equall to the labourers of the whole day, not paying the price of their labour, but ſhewing the riches of his goodneſſe to thoſe, whom he choſe without workes,&c. Let vs now ſee on the other ſide, what they can ſay concerning reprobation.

Argum.1. The Apoſtle ſaith, Wrath, and indignation ſhall be vpon the ſoule of euery man, that doth euill: therefore the reprobation of the wicked hath relation to their euill workes. Rom.2.9.

Anſw. S.Paul ſpeaketh not in this place of the decree of reprobation made againſt the wicked; but of the execution rather of that decree: the euill workes then of wicked men, are not the onely cauſe of their reiection, which is an abſolute acte of Gods owne will, yet are they a iuſt cauſe of their damnation: that although wrath and indignation be decreed againſt them from the beginning, yet this ſentence is not executed vpon them, before by their euill workes comming betweene, they haue worthily deſerued the damnation decreed againſt them.

Argum.2. To condemne a man without cauſe, is an vniuſt thing, and therefore it is farre off from God who is moſt iuſt, to condemne the wicked without reſpect to their ſinnes.

Anſw. Firſt, there is great difference betweene damnation it ſelfe, and the decree or ſentence of damnation: God indeede condemneth none without their deſerts: for there is no man which is condemned in hell, but by his euill life before worthily deſerued it: and ſo it is moſt true, which Auguſtine ſaith: Bonus eſt Deus, iuſtus eſt Deus, poteſt aliquos ſine bonis meritis liberare, quia bonus eſt, non poteſt quenquam ſine malis meritis damnare, quia iuſtus eſt: God is good, and God is iuſt, hee may ſaue a man without any good workes of his, becauſe he is good; but hee cannot condemne any man without his euill deſerts, becauſe he is iuſt: cont.Iulian.3.18. Secondly, as for the decree and ſentence of condemnation, it is no vniuſt thing for God, as it pleaſeth him to diſpoſe of his creature, whether to honour, or diſhonour: as the Potter hath right and power to make of the ſame clay veſſels either to honorable, or vile vſes, Rom.9.21. And yet God caſteth off none, but iuſtly, not onely in reſpect of his abſolute right and power, which he hath ouer his creature, but in regard of them alſo that are caſt off, all being loſt in Adam. Rom.9.21.

The Proteſtants.

First, that the election of the faithfull proceedeth only from the mercifull and gracious will of God, without any fore-ſight of their good workes as any cauſe thereof: we proue it thus.

Argum.1. That which is the effect of our election, cannot be the cauſe thereof: but good workes are the fruites and effects of our election: Ergo. This is proued by S.Paul: God hath choſen vs in Chriſt before the foundation of the world, that we ſhould be holy, Epheſ.1.4. vpon the which words Auguſtine writeth thus, Elegit nos vt eſſemus ſancti, non quia futuri eramus, ſed vt eſſemus,—& ſecundum bonam voluntatem ſuam, non noſtram, quæ bona eſſe non poſſit, niſi ipſe ſecundum bonam voluntatem ſuam vt bona fieret, ſubueniret: He hath choſen vs, ſaith the Apoſtle, that we ſhould be holy, not becauſe he ſaw we ſhould be holy, but to the end we might be holy, and according to his good pleaſure, not after our owne will, which could not be good, vnleſſe hee according to his good will ſhould aſſiſt vs to make it good,&c. So then our holineſſe and obedience is a fruit and effect of our election, not a cauſe thereof, neither is there any free-will or good diſpoſition in man, till God make it free and good. Epheſ.1.4. De prædeſtinat.ſanctor. c.18.

Argum.2. The Apoſtle ſaith, Our election, is not of the willer, or of the runner, but of God that ſheweth mercie: Ergo, the mercie of God is the onely ground of our election: for if our faith or workes ſhould be for any ſuch end or purpoſe fore-ſeene, it ſhould be of the willer, and runner, which the Apoſtle denieth. Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Quia per gratiam liberantur, non vaſa meritorum ſuorum, ſed vaſa miſericordiæ nominantur: Becauſe they are ſaued or deliuered by grace, they are called not veſſels of their owne merites, but veſſels of grace, de natur.& grat.lib.1.5. Yea the Rhemiſts confeſſe againſt themſelues, that Gods meere mercie is ſeene in the elect: Rom.9.ſect.2. Ergo, our election is a worke of Gods meere mercie: there is then no reſpect at all had to our workes, for then it were not of Gods meere and ſole mercy. Rom 9.16.

Argum.3. It is your Fathers pleaſure to giue you a kingdome: You haue not choſen me, but I haue choſen you: but if men be choſen for their good workes, then they ſhould chuſe God firſt: I haue reſerued or left to my ſelfe ſeuen thouſand,&c. He ſaith not, they are reſerued, but I haue reſerued: ſo then ſaith the Apoſtle, There is a remnant, through the election of grace: if of grace, then not of workes. Luk.12.32. Iohn 15.16. Rom.11.14.

Likewiſe, the Apoſtle propoundeth the examples of Iacob and Eſau, of whom it was ſaid, Iacob haue I loued, Eſau haue I hated, before they were borne, and before they had done good or euill, that the purpoſe of God might remaine according to election, not by workes: Ergo, Gods election is not vpon the fore-ſight of any mans workes. Rom.9.11.

Obiect. Theſe are examples of temporall, not ſpirituall bleſſings, and Iacob and Eſau ſignifie two people, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the election or reprobation of any in particular.

Contra. 1. It is euident, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of election, not in temporall things, but to euerlaſting glory; verſ. 23. That he might ſhew the riches of his glory vpon the veſſels of mercie, prepared vnto glory. 2. So likewiſe he entreateth of particular election, and reprobation, as may appeare by the example of Pharao, who is brought in as an inſtance of particular reiection.

Argum. 4. Bellarmine that mightily impugneth this opinion, vſeth diuers effectuall reaſons out of Scripture, to proue election to proceede onely of grace: I will briefly repeate them.

1. None can bee ſaued without faith: but faith is the gift of God: Ergo, election is the free gift of God. It will be anſwered, that faith is not giuen to all, becauſe all will not receiue it, but they which doe obey their calling (for God calleth all, and giueth all ſufficient helpe to beleeue, if they will) are fore-ſeene that they will beleeue, and ſo predeſtinate. Contra. Though God doe offer vnto all generall and ſufficient meanes of their calling, yet none can beleeue, vnleſſe God effectually worke in Iohn 10.26. them; Ye beleeue not, becauſe ye are not of my ſheepe.

Matth.10.22. 2. Without the gift of perſeuerance, none can be ſaued: He that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaued:
Iohn 13.17. but perſeuerance is the free gift of God; of grace, not of workes: nor yet giuen to all: If yee know theſe things, bleſſed are yee, if yee doe them: I ſpeake not of you all, I know whom I haue choſen: Ergo, election vnto life is of grace.

3. Infants dying, ſome are ſaued, ſome condemned, hauing done yet neither good nor bad: Ergo, election is not of works: it will be anſwered, that Infants are predeſtinate according to the foreſight of their works, which they ſhould haue done, if they had liued: and beſide, Infants are not condemned
2.Cor. 5.10. to hell, but haue a place of reſt appointed for them, though they be not ſaued. Contra. 1. The Apoſtle
Rom.5.16. ſaith, Euery man muſt receiue according to the things done in the fleſh, not fore-ſeene to be done.
2. Againe, S. Paul ſheweth, that death and condemnation are the reward of originall ſin, vnto which Infants are ſubiect being borne in originall ſinne: if then they are not ſaued, they are condemned.

Rom. 1.4. 4. Chriſt as he was man, was freely predeſtinate to bee the Sonne of God: man Chriſt could not deſerue by any workes to be the Sonne of God: Ergo, his members alſo are freely predeſtinate.

5. If men were elected by the fore-ſight of their workes, then it ſhould bee no myſterie nor matter
Rom.11.33. of admiration as the Apoſtle maketh it: for the reaſon is euident, why God electeth ſome and not others, namely becauſe of their workes that are fore-ſeene. Bellarm. lib. 2. de grat. cap. 12.

Secondly, concerning the decree of reprobation, our ſentence is this: firſt, that as eternall ſaluation is from the beginning ordained for the elect, ſo eternall deſtruction is decreed for the reprobate:
for we cannot but affirme, that God both our firſt Creator, and laſt Iudge, did both fore-ſee and appoint the end of euery creature. Secondly, God doth reiect the wicked two wayes, conſilio, in his eternall counſell, and facto, by the execution of his counſell and decree, which ſhall be in their actuall damnation: his counſell or decree of reiection is alſo two-fold, it is either decretum præteritionis, the abſolute decree in paſſing by or not chooſing ſome, but leauing them in their owne nature: And this is called reprobation in two reſpects: firſt, by way of compariſon, becauſe he that is not loued or leſſe
Gen.29.31. loued, is ſaid to be hated, as Iacob is ſaid to deſpiſe Lea, that is, he loued her not as he did Rachel: and Deut.21.15. againe it is ſaid: If a man haue two wiues, one beloued, the other hated, &c. that is, not ſo much loued:
ſecondly, it is ſo called becauſe of the end and euent, becauſe reprobation and damnation followeth vpon the decree of preterition. There is alſo decretum ex præſcientia, the decree of reprobation iſſuing out of Gods preſcience and fore-knowledge: who as he did fore-ſee in the beginning the obſtinacie and wickedneſſe of men, ſo hee preordained in his iuſtice the ſame to be puniſhed: as a Iudge fore-knowing and vnderſtanding the wickedneſſe of a malefactor, may iuſtly with himſelfe ordaine his puniſhment, before he be brought forth in open iudgement. From hence wee obſerue theſe three things: firſt, the difference betweene thoſe two decrees: the decree of preterition or omiſſion is not the efficient cauſe of damnation, but onely an antecedent or fore-runner to it: the proper cauſe of damnation is the ſinne of the creature: the externall or accidentall cauſe is the iuſtice of God, that cannot otherwiſe chuſe, but puniſh ſinne: but the decree of preſcience, according to the fore-ſight of their ſinnes, that are reiected, doth ordaine and procure vnto them moſt iuſtly eternall damnation:
Pœnam Deus decreuit, & ordinauit efficienter vt iuſtus iudex: God as a iuſt Iudge, is the efficient cauſe by his decree of the puniſhment, Iun. reſponſ. ad ration. 72. Secondly, we muſt note the difference betweene the decree of election and reprobation: for men are elected without any fore-ſight of their workes, but they are not reprobate without reſpect to their workes: God did both fore-ſee and ordaine both the godly life and glorious ſaluation of the elect, as the proper cauſe of them both; but as for the ſinnes of the reprobate, God fore-ſaw them onely: their iuſt and deſerued puniſhment, hee both fore-ſaw, and did ordaine: ſo that, cauſa perditionis ab hominibus interna, ſalutis à Deo externa eſt: The cauſe of mens perdition is inward in themſelues, the cauſe of their ſaluation is externall from God, Iun. reſponſ. ad ration. 16. Thirdly, the decree of preterition, that is, of not chuſing ſome, which Bellarmine calleth negatiue reprobation, is a free act of Gods wil, without reſpect had to the creature;
but the decree according to Gods fore-knowledge, hath relation vnto their works: ſo that the decree of reprobation and actuall condemnation, as it dependeth not abſolutely altogether vpon Gods will, without reſpect had vnto the ſinne and rebellion of the reprobate, ſo neither doth it ſpring only from the fore-ſight of ſinne, as the Rhemiſts affirme, that God doth not reprobate any but for ſinne.

But touching this diſtinction of negatiue and poſitiue reprobation, and of the decree of præterition, and of preſcience, thus much muſt be added further by way of explanation: that because damnation neceſſarily followeth vpon reiection and preterition: as Tertullian ſaith, Sicut ad ſalutem vocat, quem non recuſat, ita in perditionem damnat, quem recuſat: As he calleth to ſaluation, whom hee refuſeth not, ſo he damneth to perdition, whom he refuſeth: and againe, Quis erit exitus ſegregatorum, nonne amiſſio ſalutis, What ſhall be the end of thoſe which are ſet apart, and forſaken, is it not the loſſe of ſaluation? And therefore in effect the poſitiue and negatiue reprobation are all one: wherefore to deliuer the decree of God in reiecting ſome, from all ſhew of iniuſtice or crueltie: I now ſee no reaſon, why Auguſtines opinion may not ſafely be receiued, who maketh the Maſſe of damnation in Adam the obiect of Gods decree: Vna quædam maſſa peccati ſupplicium debens diuinæ iuſtitiæ: There is one maſſe of ſinne, owing puniſhment to the diuine iuſtice: Quod ſiue exigatur, ſiue donetur, nulla iniquitas, Which whether it be exacted, or pardoned, there is no iniquitie with God: ad Simplician. lib.1 c.2. So then mankinde being conſidered as all loſt in Adam, the Lord out of his owne gracious will elected ſome out of this maſſe or lumpe of perdition, leauing the other, (here is the decree of preterition, iſſuing forth of Gods will and counſell) thoſe being left in their ſtate of corruption, are fore-ſeene, in the conſummation and acceſſion of many other ſinnes, and ſo are ordained to damnation (here is the decree iſſuing out of his preſcience.)

Lib.4.aduerſ. Marcion.

In eodem libro.

Whether man conſidered in his fall, be the ſubiect of predeſtination.

Here we haue the conſent of other reformed Churches, that the maſſe of corruption in Adam muſt be ſuppoſed in the decree of election and reprobation. French confeſſ. Wee beleeue, that out of this vniuerſall corruption and damnation, wherein all men by nature are drowned, God did deliuer and preſerue ſome, whom by his eternall and immutable counſell, of his goodneſſe and mercie, without any reſpect of their workes, he did chuſe in Chriſt Ieſus, and others hee left in that corruption and damnation, &c. Confeſſ. of Belgia, artic.16. We beleeue that God (after the whole off-ſpring of Adam, was caſt headlong into perdition and deſtruction, through the fault of the firſt man) hath declared himſelfe, mercifull and iuſt: Mercifull by ſauing thoſe—whom of his owne free goodneſſe he hath choſen in Chriſt, without any regard at all to their worke: but iuſt in leauing others in that their fall and perdition, &c. See this point fully, and at large cleared elſe-where, whether I referre the Reader.

Harm.ſect.5. pag.86.

Ibid. ſect.5. pag.87.

Hexap. in epiſt. ad Roman. c. 9. contr.10.

Auguſtine putteth the caſe of two twinnes: Quorum vnus aſſumitur, alius relinquitur, diſpar eſt exitus, merita communia: One of them is receiued, the other forſaken, their end is farre vnlike, and yet the workes of them both are the ſame, &c. Two Infants die in their infancie, one before Baptiſme, and ſo as the Papiſts hold, is damned; another after Baptiſme, and is ſaued: the workes of them both are alike: if therefore their predeſtination ſhould depend of the fore-ſight of their workes only, good or euill, they ſhould both haue the ſame end.

And as we ſee it to be in children, ſo ſaith Auguſtine: Hoc & in maioribus fieri nequaquam cunctemur: We neede not to doubt, but that God euen ſo dealeth with men of greater yeeres: therefore he thus concludeth: Inueſtigabilis ergo eſt Dei miſericordia, qua cuius vult miſeretur, nullis eius præcedentibus meritis; & inueſtigabilis veritas, qua quem vult obdurat, eius præcedentibus meritis, ſed cum eo cuius miſeretur, plerunque communibus: Therefore vnſearchable is the mercie of God, whereby hee hath mercie on whom hee will, no merites of his going afore: and vnſearchable is his truth, whereby he hardeneth whom hee will, his deſerts going before, but the very ſame with his, vpon whom God hath mercie, *de perſeueran. lib.2. cap.*11. It remaineth then, that neither election, nor reprobation are decreed, becauſe of mens workes that are fore-ſeene, but doe proceede from the free will and Counſell of God: leauing ſome in the ſtate of corruption, into which, all mankinde is fallen by Adam, and in his mercie deliuering ſome. *lib. de prædeſtin. & grat. c.*16.

Laſtly, I will adde one other reaſon out of Auguſtine, to ſhut vp this place withall: Si humanum genus, quod creatum primitus conſtat ex nihilo, non cum debita mortis & peccati origine naſceretur, & tamen ex eis creator omnipotens in æternum nonnullos damnare voluit interitum, quis omnipotenti Creatori diceret, cur feciſti ſic? If that mankinde, which in the beginning God created of nothing, were not by nature ſubiect both to ſinne, and death, and yet the almightie Creator would condemne ſome to euerlaſting deſtruction, who would ſay vnto him, Lord why haſt thou done ſo, &c. His opinion is this, that though there were no matter of condemnation naturally in man, yet God by the right of his Creatorſhip, might diſpoſe of his creature as he thought beſt, whether vnto death or life.

But againſt this, which hath beene before ſet downe touching the decree of reiection and reprobation, that it hath relation to man being in tranſgreſſion, and conſidered in his fall, it will bee thus obiected.

1. Obiect. The Apoſtle ſaith, that God pronounced of Iacob and Eſau, that the one he loued, the other he hated: before they had done good or euill: Rom.9.11. Therefore the decree of reprobation reſpecteth not at all the euill or ſinne, that followed after.

Anſw. Eſau was reiected before he had done euill, being yet vnborne, yet Eſau was fore-ſeene in the ſtate of corruption, out of the which Iacob was deliuered by grace, and the other ſuffered ſo to remaine.

2. Obiect. God is compared to a Potter, that out of the ſame clay may make one veſſell to honour, another to diſhonour. Rom.9.21.

Anſwere.1. This clay is the lump or maſſe of corruption, into the which man is fallen by Adams tranſgreſſion: out of the which God maketh ſome veſſels of honour in ſelecting them by grace, and the reſt are made veſſels of wrath, remaining ſtill in their corruptible ſtate. 2. Or it may be ſaid, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh here of Gods abſolute power, what he might doe de iure, by the right of a Creator, as is alleaged before out of Auguſtine, not what he doth de facto in fact: he dealeth not with vs ſtricto iure, by his ſtrict right: for ſo if hee made all veſſels of diſhonour, becauſe it is his pleaſure, the creature is not to complaine: but his iudgements are iuſt and reaſonable, and tempered with mercie.

Now laſtly, that election is onely of grace, S. Ambroſe is a notable witneſſe, lib.1.de vocat. Gentium cap.5. ſpeaking of Infants, of whom ſome are ſaued and elected, others refuſed, he thus concludeth; Non inuenit, quod diſcernat humana iuſtitia, ſed habet, quod eligat innarrabilis gratia; Humane iuſtice can finde nothing whereby to diſcerne them, but vnſpeakable grace findeth how to elect them. And againe, Omnibus hominibus cuiuſlibet generis, &c. cauſa percipiendæ gratiæ voluntas Dei eſt, apud quem ratio electionis abſcondita eſt, &c. The cauſe of receiuing grace vnto all men, of what kinde ſoeuer, is the will of God, with whom the reaſon of election is hid and ſecret, their merites beginning from that grace, which they receiued without merites.

Lib.2.c.3. Datur ante vllum laborem, vnde quiſq; mercedem accipiat, ſecundum ſuum laborem, &c. It is giuen before any labour, whereby according to their labour euery man ſhall receiue reward.

Againe, lib.1.c.3. Tales fuerunt, qui ſunt attracti, &c. They which are called, are the ſame, that they which remaine in their hardneſſe: Illis tribuit gratia ſtupenda quod voluit; iſtis retribuit veritas iuſta, quod debuit: vt iudicium Dei magis inſcrutabile ſit in electione gratiæ, quam in retributione iuſtitiæ: Grace giueth to them, as ſhee would; Iuſtice rendreth to the other, that which is due: that the iudgement of God ſhould be more vnſearchable in the election of grace, then in the retribution of iuſtice.

Secondly, that actuall reprobation is decreed to none without their deſerts: that although election cannot be merited, yet that damnation is deſerued, the ſame father thus witneſſeth, lib.2.de vocat.Gent.c.1. Nec damnati iuſta eſt querimonia, nec iuſtificati verax eſt arrogantia, ſi vel ille dicat non meruiſſe ſe pœnam, vel iſte aſſerat meruiſſe ſe gratiam, &c. Neither can the damned iuſtly complaine, nor the iuſtified truely boaſt; if either he ſay he hath not deſerued puniſhment, or the other, that he hath deſerued grace: & cap.9. Cum illos propria nequitia demergat ad pœnam, iſtos Dei gratia perducat ad gloriam: Seeing their wickedneſſe doth caſt them downe into paine, and grace bringeth the other to glorie.

Likewiſe Auguſtine, as he is alleaged, cauſ.23.qu.4.c.24. Nec de iudicio Dei querimur, quo deſerit meritos deſeri, & miſericordia eius gratias agimus, qua liberat non meritos liberari: Neither doe wee complaine of the iudgement of God, whereby hee forſaketh thoſe that deſerued to be forſaken, and we giue thankes to his mercie, whereby he deliuereth thoſe, which deſerued not to be deliuered: ſee before the iudgement of other Churches, touching the free and gracious decree of election, without any fore-ſight of workes: Error 23. the 2. inconuenience.

Thus we conclude, that actuall reprobation is not decreed to any, nor executed without reſpect to their deſerts; yet the electing of ſome, and the not electing of others dependeth onely of the abſolute will and purpoſe of God, as I haue ſhewed.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, OF THE CERtaintie of Predeſtination.

The Papiſts.

15.Error.

1. THere are two parts of this queſtion: firſt, whether Gods decree, concerning the election of men, be certaine and vnchangeable: Secondly, whether a man in this life may in himſelfe be aſſured of his election. The firſt our aduerſaries dare not plainly affirme; for it were great blaſphemie openly to ſay, that Gods decree may be changed: yet they doe in circumſtance of ſpeech affirme it: as Rhemiſt. Act.27.ſect.3. (Men cannot be ſaued, though they be predeſtinate, vnleſſe they keepe Gods commandements.) As though it were poſſible for men predeſtinate, not to keepe the commandements of God, or in the end not to be ſaued. Likewiſe it was concluded in the Councell of Trent, *ſeſſ.6.can.*23. that the grace of iuſtification may be loſt, which is as much to ſay, that a man may loſe his predeſtination: for none are iuſtified, but whom God before hath predeſtinate, Roman.8.30. They cannot therefore fall away from the grace of iuſtification, vnleſſe they fall away from predeſtination.

The Proteſtants.

THat the decree of God, concerning ſuch as ſhall be ſaued, remaineth ſure and certaine, and that it is impoſſible for any of the Elect to fall away, the Scripture euery where proueth.

Argum. Whom God loueth, hee loueth to the end, Iohn 13.1. The gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom.11.29. My Father is greater then all, and no man is able to take them out of his hand, Iohn 10.29. Ergo, our election is certaine, for with God there is not ſo much as any ſhadow of change, Iam.1.17.

Auguſtine ſaith, Horum qui electi ſunt, ſi quiſpiam perit, fallitur Deus, ſed nemo eorum perit, quia non fallitur Deus: Of the Elect, if any periſh, God is deceiued: but none of them can periſh, becauſe God cannot be deceiued, De correp & grat. cap.7. This ſentence is repeated in the decrees. cauſ.33. diſt.2. de pœnit. c.25.

Many other places to this purpoſe are cited out of Auguſtine by Eſpencæus a Popiſh writer, comment. in 2. Timoth. pag.91. ex lib.18. de ciuitat. Dei. c.51. Satis fixum corde debet retineri, nullum ex Ieruſalem illa periturum eſſe, quia qui perierit, ex illa non erat: It muſt be held as fixed in the heart, that none of that Ieruſalem can periſh, becauſe he that periſheth, was not of it.

Aquinas is very ſound in this matter: part.1. qu.23. artic.3. ad.2. & 3. Prædeſtinatum abſolute quidem & ſecundum ſe conſideratum, poſſe in peccato mortali emori, &c. That he, which is predeſtinate being abſolutely and in himſelfe conſidered, may die in mortall ſinne, and periſh, non tamen ex ſuppoſitione, ſeu in ſenſu compoſito, but not by way of ſuppoſition, or in the compound ſenſe, that is, Gods euerlaſting will and decree being preſuppoſed, &c. For certaine it is, that the predeſtinate of themſelues are ſubiect to fall, but Gods decree of their ſaluation conſidered, they can neuer fall.

The ſame Aquinas, qu.24. artic.3. Simpliciter in libro vitæ ſcriptos nunquam deleri, &c. That ſimply they which are written in the booke of life, cannot be blotted out: but they are ſaid to be blotted or raſed out, which are written there not by predeſtination, but in reſpect of their preſent iuſtice: that this blotting out is to be referred to the opinion of men, not to the veritie it ſelfe and knowledge of God.

Their owne Decrees agree: Cauſ.23. qu.4. c.24. Eſſent prædeſtinati ſi eſſent reuerſuri: They ſhould be predeſtinate, if they were to returne: Ergo, becauſe they returne not, they are not predeſtinate.

The Maſter of Sentences euidently concludeth, for the certaintie of predeſtination, lib.1. diſtinct. 40. b. Non poteſt vtrumq; ſimul eſſe, vt aliquis ſit prædeſtinatus & non ſaluetur, &c. Both of theſe cannot be together, that one ſhould be ſaued, and not predeſtinate; or one to be predeſtinate, and yet damned: ibid. C. Non poteſt eſſe vt ab æterno ſit prædeſtinatus, & modo non ſit prædeſtinatus: It cannot be, that one ſhould from euerlaſting be predeſtinate, and yet now not be predeſtinate. Thus I truſt this point is euery way cleared as touching the certaintie of the decree of predeſtination. See further hereof before, error 23. in the fifth inconuenience.

FOr euery man to be aſſured infallibly that he ſhall be ſaued without ſpeciall reuelation, is a moſt damnable, falſe illuſion, and preſumption, Rom.8. ſect.9. They call it a faithleſſe perſwaſion of ſaluation, to be confident of Gods grace and ſaluation, and fides dæmoniorum, not Apoſtolorum, the faith of diuels, not of Apoſtles, Rhemiſt. 1. Corin.9 ſect.9. So the Tridentine Councell calleth certitudinem remiſſionis peccatorum, vanam, & ab omni pietate remotam fiduciam, The certaintie of remiſſion of ſinnes, a vaine and faithleſſe perſwaſion. Rom.8.38.

*Argum.*2. Worke your ſaluation with feare and trembling: Ergo, men muſt not be ſecure of their ſaluation. Philip.2.12.

Anſw. We doe not teach men to walke ſecurely, or preſume of their election, but we proteſt vnto them, that ſeeing men are predeſtinate vnto good workes, that vnleſſe they be carefull to leade an holy life, they cannot aſſure themſelues to haue part in predeſtination: yet we teach men notwithſtanding, aſſuredly to beleeue the promiſes of God made to all thoſe that beleeue, to be ſaued. And this confidence doth very well agree with the feare of God. See theſe arguments anſwered more at large in the ſecond part of iuſtification, queſt.2. argum.3. and 4. Then as Proſper well ſaith: ſentent.6. ad capitul. Gallor. Gratia non abolet arbitrium, ſed adolet: Grace doth not aboliſh mans will and endeuour, but cheriſh it. So predeſtination doth not make men more ſecure, but more carefull.

Rom.8.38. *Argum.*2. S.Paul ſaith, I am ſure, that neither death nor life,&c. ſhall ſeparate vs from the loue of God in Chriſt Ieſus: Ergo, the Apoſtle was certaine of his ſaluation.

Rhemiſt. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh onely in generall: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, So many as are elected, cannot certainly periſh.

2.Tim.4.8. Anſwere. It is falſe, for the Apoſtle pronounceth particularly of himſelfe; as more plainly, 2.Timoth.4.8. From henceforth there is laid vp for me a crowne of righteouſneſſe.

Rhemiſt. Secondly, S.Paul might haue this perſwaſion by ſome eſpeciall reuelation.

Anſwere. The ground of the Apoſtles perſwaſion is none other, but that which is common to all De corrept. & grat.cap.7. the faithfull, the loue of God in Chriſt. And ſo Auguſtine interpreteth this place, writing thus: Iſti, ſignificati ſunt ad Timotheum,&c. Theſe, of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, are ſignified in another place 2.Tim.2.19. to Timothie. The foundation of God remaineth ſure, the Lord knoweth who are his: Ergo, this aſſurance and confidence is common, though not in the like meaſure to all faithfull Chriſtians. So the A- 2.Tim.4.8. poſtle ſaith, that there was a crowne of righteouſneſſe laid vp not only for him, but for all thoſe which loue his appearing.

Bernard alſo telleth vs, what this reuelation is: Hoc non fit, niſi reuelante ſpiritu per fidem homini æternum dei propoſitum ſuper ſua ſalute futura: quæ ſane reuelatio non eſt aliud, quam infuſio gratiæ ſpiritualis, per quam facta carnis mortificantur: This is not brought to paſſe, but by the ſpirit of God reuealing vnto a man by faith, the eternall purpoſe of God concerning his ſaluation: which reuelation is nothing elſe but the ſpirituall infuſion of grace, whereby the deedes of the fleſh are mortified, &c. *Epiſtol.*108. So then a man by reuelation of the ſpirit commeth to the knowledge of his ſaluation: but not by any ſpeciall or extraordinarie reuelation, but that which is by faith, and worketh mortification, which is common to all the faithfull. See more of this, part.2. of Iuſtification, queſt.2.

Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Quia non ſecundum merita noſtra ſed illius miſericordiam firma eſt promiſſio, nemo debet cum trepidatione prædicare, vnde non poteſt dubitare: Becauſe the promiſe remaineth ſtedfaſt, not by our works, but his mercie: we muſt not with trembling and fearefulneſſe pronounce that, whereof we cannot doubt: *Conc.*1. *in Pſal.*88. Bernard alſo ſaith: *Pignus ſalutis donat ſpiritus, reddens teſtimonium ſpiritui tuo quòd filius Dei ſis: qui certiſſima ſigna prædeſtinationis tuæ cordi tuo imprimat & oſtendat. ſerm.*2. in die Pentecoſt. The holy ſpirit giueth vs a pledge of our ſaluation, giuing teſtimonie to thy ſpirit, that thou art the ſonne of God: which doth imprint, and ſhew to thy heart moſt ſure ſignes of thy predeſtination, &c. If a man may haue ſure ſignes of his predeſtination, how is hee not ſure and certaine of his predeſtination?

Saint Ambroſe alſo thus teſtifieth de obit. Theodoſ. Fidelis Deus, quæ ſeruis ſemel præparat, non ſubtrahit,&c. God is faithfull, what he once prepareth for his ſeruants he taketh not away: if our faith remaine, the promiſe alſo holdeth: See O man the grace of God toward thee, in terris quateris, & in cœlo poſſides: thou art ſhaken, or toſt in earth, and haſt a poſſeſſion in heauen, let thy heart be where thy poſſeſſion is.

A perfect aſſurance as by the cauſe neither doe we affirme, but ſuch a certainty as may be gathered by the ſignes and effects.

See this truth ſealed by the holy Martyrs: Maſter Tyndal ſaith thus: Chriſt is thine, and all his deedes are thy deedes: neither canſt thou be damned, except Chriſt be damned with thee: neither can Chriſt be ſaued, except he be ſaued with thee: Fox pag.1248.

Maſter Bradford: Know for a certaine, that as the diuell goeth about nothing ſo much, as to bring you in doubt, whether you be Gods childe: ſo whatſoeuer ſhall moue you to admit that dubitation, be aſſured, the ſame to come of the diuell: Fox pag.1640.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CONTROuerſie, of the grace and gifts of God.

THe ſeuerall queſtions handled in this part, are theſe: firſt, whether the grace of God, whereby wee are made acceptable vnto him, be a qualitie inherent in vs. Secondly, of the diſtinction of ſufficient and effectuall grace, and wherein the efficacie of grace conſiſteth. Thirdly, of the diſtinction of grace operantis, cooperantis, helping and working grace.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER Grace be a qualitie inherent.

The Papiſts.

THe Ieſuite ſetteth downe this diſtinction of grace: There is gratia gratis data, & gratia gratum facians: Grace freely giuen, and they are ſuch ſpirituall gifts of wiſedome, knowledge, vtterance, and ſuch like, which are giuen rather for the benefit of others: there is alſo grace, whereby wee are made acceptable vnto God, the grace of iuſtification; which grace Bellarmine defendeth to be, qualitatem per modum habitus in homine permanentem, a qualitie, in manner of an habite, reſiant and permanent in man, de grat. lib.1. cap.3. 27.Error.

*Argum.*1. The Apoſtle ſaith, As by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous: But we are made ſinners, not by the imputation of Adams vnrighteouſneſſe, but by ſinne inherent, and permanent in vs: Ergo we are iuſtified, not by the imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, but by iuſtice of righteouſneſſe inherent in vs, Bellarm. cap.4. Rom.5.19.

Anſw. Firſt, I meruaile that the Ieſuite hath ſo ſoone forgotten himſelfe: for before hee denied, that originall ſinne is a poſitiue qualitie in man: *lib.5. de amiſſ. grat, cap.*15. Here he affirmeth the contrarie, that it is a qualitie or habite inherent in vs, which is all one, as if he had ſaid, it is a poſitiue qualitie: for what is it to be inherent, or permanent in vs, but the ſame, which he calleth poſitiue? Secondly, Saint Paul in this place compareth the things themſelues together, that as by Adam we are made ſinners, ſo we are iuſtified by Chriſt: not the manner how they are done. This note of ſimilitude then, ſo by the obedience of one man, doth not inferre a likeneſſe or equalitie in euerie reſpect, but wherein they are compared. The Ieſuite therefore can no more gather vpon this (ſo) as he doth, that our righteouſneſſe by Chriſt muſt be inherent, as our ſinne by Adam is, then that naturally we ſhould be iuſt by Chriſt, as we are euill naturally by Adam: or that vniuerſally all men ſhould be ſaued by Chriſt, as all are dead in Adam: or that Chriſt ſhould free vs from the mortalitie of body, as Adams ſinne hath made vs ſubiect to death, and corruption. As this (ſo) doth not enforce a neceſſitie of theſe things, ſo neither of that inſtance, which the Ieſuite vrgeth. Thirdly, that the Ieſuite may more fully vnderſtand our minde, euen in this point alſo, in ſome ſort, the ſimilitude may hold: for as in originall ſinne there are two things, the guilt of Adams ſinne, which though it were not by vs actually committed, yet is ours by propagation, and the corruption or deprauation of nature, which is the fruit of Adams diſobedience, verily and really graft in vs: ſo in our iuſtification are two things; firſt the imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, which anſwereth to the propagation of Adams ſinne, and the effects or fruits of this righteouſneſſe, that is, holineſſe and ſanctification; which is an imperfect iuſtice inherent in vs: yet not by this, but by Chriſts iuſtice imputed, are we made iuſt before God: as by the propagation of Adams ſinne we are properly made ſinners, Rom.5.12. The corruption of our nature Rom.5.12. being the fruit and effect, or puniſhment rather of Adams diſobedience in his poſteritie.

what is it elſe but an habite of grace inherent, whereby wee are made acceptable to God? Bellarm. 1.Iohn 3.9.
cap.2.

Anſw. In thoſe places the Scripture ſpeaketh not of the firſt grace of iuſtification, whereby we are accepted before God, but of the ſecond grace of ſanctification, whereby we are approued vnto men, which is a conſequent of our iuſtification by faith: as Ioh.7.39. This ſpake he of the ſpirit, which they Iohn 7.39.
that beleeue in him ſhould receiue. And Rom.5.1. We are firſt iuſtified by faith in Chriſt, then the loue of Rom.5.1.
God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt, verſ.5. So then the fountaine, oyntment, ſeed, that is in the regenerate, doth ſignifie their ſpirituall ſtate and ſtrength wrought in them by the iuſtification of faith: ſo that they are firſt iuſtified by faith, and then theſe graces are conferred and beſtowed vpon them.

The Proteſtants.

THat grace whereby we are iuſtified, and made acceptable before God, is not a qualitie inherent or dwelling in vs, but wee are made iuſt by the imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt: that righteouſneſſe which is in vs, is imperfect, and not able to iuſtifie vs before God.

2.Cor.5.21. *Argum.*1. Saint Paul ſaith, He hath made him to be ſinne for vs, that knew no ſinne, that wee ſhould be made the righteouſnes of God in him. Out of this place this argument may be drawne: As our ſinnes were made Chriſts, ſo is his righteouſneſſe made ours: but our ſinnes were not habitually inherent in him, but onely imputed: Ergo, his righteouſneſſe, and the grace whereby we are iuſtified, is not inherent in vs, but imputed onely.

*Argum.*2. If we are iuſtified by faith onely, then this iuſtifying grace is by imputation onely, not inherent in vs: but faith onely iuſtifieth: Ergo. The propoſition is thus proued: Faith iuſtifieth either formally and actually as a qualitie inherent, or inſtrumentally or paſſiuely, as it apprehendeth the iuſtice of Chriſt: but it doth not iuſtifie, as it is a qualitie or grace wrought in vs, for the Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ.2.9. not of workes. Therefore faith, as a worke in vs iuſtifieth not: for then other ſpirituall graces, as loue, hope, ſhould iuſtifie as well as faith: if faith then onely iuſtifie inſtrumentally, as it apprehendeth Chriſt, then doth the propoſition follow, that the grace, whereby we are iuſtified, is not inherent in vs, but in Chriſt apprehended.

Rom.3.28. That faith only iuſtifieth, the Apoſtle euidently proueth: We conclude that a man is iuſtified by faith without the workes of the law. And if they anſwere, that the workes of the law are here excluded, not the workes of grace: Saint Paul elſe-where doth alſo exclude ſuch workes: By grace are ye ſaued
Epheſ.2.10. through faith, not of workes,&c. And afterward hee ſheweth what workes: Euen good workes, which God hath ordained vs to walke in: theſe are workes of grace. But of this matter, we ſhall entreate (God willing) more at large, when we come to handle that waightie controuerſie of Iuſtification by faith. Other arguments alſo for this matter which we haue in hand, wee will bring forth, in the queſtion of inherent iuſtice.

We will conclude here with that ſentence of Auguſtine: Iuſtitia ſit, ſed ex gratia ſit, à Deo tibi ſit, non tua ſit: ſacerdotes (inquit) tui induantur iuſtitia: veſtis accipitur, non cum capillis naſcitur, pecora de ſuo veſtiuntur: Let there be righteouſneſſe, but let it be of grace, let it be of God, let it not be thine owne: Let thy Prieſts (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) be cloathed with righteouſneſſe: cloathing is receiued outwardly, it groweth not in vs, as our haire, nor as the ſheepe are cloathed of their owne: *De verb. Apoſt. ſerm.*15. So then iuſtifying grace is no more ours or inherent in vs, then the veſture or garment, which we are cloathed with, which is not in vs, but only adhereth, and is applied to vs.

In 1.cap.ad Roman. Chryſoſtome ſaith, Non ſudorib.&c. ſed diuino gratiæ dono, quod ex ſupernis eſt, gratis vt accipias, oportet: Thou doeſt not get it (that is adoption) by thine owne labour, but by the diuine gift of grace, which is from aboue, thou muſt receiue it freely, onely bringing this of thine owne to beleeue,&c. Faith then onely is in vs, the grace and mercie, which faith apprehendeth, is without vs from God.

Harm.ſect.9. pag.251. Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c.6. Our iuſtification — is, to be cloathed with Chriſts righteouſneſſe, or the imputation thereof, alſo it is a reconciliation with God, and a receiuing into fauour, whereby we are made acceptable in the beloued,&c. The grace and fauour whereinto one is receiued, is in him that ſheweth fauour, not in him, that is receiued.

1.2 q.110. artic.2. Thomas himſelfe confeſſeth, that if grace be taken, pro auxilio diuino, for diuine helpe (as it is here) non eſt qualitas, ſed motus quidam anima, It is no qualitie, but a motion of the minde.

We want not here the teſtimonie of ſome of their owne writers, as Albertus Pighius thus teſtifieth, lib.5. de liber. arbitrio. In ſcholis imaginantur gratiam Dei qualitatem aliquam increatam anima à deo,&c. In the ſchooles they thinke that the grace of God is a qualitie created in the ſoule, either the ſame with the habite of charitie, or diuers from it: qua commentitia vniuerſa exiſtimo,&c. which I thinke all to be but fained, and to haue no warrant or authoritie from the Scriptures.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE DISTINCtion or difference of ſufficient and effectuall grace.

The Papiſts.

28.Error. B*Ellarmine* thus diſtinguiſheth them: gratia ſufficiens, ſufficient grace, is when God doth ſo call and ſtirre vp a man, ayding and aſſiſting him by his direction and protection, and working together with him, that the man thus called, hath power to will that which is good, but yet in deede willeth it not: gratia efficax, effectuall grace is that, whereby a man ſo ayded, aſſiſted, and called, doth will indeed and performe that which is good, lib.1. de grat. cap.2. This then is the Ieſuites opinion, that Gods internall vocation, and his ſpeciall grace inwardly working, is not to all effectuall, but ſufficient only: being ſufficient for their conuerſion, but yet not in deede effecting it.

Iſay.5.4. Argum. The Lord ſaith thus by the Prophet Iſay: What could I haue done any more to my vine-
Matth.23.37 yard, that I haue not done vnto it? I looked that it ſhould bring forth grapes, and it bringeth forth wilde grapes. The like place we haue: O Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, which killeſt,&c. how often would I haue gathered thy children together, as the Henne,&c, and thou wouldeſt not: Theſe had grace neceſſarie and ſufficient to their conuerſion, for the Lord ſaith, What could I haue done more, and I would haue gathered them together; yet were they not conuerted: this grace then, whereby they were called, was ſufficient; yet not effectuall, *Bellarm.cap.*11.

Anſw. Theſe places alleaged are not vnderſtoode, of the internall calling, or of grace inwardly working, but onely of the externall calling, and oblation of grace, and the ſupply of all neceſſarie outward meanes to ſaluation. As the Prophet Iſay ſpeaketh of hedging the vineyard, caſting out the ſtones, planting it with the beſt plants, ſetting vp a watch tower: that is, they had the watchmen the Prophets, alſo the beſt plants, the true worſhip and ſeruice of God, they had the law and the Prophets, and all ſtones, that is externall impediments, which might hinder them, were remoued: So our Sauiour ſaith, that he would haue gathered them together by his preaching, and by the voice of the Goſpell, as the Henne by her clocking doth call her chickens, but they refuſed, and reſiſted, as they likewiſe ſerued the Prophets, and other meſſengers of God, ſent vnto them.

We grant then, that the externall meanes of ſaluation in themſelues may be and are ſufficient to all, but effectuall onely to thoſe, to whom God giueth his eſpeciall grace: and in this ſenſe wee doe not much miſlike this diſtinction: but we denie any ſuch difference of the internall grace, whereby God calleth, ſtirreth vp, aſſiſteth, moueth, directeth the hearts of men: this grace cannot be ſufficient in any, but it muſt needes alſo be effectuall. Yet here we deſire not to be miſtaken, but further doe enlarge our meaning thus: Firſt, we denie not altogether this diſtinction of ſufficiencie and efficacie: it hath place in the externall calling, and common grace offered to all, which is ſufficient to many, but effectuall onely to the elect: but not in the inward ſpirituall calling. Secondly, wee grant a diuers meaſure of inward grace in the effectuall calling of the elect, and admit ſome degree in their ſpirituall calling, which though it be not alike effectuall in all that are ſo called, yet is it effectuall. Thirdly, we confeſſe, that ſomewhat may be inwardly wrought by Gods ſpirit euen in hypocrites: but we affirme, that no inward temporarie gift wrought in them is ſufficient to their ſaluation: for hereupon it would follow, that they might reſiſt their inward powerfull, ſufficient calling, and that the abſence of their owne will onely maketh it without effect: that therefore there is no ſuch powerfull inward working grace ſufficient onely, but that the ſame is effectuall alſo, we ſhew it thus.

The Proteſtants.

*Argum.*1. THe Prophet Dauid ſaith, I will runne the way of thy commandements, when thou ſhalt enlarge my heart: Draw me, and we will runne after thee: And S. Paul ſaith, Whom he hath predeſtinate, he hath called, whom he hath called, he hath iuſtified. All theſe places proue that the internall calling of God is alwaies effectuall: After drawing and enlarging the heart, followeth running, after vocation, immediatly enſueth iuſtification. Pſal.119.32. Cantic.1.3. Rom.8.30.

*Argum.*2. The grace of God is not in vaine in any: as S. Paul ſaith, His grace that was in me, was not in vaine: But if ſo that the grace of God inwardly mouing and calling men, ſhould faile in the effect, then ſhould it bee in vaine: Ergo, it is effectuall in all the children of God, in whom it ſo worketh. 1.Cor.15.10.

Let Auguſtine ſpeake: Illud extra hominem ſcribitur vt eum forinſecus terrificet, hoc in ipſo homine eſt, vt eum intrinſecus iuſtificet: That (namely the law) is written without man to terrifie him, this, that is, grace is within man inwardly to iuſtifie him, *de ſpirit.& liter.cap.*17. As terror then outwardly followeth the knowledge of the Law, ſo iuſtification alwaies followeth grace inwardly working: it is therefore alwaies effectuall where it is ſufficient, ſpeaking of the inward and ſpirituall calling. Alſo in another place he ſaith: Quando Deus docet, ſic docet, vt ſcienda ſciamus, aperiendo veritatem, ſic docet vt facienda faciamus, inſpirando ſuauitatem: When God teacheth, hee ſo teacheth, that things which are to bee knowne we doe know, God opening the truth to vs, and things which are to be done, we doe, by inſpiring a deſire into vs. Gods inward teaching then by his holy ſpirit is alwaies effectuall in his children, and in none of them it is ſufficient, but together alſo effectuall. In Pſal.118. Serm.17.

*Magiſter ſentent.lib.*1 *diſt.*17 liter.K. thus teſtifieth, Spiritus ſanctus non ſolum non habenti, verum etiam habenti non incaſſum permittitur, non habenti quidem, vt habeatur, habenti, vt amplius habeatur: The holy ſpirit is not giuen in vaine neither to him, that hath it not; nor to him that hath: to him that hath not, that he may haue him, to him that hath him, that he may haue him in greater meaſure, &c. Wherefore the inward calling of the ſpirit is alwayes effectuall: ſee further hereof before error 23. in the fourth inconuenience.

AN APPENDIX OR SECOND PART OF THIS queſtion, wherein the efficacie of grace conſiſteth.

The Papiſts.

B*Ellarmine* dare not attribute the efficacie of grace onely to free will, that this ſhould be the cauſe, why that grace in ſome worketh effectually, in ſome others it doth not, becauſe ſome giue their free aſſent vnto grace working in them, other with-hold it: for then (ſaith hee) it ſhould reſt in mans power, whether grace ſhould be effectuall or not: Neither doth he thinke, that God onely is the cauſe of this efficacie, by drawing and framing our willes to conſent to his grace: But this efficacie, hee 29 Error.

ſaith, partly dependeth of Gods inward perſwaſion, partly of the free aſſent of the will, Deus, (ſaith the Ieſuite) quos efficaciter trahere decreuit, eam ſuaſionem adhibet, quam videt congruere ingenio eorum: God doth vſe that perſwaſion to thoſe, whom he purpoſeth effectually to call, which he knoweth beſt to fit their humour, and which it is moſt like they will agree vnto, *Bellarm.cap.*12. So thus in the Ieſuites opinion, God is not a drawer, or worker of mans will, but a mouer, and perſwader onely.

Argum. If God ſhould not onely moue and perſwade men by his ſpirit, but alſo produce and worke in them the very act of willing: then ſhould there be no free will in man to doe any thing: and ſo no action in man ſhould be voluntarie, but of neceſſitie and conſtraint, becauſe man is not left to himſelfe, to giue his aſſent freely, but his will is determined of God, Bellarmin.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, it is no abſurditie at all, to ſay that in man by nature there remaineth no free will at John 15.5. all, to that which is good: for our Sauiour ſaith, Without me you can doe nothing: but to giue our conſent or will vnto good is ſomewhat, therefore of our ſelues without Chriſt we cannot doe it. Auguſtine ſaith, Cum de libero arbitrio agimus, non de parte hominis agimus, ſed de toto, quia cum peccauit homo primus, non in parte aliqua, ſed in tota, qua conditus eſt, natura deliquit — vitiato ergo libero arbitrio,&c. When we ſpeake of free will, wee ſpeake not of a part of man, but of the whole, becauſe when the firſt man ſinned, he offended not in one part, but in the whole nature, wherein he was created, — free will then being corrupted, whole man is corrupt,&c. Hypognoſtic.3.cont.pelag. He granteth no other free will without grace vnto good, but that, which was once in Adam, and is now vtterly loſt. But of this more, by Gods grace, in the queſtion of Free will.

Secondly, although God onely doth conuert and encline the will of man to goodneſſe, yet for all John 8.36. this, man worketh willingly, not of neceſſitie or conſtraint: for our Sauiour ſaith, If the Sonne make you free, ye ſhall be free indeede: God of vnwilling maketh vs willing.

And here wee refuſe not the diſtinction of their owne gloſſe, Cauſ.23.qu.4.c.24. There are two kindes of neceſſitie: Simplex vna, altera conditionalis: A ſimple neceſſitie, as it is neceſſarie that all men be mortall; conditionall, as when I ſee a man walke, it is neceſſarie he ſhould walke, not neceſſarie by the nature of the thing, for ſimply it is not neceſſarie to walke, but in reſpect of the condition, becauſe I ſee him or know him to walke: ſo in reſpect of Gods knowledge, and working grace, there is a conditionall neceſſitie, but no ſimple or abſolute neceſſitie in the things themſelues, which yet do retaine their owne libertie: Thus farre, and to this purpoſe the Gloſſe.

The Proteſtants.

GOD onely is the cauſe, that his grace worketh effectually, and is not in vaine in vs: neither doth he onely moue and perſwade, but actually worketh the aſſent and inclination of the will.

Philip.2.13. *Argum.*1. It is God that worketh in vs, the will and the deede, God worketh: this is more then to moue or perſwade: Deus operatur in nobis velle: God worketh in vs to will: what is this elſe, but, producere ipſum actum volendi: To bring forth the very act of willing, which the Ieſuite denieth, *cap.*12. Act.16.14. So the Scripture ſaith, that God opened the heart of Lydia, that ſhe attended to thoſe things that Paul ſpake: To open the heart, is more then to moue, or ſtirre the heart: it betokeneth rather an actuall operation, and inclination of it. Further, thoſe places which are alleaged to proue that the efficacie of grace doth not depend wholy vpon the aſſent of our will, doe likewiſe ſhew; that mans will herein worketh not at all, but the whole worke in making grace effectuall, is to be aſcribed to the ſpirit John 6.45. of God: as Euery man that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, commeth to me: Beatus homo, Pſal.94.12. quem tu erudieris,&c. Bleſſed is the man, whom thou teacheſt, O Lord: Who ſeparateth thee, what haſt 1.Cor.4.7. thou, that thou haſt not receiued? Theſe texts doe as well proue that no part of the diuine worke is to be imputed to mans will, as that the whole is not: for if Gods teaching onely cauſe vs to come vnto him, and make vs bleſſed, if God only ſeparate vs,&c. then it is of Gods ſpirit only, that grace worketh in vs effectually.

*Argum.*2. We will deſire no better proofe, then the Ieſuites owne confeſſion: who being preſſed John 6.45. with that place, Ioh.6. Euery one, that hath heard, und learned of my father, commeth vnto me, thus anſwereth, Infallibilitas effectus, non habet pro cauſa ſtudium diſcipuli, ſed excellentiam magiſtri, ſicut allegat dominus ibidem prophetiam Iſaiæ, erunt omnes docibiles Dei: The infallibilitie or certaintie of the effect, ariſeth not of the deſire and ſtudie of him that is taught, as the cauſe thereof, but of the excellencie of the teacher, as in the ſame place our Lord Chriſt alleageth the Propheſie of Iſay, They ſhall be all taught of God, John 6.45. *Bellarmin.cap.*12. And againe he ſaith: Si eadem motione accepta vnus credit, alter non credit, longe maiorem habuit Dei gratiam, is qui credit, quàm qui non credit: If by one, and the ſelfe ſame motion inwardly receiued, one man beleeue, another doth not, ſurely hee that beleeueth hath a greater grace of God, then he which beleeueth not: *de grat.lib.*1.*cap.*13.*reſponſ. ad obiect.*3. Here Bellarmine aſcribeth the efficacie of grace, to the excellencie of the teacher, and to the greatneſſe of grace, which ſome haue, and others haue not: It is then of God onely, nothing of our ſelues, that grace worketh effectually in vs.

Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Alia eſt cauſa iam credentis in Deo, alia non credentis, — qui enim non credit, — verum lumen videre non poteſt, niſi Deus — in corde eius illuxerit: There is another reaſon of him, that beleeueth in God, and of him, that beleeueth not: for he that beleeueth not, — cannot ſee the true light, vnleſſe God firſt doe lighten his heart: and ſo it is not of him that willeth, or of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercie: cont. Pelagian hypognostic. lib.3.art.3. The cauſe then of beleefe, is onely the illumination of Gods ſpirit: for if any thing were to bee aſcribed to man, it ſhould not be wholy of him that ſheweth mercie, but ſomewhat alſo of the willer, and the runner, which the Apoſtle denieth.

Concil. Arauſican.2.can.2. Si quis ſine gratia Dei, credentibus, volentibus, deſiderantibus, ſtudentibus miſericordiam dicit conferri, non autem diuinitus per inſpirationem ſpiritus in nobis fieri, reſiſtit Apoſtolo qui dicit, quid habes, quod non accepiſti? If any man ſay that mercie is conferred vpon thoſe that beleeue, deſire, ſtudie, &c. of themſelues without the grace of God, and not rather wrought in vs by the inſpiration of the ſpirit, he reſiſteth the Apoſtle which ſaith, What haſt thou, which thou haſt not receiued, &c. It is the inward inſpiration then of God, not our voluntarie conſenting, that grace is effected in vs.

Iſychius ſaith: Quantumcunq; homo egerit, &c. ſine adiutorio Domini ſalutem adipiſci non poteſt: Whatſoeuer a man doth without the helpe of God, he cannot obtaine ſaluation: wherefore S. Paul ſaith, it is not of the willer, nor runner, &c. God then muſt be the helper and mouer, not a perſwader onely, but the worker. Lib.2.in 7. c.Leuitic.

Former confeſſ. of Heluetia. artic.19. Like as vnleſſe God doe giue power, whereby the meate may nouriſh, the ſeed ſpring vp, the medicine be effectuall, the outward worke doth nothing at all profit, ſo except the Lord doe giue encreaſe to the heart of the hearer, the doctrine, &c. is without efficacie, &c. Harm.ſect.11. pag.350.

Their owne decrees alſo thus teſtifie: Part.3.diſt.4.c.154. Qui dixerit gratiam Dei, qua iuſtificamur, &c. He that ſaith, that the grace of God, wherewith we are iuſtified by Ieſus Chriſt, is onely of force to forgiue vs our ſinnes, not that we ſhould not commit them afterward, let him be accurſed, &c. If it be the grace of God, that both taketh away our ſinnes alreadie done, and keepeth vs from committing the like, what is left vnto mans will? Ibid.c.155. Qui dixerit, &c. Hee that ſaith the grace of God doth helpe onely to reueale vnto vs the will of God, whereby we know what to deſire, and what to ſhunne, and that thereby we are not enabled to doe that we know, let him be accurſed, &c. Grace then doth not onely moue or perſwade, or reueale vnto the will what is to be done, but giueth power to doe it.

The Popiſh writers are here much deuided, ſome affirming, that God doth onely moue and perſwade the will, as Bellarmine with others of that ſide: ſome other affirme, that God doth not onely moue the will, but worketh it, et ad vnum inclinat, and enclineth it vnto ſome one obiect, and ſo determineth the will: which ſome of them hold to bee done morally: as Suarez the Ieſuite granteth, that the exciting and moouing grace may be ſo effectuall, that it morally determineth the will, that it muſt needes conſent: ſome goe further, that this is determinatio Phyſica, a Phyſicall determination of the will: wherein God is the onely agent, and the will is altogether paſſiue, and wrought vpon. Lib.3.de auxil. grat. c.10. num.5. Beuius de efficac.grat.c.19.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE DISTINCTION of Grace into gratiam operantem, & cooperantem, vel adiuuantem: grace-working, and grace-helping.

The Papiſts.

Bellarmine thus doth define and diſtinguiſh them: Gratia operans eſt, quæ facit vt velimus: It is the working grace, which maketh vs to will, that which is good: Gratia cooperans, quæ facit, vt quæ voluerimus, impleamus: Helping grace, or grace working together with vs, is that, which cauſeth vs to fulfill, or doe that, which we will or deſire: Bellarm.cap.2. This then is his minde, that God only worketh the beginning of euery good action; that is, the conſent of the will: but the accompliſhment of the action is not only of God, but he worketh together with man. 30.Error.

Argum. The Ieſuite would illuſtrate his matter by this ſimilitude: As if it were expedient for a man to ſaile into the Eaſt Countries, and yet he is vnwilling, his friend commeth, and perſwadeth with him, and prouideth things needfull for the Nauigation, as money, victuals, and ſuch like; though his friend may ſay, I onely was the cauſe, that he tooke this Nauigation in hand, yet can he not ſay, that I onely caried or conueyed him vnto that place, but helped him onely: So ſaith he, God onely worketh the beginning of any action by perſwading the will, but he is helping onely and aſſiſtant to man in the finiſhing thereof, lib.1.de grat.cap.13.

Anſw. Firſt, this ſimilitude is very inſufficient, and the things here compared are altogether vnlike: for what preſumption is it, to match the doing of man with the power of God? Firſt, man draweth onely by perſwaſion, he hath no power ouer anothers heart: but God is greater then our heart, he doth not only apply perſwaſion to it, but bendeth and turneth it: as Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Deus magis habet in poteſtate hominum voluntates, quàm ipſi ſuas: God hath greater power ouer the willes of men, then they haue themſelues. Secondly, all the helpes that man prouideth, or miniſtreth for any action, are externall: But God is ayding and aſſiſting euery where by his power, and worketh mightily in the inward man. Wee ſee then the inſufficiencie of this ſimilitude. De corrept.& grat.cap.14.

Though it were a fit and meete compariſon, yet wee know that ſimilitudes prooue not, no more doth this: it needeth not therefore any large confutation: but if yet they will preſſe this ſimilitude, taken from Nauigation, God may be compared to the Pilate that directeth the ſhip, mans will to the Marriner that laboureth at the oares: who moueth the ſhip in deede, but the Sterres-man guideth it right: ſo man willeth and worketh, but God onely directeth and guideth his will to that, which is good.

2.Chro.15.2. *Argum.*2. The Doway Collegials giue this note vpon that place. 2.Chron.15.2. Our Lord is with you, becauſe yee haue beene with him: cooperation with Gods grace, meriteth encreaſe of grace,&c.

*Contra.*1. The text is not truly tranſlated, the Hebrew word bihiothchem, ſignifieth, in being you with him, as the Septuag. ſo read ἐν τῷ εἶναι ὑμᾶς: cum eſtis, when, or while you are with him: and beſide our owne interpreters, their owne Vatablus giueth the ſenſe, ſi fueritis vel cum fueritis, if or when you ſhall be with him.

2 But allowing that reading, the gloſſe is falſe: for in that they had beene with the Lord, it was not of themſelues, but it was Gods worke in them: as Ieremie.31.18. Conuert thou me, and I ſhall be conuerted: Neither ſhould this their obedience haue merited ſuch encreaſe, but God in mercie would crowne their former obedience, with further bleſſings: as the Prophet Dauid ſaith: which crowneth thee in mercie: the Lord in deed crowneth and rewardeth, but in mercie.

Ierem.31.18.

Pſal.103.4.

The Proteſtants.

THis diſtinction of grace, that it ſhould be ſometime the principall, chiefe, and onely working cauſe in man, and another while but ayding, and aſſiſting onely, and that man ſhould be ioyned with God as a fellow worker in any good action, wee hold it to be a blaſphemous doctrine: that the will of man worketh together with grace, as it is, cauſa phyſica, a naturall cauſe of ſuch actions as are wrought by man, not reſpecting the qualitie and goodneſſe of them, but the worke onely, we denie not: but the grace of God onely is, cauſa moralis, the morall cauſe of euery good action. As they are but actions and operations, ſo they proceede from the will of man: but as they are good or commendable, they are the workes onely of grace.

Philip.2.13. Argum. God worketh the will and the deede, As hee worketh the will, ſo alſo hee worketh the deede; the will, God alone worketh: Ergo. Againe, that God may bee all in all, ſaith the Apoſtle: But God ſhould not bee all in all in euery good action, if man ſhould bee ioyned as a fellow worker. S. Iames ſaith, Euery good and perfect gift is from aboue: therefore no good gift, or worke is from below, that is of man, either in part, or in whole. Our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, Sine me nihil poteſtis facere: Without me, you can doe nothing: of the which words Auguſtine writeth thus: Non ait ſine me difficile poteſtis facere, aut ſine me nihil poteſtis perficere, ſed ne facere quidem: He ſaith not, without mee you can hardly doe any thing, or without me, you cannot finiſh any thing, but you are not able to doe it at all: *cont.2.Epiſtol.Pelag.lib.2.cap.*8. And againe: Multa Deus in homine facit bona, quæ non facit homo, nulla vero facit homo, quæ non facit Deus, vt faciat homo: God doth many good things in man, which man doth not: but man doth no good things, which God maketh him not to doe: Ibid.

Iam.1.17.

Iohn 15.5.

But if ſo that in any good action God ſhould worke part, and man part, then might man worke ſomewhat, that is his part, without Gods helpe: And if God doe but helpe to worke, what is that elſe, but to giue power more eaſily onely to worke; as though man, without that helpe, yet more hardly and difficultly of himſelfe might doe it? But all this is contrarie to that ſaying of our Sauiour, Without me you can doe nothing.

S. Ambroſe here hath an excellent teſtimonie, *Epiſt.*84. Gratia Dei tota repellitur, niſi tota ſuſcipitur,&c. The grace of God is wholy refuſed, if it be not wholy receiued: and as he is no faithfull man which in any one point diſſenteth from the catholike veritie; Sic extra gratiam efficitur, qui aliquid de eius plenitudine diffitetur: So he is without grace, which doth denie any thing of the fulneſſe thereof: Grace then worketh fully, and not in part onely.

Lib. de patient. And further. 1. Tertullian of the Africane Church, ſaith: ad præſtanda ea ſola gratia diuinæ inſpirationis operatur: To performe thoſe things, the grace of diuine operation onely worketh,&c. And againe, nihil noſtrum, quia Dei omnia, cuius ipſi quidem nos: Nothing is ours, becauſe all is Gods, whoſe we our ſelues are.

Homil.de Adam & Eua. 2 Chryſoſtome: By theſe eccleſiaſticall rules, and by inſtructions grounded vpon diuine authoritie, we are ſo by Gods helpe confirmed, Vt omnium bonorum operum — Deum profiteamur authorem, & non dubitemus ab ipſius gratia omnia hominis merita prouenire, per quem ita fit, vt aliquid boni & velle inueniamur & facere,&c. That we profeſſe God the author of all good workes, and doubt not, but that all mans merites proceede from his grace, by whom it is wrought, that we are found both to will, and doe that which is good,&c. Here all is aſcribed to God, both the will and the deede, both the beginning and perfection of the worke.

Harm.ſect.3. pag.60. 3 Confeſſ.of Heluetia, latter.c.8. We being prone to euill, and full of all wickedneſſe, can doe no good of our ſelues, no not ſo much as thinke of any: Grace then worketh all in all.

4 Decret.part.3.diſtinct.4.c.156.Quicunque dixerit,&c. Whoſoeuer ſaith, that the grace of iuſtification is giuen, that, what we are bid to doe by free will, Facilius impleamus per gratiam, we ſhould doe more eaſily by grace; let him be accurſed. If Gods grace doe but helpe to worke, what doth it elſe but onely make vs more eaſily to worke, which this canon condemneth.

The maſter of ſentences maketh both theſe, the working grace and helping grace, all one grace and gift, Lib.2.diſt.26.liter.d. I then reaſon thus: if it bee all one grace, it worketh alwaies alike: but it worketh alone in preparing the will; as the Maſter alleageth out of Auguſtine: Per ſolam gratiam, quæ eſt in fide Chriſti poſita, præparatur voluntas, &c. The will is prepared by grace alone, which conſiſteth in the faith of Chriſt. Ibid. diſt.26. liter.d. Ergo, it alſo worketh alone in helping and aſſiſting the will. Therefore both the firſt worke in preparing the will, and the ſecond in enabling the will, is onely of grace.

THE THIRD PART OF THIS CONTROUERSIE OF FREE WILL.

THe ſeuerall queſtions are theſe. Firſt, of the nature, condition and qualitie of free will. Secondly, of the power of free will. Firſt, in naturall things. Secondly, in morall duties. Thirdly, in ſpirituall.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE NATVRE and definition of free will.

BEllarmine defineth free will after this manner: Eſt libera poteſtas vnum præ alijs eligendi, vel reſpuendi, intelligenti naturæ attributa, &c. It is a free or abſolute power, to chuſe, or refuſe one thing before another, giuen of God vnto a reaſonable and vnderſtanding nature, or creature. Wee miſlike theſe points in this definition: firſt, concerning the power of free will, as well in chuſing, as refuſing: ſecondly, of the obiect of free will, that it is naturally, as it is now to be found in man, enclined as well to good as euill: thirdly, concerning the qualitie and condition of free will, that it is actiue, and not paſſiue: fourthly, of the ſubiect of free will. Of theſe in their order.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE POWER of free will.

The Papiſts.

THere is, duplex libertas, a double kinde of libertie: libertas à neceſſitate, a libertie or freedome from neceſſitie, as when it is in our power to will, or not to will, indifferently to chuſe, or refuſe this or that, as to walke, to ſit, to goe, none of all theſe being neceſſarie, but ſubiect to our will and choice: libertas à coactione, a freedome from coaction, or conſtraint, is, when that wee doe, is of neceſſitie, and we cannot chuſe but doe it, yet we doe it willingly. As a man cannot chuſe but ſinne, yet he ſinneth voluntarily, he is not conſtrained thereunto: Bellarmine affirmeth, that in the free will of man, there muſt be a freedome not onely from coaction, but from neceſſitie: lib.3. de grat. cap.4. So alſo the Doway men, annot. in Bib. p.16. 31.Error.

Argum. God made man from the beginning, and left him in the hand of his counſell, he hath ſet water and fire before thee, ſtretch out thy hand, to which thou wilt: before man is life and death, good and euill, what him liketh, ſhall be giuen him: Ergo, the freedome of mans will, is not onely not conſtrained, but hath no neceſſitie, ſeeing it is in his power, to chuſe or refuſe what him liketh, Bellarmin. cap.5. Eccleſ.15.14.

Anſw.1. We grant ſuch a free will to haue beene giuen to man in his creation, but is now loſt by his fall: as Auguſtine ſaith: Lex in Paradiſo non poneretur ſeruanda, niſi liber eſſet eam tam velle, quam nolle ſeruare—ſed ſicut per ſe lapſus eſt, non continuò per ſe, i. propriam voluntatem, reſurgere poteſt: A law ſhould not haue beene giuen man in Paradiſe to keepe, vnleſſe he had beene free, either to will, or nill to keepe it:— but as man did fall of himſelfe, ſo he cannot riſe of himſelfe, that is, by his owne will, Cont. Pelag. articul.3.

2. You muſt preſſe vs with more waightie authorities, then thoſe out of Apocryphal Scriptures, ſuch as the booke of Eccleſiaſticus is, if you would winne any credite to your cauſe: for the authoritie of ſuch bookes bindeth vs not.

Whereas Bellarmine alleageth diuers Fathers to proue the libertie of free will, not onely from coaction and conſtraint, but from neceſſitie, either to good or euill: they are ſo to be vnderſtood, that they either ſpeake of the ſtate of man in his perfection, or of the will of man, as it is by regeneration of grace, not by corruption of nature, or elſe by neceſſitie vnderſtand coaction and compulſion, as Auguſtine ſaith, Liberum voluntatis arbitrium— ab omni neceſſitatis vinculo vindicamus, &c. We doe redeeme free will, whereby we liue well or euill, from all bond of neceſſitie: that is, as he expoundeth it, ſub fato ſtellarum, &c. Wee place no mans birth vnder the fatall deſtinie of the ſtarres, lib.2. cont. Fauſtum. c.5. By neceſſitie he vnderſtandeth a fatall deſtinie and compulſion: from ſuch neceſſitie we alſo free the will of man.

The Proteſtants.

A Freedome of will from neceſſitie we grant to haue beene in our firſt parents, whereby it was in their power, to haue choſen either the good, or the euill way: But ſince that by Adams tranſgreſſion the whole power of nature was ſhaken, and all the gifts and graces of creation decayed;

there remaineth no freenes of will vnto good in man, but only a voluntarie promptneſſe and inclination to euill without conſtraint.

Eccleſ. 7. 31. Rom. 7. 18. Argum. This haue I found (ſaith the Preacher) that God hath made man righteous, but he hath ſought many inuentions. I know, ſaith S. Paul, that in me, that is, my fleſh, dwelleth no good thing. Theſe places proue, that, howſoeuer it was with man in his creation, now by nature there remaineth no good thing in him: and therefore no inclination to that which is good.

2. Cor. 3. 5. We are not able, ſaith the Apoſtle, to thinke any thing of our ſelues, but our abilitie or ſufficiencie is of God. Vpon the which words, Auguſt. writeth thus: Cont. 2. epiſt. Pelag. 2. 8. Non idonei ſumus cogitare aliquid (dicit Paulus) minus autem eſt cogitare quam cupere, — neque ait non ſumus idonei, quod perfectum eſt cogitare, — ſed cogitare aliquid, cui contrarium eſt nihil: We are not fit to thinke any thing, ſaith the Apoſtle, but it is farre leſſe to thinke, then to deſire: — neither ſaith he, wee are not fit to thinke any great matter, but not any thing, the contrary whereof is nothing, &c. If we are not then by nature able to thinke any good, much leſſe to will it.

Bernard thus writeth: Nemo putet ideo dictum liberum arbitrium, &c. Let no man thinke it is called free will, becauſe it hath equall power to good and euill; for then neither God, which cannot be euill, nor the diuell, which cannot be good, ſhould haue free will: but therefore it is called free, becauſe none can be good or euill, niſi volens, but willingly, lib. de liber. arbit.

Saint Ambroſe alſo is an euident witneſſe: lib. 1 de vocat. Gent. c. 9. Licet inſit homini bonum nolle, tamen niſi donatum non habet bonum velle: Although it be in mans power to nill that is good, yet he cannot will that is good, vnleſſe it bee giuen him: the one he hath by corruption of nature, the other he receiueth by the operation of grace. Againe, Non in poteſtate noſtra eſt cor noſtrum & noſtræ cogitationes: Our heart and our thoughts are not in our owne power: de fug. ſecul. c. 1. Voluntas mutabilis quæ non ab immutabili voluntate regitur, tanto citius propinquat iniquitati, quanto acrius intenditur actions: The mutable will, vnleſſe it be gouerned of the immutable will, doth ſo much neerer approch to iniquitie, as it worketh more intendedly: Cui committi nihil aliud quam dimitti: For a man to be committed to his will, is all one, as to be dimitted or forſaken: Nihil in ſuis viribus habet, niſi periculi facilitatem: Mans will hath nothing of it owne power, but the facilitie of danger: de vocat. Gent. lib. 1. c. 2. Then it followeth, that the will of man, by nature, cannot chuſe but to doe euill: What is this elſe but a neceſſitie not of coaction, but of deprauation?

Bernard yet ſpeaketh more euidently: Serm. 81. in Cantic. Anima mala libera neceſſitate & ancilla tenetur & libera: ancilla propter neceſſitatem, libera propter voluntatem, &c. The ſoule is by an vnhappie free neceſſitie, both bond and free; bond becauſe of neceſſitie; (it cannot otherwiſe chuſe) free, becauſe it is voluntarie.

Dominic. Aduent. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Sicut nauis fracto gubernaculo illuc ducitur vbi tempeſtas voluerit, &c. Like as a ſhip, the ſteering rudder being broken, is carried whither the tempeſt will; ſo man, the diuine helpe being loſt through ſin, doth not what he would, but what the diuell would, &c. This ſimilitude doth moſt fitly expreſſe the thing in queſtion: for like as a man being carried in a ſhip, walketh vp and downe freely in the ſhip, whither hee will, but yet hee is carried whither the tempeſt driueth him: ſo mans will is free indeed, but alwaies vnto euill.

Harm. ſect. 3. pag. 62. Confeſſion of Heluetia the latter, chap. 9. Theſe things are ſo altred in man (that is, his vnderſtanding, will, &c.) that they are not able to doe that now, which they could doe before mans fall: for his vnderſtanding is darkened, and his will which before was free, is now become a ſeruile will, for it ſerueth ſin, not nilling, but willing, &c.

Peter Lombard lib. 2. diſt. 25. liter. e. Liberum videtur dici arbitrium, quia ſine coactione & neceſſitate valet appetere, &c. It ſeemeth that free will is ſo called, becauſe without coaction and neceſſitie it doth deſire, &c. He taketh coaction and neceſſitie for all one, and ſo affirmeth the will to bee free from coaction; which we alſo grant.

Thomas 1. part. qu. 83. art. 2. ad 3. ſaith, Per peccatum periiſſe libertatem gratiæ, non libertatem naturæ, quæ eſt à coactione: By ſinne the libertie of grace is loſt, not the libertie of nature, which is from coaction.

Alphonſ. de caſtro lib. 9. Libertas, quæ opponitur neceſſitati, ſeu vt verius dicam, coactioni: That is libertie, which is oppoſed againſt neceſſitie, or more truly coaction, &c. Theſe popiſh writers ſeeme to affirme a libertie only in the will from coaction and compulſion.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE obiect of Free will.

The Papiſts.

32. Error. BEllarmine ſaith, Voluntatis proprium & primarium obiectum bonum eſſe, ſiue aliquid apprehenſum ſub ratione boni: That the proper and principall obiect of the will of man, is that which is good, or that appeareth, or is ſo taken to be: and ſo he determineth, Per arbitrium non expeti mala, ſed bona: That by free will not euill things, but good are deſired, lib. de grat. 3. cap. 12.

Argum. The inclination of the will vnto his obiect is naturall, and therefore God is the author thereof: If God be the author, then it is good: the will of man then is not naturally enclined to euill, for ſo the inclination thereof ſhould be euill, which God hath made, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. That naturall power which God hath giuen to men, generally to will, to thinke, to deſire, to hate, to loue, muſt needs be good, becauſe it is of God; but the execution of this power in the abuſe thereof, by willing and chuſing euill, and refuſing and hating good, ariſeth of the corruption of our nature, and is euill; neither is God to be charged with it. We diſtinguiſh then betweene the naturall gift, and the vſe thereof, betweene the nature of man, as it was created of God, and the corruption thereof: to haue power to will, is a naturall gift giuen of God; but to will that is euill, is an abuſe of that power, cauſed in vs by the corruption of our nature.

Argum.2. The obiect of the appetite or deſire, is that, which is deſireable; but that which is good, is onely appetible or deſireable: Ergo, onely bonum, that which is good is the obiect of the will or deſire, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw.1. The propoſition is partly true, partly falſe: for if by (deſireable) that is vnderſtood which ought to be deſired in right, it is falſe; if that which is (de facto) deſired, we grant it. Secondly, for the aſſumption; if it be vnderſtood of that which is naturally good: ſo it is true, that by the inſtinct of nature, euery creature deſireth that, which maketh for the conſeruation thereof: but this is not to the point in queſtion: But if hee meane that which is morally, and verily, and truely good, the aſſumption is falſe; for that which is good in this ſenſe is not onely, nor yet at all by nature deſired.

The Proteſtants.

THat man by free will may chuſe things naturally good, as for the preſeruation of his life, and maintenance of his ciuill eſtate, and ſhunne the contrarie, that is, things hurtfull vnto his life, we doe eaſily grant; ſeeing it is a generall gift of nature, euen beſtowed vpon vnreaſonable creatures, to diſcerne what is good, and what hurtfull vnto them: and in this ſenſe we denie not, but that the proper obiect of the will, namely in naturall and ciuill matters, is to couet good, or at the leaſt, which appeares ſo to be: But yet concerning things morally good, that is, vertuous and godly acts, the will of man hath no inclination thereunto naturally, but is prone to euill onely: Neither is the will deceiued in taking vice for vertue, and following euill, in the name of good. Some indeede may pretend ſome naturall or ciuill good, as profit, or pleaſure, but not that which is morally, that is verily and truly good: As he that ſtealeth, is perſwaded it is for his profit, which is a ciuill good; but he cannot think, that therein he doth iuſtly, which is the morall good. An adulterer propoundeth to himſelfe pleaſure in that ſinne: but hee doth not ſo much as imagine, that hee can be chaſte in committing adulterie, which is the morall vertue. Wherefore we doubt not to conclude, both that mans free will naturally hath no inclination to that which is truly good. And againe, Malum, etiam ſub ratione mali, proprium obiectum voluntatis eſſe: That euill, that is, ſinne, euen as it is ſinne, is the proper obiect of the will, by reaſon of the corruption of nature.

Argum.1. That the wicked are naturally inclined to euill, euen as it is euill, the Scripture teacheth vs: It is a paſtime to a foole to doe wickedly: A foole maketh a mocke of ſinne: The wicked perſon is not Pro.10.23.
deceiued in taking vice for vertue, but doth naturally as verily loue vice, as by grace the righteous Pro.14.9.
embraceth vertue: Woe vnto them (ſaith the Prophet) that ſpeake good of euill, and euill of good, which Iſay.5.20.
put darkneſſe for light, and light for darkneſſe: The Prophet crieth not out againſt thoſe, which ſinne of ignorance and ſimplicitie, taking euill for good: but againſt ſuch, which doe ſinne of malice, and willingly and wittingly commend euill, euen becauſe it is euill, and hate that is good, for the goodneſſe ſake; Which draw iniquitie with cordes of vanitie: but if they were ſeduced by error in taking one thing for another, they ſhould be led themſelues, and drawne into ſinne: but now the Prophet ſaith, They doe hale and draw ſinne to themſelues, as with cart-ropes.

Argum.2. Auguſtine in his booke of Confeſſions, is not aſhamed to confeſſe how that hee was accuſtomed to ſteale apples in his childhood and younger yeeres, when as hee both might haue had better at home, and hauing ſtolne them, he caſt them to the hogges: ſo that (ſaith he) whereas theeues, adulterers, and the like, doe propound to themſelues in their euill doing, ſome end or other: Ego nihil hic amaui præter furtum: I loued nothing elſe but theft it ſelfe, lib confeſſ.2.cap.4. For Auguſtine neither did it for pleaſure, for he had better fruit at home; nor for profit, for he caſt them to the ſwine, &c. Wherfore ſinne, euen as it is ſinne, is naturally the obiect of the will.

Likewiſe the diuell loueth euill becauſe it is euill: the wicked hate and deteſt God, who is good: Ergo, the will may both deſire that which is euill, and hate and deteſt that which is good.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, Auguſtine in his theft loued the ſinne, but vnder the ſhew of ſome delectable good, becauſe he reioyced to deceiue his neighbour with the reſt of his companions. Secondly, the diuell loueth our ſinne, but vnder the ſhew of ſome good to himſelfe, thinking it profitable to himſelfe, that many periſh. Thirdly, the wicked hate God, but vnder the ſhew or colour of euill, becauſe they hold him a ſeuere Iudge, Bellarm.cap.12.reſp.ad 2.4.argum.

Contra. Firſt, Auguſtine ſaith, Nihil amaui: I loued nothing but the theft it ſelfe. He could beſt expreſſe his owne meaning, wherefore he ſimply loued and deſired that which was euill: if he made a ſport to deceiue his neighbours, this was no morall good thing, but a carnall and ſenſuall delight onely: and ſo we denie not, but euen in ſinne there is a ſhew of ſenſuall delight and pleaſure, but not of any morall or true vertue.

Ioh.8.44.

Secondly: Firſt, the diuell procureth our euill, not for hope of any eaſe to himſelfe, for he is paſt all hope of eaſe or releaſe, but to doe vs hurt. It is ſaid, that death came into the world through the enuie of the diuell vnto vs, not through ſelfe-loue to himſelfe. Secondly, this were to extenuate the malice of Sathan, as though he ſought not our deſtruction ſo much to doe vs hurt, as to benefit himſelfe. Thirdly, this good which Sathan is ſaid to ayme at, is not any morall good, or true vertue, but a malitious and Sathanicall delight. Fourthly, but if in our euill Sathan pretend good, what good can he imagine in his owne deſperate ſinne? The Scripture ſaith, he is a lyar, and the father thereof. Then as the father in his childe, ſo he delighteth in ſinne as his owne, and deſireth it, euen as it is euill.

Prou.29.27.
Matth.20.15.

Thirdly: firſt, the wickedeſt man, that liueth, is by nature perſwaded, that God is good, and therefore cannot hate him, as euill: but their wicked nature abhorreth God, as good. So the Scripture ſaith, that the iuſt man is an abomination to the wicked: he hateth him for his vertue ſake: And the Lord himſelfe thus ſaith to the wicked: Is thine eye euill, becauſe I am good? Here goodneſſe it ſelfe is hated of the wicked.

Saint Ambroſe ſaith; Homo niſi donatum non habet bonum velle: Man cannot deſire that is good, vnleſſe it be giuen him: de vocat. Gent. lib. 2. cap. 9. Nulla ſpecies cuiuſquam virtutis occurrit, quæ ſine dono diuinæ gratiæ, &c. There is no ſhew of any vertue occurrent, which is deſired without the gift of the diuine grace, ibid. Therefore morall goodneſſe is not the proper obiect of the will by nature.

Homil.8.in 2. c.1.ad Timoth.

1 Chryſoſtome ſaith, Mala omnia ex noſtra tantummodo voluntate fiunt: All euill things are only done by our will.

Cont.2.Epiſt. Pelag lib.1. c.18.

2 Auguſtine ſaith, that man, Deo deſerente pro meritis ire in malum, & Deo adiuuante ſine meritis conuerti ad bonum: God forſaking him by his deſerts goeth to euill, & God helping him, without deſert is conuerted to good, &c. Then mans will, being not rectified by grace, doth of it ſelfe runne into euill.

Harm.ſect.3. p.62.

3 Heluetia the latter. c.9. It is euident, that the minde or vnderſtanding is the guide of the will, and ſeeing the guide is blinde, it is eaſie to be ſeene, how farre will can reach: therefore man not as yet regenerate hath not free will to doe good, &c.

4 Peter Lombard: Eſt libertas non vera, &c. There is a libertie not good to doe euill, when reaſon diſſenteth from the will, judging that not to be done, which the will deſireth: lib.2. diſt.25. liter.k. How can that ſeeme good to the will, which reaſon iudgeth to be euill?

Guliel. Ockam (one of their ſchoolemen) affirmeth with vs, that the will may bee carried to deſire euill, ſub ratione mali, as it is euill: in lib.3. ſenten. qu.13. diſt.3.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER THE END IT SELFE be the obiect of the will, and whence the will is moued to deſire the end.

The Papiſts.

33. Error.

First, Bellarmine affirmeth, that the end, as eternall life, is not properly the obiect of the will, but the meanes tending to the end. His beſt reaſon is out of Ariſtotle his Ethikes, lib.3 cap.2. No man conſulteth to be happy, but of the meanes how he may be happy. lib.3. de grat. c.14. §. quod autem.

34. Error.

Secondly, the loue or deſire to the end (he ſaith) is a naturall act of the will, not infuſed or inſpired of God, but naturally imprinted in the will. His reaſon is this, becauſe if this deſire be an act of the will, then it muſt proceede actiuely: but if it ſhould be inſpired or added beſide the naturall inclination, it ſhould be paſſiue: Bellarm. lib.3. de grat. cap.14. §. iam vero primam, &c.

The Proteſtants.

Philip.1.23.
Iohn 14.5.
Iohn 14.

Firſt, 1. Wee ſay that the end is the firſt and chiefeſt thing in the deſire and intention. 2. There is difference betweene the deſire and deliberation, betweene will and counſell. Conſultation is of the meanes to effect that which the wil intendeth, or deſireth: and ſo your Philoſopher is to be vnderſtoode. 3. The Scripture teſtifieth with vs: S. Paul ſaith, I deſire to be diſſolued, and to be with Christ, which is beſt of all. What is the end, but that, which is beſt of all, to be with Chriſt, which here is the obiect of the Apoſtles deſire? Your owne Scripture alſo ſaith, Eccleſiaſtic. 15.14. Before man is life and death, good and euill, what him liketh ſhall be giuen him. Life and death are ſet before man, as the obiect of his will: which are the very ends themſelues. 4. We reade in the Goſpell, how Thomas ſaid vnto our Sauiour: We know not whether thou goeſt, how then can we know the way? Wee ſee then, that firſt the end is to be knowne and deſired, and then the way. Our Sauiour anſwereth, I am the way, the truth, and the life: whereby is ſignified, that Chriſt is to be deſired, not only as the way, but as the end, which is life. As Ambroſe vpon theſe words, Sequimur te Domine, ſed vt ſequamur accerſi, &c. Wee follow thee Lord, but fetch vs, that we may follow thee: no man doth aſcend without thee, thou art the way, the truth, the life, the poſſibilitie, faith, reward: de bon. mort. c.12. Chriſt then is to be followed, as the way and the life, as both the truth, and faith, and reward.

Iohn 6.44.

Secondly, 1. The will is actiue in reſpect of his proper obiect: but it is paſſiue, as it is moued and ſtirred of God. 2. The Scripture is euident, that the deſire of comming to, and being with Chriſt, both of the way & end, is not naturall, but aboue nature, from God. No man commeth to me, vnleſſe the father draw him: The loue of Chriſts appearing is rewarded with a crowne of glorie, but no naturall gift is ſo rewarded. 3. Saint Ambroſe: Nulla ſpecies cuiuſquam virtutis occurrit, quæ ſine dono diuinæ gratiæ habetur: There is no ſhew of any vertue, which is had or deſired without the gift of the heauenly grace: Ergo, the end, which is ſaluation, which is not without a ſhew of vertue, is not deſired without grace. 2.Tim.4.8.

1 And further Chryſoſtome ſaith: Agit Deus in nobis, vt quod vult & velimus & agamus: God worketh in vs, that what he willeth, we ſhould both will and do, &c. Homil de Adam & Eua.

2 Auguſtine ſaith, Ut velimus, ſine nobis operatur, cum autem volumus, &c. That we will, God worketh without vs, and after we will, that we may doe he worketh together with vs, &c. The deſire then and willing of the end is of God by grace ſupernaturall, not naturall in our ſelues. De grat.& liber.arbitr. c.17.

3 Former confeſ. of Heluetia: We find by experience, that of our owne accord we may doe euill, but we can neither embrace, nor follow any good thing, except being illuminated by the grace of Chriſt, we be ſtirred vp and effectually mooued thereunto. Har.ſſ.4.p.65.

4 Capreolus, one of their Schoolemen thinketh, that this deſire of the will is wrought only by God, and is altogether paſſiue in that reſpect.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE QVALITIE AND condition of freewill, whether it be actiue or paſſiue.

The Papiſts.

Bellarmine affirmeth, that the will of man is neither paſſiue onely, nor partly actiue, and partly paſſiue: ſed ſimpliciter & abſolutè actiuam: but ſimply and abſolutely actiue. Of the ſame opinion are diuers of the Schoolemen, as Thomas Aquinas, Scotus, Henricus, Capreolus, Ferrarienſis, as they are cited and alleaged by Bellarmine, lib. 3. de grat. cap. 10. 35.Error.

Argum. If freewill ſhould be paſſiue, and not actiue, that is, if it be not a perpetuall agent and working cauſe, but ſhould it ſelfe ſuffer, and receiue, and bee wrought vpon by other cauſes: then can it not be free, for it is not in the power of the patient, or of that which ſuffereth, to doe this, or that, but in the power of the agent, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, we grant, that in what things ſoeuer the will of man naturally is free, there it worketh freely, and ſo actiuely, as namely in all euill actions: But vnto good things, it hath naturally no freedome at all, but is made free onely by grace: and therefore wee denie, that in this caſe, it is either free by nature, or of any actiue power. Secondly, not onely grace worketh vpon the will of man, but naturally alſo the vnderſtanding mooueth the will actiuely, vnleſſe (contrarie to nature) the will rebell againſt the reaſon and vnderſtanding.

The Proteſtants.

The will of man we cannot abſolutely determine to be either actiue or paſſiue in working: for as the obiect of the will is, and the thing that is willed, ſo is the will it ſelfe affected: for in euery thing which is willed or deſired, we are to reſpect two things: the generall power of willing and deſiring, without any reſpect vnto good, or euil; and the qualitie of the obiect, the goodneſſe, or euilneſſe thereof. If we conſider the generall power, whereby we thinke, we will, we deſire this, or that; ſo is the will of man free and actiue, whether it be good or euill, that is ſo willed: if we reſpect the qualitie of the obiect, as if it be euill, which is deſired, here alſo is the will of man both free, and actiue. But if it be good, the will is onely paſſiue in the firſt mouing and preparing of it vnto good: and being thus prepared, that by grace it alſo worketh actiuely, but not of it ſelfe: it hath no naturall inclination vnto good things, vnleſſe it be drawne by the ſpirit of God working in vs. So then, velle in nobis eſt, to will is in our owne power, bene velle à Deo, to will as we ſhould, is of God.

Argum. If the Sonne make you free, then are you free indeed, It is God, which worketh in you both the will, and the deed. The will of man then in good things worketh not, but is wrought; it maketh not it ſelfe free, but is made free: Ergo, it is not in this caſe actiue, but onely paſſiue, receiuing power from another cauſe. Philip.2.13.

1 Auguſtine ſaith: Voluntas humana non libertate conſequitur gratiam, ſed gratia potius libertatem: The will of man doth not by the freenes thereof obtaine grace, but by grace obtaineth freedome: de correption. & grat c.8. The freedome then of the wil, is the worke and effect of grace: Ergo, it is paſſiue, for the effect, or the thing wrought or cauſed, doth ſuffer in reſpect of the efficient & working cauſe.

2 Damaſcene ſaith, all things are thine, thou requireſt nothing of vs, (then to be ſaued.) [illegible]

3 Latter confeſ. of Heluetia. c.4. The regenerate in the choiſe and working of that which is good, doe not onely worke paſſiuely, but actiuely: for they are mooued of God, that themſelues may doe that which they doe. Lib.4.de fid.orthodox.c.4. Harm.ſſ.3. p.63.

4 Bellarmine produceth diuers Schoolemen: ſome of opinion, that the will is onely paſſiue, as Gotfridus, Ægidius: ſome that it is partly actiue, partly paſſiue, as Gabriel, Paludanus, Caietan, &c. Lib.3. de liber. arbit.c.10.

Petrus Lombard compareth freewill to the ground, grace vnto raine: Terra mentis noſtræ, i. libero arbitrio voluntatis, infunditur pluuia diuinæ benedictionis: The raine of the heauenly bleſſing is infuſed into the ground of the mind, that is, freewill: &c. But the earth in reſpect of the raine that falleth, is paſſiue, and not actiue.

Eſpenc.in.2.ad Timoth.p.40.h. Paſſiua promiſſi expectatio hominum eſt: The paſſiue expectation of the promiſe is of men. Faith then, which is the act of the will and vnderſtanding, is paſſiue.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER THE VNDERſtanding or intelligence doe worke actiuelie vpon the will of man.

The Papiſts.

36.Error. BEllarmine to maintaine his owne conceite, that the will of man is onely actiue, not paſſiue, doubteth not to denie, voluntatem moueri à ratione, that the will is moued by reaſon; or that the intelligent part doth actum voluntatis effectiue producere, produce and effect the act of the will: lib.3. de grat. cap.10.

Argum. The intelligent part worketh neceſſarily, or is a neceſſary cauſe, then it would follow, that to will is neceſſarie, not free, if the vnderſtanding moue the will neceſſarily, as it doth: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, the vnderſtanding doth not alwaies worke neceſſarily: for the will and deſire many times rebelleth againſt reaſon, and is not alwaies mooued or perſwaded by the vnderſtanding. Secondly, though it ſhould worke neceſſarily, yet the will may retaine the freedome ſtill: for not neceſſitie, but coaction and compulſion take away libertie: as grace worketh neceſſarily vpon the will, that is, ſurely, effectually, yet grace taketh not away freewill.

The Proteſtants.

THat the vnderſtanding or intelligent part mooueth the will of man actiuely, it is euident.

Argum. That which is the life of man is the agent and actiue worker in mans will; for all actions proceed from the life: but the reaſon and vnderſtanding is the life, becauſe it is the light: for John 1.4. the life is the light of man, Iohn 1.4. Ergo.

Againe, that wherein Gods image properly conſiſteth, is the chiefe agent and mouer: but the image of God is in the mind, the ſeat of knowledge: and the renewing of the mind is in knowledge after the Coloſſ.3.10. image of him, that created him. Ergo, the vnderſtanding is the mouer of the will.

1. Auguſtine reſembleth the vnderſtanding to the man, the will to the woman: Atq; ita fieri quaſi maſculum & fœminam illa parte conſulente hac obtemperante, and ſo, (in the inner man) there is as the male and female, one counſelling, the other obeying. lib.2. de Geneſ. ad liter. cap.21. The mind then worketh actiuely vpon the will, which is the ſenſuall part.

Qu.20.in Geneſ. 2. Theodoret affirmeth, that man was created according to Gods image, ſecundum partem animæ intellectiuam, in reſpect of the intellectiue part of the ſoule, &c. that then which is Gods image muſt haue a commanding power ouer all the other faculties.

Harm.ſect.3. pag.62. 3 Heluetia, latter confeſ.c.4. It is euident, that the mind or vnderſtanding is the guide of the will, and ſeeing the guide is blind it is eaſie to be ſeene, how farre the will can reach.

4 Diuers of the Schoolemen hold the will to be paſſiue in reſpect of the vnderſtanding that mooueth it, though it be actiue in reſpect of the obiect which is wiſhed or deſired: ſic Gabriel. in 2. ſent. diſt.25.qu.vnic. Petrus Paludan. in 4. ſent. diſt.49.qu.3.

Lib.3.de lib. arbit.c.8.ſect. ſexta. And what elſe can be Bellarmines meaning, maintaining this poſition, that the election of the will, pendet neceſſariò, &c. doth depend neceſſarilie of the ſmall iudgement of practicall reaſon; but that the iudgement of reaſon ſwaieth and commandeth the will, and that the will is mooued by reaſon.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE ſubiect of freewill.

The Papiſts.

37.Error. BEllarmine affirmeth, that freewill is incident onely to reaſonable creatures, which no man denieth, and he confeſſeth that there is freewill in God and in the Angels: and to this purpoſe alleageth theſe places, Pſalm.135.6. Whatſoeuer pleaſed the Lord, that did he in heauen and earth. Which worketh all things, according to the counſell of his owne will: cap.16. Hence hee concludeth, that the will of God is moſt free not onely from coaction and compulſion, but from all kind of neceſſitie: and he blameth Bucer and Caluin for aſcribing a neceſſitie to the will or workes of God: lib.3. de grat. cap.15.16.

Pſal.135.6. Epheſ.1.11.

Anſw. Firſt, we willingly affirme, that Gods will worketh moſt freely, that is, without any conſtraint, and this out of theſe places is concluded, but not that Gods will is free from all neceſſitie; for it is neceſſarie that God ſhould not will any thing that is euill. Secondly, Bellarmine alloweth Lombards definition of freewill: Liberum eſt ad vtrum libet: It is free to either part, cap.5. And in the ſame place he proueth, that it is not ſufficient for the will to be free from coaction, but from neceſſitie alſo: then it muſt follow in their ſenſe, that Gods will muſt bee free to either part, both to good and euill, which were blaſphemie to affirme.

The Proteſtants.

WE neither tie God to a fatall neceſſitie, as the Heathen Philoſophers did: neither doe wee affirme, as he ſlaundereth Caluin to ſay, that God can doe no more, then he doth: for as Iohn ſaith, he could of ſtones raiſe vp children to Abraham. Neither doe we denie, that God hath a freewill, but not ſuch a freewill as the Papiſts define: which is free to either part, free both from coaction, and from all neceſſitie: free to good and euill.

Matth.3.9.

Argum. That which is impoſſible to God is neceſſary, It is impoſſible for God to lye, Ergo, it in neceſſarie that he ſhould not lye. That which God doth not, neither can doe, he willeth not: God tempteth no man to euill, he neither doth nor can: Ergo, his will here is not libera ad vtrum libet, free vnto each part. From this neceſſitie of not willing or doing euill, Gods will then is not free. Wherefore let them chuſe which they will, that either God hath no freewill, or that freewill is not free from neceſſitie, though it be from compulſion or coaction.

Heb.6.18.
Iam.1.13.

Auguſtine ſaith, Si illa definitur neceſſitas, &c. If we define that to be neceſſitie, as when we ſay it is neceſſarie, that this thing ſhould be ſo, wee need not feare leaſt this neceſſitie ſhould take away the freedome of will: for neither doe we put Gods foreknowledge vnder neceſſitie, when we ſay, it is neceſſarie God ſhould alway like and know all things afore: lib.5. de ciuitat. Dei cap. 10. Auguſtine denieth not, but that there is a kind of neceſſitie God; a neceſſitie determined, not conſtrained; implied, not enforced. So the fathers, when they exclude neceſſitie from God, they meane a fatall and preſcribed or naturall neceſſitie, not otherwiſe: as Gregor. Nyſſen. lib. de fat. cap. vlt. Omnipotens neque naturæ neceſſitate, neq; legis præſcripto operatur: The Omnipotent worketh neither by neceſſitie of nature, nor preſcript of law. Ambr. Operatur pro libero voluntatis arbitrio, non pro neceſſitatis obſequio: He worketh according to the freedome of will, not thraldome of neceſſitie.

Pet. Lombard. in the ſame ſenſe ſaith: Deus non neceſſitate, ſed libera voluntate omnia facit, &c. God not of neceſſitie, but of his freewill worketh all things. By neceſſitie he vnderſtandeth coaction. Liberum arbitrium dicitur, quia ſine coactione & neceſſitate: It is called freewill, becauſe without coaction and neceſſitie it willeth; lib.2. diſt.25. Wherefore ſeeing God truly hath freewill, and the elect Angels haue free will; as in the ſame place Lombar. Multo liberius erit arbitrium, quod non poteſt ſeruire peccato; Will ſhall be much more free, when it cannot ſerue ſinne: &c. It followeth, that neceſſitie onely, where no coaction or compulſion is, doth not take away the libertie and freedome of the will.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE power of freewill.

THere are three kinds of humane actions: Some are naturall, and ciuill, as to walke, to ſit, to ſow, to plant, to make warre and ſuch like: Some are morall, ſuch are the actions which appertaine to vertue, or vice; as to giue almes, to liue chaſtly, contrarie to the which are theſe, to ſteale, to commit adulterie; with the like: Some are diuine and ſupernaturall, as to beleeue, to hope, to loue, &c. This queſtion then hath according to this diuiſion three parts: firſt, of the power of freewill in naturall and ciuill actions; ſecondly, in morall: thirdly, in diuine and ſupernaturall.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE POWER of freewill in naturall things.

THis part of the queſtion is diuided into other particulars: as firſt, whether the deitie and power of God may be knowne by the light of nature. Secondly, whether man haue freewill in naturall things.

THE FIRST POINT, WHETHER THE GODhead may be knowne by the light of nature.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine not contented with Caluine his iudgement of this matter, who granteth that by the light of nature generally the Godhead may be knowne, addeth further, Verum & vnum deum naturaliter poſſe cognoſci, & non ſolum deum in communi, &c. That the true and onely God naturally may be knowne, and not onely after a common and generall manner. And likewiſe he ſaith yet furthermore, that to this naturall knowledge and demonſtration of God, a man may nullo labore aſſentiri, giue his aſſent without any labour, and need not, auxilio gratiæ ſpeciali, any ſpecial helpe or aſſiſtance of grace thereunto, Bellarm. lib.4. de grat. cap.2.

38.Error.

Argum. S. Paul ſaith, that the Gentiles euen by the light of nature might haue groped after God, and found him. The knowledge of God is ſo eaſie, and readie at hand, to bee found euen in the creatures, as a thing that may be groped, and felt. Alſo the ſame Apoſtle ſaith, that the inuiſible things of God, as his power, eternitie, are ſeene by the creation of the world: Ergo, God is knowne by his creatures, to be iuſt, good, almightie, &c. Bellarm. ibid.

Acts 17.28.
Rom.1.20.

Anſw. Theſe places prooue a generall and confuſed knowledge of God by the creatures, which we grant, but ſuch a particular, and manifeſt light of knowledge, which the Ieſuite ſtriueth for, they proue not: they might (ſaith the Apoſtle) haue groped after God: but men vſe to grope and feele in the Rom.1.20. night, and in the darke: and this naturall light ſerueth onely to make men without excuſe. Ad hoc, ſaith the Apoſtle, vt ſint ipſi inexcuſabiles: It cannot bring them to any cleere, or perfect knowledge Iob.36.25. of God. So we reade in the booke of Iob: All men ſee it, and behold it a farre off: that is, the light of nature is but a dimme and obſcure light, as when a man beholdeth a thing a farre off.

The Proteſtants.

I Marueile much, that the Ieſuite here dealeth againſt vs, as enemies to the light of nature; ſeeing they themſelues, if they be conſtant in their doctrine, and agree in iudgement one with another, in this matter haue beene more ſtraite-laced, than wee. This queſtion is at large diſcourſed betweene D. Harding, and that reuerend learned father Biſhop Iewel: who hauing affirmed, That men, euen by the light of nature, though they are not able to be led thereby to the perfection of faith, yet may diſcerne oftentimes betweene truth and falſhood in religion. Harding thereupon openeth his mouth wide, and crieth aloud, This is his heatheniſh heart, what could Porphyrie, or Iulian, or Celſus ſay more? But Bi- Defenſ.Apol. pag.42. ſhop Iewel in defence of the light of nature, alleageth that place of the Apoſtle, Rom.1.20. which the Ieſuite obiected, How that the power of God is knowne by the creatures: And the Heathen, that haue Rom.2.14. not the law, yet by nature know the things, that pertaine to the law: He alſo citeth the teſtimonie of Hierome to the ſame purpoſe: Homo naturaliter poteſt ſcire de Deo, & quod ſit, & quod iuſtus ſit: Man may naturally know of God, both that he is, and that he is iuſt.

This then is our opinion, that by the light of nature it may be knowne, both that God is, and that he is almightie, iuſt, eternall, &c. For otherwiſe he ſhould not bee knowne to be God: See the iudgement of *Beza. annot. Rom.*1.20. With what face then can the Ieſuite open his mouth againſt vs, as though we condemned the light of nature, and knowledge of the creatures?

But ſuch a naturall knowledge, that is, a particular, ſpeciall, manifeſt, direct knowledge of God, which the Ieſuite vrgeth, we cannot approue, nor yet that a man, without ſpeciall grace, can giue his aſſent vnto ſuch naturall knowledge, and come to know his Creator thereby.

*Argum.*1. Firſt, that the light of nature is not ſo full, cleare, and perfect, that it is able to bring vs to the true knowledge of God, we learne out of the Scripture: Our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, No man com- Ioh.14.6. meth to the Father but by me: The true knowledge of God is not reuealed vnto vs, but by Chriſt: the light of nature leadeth vs not to Chriſt, therefore not to the true knowledge of God.

*Argum.*2. Secondly, that man of himſelfe, without Gods ſpeciall gift, cannot make vſe of this naturall knowledge of God, and ſubſcribe to the ſame, and giue aſſent in his heart, it is cleare alſo out of Ioh.1.10. the word of God: he was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1. This place is vnderſtood of the ſonne of God the ſecond perſon of the Trinitie: which myſterie of the Trinitie, we grant, cannot be knowne by the light of nature. *Bellarm. cap.*3.

Contra. The Euangeliſt ſpeaketh here of the creation of the world: The world was made by him: and yet they knew not their Creator: this notwithſtanding is a point of naturall knowledge, to con- Rom.1.20. feſſe God to be the Creator and Gouernour of the world: for the power of God is ſeene by the creation of the world.

*Bellarm.*2. The light appeared in darkneſſe, that is, the wiſedome of God is ſeene euen in the ſenſeleſſe creatures, as in trees and ſtones, which are called darkneſſe, becauſe they want reaſon: and therefore it is true of theſe creatures, that they comprehended not the light.

Contra. The Euangeliſts in very direct tearmes ſpeaketh of that light of nature, which is in men: The life was the light of men, and, This is the true light that lighteneth euery man that commeth into Ioh.1.49. the world, verſ.9. The Ieſuite then doth ſtrangely abuſe this place, in applying it vnto vnreaſonable creatures.

*Bellarm.*3. Laſt of all, the Ieſuite thus playeth the interpreter, by the darkneſſe wee vnderſtand, Homines ignorantes, & peccatores, ſinfull and ignorant men, which perceiued not this light, not becauſe they could not, but becauſe they would not.

Contra. Neither can this expoſition hold: for the Euangeliſt ſheweth the condition of all men, what they are by nature, euen full of darkneſſe and ignorance, as it may appeare by comparing the ninth verſe, This is the light, that lightneth euery man: he meaneth then not ſome, but all. Secondly, not to comprehend, noteth a want of power, not of will; as to comprehend, ſheweth a preſence of a- Epheſ.3.18. bilitie or power: That ye may be able to comprehend: vt poſſitis, ſaith the Apoſtle, that ye may; not, vt velitis, that you will. Laſtly, wee grant alſo that it is true, noluerunt comprehendere, they would not comprehend: but that is not all: for the Euangeliſt declareth two things, wherein the miſerable ſtate of man by nature is ſeene; both that men are vnable (though they would) to comprehend, and vnwilling though they could, to receiue the light: for the firſt, he ſaith, οὐ κατέλαβον non comprehenderunt, They Ioh.1.5.11. cōprehended not, that is, they could not, verſ.5. and for the other, οὐ παρέλαβον non receperunt, they receiued not, that is, they would not, verſ.11. As not to comprehend ſheweth a defect of power; ſo not to receiue, importeth a want of will. Thus, notwithſtanding this ſmoake and miſte, which the Ieſuite raiſeth, this place remaineth cleare both againſt the ſufficiencie of naturall light in it ſelfe, and the voluntarie aſſenting thereunto on mans behalfe.

Auguſtine

1. Auguſtine thus writeth vpon theſe words in the Goſpell: No man knoweth the Son, but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reueale him. Which muſt not be ſo vnderſtood, as though no man knew the Sonne but the Father; but the Father was both knowne of the Sonne, and of thoſe to whom the Sonne reuealeth him, becauſe it is not ſaid of the Father concerning his Sonne, To whom the Father will reueale him: as it is ſaid of the Sonne, concerning the Father, To whom the Sonne ſhall reueale him: then it followeth, Sic potius dictum eſt, vt intelligamus, & patrem & ipſum filium per filium reuelari, quia ipſe eſt mentis noſtræ lumen: But it is ſet downe in this manner, that wee ſhould vnderſtand, that both the Father and the Sonne are reuealed by the Sonne, becauſe he is the light of our mindes: Auguſtin. ſerm. de tempor. 48. We ſee then that God is knowne only by Chriſt, he is ſhadowed forth in the creatures, rather then knowne: And that Chriſt is that naturall light whereby euery man is lightened comming into the world; that is, the light of nature is to ſmall vſe or purpoſe, but to thoſe that receiue grace by Chriſt.

Eſpencæus a learned popiſh writer, vrgeth that place of S. Paul to this purpoſe, The Lord giue thee vnderſtanding in all things: In omnibus humanis rebus ſcilicet, maximis & minimis: In all humane matters great and ſmall. And he further thus alleageth out of Lactantius; Falſum intelligere ſapientiæ eſt, ſed humanæ, &c. To vnderſtand that is falſe, is a poynt of wiſedome, but humane; beyond this degree man cannot proceed: to know the truth is a poynt of diuine wiſedome, to the which a man cannot attaine of himſelfe, vnleſſe hee bee taught. The Philoſophers attained that which was the higheſt poynt of humane wiſedome, to vnderſtand, what God was not, but yet attained not to ſay, what God was: ex citat. Eſpenc. comment. in 2. Timoth. p. 26. liter. f. Wherefore the knowledge of nature concerning God, is obſcure, doubtfull, imperfect, not able to giue direction to the minde, without inſtinct of grace.

2. Tim. 27.

THE SECOND POINT, WHETHER MAN HAVE free will in ciuill and naturall things.

The Papiſts.

THis the Ieſuite affirmeth, and it is the common opinion of that ſide, that in naturall and ciuill actions man hath a free and abſolute will, whether to good or euill, they reaſon thus:

39. Error.

Argum. 1. It is in mans power to doe ſome things, which he doth not, and againe to leaue ſome things vndone in ciuill matters, which he doth: Ergo, there is free will in ſuch things: God ſaith to Salomon, Becauſe thou haſt asked wiſedome, and haſt not asked long life, &c. So Peter ſaith to Ananias, After it was ſold, was it not in thine owne power? Here wee ſee Salomon might haue done that which he did not, that is, asked riches, and long life, and not wiſedome: and Ananias might haue left that vndone which he did, as to haue ſold his poſſeſſions, and to bring the money to the Apoſtles: Bellar. lib. 4. de grat. cap. 7.

1. King. 3. 11.
Acts 5. 4.

Anſw. Firſt, though in ciuill indifferent matters to will and purpoſe, be in mans power, yet to doe or not to doe, to execute what he hath purpoſed, is not ſo in his power: for the Wiſeman maketh a manifeſt difference betweene theſe two: The thoughts of the heart are in man, but the anſwere of the tongue is of God. Man purpoſeth, but God diſpoſeth.

Prou. 16. 1.

Secondly, it was not in Salomons power of himſelfe to aske wiſedome of God, rather then any other thing: but his will and deſire was thereto directed of God: for if the Lord put into Salomons minde to aske, who ſaid vnto Salomon, appearing to him in a dreame, Aske what I ſhall giue thee; much more was it inſpired into him, what he ſhould aske. And concerning the other example: for a man to ſell or not to ſell, being a meere ciuill and indifferent action, it is freely in his power: but to ſell to good and godly vſes, to helpe the neceſſitie of others, as the brethren did in the Apoſtles time, was in them a worke of grace: All that beleeued were in one place, and had all things common. They were beleeuers that did ſo, faith wrought it in them. And againe, Great grace was vpon them all, neither was there any among them that lacked. It was a worke of grace then, that men ſold their lands, to relieue the wants of others.

1. King. 3. 5.
Acts 2. 44.
Acts 4. 33.

Argum. 2. The Scripture giueth vnto man free election and choyce of things, which cannot bee without free will. Firſt, Ioſh. 24. 15. Chuſe you this day whom ye will ſerue. Secondly, 2. Sam. 24. 12. I offer three things vnto thee, chuſe of them, which I ſhall doe vnto thee. Thirdly, If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandements. Luke 9. If any man will follow me, let him denie himſelfe.

Ioſh. 24. 15.
2. Sam. 24. 12.
Matth. 19. 17.
Luke 9. 23.

Anſw. Firſt, 1. The people had not power of themſelues to chuſe the way of the Lord: but God Deut.4.37. had firſt choſen them. Deut.4.37. Becauſe he loued the fathers he choſe their ſeede: and here the people anſwere, We will ſerue the Lord, for he is our God, verſ.18. Firſt, he was their God in chuſing them, and giuing grace; and then they choſe the Lord. Secondly, this place otherwiſe would enforce an abſolute election in diuine matters, and not in ciuill onely, which were a groſſe error; for this choice of the people was of the ſeruice and religion of God.

Secondly, Dauids will is directed by faith to make choice to fall into Gods hands: for (ſaith hee) 2.Sam.24.14. his mercies are great, verſ.14. His faith and confidence in Gods mercies directeth his choice.

Thirdly, 1. Thoſe places are vnproperly alleaged to proue free will in ciuill matters; to enter into life, and to follow Chriſt, are not ciuill, but ſpirituall and diuine: will he then conclude that a man hath power of himſelfe to follow Chriſt, and enter into heauen? blaſphemous is the mouth, that ſo affirmeth. 2. Why the precepts of Scripture are thus ſet foorth vnto man, Saint Ambroſe excellently ſheweth: Non ob aliud vnquam datur præceptum, niſi vt quæratur præcipientis auxilium; voces docentium, literæ paginarum Deo ſeruiunt, non carent eius virtute cui ſeruiunt: & quando id quod iubetur ab obediente perficitur, tunc effectus diuini operis declaratur: The precept is giuen, that the helpe of the precept giuer may bee ſought; the voyce of the teacher, the letters of Scripture doe miniſter vnto God; neither doe they want his vertue, whom they ſerue: and when that is fulfilled, which is commanded, the operation of the diuine worke is declared, epiſt.84. The precepts then of Scripture proue not a free will in man, but onely ſtirre vs vp to ſeeke for his helpe to performe the precept, that giueth it.

Argum.3. Here a great troupe of both Greeke and Latine fathers is brought in for the proofe of free will. I anſwere: firſt, it is certaine that ſome of the Greeke fathers aſcribed too much to free will, more I thinke then the Papiſts dare acknowledge: as in the Homilie vnder Chryſoſtomes name vpon the ſtorie of Zacheus: In te eſt vt poſſis, quia in te eſt vt velis, &c. It is in thy ſelfe to bee able to doe, becauſe it is in thee to will to doe. If it bee in vs, what need grace? Secondly, the fathers extoll free will, hauing to deale with the contrarie hereſie of the Manichees, who imputed ſinne vnto nature, and not to mans will. Thirdly, the fathers affirming free will, either ſpeake of the ſtate of man in his firſt creation: as Baſil alleaged ſaith, Anima voluntariam adepta vitam, &c. The ſoule hauing obtained a voluntarie life, was created according to the image of God. Or elſe they meane the freedome of will by grace: as Epiphan.hereſ.16. Liberum arbitrium exhibuit nobis Deus, &c. God hath giuen vnto vs a free will, ſaying, If ye will obey and heare, ye ſhall eate the good things of the land. This libertie or freedome, as I ſhewed before out of Ambroſe, is wrought in vs by grace. Or laſtly, they ſpeake of a libertie of will free from compulſion or violence, as Chryſoſtome ſerm.2. de fato: Dæmon dicit, Non eſt in te, quod extendas manum, ſed neceſſitate & vi id agis: The diuell ſaith, It is not in thee to extend thy hand, but thou doeſt it of neceſſitie and force. And S.Hierome cited in 26.Ierem. Liberum homini ſeruatur arbitrium ne ex praſcientia eius, quaſi ex neceſſitate cogatur, &c. Mans free will is reſerued, ſo that hee is not conſtrained as of neceſſitie by Gods preſcience to doe this or that. In any of theſe three ſenſes if the fathers be vnderſtood, according to their owne minde, wee doe willingly conſent: that man in his creation had free will; that by grace now alſo mans will is made free, and that by nature mans will is free from compulſion or conſtraint.

The Proteſtants.

WE here diſſent from our aduerſaries in two points: Firſt, we grant, that in ciuill matters, being in themſelues indifferent, there is a free will in man, as to eate, to labour, to ſit, to goe, to plant, to build: but to doe any of theſe to any good, or godly end as to labour, thereby to auoid ſtealing, to goe vnto prayer, to build houſes for poore people onely of charitie, without opinion of merit, theſe godly actions are not of our ſelues, but wrought in vs by the ſpirit.

Secondly, wee affirme, that although in ſuch things mens thoughts or deuices are free; yet ſo are not their actions; it is not as free for men to doe, or not to doe, as to will, or not to will.

Prou.16.8. Prou.19.1. Ierem.10.23. Iam.4.14. Argum.1. The heart of man purpoſeth his way, but the Lord doth direct his ſteps. Many deuices are in mans heart, but the counſell of the Lord ſhall ſtand. I know, that the way of man is not in himſelfe, neither is it in man to direct his ſteps. S.Iames alſo reproueth them which ſay, to morrow I will goe into the citie: Ye ought to ſay, if the Lord will, I will doe this or that. By theſe places we gather, that it is not in mans power to doe what himſelfe willeth, or purpoſeth, and therefore he hath not a free and abſolute will in theſe things.

Anſw. It is one thing to haue liberam electionem, a free choice of things, another to haue liberam exequutionem, freely to execute that which a man willeth: theſe places ſhew, that man hath not power freely to execute his will: his will or purpoſe may be free notwithſtanding in it ſelfe, Bellarm. cap.11.

Contra. The Ieſuite hath made here an anſwere contrarie to himſelfe: for before he thus defined, liberum hominem, a free man, or a man of free will, qui pro arbitrio facit, vel non facit, which doth or not doth, this or that, according to his owne pleaſure, cap.7.argum.2. But here forgetting what hee ſaid before, he limiteth free will within the compaſſe of the minde and purpoſe, not extending it to the action or execution: ſaying to this effect, that the purpoſe of man is free; but to accompliſh or execute his purpoſe he hath not free or abſolute power: which is the very ſame, that we affirmed before; fore: that howſoeuer mens thoughts in meere ciuill and naturall things are left vnto them free,yet ſo are not their actions.

*Argum.*2. Thou haſt wrought all our workes for vs. Of him,through him,and for him are all things. God worketh all in all: Ergo, the diſpoſition of the will is of God. Iſay.26 12. Rom.11.36. 1.Cor.12.6.

Bellarmine: Mans free will,and Gods grace doe worke together: like as without the light a man cannot ſee, yet the light being preſent, it is in a mans power to open his eyes and ſee, or to ſhut his eyes and not ſee: ſo the grace of God preſuppoſed, yet it is in mans will to chuſe or refuſe: *Bellarm. cap.*11.obſeru.2.

Contra. Firſt, this gloſſe is contrarie to the text: for if God worke all our workes for vs, if hee worke all in all,then our will worketh nothing: how worketh God all,if he worke not all,but with a fellow helper? Secondly,the reaſon is not alike betweene the gifts of nature,and the gifts of grace:for the power to ſee,to heare is once giuen in the nature of man, and to the execution thereof, there neede no ſpeciall direction, but the generall aſſiſtance of Gods prouidence: but in the workes of grace,as in the diſpoſing of the will to good,the ſpeciall aſſiſtance of Gods ſpirit is neceſſarie: a man may ſhut his eies againſt the light, but a man cannot ſhut his heart againſt the effectuall working of grace. Thirdly,this was the hereſie of the Pelagians; Ita dei gratiam ponunt vt non per ſingula opera eius nitamur auxilio: They did ſo affirme the grace of God, that we need not for euery worke Gods aſſiſtance: but referred themſelues to freewill,which was once giuen them. Their ſentence was this, that it was the grace and gift of God,that they had freewill: but after this gift once giuen,the execution and diſpoſition of it was in themſelues: Hieron.epiſt.ad Cteſiphont. Bellarmine ſeemeth not to be farre off from this hereſie,than matcheth the naturall faculties of the ſenſe, and the ſpirituall diſpoſition of the will together: as though a generall aſſiſtance of Gods power and prouidence ſufficed to the one,as well as to the other.

1. Auguſtine ſaith: Fatemur quidem liberum eſſe in omnibus hominibus arbitrium, habens quidem iudicium rationis,non per quod ſit idoneum,quæ ad Deum pertinent, ſine Deo aut inchoare,aut perficere: ſed tantum in operibus vitæ præſentis,tam bonis,quam malis; bonis dico,quæ de bono naturæ oriuntur,vt velle manducare,laborare,domum fabricare,&c. Wee confeſſe a kind of freewill to be in all men,which hath the iudgement of reaſon, not by the which it is fit either to begin, or to finiſh without Gods helpe,things appertaining to God,but onely in the workes of this life preſent, both good and euill; ſuch good things I meane,as haue a naturall or ciuill goodnes,as to will or purpoſe to eate,to labour, to build an houſe,&c. With this teſtimonie,both theſe points are confirmed,which we haue now alreadie ſufficiently prooued out of Scripture. Firſt, Auguſtine granteth a freewill in naturall things,ſo far only as they are naturally or ciuilly good, not as they are referred vnto God or any godly worke. Secondly,the execution of theſe naturall actions he doth not attribute to mans freewill, but the purpoſe onely and deſire,as velle laborare,manducare,to will to labour,to will to eate,and ſo of the reſt. Artic.3.contr. Pelag.

Saint Hierome epiſt.ad Cteſiphont. ſheweth what the power of mans will is in naturall things: the Pelagian obiected thus: Si voluero curuare digitum,ſtare,ſedere,&c.ſemper mihi dei auxilium neceſſarium eſt? If I will bow my finger,ſtand,ſit,&c.is the helpe of God alwaies neceſſarie? He anſwereth thus: Audi ingrate,immo ſacrilege,Apoſtolum prædicantem: Heare thou vngratefull man, &c.the Apoſtle thus preaching, Whether we eate or drinke,or whatſoeuer we doe elſe, let all be done to the glorie of God. So then euen in theſe ciuill workes Gods aſſiſtance is neceſſarie.

Ambroſe alſo thus teſtifieth,epiſt.84.Quaſi homo auxilio dei in quadam actionũ ſuarum parte egeat, in quadam non egeat,&c. As though man needed Gods helpe in ſome part of his actions,in ſome not: or that there were any time,or moment,wherein it were not pernicious and hurtfull to him,if the ſpirit of God were wanting: Ergo,euen in the direction of ciuill actions the preſence of the ſpirit is neceſſarie,if in no action,nor any time he can be wanting.

2 Chryſoſtome confeſſeth, Omnium bonorum effectuum & operum—Deum authorem, that God is the author of all good arts,and workes,&c. then whatſoeuer is well done euen in ciuill workes, is from God,not of our ſelues. Homil.de Adam & Eua.

3 Latter confeſ.of Heluetia.c.9. There is ſome vnderſtanding of earthly things remaining in man after his fal: for God hath of mercy left him wit,—yet it is a cleare caſe,that we can profit very little in artes without the bleſſing of God: the ſcripture referreth all artes to God: yea,and the Ethnikes did referre the beginning of artes to the Gods,&c: then euen in theſe ciuill things nothing can be well done without Gods ſpeciall aſſiſtance. Harm.ſect.3. pag.63.

4 One of the Popiſh writers doth confeſſe, that whereas the Diuine wrightings doe teſtifie,that God hath wrought all our workes,and that he worketh all in vs, both the will and deed. Deum concurrere ad omnem actum poſitiuum, that God concurreth to euery poſitiue act, &c. Bennius de grat.efficac. cap.20.

AN APPENDIX, AS TOVCHING THE NAME and difference of freewill before mans fall and after.

The Papiſts.

FIrſt, concerning the name of freewill, Bellarmine greatlie complaineth, that ſome haue verie boldlie changed the name of freewill, calling it ſeruum arbitrium, bondwill: his reaſon is, be- 40.Error.

cauſe the Fathers haue alwaies vſed the name of freewill in the defence of the faith: but it is not like, that the Church would haue vſed it, if it had been an offenſiue and vnfit name, Bellarm. lib.4. cap.6.

41. Error. Secondly, he doubteth not to affirme, Poſt lapſum hominem eſſe liberi arbitrij ſi fuit ante lapſum: That man hath freewill after the fall, if he had it before. His reaſon is this, becauſe the prouidence of God is alleaged by Caluin to be the onely impediment of freewill: but Gods prouidence was as well before mans fall as after: Bellar. lib.4. cap.7. ſ. poſtrema. Thus in Bellarmines opinion, man hath freewill as well after his fall, as before.

The Proteſtants.

First, 1. That the name of freewill was very much vſed of ancient time by the Fathers, we grant, for they had to deale with the wicked Manichees, and other hereticks, who made the beginning of ſinne in the euilneſſe of nature, not in the corruption of mans will; therefore againſt them they maintained the name and nature of freewill; ſo long this name had not onely a tolerable, but a neceſſarie vſe: but now ſeeing it is abuſed to ſignifie an aptneſſe and libertie in mans will by nature to do good, we may deale with it, as Hezekiah did with the braſen Serpent, which though it had a good beginning, yet becauſe in proceſſe of time it was abuſed to ſuperſtition, hee cauſed it to bee broken downe. By the ſame example we may leaue and change the vſe of this name of freewill.

Rom.6.20. 2 The Scripture doth cal mans wil and man himſelfe by nature bond, and ſpeaketh of no freedome or libertie but by grace: Ye were the ſeruants of ſinne: Serui peccati. What is this elſe but to ſay, ſeruum arbitrium, your will was bond, or ſeruant to ſinne.

3 Concil. Arauſican. 2. c.13. Quod amiſſum eſt, &c. That which is loſt cannot be reſtored, but by him, that firſt gaue it, as the truth ſaith: If the Sonne make you free, ye are free indeed. The Scripture acknowledgeth no libertie of the will but by grace: wherefore the name of freewill by nature, is contrarie both to the ſenſe and phraſe of Scripture, and in that vnderſtanding may bee refrained, and diſcontinued. John.8.36.

Secondly, 1. That man after his fall enioyeth freewill as he did before, is contrarie to the Scripture: God hath made man righteous, but he hath added many inuentions. And the image of God, after the which man was created, whereof his holy and freewill was a part, is by Adams fall decaied, and renewed in Chriſt. Eccleſ.7.31. Coloſ.3.18.

2 Neither doth Caluin or any other ſay, that Gods preſcience or prouidence is an hinderance to the libertie of mans will: but we confeſſe with Ambroſe: Æterna dei, & ſemper tranquilla cognitio nulla nos vrget neceſſitate peccandi, nec inde manat iniquitas, vnde iuſtitia. Gods eternall and ſtaied knowledge, doth not vrge vs with any neceſſitie to ſin, neither doth iniquitie proceed from whence iuſtice commeth, *lib.2. de vocat. Gent. cap.*10. It is not then Gods preſcience, but mans owne corruption, that hath ſpoiled him of the libertie of will giuen in the creation: that which God foreknoweth, muſt neceſſarily come to paſſe, for otherwiſe it ſhould not haue been foreknowne: but his foreknowledge is not the cauſe thereof.

3 That Adams freewill by his fall is loſt, and that man hath not the ſame libertie of will before and after his fall, it is plentifully teſtified, by Councels and Fathers. Arauſican. 2. c.8. Liberum arbitrium per peccatum primi hominis infirmatum & læſum: Freewill by the ſinne of the firſt man is weakened and wounded. Can.25. Per peccatum primi hominis ita inclinatum & attenuatum fuit liberum arbitrium: Freewil is ſo attenuate and degenerate by the ſinne of the firſt man, that no man can loue God, or beleeue in God, as he ought, vnleſſe grace preuent him. S. *Ambroſe in Luc.*15. Prodigus viuendo luxurioſe conſumpſit omnia ornamenta naturæ: The prodigall child by liuing riotouſly hath conſumed all the ornaments of nature. Peter Lombard. rehearſeth this ſentence out of Auguſtine, and giueth conſent to it: Libero arbitrio malè vtens homo, & ſe perdidit & ipſum: Man vſing euill freewill, hath loſt both it and himſelfe: lib.2. diſt.25. liter. H. Wherefore it is vntrue, that man after his fall may haue freewill as well as before.

Ser.5. de orat. Domini. Gregorie Nyſſene ſaith, that man by his fall, libertatem mutauit cum noxia ſeruitute peccati, hath changed his libertie with the noxious ſeruitude of ſinne. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that man after his fall by ſinne, ſicut nauis fracto gubernaculo, &c. is as a ſhip the rudder being broken, which is caried whether the tempeſt will, there is not then the like reaſon of the freedome of mans will before and after his fall.

Harm.ſſ.3. a.62. Latter confeſ. of Heluetia. c.9. Theſe things are ſo altred in man, that they are not able to doe that now, which they would before his fall: for his vnderſtanding is darkened, and his will, which was free before, is now become a ſeruile will, for it ſerueth ſinne, &c.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE POWER OF the mind naturally in morall duties.

First, of the vnderſtanding and knowledge, which man hath by nature of theſe things: ſecondly, of the power of his will.

THE FIRST POINT, WHETHER MAN NATVrally doth vnderſtand what is true or falſe, good, or euill, in morall duties.

The Papiſts.

THe Ieſuite affirmeth, that a man by his naturall ſtrength may know, vnderſtand and iudge, aliquod verum morale, what is true, at ſometimes, in morall duties, and to be followed, and that not onely generally, but in particular, as when and how to doe iuſtly, how to giue almes: And further hee addeth, Actio voluntatis ei vero conformis, erit actio virtutis: That if the will doe follow the vnderſtanding, in this naturall iudgement of the truth, it will bring forth a vertuous action. This then is his opinion, that naturally the mind of man vnderſtandeth, which are true vertuous actions. lib. 5. de grat. c. 4. 42. Error.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, When they knew God, they did not glorifie him as God: Ergo, the Gentiles had the knowledge of God naturally by the creatures, and might thereby haue been preſerued from idolatrie, Bellarm. ibid. Rom. 1. 21.

Anſw. Firſt, a knowledge of the Creator by the creatures, we grant, but an obſcure, imperfect, a generall and confuſed knowledge onely, ſeruing to make men inexcuſable, as the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ. 20. but not able to bring them to the right worſhip of God, as the Ieſuite ſuppoſeth: for the Goſpell onely, as S. Paul defineth, is the power of God to ſaluation: that is, the onely effectuall meanes to bring vs to know God vnto ſaluation. This naturall knowledge of God, though the Gentiles had conſented to it, could neuer of it ſelfe haue brought forth a vertuous act. Rom. 1. 16.

2 Bellarmine confeſſeth himſelfe, that a man cannot beleeue in God, ſine ſpeciali gratiæ auxilio, without ſpeciall aſſiſtance of grace: lib. 6. cap. 1. nor yet ſo much as thinke, much leſſe doe of himſelfe any thing, quod ad pietatem pertinet, which belongeth to godlineſſe, cap. 3. lib. 5. reſponſ. ad arg. 1. but ſo to know God, as thereby to bee able to abſtaine from Idolatrie, belongeth to godlineſſe, and is a fruit iſſuing from beleefe: therefore it is not in mans power: And yet the contrarie is here affirmed by the Ieſuite, Potuiſſe Gentiles per cognitionem vnius Dei ex creaturis acceptam abſtinere à cultu Idolorum: That the Gentiles by the naturall knowledge of God in the creatures, might haue abſtained from the worſhip of Images. Bellarmine againſt himſelfe.

Arg. 2. The Gentiles which haue not the law, doe by nature the things contained in the law, they hauing not the law, are a law to themſelues, which ſhew the effect of the law written in their hearts, their conſcience alſo bearing witneſſe, &c. Here the Apoſtle ſheweth, that the Gentiles, hauing not the law written, yet by the natural light of reaſon did know ſome things, which appertained to honeſt liuing, Bellarm. ibid. Rom. 2. 14. 15.

Anſw. Firſt, we denie not, as we haue alreadie declared, but that the Gentiles naturally had ſome knowledge of right, and wrong, of good and euill, and did naturally ſuch things: but this knowledge and practiſe of theirs was farre from bringing forth any vertuous action, or good acceptable worke (which is the thing the Ieſuite ſhould haue prooued) becauſe they had no faith, without the which it is not poſſible to doe any acceptable worke. Heb. 11. 6.

Secondly, this place as well ſheweth, that the Gentiles had power naturally as well to doe, as to know ſuch things: but it is impoſſible to performe the works of the law naturally, as Bellarmine himſelfe ſheweth: Non poſſe ſolis naturæ viribus adimpleri præcepta moralia omnia, ſecundum ſubſtantiam operis: That by the power onely of nature, the morall precepts cannot bee kept, as touching the ſubſtantiall, that is, the externall worke, cap. 5. Ergo, neither the knowledge of morall precepts is obtained onely by the inſtinct of nature.

The Proteſtants.

A Light of nature wee acknowledge, whereby naturally men, after a darke and obſcure manner, may vnderſtand, in morall actions, ſome reſemblance and likelihood of equitie and truth: And the Gentiles directed by theſe naturall principles, were able to prouide by their lawes againſt adulterie, murther, theft, and ſuch notorious diſhoneſtie of life: But that there is any ſuch naturall diſtinct or effectuall power or knowledge in man, whereby he is able to bring foorth any good or vertuous act, we hold it as a great vntruth.

Argum. 1 The Apoſtle ſaith, We are not ſufficient of our ſelues to thinke any thing, but our ſufficiency is of God. Therefore it is not in mans power naturally to thinke or conceiue that which is good. 2. Cor. 3. 5.

Anſw. Saint Paul ſpeaketh of ſuch thoughts as concerne godlineſſe, and appertaine to life eternall, which we grant, are not in mans power: not of morall duties, Bellarm. cap. 3.

Contra. 1. Saint Paul vnderſtandeth all good thoughts whatſoeuer are in man, that they are of God; for elſewhere he ſaith, that euery thought muſt be brought into captiuitie to the obedience of Chriſt, But if man had any good thought of himſelfe, what neede it be ſubdued to the obedience of Chriſt? In ſaying (euery thought) hee ſheweth, that without Chriſt, all our thoughts and motions are rebellious. 2. Cor. 10. 5.

2 As though morall duties doe not appertaine alſo to godlineſſe of life: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Godlineſſe is great gaine, if a man be content, &c. Contentment of mind, and auoiding of couetouſneſſe, 2. Tim. 6. 6.

which the Apoſtle treateth of here, is a morall vertue, yet Saint Paul calleth it godlineſſe.

James 1.17. Galath.5.22. 3 What if we grant, that godly workes, and morall duties are two diſtinct things: yet they are both of God: for euery good giuing is from aboue. And Paul among the fruites of the ſpirit, reckoneth vp goodneſſe as well as faith: that is, the goodneſſe and honeſtie of life, in thought, will or deed, is as well wrought in vs by the ſpirit, as faith in religion.

Gen.6.5. *Argum.*2 The imaginations of the thoughts of mens hearts, are only euill continually: Ergo, man hath by nature no good thoughts.

Anſw. The thoughts of mens hearts are ſaid to be euill, becauſe vt plurimum ſunt malæ, they are for the moſt part euill, *Bellar. cap.*3.

*Contra.*1 If it had been written in generall termes thus; the thoughts of mans heart are euill, the Ieſuites anſwere would haue ſeemed more probable; but ſeeing the Scripture ſaith, they are onely euill, and that continually, they cannot be partly good and partly euill, or good at one time, and euill at another, but wholly and onely euill, and alwaies. Wherefore if this ſcripture bee true, then is his anſwere falſe, and impertinent to this place.

Eccleſ.7.31. 2 We haue other teſtimonies of Scripture, that doe witneſſe with this text, which wee haue alleaged: God hath made man righteous, but they haue ſought many inuentions. All righteouſneſſe then is of God, the inuentions which man followeth are vaine. The Goſpell ſaith, The light ſhineth in John 1.5. darkeneſſe, and the darkeneſſe comprehended it not. The truth is the light, the minde of man by nature is darkeneſſe: if the minde naturallie vnderſtandeth the truth, then ſhould darkeneſſe comprehend the light.

Pſalm.14.2. Laſtly, the Pſalme ſaith, There is none, that would vnderſtand and ſeeke God.: Ergo, man hath no vnderſtanding of good things by nature.

Auguſtine ſaith: Non haberet homo ſapientiam, intellectum, niſi acceperit ſpiritum ſapientiæ & intellectus: No man can haue wiſedome, vnderſtanding, vnleſſe hee haue receiued the ſpirit of wiſdome, and vnderſtanding, *Epiſt.*105. Therefore true and right vnderſtanding is not ingraft by nature, but wrought by grace.

S. *Ambroſe, ſerm.*10.*in Pſal.*119. vpon theſe words, Giue me vnderſtanding, that I may learne thy commandements: Si Propheta intellectum ſibi dari poſtulat, quis tam arrogans, qui profiteatur in ſua poteſtate eſſe intelligentiam, &c. If the Prophet deſire vnderſtanding to be giuen him, who is ſo arrogant, as to profeſſe that intelligence or vnderſtanding is in his owne power?

In 6.ad Roman.ſerm.11. And yet further, 1. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Like as a drunken man knoweth not the inconuenience of wine: ſo he that is giuen ouer vnto ſin, Hoc ipſum ignorat, quod morbidus: as one that is beſotted with drunkennes, knoweth not that he is diſeaſed, &c. how then can man, ſinfull by nature, iudge of that which is good.

2 Concil. Mileuitan. c.4. Domini donum eſt, & ſcire quid facere debeamus, & diligere vt faciamus: It is the gift of God, both to know what we ſhould do, and to loue it, that we may doe it.

Harm.ſect.3. pag.62. 3 Latter confeſ. of Heluetia. c.4. Now it is euident, that the mind and vnderſtanding is the guide of the will, and ſeeing the guide is blind, it is eaſie to be ſeene, how farre the will can reach.

4 Many of the Schoolemen are of this iudgement, that no morall truth can be knowne of humane vnderſtanding now in the ſtate of nature corrupted, without Gods ſpeciall helpe: *ſic Gregor. Ariminenſ. in 2. ſen. diſt.*26.*qu.*1.*art.*1.*concluſ.*2. *Capreol. in 2. diſtinct.*28.*qu. vnic. artic.*3. *Gaſpar Caſſalinus, lib.*1.*de quadripar. iuſtitia, c.*32. So that for this truth we want not euidence from our aduerſaries themſelues.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE POWER OF FREE will in morall duties, two Queſtions.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER A MAN without faith and ſpeciall helpe from God may performe any thing morally good, if no tentation aſſault him.

The Papiſts.

43.Error. BEllarmine* doubteth not ſo to affirme, that a man naturally without faith, both with ſpeciall aſſiſtance from God, and without it, can performe ſome morall good worke, if no tentation let: for a man by nature alone without Gods helpe cannot reſiſt tentation. *c.*9.

1. Exod 1.21. *Argum.*1. God doth reward morall workes done without faith; as the Ægyptian Midwiues are rewarded for ſauing the male children of the Hebrewes, 2. Ezech.29.20. Nabuchadnezzar is recompenſed for his ſeruice done vnto God, in the beſieging and ouerthrow of Tyrus, I haue giuen him the land of Egypt for his labour, becauſe he wrought for me. 3. Dan.4.24. Redeeme thy ſinnes by mercie to the poore: Heere Dan.4.24. the almes of an Infidell doth auert the temporall puniſhment: Ergo, it was a good worke. The Gentiles 3. Rom.2.14. hauing not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the law: the Gentiles by the light of nature did the workes of the law: Ergo, without faith, ſome morall workes of the law may be performed, *Bellar. lib.*5.*de grat. c.*9.

Anſw. Firſt, 1. They were not the Ægyptian Midwiues, but the Midwiues of the Hebrew women, 1.
*verſe.*15. Bellarmine therefore is herein deceiued. 2. This worke of theirs was not without faith, verſe 21. They feared God: wherefore it is impertinently alleaged, for the probation of morall good Exod.1.21.
workes without faith.

Secondly, 1. It may well be, that Nebuchadnezzar went againſt Tyrus, by the ſecret inſtinct of 2.
God, as Necho King of Egypt, (whom Ioſias vnaduiſedly went againſt) going vp againſt Carchamis, 2.Chron.35.21 was commanded of God to make haſte. Then this example is vnfitly alleaged for morall works done by nature. 2. It followeth not, that becauſe he wrought for God, that it was a good ſeruice: ſo Satan did execute Gods will vpon Iob, and the Iewes in putting Chriſt to death, yet neither I truſt did well. Math.5.45.
3. Neither doth the temporall reward proue it to be a good worke: ſeeing that the wicked are temporally recompenſed without deſert, with raine and Sunſhine; and Ahab by his temporary and worldly 1.King.21.19.
repentance deferred Gods wrath: but it was no good worke, being but a worldly ſorrow, riſing rather from the feare of Gods iudgements vpon his houſe, then from the deteſtation of ſinne: and worldly ſorrow (ſaith the Apoſtle) cauſeth death, that is, helpeth not to ſaluation, but tendeth rather vnto 2.Cor.7.10.
periſhing. 4. Such a ſeruice, ſuch a reward; a bloodie ſeruice in ſacking of Tyre, is rewarded with a bloodie victorie in ouercomming Ægypt. 5. Auguſtine ſaith, Non officijs ſed finibus virtutes à vitijs diſcernendæ ſunt — ſi enim non propter hoc facit homo bonum, &c. Vertue is to be diſcerned from vice, not by the officious act, but by the vertuous end: if then a man doth good not for that end he ſhould, he ſinneth, cont. Iulian. 4. 3. Therefore vnleſſe it can be prooued, that Nebuchadnezzar ſacked Tyrus for obedience to Gods will, not for reuenge of his owne malice, or of an ambitious deſire to enlarge his kingdome, it was no good worke.

Thirdly, 1. the text is to be read, breake off, not redeeme, for ſo is the Hebrew word פרק parach taken, 3.
where Iſaack ſaith to Eſau, Thou ſhalt breake his yoke from thy necke. 2. We confeſſe, that in Geneſ.27.40.
the Infidels, their almes, and ſuch like good works in ſhew, were much better then their manifeſt ſins, and that to breake off ſuch ſinnes, by ſuch works, it was commendable; yet it followeth not, that they were good. 3. Theſe almes deeds, in that Daniel by the ſpirit of God gaue this counſell, ſhould alſo haue proceeded, not from his naturall inclination, but from the inſtinct of the ſpirit: as Auguſtine well ſaith, Colligitur ipſa bona opera, quæ faciunt infideles, non ipſorum eſſe, ſed illius, qui bene vtitur malis; ipſorum eſſe peccata, quibus bona male faciunt: It is gathered, that good workes, which Infidels do, are not theirs, but his, which well vſeth that, which is euill, but the ſinne is theirs, whereby they doe good things euill, cont. Iulian. lib. 4. cap. 3. 4. Hee ſaith againe, Reperitur & miſericordia mala, — propter quam meruit Saul à Domino miſericorde damnari: There is found mercie or almes not alwaies good, for the which Saul deſerued of the mercifull Lord to be damned, ibid. c. 4. 5. The auerting of a temporall puniſhment, doth not proue it ſimplie to be good: as Auguſtine ſaith, Cui non datur ſemper viuere, quid prodeſt bene viuere? What doth it profit a man to liue well, if he liue not euer? *in Iohan.*45.
Wherefore theſe temporall workes profited not Infidels, and conſequently were not good, becauſe they auailed not to euerlaſting life.

Fourthly, 1. Some of the Fathers expound that place of the Apoſtle, of ſuch of the Gentiles as were conuerted to the faith: As Origen, Si videris Gentes ad Ieſum venire & credere ei, &c. If thou ſeeſt 4.
the Gentiles come vnto Chriſt and beleeue in him, and fulfill the worke of the law, &c. doubt not to ſay that Ieſus hath written the law in theſe ſtones, hom.9. in Ioſua. So alſo Auguſtine anſwereth the Pelagians; they are ſaid to doe the things of the law, Quia ex Gentibus venerunt ad Euangelium: Becauſe they came from among the Gentiles to the Goſpell, cont. Iulian. 4. 3. But I doe not greatly vrge this interpretation. 2. We ſay, that they among the Gentiles, that followed the light of nature, wanted not ſome ſpeciall helpe, though they had not faith, which helpe others among them had not: So
S. Ambroſe ſaith, Quod illuminante gratia inuenerunt, obcæcante ſuperbia perdiderunt: That which they found by illuminating grace, they loſt by blind pride, de vocat. Gent. lib. 2. c. 2. The better ſort then among them, had a certaine meaſure of illumination, which all had not, which they by the pride of their hearts corrupted. 3. But our more full anſwere is this, that it followeth not, becauſe the Gentiles did by nature ſome things agreeable to the law, as appertaining to iuſtice, temperance, mercie, therefore their workes were good: they did things that had a ſhew of goodneſſe, but not with a good minde: they were not then good works, no more then the almes, faſting, prayer of the Phariſees, were good workes; which were not done of conſcience, but for the praiſe of men: and as Auguſtine ſaith, Tolerabilius in die iudicij punientur, &c. They ſhall be more eaſily puniſhed in the day of iudgement, becauſe naturally, they did the things of the law: cont. Iulian. lib. 4. c. 3. And this is that the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 2. 15. Their thoughts accuſing one another or excuſing: not excuſing from the whole puniſhment, Rom.2.15.
but in making their puniſhment leſſe or more eaſie, as Auguſtine expoundeth.

The Proteſtants.

That a man without faith and grace, by the inſtinct of nature onely, cannot doe any thing that is good before God, whether he be aſſaulted by any ſpeciall temptation or not: it is thus euident out of Scripture.

Argum. 1. Prou. 15. 8. The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord. 2. The 1.
2.

3. imaginations of the thoughts of mans heart are onely euill continually. 3. Pſalm.13.3. All are gone out of the way, there is none that doth good, no not one.

4. 4. Ierem.17.9. The heart is wicked and deceitfull aboue all things.

5. 5 Matth.7.18. A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit: but euery man by nature is a corrupt tree. Likewiſe Luke 6.45.

6. 6 Iohn 3.6. That which is borne of the fleſh is fleſh.

7. 7 Iohn 15.5. Without me yee can doe nothing.

8. 8 Rom.14.23. Whatſoeuer is not of faith, is ſinne.

9. 9 Heb.11.6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God.

10. 10 Tit.1.15. To the vnbeleeuing nothing is pure. 1.Iohn 2.16. All that is in the world, is the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eies, the pride of life. All theſe places doe ſtrongly conclude, that man by nature without faith, is apt to doe nothing but euill: I will examine Bellarmines anſwere to theſe Scriptures.

1. 1 Bellarm. The argument followeth not, The ſacrifices of the wicked are an abomination: Ergo, their morall workes: For there is great difference betweene the one and the other. Sacrifices muſt be offered with a pure conſcience, and to this end, to pleaſe God; but to morall workes neither is required: not the puritie of conſcience; neither in their almes is there any other end, but to helpe the needie: Bellarm.c.10.reſp.ad loc.1.

*Contra.*1. Betweene ſacrifices and almes-deeds, there is no difference in this behalfe, for the Apoſtle calleth diſtribution to the poore a Sacrifice. 2. He ſaith, To doe good and diſtribute forget not, for with ſuch ſacrifices God is pleaſed: wherefore ſuch almes-deedes as God is not pleaſed with, as was the almes of the Phariſees, are no good workes: for, if they doe good, they are acceptable to God. 3. Neither can the worke be good, where the conſcience is defiled: as S. Paul ſheweth, Tit.1.15. that nothing is pure to vnbeleeuers, becauſe their conſcience is defiled. Heb.13.16. Tit.1.15.

2. 2. Bellarm. The meaning of the place is, that the moſt part of their thoughts were euill, not all: for it followeth, verſ.9. that Noe was a iuſt and vpright man, reſp.ad loc.2.

*Contra.*1. The text is, all the imaginations of mans heart are euill; how then is hee not aſhamed to contradict Scripture, and ſay, not all. 2. This place may be expounded by that, Pſalm.14.3. There is none that doth good, no not one: Here I truſt there is no exception of any, as they are by nature. 3. Noe was iuſt, but not by nature, verſ.8. Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord: he was by nature the ſame that others, but changed by grace. 4. So notwithſtanding this, all the imaginations of mans heart are euill by nature, as it is ſo expounded, *c.*8.21. Mans thoughts are euill from his youth. Pſalm.14.3. Geneſ.8.21.

3. 3. Bellarm. This place concludeth not, that there is no man that doth any good morall worke; but none, that is iuſt: for one or two good workes make not a iuſt man, that hath many ſinnes beſide, reſponſ.ad loc.3.

*Contra.*1. The words are very direct, there is none that doth good, and with a repetition, no not one: doth he not now apertely contradict Scripture, in ſaying; Yes, ſome doe good by nature? 2. If they be not iuſt nor righteous, how can they bring forth any righteous or good worke; for an euill or corrupt tree cannot ſend forth any good fruit. 3. S. Paul is the beſt expounder of this place, they are become altogether vnprofitable, ἠχρειώθησαν. if they bee wholly or altogether vnprofitable, how can they bring forth any good or profitable worke? Matth.7,18. Rom.3.12.

4. 4. Bellar. Mans heart is ſaid to be euil or wicked, not becauſe it can doe no good morall worke, but for that it is the fountaine and originall of euill: as Chriſt ſaith; Out of the heart come euill thoughts, murders, &c. reſponſ.ad argum.6. Matth.15.19.

*Contra.*1. If the heart be the fountaine of euill, it can bring forth no good: Who can bring a cleane thing out of filthineſſe, no not one. The ſame fountaine cannot bring forth bitter water and ſweete: but if mans heart being the fountaine of euill, as hee confeſſeth, ſhould worke any good thing, the ſame fountaine, contrarie to the Apoſtle, ſhould ſend out bitter and ſweet water. 2. In the ſame place our Sauiour ſaith, theſe are the things which defile a man: if then an euill heart defile a man, how can that be cleane which commeth from him? Our Sauior ſaith againe, Cleanſe firſt the inſide of the cup, that the out ſide may be cleane. The inſide is the heart, the outſide are the workes, which cannot bee cleane, as long as the hart is vncleane; and the heart is not cleanſed or purified, but by faith. Iob 14.4. Iames 3.12. Matth.23.26. Acts 15.9.

5. 5. *Bellar.*1. Chriſts meaning is, not that an euill tree can bring forth no good fruit at all, but for the moſt part and ordinarily it bringeth forth euill fruit. 2. The euill tree is the euilneſſe of nature, the good tree is the goodneſſe of nature: When a naturall man doth good, it is not of the concupiſcence or corruption of nature, which is the euill tree, but ex bono natura, of the goodneſſe of nature, which is the good tree. 3. An euill tree can bring forth no good fruit, that is, an euill man can doe no good worke meritorious of life and ſaluation, Bellar.reſp.ad arg.7.

Contra. Firſt, Chriſts meaning is that an euill tree, that is an euill man, can bring forth no good fruit at all: Firſt, Make the tree good, and his fruit good: the tree then muſt firſt bee made good, before the fruit can be good. Secondly, How can ye ſpeake good things (ſaith Chriſt) when ye are euill? If an euill man can ſpeake any good things, our Sauiour had not reaſoned well. Thirdlie, Neither of thornes gather men figges, nor of buſhes grapes. Like as then a thorne doth not ordinarilie, but not at all bring forth figs, nor a buſh grapes; ſo an euill heart cannot mooue any thing that is good. Mat.12.33.39. Luke 6.44.

good. Fourthly, thus Auguſtine expoundeth: When Iulian the Pelagian, had propounded this example, whether it be ſinne in an Infidell to clothe the naked? Auguſtine anſwereth thus: Vtrum hoc male facit, vel bene? &c. Whether doth he this well, or euill? If you ſay euill, you cannot denie, but he ſinneth: if well, then an euill tree bringeth forth good fruit: cont. Iulian. 4.3. In Auguſtines iudgement then an euill tree cannot bring forth any good fruit at all.

Secondly, 1. It is a moſt groſſe anſwere and contrarie to Scripture, that a mans will or heart by nature is both a good and euill tree: for the good tree is expounded to be the good treaſure of the hart. And Saint Paul ſaith, that this good treaſure, which we carry in earthen veſſels, is the light of the knowledge of God in Chriſt. Say if you dare alſo that this treaſure of knowledge is in man by nature. 2. That the good tree is not by nature, but planted by grace, the Scripture euery where teſtifieth. Euery plant, which God hath not planted, ſhall be rooted out. God pulleth not vp good trees, but he pulleth vp whatſoeuer is not planted by grace: for that is Gods planting: Ergo, the plant of nature is not a good plant. You are cleane, that is, good branches by the word, Ergo, not by nature: verſ. 16. I haue ordained, that ye goe and bring forth fruit: Ergo, they are not ſo ordained by nature.

Matth. 12.35. 2. Cor. 4.6. Matth. 15.13. Iohn. 15.3.

Thirdly, no good worke is meritorious of life and ſaluation, yet euery good worke is rewarded euerlaſtingly. He that giueth a cup of cold water in the name of a diſciple, ſhall not loſe his reward. I haue ordained, that you goe and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit remaine. The fruit then that remaineth not, and ſhall not be rewarded of Chriſt, is no good fruit.

Matth. 10.42. Iohn 15.16.

6 Bellarmine: a naturall man, doth not alwaies in euery worke obey the fleſh, but hee may doe ſomething of his naturall propenſion to good, not of his vitious concupiſcence: reſp. ad arg. 8. 6.

Contra. Firſt, whatſoeuer is in man, is either of the fleſh, or of the ſpirit, the carnall part or regenerate: I aske then, whether a naturall man can worke by the ſpirit? I thinke they are not ſo abſurd: for then, if a man be by nature borne of the ſpirit, regeneration or ſecond birth were not neceſſarie, contrarie to our Sauiour; Except a man be borne againe, &c. Then it followeth, that a naturall man working by the fleſh, doth nothing but that which is carnall and euill: for the fleſh luſteth againſt the ſpirit, the ſpirit againſt the fleſh, and theſe are contrarie one to the other, but good is not contrarie to good: therefore of the fleſh there is nothing good. 2. Saint Paul ſaith, that in the fleſh there dwelleth nothing that is good: and euery man doth either ſow to his fleſh, or ſow to the ſpirit: but he that ſoweth to the fleſh, ſhal of the fleſh reape corruption: a natural man cannot ſow to the ſpirit; therfore ſowing onely to the fleſh, he reapeth nothing but corruption.

Iohn 3.3. Galath. 5.17. Rom. 7.18. Galath. 6.8.

7 Bellar. Without Chriſt we can do no good worke tending to ſaluation; but morall good works we can, reſponſ. ad loc. 9. 7.

Contra. This anſwere S. Paul quite ouerthroweth, in the place euen now alleaged, He that ſoweth to the fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reape corruption; he that ſoweth to the ſpirit, ſhall of the ſpirit reape life euerlaſting. The works then of nature, if they be of the ſpirit, are tending to euerlaſting life; if of the fleſh, they are tending to corruption: but a good worke is not a corrupt worke, or tending to corruption; therefore the workes of the fleſh, are no good workes: neither are there any good fruits, which remaine not vnto life.

Galath. 6.8. Iohn 15.16.

8 Bellarm. The Apoſtle by faith, vnderſtandeth not here that faith, whereby we beleeue in Chriſt, but a perſwaſion of the conſcience, whereby wee are perſwaded a thing to bee lawfull, reſp. ad argum. 10. 8.

Contra. Auguſtine anſwereth; for after this manner the Pelagians obiected, Si hoc de cibis intelligendum putes, &c. If you thinke this is to be vnderſtood of meates, &c. yet the Apoſtle by this generall ſentence, would prooue this ſpeciall ſinne concerning meates, as it is elſewhere written, without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: cont. Iulian. 4.3.

Heb. 11.6.

9. Bellarm. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God to eternall ſaluation; but yet the goodneſſe of mans nature, and the workes proceeding from it, doe alſo pleaſe God, reſponſ. ad argument. 15. 9.

Contra. 1. He is contrarie to himſelfe, for he granted before, reſponſ. ad 1 argum. that the ſacrifice and other morall works of a naturall man, Deo non placeant, doe not pleaſe God, and yet here he ſaith; God by them may be pleaſed. 2. That God is not any way pleaſed with vs, without Chriſt, the Scripture is euident, We ſhall be ſaued from wrath by him: We were by nature the children of wrath: Can the children of wrath pleaſe God? 3. If he ſpeake of the naturall goodneſſe of the creature, as it is created of God, I anſwere with Auguſtine, that if in this ſenſe man is good: ſo the diuell alſo, as he is an Angell is good, and conſequently doth pleaſe God.

Rom. 5.9. Epheſ. 2.3.

10 Bellarm. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of meates, which are vncleane to thoſe that haue an vncleane conſcience, and are not well perſwaded of them. 2. Or if it bee taken generally, then this is the ſenſe, that all the workes of Infidels are vncleane, namely, ſuch which proceede from their infidelitie. 3. S. Iohn ſpeaketh of man, not as hee is Gods creature, but as hee is a ſinner and louer of the world; for in man as he is Gods creature, there be may good things, as his will, vnderſtanding, reſponſ. ad loc. 14.16. 10.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all the workes of Infidels. They are abominable, diſobedient, to euerie good worke reprobate. 2. All the workes of Infidels muſt needes proceed from their infidelitie, ſeeing their minds and conſciences are defiled, which is the reaſon the Apoſtle giueth, that nothing is pure vnto the impure. 3. We ſpeake not of the ſubſtance of nature and naturall faculties, which are good as created of God, not onely in men, but in diuels; therefore this anſwere is not to the purpoſe: the Apoſtles argument is very firme and ſtrong: That euery man is either a louer of the world, or a louer of God; a naturall man cannot loue God, which is the fruit of the ſpirit, and hee that loueth the world, loueth that which is in it, and nothing elſe, as the concupiſcence of the eye, of the fleſh, the pride of life: Ergo, a naturall man neither loueth, nor followeth any thing elſe. Thus notwithſtanding all theſe popiſh gloſſes, and hereticall ſhiftes, the truth confirmed by Scripture remaineth, that a man by nature hath no inclination to good, neither without faith can performe any thing acceptable to God.

Tit. 1.16.

Galath. 5. 22.

Auguſtines iudgement, I haue diſperſedly ſhewed in theſe ſeuerall anſweres: S. Ambroſe thus teſtifieth vpon theſe words. Faith which is by him, hath giuen this man, ὁλοκληρίαν, integram ſanitatem, perfit health: Totum ergo, ſiue palam per cooperatorem gratiæ, ſiue occultè per ſubminiſtrationem ſpiritus, &c. The whole therefore, whether outwardly by the fellow-worker of grace, or ſecretly by the miniſtration of the ſpirit, he beginneth, encreaſeth, finiſheth, whoſe husbandrie and building wee are, de vocat. Gent. lib. 1. c. 8. If Chriſt then worke all in vs by faith, then nature is able to worke no good thing at all.

Act 3. 16.

Hierom. dialog. 3. aduerſ. Pelagian. vpon theſe wordes, I am the vine: Like as the branches doe wither, being cut off from the roote: Ita omnis fortitudo marceſcit, ſi à dei auxilio deſeratur: So all mans ſtrength withereth and periſheth, if it be forſaken of Gods helpe: Ergo, nature (without Gods helpe) can doe nothing.

Super illa verba Pſal. 142. Enter not into iudgement. In Ioann. tractat. 83.

And further, 1. Chryſoſtome vpon theſe words, He that reioyceth, let him reioyce in the Lord, ſaith: Ergo de meritis ſuis nihil aſſignare ſibi debet, niſi peccata, quæ ſunt propria noſtra, &c. cæterum virtutes dona ſunt Dei, &c. Therefore man muſt aſſigne nothing to himſelfe of his merites, but only ſinnes, which are his owne, but vertues are the gift of God.

2 Auguſtine ſaith: quod eſt boni operis ante fidem, &c. What good worke can there be before faith, ſeeing the Apoſtle ſaith, Whatſoeuer is not of faith is ſinne, &c.

Harm. ſſ. 4. p. 65.

3 Former confeſ. of Heluetia, artic. 9. We find by experience, that of our owne accord we may doe euil, but we can neither embrace nor follow any good thing, except being illuminated by the grace of Chriſt, we be ſtirred vp, and effectually moued thereunto, &c.

4 Their owne Canons thus teſtifie: Cauſ. 1. qu. 1. c. 26. Vbi Chriſtus non eſt fundamentum, nullum boni operis eſt ſuperædificium: Where Chriſt is not the foundation, there is no building of any good worke.

Pet. Lombard agreeth: Quæ ſine fide fiunt, bona non ſunt, quia omne bonum placet Deo: Things done without faith are not good, becauſe euery good thing pleaſeth God: but without faith God is not pleaſed, lib. 2. diſt. 41. liter. A.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE POWER of freewill in morall duties.

The Papiſts.

44. Hæreſ.

MAn, euen as it now ſtandeth with him in the ſtate of corruption, hath freewill in morall duties, to chuſe the good, and refuſe the euill, that is, to embrace vertue, and eſchue vice, Bellarm. lib. 5. cap. 14. We will firſt examine their arguments, whereby they vrge certaine abſurdities and impoſſibilities, which would follow, as they thinke, if there ſhould be no freewill, and then wee will anſwere their allegations out of Scripture.

Argum. 1. Sinne is either neceſſarie or voluntarie: if the firſt, it cannot be auoided, and ſo conſequently is no ſinne: if the ſecond, it may be auoided: Ergo, man hath freewill, he may auoide ſinne if he will, Bellarm. cap. 14.

Anſw. This was the very ſame obiection, which the Pelagians, and freewill-men vrged Auguſtine withall many yeeres agoe: Si peccata caueri non poſſunt, peccata non ſunt: If ſinnes cannot bee auoided, they are no ſinnes. And againe, Iniuſtè iudicarentur homines, ſi ea non faciunt, quæ iubentur impoſſibilia: Men ſhould bee vniuſtly condemned, if they doe not theſe things which are commanded being impoſſible. To this obiection, we neede no better anſwere, then Auguſtine himſelfe maketh.

1 Non reſpicis poſſibile & facile præceptum fuiſſe datum in paradiſo, quo contempto omnes ex vno homine — peccatum habere: You conſider not that both an eaſie and poſſible commandement, was giuen in paradiſe, by the contempt and violating whereof, all by one man — are become ſinners: cont. Iulian. 3. 18. And again he ſaith, Libertas non periſſet ſi bona permanſiſſet voluntas, ſed quia peccauit voluntas; ſequuta eſt peccantem, peccatum habendi neceſſitas: The libertie (of the will) had not periſhed, if the wil had remained good, but becauſe he ſinned willingly, there followed as a reward of his ſin, a neceſſity of ſinning, cont. Celeſtiũ de perf. iuſtit. reſp. ad rat. 10. Auguſtine therfore teacheth vs to deny this conſequence: Sin is neceſſarie: Ergo, it is no ſinne. Becauſe that this neceſſitie of ſin is not by creation, but commeth by the corruption of nature, and proceedeth frō Adams voluntarie tranſgreſſion.

2 Poteſt caueri peccatum, poteſt reſiſti, ſed opitulante illo, qui non poteſt falli: Sinne may be reſiſted, it may be auoyded, but by his helpe and aſſiſtance, who cannot bee deceiued. Duobus modis cauetur in corpore morbi malum, vt non accidat, & ſi acciderit, cito ſanetur: ſic vt non accidat caueamus dicendo, ne nos inferas in tentationem; vt cito ſanetur caueamus dicendo, dimitte nobis: Two waies we take heede of the bodily diſeaſes, that neither we fall into them; and if we doe, eſt-ſoone to be healed: ſo that wee fall not into ſinne, we take heede in ſaying, leade vs not into temptation; that we may be healed from our ſinne, we take heed in ſaying, forgiue vs our ſinnes, &c. *de natur. & grat. cap.*67. Thus alſo we learne out of Auguſtine to denie this other conſequent, ſinne may be auoided: Ergo, we haue free will: for ſinne is ſhunned by grace working in vs, not by our owne power.

3 A third conſequent alſo in this argument faileth: Sinne is voluntarie, therefore it is not neceſſary; ſay they, it may be auoided. It followeth not: for our will is free, not à neceſſitate, from neceſſitie, but à coactione, from conſtraint or compulſion: Men ſinne voluntarily, that is, willingly of their owne accord, not ſo voluntarily as that they may chuſe whether they will ſinne or no.

4 The diuels and damned ſpirits cannot but doe euill, and wickedly, it is therefore in them of neceſſitie, yet they doe verily and truly ſinne: It is then no good conſequent, if men doe euill of neceſſitie, they in ſo doing ſinne not, becauſe they can no otherwiſe chuſe. To this Bellarmine anſwereth, that it is true in generall, that the diuels doe euill neceſſarily; it is falſe in particular, becauſe all the euill which they doe, they doe not of neceſſitie: for it is in their power not to doe many things which they doe, *Bellarm. cap.*14.

Contra. Firſt, if it bee not true in particular, that diuels doe euill of neceſſitie, neither is it true of men, for they haue greater power to leaue ſome ſinne vndone, which they doe, then the euill ſpirits haue, becauſe their nature is not ſo corrupt, neither are they ſo voyde of all goodneſſe, as the diuels are. Secondly, if it be true but in generall, that the diuell ſinneth of neceſſitie, and yet is properly ſayd to ſinne, it is ſufficient for our purpoſe; for then that propoſition is not true in generall, Si neceſſarium eſt, non eſt peccatum, If it be neceſſarie, it is no ſinne: for it may be neceſſarie in generall ſaith the Ieſuite, and yet ſhall be ſinne.

Bellarmine further would make vs beleeue, that in defending of free will they are farre off notwithſtanding from the hereſie of the Pelagians: I pray you let vs ſee how?

The Pelagians affirmed, that a man by free will might, vitare omnia peccata, auoide and eſchew all ſinnes: but they hold, vitari poſſe ſingula peccata, non omnia, that not all ſinnes, but that euery ſinne may be auoided, Contra. I pray you, what great difference is there now betweene theſe two? The Pelagians ſay, that all ſinnes in all men by free will may be auoided: the Papiſts holde, that euery ſinne in euery man, may by free will be auoided? Euery man hath not all ſinnes, but euery man hath ſome ſinnes: which ſome notwithſtanding to him, that hath no more, are all his ſinnes. If euery man then may by his free will take heede of euery his owne ſinnes, then of all his ſinnes: for if there be any one ſinne, which it is not in his power to eſchew, by the Ieſuites rule, it is no ſinne. Therefore vntill the Ieſuite can better diſcharge himſelfe, we muſt needes tell him, that there is not one haires breadth betweene the Pelagian and popiſh hereſie about free will.

*Argum.*2. If there were not in man free will, there ſhould be no place left for reward or puniſhment: for if a man doe euill of neceſſitie, he deſerueth no puniſhment, and if he doe well vnwillingly, he is worthie no reward: *Bellarm. cap.*15.

Anſw. The very ſame obiection was moued to Auguſtine: Vbi neceſſitas, ibi non eſt corona: Where there is neceſſitie, there is no crowne, or reward. He anſwereth: 1. In recte faciendo ideo nullum eſt vinculum neceſſitatis, quia libertas eſt charitatis, quæ diffuſa eſt in cordibus noſtris per ſpiritum ſanctum: In well doing there is no bond of neceſſitie, becauſe freedome or libertie commeth of loue, which is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt: *Aug. de atur. & grat. cap.*65. that is, God of vnwilling maketh vs willing, and inſpireth a loue and deſire of good things into our hearts: and thus the reward is giuen to thoſe that worke willingly, yet of grace. 2. Alſo puniſhment is due vnto ſinne, though men by nature cannot chuſe but ſinne: the Apoſtle ſheweth the reaſon: By one man ſinne entred into the world, and death by ſinne: Rom.5.12. Adams ſinne was voluntarie, and therefore worthie of puniſhment: the ſame ſinne, with death, the reward thereof, Adam hath propagated to his poſteritie: ſo that we are both partakers of the ſinne, and the puniſhment.

*Argum.*3. If there bee no free will, then all men ſhould either be good or euill; and if they bee good, none ſhould be better then other; if they be euill, none ſhould be worſe then other: whereof then is this difference that ſome are good, ſome euill; and ſome are euill in the meane, ſome in the extreame, but from the libertie of mans will. Gods election is not the cauſe: for without free will election maketh none good? for then infants and mad men might be good by election without free will, *Bellarmin. c.*16.

Anſwere. Firſt, the difference and ſeparation of men, the Apoſtle ſheweth to proceede onely from God, and not from the will of man: Who ſeparateth thee, what haſt thou, which thou haſt not receiued? 1.Cor.4.7. Secondly, it is true that election requireth free will to make men good: but then will is firſt made free by grace; as Ambroſ. Virtus nolentium nulla eſt, ipſa gratia hoc agit, vt in eo, quem vocat primam ſibi famulam preparet voluntatem; Indeede vertue in thoſe that are vnwilling there is none, but grace firſt of all maketh the will an obedient ſeruant in them which are called : lib.2. de vocat.gent.c.9. Thirdly, and in that infants hauing no free will yet are ſaued by election, it ſheweth, that not free will maketh the difference, but election. Fourthly, the cauſe then why ſome are good, ſome euill, is, becauſe all haue not grace, the reaſon why ſome are better then others, is, that all haue not the ſame meaſure of grace, as Ambroſe excellently ſaith, Præter illam generalem gratiam parcius & occultius hominum corda pulſantem, excellentiore opere, largiore munere, potentiore virtute vocatio ſpecialis exeritur: Beſide that generall calling, more ſparingly beating vpon mens hearts, the ſpeciall calling ſheweth it ſelfe by a more excellent operation, a larger gift, a ſtronger power, lib.2, de vocat.gent.c.8. There is then a generall calling and a ſpeciall, a more excellent worke of the ſpirit, and a leſſe excellent, a larger gift, and a ſmaller : as is the difference of the grace that worketh, ſo is the difference in them vpon whom it worketh. Now let vs ſee what places of Scripture they obiect againſt vs.

Argum.1. The law ſaith, Thou ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vaine: Honour thy father and mother,&c. and many other precepts there are in the word of God, which were giuen in vaine, if man had not free will to chuſe or refuſe them, *Bellarm.cap.*18.

Gal.3.24.
De grat.& liber.arbit.c.6.

Anſw. Firſt, the precepts of the law are not giuen in vaine, though it lye not in mans power to keepe them : for the vſe and end of the law is as a Schoolemaſter to bring vs to Chriſt : So Auguſtine ſaith, Ad hoc lex præcepit iſta, vt cum in his implendis homo deficeret, non ſe extollat ſuperbia tumidus, ſed ad gratiam confugiat fatigatus : For this cauſe did the law command theſe things, that man ſeeing himſelfe to faile in the fulfilling thereof, ſhould haue no cauſe to ſwell in pride, but being wearied in himſelfe, to flye to grace for ſuccour : cont.Celeſt. de perfect.inſtit. Secondly, againe he ſaith, Homo gratia iuuatur, ne ſine cauſa voluntati eius iubeatur: Man is aſſiſted by grace, leaſt his will ſhould bee commanded in vaine. Man hath not free will of himſelfe, but is enabled by grace to doe that is commanded.

Iſay.1.19.
Matth.19.17.

Argum.2. The Scripture offereth diuers promiſes vnder certaine conditions : as, If ye conſent and obey, ye ſhall eate the good things of the land : If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandements. If it be in our power to perfome theſe conditions, then haue wee free will : if not, to what end are they propounded? *Bellarm.cap.*19.

Galath.3.10.

Anſw. Firſt, if theſe conditions be poſſible, then it is poſſible to keepe the commandements, which the Apoſtle denieth: for therefore is euery one that is of the workes of the law vnder the curſe, becauſe they cannot keepe it. Secondly, by this argument, a mans free will is ſufficient to performe theſe conditions without grace : for if man cannot performe them of himſelfe, the ſame queſtion remaineth, why they are propounded to him, that cannot keepe them. Thirdly, Auguſtine ſheweth why the law was giuen : Vt te ad faciendam legem vires de tuo non habere monſtraret, vt ſic inops — ad gratiam confugeres: To ſhew thee not to haue ſtrength of thy ſelfe to doe, that being poore thou ſhouldeſt flee vnto grace: *in Pſal.*118.*con.*27. Fourthly, againe, whereas the Pelagians obiected this very place vrged, Iſay.1.19. Saint Auguſtine maketh this anſwere : Quaſi ob aliud ſuperbis data iſta præcepta ſunt, — quam vt præcepta acciperet homo ſuperbè de virib. ſuis confidens, in quibus deficiens liberatorem requireret: Theſe precepts were for no other cauſe giuen to the proud, then that man failing in his owne ſtrength, wherein he truſted, ſhould ſeeke for an helper or deliuerer, cont.Celeſtin. de perfect.inſtit.ad finem.

Argum.3. The Lord ſaid to Cain: Vnto thee his deſire ſhall be ſubiect, and thou ſhalt rule ouer him, Geneſ.4.7. This the Ieſuite ſaith muſt bee vnderſtoode of ſinne, that it ſhould bee in his power, and if hee would, he might ſubdue and ouercome it : Ergo, there is free will in man, *cap.*22. Bellarm.

Anſwere. Firſt, this place cannot in any good ſenſe bee applied to ſinne, but is more fitly and properly referred to Abel, ouer whom the Lord giueth vnto Cain the dominion of the birth-right: for firſt, the text is, his deſire,&c. which very improperly ſhould be ſpoken of ſinne, which is a thing deſired, it hath no deſire : ſecondly, becauſe this promiſe made to Cain (if we vnderſtand it of ſinne) was neuer accompliſhed, Thou ſhalt rule ouer it: and ſo God ſhould bee found vntrue of his promiſe. Secondly, if wee ſhould admit the Ieſuites expoſition, that the Lord here meaneth ſinne, Auguſtines interpretation commeth neerer the truth, who readeth thus: Ad te conuerſio eius, i. nulli alij ſciat tribuere peccatum, quam ſibi & tum quiſque dominatur peccato, cum id ſibi non defendendo præpoſuerit, ſed pœnitendo ſubiecerit: The conuerſion or the turning thereof, ſhall be towards thee : that is, let him attribute his ſinne to none elſe, but to himſelfe : and then euery man ruleth ouer ſinne, when hee doth not preferre it, by defending it, but by repentance doth bring it vnder : *De ciuitat.Dei.lib.*15. *cap.*7.

Ierem.32.23.
Matth.23.37.
Act.7.51.
Deut.30.14.

Argum.4. Euery where in the Scripture God complaineth of the ſtubbornneſſe and wickedneſſe of men : They obeyed not thy voyce, nor hearkened to thy law. Matth.23.37. How often would I haue gathered thy children together, and thou wouldeſt not? O ye of vncircumciſed hearts and eares. If it be in a mans power not to ſinne, then hath he free will; if it be not, God complaineth in vaine, ſeeing man cannot otherwiſe chuſe. 2. Againe, This commandement is not hid from thee, neither farre off, it is in thy mouth and in thy heart to doe it : Ergo, man hath free will to keepe Gods commandements, *Bellarm.lib.5.de grat.cap.*20.

Anſwere. Firſt, God iuſtly complaineth of the wickedneſſe of men, becauſe, though it bee not in their power to beleeue without grace, yet it is in their power to reſiſt grace: as Ambroſe ſaith, Qui veniunt dei auxilio diriguntur; qui non veniunt, ſua poteſtate reluctantur. They that come, are directed by Gods helpe; they that come not, reſiſt by their owne power. lib.2.de vocat.Gent.cap.9. Secondly, though now Adams poſteritie be yoked with a neceſſarie bondage of ſinne, yet in him that firſt transgreſſed it was voluntarie; and therefore they are iuſtly blamed. So Bernard ſaith, ſerm.81.in Cantic. Neſcio quo miro modo ipſa ſibi voluntas in deterius mutata neceſſitatem facit,&c. I cannot tell how it commeth to paſſe, that the will being corrupted by ſinne, doth make a neceſſitie to it ſelfe, that neither neceſſitie, ſeeing it is voluntarie, can excuſe the will, nor the will being enticed, can exclude neceſſitie. And S. Auguſtine ſaith, Conuenientiſſ.eſt,vt malum meritum prioris eſſet natura ſequentis,&c. It is moſt conuenient, that the euill merit of the firſt ſhould be the nature of the next: de liber.arbit.lib.3. cap.10. So then it is a voluntarie neceſſitie wherewith Adams ſeed is enwrapped; and therefore is iuſtly blamed. Thirdly, Saint Paul expoundeth that place in Deuter. of the word of faith: This is the word of faith, which we preach: Rom.10.8. If then obedience of the law be by faith, it is of grace, and not of mans free will.

*Argum.*5. Firſt, Deuter.30.19. I haue ſet before you life and death, therefore chuſe life,&c. Ioſh.24. 1. verſ.15. Chuſe you this day whom ye will ſerue. Secondly, 2.Cor.9.7. As euery man purpoſeth in his heart, 2.
let him giue not grudgingly, or as of neceſſitie: Almes then proceedeth from a mans free will. Thirdly, 3.
1.Corinth.7.37. He that ſtandeth firme in his heart, that he hath no neede, but hath power ouer his owne will, and hath ſo decreed in his heart, that he will keepe his virgine,&c. Ergo, it is in a mans power to keepe his virginitie, *Bellarm.cap.*23.

Anſw. Firſt, this choiſe and election was not in their owne power: 1. But as the Apoſtle expoundeth this place, the word is in thy heart, that is the word of faith, Rom.10.8. By the word of faith then they made this choiſe. 2. The people alſo anſwere, God forbid, or farre be it from vs, that we ſhould forſake the Lord, verſ.16. Ioſh.24.16. which is a ſecret inuocation, and a calling for grace to be directed in their choiſe. Deut.30.16. 3. If Abrahams ſeruant prayeth to be directed to make a good choiſe of a wife for his Maſters ſonne, Geneſ.24. how much more haue wee neede to be directed by grace in the heauenly choiſe? Gen.24.12. 4. How elſe ſhould that Scripture be true: It is not in man to direct his way, Iere.10.verſ.23. Ierem.10.23. if the choiſe were in a mans free will.

Secondly, almes muſt proceede from a willing and cheerefull heart: but it is God which firſt maketh the heart willing by his grace: as the Apoſtle ſheweth in the ſame place, verſ.8. 2.Cor.9.25.13. God is able to make all grace abound towards you: Verſ.25. Thankes be vnto God for his vnſpeakable gift: which he expoundeth, verſ.13. to be their liberall diſtribution.

This very anſwere S. Auguſtine made to the Pelagians, vrging that place to Philemon, verſ.14. Philem.14. That it be not as it were of neceſſitie, but willingly: Quaſi aliter fit voluntarium,&c. As though it is otherwiſe become willing, or voluntarie, but that God doth worke in vs the will and deede, according to his good pleaſure: cont.Celeſtin.de perfect.iuſtit.ad finem.

Thirdly, 1. The place is not to be vnderſtood of keeping or not keeping a mans virginitie: but the Apoſtle giueth a rule for parents, when to keepe their virgines and daughters vnmaried, when to beſtow them in mariage. Thus Auguſtine expoundeth this place, ſhewing that it is vnuſuall in the Scripture to take a virgine for virginitie, 57. quæſt.ſuper Numer. So alſo Theophylact. Primaſius, Sedulius, with others, expound it; as Eſpenc. ſheweth, de cland.matrim.cap.7.

2 The circumſtance of the place giueth this ſenſe: firſt, If it be vncomly that his virgine paſſe the flower of her age, 36. this ſhould be improperly ſpoken of a mans virginitie, which is not ſo limited to the flower of age. Secondly, the Syriake tranſlation readeth, Si non tradiderit eam viro, If he hath not giuen her to a husband: But how can a mans virginitie be giuen to a husband? Thirdly, the Arabian tranſlation, verſ.37. readeth in ſtead of virgine daughter, to put all out of doubt.

3 If it ſhould be ſo vnderſtood of a mans virginitie, it maketh more againſt free will, then for it: for euery man hath his proper gift, verſ.7. and here his will dependeth vpon his owne neede or neceſſitie: verſ.36. If neede ſo require let them be married: verſ.37. If he hath no neede, but hath power ouer his owne will, he may keepe his virgine. So then, whether it be referred to the neede of his virgine, that is, daughter, or to his owne neceſſitie, his will is not abſolutely to diſpoſe, but as his occaſion and need is. This text then is improperly alleaged for free will.

4 Thus alſo Auguſtine anſwereth the Pelagians, obiecting the very ſame place, 1.Cor.7.36. 1.Cor.7.36. Quod vult faciat, Let him doe what hee will, 1. Quaſi pro magno habendum ſit velle nubere,&c. As though it were ſo great a matter to haue a will to marrie, where the queſtion is of the aſſiſtance of the diuine mercie. 2. Aut prodeſt aliquid velle,&c. Or as though it profited any thing here to will, vnleſſe God by his prouidence, whereby he gouerneth all things, doe ioyne the man and the woman: cont.Celeſtinum.de perfect.iuſtit.ad finem.

Laſtly, Bellarmine heapeth vp a great companie of fathers as witneſſes for free will: to whom I make this generall anſwere: Firſt, that ſome of them are counterfeit authors, as Clemens, alleaged *c.*25.3. Secondly, ſome had their notable errors, as Origen, Tertullian. Thirdly, ſome were led with the error of their time, as Chryſoſtome, and ſome other Greeke fathers, which attributed too much to mans free will. And hereof Eſpencæus a learned Papiſt doth well admoniſh vs: Hîc & pene vbique Græci: qui de [illegible] arbitrio cautè legendi: Here and almoſt euery where the Greekes of free will muſt be cauteloully read, that it is no maruelle, that in their catalogues of hereſie Pelagius is not reckoned. Fourthly, ſome of them extoll free will, hauing to deale with the contrarie hereſie of the Manichees, who altogether tooke away the vſe of mans will, imputing ſinne to the neceſſitie of nature. Thus Auguſtine is to bee taken in his bookes againſt the Manichees: as hee confeſſeth himſelfe, lib.1. retract. c.22. that in his booke againſt Adamantius, he affirmed, In hominis eſſe poteſtate, That it is in mans power to change his will: whereas (ſaith he) this power is of God: So Hierome excuſeth himſelfe for inuighing ſo much againſt mariage in his booke againſt Iouinian. Aliud eſt γυμναστικῶς ſcribere, aliud δογματικῶς, aliud docere diſcipulum, aliud vincere aduerſarium: It is one thing to write of ſtrife, another for inſtruction; one thing to teach a learner, another to confute a galne-ſayer, apolog. ad Pammach. Fifthly, ſome haue retracted afterward, which before they had written of free will: as Auguſtine retracteth that ſaying in his bookes ad Simplician. Quamuis ſit in vniuſcuiuſq; poteſtate vt velit, non tamen vt poſſit: Though it be in euery mans power to will, yet not to doe, or be able: for (ſaith hee) the will alſo muſt be prepared of God, lib.2. retract. Sixthly, the reſt of the fathers ſpeake of free will: firſt, either as it was giuen to Adam in the creation. Secondly, or as it is made free by grace. Thirdly, or as it is free onely from compulſion and conſtraint: all which we grant.

Genes.6.3. Our Doway Students doe thus reaſon for free will, Geneſ.6.3. The Lord ſaith, Mans dayes ſhall be an hundred and twentie yeeres: Whereupon they giue this marginall note: This warning and expectation of repentance ſheweth free will in man: Againe, vpon that expoſtulation, which God maketh with Cain, Geneſ.4. they inferre, that Cain had free will, for otherwiſe he might haue excuſed himſelfe, that hee was forced to doe as he did. Annot. in Geneſ. p.33.

Contra. Firſt, 1. Gods patience and longanimitie in expecting mens repentance, proueth not, that they haue free will, but it ſheweth their hardnes of heart, that abuſe the long ſuffering of God. 2. And ſuch admonitions and exhortations to repentance, are the meanes whereby God worketh repentance in them, that haue grace to repent. 3. But ſimply repentance is not in mans power, the wicked haue
Rom.2.5. an heart, that cannot repent, Rom.2.5. they cannot be renewed by repentance. Heb.6.6.

Secondly. 1. If the want of free will altogether might excuſe Cain, then the want of it in part might haue the ſame pretenſe, for the Romaniſts grant, that free will without grace is not ſufficient. 2. But Cain had free will to euill, hee was not forced vnto it, hee willingly embraced it, and therefore hee is without excuſe. 3. The neceſſitie of ſinning laid vpon man as a puniſhment, came in by the voluntarie tranſgreſſion of Adam, and his abuſe of free will.

The Proteſtants.

That man hath no free will of himſelfe in morall duties, to chuſe the good, and refuſe the euill, to embrace vertue, and decline from vice, but as he is wholy directed and gouerned by the ſpirit of God: and that not onely the beginning of our calling is of God, but that the drawing and enclining of the will and conſent thereunto, is a worke alſo of the ſpirit: thus wee make it euident by the word of God.

Pſal.119.36. Argum.1. Pſalm.119.36. Incline mine heart vnto thy teſtimonies, and not to couetouſneſſe: Ergo, it is God that enclineth the heart.

Anſwere.1. God enclineth the heart, by inward perſwaſion, and inuiting, ſo that notwithſtanding it is left in the power of the will to conſent vnto Gods calling: Bellarm. cap.29. reſponſ. ad teſtim.3.

Contra. 1. The Prophet Dauid in the ſame place ſaith, Deduc me in ſemita: Leade me in the path of thy commandements, verſ.35. And our Sauiour ſaith, that his father muſt draw vs, or elſe wee can-Iohn 6.44. not come vnto him. Theſe phraſes of Scripture, to encline, to leade, to draw, doe ſignifie a more forcible and powerfull calling, than is found in the bare act of perſwading, inuiting, alluring, &c. 2. If God ſhould onely call vs by perſwaſion, he ſhould haue no greater power in mouing vnto good, then Satan hath in tempting to euill: for Satan alſo dealeth by perſwaſion; Non diabolus cogendo, ſed ſuadendo nocet, nec extorquet à nobis conſenſum, ſed petit: The diuell doth hurt vs, not by forcing, but perſwading vs: hee doth not extort or wring from vs our conſent, but craueth it: Auguſt. homil.12. 3. If God onely moue the heart by entiſing and alluring it, not by an actuall drawing and enforcing, then man ſhould haue greater power ouer his will, than God hath: for many times the will of man without perſwaſion, of it voluntarie motion is enclined to euill: but God is greater than the heart. And Auguſtine ſaith, Deus magis habet in ſua poteſtate hominum voluntates, quam ipſi ſuas: God hath greater power ouer the wils of men, then they haue themſelues: de corrept. & grat. cap.14. Ergo, God worketh otherwiſe in the will then by perſwaſion.

Anſwere.2. God indeede doth worke in vs by his grace to giue our conſent to his calling: Sed hoc facit adiuuando infirmitatem, non tollendo libertatem: But in thus doing, he helpeth our infirmitie, he taketh not away our freedome or libertie, Bellarm. ibid. So his opinion is, that grace and our free will worke together.

Contra.1. One of the Ieſuites anſwers ouerthroweth the other: for before he ſaid, Inclinat Deus corda noſtra non regendo, ſed ſuadendo: God inclineth the heart, not by enforcing it, but by perſwading: but here he ſaith, Quid aliud facit Deus, cum nos inclinat, quam operari vt conſentiamus? What elſe doth God, what he inclineth vs, then ſo worke, that we giue our conſent? To worke then and to doe, is more then to moue and perſwade. 2. Our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, Without me you can doe nothing:

thing: as a branch cut off from the ſtocke withereth, and is altogether fruitleſſe. And S. Paul ſaith, That in his fleſh dwelleth no good thing: that is, in the naturall man: Ergo, there is no good motion in the will of it ſelfe, but all goodneſſe is wrought in vs wholly by grace: it is not then partly of our ſelues, and partly of grace. So Auguſtine ſaith, Laborant homines inuehire in voluntate, quid boni ſit noſtrum, quod non ſit ex Deo; quod quomodo inueniri poſſit ignoro: Men doe labour to finde ſome goodneſſe in the will, that ſhould be of our ſelues, and not of God, but I am altogether ignorant how any ſuch thing ſhould bee found: de peccator. merit. & remiſſ.2.18. And againe, The deſire of good ſhould not be giuen vnto man of God, if it were not good, ſi autem bonum eſt, non niſi ab illo nobis eſt; quid eſt boni cupiditas niſi charitas,—& ſi charitas ex Deo, tota nobis ex Deo: but if it bee good, wee haue it not, but from God: and what is the deſire of good, but charitie? —if charitie then be of God, then it is wholly of God: cont.2.epiſt.Pelag.2.9. Ioh.15.5.6. Rom.7.18.

Argum.2. The ſeruants of ſinne are not free, but by nature we are all the ſeruants of ſinne: Ergo, we are not free, and ſo conſequently by nature haue no free will. Rom.6.17.

Bellarmine: The ſeruice of ſinne is contrarie to the libertie from ſinne, but it taketh not away the libertie of nature, but that notwithſtanding a man by his free will, aſſiſted by Gods helpe, may ſhake off the ſeruitude of ſinne: reſponſ.ad 4.teſtim.cap.29.

Anſw. 1. Neither doe we conclude from this place, that the libertie of nature is taken away from free will: for as your Maſter diſtinguiſheth, there is libertas gratiæ à peccato, libertas naturæ à neceſſitate: lib.2 diſt.25.q. There is a libertie of grace from ſinne, and a libertie of nature from neceſſitie, coaction or conſtraint, &c. We grant that mans will worketh freely, that is, without conſtraint, but not freely, that is, without ſinne.

2. That mans will is a ſeruant to ſinne the Apoſtle ſheweth, verſ.19. becauſe all our members were ſeruants to iniquitie: if all then the will alſo, which is a member and facultie of the ſoule. And verſ.20. When ye were ſeruants to ſinne, ye were freed from righteouſnes: If then the mans will by nature be ſinfull and ſo void of righteouſnes, how can it haue any inclination at all vnto it? Rom.6.19,20.

3. If the will cannot riſe from ſinne vnleſſe it bee aided by grace, then is it not free. A priſoner, though he be not fettered, yet if the priſon doores be ſhut, ſo that he cannot come foorth, vnleſſe the doores be opened, is notwithſtanding a priſoner ſtill.

*Argum.*3. Ioh.15.3. As the branch cannot beare fruite of it ſelfe, vnleſſe it abide in the vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in me: Ergo, without the grace of Chriſt mans will can doe nothing. Ioh.15.3.

Bellarm. This place ſheweth the neceſſitie of grace, that mans will can doe nothing without it, but it excludeth not free will: reſponſ.ad argum.5.

Anſw. Firſt, if the branch can bring forth no fruite at all without the vine, nor mans will doe nothing without Chriſt, as he ſaith, verſ.5. Without me ye can doe nothing; then the whole actiuitie of our will is of grace. Secondly, the branch indeed is as a trunke, wherein the iuyce of the vine runneth; it hath of it ſelfe rine and barke, but no life or growth without the ſappe of the ſtocke: ſo man hath power by nature to will, to moue, to affect, deſire, but a diſpoſition to goodnes it hath none at all without grace. This place taketh not away the naturall power of mans will, but the actiuitie thereof vnto goodnes it vtterly excludeth.

Argum.4. S. Paul ſaith, What haſt thou that thou haſt not receiued? We haue then no good thing of our ſelues: Ergo, neither haue we any free will or inclination to that is good. 1.Cor.4.7.

Anſw. Habemus dono Dei liberum arbitrium, ſed hac dono accepta Domini ſumus actionum, &c. We haue free will by the gift of God, and hauing receiued this gift, then we worke freely, and are Lords and commanders of our actions: Bellarm.ibid.reſp.ad ſextum teſtimon.

Contra. The Ieſuites anſwere in effect is this, that to haue a deſire and inclination to good things, is of God, becauſe free will, from whence commeth this deſire, is the gift of God: ſo that this receiuing, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, he would haue referred to the creation, when God beſtowed this gift of free will generally vpon all. This anſwere is eaſily ouerthrowne: firſt, S. Paul ſpeaketh of ſuch gifts as are receiued by grace, and not ſuch as were beſtowed in the creation: for the benefits of creation are generall, and indifferently diſtributed to all: but the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch graces, as were diuerſly beſtowed vpon men, wherein one excelled another, one ſwelled againſt another, verſ.6. one was diſcerned, that is, preferred before another. Therefore the Apoſtle cannot vnderſtand the gift of free will, as it was conferred vpon all in the creation, but as it is giuen vnto ſome by grace.

Secondly, the Pelagians did expound this place alſo, euen as the Ieſuite doth, de bonis naturæ, of the gifts of nature: whom Auguſtine confuteth thus: Nunquid per hæc dona quæ omnibus hominibus communia ſunt, homines diſcernuntur ab hominibus? Men are not ſeparated or diſcerned one from another by theſe common gifts of nature: but the Apoſtle ſaith, Who hath ſeparated thee? Againe, Non dicit Apoſtolus, quid potes habere, quod non accepiſti vt poſſis habere, ſed nunquid habes? illa natura igitur in qua nobis data eſt, &c. poſſibilitas habendi fidem non diſcernit, &c. The Apoſtle ſaith not, what canſt thou haue, which thou didſt not receiue a poſſibilitie by nature to haue? but what haſt thou alreadie? for it is not the poſſibilitie to haue faith, or any other grace, which doth diſcerne men, but the hauing of faith it ſelfe: de prædeſtinat.lib.1.cap.5. This place then cannot be vnderſtood of the poſſibilitie of free will, which ſhould be in euery man by nature: but of thoſe good things that are really and actually in vs; all which we doe receiue of God.

Thirdly, the Ieſuite is driuen to borrow an anſwere from the old heretikes the Pelagians: for thus they ſaid: Non contra gratiam diſputo,(inquit Pelagianus) quia liberum arbitrium defendo: ſi enim hominem creauit Deus,& illi liberum arbitrium donauit, quicquid homo poteſt de libero arbitrio, cuius gratiæ debetur, niſi eius, qui eum condidit cum libero arbitrio? I doe not reaſon againſt grace (ſaith the Pelagian) while I defend free will: for if God created man, and gaue him free will, whatſoeuer a man is able to doe by his free will, to whoſe grace is he indebted, but to his, who made him with free will? The very ſame anſwere doth the Ieſuite giue vs here, that whatſoeuer a man doth by vertue of his free will, it is by the gift of God, becauſe free will is his gift. Et nos iſtam, qua conditi ſumus, quanquam hoc nomine appellatam minime legerimus, tamen quia gratis data eſt, gratiam fatemur, ſed oſtendimus maiorem eſſe iſtam, qua Chriſtiani ſumus: And we alſo doe acknowledge the grace of creation, whereby we were made, becauſe it is freely giuen, though we finde it no were called by the name of grace, but yet there is a greater grace, and more properly ſo called, by the which grace we are made Chriſtians; Auguſt. de verbis Apoſtol. ſerm. 11.

Celeſtin. epiſtol. decretal. 1. cap. 9. Ita Deus in cordibus hominum, atque in ipſo libero operatur arbitrio, vt ſancta cogitatio pium conſilium omniſque motus bonæ voluntatis ex Deo ſit, quia per illum aliquid boni poſſumus, ſine quo nihil poſſumus: quod igitur tempus interuenit, in quo eius non egeamus auxilio: So God worketh in the hearts of men, and in free will, that euery holy thought, godly counſell, good motion of the will is of God: ſo by him we are able to doe ſome good, without whom wee can doe nothing: there can be therefore no time, when we ſtand not in need of his helpe.

Further, Saint Auguſtine thus teſtifieth: Liberum arbitrium & ad malum & bonum nos habere confitendum eſt, &c. Wee muſt confeſſe that wee haue free will both to good, and euill: but in doing of euill euery man is free from righteouſnes, and the ſeruant of ſinne; but in doing of good no man is free, vnleſſe he be freed by him, that ſaid, If the ſonne make you free, then are you free indeed, lib. de corrept. & grat. cap. 1.

Againe, Voluntas humana non libertate conſequitur gratiam, ſed gratia potius libertatem: Mans will by libertie obtaineth not grace, but by grace libertie or freedome, cap. 8. Ergo, the libertie of the will is wholly of grace.

To this purpoſe, Auguſt. fitly compareth liberum arbitrium iumento, gratiā ſeſſori: free will to the beaſt, grace to the rider: like as the beaſt is guided by the riders hand to goe ſtraight in the way; ſo free will, non ſine gratia dirigente & gubernante, &c. finiſheth the iourney of faith, — but not without grace directing and gouerning, &c. cont. Pelagian. Hypognoſt. artic. 3. Like as the rider then giueth all the direction and regiment to the beaſt; which indeed goeth, and trauelleth, but cannot goe right in the way without the rider: ſo mans will hath no inclination to the right way, without the illumination of grace.

Bernard vſeth this ſimilitude: Quis cum ad ignem venerit algens, &c. Like as a man comming frozen and cold to the fire, doubteth not, but he had his heate from the fire: ſic ſpiritus in nobis operatur omnia: ſo the ſpirit worketh all in vs: in die Pentecoſt. ſerm. 1. Like as then there is no heate but from the fire, when a man is ſtarke with cold; ſo there is no goodneſſe in mans will, but from grace.

1.Cor.2.12. Saint Ambroſe vpon theſe words, We haue receiued, not the ſpirit of the world, but the ſpirit of God, that we might know the things that are giuen vs of God: Vnde ſiquis eſt, qui aliqua ſe exiſtimat habere bona, quorum non Deus largitor eſt, &c. If therefore there be any man, which thinketh hee hath any good thing, whereof God is not the giuer, but himſelfe the author, hee hath not the ſpirit of God, but of the world, epiſt. 84. The Papiſts then haue not the ſpirit of God, who aſcribe part of the good work vnto grace, part vnto free will, but not all vnto grace.

Saint Hierome vpon theſe words, Ioh. 6. No man can come vnto me, except my father draw him: Qui trahitur, non ſponte currit, &c. He that is drawne, doth not runne of himſelfe, ſed aut tardus, aut inuitus adducitur, but is brought either ſlowly, or vnwillingly: lib. 3. aduerſ. Pelagian. Mans will then hath no aptnes or inclination of it ſelfe at all to come vnto God.

Serm. in 1. Dominic. Aduent. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Sicut nauis fracto gubernaculo illuc ducimur quo tempeſtas voluerit, &c. As the helme of the ſhip being broken, we are carried whither the tempeſt will, &c. ſo is man being vnder ſinne, carried whither the diuell will, &c. What is now become of mans free will?

Harm. ſect. 4. p 68. Confeſſion of Bohemia, chap. 4. The will of man, albeit it fell willingly, and of it owne accord, yet by it ſelfe, and of it owne ſtrength it could not riſe againe, or recouer that fall, neither to this day, without the mercifull helpe of God, is it able to doe any thing at all. Wittemberg, chap 4. As a man being corporally Ibid. pag. 82. dead, is not able by his owne ſtrength to prepare or conuert himſelfe to receiue corporall life; ſo he which is ſpiritually dead, is not able by his owne power to conuert himſelfe, &c.

Iames 1.17,18. Peter Lombard out of Auguſtine alleageth, Iuſtitiam in homine Deus ſolus operatur: God onely worketh vertue and righteouſneſſe in man, lib. 2. diſtinct. 28. a. Ibid. liter. d. It is in mans power to change his will to the better: ſed ea poteſtas nulla eſt, niſi à Deo detur: but that is no power at all, vnleſſe it be giuen of God: Ergo, in mans will, without grace, there is no power at all.

Laſtly, this doctrine, that man hath no free will by nature to doe that which is good, hath been ſealed by the blood of Martyrs: Richard Woodman Martyr, againſt mans free will, alleaged theſe places of Scripture: Euery good gift commeth from aboue. Of his owne will begate hee vs: Ibid. verſ. 18. It is Philip.2.13. God which worketh in vs the will and the deede, Philip. 2. 13. Ergo, mans owne will in good things is little worth, Fox pag.1995. For this truth, agreeable to the Scripture, ſuffered alſo Thomas Spicer, Iohn Deny, Edmund Poole, becauſe they affirmed no mortall man to haue free will in himſelfe to doe good or euill: Fox pag.1912.artic.7.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE POWER OF free will in diuine and ſupernaturall things.

HEre we are to handle theſe two ſeuerall poynts: firſt, whether the ſtrength of free will be vtterly loſt by the tranſgreſſion of Adam. Secondly, what power it hath in ſpirituall matters.

The Papiſts.

FRee will, they ſay, is not vtterly extinguiſhed, but only abated in ſtrength, and attenuated: *Bellar. de grat.lib.5.cap.30.Concil.Trident in.ſeſſ.6.cap.*1. 45 Error.

Further, Bellarmine thus explaneth his minde, that Adams free will in two things was ſtronger then ours: firſt, Adam was free not onely in the very act of willing, but in the execution alſo, ſo are not we: for though we haue libertie to will, yet we are hindred by the corruption of nature from executing our will. Secondly, we haue need of Gods ſpeciall aſſiſtance againſt temptation, ſo had not Adam, but was able by the ſtrength of his free will, without further helpe, to reſiſt temptation, *lib.5.de grat.cap.*27. So his opinion is, that in the act of willing good or euill, we are as free as Adam was.

Argum. The Rhemiſts gather by the parable of the man in the Goſpell, that fell among theeues, and was left for halfe dead, that neither vnderſtanding, nor free will, nor other powers of the ſoule, Luke 10.30. are vtterly extinguiſhed and taken away, but only wounded by the ſinne of Adam.

Anſw. 1. It is but a feeble collection, and of ſmall force, which they doe draw from this allegorie; for allegories and ſimilitudes doe not hold in all things, but wherein onely they are compared: for our Sauiour Chriſt alleaged not this parable to any ſuch end, but onely to ſhew, that we ought to doe good vnto all, and that they are our neighbours which doe vs good, though they be ſtrangers and vnknowne vnto vs.

2. We denie not, that the powers of the ſoule, yea and free will alſo in ſubſtance remaine ſtill, but that the propertie and quality of them is extinguiſhed, that they haue now no natural inclination vnto good. Auguſtine ſaith well of this matter: Semper eſt in nobis voluntas libera, ſed non eſt ſemper bona: gratia autem Dei ſemper eſt bona, & per hanc fit, vt homo ſit bonæ voluntatis, qui prius fuit malæ: There is alwaies in vs free will, but it is not alwaies good: but the grace of God is alwaies good, and by this grace it commeth to paſſe, that man, who had before an euill will, hath now a good will: *de grat.& liber.arbit.cap.*15.

The Proteſtants.

THat the ſtrength of free will in good things is vtterly decaied in man, not wounded and maimed only, but wholly loſt, till it be reſtored by grace: and that we haue not the like libertie in the act of willing as Adam had in his creation, thus we ſhew it.

Argum. S. Paul ſaith, When we were dead by our ſinnes, he hath quickened vs in Chriſt. Ye which were Epheſ.2.1,5. dead in your ſinnes, hath he quickened together with him. He ſaith not, as in the Parable, [illegible], they left Coloſſ.2.13. him for halfe dead, but [illegible], plaine dead men indeed: As Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Vt homo redeat ad iuſtitiam, opus habet medico, quia ſanus non eſt; opus habet viuificatore, quia mortuus eſt: Man before hee can returne to doe righteouſly, hath neede of a Phyſition, becauſe he is ſicke; had need of a quickner and reuiuer, becauſe he is dead: *de natur.grat.cap.*23. Man then is not onely ſicke and wounded, but plaine dead, and void of all life, quicknes or agilitie in good things.

1. Auguſtine ſaith yet more plainly: Cum peccauit primus homo, non in parte aliqua, ſed in tota, qua conditus eſt natura deliquit: When the firſt man ſinned, he did not offend in any one part, but wholly in that nature wherein he was created: *Contr.Pelag.Hypognoſt.articul.*3. And in another place, Natura tota fuit per liberum arbitrium in ipſa radice vitiata: Our nature was wholly corrupted by free will, in the very roote or originall, that is in Adam: *in Iohan.tract.*87. Ergo, all the powers both of body and ſoule, are wholly corrupt and decaied in ſpirituall things.

2. Gregory Nyſſene ſaith, that in mans fall, abolitio imaginis facta eſt, there was an aboliſhing of Serm.5 de the image of God. Orat.Domin.

3. Confeſſion of Belgia, artic.14. Man being made wicked, peruerſe and corrupt in all his waies, loſt Harm.ſect.4. thoſe excellent gifts, wherewith the Lord had adorned him; ſo that there were but a few little ſparkes, and ſect.72. ſmall ſteps of thoſe graces left in him, the which notwithſtanding are ſufficient to leaue men without excuſe: — See the confeſſion of Wittemberg, in the queſtion next before.

4. Maldonate the Ieſuite confeſſeth, that diuers of the fathers, as Auguſtine, Euthymius, Beda, Comment. in Bernard doe vnderſtand the ſubſtance which the prodigall child waſted, of free will, which man loſt. Luc.15.ver.13.

*Innocentius epiſtol.decretal.*25. Liberum arbitrium Adam perpeſſus, dum ſuis inconſultius vtitur bonis, in præuaricationis profundo demerſus eſt, & nihil quomodo inde ſurgere poſſit, inuenit: Adam ſuffering his free will, while he vnaduiſedly vſeth his gifts, was drowned in tranſgreſſion, and found (nothing) in himſelfe whereby to riſe from thence againe: Ergo, there remaineth in our free will by nature no abilitie at all to that which is good.

Concil. Arauſican.2. can.25. Per peccatum primi hominis ita inclinatum & attenuatum fuit liberum arbitrium, vt nullus poſtea aut diligere Deum ſicut oportuit, aut credere in Deum, aut operari propter Deum poſſit, niſi gratia eum praeuenerit: By the ſinne of the firſt man free will is ſo turned and empaired, that none ſince can loue God, as they ought, beleeue in God, or worke according to God, vnleſſe grace preuent them.

Bernard hath this ſaying: Homo non omnino amiſit arbitrium, i. iudicium rationis, & iudicando & diſcernendo, quanquam libertatem ſuam amiſerit, in eligendo, & agendo, &c. Man hath not altogether loſt his will, that is, iudgement of reaſon in iudging and diſcerning, although he hath loſt his libertie in chuſing and working: for a puniſhment of his ſinne, and a teſtimonie of his naturall dignitie loſt, his will is ſet for a ſigne, but captiued: de vit. ſolitar. So his ſentence is, that man hath altogether loſt the libertie of his will, though the facultie of his will doe ſtill remaine.

THE SECOND POINT, OR ARTICLE, OF the ſtrength and power of free will in ſpirituall things.

The Papiſts.

46. Error. THey ſay not, that a man by his free will onely is able to liue well, or to obtaine eternall life: for Bellarmine proueth at large, that a man hath no power of himſelfe, without the ſpeciall aſſiſtance of grace, either to beleeue, lib.6. cap.2, or to prepare himſelfe to receiue grace, cap.5. or to loue God, cap.7. or to will any thing appertaining to ſaluation, without the helpe of Gods grace, cap.4. This then is their opinion, that though the will of man be not able of it ſelfe onely to doe any thing in ſpirituall actions, yet being aided and aſſiſted by grace, it may: ſo that they attribute part to grace, part to free will: the firſt motion & ſtirring of the heart, they ſay, is only of God: and here the will worketh nothing at all: then it is the part of free will to apprehend grace offered, to giue conſent vnto it, and to worke together with it: Trident. Concil. ſeſſ.6. cap.5. can.4. The Rhemiſts alſo thus define the matter: Though our election, calling, firſt comming to God, be not wholly or principally vpon our will or Workes, yet our willing and working of any good to our ſaluation, is the ſecondarie cauſe: Gods ſpeciall motion, grace, aſſiſtance is the principall. Rom.9. ſect.4. This then is their meanning, that Gods grace and mans free will doe worke actiuely together: as the Rhemiſts note, The Gentiles, though they beleeued ſpecially by Gods grace and preordination, yet they beleeued alſo by their owne free will: Rhem. Act.13. ſect.2.

Bellarmine more particularly doth thus determine: firſt the grace, whereby men are firſt ſtirred and moued vnto any good thing, worketh alone without the helpe of our will: Nihil omnino in hoc genere ex ſe facere homo poteſt: Man in this caſe worketh nothing of himſelfe, Lib.6. cap.15. propoſ.3. Secondly, that we may giue our aſſent, gratia excitanti, to grace mouing and ſtirring of vs, requiritur neceſſariò gratia adiuuans, the helping or aſſiſting grace is requiſite and neceſſarie: Ibid. propoſ.7. ſo here grace worketh, and mans will worketh. Thirdly, this grace that helpeth mans will to giue aſſent, doth onely deale by perſwaſion, it inforceth not, nor draweth it: but it remaineth for all this in mans power freely to giue or withhold his conſent: propoſ.8. And hereupon it commeth, that by the ſame grace and inward motion, one is conuerted, and another is not, becauſe it is in mans power to reiect grace: propoſ.9. And ſo hee concludeth: Poteſt homo abſolutè per liberum arbitrium benefacere, ſi velit; & non facere, ſi non velit: That a man, notwithſtanding the firſt ſtirring, as alſo the helping and aſſiſting grace, abſolutely by his free will may doe well if he will, and not doe well, if he will not: Lib.5. cap.29. reſponſ. ad teſtimon.2. Thus the Ieſuite maketh the will of man the principall, not the ſecondarie cauſe, (wherein the Rhemiſts are more reaſonable, as we haue ſeene, that make it only the inferiour cauſe:) for the will of man may make grace fruſtrate, but grace cannot make free will fruſtrate, by the Ieſuites doctrine: let vs ſee ſome of their arguments, whereby they would proue the fellow-working of grace and free will together.

Epheſ.4.22. Philip.2.12. Argum.1. Caſt off the old man, put on the new. Worke out your ſaluation with feare and trembling: Ergo, man together with God worketh his ſaluation: Bellarm. lib.6. de grat. cap.10.

Anſw. The Scripture thus vſeth to ſpeake vnto men, becauſe they are not as ſtockes and ſtones void of ſenſe, but reaſonable creatures, indued with naturall gifts of will and vnderſtanding: not becauſe men haue power to will or worke any good thing of themſelues. Worke your ſaluation, ſaith the Apoſtle: then it followeth; for it is God that worketh in you the will and the deede. So then man worketh, and God worketh: Man hath a naturall powerg enerally to worke, to will: but to will or worke that which is good, is onely of God. Certum eſt, ſaith Auguſtine, nos velle, cum volumus, ſed ille facit, vt velimus bonum; certum eſt, nos facere, cum facimus, ſed ille facit, vt faciamus: It is certaine that it is man which willeth, whatſoeuer is willed, but God is the cauſe that he willeth that which is good: it is certaine that we worke whatſoeuer is wrought, but God is the cauſe that we doe that is good: De bono perſeuerant. cap.16. God onely then is the agent and working cauſe, man is the inſtrument.

Pſal.70.1. Rom.8.26. Argum.2. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, Make haſte to helpe me, O Lord. He helpeth our infirmities. But how can man be ſaid properly to be helped, vnleſſe he laboured? Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw.1. Bellarmine himſelfe doth here furniſh vs with an anſwere: a better we cannot deſire:

Opu

Opus pium, quatenus opus, à libero arbitrio eſt tantum, non tamen ſecluſo auxilio generali; quatenus pium, à ſola gratia eſt; quatenus opus pium, à libero arbitrio, & gratia ſimul: Euery godly worke, as it is a worke, proceedeth onely from freewill, with the generall helpe of Gods prouidence; as it is good and godly, it is onely of grace: as it ioyntly is a good worke, it is of grace and freewill together: *Lib.6. de grat.cap.15.propoſ.*10. This is the ſame thing, that we ſaid from the beginning, that we denie not a naturall power in man ſimply to will this or that, but to will that is good, we hold it a worke onely of grace: and herein Bellarmine agreeth with vs in this place, howſoeuer elſewhere hee diſſent from himſelfe in this point and vs. By this poſition of his, we may eaſily anſwere the argument: for if the good worke be ioyntly conſidered, as it is a worke, and beſides that, good; ſo grace onely helpeth the will: both of them ioyne together, the will to worke, and grace to make it good: but as the worke is good, it is onely of grace, and ſo grace helpeth not onely, but doth alone make the worke good.

2. So where the Apoſtle ſaith, The ſpirit helpeth our infirmities: we are to vnderſtand, that in the godly action of prayer, the ſpirit, and our ſoule worke together: wee worke as it is an action proceding from the will, the ſpirit as it is a godly action: and in this reſpect as the prayer is a godly and holy action, the ſpirit worketh onely, our infirmities nothing at all: And therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, The ſpirit it ſelfe maketh requeſt for vs: for we know not what to pray, as we ought: that is, the goodneſſe of the action, and the gift to pray a right, is only of the ſpirit. Hauing now examined ſuch places of Scripture as are alleaged by our aduerſaries: let vs ſee ſome other of their obiections.

*Obiect.*1. If that man by his freewill hath no inclination vnto that which is good and godlie, then belike men are compelled againſt their willes to the kingdome of God: *Sic Rhemiſt. Iohn 6. ſect.*3.

Anſw. Indeed, man by nature is vnwilling to any good thing, but God reformeth our willes, and giueth vs grace moſt gladly to embrace Chriſt. Thus Auguſtine ſaith, Trahit Deus miris modis, vt homo velit, non vt homines, quod fieri non poteſt, nolentes credant, ſed vt volentes ex nolentibus fiant: God draweth a man diuers waies to make him willing: for men, which were impoſſible, doe not beleeue againſt their will, but of vnwilling are made willing: *Cont.2.epiſtol.Pelag.lib.*1.*cap.*20.

*Obiect.*2. If man haue no good motion of himſelfe, nor no deſire or will to good things: what is hee better then a ſtone, or a piece of clay, being altogether deſtitute of freewill? *Rhemiſt.Rom.*9. *ſect.*7.

Anſw. We ſay with Auguſtine: Non ſicut in lapidibus inſenſatis, aut in iis in quorum natura rationem aut voluntatem non condidit Deus ſalutem noſtram operatur: God worketh not our ſaluation in vs, as in ſenſeleſſe ſtones, or vnreaſonable creatures, &c. So we doe not take away mans proper motions, and thoughts, as the Rhemiſts accuſe vs: 2.Corinth.3.ſect.2. God giueth not a new mind, ſoule, will, or vnderſtanding to the regenerate, but onely altereth and changeth it: Man by nature hath power to will, to thinke, to vnderſtand: ſo cannot a ſtone or a piece of clay, or any brutiſh creature: but to will, or thinke that which is good, is onely a worke of grace.

Contr.Pelag. de peccator. merit & remiſ. lib.2.c.5.

*Obiect.*3. If God worke all, then man worketh nothing; what then can good workes profit him, ſeeing he worketh not?

Anſw. God by his ſpeciall grace worketh onely that which is good in man: man himſelfe alſo by nature hath a generall power to will and worke, yet not any good thing, but of grace: ſo God worketh, not without man, but in man and by man, as his inſtrument, which receiueth the whole actiuitie in good things from the firſt mouer and principall efficient. Auguſtine alſo thus anſwereth the like obiection: Ergo agimur (inquies) non agimus: Thou wilt ſay then, that we our ſelues are wrought to good things, we worke not: Immo & agis, & ageris, & tum bene agis, ſi à bono ageris: Yea rather, thou art both wrought thy ſelfe, and workeſt: and then thou workeſt well, and that which is good, when thou art firſt wrought and made good: *De verb.Apoſtol.ſerm.*13.

*Obiect.*4. Thus alſo the Pelagians, and freewill men obiected: if man haue no freewill in good things: Tale ergo hominibus datum eſt arbitrium, quale in dæmonibus, quod nihil aliud poſſit, vel velit, quam malum: Then ſuch a will is giuen to men, as diuels haue, which neither can, nor will doe any thing but euill.

Anſw. Auguſtine anſwereth: Firſt, Talis eſt multorum malitia, qualis dæmonum, vt Dominus, vos ex patre diabolo eſtis: The like malice is in many wicked men, as is in the diuels themſelues, otherwiſe our Sauiour Chriſt would not haue ſaid to ſome, you are of your father the diuell. Secondly, Sed hoc inter homines malos & diabolum diſtat, quod hominibus etiam valde malis ſupereſt etiam, ſi Deus voluerit, reconciliatio: dæmonibus nulla ſeruata eſt conuerſio: But this difference there is betweene wicked men and the diuell, that there remaineth hope of reconciliation, if God will, euen for the moſt wicked men: but no conuerſion or amendment is kept in ſtore for the damned ſpirits: *Lib.articul.falſ.impoſit.articul.*6. The ſame difference there is betweene the corrupt will of men, and the malice of diuels: that the will of men, though it be preſently euill, by grace may be made good: but the malice of the diuell can neuer be changed to the better.

The Proteſtants.

There are two things to be conſidered in our will and thoughts, the naturall power of willing, and thinking, and the goodneſſe and holineſſe of our thoughts: the firſt is in vs, and is properly ours by the generall gift of God, but the other commeth onely of God, by his grace. The will, the vnderſtanding, the thoughts are ours, but the goodneſſe is meerely, and entirely wrought by the ſpirit of God: So that in reſpect of the goodneſſe inſpired into our minds, our willes are altogether paſſiue: in reſpect of the generall power, and naturall facultie, of willing, thinking, vnderſtanding, they are alſo actiue.

One very fitly compareth mans freewill in good actions, vnto materia; the grace working, vnto forma: that as the ſaid materia, without forma, the matter without the forme is rude, and ſhapeleſſe; ſo freewill is a thing altogether rude and deformed, if it bee not framed and faſhioned by grace comming thereunto: Ex epiſtol. Voluſian. Epiſcop. Carthag. ad Nicolaum Papam.

Auguſtine ſaith, Rectè comparari arbitror liberum arbitrium iumento,—gratiam ſeſſori: I think mans freewil may very fitly be compared to the beaſt which a man rideth vpon, grace to the rider or ſitter: Sicut iumentum illud dum in via dirigitur, ſeſſoris manu regitur, vt iter rectum—ſecundum ſedentis in ſe voluntatem poſſit incedere; ſic liberum arbitrium gratia regimine regitur, vt poſſit in ſemitis Domini recto corde—ambulare: And as the beaſt is guided by the hand of the rider, that it may goe right in the way, according to the riders pleaſure: ſo freewill is gouerned by grace, to walke aright in the waies of God: Cont. Pelag. Hypognoſtic. articul. 3. Mans freewill therefore is no more able without grace, to doe any good thing, then the horſe is to goe the right way without a guide.

Pſalm. 51. 10.

Pſalm. 100. 4.

Argum. 1. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, Create in me a cleane heart, O God. Mans will therefore doth no more worke with grace, then the creature doth with the Creator, when it is created. And therefore the Prophet elſewhere ſaith: He hath made vs, and not we our ſelues, which is ſpoken of the regeneration of men, rather then of the firſt creation; becauſe it followeth, Wee are his people, and the ſheepe of his paſture.

Anſw. There is not a new ſubſtance of the heart created in our regeneration: ſed ipſa munditie efficitur: but the pureneſſe or cleanneſſe of the heart is onely wrought, the ſame ſubſtance remaineth, which worketh together with grace: Bellar. cap. 13. reſponſ. ad loc. 2.

Contra. The Ieſuite by thus anſwering, confirmeth our argument rather then refuteth it: for wee alſo affirme, and grant, that the naturall power of the will and affections remaine ſtill, and worke together in the naturall action of willing, or thinking: but the ſupernaturall goodneſſe and pureneſſe of our heart, our will, our thoughts, we hold only to be wrought by grace, and that the will of man doth not helpe any thing thereunto. And thus much the Ieſuite granteth, and ſo he confeſſeth againſt himſelfe, that the ſupernaturall pureneſſe of mans will, is onely wrought by grace, though the naturall ſubſtance of the will remaine ſtill.

Philip. 2. 13. 14

Argum. 2. God worketh in vs both the will and the deede: he helpeth not onely but wholly worketh himſelfe.

Anſw. God indeed worketh our will, but not without vs: for the Apoſtle in the ſame place ſaith, Worke your ſaluation with feare and trembling, verſ. 14. Ergo, man worketh together with God: Bellarm. ibid.

1. Cor. 15. 28.
Iam. 1. 17.

Contra. Gods working is the cauſe why man worketh: Worke out your ſaluation, ſaith the Apoſtle: and then he rendreth the reaſon or cauſe thereof; For it is God which worketh, &c. So that man worketh not any thing of himſelfe, but as his will is moued and wrought by the ſpirit of God: for if all were not of God, how then ſaith the Apoſtle, That God may be all in all: and that euery good gift is of God. Auguſtine ſaith, Sicut homo ſedens in iumento dicit, feci hodie, vtputa 30. millia, cum iumentum illo ſedente cucurrerit,—ſed ſeſſor dicitur facere, quia iumentum facere fecit: ſic liberum arbitrium fidei iter peragit,—ſed non ſine gratia dirigente & gubernante: As a man ſitting vpon his beaſt, ſaith, I haue gone to day thirtie miles, or there about, when as not he, but his beaſt hath gone it; but the rider is ſaid to doe it, becauſe he maketh his beaſt doe it: ſo it is freewill that runneth the race of faith, but grace directeth and gouerneth it: Cont. Pelagian. Hypognoſtic. articul. 3. Man then as Gods inſtrument worketh, but God giueth him the whole actiuitie and power to worke.

1. Cor. 15. 10.

Argum. 3. S. Paul ſaith: I laboured more abundantly, then they all; yet not I, but the grace of God which is with me. By this correction of his ſpeech, the Apoſtle ſheweth, that of himſelfe he was not able to worke any good thing, but it was the grace of God in him.

Anſw. He ſaith, Gratia Dei mecum, The grace of God with him: ſo that the Apoſtle wrought not alone, but he, and grace together, Bellarm. cap. 10.

Galath. 2. 20.

Contra. Nay, the Apoſtle aſcribeth all to grace: and by ſaying, The grace of God with mee, hee meaneth the grace that wrought in him, and was preſent with him: As elſewhere he ſaith, Thus I liue, not I now, but Chriſt liueth in me. So that whether he ſay, Grace with me, or in me, it is all one: his meaning is, that grace onely worketh in him, and he by grace. And ſo Auguſtine expoundeth it: Quicquid vult bonum, quicquid poteſt, à Domino eſt, quia ſine me, aijt Dominus, nihil poteſtis facere: What good ſoeuer a man either willeth, or is able to doe, it is of God: becauſe the Lord ſaith in the Goſpell, Without me you can doe nothing: Hypognoſt. cont. Pelagian. articul. 3. Beſide theſe places of Scripture, which are manifeſt againſt this popiſh error of freewill, wee haue alſo certaine obiections to appoſe them with.

Obiect. 1. If the ſpirit of God doe not draw and enforce the will of man, but onely moue it by perſwaſion, then ſhould we haue no more forcible meanes to leade vs to good, then we haue to ſeduce vs to euill: for Satan dealeth onely by intiſement, and perſwaſion: Euery man is tempted, when hee is withdrawne by his concupiſcence, and entiſed. Auguſtine ſaith: Satanas non cogit inuitum: Satan compelleth none againſt his will: In Pſalm.91. But it is certaine, that the ſpirit of God worketh more ſtrongly in vs vnto life, then the tempter doth vnto deſtruction: for our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, The kingdome of God ſuffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. This ſpirituall violence and force is not wrought onely by perſwaſion: But Hell ſuffereth not violence, many there be that goe in thereat, that is, willingly, and of their owne accord. Auguſtine ſaith well; Nullus vitioſus animus virtute armatũ animum ſuperat: no vitious mind ouercommeth a mind armed with vertue: vertue then is mightier then vice, and a vertuous mind ſtronger then a vitious: De liber. arbitr. cap.12. This ſtrength is wrought by more effectuall meanes, then by perſwaſion: for the will of man naturally is more prone to euill, then to good. And if it were on the one ſide entiſed to euill, on the other but perſwaded and moued onely to good, it would more eaſily be ſwaied that way, then this.

Iames 1.14.
Math.11.12.
Math.7.13.

Obiect.2. Bellarmine ſaith: Habemus dono Dei liberum arbitrium, & hoc dono accepto Domini ſumus actionum: Freewill is the gift of God, and by this gift once receiued, we are made Lords of our owne actions: ſo that it is in our power to doe well or no: Bellarm. lib.5. de grat. cap.29. reſponſ. ad argum.6. So belike, freewill is from God, but man himſelfe maketh it good: for then is the will of man good, when it willeth good things: but it is in mans power, as they ſay, to incline his will to good: Ergo, alſo to make the will it ſelfe. Marke then what followeth hereupon: as Auguſtine very well gathereth: Si libera voluntas à Deo eſt, qua adhuc poteſt bona eſſe vel mala, bona autem ex nobis, melius eſt id, quod à nobis, quam quod à Deo; quod ſi abſurdiſſimum ſit dicere, oportet fateamur, & bonam voluntatem nos à Deo adipiſci: If freewill be of God which may bee yet either good or euill, and a good will of our ſelues, that is better which is of vs, then that which is of God: which if it be moſt abſurd to ſay, wee muſt needes confeſſe, that our good will is alſo of God: De merit. & remiſſion. Cont. Pelag. lib.1. cap.18.

Obiect.3. Bellarmine againe thus writeth, that God inclineth our hearts, Non cogendo, ſed ſuadendo, & inuitando, not by enforcing, but by moouing and inuiting it: ita vt in poteſtate voluntatis relinquatur conſentire vocanti: ſo that it is left in the power of the will to conſent to him that moueth, and calleth: Lib. 5. cap. 29. reſponſ. ad teſtimon. 3. And againe hee ſaith, it is in a mans power, whether hee will bee perſwaded or not, poteſt non perſuaderi: Lib.6. cap.13. reſponſ. ad loc.4.

Who ſeeth not now how neere the Ieſuite commeth to that old Pelagian hereſie: Hominem tantum à Deo adiuuari, reuelando tantum, quod fieri debeat: That man is helped only of God, by reuealing onely what is to be done. Which hereſie Auguſtine confuteth thus; Nos eam gratiam volumus, — qua non ſolum reuelatur ſapientia, ſed amatur: nec ſuadetur ſolum omne bonum, ſed perſuadetur: We vnderſtand ſuch a grace, whereby wiſedome is not onely reuealed, but loued; not propounded, but perſwaded: lib.1. de grat. Chriſti. cap.14. He then that confeſſeth not ſuch a grace of God, whereby we are made to loue that is good, and are throughly perſwaded thereunto, thinketh not as Auguſtine thought, but as the old Pelagians: But thus doth Bellarmine: he ſaith, that, Gratia ſuadendo inclinat, grace doth onely moue; but, homo poteſt non perſuaderi, it is in mans power whether he will be perſwaded: So then, gratia doth ſuadere, non perſuadere, moue, but not perſwade, by his opinion: which is the very poſition of the Pelagians.

Obiect.4. It was another hereſie of the Pelagians: that God to this end gaue his grace to men, Vt quod facere iubentur per liberum arbitrium, facilius implere poſſint per gratiam: That, what they are commanded to doe by their freewill, they may more eaſily accompliſh by grace. What elſe now doe the Rhemiſts ſay giuing this note: That although the Gentiles doe eſpecially beleeue by Gods grace, yet they doe beleeue by their freewill: annot. Act.13.2. And againe, Man was neuer without freewill, but it is made more free by grace: Rhemiſt. Iohn 8. ſect.2. So then grace in their iudgement, helpeth man onely more eſpecially, fully, freely, that is, more eaſily to beleeue: Whereupon it followeth, that they may beleeue without grace, though not ſo eſpecially.

This hereſie Auguſtine confuteth thus: Velo facilius, remo difficilius, tamen & remo itur: iumento facilius, pedibus difficilius, ſed tamen & pedibus peruenitur: Non eſt ſic, (verus magiſter ayt) — ſine me nihil poteſtis facere: As if you ſhould ſay: the veſſell goeth more eaſily with the ſaile, more hardly with the oares, yet it goeth with the oares: A man trauelleth better by horſe, not ſo eaſily a foot, yet hee trauelleth: It is nothing ſo (ſaith Auguſtine) as our maſter witneſſeth, who is true, and cannot lie, Without me you can doe nothing: De verb. Apoſt. ſerm.13.

Thus was it alſo concluded, Concil. Mileuitan. cap.5. Quicunque dixerit ideo nobis gratiam iuſtificationis dari, vt quod facere per liberum iubemur arbitrium, facilius impleamus per gratiam; tanquam etſi gratia non daretur, non quidem facile, ſed tamen poſſemus ſine illa implere diuina mandata, anathema ſit: Dixit enim Chriſtus, ſine me nihil poteſtis facere, non dixit, ſine me difficilius poteſtis facere: Whoſoeuer ſaith that the grace of iuſtification is therefore giuen vs, that, what we are commanded to doe by freewill, we may more eaſily doe by grace: as though if grace were not giuen, we might, though not eaſily, keepe the commandements, let him be accurſed: for Chriſt ſaid, Without me you can doe nothing: he ſaid not, without me you can hardly doe.

Man therefore of himſelfe is vnable, not onelie to ſaile, but to row; not onely to ride, but to goe in the way of righteouſneſſe: But euery good deſire, will, and thought, is wrought in vs by grace. Thus, I truſt, we haue requited our aduerſaries, and anſwered their obiections; and repaied them againe with as many in number, but in waight greater.

Now laſtly, the holy Martyrs haue ſealed this doctrine with their blood: That bleſſed man Maſter Bradford confeſſeth beleefe onely to be Gods gift: whereas Frier Alphonſo, diſputing with him, held on the other ſide, that the act of beleeuing is in mans power: Fox pag. 1619. There were diuers perſons to the number of twentie perſecuted in the townes of Winſon and Mendleſam in Suffolke, anno 1556. for maintaining this article with others, That man had no freewill of himſelfe vnto good, Fox pag. 1913.

Se alſo for this matter, Arauſican. Concil. 2. can. 7. Si quis per naturæ vigorem bonum aliquod, quod ad ſalutem pertinet vitæ æternæ, cogitare, eligere, prædicationi ſalutari conſentire poſſe dicit abſque illuminatione ſpiritus, hæretico fallitur ſpiritu; cum Dominus ait, Sine me nihil poteſtis facere: If any man ſay, that by the ſtrength of nature man can thinke or chooſe any thing, that appertaineth to eternall life, or conſent vnto the preaching of ſaluation, without the illumination of the ſpirit, he is ſeduced with the ſpirit of hereſie: for Chriſt ſaith, Without me ye can doe nothing.

S. Ambroſe: Voluntas nihil habet in ſuis viribus, niſi periculi facilitatem. The will of man hath no power in it ſelfe, but onely a facilitie of ſinning: de vocat. Gent. lib. 2. c. 2. epiſtol. 84. Gratia tota repellitur, niſi tota ſuſcipitur: Grace is wholly refuſed, if it bee not wholly receiued. Grace then worketh wholly, not grace and mans will together.

Homil. de Adam. & Eua.

Chryſoſtome confeſſeth, Deum omnium bonorum effectuum & operum authorem, That God is the author of all good workes and effects — ab ipſius gratia omnia hominis merita prouenire: that all mans merits proceed from his grace: — agit in nobis, vt quod vult & velimus & agamus: he worketh in vs, that we both will and doe, what he willeth, &c.

Ibid. p. 82.

French confeſ. artic. 9. Mans nature is become altogether defiled, and being blind in ſpirit, corrupt in heart hath vtterly loſt all that integritie. Confeſſ. of Wirtenberg. c. 4. As a man being corporally dead is not able by his owne ſtrength to prepare or conuert himſelfe to receiue corporall life; ſo he which is ſpiritually dead, is not able by his owne power to conuert himſelfe to receiue ſpirituall life.

Decret. p. 2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. c. 35. Reſuſcitatus corpore viuit, abſente ſuſcitatore, non autem ſic reſuſcitatus in anima: He that is raiſed in his bodie liueth, though hee be abſent, that raiſed him; but he that is raiſed in his ſoule cannot: Ergo, without grace the ſoule can doe nothing.

Pet. Lombard. vpon theſe words. It is not in him that runneth, or willeth, but in God that ſheweth mercie, &c. reproueth their interpretation that ſay, It is not in mans will onely: and further reaſoneth thus, That if it be not onely in the will, nor onely of mercie, the Apoſtles words might be turned thus, It is not in him that ſheweth mercie, but in him, that willeth, &c. ſo hee concludeth, ideo recte dictum intelligatur, vt totum detur Deo, therefore this is ſo to bee vnderſtood, that the whole may bee giuen vnto God: lib. 2. diſt. 26. liter. b. Ergo, if all bee of grace, nothing remaineth by mans will to be performed.

AN APPENDIX OF AVGVSTINES IVDGEMENT, throughly diſcuſſed concerning Freewill.

BEcauſe this learned Father, and in his time the moſt zealous defender of the grace of God againſt the power of freewill, and the mightieſt impugner of the hereſie of the Pelagians, hath written at large of this matter; and more without all queſtion, then any of the fathers beſide: I will therefore produce the teſtimonies alleaged on both ſides, that in the end it may appeare, which way the iudgement of this father enclined.

4 Lib. 4. contr. Iulian. c. 3. Tolerabilius illas, quas in impijs dicis eſſe virtutes, &c. More tolerably thoſe vertues, which you ſay are in the wicked, you ſhould rather aſcribe diuino muneri, to the diuine gift, then to their will, though they know it not. Bellarm. lib.5. de grat.c.9.

Anſw. This place maketh againſt Bellarmine, for a Auguſtine would haue the vertues euen in Infidels aſcribed in ſome ſort to the gift of God, rather then to their owne will.

5. Lib. de perfect. iuſtit. contr. Cæleſtin. That place being obiected out of S. Paul, Quod vult faciat, let him doe what he will: Auguſtine anſwereth thus: quaſi pro magno habendum ſit, velle nubere: as though it were ſuch a great matter, to haue a will to marrie: where we reaſon of the aſſiſtance of Gods mercy; hence Bellarmine concludeth a free will in morall workes without grace. obiect.

Anſw. This place alſo maketh againſt him: for to haue a will to marry, is naturall, neither good nor euill: but to marry to ſuch end as God hath appointed marriage, is a good worke, and is not in mans will without Gods helpe: as it followeth in the ſame place, Quaſi prodeſt aliquid velle, &c. As though in this caſe it auailed to will, vnleſſe God by his prouidence doe ioyne the man and the woman.

6. Hypognoſtic. lib. 3. Eſſe fatemur liberum arbitrium, &c. We confeſſe a free will, not by the which it is fit to begin or finiſh things appertaining to God, ſed tantum in operibus vitæ præſentis, tam bonis quam malis, but onely in the workes of this preſent life, either good, or euill: Bonis dico, quæ de bona natura oriuntur, &c. I call thoſe good things, which doe come of the goodneſſe of nature, as to worke in the field, to eate, to drinke, &c. Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. All this we grant, that naturall and ciuill workes are in mans power, as to worke, to eate, to drinke: but to doe theſe things well, and to referre them to the glory of God, which is the morall goodneſſe of theſe actions, is from God, and not from mans will.

7. Auguſtin. lib. 1. de liber. arbitrio, c. 12. Vides in voluntate noſtra eſſe conſtitutum, &c. You ſee it is in our will, whether we enioy ſo great a good, or want it, &c. Againe, Quis peccat in eo quod nullo modo caueri poteſt, &c. Who ſinneth in that which cannot be ſhunned: but we ſinne, Ergo, it may bee ſhunned, Bellarm. lib. 5. c. 27.

8. Lib. 2. de animab. 12. Peccatorum reum quenquam: For a man to be held guilty of ſin, becauſe he did not that, which he could not doe, ſumma inſania eſt, is great madneſſe: wherefore, the ſoules, that which they doe, if they doe it of nature, not of will, if they want a free motion to doe or not to do, &c. they cannot be held guilty of ſinne, Bellarm. ibid.

9. Lib. 2. actor. cum Felice. Manich. c. 3. Eſſe liberum arbitrium, & inde peccare quemque ſi velit, &c. That there is a free will, and thereby euery one may ſinne if he will, and not ſinne if he will not, is euident in the Scripture: Againe, Habet vnuſquiſque in voluntate, aut eligere, quæ bona ſunt, &c. Euery man hath in his will, either to chuſe the good, and ſo to be a good tree, or to chuſe the euill, and to be an euill tree, ibid.

Anſw. 1. I anſwere here for Auguſtine, as Hierome for himſelfe, who diſputing againſt Iouinian, who ſeemed to extenuate Virginity, falleth into the other extreame to be thought to condemne Mariage; ſaith he, Debuerat prudens lector, ea, quæ videntur duriora, æſtimare de cæteris, &c. The diſcreet Reader ſhould eſteeme and meaſure the hard ſayings by the reſt, and not to accuſe me, in one and the ſame booke to bring forth contrary ſentences: Quis enim ita hebes, &c. Who is ſo blockiſh to praiſe and condemne the ſame thing? Againe, Aliud eſt docere diſcipulum, aliud aduerſarium vincere. It is one thing to teach a diſciple; another to confute an aduerſary: are ye angry with me, quia Iouinianum non docuerim, ſed vicerim, becauſe I did not teach Iouinian, but confute him? apolog. ad Pammach. The like may be ſaid for Auguſtine: Do we thinke he was ſo forgetfull or vnſkilfull, as one while to extoll free will, another to depraue and impare it? wee muſt conſider againſt whom hee writeth, namely the Manichees, who imputed ſinne to the neceſſity of nature: Auguſtine dealing againſt them, when hee ſpeaketh of free will, doth conuince rather then teach them.

2. Let vs giue Auguſtine leaue to expound himſelfe: Who Lib. 1. retract. c. 9. thus ſaith, Cùm de libera voluntate rectè faciendi loquimur, de illa, in qua homo factus eſt, loquimur: When we ſpeake of the free will of doing well, we ſpeake of that will, wherein man was made: Thus if we vnderſtand Auguſtine ſpeaking of free will, we willingly grant all. Belarmines exception is a meere cauill, that Auguſtine ſhould affirme the ſame will to chuſe good or euill to bee in vs, that was in Adam, but not the ſame power of execution. Contra. 1. He ſpeaketh directly, de voluntate, non poteſtate rectè faciendi, of the will not the power of doing well, which he ſaith was in Adam, and not in vs. Secondly, hee elſewhere ſaith, Vitiato libero arbitrio, totus homo vitiatus eſt: That free will being corrupt, man wholly was corrupted. Hypognoſtic. c. 3. If man wholly, then his will alſo wholly was corrupt; then conſequently the freedome of his will to good and euill was corrupted.

3. Auguſtine further expoundeth himſelfe, and lib. 1. retract. c. 9. treating of his bookes De libero arbitrio, hee retracteth or rather explaneth this very ſentence vrged before, loc. 7. as that ſinne may bee ſhunned, that a man may liue well if he will: he thus explaneth himſelfe, Voluntatem bene non velle, niſi à Deo liberetur, That the will cannot will well, vnleſſe Goe make it free: Et nihil poſſe ſentienti, intelligenti bonum occurrere, &c. And that nothing that is good, can come into the ſenſe or vnderſtanding, but from God: thus if we will giue Auguſtine leaue to expound himſelfe; where hee treateth of free will to doe good, he muſt bee vnderſtood to include a neceſſarie ſenſe of Gods grace, whereby it is made free, and not by nature.

10. Lib. de ver. religion. c. 14. Non dubitandum video, &c. It is not to be doubted, that the minde hath free will: for God would haue his ſeruants to ſerue him freely, which cannot be, ſi non voluntate ſed neceſſitate ſeruirent, if they ſhould ſerue him not willingly, but of neceſſitie, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. By neceſſitie Auguſtine vnderſtandeth the forcing and conſtraining of the will: as before loc. 2. Nullo modo cogimur tollere; We are not compelled to take away free will, becauſe of Gods preſcience: likewiſe ſuch a neceſſitie, as the heathen aſcribed to the ſtarres, and fatall deſtinie, in free will he denieth, lib. de incarnat. verbi. c. 2. but ſuch a voluntarie neceſſitie, whereby the will cannot now chuſe, but willingly ſinne, Auguſtine affirmeth, Lib. 1. retract. c. 9. treating of his bookes de libero arbitrio, &c. That man cannot now reſtraine from luſtfull concupiſcence; Non natura eſt primo inſtituti hominis, ſed pœna damnati, it is not the nature of the man firſt created, but the puniſhment of him being condemned: if homo non poteſt, if a man cannot abſtaine, how is there not a neceſſitie laid vpon him? 2. God indeede will haue vs to ſerue him willingly and freely, but as Auguſtine elſe-where ſaith, Ex nolentibus, volentes facit, of nilling he maketh vs willing: and as S. Ambroſe; Virtus nulla nolentium eſt, ſed ipſa gratia hoc agit: There is no vertue, where vnwillingneſſe; but grace it ſelfe worketh this: that is, that we are willing, lib. 2. de vocat. Gent. c. 9. Hitherto then Auguſtines ſenſe is maintained to be ſound and good.

11. Lib. de grat. & liber. arbit. c. 1. Reuelauit Deus per Scripturas, eſſe in homine liberum arbitrium: God hath reuealed by the Scriptures, that there is a free will in man, Bellarm. c. 28.

12. Epiſtol. 47. Catholica fides neque negat liberum arbitrium: The Catholike faith neither denieth free will in man, neq; tantum tribuit, vt ſine gratia valeat aliquid, neither doth it attribute ſo much vnto it, as though it could doe any thing without grace, Bellarm. c. 28.

13. Lib. 1. de nupt. & concupiſc. Non negamus liberum arbitrium: We denie not free will: lib. 1. ad Bonif. c. 2. Quis noſtrum dicit? Which of vs ſaith? That by the ſinne of the firſt man free will is loſt from mankinde, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. Auguſtine expoundeth himſelfe, loc. 12. how he vnderſtandeth free will, that it cannot doe any thing at all that is good, without grace: and elſe-where, he calleth it liberam voluntatem, propter gratiam Dei, a free will becauſe of Gods grace, which doth free it from the law of ſinne, act. cont. Fortunat. diſput. 2. 2. In that he ſaith, the free will, which Adam had is not loſt, he vnderſtandeth a libertie from coaction, and forcing: 1. as thus he defineth the will, Voluntas eſt motus ad aliquid faciendum nullo cogente: The will is a motion to doe any thing without forcing: this libertie of will remaineth ſtill. 2. Yet Auguſtine acknowledgeth that our will by nature is not free from neceſſitie: Poſtquam ille libera voluntate peccauit, nos in neceſſitatem præcipitati ſumus: After Adam had ſinned by his free will, we were precipitate into neceſſitie; and he giueth this example: as before a man is accuſtomed to a thing, he hath free will to doe it, or not to doe it; but afterward, conſuetudine ſic implicatur vt poſtea vincere non poteſt, quod ſua libertate fabricata eſt: When the will is entangled with cuſtome, it cannot ouercome that, which firſt it willingly deuiſed: As many would not ſweare, yet by cuſtome they cannot forbeare: act. 2. diei cont. Fortunat. Such a voluntarie neceſſitie Adam by his ſinne hath brought vpon his poſteritie. 3. Auguſtine ſaith, Primum liberum arbitrium poſſe non peccare, nouiſſimum non poſſe peccare: The firſt free will, was to be able not to ſinne, the laſt (in heauen) not to haue abilitie to ſinne, lib. 22. de ciuitat. Dei, c. 30. As they ſhall haue a free will with a neceſſitie of not ſinning, ſo we by nature haue a free will with neceſſitie of ſinning.

14. Auguſtine lib. de grat. & liber. arbit. c. 2. Illa præcepta diuina homini non prodeſſent, &c. The diuine precepts ſhould not profite a man, vnleſſe he had free will: quomodo iubet, how doth God command, if there be no free will, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſhall expound himſelfe, who thus anſwereth the like obiection of the Pelagians, taken from the precepts of Scripture: Spiritu dei aguntur filij dei, vt agant, non vt ipſi nihil agant, & ad hoc eis oſtenditur quid agere debeant: The children of God are wrought by the ſpirit, that they ſhould worke, not that they ſhould doe nothing, and therefore it is ſhewed them, what they ſhould doe: And againe, O homo in præceptione cognoſce, quid debeas habere, in correptione cognoſce tuo te vitio non habere; in oratione cognoſce, vnde accipias, quod vis habere: O man, in the precept know what thou oughteſt to haue; in the rebuke, that by thine owne fault thou haſt it not; in prayer acknowledge, whence thou muſt receiue that thou wouldeſt haue: de cor. & grat. c. 3. Wherefore then the precepts of Scripture are to this end, to ſhew man, what hee ſhould doe, and to driue him to ſeeke that at Gods hands, which is commanded; they demonſtrate a free will in man, but to bee wrought and directed by the ſpirit.

15. Auguſt. epiſt. 89. qu. 2. Neq; voluntatis arbitrium ideo tollitur, quia iuuatur &c. Neither is free will taken away, becauſe it is helped; but therefore it is helped, becauſe it is not taken away, Bellarm. ibid. That is not helped, that is not; therefore there is free will in man, becauſe it is helped, Bellarm. rurſus, lib. 6. c. 11. tit. 2.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſhall here alſo expound himſelfe: Adiutor noſter Deus eſt, nec adiuuari poteſt, niſi qui ſponte aliquid conatur: God is our helper, neither can a man be helped, vnleſſe he doe ſomewhat of himſelfe: then it followeth, Quia non ſicut in lapidibus inſenſatis, &c. Becauſe God worketh not ſaluation in vs as in ſenſeleſſe ſtones, or as in vnreaſonable creatures, de peccator. merit. & remiſſion. cont. Pelag. lib. 2. c. 5. His opinion then is, that God is ſaid to helpe our will, in reſpect of the naturall facultie of willing, becauſe man hath reaſon, will, and vnderſtanding by nature: but to will that which is good, man is not only helped, but altogether guided and directed by grace: as he ſaith in another place, Laborant homines inuenire in voluntate, quid boni ſit noſtrum, &c. Men doe labour to finde in the will ſome goodneſſe, which is not of God, which how it can be found, I am vtterly ignorant. *ibid.c.*18.

Bernard hath the like ſaying, Liberum arbitrium nos facit volentes, gratia bene volentes, ex ipſo nobis eſt velle, ex ipſa bonum velle: Free will maketh vs willing, grace well willing; from that we haue power to will, from the other power to will that is good: lib. de liber. arbitr. Thus then mans will and grace worke together, man by nature willeth, by grace he willeth that is good.

16. *Auguſt. in Pſal.*7. Diabolo non conſentire in poteſtate noſtra eſſe voluit: Not to conſent to the diuell God would haue it in our power: *de ſpirit. & liter. c.*34. Conſentire vocationi dei, vel ab ea diſſentire propria voluntatis eſt: To conſent to Gods calling, or diſſent from it, it is in mans owne will, *Bellarm. ibid. cap.*18. & *lib.*6. *cap.*11. *Tom.*3.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſaith, that it is in the will of man to conſent, &c. but this wil muſt be prepared, and wrought of God: firſt, thus he expoundeth himſelfe, *lib.*1. *retractat. c.*22. making mention of his book againſt Adimantius, he had affirmed, that it was in mans power to change his will: Sed poteſtas iſta nulla eſt, niſi à Deo datur: But this is no power, vnleſſe it be giuen of God. And againe, *lib.*2. *cap.*1. hee correcteth that ſaying in his booke ad Simplician. that it is in vniuſcuiuſque poteſtate, vt velit: in euery mans power to will: à Deo voluntas præparatur, the will alſo muſt bee prepared of God. Secondly, hee further thus explaneth himſelfe: Siue iniquitas, ſiue iuſtitia: Whether iniquitie or righteouſneſſe, vnleſſe they were in our will, they could not be in our power, being not in our power, there ſhould be neither iuſt reward, nor puniſhment: Ignorantia verò & infirmitas, &c. But this ignorance and infirmitie, that either man knoweth not, what he ought to will; or cannot doe that which hee willeth, ex occulto pœnarum ordine venit, proceedeth from the ſecret order of puniſhment: *cont. Fauſt. lib.*22. *cap.*78. Here he affirmeth, that both good and euill is in mans will and power; and yet that mans will by nature is ſo blinde and weake, as that it can neither will, nor worke that, which it ought: wherefore the power of the will to good is not of it ſelfe, but of grace. Thirdly, ſo then as Bernard ſaith, Nec bonus nec malus eſt quiſpiam niſi volens: No man is either good or euill againſt his will: but (ſaith hee) Deus facit voluntarios, vt non ſaluet inuitos, God maketh them willing, that they be not ſaued vnwilling, lib. de liber. arbit. Wherefore it is mans will that conſenteth to God, and conſenteth not to the diuell, but his will reformed and made free or willing by grace. Thoſe places are alleaged by Bellarmine, to proue the power of mans will in morall duties: theſe following are produced to ſet forth the cooperation or ioynt working of Gods grace, and mans will in ſpirituall workes.

17. *Auguſt. lib.*1. *retract. cap.*22. In noſtra poteſtate poſitum, &c. It is in our owne power to change our will, &c. ſed ea poteſtas nulla eſt niſi detur à Deo: but that is no power, vnleſſe it bee giuen of God: Preparetur voluntas à Deo, The will is prepared of God: *Bellarm. lib.*6. *cap.*11. The will then being prepared of God, obeyeth, &c.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſaith in direct termes, Poteſtas nulla eſt, &c. That mans will hath no power at all, vnleſſe it be giuen of God: Ergo, if all the power be of God, there is no power in mans will.

18. Many other places are heaped vp to the like purpoſe: *Tom.*4. *lib.*1 ad Simplician. Vt velimus ſuum eſſe voluit & noſtrum: To will he would haue it both his and ours; his in calling, ours in obeying, Bellarm. ibid.

19. *Tom.*5. *lib.*5. *de ciuitat. cap.*10. Multa facimus, quæ ſi nollemus, non faceremus: Wee doe many things, which if we would not, we ſhould not doe them.

20. Tom 6. *lib.*2. actor. contr. Felicem: Habet vnuſquiſque in voluntate: Euery man hath it in his owne will to chuſe the good, and ſo become a good tree; or the euill, and ſo bee made an euill tree: Nemo niſi deus, facere arbores poteſt, None but God can make trees.

21. *Tom.*7. *lib.*2. *de remiſſ. peccat. cap.*5. Adiutor Deus, &c. God is the helper, neither can he be helped, which doth not ſomewhat of himſelfe, Bellarm. ibid.

22. *Lib. de natur. grat. cap.*32. Illo operante cooperamur: He working we worke together, becauſe his mercie doth preuent vs.

23. *Lib. de prædeſt. cap.*3. Vtrumque noſtrum eſt: Both are ours, to loue and beleeue, becauſe of free will, and both are giuen by the ſpirit of faith.

24. *De grat. & liber. arbit. cap.*15. Ne autem putetur, nihil ibi facere homines per liberum, &c. Leaſt it ſhould be thought, that man doth nothing by his free will, it is ſaid, Harden not your hearts.

25. *Lib. de grat. c.*14. Arbitrium niſi adiutum, &c. No man commeth, vnleſſe his will be helped. *Lib.*2. *cont.*2. *epiſt. Pelag. c.*8. Niſi adiuuante illo: Vnleſſe he helpe, we can doe nothing.

26. *Tom.*8. *in titul. Pſal.*71. Non erat in poteſtate tua, &c. It was not in thy power to be borne of Adam, it is in thy power to beleeue in Chriſt.

27. *Tom.*9. *tract.*72. in Ioann. Credere in Chriſtum, &c. To beleeue in Chriſt, is the worke of Chriſt: this he worketh in vs, but not without vs: With Chriſt working iuſtification, man worketh together.

28. *Tom.*10. *ſerm.*15. de verb. Apoſtol. Totum ex Deo, &c. All is of God: but wee muſt not bee as aſleepe to doe nothing, to will nothing: Sine voluntate tua, non erit in te iuſtitia dei: Without thy will the righteouſneſſe of God ſhall not be in thee: he that made thee without thee, doth not iuſtifie thee without thee: *Bellarm. lib.*6. *cap.*11.

Anſw. Firſt, in all theſe places, where wee are ſaid to worke together with grace, and to bee helped by grace, loc. 20. 21. 24. and that God doth not iuſtifie vs without vs, 28. Auguſtine vnderſtandeth onely the naturall power and actiuity of the will, which as it willeth, ſo it is actiue, and worketh together with grace, and is helped and aſſiſted; but as it willeth that which is good, it is altogether paſſiue, and worketh not, but is wrought vpon: 1. How elſe ſhould all be of God, as he ſaith, loc. 28? and we muſt onely not be as men aſleepe: and as elſe where he ſaith; Neque ſic templum ſuum de vobis ædificat Deus, quaſi de lapidibus, qui non habent motum ſuum: Neither doth God ſo build his temple of you, as of ſtones, that haue no motion: Serm. 13. de tempore. Mans naturall power then of willing, muſt be added to Gods grace that maketh it to will well. 2. This is further teſtified by Auguſtine, that our actiuity to goodneſſe is altogether of Gods grace, and the mouing of his ſpirit: Ergo agimur (inquies) non agimus: therefore you will ſay we are done to, we doe not. The anſwere followeth: Immo & agis & ageris, & tum bene agis, cùm à bono agaris: Yea thou art both done to, and thou doeſt, and then thou doeſt well, when thou art done to, and art driuen of that which is good: ſerm. 13. de tempor. The will then cannot doe well, but as it is driuen: See our anſwere before ad loc. 14. 15.

Secondly, concerning the precepts in Scripture, whereby Auguſtine inſinuateth free will, loc. 23. his further iudgement of that matter is this: Ad hoc lex præcepit iſta, vt cum in his implendis homo deficeret, non ſe extollat ſuperbia tumidus, ſed ad gratiam confugiat fatigatus: To this end hath the law commanded theſe things, that when man ſeeth himſelfe to faile in the fulfilling thereof, hee ſhould not by pride be lifted vp: but being wearied in himſelfe, haue recourſe to grace: cont. Celeſtin. de perfect. iuſtit. reſponſ. ad ration. 11. Wee ſee he confeſſeth, that without grace man hath no power to performe the precepts enioyned.

Thirdly, where Auguſtine ſaith, it is in a mans will to chuſe good or euill, loc. 19. to beleeue in Chriſt, loc. 25. 26. he before expounded himſelfe, loc. 19. Deus ſolum facit arbores, &c. God onely maketh good trees: The will then of man hath this power, but not from it ſelfe, but from God: Poteſtas nulla eſt, &c. It is no power, vnleſſe it be giuen of God: as before I alleaged out of Auguſtine in our anſwere ad loc. 16. And that this is the reſolute iudgement of Auguſtine, that man hath no power of will by nature to any good thing, it euery where appeareth in his workes: Libertas non periſſet ſi bona permanſiſſet voluntas: ſed quia peccauit voluntas, ſequuta eſt peccantem peccatum habendi dura neceſſitas: Liberty of will had not periſhed if the will had remained good; but becauſe his will ſinned, there followed and fell vpon the ſinner an hard neceſſity of ſinning: cont. Celeſtin. de perfect. iuſtit. reſp. ad ration. 9. Here Auguſtine ſaith, that there is in the will by nature a neceſſity to ſinne; how then can it haue any inclination to good.

Againe, Vt homo in peccatum iret, &c. For a man to runne into ſin his owne free will ſufficeth, whereby he corrupted himſelfe; vt autem redeat ad iuſtitiam; but to returne to righteouſneſſe, hee had need of a Phyſition, becauſe he is not ſound, opus habet viuificatore, quia mortuus, hee had need of a reuiuer, becauſe he is dead: lib. de natur. & grat. cont. Pelag. cap. 23. If mans will be then dead by nature, it hath no life nor actiuity at all.

And to conclude, he thus teſtifieth, lib. de predeſtinat. & grat. cap. 9. Liberum quod à Deo habemus arbitrium, &c. The free will, which we haue of God, is prone to wickedneſſe, & cum ad virtutis indolem deo deſerente nihil poſſit, ad genus omne peccati idonea fultum virtute ſubſiſtit: and hauing no power, or being able to doe nothing vnto vertue, it hath ſufficient ſtrength of it ſelfe to all kinde of ſinne. Heere is an euident teſtimonie, that the will, nihil poſſit, can doe nothing of it ſelfe to attaine vnto vertue.

Thus (I truſt) I haue ſufficiently anſwered the obiections out of Auguſtine, now I will proceed to alleage ſuch euident and cleere teſtimonies out of his workes, whereby it may appeare, that he was an vtter enemy to the naturall power of free will to good.

The Proteſtants.

THe teſtimonies out of Auguſtine againſt the power or ability of free will naturally vnto good, are theſe.

1. Epiſtol. 106. Sine gratia ad non peccandum nihil voluntatis arbitrium valere: The will without grace hath no power at all not to ſinne.

Anſw. Firſt, his meaning is, that the will without grace hath no power to liue altogether without ſinne, not to abſtaine from ſome one ſinne: for Auguſtine ſaith, Si ita eſt, nullus locus adiutorio gratiæ reſeruatur: If it be ſo, there is no place left for the helpe of grace. Grace is not excluded, if ſomething bee left to the will, but if all be aſcribed to it. Secondly, by not ſinning hee may vnderſtand, the reſiſting of tentation, which the will cannot doe without grace: Bellarm. lib. 5. cap. 11. reſponſ. ad argum. 2.

Contra. Firſt, if ad non peccandum, not to ſin, were ad viuendum ſine peccato, all one, as to liue without ſinne, Auguſtine had ſaid iuſt nothing: for euen with grace the will of man hath no power to liue altogether without ſinne: He ſpeaketh then of that which is poſſible in this life, to abſtaine from ſome ſinne, not of that which is impoſſible to liue without any ſinne.

Secondly, the conſequent is good, that grace muſt be either wholly admitted, or wholly refuſed: Saint Paul ſo reaſoneth, If of grace, it is no more of work: for grace were no grace, &c. the grace then of God and the worke of mans will cannot ſtand together. Ambroſe likewiſe ſaith, epiſt. 84. Gratia dei tota repellitur, niſi tota recipitur: Grace is wholly refuſed, if it be not wholly receiued.

Thirdly, it is well you confeſſe, that a mans will without grace cannot reſiſt temptation, for thus you confeſſe the cauſe, that ſinne cannot be auoided without grace: for there is no ſinne, which commeth not by temptation. Euery man is tempted, when he is drawne by his owne concupiſcence: therefore if the will cannot reſiſt temptation without grace, it cannot reſiſt ſinne, and conſequently not doe any good without grace. Iam.1.14.

2. Enchirid. cap.30. Quid boni operari poteſt perditus, niſi in quantum à perditione liberatus? What good can a man of perdition doe, but as he is freed from perdition? Now, euery one by nature is the childe of wrath and perdition: therefore by nature no good can be done.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of ſuch good workes as tend to ſaluation, which indeede cannot bee done without grace; ibid. reſp. ad 3. loc.

Contra. Firſt, the Scripture counteth no workes good, but corrupt and euill, which are not reaped of the ſpirit to life euerlaſting: Galath.6.8. He that ſoweth to the fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reape corruption, and nothing elſe: He that ſoweth to the ſpirit, ſhall of the ſpirit reape life euerlaſting. Secondly, Auguſtine ſaith directly; Scito nos illum bonum hominem dicere, illam voluntatem bonam, illud opus bonum, per quod ſolum homo poteſt ad æternum dei regnum perduci: Know this, that I call him a good man, and that a good will, and that a good worke, by the which onely a man may be brought to Gods euerlaſting kingdome, lib.4. cont. Iulian. c.3. Ergo, in Auguſtines iudgement thoſe are not to be counted good workes at all, which tend not to ſaluation. Thirdly, Auguſtine affirmeth, Etiam ipſa bona opera, quæ faciunt infideles non ipſorum eſſe, ſed illius qui bene vtitur malis: Euen the good workes of Infidels, are not theirs, but his, who vſeth euill things well: cont. Iulian. lib.4. cap.3. Euen theſe works, though they be not perfectly good, are of the diuine gift rather, then of mans will. Galath.6.8.

Loc.3. Auguſt. lib.2. de remiſſ. peccat. cap.18. Si voluntas aut bona eſt, aut mala, & vtique malam non habemus ex deo, reſtat vt bonam voluntatem habeamus ex deo: If the will be either good, or euill, and we haue not an euill will from God; it remaineth, that we haue a good will from God.

Anſw. By a good will here is vnderſtood the power of the will, and not the act: for a will that is not good may bring forth ſome good act, as the good will of a righteous man may bring forth ſin: Bellar. ibid. reſp. ad arg.4.

Contra. Firſt, that a good act can proceed from a will that is not good, is contrarie to the Scripture; A corrupt tree cannot bring foorth good fruite. Secondly, if a righteous man bring foorth an euill worke, it commeth not from his regenerate will, but from his ſinfull and corrupt will. It is not I, but the ſinne that dwelleth in me. Thirdly, whereas hee ſaith, the good act of the euill will, is ex bono naturæ, of the naturall goodneſſe: hee ſpeaketh contraries: for how can there be any good thing in an euill will or minde? As Auguſtine ſaith, Laborant homines inuenire in ipſa voluntate, quid boni ſit noſtrum, &c. Men doe labour to finde ſomewhat in the will that is good, which is not of God; which how it can be found, or ſhewed, I am vtterly ignorant: de peccator. merit. & remiſſ. contr. Pelag. c.18. Matth.7.18. Rom.7.20.

Loc.4.5. Auguſtine lib.1. cont. 2. epiſt. Pelag. cap. vltim. affirmeth, Bonum vſum liberi arbitrij eſſe ex Deo: That the good vſe of the free will is of God. Lib.3. cont. 2. epiſt. Pelag. cap.8. Liberum arbitrium captiuatum non niſi ad peccatum valet: Free will being captiued by ſinne, cannot doe any thing but ſinne.

Anſw. He is ſaid to vſe free will well, not that doth one or two good morall workes, but that liueth well, and this is of grace; as he is not ſaid to write well, that can make two or three letters well: ſo the free will by nature is ſaid to haue no power but to ſinne, becauſe for the moſt part it ſinneth: Bellarm. ibid. reſp. ad loc.5.6.

Contra. Firſt, yet hee that can make two or three letters well, can write ſomewhat well; but the will of it ſelfe can doe nothing well: as our Sauiour ſaith, Without me you can doe nothing. And Aug. before, loc.1. Nihil valet: The will can doe nothing at all. And lib. de prædeſt. & grat. c.9. Ad virtutis indolem deo deſerente nihil poteſt: If God doe leaue, that is, not aſſiſt the will, it can doe nothing to the attaining of vertue. And againe, Nulla poteſtas niſi ex deo data: There is no power at all, but giuen of God: lib.1. retract. cap.22. If there be no power in the will, then at no time, neither to doe any good thing: wherefore Bellarmine doth very fondly wreſt Auguſtines words againſt his owne ſenſe. Ioh.15.5.

Loc.6. Enchirid. c.30. Libero arbitrio male vtens homo, & ſe perdidit & ipſum, &c. Man vſing free will euill, loſt himſelfe, and it. Victore peccato, amiſſum eſt liberum arbitrium: Sinne being conqueror, free will was loſt.

Anſw. Hee meaneth not, that free will is vtterly extinct, as man himſelfe is not but onely made worſe; as things are not periſhed, but loſt, that are taken by the enemie in battell: ſo the libertie of grace only is loſt, not the libertie of nature: Bellarm. c.30. lib.5. reſponſ. ad loc.1.

Contra. 1. Neither doe we ſay, that free will or the nature of man is wholly extinct, but there remaineth a freeneſſe in the will ſtill, a freedome from coaction or conſtraint, which is the libertie of nature, but there is no freedome to good without Gods aſſiſtance, which is the libertie of grace: ſo Auguſtine ſaith; Natura tota fuit per liberum arbitrium in ipſa radice vitiata: The whole nature of man was corrupted in the roote by free will, tract.87. in Ioan. If the whole be corrupted, then no part thereof remaineth vncorrupt. 2. This the ſimilitude of captiuitie ſheweth; for like as hee that is a priſoner,or taken captiue,walketh not whither he would,but is led whither he would not; as Chriſt ſaith to Peter: ſo the will of man being captiued to ſin,becommeth wholly the ſeruant thereof. Know ye not,that to whomſoeuer you giue your ſelues as ſeruants to obey,his ſeruants ye are,to whom ye obey? Ioh.21.18. Rom.6.16.

Loc.7. Epiſt.144. Sine gratia Dei non poteſt libera eſſe voluntas,&c. Without grace the will cannot be free,being ſubiect to the concupiſcence ouercomming it.

Loc.8. De ſpirit. & liter.c.30. Per gratiam ſanatio anima à vitio peccati, per anima ſanitatem libertas arbitrij,per arbitrij libertatem dilectio iuſtitia: By grace,the healing of the ſoule commeth from the corruption of ſinne; by the health of the ſoule,the libertie of the will; by the libertie of the will, the loue of righteouſneſſe.

Loc.9. Lib.de corrept.& grat.c.13. Peccant per liberum arbitrium,non liberatum: They ſinne by free will,but not yet freed,that is,by grace: Ergo,there is no libertie or freedome of the will to good, without grace.

Anſw. Bellarmine anſwereth to all theſe places; that Auguſtine ſpeaketh of the libertie of grace, not of the libertie of nature: for although the will be the ſeruant of ſinne without grace,yet it is free à naturali neceſſitate,from naturall neceſſitie: as the eye, though it cannot exerciſe the ſight without light; yet ſimply it can ſee of it ſelfe,ibid.reſponſ.ad 4.5.7.loc.

Contra. He hath granted as much as wee deſire: for like as there is in the eye a poſſibilitie of ſeeing; but yet without the light it cannot diſcerne this or that: ſo wee ſay that it is in mans power by nature to will without conſtraint; but it cannot will any thing that is good, without the illumination of grace: as Bernard ſaith,Ex ipſo nobis eſt velle,ex ipſa bonum velle: Of the will it is that we doe will; of grace,that wee will that is good. A libertie then of the will ſimply and abſolutely wee grant by nature; but to will that which is good,proceedeth from the libertie of grace: All this ſeemeth by Bellarmine to be acknowledged,which we willingly condeſcend vnto.

Loc.10. Lib.1.retract.c.15. Qui cogenti cupiditati bona voluntate reſiſtere non poteſt,iam hoc ita peccatum eſt,vt ſit etiam pœna peccati: He that cannot reſiſt his forcing concupiſcence by a good will, it is ſo ſinne in him,that it is alſo the puniſhment of ſinne.

Loc.11. Lib.de corrept.& grat.c.12. Si relinqueretur ipſis ſua voluntas, vt in adiutorio Dei manerent ſi vellent,&c. If they ſhould be left to their owne will,to continue in Gods helpe,if they would, through ſo many and great temptations, their will through it infirmitie would giue place: Et ideo perſeuerare non poſſent, quia deficientes infirmitate nec vellent: And therefore they cannot perſeuere or continue,becauſe failing by infirmitie,they will not.

Loc.12. Ex libro de perfect.iuſtit.reſponſ.9. Quia peccauit voluntas, ſequuta eſt peccantem peccatum habendi dura neceſſitas: Becauſe the will ſinned,there followed vpon the partie ſinning,a neceſſitie of hauing ſinne,&c. Here it is confeſſed by Auguſtine, that by nature the will cannot otherwiſe doe but ſinne,and therefore hath no power of it ſelfe to doe any thing,that is good.

Anſw. The ſumme of Bellarmines anſwere to all theſe places is this; that this neceſſitie or impotencie of the will,is conditionall,not abſolute, quia poteſt auxilium Dei implorare, becauſe man may ſue for Gods helpe; which if he doe not,it is his owne fault: ſo then there is no ſuch neceſſitie affirmed by Auguſtine,in any of theſe places,that taketh away the libertie of the will, Bellarm. ibid.reſp. ad 3.6.8.teſtim.

*Contra.*1. Thus Bellarmine fighteth with himſelfe,affirming,that without the inuocation of Gods helpe,the will hath no power to reſiſt the concupiſcence,and conſequently not to doe any thing that is good: if it be then of grace, how can it be of nature? 2. We affirme that this neceſſitie of nature is not ſo abſolute,but by the condition of Gods grace and aſſiſtance it may be looſed: but it is not in euery mans power by nature, to receiue this condition, and to ſue vnto God for his helpe. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith,We know not what to pray as wee ought,but the ſpirit helpeth our infirmities: it is then of the ſpirit,that we haue a minde to pray,not by nature. 2. Auguſtine ſaith, Quantum eſt quod valet voluntas ſub dominante cupiditate, niſi fortè ſi pia eſt, vt oret auxilium? What is it, that the will can doe being ſubiect vnto luſt,vnleſſe it being godly,doe pray for helpe? lib.1.retract.c.15. It muſt firſt then be godly,before it can ſue for grace; but godlineſſe is not by nature: and againe, Sine Deo bonum opus—nec incipere,nec perficere poſſit: Without God,it can neither begin,nor finiſh a good work: Hypognoſtic.lib.3. Ergo, without grace a man cannot pray. Rom.8.26.

3. This neceſſitie of nature,which cannot but ſinne, taketh not away the libertie of the will: as Bernard ſaith,Nemo nec malus nec bonus eſt,niſi volens: No man is either good or euil againſt his will: ſo he, that doth that which is good willingly, is made willing by grace; and hee that doth euill,is thereto made willing by the corruption of his owne nature.

Loc.13. Lib.2. de peccat.remiſſ.c.18. Laborant homines inuenire in noſtra voluntate, quid boni ſit noſtrum,quod non ſit ex Deo: Men doe labour to finde ſome good thing in the will,which is ours, and not of God,which I am vtterly ignorant,how it can be found.

Anſw. Auguſtines meaning is, that free will of it ſelfe doth not worke together with God, but by the gift of preuenting grace: Bellarm.lib.6.c.14.reſp.ad argum.1.

Contra. 1. If it bee by the gift and working of grace, that the will worketh with grace,it is that which wee affirme,that the will worketh not vnto good, but by the efficacie of grace. 2. If hee ſay, that Grace doth but giue the hint,as it were, and the beginning, and the will followeth then of it owne accord; then is there ſome good to bee found in the will, which is not of grace, which Auguſtine heere denieth. Thus then wee enforce this teſtimonie: If will worke any thing of it ſelfe without grace, then Auguſtine is deceiued, which hee denieth; if it doe not, that is confeſſed, which wee conclude.

Loc.14. Lib.de grat.Chriſt.c.14. Arbitrium ſic adiuuatur, vt non ſolum quid faciendum ſciat, ſed quod ſcierit, etiam faciat, &c. The will is ſo helped, that it only doth not know, what is to be done, but doth alſo that which it knoweth: and when God teacheth, he ſo teacheth by the grace of his ſpirit, that what any man learneth, hee doth not onely ſee it by knowing, but doth deſire it by willing, and perfit it by doing.

Anſw. This place maketh for vs, for if the will be helped in knowing and doing, then conſequently there is a free will in theſe things, which is helped: Bellarm.ibid.reſponſ.ad argum.2.

Contra. 1. Mans will worketh together with grace, in reſpect of the naturall actiuitie and power thereof to will, and ſo in his ſenſe it may be ſaid to be helped only; but as it willeth that which is good, it is not in part helped, but wholly directed. 2. Yet it is no vnuſuall phraſe to ſay, one is helped, when he can doe nothing of himſelfe: as, Lord I beleeue, helpe my vnbeleefe: will he therefore inferre that Mark.9.24.
a man is but helped in part to faith, and that part is of himſelfe: contrarie to the Scriptures which ſaith, that faith is Gods worke, that is, only and wholly his. 3. As the will is helped to know, ſo it is Ioh.6.29.
helped to doe, but God only doth illuminate the ſoule, it cannot lighten it ſelfe; for Chriſt is the light Ioh.1.9.
that lighteth euery man. Ergo, he onely helpeth the will to worke. 4. The ſimilitude of the teacher ſheweth the ſame; for how doth he that is taught helpe toward his teaching, but only in the vſe of his naturall wit; but the forme and qualifying of the wit and the inſtruction is onely of the teacher: ſo when God teacheth, the naturall willing is in man by gift of his creation; but the ſpirituall inſtruction, direction, inclination to grace, is only of God.

Loc.15. De bon.perſeueran.c.13. Hoc nobis expedit credere, dicere, &c. vt totum detur Deo: It behoueth vs thus to beleeue, and ſay; that the whole may be giuen to God.

Anſw. Nos damus totum Deo, &c. We doe aſcribe all vnto God, neither doe we part workes with him, neither doe we attribute any thing to our ſelues, which is not of God: Bellarm.c.14. reſponſ.ad 3 teſtim.

Contra. 1. If you in truth aſcribe the whole worke of the will to the grace of God, there is no queſtion betweene vs: for this is that, which we vrge according to the Scripture, that God worketh in Philip.2.13.
vs both the will and deede of his good pleaſure. 2. But if you vſe this euaſion; that all is of God and of grace, becauſe he firſt gaue vs free will, and ſo by grace vnderſtand a gift of creation; this is but an old ſhift of the Pelagians, who did alſo affirme free will to be of grace, quia nos tales condiderit Deus, becauſe God made vs ſuch, &c. Hieron.ad Cteſiphont. But wee vnderſtand by grace, not the ſtanding gifts of the creation; but the continuall influence of the ſpirit in our regeneration.

Loc.16. De corrept.& grat.c.14. Volenti ſaluum facere nullum hominum reſiſtit arbitrium: Mans will cannot reſiſt God being willing to ſaue vs: Ergo, mans will is not free, as hee will himſelfe, to good or euill.

Anſw. Effectuall grace doth no more induce a neceſſitie, or take away the libertie of the will, then preſcience: and whereas it is ſaid that effectuall grace cannot be reſiſted; it is not to be vnderſtood abſolutely, but by way of an hypotheſis, or ſuppoſition, that it is impoſſible that a man ſhould not follow or obey God calling in that manner, &c. reſp.ad argum.4.

Contra. 1. Neither doe we affirme, that effectuall grace doth preiudice free will: for as Auguſtine ſaith, Deus ex nolentibus volentes facit, God of nilling maketh vs willing, and ſo willing, that when God draweth, we cannot chuſe but obey. 2. Neither doe we make an abſolute neceſſitie, as though mans will of it ſelfe could not reſiſt Gods calling, being of it ſelfe mutable and flexible, but Gods grace preſuppoſed, whereby it is made firme and ſtable.

Loc.17. De grat. & liber.arbitr.c.17. Vt velimus, ſine nobis operatur; cum autem ſic volumus vt operemur, nobiſcum cooperatur: That wee will he worketh without vs; but when we ſo will, that wee worke, he worketh with vs.

Loc.18. Totum Deo dandum eſt, qui hominis voluntatem bonam & præparat adiuuandam, & adiuuat præparatam: All is to be giuen to God, which doth prepare mans good will to be helped, and doth helpe it being prepared.

Anſw. God one way worketh the will without vs, that is, by perſwaſion: but wee alſo worke by conſenting: and therefore here he ſaith, we doe cooperari, wee doe worke together with God in the outward act: Bellar.ad loc.5.

Contra. Firſt, God doth not onely perſwade, but cauſeth the will alſo to conſent: for otherwiſe God ſhould doe no more, then man doth, who may miniſter counſell and perſwaſion, but cannot worke the heart: ſo the Scripture ſaith, that God draweth vs: but to draw is more then to perſwade. Ioh.6.44.
And Auguſtine ſaid before, that mans will cannot reſiſt Gods calling: therefore it is not in mans will to conſent or not to conſent. Secondly, we grant, that mans will worketh with God, vt naturale inſtrumentum ab alio motum, as a naturall inſtrument moued or ſtirred by another, which are Bellarmines owne words: then like as the inſtrument in the workmans hand hath no cunning in it ſelfe to faſhion or frame the worke, but is directed by the workman; ſo the will is but as a naturall inſtrument working naturally to will: but to will ẏ which is good, it is directed by grace, as the workmaſter vnto it.

Thus notwithſtanding theſe cauillous and ſophiſticall anſwers, I truſt it is euident to any indifferent eye, not obſcured with wilfull darkneſſe, that Auguſtine is a reſolute patrone of Gods grace againſt mans free will, as it is now by nature ſubiect and ſubdued vnto ſinne.

Beſide theſe places alleaged, many other alſo may be produced out of Auguſtine: as theſe that follow.

*Loc.*19. *De corrept.& grat.c.*8 Voluntas humana non libertate conſequitur gratiam; ſed gratia libertatem: Mans will doth not by it freeneſſe obtaine grace, but by grace freedome.

20. *Ibid.c.*11. Liberum arbitrium ad malum ſufficit, ad bonum parum eſt, niſi adiuuetur,&c. Free will is ſufficient to euill: but little or of ſmall force to doe good, vnleſſe it be helped.

21. *Artic.*3.contr.Pelag. Non eſt idoneum, quæ ad deum pertinent, ſine deo,&c. It is not fit without God to begin any thing, that appertaineth to God.

22. Ibid. Homo eſt tanquam ouis perdita, errat libero arbitrio in operibus diaboli,&c. Man is as a ſheepe going aſtray by free will in the workes of the diuell, whom Chriſt taketh vpon his ſhoulders, &c. Like as a ſtray ſheepe cannot returne, vnleſſe he be carried: ſo free will is drawne vnto that which is good, by grace; it hath no power of it ſelfe thereunto.

23. *In Pſal.*26. Dic illi, voluntatem liberam mihi dediſti, ſed ſine te nihil eſt mihi conatus meus: Say vnto God, thou haſt giuen me free will: but without thee mine endeuour is nothing.

24. *In Pſal.*134. Tu in teipſo non facis, quod vis; — ſed ipſe tibi dat gratiam, vt facias in teipſo, quod vis: Thou canſt not doe in thy ſelfe, what thou wouldeſt, but he giueth thee grace, to doe in thy ſelfe, as thou wouldeſt.

25. *Epiſt.*89.*ex Sapient.*8.21. Sciui, quod nemo eſt continens, niſi deus det; I know that none can haue continencie, vnleſſe God giue it. Hence he inferreth that it is not of free will, but by the gift of God: Deus iubet continentiam, & dat continentiam: God biddeth continencie, and giueth continencie.

26. *De ciuitat.dei,lib.*13.*cap.*15. Ad malum hominis prior eſt voluntas, ad bonum prior eſt voluntas creatoris, ſiue vt eam faceret, quæ nulla erat, ſiue vt lapſam reficiat, quæ perierat: To euill mans will is firſt, to good the Creators will is firſt, either to make the will, which was not; or to reſtore it, which was loſt.

27. *De ciuitat.lib.*14.*cap.*11. Arbitrium voluntatis — proprio vitio amiſſum, niſi à quo dari potuit, reddi non poteſt: The iudgement of the will cannot be reſtored, but by him, that firſt gaue it, &c. Like as then we wrought not with God in the firſt creation of the will, ſo neither in the reparation thereof, but all is of God.

28. *De peccator.merit.& remiſſ. Cont.Pelag.*2.5. Vt oculus corporis — vt videat, adiuuatur à luce, neque hoc omnino niſi illa adiuuerit, poteſt,&c. As the eye that it may ſee is helped of the light, neither can it ſee any thing at all, vnleſſe it be ſo helped: ſo God, which is the light of the inward man, doth helpe the ſight of the minde, that not according to ours, but his righteouſneſſe, boni aliquid operemur, we may worke ſome good thing, &c. Thus then as the eye without the light ſeeth nothing at all: ſo the will without grace willeth no good thing at all.

29. *De peccator.merit.& remiſſ.cont.Pelag.*2.*cap.*18. Si libera voluntas à deo eſt, — bona ex nobis, melius eſt id, quod ex nobis, quam quod à deo,&c. If free will be of God, a good will of our ſelues, then that is better which is of vs, then that which is of God: which if it be moſt abſurd, oportet fateamur & bonam voluntatem nos à deo adipiſci: we muſt confeſſe, that we haue our good will from God.

30. *Lib.*8.*de Geneſ.cap.*10. The queſtion being propounded, why Adam is ſaid to labour in Paradiſe, Auguſtine maketh this anſwere: That God which created him to be a man: ipſe etiam operatur & cuſtodit hominem, vt bonus ſit: he doth worke and keepe man to be good.

31. *Soliloqu.tom.*8.*c.*15. Credebam me aliquid fore ex me, exiſtimabam me ſufficere per me, nec percipiebam, quoniam tu regebas me,&c. I beleeued, that I was ſomewhat of my ſelfe, I thought I ſufficed by my ſelfe, neither did I perceiue that thou diddeſt gouerne me: Si quid boni eſt, magni vel parui, donum tuum eſt, noſtrum non eſt niſi malum; — ſiquid boni vnquam habui, à te recepi; ſiquando ſteti, per te ſteti, ſiquando cecidi, per me cecidi: If there be any good in me, great or little, it is thy gift, ours is nothing but euill: if euer I had any good thing, I receiued it of thee; if I ſtand, I ſtand by thee; if I fall, I fall by me, &c. He proceedeth, Tentator defuit, & vt deeſſet tu feciſti,&c. The tempter was wanting, and that it ſhould ſo be, thou waſt the cauſe: place and time were wanting, thou alſo diddeſt cauſe it: Affuit tentator, non defuit locus,&c. There was a tempter, and there wanted neither place nor time, ſed vt non conſentirem, tu me tenuiſti, that I ſhould not conſent, the cauſe was in thee, &c. *Ibid.cap.*16. Thus Auguſtine leaueth no power at all to the will of man without grace, no not where temptation is wanting.

32. *Soliloqu.c.*25. Non eſt hominis velle, quod poſſit; aut poſſe quod velit, vel ſcire quid poſſit & velit; ſed potius à te greſſus hominis diriguntur: It is not in mans power to will that he can, or to can that he will, or to know what he can or will, but mans waies are directed by thee.

33. *In Matth.ſerm.*7. Totum reputa, quod iuſtus es pietati, quod autem peccator es, tuæ iniquitati aſcribe: omne enim crimen, facinus, vel peccatũ noſtra eſt negligentia; omnis virtus, ſanctitas, Dei indulgentia: Aſcribe the whole that thou art iuſt, to pietie; that thou art a ſinner, to iniquitie: euery crime and ſinne is of our negligence; euery vertue, of the diuine indulgence,&c. Here all is aſcribed to grace.

34. Tom.10.de verb.Apoſtol.ſerm.6. Ideò mens humana ne tibi tribuas, ne multum ſuperbias, immò, ne omnino ſuperbias,&c. Wherefore O thou mind of man, attribute nothing to thy ſelfe, be not ouer proud, nay be not proud at all: for that thou doſt not conſent to the deſires of the fleſh, the law of the ſpirit of life in Ieſus Chriſt doth free thee.

35. In Pſal.91. Vt cum lapidem calori ſubtraxeris, frigeſcet,&c. ſic tu, ſi à Deo receſſeris frigeſces: As when thou takeſt a ſtone from the heate of the fire or Sunne, it waxeth cold: ſo thou, if thou departeſt from God,&c. the will then of man hath no more goodnes of it ſelfe without God, then a ſtone hath heate.

36. De patient.c.22. Homo non poteſt eligere aut diligere, niſi prius electus dilectuſque curetur, qui cæcitate eligenda non cernit, & languore diligenda faſtidit: Man cannot elect, or affect, vnleſſe he be elected, and affected of God, and ſo healed: who by his blindnes ſeeth not things to be elected, and by his weaknes doth lothe things to be deſired and affected.

37. Noſtrum eſt velle, ſed voluntas ipſa mouetur, vt ſurgat, ſanatur, vt valeat, dilatatur, vt capiat, & impletur, vt habeat: To will is ours, but the will is ſtirred, that it may riſe; it is healed, that it may haue ſtrength; it is enlarged, to receiue; and filled, that it may retaine or haue,&c. Thus the will can doe nothing of it ſelfe. De bon. viduitat.c.17.tom.4.

38. Epiſt.107. Neque fideles fiunt ſine libero arbitrio, & tamen illius gratia fideles fiunt, qui illorum à poteſtate tenebrarum liberauit arbitrium: They are not made beleeuers without freewill, and yet by his grace they are become beleeuers, which hath deliuered their freewill from the power of darknes.&c. God onely then deliuereth our will from the power of darknes and captiuitie of ſinne.

39. De natur.& grat.cap.67. Cum de libera rectè faciendi voluntate loquimur, de illa ſcilicet, in qua homo factus eſt loquimur: and a little before, ſunt omni animæ peccanti duo iſta pœnalia, ignorantia, difficultas, &c. When we ſpeake of mans free will, we ſpeake of that, wherein he was made: but now theſe two penal things are laid vpon euery ſoule that ſinneth, ignorance and difficultie: ignorance bringeth error, difficultie ſorrow,&c.

40. De bon. perſeuerant.2.13. Cogitantes credimus, cogitantes loquimur,&c. We thinking beleeue, we thinke, when we ſpeake, and when we doe any other thing: ſed tamen quod attinet ad pietatis viam, —non ſumus idonei cogitare aliquid ex nobis,&c. But as touching the way of godlines, we are not fit to thinke any thing of our ſelues, but our ſufficiencie is of God,&c. Wee are not able to thinke any thing, how much leſſe to will that is good?

Many ſuch like places beſide might be alleaged out of Auguſtine: but theſe (I truſt) may ſuffice to cleare this point, that this learned father aſcribed no power at al to mans will vnto that which is good, by nature, but referred all to grace. In other controuerſies the like might be ſhewed: but that it were neither conuenient at large on both ſides to diſcuſſe the ſentences of the fathers, whereby this volume might grow to bee too large; nor yet ſo profitable in this worke, which is intended chiefly for their vſe that are not profeſſed in theſe ſtudies; nor yet ſo agreeable to my purpoſe and ſcope in this treatiſe, which haue chiefly propounded to my ſelfe to decide theſe controuerſies by Scriptures.

THE FOVRTH PART OF THIS CONtrouerſie, concerning Iuſtification.

THe ſeuerall queſtions that are handled are theſe: firſt of faith: ſecondlie, of iuſtification it ſelfe.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF FAITH.

THe parts of this queſtion: firſt, what faith is. Secondly, of the diuers kinds of faith. Thirdlie, whether faith may be ſeparated from charitie. Fourthly, of the validitie of faith. Firſt, after what manner faith iuſtifieth. Secondly, whether faith onelie iuſtifie.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NATVRE and definition of faith.

WE define iuſtifying faith, to be an vndoubted confidence, ioyned with a certaine knowledge, whereby wee both vnderſtand, and are perſwaded, euery man in, and for himſelfe, that the promiſes of God made vnto vs in Chriſt, are verily ours, and we made partakers of them in him.

The Ieſuite taketh exception againſt three points of this definition: firſt, hee denieth faith to bee a confident or ſure perſwaſion. Secondly, that it is not neceſſarily ioyned with knowledge. Thirdly, he affirmeth, that the promiſes of God in Chriſt, are not the proper obiect of faith: Of theſe then in their order.

THE FIRST POINT, WHETHER FAITH, whereby we are iuſtified, be a ſure confidence of the heart.

The Papiſts.

48.Error. BEllarmine holdeth,that faith hath the proper ſeate and place onely in the vnderſtanding,not in the heart or affections; and therefore denieth,that it is any ſuch aſſurance or confidence: lib.1.de iuſtificat.cap.6. The Councell of Trent likewiſe determineth,that iuſtifying faith,is no confidence of the heart: ſeſſ.6.can.13. The Rhemiſts affirme it,to be an act onely of vnderſtanding: Annot.2.Cor.13.ſect.1.

Epheſ.3.12. *Argum.*1.Confidence is the effect of faith,and faith the cauſe thereof: We haue entrance with confidence by faith in him, faith worketh confidence: Ergo: it is no confidence,Bellarm.ibid.

1.Iohn 4.8. Anſw. 1. Saint Iohn ſaith, God is loue, yet it is no good conſequent,that God therefore worketh not loue in vs: for Saint Paul ſaith, That the loue of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt. God is loue one way, that is, eſſentially, and originally; and hee worketh loue another way in vs, or rather another kind of loue, which is an image, and effect of his loue: So faith worketh confidence,and it ſelfe neuertheleſſe,is a kind of confidence. 2.As the effect is,ſo is the cauſe: can the waters be ſweete,if the fountaine be bitter? It is the propertie of fire to giue heate,therefore it muſt it ſelfe alſo be hot: ſo faith worketh confidence; therefore it muſt needs bee much more confident it ſelfe. 3.We ſay not, that *fides,*and *fiducia,*faith and fiduce, or confidence,are all one: for this confidence is a common qualitie both to faith and hope: but this we ſay, that faith is alwaies ioyned with confidence.Now betweene this confidence,that accompanieth faith,and that confidence,which is wrought by faith,we make this difference: faith hath a generall confidence and aſſurance of all the promiſes of God,and it is the fountaine and ſtorehouſe from whence iſſueth out all our aſſurance and confidence in particular: As faith maketh vs to pray confidently, Aske in faith,and wauer not: which is the ſame which the Apoſtle ſaith here,We haue entrance with confidence. Faith alſo worketh confidence,and reioycing in tribulation. This confidence and aſſurance in theſe Chriſtian exerciſes,is nothing elſe but the particular vſe and application of that generall confidence in the promiſes of God, which we ſay is neceſſarily required in faith.

Epheſ.3.12.

Rom.5.3.

1.Cor.13.13. *Argum.*2. Firſt,faith and hope are two diuers things. Now abideth faith,hope and loue,theſe three: but hope is nothing elſe but confidence: *Ergo,*faith is not. Secondly,againe: *Bringing into captiuity euery thought to the obedience of Chriſt,*ſaith the Apoſtle:faith then doth captiuate the vnderſtanding, and ſubdueth it to Chriſt: *Ergo,*not the will: Bellarm.lib.1.de iuſtificat.cap.6.

2.Cor.10.5.

*Anſw.*Firſt,fiduce or confidence is a common qualitie both to faith and hope,and as the genus to them both: therefore it is abſurdly reaſoned,hope hath confidence: *Ergo,*faith not: as if hee ſhould haue argued thus: A beaſt hath ſenſe: Ergo, man hath not. Who would not hiſſe ſuch a diſputer out of the ſchooles?

Secondly,1. It followeth not,faith doth captiuate the vnderſtanding: Ergo, not the will: it doth not captiuate the thoughts only,but euery high thing that is exalted againſt the knowledge of God; and ſo alſo the rebellious will of man. 2. Obedience is properly in the will,and not in the vnderſtanding, therefore it working obedience to Chriſt,worketh alſo vpon the will and affections of man: and ſo the Scripture ſpeaketh directly, that the heart, which is the ſeate of the affections, is purified by faith. Acts 15.9.

The Proteſtants.

WE affirme not,that faith only is an aſſurance of the heart, but that the light of vnderſtanding, and knowledge of the mind,is requiſite thereunto. As faith is deſcribed, Hee that commeth vnto God,must beleeue that God is: Here is the certaine knowledge,that God is,and that hee is holie, iuſt and true: And that he is a rewarder of thoſe that ſeeke him: Here is the aſſured perſwaſion and confidence of the heart. That faith then is inſeparablie ioyned with this aſſured confidence, it is thus warranted by the word of God. Heb.11.6.

Rom.4.19.20. *Argum.*1. Abraham was not weake in faith,&c. neither did hee doubt of the promiſe of God through vnbeleefe,but was ſtrengthened in faith,being fully aſſured,&c. Here firſt the Apoſtle ſaith, he doubted not through vnbeleefe: As vnbeleefe then is ioyned with doubting, ſo faith hath confidence: and this it is to be ſtrong,and not weake in faith. Secondly,being fully aſſured: therefore the aſſured perſwaſion of the heart doth perpetually accompanie faith.

Anſw. The text is rather thus to be read,after the Latine tranſlation, pleniſſimè ſciens, moſt fullie knowing,not fully perſwaded. And by this the Ieſuite would prooue, that faith conſiſteth rather in knowledge,then perſwaſion,Bellarm.cap.6.loc.1.

Contra. The word in the originall is, πληροφορηθεὶς, which muſt be tranſlated perſuaſus, or *perſuaſum habens,*being perſwaded,or aſſured, not pleniſſimè ſciens, fully knowing. Firſt,it being a participle of the paſſiue,cannot properly be tranſlated by an actiue. Secondly,there is not a letter or ſillable in this word included,whereby knowledge is ſignified or expreſſed in the Greeke tongue. Thirdly,the vulgar tranſlator doth reade otherwiſe in other places, tranſlating this word πληροφορεῖν, and the deriuatiues thereof by theſe Latine words, implere, complere, to fill, or fulfill: as Luk.1.1. 2.Tim.4.5. In which places, though the tranſlator expreſſe not the full meaning of the word, as we will now proue, yet he varieth from his reading in this place: which ſheweth the imperfection of the tranſlation agreeing not with it ſelfe. Fourthly, this tranſlation, pleniſſime ſciens, fully knowing, which ſeemeth to define faith by the fulneſſe of knowledge, impugneth the Ieſuites opinion, who denieth, as well that fides, is notitia, faith is a knowledge, as that it is fiducia, fiduce or aſſurance: therefore hee ſhould not gaine much by this reading. Fifthly, that this word πληροφορεῖν, ſignifieth, as we reade, to perſwade, plenam fidem facere, to make a thing certaine or aſſured, it may appeare by comparing other places of Scripture, where this word is vſed: as Luk.1.1. the Euangeliſt ſaith, Hee hath taken in hand to write the ſtorie of thoſe things, whereof we are fully perſwaded: the word is πεπληροφορημένων: the vulgar tranſlateth, of things, quæ in nobis completa ſunt, which are fulfilled in vs; very ignorantly, not diſtinguiſhing betweene the Greeke words, πληροφορεῖν, and πληροῦν the firſt ſignifieth, to certifie or perſwade; the ſecond, to fill: And πεπληροφορημένα πράγματα, are ſuch things which are ſo euidently proued, that there remaineth no more doubting: as Maſter Beza ſheweth out of Vlpianus. So the word πληροφορία, is truly tranſlated, aſſurance, 1.Theſ.1.5. Our Goſpell was not in word only vnto you, but in power and much aſſurance, certa perſuaſione, not plenitudine multa, much fulneſſe: but the Scripture vſeth another word to expreſſe fulneſſe, and that is πλήρωμα. Epheſ.1.23.3.19. not πληροφορία. Sixthly, Eſpence a learned Papiſt alſo approueth this interpretation of the word, and to that purpoſe hee alleageth theſe places: Rom.4.14. Coloſ.2.2. Heb.6.10. in the which places πληροφορία, is taken for a certaine faith and perſwaſion: πληροφορηθεὶς, being perſwaded, &c. in 2.Tim.pag.149.liter.d. Seuenthly, this is proued by the Etymologie or denomination of the word: for πληροφορῶ, is as if we ſhould ſay, πλήρη πίστιν φέρω. plenam fidem affero, I bring or giue certaintie or aſſurance to a thing. Eightly, that it is ſo to be taken in this place, for a full aſſurance, the words before going declare: He doubted not of the promiſe: what is that elſe, but to be aſſured?

Argum.2. S.Paul ſaith, I am perſwaded, that neither death, nor life, &c. ſhall ſeparate vs from the loue of God, &c. the word is πέπεισμαι, from whence the word πίστις, faith, is knowne to be deriued. The vulgar text hath certus ſum, I am certaine, which is as much as confido, I truſt, that neither death nor life: Ergo, faith hath a fiduce, confidence, or certaine perſwaſion. Rom.8.38.

Bellarmine here diſtinguiſheth, that there are two kinds of fiduce or confidence, one in the vnderſtanding, the other in the will: the firſt faith hath, the ſecond hope: Bellar.c.6.

Contra. Firſt, Bellarmine forgetteth his owne argument vſed before: hope hath confidence: Ergo, not faith: for if there be two kinds of confidence, as he ſaith, he hath made a ſimple argument. Secondly, Bellarmine propoundeth the queſtion generally, Fidem iuſtificantem non eſſe fiduciam, that iuſtifying faith is no fiduce, or confidence at all, cap.6. and therefore it is ſufficient for vs that he granteth it to be any confidence. Thirdly, yet that the Apoſtle here meaneth a perſwaſion of the heart and affection it is euident, becauſe he ſpeaketh of loue, which is in the heart: If it bee taken actiuely for our loue toward God, as Origen vnderſtandeth it, writing vpon theſe words: Loue doth neuer fall away: Ex charitate nunquam excidente erant illæ voces, confido, &c. From this charitie neuer falling away proceeded thoſe words of the Apoſtle, I am perſwaded, that neither life nor death, &c. can ſeparate vs from the loue of God, Hom.23.in Matth. But if wee take it paſſiuely for Gods loue to vs, which is the better ſenſe, it commeth all to one: for the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ.35. That tribulation and anguiſh cannot ſeparate vs from this loue, that is, from the aſſurance thereof. Now tribulation, &c. worketh not vpon the vnderſtanding, but the affection: this perſwaſion then of the Apoſtle was not onely in his vnderſtanding, but in his heart and affection. 1.Cor.13.8.

1 Auguſtine ſaith: Si nunc tempus eſt fidei, ſalus autem animarum merces eſt fidei, quis dubitet in fide, quæ per dilectionem operatur, peragendum diem vltimum, atque in fine diei, recipiendam eſſe mercedem, non ſolum redemptionē corporis, verumetiam ſalutem animarum? If now it be the ſeaſon of faith, and the ſaluation of the ſoule be the reward of faith, who doubteth, but that a man ſhall die in this faith, that worketh by loue, and afterward receiue the reward, both the redemption of the body, and ſaluation of the ſoule? Tractat.in Iohan.86. Quis dubitet? Who can doubt? ſaith Auguſtine: Ergo, faith expelleth doubting. Decret.11.Iuly.1. Qui dubius in fide, infidelis: He that is doubtfull in faith, is an Infidell.

S.Ambroſe vpon theſe words, that Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith, &c. Certi ſint de Chriſto, &c. Let them be ſure of Chriſt, that he dwelleth in their hearts by faith: vt cùm fidem eius habeamus in cordibus noſtris, &c. that when we haue his faith in our hearts, we may ſeeme to haue him, &c. The ſeate then of faith is the heart: not the heart taken generally for the whole inward man, as Bellarmine anſwereth, cap.6. but properly as it is the ſeate of loue, and of other affections: as it followeth in the ſame 17. verſe, being rooted and grounded in loue: the heart then is the ſeate both of faith and loue. Epheſ.3.17.

2 Chryſoſtome ſaith: faith doth the ſame, excluding reaſon: Quemadmodum enim illa diuellunt & concutiunt, ſic fides conſolidat & ſtabiles facit: As they doe diuide and ſhake, ſo faith doth conſolidate and make ſtable, &c. And againe: Ideo fideles vocati ſumus, vt his, quæ dicuntur ſine vlla haſitatione credamus: Therefore wee are called faithfull, that wee ſhould without doubting beleeue theſe things that are ſaid: Damaſcen defineth faith to be an vndoubted hope.

4 Peter Lombard agreeth: Fidem in corde, &c. That a man ſeeth his faith in his heart. And hee alleageth thus out of Auguſtine: Credimus vt cognoſcamus, non cognoſcimus vt credamus: We beleeue to vnderſtand, we vnderſtand not to beleeue. But if faith were onely in the vnderſtanding, we ſhould firſt vnderſtand, then beleeue: lib.3.diſt.25.liter.g.

The holy Martyrs thus iudged of the Chriſtian faith, that it brought a moſt certaine aſſurance with it: Maſter Bradford holy Martyr did no more doubt, that by dying for the faith of Chriſt, hee ſhould pleaſe the Lord, then that the Sunne did ſhine, which at that time did ſhine in at the window, Fox. pag.1614.

Maſter Philpot bleſſed Martyr, when a popiſh Biſhop had ſaid vnto him, thus, theſe heretikes take vpon them to bee ſure of all things they ſtand in: you ſhould rather ſay, I truſt I know Chriſt, then that I am ſure of it: the holy Martyr thus anſwered: Let him doubt of his faith that liſteth; God giue mee grace alwaies to beleeue, that I am ſure of true faith, and fauour in Chriſt, Fox. pag.1825.

THE SECOND POINT, WHETHER knowledge be neceſſarie vnto faith.

The Papiſts.

49.Error. Bellarmine ſaith, fidem non eſſe notitiam, ſed aſſenſum, that faith is no knowledge, but a bare aſſent of the mind, without knowledge or vnderſtanding of that whereunto it aſſenteth. Thus alſo the Rhemiſts note, there is a kind of faith called fides implicita, the faith of ſimple men, and Idiotes, who although they are not able to giue a reaſon of their beleefe, yet it is enough for them to ſay, they are Catholike men, and that they will liue and die in that faith which the Catholike Church doth teach, Rhemiſt.annot.Luke 12 *ſect.*3.

This implicite faith, which they ſay is ſufficient for common Catholikes, is nothing elſe, but to beleeue, as the Church beleeueth, though they know nothing themſelues particularly: that faith is ſufficient without knowledge, thus they reaſon.

1.Cor.13.2. Argum. Though I know all ſecrets, and all knowledge (ſaith the Apoſtle) yea if I had all faith, &c. The Apoſtle diſtinguiſheth knowledge, and faith, as being two ſundry things, Bellar.cap.7.

*Anſ.*1. Though the Apoſtle reckon vp here diuers particular gifts, yet doth hee not ſo ſeparate and deuide them, but that one may communicate with another: for if this be a good conſequent, becauſe Saint Paul ſaith, all knowledge, and all faith, making two ſundrie gifts of them, therefore faith hath no fellowſhip with knowledge: then by the ſame reaſon, becauſe he alſo ſaith, if I could propheſie, and know all ſecrets, therefore he that propheſieth hath no knowledge of ſecrets.

Galath.5.6. 2 S.Paul ſpeaketh not here of iuſtifying faith, but of the faith of miracles, If that I had faith whereby I could remoue mountaines, &c. which faith may be ſeparated from loue: but iuſtifying faith cannot: faith working by loue, ſaith the Apoſtle: this place therfore cõcludeth nothing againſt iuſtifying faith.

The Proteſtants.

As before they ſpoyled faith of the better part thereof, which is a ſtable and certaine perſwaſion of the heart: ſo now alſo they rob it of the other part, which is an euidence and light of ſpirituall knowledge: for faith cannot ſtand with ignorance, but neceſſarily bringeth with it, an illumination of the minde, as it worketh ſtableneſſe in the heart.

1.Cor.2 9. 1.Cor.13.12. Neither doe we affirme, that we doe perfectly vnderſtand with the mind, thoſe things which by faith we beleeue: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that neither the eye hath ſeene, nor the eare heard, neither came into mans heart, the things that God hath prepared for thoſe that loue him. And now wee ſee through a glaſſe darkely, then ſhall we ſee face to face. We ſhall neuer therefore be able perfectly to vnderſtand in this life ſo much, as we beleeue: yet we doe know and vnderſtand them after a ſort: for as M. Latimer ſaith; there is great difference betweene certaine knowledge, and cleare knowledge, for that may be of things abſent that appeare not; this requireth the preſence of the obiect: A man therefore may certainely and ſurely know the thing which he perfectly beleeueth, though he doe not cleerely and euidently know it.

Againe, concerning this diſtinction of implicita, and explicita fides, our iudgement is this: wee doe not abſolutely condemne or refuſe it; but with two conditions are content to receiue it: firſt, if they vnderſtand that to be the explicita fides, when as a man by ſufficient knowledge and learning is able to maintaine euery point of his faith: that to be implicita fides, not when a man is vtterly ignorant to giue a reaſon of his faith, but when his knowledge and inſtruction is not ſo ful, as is to be found in the learned ſort: So then the explicite faith, is not that which onely hath skill and knowledge; the implicite, cite, that which hath none: but they differ onely in degree, the one hath a greater meaſure of knowledge then the other.

The ſecond condition is this, that we vnderſtand the implicite faith, to be that, not which is grounded vpon the determination of the Church, but vpon the truth of the holy Scriptures: As if a man ſhould thus profeſſe, this is my faith, and thus doe I beleeue, becauſe I am ſo taught by the Scriptures, though otherwiſe I be not able to giue an exact account of my faith. With theſe reſpects and conditions we will admit of this diſtinction: as we finde it to haue beene admitted by that holy Martyr, Maſter Saunders, whoſe words I will ſet downe: Albeit I cannot explicita fide, as they call it, conceiue all that is to be conceiued, neither can diſcuſſe all that is to be diſcuſſed, in the doctrine of this moſt true religion: yet I doe binde my ſelfe, as by my humble ſimplicitie, ſo by my fidem implicitam, that is, by faith in generality, to wrap my beleefe in the credite of the ſame, that no authoritie of the Romiſh religion, repugnant thereunto, ſhall by any meanes remoue me from the ſame, Fox.pag.1495. ex epiſt. Saunder, Wintonienſ. This holy Martyr confeſſeth this implicite faith, and modeſtly acknowledgeth his faith to be ſuch, not that he was altogether rude and ignorant, but not yet attained to the depth of Chriſtian knowledge: ſecondly, hee groundeth his faith not vpon the determination of the Romiſh Church, but vpon the truth of his religion warranted by the Scriptures. Such an implicite faith doe we alſo grant. But a Popiſh implicite faith altogether voide of knowledge, when men vtterly ignorant content themſelues to beleeue as the Church beleeueth, we doe deteſt and abhorre: Such a faith, as the Biſhop of Cauaillon in France, commended ſometimes to the Chriſtians of Merindol, in theſe words: It was not neceſſarie or requiſite to ſaluation, that they ſhould be ſo cunning, as to expound or vnderſtand the articles of their faith, but that it was ſufficient that they knew it in Latine: for there were many Biſhops, Curates, yea & Doctors of Diuinitie, whom it would trouble to expound the Pater Noſter, or the Creede, Fox pag.949. Againſt this blind, popiſh, and vnſauorie faith, we reaſon thus.

*Argum.*1. S.Peter ſaith, We muſt be readie to giue account to euery one that asketh, of that hope, which is in vs: Ergo, it is not ſufficient for a Chriſtian to ſay he beleeueth, as the Church beleeueth: but hee muſt be able to giue account of his beleefe. 1.Pet.3.15.

*Argum.*2. Maſter Lambert holy Martyr, againſt this Popiſh implicite faith which indeede is no faith, but a blockiſh ignorance, alleadgeth theſe teſtimonies of Scripture: Brethren, be not children in wit and vnderſtanding, but as concerning maliciouſneſſe be you children: Be not like the horſe and mule, which haue no vnderſtanding: Trie all things, and keepe that which is good: Ergo, Chriſtians ought to haue knowledge to diſcerne good from euill, &c. Fox.pag.1103.

1 And further, Auguſtine writeth thus: Ita apud omnes vulgatam & confirmatam eſſe Catholicam fidem, vt nec notitiam poſſit fugere popularem, neceſſe quippe fuit — quod attinet ad myſteria Chriſtiana, omnes noſſe Chriſtianos: That the Catholike faith was ſo common and ſo plaine, that it could not be hid, no not from the popular ſort: for it was neceſſarie — that what belonged to the myſteries of Chriſtianitie, all Chriſtians ſhould know: *cont. Iulian.lib.*8.*c.*4. for now ought the propheſie of Ieremie to bee fulfilled, They ſhall all know me from the leaſt to the greateſt. Heb.8.11.

Tertullian ſaith: Hæc erit fides, quæ contulerat intellectum, &c. This is faith which giueth vnderſtanding: And againe, ſpeaking of the Valentinian heretikes, he ſaith, Habent artificium, quo prius perſuadeant, quam edoceant, veritas autem docendo perſuadet, non ſuadendo docet: They haue a certaine cunning, to perſwade before they teach, but the truth doth perſwade by teaching, not by perſwading teach, &c. faith then is not grounded vpon a bare perſwaſion, but ioyned with vnderſtanding.

Ex appendice Concilij Baſil. ex oration. præſidentis ad Bohemos: Certiores de fide mea & doctrina eſtote, quã ſi quid proprijs conſpiciatis oculis: Be ye more certaine of my faith & doctrine, then when you ſee any thing with your owne eyes, &c. ſo the Church is brought in ſpeaking, Euery member of the Church muſt be thus ſure of the doctrine of the Church: but how can they be ſure thereof vnleſſe they know it?

Peter Lombard, to this purpoſe alleageth thus out of Auguſtine, that faith cannot be without knowledge: *Lib.*3 *diſt.*24.C. Nemo poteſt credere in deum, niſi aliquid intelligatur, &c. No man can beleeue in God, vnleſſe ſomewhat be vnderſtood, becauſe faith is of hearing. Againe, Nec ea quæ creduntur prius, quam intelliguntur, penitus ignorantur, &c. Neither the things, that are beleeued before they are vnderſtood, are altogether vnknowne, ſeeing faith commeth of hearing, &c. By this text Auguſtine proueth, that faith is ioyned with knowledge: for how can a man beleeue by hearing that he knoweth not?

THE THIRD POINT, OF THE obiect of faith.

The Papiſts.

50. Error.

BEllarmine affirmeth, that it is not the propertie of faith, ſpecially to apply to euery beleeuer the promiſes of God in Chriſt, for this he boldly calleth preſumption, but generally to beleeue whatſoeuer is contained in the word of God to be true, Bellarmin.lib.1.de iuſtificat.cap.4. The Chapter alſo of Trent, thus decreeth, that iuſtifying faith is not that aſſured beleefe, and confidence of the heart, whereby we are perſwaded, that our ſinnes are forgiuen vs in Chriſt, ſeſſ.6.can.13. Our Rhemiſts alſo thus deliuer their ſentence, that faith which iuſtifieth, is a generall, or vniuerſall beleeuing of the articles of Chriſts death, and reſurrection, not any fond ſpeciall faith, fiducia, or confidence of each mans owne ſaluation, Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.4.ſect.9.

Matth.16.16.

*Argum.*1. That faith, which Peter confeſſed when he ſaid to our Sauiour, Thou art the Chriſt, the Sonne of the liuing God, was the ſame faith that iuſtifieth: But this faith was a confeſſion onely of the Diuinitie of Chriſt, no ſpeciall application of his merites: Ergo, faith is no ſuch thing, Bellarm.lib.1.de iuſtificat.cap.8.

Luk.24.11.

Anſw. 1. By our aduerſaries owne confeſſion, this was not the whole iuſtifying faith, which Peter here profeſſeth: for they affirme, that faith is an vniuerſall beleefe of the articles of Chriſts death and reſurrection,&c. But at this time, though Peter confeſſed thus of the Sonne of God, yet he neither beleeued that Chriſt ſhould die, for therefore he deſerued to be called Sathan, verſ.23. becauſe hee went about to perſwade Chriſt not to die: and as for the reſurrection of Chriſt, the Apoſtles doubted of it euen when Chriſt was riſen againe: how then could this be the iuſtifying faith in reſpect of Peter that confeſſed it?

2 This faith which Peter confeſſed, though it were not the whole iuſtifying faith, yet it was a principall part thereof: for there is in faith the matter and ſubſtance thereof, which is the beleefe of the articles of the faith, and the forme, which is the particular vſe and application thereof to euery man ſeuerally: to confeſſe therefore, that Chriſt is the Sonne of God, (which doth comprehend both the natures of his Godhead and humanitie, and the offices of Chriſt, whereunto hee was annointed, his kingdome, propheſie and prieſthood) belongeth to iuſtifying faith, as the matter and ſubſtance thereof.

Mark.5.7.

1.Cor.12.3.

3 Though ſimply to confeſſe Ieſus to be the Sonne of God, be not that faith that iuſtifieth, becauſe the diuels haue made ſuch a confeſſion, yet this confeſſion may ſo proceede from a man, and was ſo vttered by Peter in this place, that it may declare a right iuſtifying faith: that is, ſo to confeſſe Chriſt to be the Sonne of God, and to be the annointed Meſſiah, to take away the ſinnes of the world, that hee which ſo confeſſeth, beleeueth it with comfort, and that Chriſt is ſo euen to him: Therefore S.Paul ſaith, that no man can ſay that Ieſus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghoſt, 1.Cor.12.3. And our Sauiour ſaith to Peter, after he had made this confeſſion, that fleſh and blood had not reuealed it vnto him, but his father in heauen. Wherefore it is certaine, that he vttered more then a generall beleefe of this article, which may be in diuels: vnleſſe you will ſay, that the diuels alſo made the ſame confeſſion by the holy Ghoſt, and by reuelation from God.

*Argum.*2. Abrahams faith was nothing elſe, but his beliefe of a certaine article reuealed vnto him from God, and credite giuen to Gods ſpeeches, that hee ſhould be the father of many nations, by his Sonne, which was yet vnborne, whom his wife Sara, both barren and now olde, was to beare vnto him: But Abrahams faith was a iuſtifying faith: Ergo. Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.4.ſect.9. Bellarm.lib.1.de iuſtificat.cap.8.

Gal.3.16.

Rom.4.11.

Iohn 8.26.

*Anſw.*1. The obiect of Abrahams faith, or the thing which Abraham beleeued, was not onely concerning the birth of his ſonne Iſaac, and the multiplying of his ſeede by him: but the promiſe which Abraham gaue credite vnto, was ſpirituall concerning Chriſt: As the Apoſtle noteth, he ſaith not, and to the ſeedes, as ſpeaking of many, but, and to thy ſeede, as of one, which is Chriſt. And Abraham was promiſed not ſo much to be the father of many nations, as to be the father of all them that beleeue: therefore it was not a temporall, but a ſpirituall promiſe, which was made vnto Abraham. 2. Neither was Abrahams faith onely a generall or hiſtoricall beleefe, that this promiſe was true: but a ſure confidence and truſt in God that this promiſe pertained to him, and that he himſelfe ſhould be bleſſed, in that promiſed ſeede: as our Sauiour teſtifieth: Abraham deſired to ſee my day, and ſaw it, and reioyced: for whereof ſprang that exceeding ioy in Abraham, but vpon that certaine hope and perſwaſion, which hee had of his owne ſaluation in Chriſt?

*Argum.*3. That faith, which Chriſt required, and confirmed by miracles, was a iuſtifying faith: but that was no certaine fiduce or particular perſwaſion, but onely a generall beleefe in the power and omnipotencie of Chriſt, Ergo, a iuſtifying faith requireth no ſuch particular perſwaſion,&c.

The aſſumption Bellarmine proueth by diuers places of Scripture.

Matth.9.28.

1. Matth.9.28. Chriſt ſaith to the blinde, Beleeue yee that I am able to doe this? According to your faith be it vnto you.

2. Such was the faith of the Centurion, which Chriſt ſo commended, ſaying, hee found not ſo great faith in Iſrael: Say the word onely, and my ſeruant ſhall be whole. Luke.7.7.

3. Such was Nathanaels faith, Becauſe I ſaid I ſaw thee vnder the Figge tree, beleeueſt thou? Iohn 1.50.

4. Iohn 11.27. I beleeue that thou art Chriſt the ſonne of God, which ſhould come into the world.

5. Iohn 20. Chriſt ſaith to Thomas; Thou haſt ſeene and beleeued, &c. Hee beleeued onely the truth of this article, That Chriſt was riſen from the dead.

6. Mark.1.40. The Leaper doubted of Chriſts mercie; If thou wilt, thou canſt make me cleane; hee beleeued onely his power.

7. The Phariſee had confidence that hee was iuſt and righteous, yet was hee not for all that iuſtified. Luk.18.11,12.

8. The Eunuch had no aſſurance of Gods mercie, but ſaid onely, I beleeue Ieſus Chriſt to be the Sonne of God.

9. Rom.10.9. If thou confeſſe with thy mouth the Lord Ieſus, and ſhalt beleeue in thy heart, that God raiſed him from the dead, thou ſhalt be ſaued: iuſtifying faith is nothing elſe, but the beliefe of the reſurrection of Chriſt.

10. Whoſoeuer beleeueth, that Ieſus is the Chriſt, is borne of God: Here is no perſwaſion or particular confidence required, Bellarm.lib.1.de iuſtificat.c.8. 1.Iohn 5.1.

Anſw. Firſt, 1. To the propoſition I anſwere, that indeede, that faith which Chriſt required and preached, was the true iuſtifying faith, which included a certaine aſſurance of forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: as Chriſt ſaith of the penitent woman, Many ſinnes are forgiuen her, for ſhe loued much: ſhe by her loue vnto Chriſt, teſtified her inward feeling and aſſurance of forgiueneſſe. 2. Though this faith Chriſt required, yet in his mercie he refuſed not the leaſt beginning of faith, which was to beleeue his power, that he was able to worke miracles vpon their bodies, which was the faith of miracles, yet an introduction to the true iuſtifying faith: and therefore it was written of Chriſt, A bruiſed reed ſhall bee not breake, and ſmoaking flaxe ſhall be not quench: that is, he ſhall beare with the infirme and weake, and not reiect their ſmall meaſure of faith. Luk.7.47. Matth.12.20.

Secondly, our particular anſwere to the places obiected, is this: 1. Thoſe blinde men beleeued not onely that Chriſt was able to helpe them, but were perſwaded of his mercie, in ſaying, O ſonne of Dauid haue mercie vpon vs. 2. To the receiuing of a temporall benefite in recouering of their ſight, a temporarie faith (which we call the faith of miracles) might ſuffice. 1.

Secondly, 1. The Centurions faith is ſhewed in beleeuing Chriſt to be able to heale his ſeruants bodily ſickneſſe: but there remiſſion of ſinnes is the obiect of iuſtifying faith, and therefore it is improperly alleaged. 2. Yet this Centurion had as well confidence in Chriſts mercie, as beleefe of his power, Chriſt hauing ſaid to him, verſ.7. I will come and heale him. 3. The Centurions faith, was for another; but the iuſtifying faith, is the aſſurance that euery man hath for himſelfe. 2.

Thirdly, 1. Nathanael is commended for this good beginning of faith, which Chriſt promiſeth to encreaſe: thou ſhalt ſee greater things then theſe. 2. And his faith is not without particular confidence, acknowledging Chriſt to be King of Iſrael: of which number he was, being affirmed by Chriſt to be a true Iſraelite, verſ.47. 3. Iohn 1.47.

4. The faith of Martha, was not onely a generall confeſſion of the reſurrection, which ſhee had made before, but a particular beleefe, whereby euery one is by Chriſt ſaued from the death of ſinne: as ſhe, being asked, Beleeueſt thou this? anſwered, Yea: that is, that whoſoeuer beleeueth in Chriſt ſhall neuer die. This is the particular aſſurance of faith, to be preſerued from euerlaſting death. Iohn.11.24,26

5. Thomas faith alſo was particular, in ſaying to Chriſt, Thou art my Lord and my God: It was not a generall apprehenſion onely, that he was riſen againe. Iohn 20.28.

6. Firſt, the Leapers requeſt was for the cleanſing of his body; what is this to the remiſſion of ſins, which is the proper obiect of iuſtifying faith? 2. Neither doth he doubt of Chriſts will and mercie, becauſe hee ſaith, If thou wilt: will ye ſay that Chriſt doubted of his Fathers good will, becauſe hee thus prayed; Father, if thou wilt, take away this cup: that is, Thou canſt take it away, if thou wilt: but a man is thus to pray for things temporall, namely with a condition not that God faileth in mercie, when hee with-holdeth them, but becauſe it is not alwayes good for vs to receiue them. 3. The Leapers confidence appeareth in his earneſt prayer: Hee beſought him, and kneeled downe, &c. And Chriſt had compaſſion vpon him: By the effect then it appeareth, hee prayed with confidence, as our Sauiour ſaith: Whatſoeuer yee deſire when yee pray, beleeue that you ſhall haue it, and it ſhall be done vnto you. Luk.22.42. Mark.1.40. Mark.11.24.

7. The Phariſee doth boaſt of his owne worthineſſe, and hath a vaine confidence in himſelfe, which was no confidence at all: though he ſay, God I thanke thee; hee doth it in hypocriſie, acknowledging herein a gift from God, but procured by his owne worthineſſe.

8. The Eunuches faith wanted not a particular apprehenſion and application of Chriſts death: What letteth me (ſaith he) to be baptized? that as he was in his fleſh ſprinkled with water, ſo he beleeued, that in his ſoule he was waſhed in Chriſts blood from his ſinnes. Act.8.36.

9. The faith and confeſſion which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, is not without a particular perſwaſion and aſſurance of the heart. 1. So hee ſaith, If wee be dead with Chriſt, wee beleeue wee ſhall liue with him: The beleefe then of Chriſts death and reſurrection worketh in vs aſſurance of life. 2. It fol- Rom.6.8.

Rom.10.11. loweth in the next verſe: Whoſoeuer beleeueth in him, ſhall not be aſhamed: but it is the hope and aſſu-
Rom.5.5. rance of the heart, that maketh not aſhamed, not a generall apprehenſion onely. 3. How ſhall they call
Rom.10.14. vpon him, vpon whom they haue not beleeued? Inuocation is a fruit of this faith: but true inuocation or Mark.11.24. prayer is not without aſſurance to be heard.

1.Iohn 5.1. 10. Euen the Apoſtle in that faith requireth particular confidence; for it followeth, Euery one that loueth him; Euery one that beleeueth, that Ieſus is Chriſt, loueth him: but loue caſteth out feare and
1.Ioh.4.16.17. doubtfulneſſe, and maketh vs to haue boldneſſe in the day of the Lord; Ergo, faith expelleth doubtfulneſſe, and worketh in vs boldneſſe and confidence.

The Proteſtants.

A Iuſtifying faith is not onely a generall beleefe of the articles of faith, that Chriſt was dead, borne, roſe againe for them that beleeue: but it is an aſſured and ſtedfaſt confidence, whereby euery man particularly doth apply to himſelfe the generall promiſes of God, for the hope of remiſſion of his ſinnes in Chriſt, that Chriſt died, roſe againe, and did all the reſt euen for him.

Iam.1.19. Argum.1. S.Iames ſaith, The diuels alſo doe beleeue that God is, and doe tremble; yea no doubt, but they beleeue that the word of God is true, and confeſſe the articles of the faith: for they acknowledge Mark.5.7. Chriſt to be the Sonne of the liuing God: But the faith of diuels is no iuſtifying faith: Ergo, neither this hiſtoricall and generall faith. Thus Maſter Tindal holy Martyr witneſſeth, who ſaith, that the diuell beleeueth that there is a God, and life euerlaſting, and that there is an hell, yea he beleeueth that the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt are but one God, yet hee is nothing the better for this beleefe, *vid.plur. Fox.*p.1255.artic.5.

Argum.2. S.Paul was ſaued by no other faith, but the common iuſtifying faith of all Chriſtians; but this faith wrought a particular perſwaſion in him; From henceforth is layd vp for me a crowne of
2.Tim.4.8. righteouſneſſe. And againe: I liue by the faith of the ſonne of God, who hath loued me and giuen himſelfe
Gal.2.20. for me: Ergo, ſuch ought the faith of all Chriſtians to be.

Bellarmine would here ſeeme to ſay ſomewhat, but hee confirmeth our argument rather by his anſwere, then ouerthroweth it: Rectè dicunt poſſe vnumquemque generales promiſſiones ſibi applicare per fidem: They ſay right, that euery man by faith, may apply the generall promiſes to himſelfe, for as I beleeue by the Catholique faith, that Chriſt died for all, Ita eadem fide, credo mortuum eſſe pro me, ſo by the ſame faith, I beleeue he died for me, *Bellarm.cap.*11.*reſponſ.ad obiect.*5. Doth not the Ieſuite now confeſſe againſt himſelfe, that the ſpeciall mercy of God is the obiect of faith, which he before denied? And if a man by faith may apply to himſelfe the generall promiſes of God, why did he ſay before, Certam promiſſionem ſpecialis miſericordiæ, ad præſumptionem, non ad fidem pertinere: That for a man to promiſe to himſelfe ſpeciall mercy, it belongeth to preſumption, rather then to faith, *Bellarm.cap.*4. What neede now any other confutation, ſeeing the Ieſuite confuteth himſelfe.

Argum.3. Iuſtifying faith bringeth tranquillitie and peace of conſcience, but the promiſes of God generally apprehended, doe not worke the peace of conſcience, vnleſſe they be particularly applied: Ergo, they are not the obiect of iuſtifying faith. Bellarmine here in flat tearmes denieth, that faith breedeth the ſecuritie and peace of minde, but rather pauores auget, it breedeth feare and terror in the minde, *Bellarm.reſp.ad obiect.*5. wherein he doth contradict of purpoſe the holy Apoſtle, which ſaith, Rom.5.1. being iuſtified by faith, we haue peace toward God: Ergo, iuſtifying faith worketh peace.

Argum.4. That faith doth not generally onely apprehend, but particularly apply, and worke a ſpeciall aſſurance thereof in the heart, theſe places of Scripture further doe teſtifie.

1 Mark.11.24. Whatſoeuer ye deſire, when you pray, beleeue that ye ſhall haue it, and it ſhall be giuen vnto you.

2 Iam.1.6. Let him aske in faith, and waner not.

3 2.Chron.20, Put your truſt in the Lord your God, and ye ſhall be aſſured.

4 Therefore the Scripture reproueth fearefulneſſe and doubtfulneſſe, as ſhewing a want of faith. Matth.8.26. Why are ye fearefull, O ye of little faith! Matth.14.31. Chriſt ſaith to Peter, O thou of little faith, wherefore didſt thou doubt? If want of faith bring doubtfulneſſe, then faith worketh aſſurance.

5 Rom.4.14. It is by faith, that the promiſe may be ſure to all the ſeed: Ergo, faith bringeth aſſurance.

1 Anſw. Bellarmine. It is true we muſt beleeue, that we ſhall receiue, but yet conditionally, if we aske aright: *reſp.ad obiect.*2.

Contra. Wee grant this condition, if a man aske aright, that is in faith, hee is ſure to bee heard, as S.Iames ſaith, 5.15. The prayer of faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke. Ergo, the condition of faith bringeth aſſurance; which is the ſame thing we affirme: thus he hath yeelded the cauſe.

2 Anſw. The Apoſtles meaning is, that we ſhould not doubt of Gods power, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. No nor yet of Gods mercie and good will: for before he had ſaid, Iam.1.5. Which giueth to all men liberally, and reproacheth no man: to be a liberall giuer without reproach, ſheweth Gods will and mercie, not his power onely. Againe, let him aske in faith, nihil haſitans, doubting nothing at all: Ergo, he muſt not doubt either of Gods power or mercie.

3 Anſw. It followeth in the ſame verſe, credite Prophetis eius, beleeue his Prophets, and all things ſhall fall out well: 2.Chron.20.20. But we muſt not put our truſt in the Prophets, Bellarm.

Contra. Firſt, is it all one, to ſay credite in Deum, &c. beleeue in God, as the text is, and credite Prophetis, beleeue the Prophets? To beleeue the Prophets, is to acknowledge they ſpeake the truth; to beleeue in God, is to put our truſt in him. Secondly, it is a groſſe conſequent, we muſt not put our truſt in the Prophets, Ergo not in God. Thirdly, the text is, truſt in God, & ſecuri eritis, ye ſhall be aſſured: but where there is any doubtfulneſſe, there is no aſſurance.

4 Anſw. Chriſt reprooueth his Diſciples becauſe they doubted of his power: for if they had beleeued Chriſt to be omnipotent, &c. they would not haue doubted the danger of ſhipwrack, Bellarm. reſp. ad obiect.3.

Contra. Firſt, will ye make the Apoſtles of leſſe faith, then the poore Leper. If thou wilt thou canſt make me cleane? he doubted not of Chriſts power. Secondly, neither did the Apoſtles make queſtion of Chriſts power at this time, ſaying, verſ.25. Saue vs or elſe we periſh: they doubted not in thus praying, but that he was able to ſaue them. Thirdly, to beleeue Chriſt to be able, belongeth to the intelligence; to be aſſured thereof, is of the heart and affections: but feare or doubtfulneſſe is not in the intelligence or vnderſtanding part, but in the heart: Ergo, this feare or doubt was not of Chriſts power: but they failed in their confidence and aſſurance. Math.8.2.

5 Anſw. The promiſe made to Abraham was not of remiſſion of ſinnes, but of the calling of the Gentiles: and it was onely an hiſtoricall or dogmaticall faith, in the power and omnipotencie of God, Bellarm. c.11. reſp. ad obiect.4.

Contra. Firſt, the promiſe in deed was made of the calling of the Gentiles, and conſequently of remiſſion of ſins: for the promiſe was, that in his ſeed (which is Chriſt, Gal.3.16.) all the kinreds of the earth ſhould be bleſſed, Gen.12.3. but bleſſedneſſe conſiſteth in the forgiuenes of ſins: Bleſſed are they, whoſe iniquities are forgiuen, Rom.4.7. Secondly, Abraham was not only reſolued in his iudgement of Gods power, but aſſured in his heart of his loue: for he both ſaw the day of his Chriſt in his ſpirit, and reioyced in his heart. Abraham reioyced to ſee my day, he ſaw it and was glad. Galath.3.16. Geneſ.12.3. Rom.4.7. Iohn 8.56.

Let vs heare the iudgement of holy martyrs and confeſſors: That honourable Earle the Lord Cromwell, who now doth ſhine in heauen, who was ſometime famous vpon earth, whoſe godly memorie ſhall neuer die: He in that ſweete prayer which he made at the houre of his death, ſaid thus: *Thou mercifull Lord wa'ſt borne for my ſake, thou didſt ſuffer both hunger & thirſt for my ſake; thou didſt teach, faſt and pray for my ſake; all thy holy actions and workes, thou wroughteſt for my ſake; thou ſufferedſt moſt grieuous paines and torments for my ſake; finally thou gaueſt thy moſt precious blood to bee ſhed vpon the croſſe for my ſake: now moſt mercifull Sauiour, let all theſe things profit me, which thou haſt done freelie for me, which haſt alſo giuen they ſelfe for me, &c. Fox.*1190. Faith, we ſee, wrought in this true noble breaſt a particular perſwaſion of Gods mercie, with a ſweete application of the merits of Chriſt.

M. Bradford thus writeth in a certaine letter of his to a godly Gentlewoman: What profit ſhould it be to you, to beleeue this to be true (I am the Lord thy God) to others, if you ſhould not beleeue that it is true to your ſelfe, *Fox pag.*1639.

Further 1. Auguſtine ſaith in Pſal.106. Quicquid cū loquor, agnoueris in te, quiſquis expertus es, noli cogitādo remanere in te, & putare, quod in ſolo te cōtigit, crede contingere omnibus qui de manu inimicorū pretioſo ſanguine redimuntur; That which I ſay, thou that haſt experience therof in thy ſelfe do not think that it is wrought only in thee, know that it is common to al, That are redeemed by that precious blood: Ergo, euery man muſt haue a particular feeling of his redemption in himſelfe.

Origene hath this excellent ſaying: Si Chriſtus viuit in Paulo, & non viuit in me, quid mihi proderit, cum autem & ad me venerit, &c. If Chriſt liue in Paul, and liue not in me, what ſhall it profit me? but when he is come to me, and I enioy him, as Paul did, then may I ſay, as Paul did, Now I liue, yet not I, but Chriſt in me. Homil 22. in Luc.

2 Epiphanius in Anchorato: Redemptor eſt ſanguis ipſius, dum precium redemptionis pro me ſeipſum tradidit, &c. The redemption is his blood, when he gaue himſelfe for me the price of redemption, &c. Thus thoſe Fathers held faith to be a ſpeciall application of the benefits of Chriſts death, to themſelues in particular.

3 Latter confeſ. of Heluetia, act.14. Men muſt be taught diligently to ſeeke remiſſion of ſinnes in the blood of Chriſt, and that euery one is to be put in mind, that remiſſion of ſinnes doth belong vnto him: Saxonic artic.16. The Goſpell doth require this true faith, which is an aſſurance of the mercie of God, promiſed for the Sonne of God his ſake — which ſaith, I beleeue that remiſſion of ſinnes is giuen vnto mee alſo, &c. Bohemia c 6. All holy men doe receiue remiſſion of ſins by faith in the moſt comfortable promiſe of the Goſpell and doe apply and appropriate it, as peculiar to themſelues, &c. Harm. ſect.8. pag.215. Harm ſect.8. pag.232. ibid. p.252.

Interrelig. Caeſarean. cap.3. Qui pretioſo Chriſti ſanguine redimitur & cui meritum paſſionis Chriſti applicatur is continuò iuſtificatur, i. inuenit remiſſionem peccatorum: He that is redeemed by the blood of Chriſt and to whom the merit of Chriſt is applied, he is forthwith iuſtified, and findeth remiſſion of ſinne. Thus the elder Papiſts confeſſed a particular application of Chriſts redemption to be neceſſarie in iuſtification, and not a generall beleeuing onely of the truth thereof to be ſufficient.

Peter Lombard alleageth thus out of Auguſt. lib.3. diſt.23.g. Fidem ipſam videt quiſque in corde ſuo eſſe ſi credit: Euery man ſeeth faith in his owne heart, if he beleeue: but a man cannot ſee his faith that is not ſure of his faith: that he ſeeth onely in his heart, which is firme, fixed, and ſetled in his hart.

THE

THE SECOND PART, OF THE DIUERS KINDS OF FAITH.

The Papiſts.

51.Error. 1.Cor.12.9. WHereas we affirme, that there are diuers kinds of faith : as firſt, fides hiſtorica, an hiſtoricall faith, which is to beleeue the truth of whatſoeuer is contained in Scripture:there is alſo, fides miraculorum, the faith or gift of working myracles, whereof Saint Paul ſpeaketh, the third kinde is, fides iuſtificans, that faith which iuſtifieth, which is an aſſured beleefe of Gods promiſes made vnto vs in Chriſt: the Ieſuite and the Rhemiſts affirme, all theſe kinds of faith in ſubſtance to bee all one: the faith of myracles differeth onely from iuſtifying faith, in an accidentall qualitie, of more feruor, deuotion, and confident truſt, Rhem.annot. 1.Cor.12.9.Bellar.de iuſtificat.lib.1.cap.4. Yea our Rhemiſts are yet more abſurd : that faith (ſay they) which S. Iames calleth a dead faith, is notwithſtanding a true faith, and the ſame which is called the Catholike faith, and which the Apoſtle defineth, and in ſubſtance all one with that, which iuſtifieth, Rhem.an.Iam.2.ſect.11. Heb.11.1.

Argum.1. That faith which Saint Paul defineth, Heb.11.1. is the ſame faith, which iuſtifieth: but that faith alſo, is the hiſtoricall faith : thorough faith we vnderſtand that the world was ordained, &c. verſ.2. it is the ſame alſo with the faith of myracles : thorough faith, they ſtopped the mouths of Lions, quenched the violence of the fire,&c. verſ.33.34. And all this while the Apoſtle diſcourſeth of that faith, which he deſcribed in the beginning of the chapter, Bellarm.cap.5.

Anſw. We grant that theſe three kindes of faith may ſometime bee found in one man : for the hiſtoricall, and the faith of myracles doe as handmaids accompany the iuſtifying faith : the true faith is neuer diſioyned from the hiſtoricall faith, that is, the beleefe of al things contained in Scripture, and the faith of myracles, ſo oft as is neceſſary, doth waite vpon the ſame : all theſe three were together, in thoſe holy Patriarches, whoſe faith the Apoſtle commendeth. Yet it followeth not, that they made all one faith: for the hiſtoricall faith may be, where iuſtifying faith is not, as in Diuels, they beleeue, that Iam.2.19. there is one God : the faith of myracles alſo may be in falſe Prophets, which haue no part in Chriſt. Matth.7.22. But if they were all one and the ſame, they could not be ſeparated, but where one is, there of neceſſitie ſhould be the other.

Mark.16.17. Argum.2. Mark.16.17. Theſe tokens ſhall follow them that beleeue : in my name they ſhall caſt out diuels, and ſhall ſpeake with new tongues, and take away ſerpents: hence it appeareth, that the faith of myracles and iuſtifying faith is all one, Bellarm.lib.1.de iuſtific.c.8.

Contra.1. The argument followeth not: he that beleeueth in Chriſt, and hath iuſtifying faith, may worke myracles: Ergo, iuſtifying faith is all one with the faith of myracles: as it followeth not, he that hath faith, hath alſo loue and hope. Ergo, theſe three are all one. 2. The contrary rather appeareth out of this text : for he that beleeueth, ſhall be ſaued, verſ.16. but a man may worke myracles and caſt Matth.7.22. out diuels, and yet not be ſaued, Againe, the faith of myracles is now ceaſed : but iuſtifying faith remaineth : but if the faith of myracles, and that whereby we are iuſtified were all one, then hee that hath the one ſhould haue the other alſo : and where and when the one is, then and there ſhould be the other alſo.

The Proteſtants.

THat the faith of myracles, and the hiſtoricall faith are not of the ſame nature with iuſtifying faith: nor yet that a dead faith, and a true faith, are all one, we ſhew it thus.

Matth.7.23. Mark.16.16. 1.Cor.13.3. Galath.5.6. Argum.1. The faith of miracles may be in wicked men, Matth.7.23. the iuſtifying faith can be in none, but thoſe which ſhall be ſaued, They that beleeue ſhall be ſaued : Ergo, they are not all one. Againe, the faith of myracles may be ſeparated from loue, 1.Cor.13.3. but iuſtifying faith cannot, Galat.5.6. Faith working by loue : Ergo, what intollerable boldneſſe then is this, to aſcribe greater confidence and truſt to that faith of wicked men, then to the true iuſtifying faith in the elect?

Argum.2. That the dead faith which Saint Iames ſpeaketh of, is not of the ſame nature with the iuſtifying faith ; nor with that faith, which is handled, Heb.11. it may thus appeare: firſt, by that faith there deſcribed, the Patriarches pleaſed God, and beleeued that hee was a rewarder of thoſe, that Hebr.11.6. ſought him, verſ.6. but this dead faith hath no ſuch operation. Secondly, as a dead man cannot bee ſaid properly to be a man, no more can a dead faith be properly called a faith. Nay further, the faith of diuels and the faith of Saints cannot be of one nature and ſubſtance : but this dead ſpeculatiue faith Iam,2.19. may be in diuels, Iam.2.19. Ergo, it is a blaſphemous aſſertion, that theſe two faiths are all one.

Further, 1. Auguſtine ſaith, Diſcerne fidem tuam quia & dæmones credunt, & contremiſcunt quod oderunt : diſtinguit Apoſtolus,—fides, quæ operatur per dilectionem : Diſcerne thy faith from the faith of diuels, the diuels beleeue and tremble at that which they hate : the Apoſtle doth diſtinguiſh them, faith, which worketh by loue : de verb. Apoſtol.ſerm.16. Ergo, a dead faith, which is fruitleſſe, and worketh not by loue, is the faith of diuels, and ſo not of one nature with a true iuſtifying faith.

δογματικὸν δεύτερόν ἐστι εἶδος. Catech.5. Hom.8.in 2. Tim,c.3. 2. Cyrill of Ieruſalem, diuideth faith thus: there is one kind which he calleth dogmaticall, which is the right faith, by the which we beleeue in Chriſt to ſaluation: the other kind he calleth energeticall: he calleth it the ſecond kind, he meaneth the faith to work miracles by: he maketh theſe two diuers kinds of faith, Chryſoſtome compareth faith without workes vnto a picture : as then a body, and the picture of a body are not of one and the ſame kind, no more are a true iuſtifying faith, which is alwaies liuely and working, and a dead faith without workes.

3. Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. loc. of faith: whereas S. Iames ſaith, The diuels beleeue and tremble, hee ſpeaketh of an hiſtoricall faith, now this faith doth not iuſtifie, for the wicked and the diuell are cunning in the hiſtory, but Paul when he ſaith, faith is reckoned for righteouſneſſe, he ſpeaketh of a truſt and confidece of mercy promiſed for Chriſts ſake, &c. Harm.ſect.9. pag.270.

4. Synod. Treuerenſ. ſub Iohanne cap.4. Populo perſuadeant non quamlibet fidem, qua in Deum creditur, ſed eam demum ſalutiferam fore, qua per dilectionem operatur: Let them perſwade the people, that not euery faith, whereby men beleeue in God, but that only bringeth ſaluation which worketh by loue, &c. By this diſtinction (not this, but that) we do gather that faith effectuall by loue, which is the true liuely iuſtifying faith, is in the iudgement of this Councell, of another kind and nature, then other generall and common faithes are.

Decret. cauſ.33. diſtinct.2.c.11. In fide, ſpe, charitate &c. Spiritus perfectorum corda non deſerit; in Prophetia virtute, miraculorum exhibitione, electis ſuis aliquando adeſt, aliquando ſe ſubtrahit: In faith, hope, charity, and other gifts, &c. the ſpirit forſaketh not the hearts of the perfect: but in the power of prophecy, exhibiting of miracles, ſometime the ſpirit is preſent with the elect, ſometime he withdraweth himſelfe, &c. If then faith ioyned with charity remaineth, faith of miracles alwaies doth not remaine; then are they not one and the ſame kind of faith.

Peter Lombard. lib.3. diſt.23. liter. d. Fides ſine charitate informis qualitas mentis: Faith without charity, ſuch as the diuels haue, is a deformed quality of the minde: Say if you dare, that faith, which iuſtifieth, is a deformed quality: Fides vna dicitur, non quia ſit vna manens in omnibus ſed genere ſi. ſimilitudine: Faith is ſaid to be one, not becauſe the ſame particular faith is in all, but in generall the ſame, that is, by a certaine ſimilitude, ibid. liter. f. Faith which iuſtifieth, and faith without charity are the ſame not in nature and truth, but in ſimilitude onely.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER FAITH MAY be ſeparated from charity.

The Papiſts.

That true iuſtifying faith, may be ſeparated from loue and other Chriſtian vertues: Bellarmine endeauoureth thus to proue it. 52. Error.

Argum.1. S. Paul ſaith, If I had all faith, ſo that I could remoue mountaines, and had no loue, I were nothing. Ergo, there may be a diuorce and ſeparation betweene faith, and loue. 1.Cor.13.2.

Anſw. 1. The Apoſtle thus ſpeaketh, ex hypotheſi, by way of ſuppoſition, that if it were poſſible for faith to be without loue, faith were nothing, as before he ſaid, though I ſpeake with tongues of men and Angels; not as though he could ſpeake as the Angels, but if he could, and had no loue, &c.

Bellarm. Thus much then we haue gained by this anſwere, that faith profiteth not without charity, therefore it cannot iuſtifie without charity: for to what purpoſe elſe hath faith ſuch need of charity, that it cannot be ſeparated from it. Bellarm. lib.1. de iuſtific. cap.15.

Contra. Charity is neuer ſeuered from faith, not becauſe faith needeth charity, or that it cannot iuſtifie without charity: but becauſe charity doth alwaies accompany faith, as a principall fruit, and effect thereof: as the fire is neuer without the heate, which is no part notwithſtanding of the eſſence or nature thereof, but a natiue quality iſſuing from thence: And like as a good tree is neuer void of good fruit; which good fruit make not the tree good; but the tree being firſt good, it maketh alſo the fruit good.

Anſw. 2. Or we anſwere rather that S. Paul ſpeaketh heere of the faith of miracles, which wee grant may be ſeparated from loue, and may be found in the wicked, Matth. 7.23. for he meaneth ſuch a faith, whereby mountaines are remoued. Matth.7.23.

Bellarmine: Saint Paul ſpeaketh as well of that faith, which iuſtifieth, as of this faith of miracles. 1. He ſaith, if I had all faith, verſ.2. he ſpeaketh generally of all. 2. He meaneth that faith, which is ioyned with hope and loue, now abideth faith, hope and loue, theſe three, verſ.13. but this is a iuſtifying faith: Ergo.

Contra. 1. Saint Paul in ſaying all faith, meaneth not vniuerſally euery kinde of faith: but that whole faith or generall power, whereby all myracles may be wrought, whereof he giueth one particular inſtance, of remouing mountaines. Secondly, in the laſt verſe he ſpeaketh of another kinde of faith then in this place: for there hee vnderſtandeth ſuch a faith as abideth ſtill; and is in all ages neceſſarie for all Chriſtians: but this faith whereby mountaines are remoued, now abideth not, the gift is ceaſed, therefore he meaneth not that faith.

Argum.2. Ioh.12.42. Many of the chiefe beleeued in him, but becauſe of the Phariſees, they did not confeſſe him, leſt they ſhould be caſt out of the Synagogue, for they loued the praiſe of men, more then the praiſe of God. Here we ſee there was faith without charitie: Bellarm. ibid. argum.1. Iohn 12.42.

Anſw. 1. Wee muſt either vnderſtand here a common and ſuperficiall faith, not a true faith indeede: as our Sauiour ſaith, Iohn 5.44. How can yee beleeue, when yee receiue honour one of another? If theſe therefore were ſuch, as altogether neglected Gods honour, and onely loued the praiſe of Iohn 5.44.

men, they had not a true faith, and therefore it is no maruell, if they wanted charitie. 2. Or if we vnderſtand this place of ſuch chiefe men, as Nicodemus, and Ioſeph of Arimathea, who beleeued in Chriſt indeed, but were letted by their owne carnall weakeneſſe and infirmitie: then had they a true faith, though imperfect, and a loue alſo vnto Chriſt, though ſomewhat ouerſhadowed and obſcured with the loue of the world, and the feare of men.

Iam. 2. 14. Argum. 3. Iam. 2. 14. What auaileth it my brethren, though a man ſay he hath faith, when he hath no workes? Ergo, faith may be without the workes of charitie: and the Apoſtle meaneth not a ſhadow of faith, but a true faith indeed. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith in the ſame place, that Abrahams faith wrought with his workes: but Abrahams faith was a true faith. 2. Verſ. 24. the Apoſtle ſaith, that a man of workes is iuſtified, and not of faith only: but the ſhadow of a faith iuſtifieth not. 3. He compareth a faith without workes to a bodie without a ſoule; but a dead bodie is a true bodie: Ergo, a dead faith is a true faith.

Anſw. Firſt, 1. Abrahams faith was a true faith, becauſe it was a working faith; doth it follow therefore that faith not working by loue is a true faith? nay, the contrary rather is inferred. 2. A faith, which is effectuall by workes, iuſtifieth: Ergo, a true faith: but a faith without workes cannot ſaue, verſ. 14. Ergo, it is not a true faith. 3. A dead body is in part a true body, in reſpect of the terrene and materiall part, but ſimply it is not a true body, nor the ſame body, which it was before in all poynts, wanting life, actiuitie and motion: ſo a faith that worketh not, hath ſome of the materials of a true faith, as knowledge, vnderſtanding; but it is not the ſame, wanting conſcience, and charitie, and true confidence, which is the life and ſoule of faith.

Iam. 2. 19. 17. Secondly, that a faith not working, is not a right or true faith, is euident by the Apoſtle: 1. Becauſe he compareth it to the faith of Diuels, verſ. 19. which is no right faith. 2. A faith without workes helpeth not, neither ſaueth, verſ. 14. but a working and effectuall faith, iuſtifieth, verſ. 24. Ergo, they are not the ſame; for the ſame faith will haue the ſame effect. 3. A dead faith and a liuely faith are not the ſame: but a faith not working is a dead faith, verſ. 17. Faith if it haue no workes, is dead in it ſelfe: but as a dead man is not a man, no more is a dead faith a right faith.

The Proteſtants.

*Obiect. Then Dauid and Peter had no faith, when the one ſinned, the other denied Chriſt: for they had then no loue. Anſ. Their faith indeede then failed, and their loue abated, but neither was vtterly loſt. See this obiection anſwered more at large, Rect. p. 124.

FAith and charitie, as they are two diuers gifts and graces of the ſpirit, ſo in nature and propertie they may be diſtinguiſhed: but in vſe they can neuer be ſeparated: for where a true liuely faith is, there is charitie; and where true loue and charitie is, it is an infallible ſigne of the preſence of faith: no faith then, no charitie: and againe, * no loue, no faith.

Argum. 1. Faith without workes is dead, Iam. 2. 26. and no better then the faith of diuels, verſ. 19. but a dead faith, and the faith of diuels is no true faith: Ergo, there is no true faith, without the works of charitie.

Bellarm. 1. Fides dæmonum, ex parte obiecti vera eſt: The faith of diuels is a true faith, in reſpect of the obiect.

Anſw. First, this ſpeech cannot by any ſound Diuinitie be iuſtified, that the diuels haue in any reſpect a true faith. Secondly, if in this reſpect the wicked ſpirits haue a true faith, then they haue euery way a true and perfect popiſh faith. For thus they define their faith: It is an act of the vnderſtanding, Rhemiſt. 2. Cor. 13. ſect. 1. whereby we doe vniuerſally beleeue the articles of Chriſts death and reſurrection, &c. Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 4. ſect. 9. But the diuell hath this act of vnderſtanding, whereby hee doth vniuerſally beleeue, &c. Iam. 2. 19. Mark. 5. 7. Ergo, he hath a true popiſh faith, and is a right popiſh Catholike.

Iam. 2. 19.
Mark. 5. 7.

Bellarm. 2. A dead faith may notwithſtanding be a true faith: as a dead body, is a body; and as ſtanding water, and a running water, are the ſame in ſubſtance: Bellar. c. 15.

Anſw. Though a dead faith may be compared to a dead body, becauſe it is altogether void of ſpirituall quickening, as the body is without naturall life: yet a liuely faith is not fitly reſembled to a liuing body, but rather to the life of the body; becauſe faith is not that which is quickened, but that which quickeneth and giueth life: for it is written, The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, Rom. 1. 17. As therefore a dead man is no man properly, no more is a dead faith a true faith.

Rom. 1. 17.

2. Againe, as a dead body hath the ſame terrene ſubſtance, which a liuing body hath, but not the ſame ſpirituall ſubſtance, which is the ſoule; and as a ſtanding puddle hath part of the ſame matter, which is in a running water, but yet groſſe, muddie, ſtinking and putrifying, ſo that it cannot be called the ſame water; ſo a dead faith hath ſome part of that which a true faith hath, as namely ſome light of knowledge and vnderſtanding; but yet not hauing the ſubſtance and liuelihood of faith, it cannot be a right and a true faith.

1. Iohn 4. 7. 16.
1 Ioh. 5. 1.

Argum. 2. He that is borne of God hath loue: Euery one that loueth is borne of God: He that dwelleth in loue, dwelleth in God, and God in him. But he that beleeueth, that Ieſus is Chriſt, is borne of God: Ergo, he that beleeueth hath loue.

Bellarm. We grant, that fides formata, formed or perfect faith, hath alwaies loue annexed.

Anſw. As though wee ſpake not all this while of a liuely, perfect, and iuſtifying faith, which wee call a formed faith: for a faith without forme, is no faith: If hee thus vnderſtand a formed faith, hee ſaith the ſame now that we affirme, and is contrarie to himſelfe, who tooke vpon him in the beginning of this chapter to proue, that fides vera, quæ iuſtificat impium, a true faith, and ſuch an one as iuſtifieth ſtifieth the vngodlie, may be ſeparated from loue: If he haue found out a formed faith beſide this true liuely, and iuſtifying faith, he is contrary to the Apoſtle here, who knoweth no other true faith, then to beleeue in Ieſus Chriſt.

Argum.3. 1. Hee that hath no charitie denieth the faith: Hee that prouideth not for his owne, denieth the faith. 2. Hee that ſaith hee knoweth God, and keepeth not his commandements, is a lyar; Ergo, the true knowledge of God is not ſeuered from charitie. 3. The iuſt ſhall liue by faith: but without charitie, faith is dead, and can giue no life: Ergo, a true faith is not diuided from charitie. 1.Tim.5.8. 1.Iohn 2.4. Rom.1.17.

*Anſw.*1. Bellarmine anſwereth out of Gregor.Hom.29.in Euangel. Non habere veram fidem, qui non bene operantur: That they haue not a true faith, that doe not worke well: that is, they denie the faith in the worke, not in the heart.

Contra. Firſt, Gregories teſtimonie is very direct for vs, that there can be no true faith, where is no right worke. Secondly, the faith denied in worke, is denied alſo in the heart: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Whoſoeuer ſinneth, (that is in worke) hath neither ſeene nor knowne him, (in his heart.) Thirdly, as Saint Paul ſaith, Hauing a ſhew of godlineſſe, but haue denied the power thereof: ſo where the power of faith is denied, what elſe remaineth but onely a ſhew and ſhadow of faith. 1.Iohn 3.6. 2.Tim.3.5.

Anſw. 2. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of a knowledge ioyned with loue and friendſhip: Bellar.c.15.reſp. ad arg.3.

Contra. Such is that knowledge, which accompanieth faith: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Wee haue knowne and beleeued the loue, that God hath in vs: Ergo, the knowledge of faith is not without loue.

3. It muſt be vnderſtood of faith formed with charitie, Bellarm.reſp.ad arg.6.

Contra. He vnskilfully giueth an inſtance in the cauſe: this formed faith, is the faith which wee meane, a right and perfect faith, not a deformed and vnſhapen faith. Thus then by his owne confeſſion, a true faith, which he calleth a formed faith, is not without charitie. 1.Iohn 4.16.

1. Auguſtine ſaith, Si dilectio patris in te non manet, non es natus ex Deo: quando ergo gloriaris te eſſe Chriſtianum, nomen habes & facta non habes: — ſi factis te non oſtendis Chriſtianum, — quid prodeſt nomen, vbi res non inuenitur? If the loue of the father be not in thee, thou art not borne of God: how then doeſt thou boaſt thy ſelfe to be a Chriſtian? thou haſt the name but not the deeds: if thou doeſt not ſhew thy ſelfe a Chriſtian, what good doth the name, where the thing is not found? Tract.5. in Epiſtol.Iohann. If he be not borne of God, that hath no loue, then hath he not faith: for hee that hath faith and beleeueth, is borne of God. 1.Iohn 5.1.

Againe, he ſaith, Omnes negant Chriſtum in carne veniſſe, qui violant charitatem: All they which violate charitie, denie Chriſt to bee come in the fleſh, Tractat.7. But they which denie Chriſt to bee come, &c. are voide of faith: Ergo, alſo of charitie: hee that wanteth the one, wanteth the other.

Tertullian ſaith, dilectio ſummum fidei ſacramentum, that loue is the chiefe or higheſt myſterie of faith, &c. how then can faith be without loue. Lib.de patient.

2. Chryſoſtome ſaith vpon theſe words Iohn 6. This is the worke of God, that ye beleeue: See how hee calleth faith a worke; therefore as ſoone as thou beleeueſt, thou art furniſhed with workes, not that workes are wanting: Sed per ſe ipſum fides plena eſt operib. bonis: but faith of it ſelfe is full of good works: faith then cannot be without workes. Serm.de fid. & leg.

Iermie the Patriarke ſaith, the Catholike Church requireth faith, firſt of all, Tamen non quamcunque fidem, ſed illam quæ viua ſit quæ teſtimonium a bonis operibus habeat: yet not euery faith, but that which is liuely, which hath teſtimonie of good works, &c. then a liuely iuſtifying faith cannot bee ſeuered from good workes: and to this end hee alleageth Baſil: Superna gratia in eum, qui ſerio & ſtudioſe veritatem complexus non ſit, deſcendere non poteſt: The grace from aboue cannot deſcend to him, who doth not ſerioúſlie and ſtudiouſly embrace vertue, &c. Cenſur.oriental.c.4.

3. Confeſſion of Belgia, artic.22. It cannot bee, that this holie faith ſhould be idle in a man, neither doe wee ſpeake of a vaine and dead faith, but onelie of that, which in the Scripture is ſaid to worke by loue, &c. Harm.ſect.4. pag.260.

Saxonie, artic. of iuſtification: We doe not ſpeake of an idle faith, and the vnskilfull are deceiued, whileſt they thinke, that remiſſion of ſinnes doth happen to ſuch as are idle, &c. Ibid.pag.289.

4. We want not teſtimonie from themſelues: Cauſ.33.diſt.2.c.14.gloſſ. In Chriſtum credere eſt amando in ipſum credere: To beleeue in Chriſt is by louing him to beleeue in him. This is that faith, which the Apoſtle defineth working by loue, Galath.5.6.

Peter Lombard.lib.3.diſt.23.liter.d. Credere in deum, eſt credendo amare, credendo in eum ire: To beleeue in God, is in beleeuing to loue him; in beleeuing to come vnto him. Diſt.25.liter.c. Quantum credimus, tantùm amamus: As much as we beleeue, ſo much we loue: Pia fides non eſt ſine charitate: A godly faith is not without charitie.

Eſpenc. Sine charitate fidei veritas immo vanitas non prodeſt: Without charitie the veritie, or rather vanitie of faith profiteth not, in 2.Tim p.65. Faith then is vaine, that is no true faith without charitie.

Let the holy Martyrs ſpeake. Thus Maſter Tindall writeth: If thy faith induce thee not to good workes, then haſt thou not the right faith, thou doeſt but onely thinke that thou haſt it: for S. Iames ſaith, that faith without workes is dead in it ſelſe: he ſaith not that it is little or feeble, but that it is dead, and that is dead, is not: Fox. p. 1255.

Matth.7. Maſter Bradford holy Martyr: when Harpsfield had thus ſaid, That all which beleeue in Chriſt, ſhal not be ſaued, alleaging that place, Matth. 7. how many ſhall ſay to Chriſt in the day of iudgement, Lord, Lord, haue we not in thy name caſt out diuels? &c. the holy Martyr maketh this anſwere: You muſt make a difference betwixt beleeuing, and ſaying, I beleeue: As for example, if one ſhould ſay and ſweare he loueth you, for all his ſaying you will not beleeue him, when you ſee he goeth about to doe all the euill hee can againſt you: Fox. p. 1613. Ergo, by the teſtimonie of thoſe moſt bleſſed and holy Martyrs, true faith cannot be ſeparated from charitie: for that which hath no loue, is no faith.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE validitie of faith.

First, after what manner faith iuſtifieth, whether as a proper efficient cauſe of iuſtification, or as an inſtrument only. Secondly, whether we are only iuſtified by faith.

THE FIRST ARTICLE, AFTER WHAT manner faith iuſtifieth.

The Papiſts.

53. Error. Faith doth not iuſtifie as an inſtrument in apprehending the iuſtice or righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, but as a proper and true cauſe it actually iuſtifieth, by the dignitie, worthines, and meritorious worke thereof, Bellarm. lib. 1. de iuſtificat. cap. 17. Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 3. ſect. 3.

Galath. 3.8. Rom. 3.30. Argum. 1. Theſe phraſes vſed in Scripture: iuſtificari ex fide, & per fidem, to bee iuſtified of, or thorough faith, doe betoken an actuall force and power in faith to iuſtifie: for theſe prepoſitions, ex, & per, of and thorough, are not attributed to the inſtrumentall, but to the proper efficient and working Rom. 3.20. cauſe: As Rom. 3. 20. ex operibus legis, of the works of the law no fleſh is iuſtified, no man is iuſtified, Galath. 3.11. per legem, by or thorough the law: he meaneth not by the law, that is, by the apprehenſion of the iuſtice thereof, but by the actuall working and iuſtice indeed: as therefore he denieth, that we are iuſtified by the law, that is, the actuall working thereof, ſo he affirmeth, that we are iuſtified by faith, that is, actually, by the very worke. So the Apoſtle ſaith, per fidem vicerunt regna, through faith they obtained kingdomes: that is, verily, and indeed, not reſpectiuely only: And by faith Abel offered a greater ſa- Heb. 11.4. crifice, &c. Faith wrought not this inſtrumentally, but verely and effectually. Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. Bellarmines argument is grounded wholly vpon his logicke quiddities: as becauſe this prepoſition, ex, is a note of the materiall cauſe; and per, of the formall cauſe: therfore when the Scripture ſaith, ex fide, or per fidem, we muſt vnderſtand faith to be more then the inſtrumentall cauſe. But let him know this, that the ſpirit of God is not bound to the rules of Logicke, neither yet will learne to ſpeake of men, but hath a proper ſpeaking of it ſelfe.

2. We are able to ſhew, that theſe prepoſitions, ex, and per, of, and through, are in Scripture attri- Rom. 10.17. buted to the inſtrument. Fides ex auditu, Faith commeth of hearing: The Gentiles are made parta- Epheſ. 3.6. kers of the promiſe of God in Chriſt, per Euangelium, by the Goſpell, that is, the preaching thereof. But the outward miniſtrie, or hearing of the word, doth not actually worke or beget faith, but onely inſtrumentally, the ſpirit of God working by it.

3. It followeth not, becauſe the Apoſtle denieth that we are iuſtified by the law, that is verily, and actually, that he ſhould affirme the ſame of faith: for vnto this negatiue, neminem iuſtificari per legem, vel ex operibus legis, that no man is iuſtified by the law, or the workes thereof; this affirmatiue anſwereth, iuſtificari per fidem Chriſti: to be iuſtified not ſimply by faith, but by faith in Chriſt: and by the Rom. 3.22. 24.25. redemption that is in Chriſt, verſ. 24. by faith in his blood, verſ. 25. the ſame thing then is affirmed of Chriſt which is denied of the law, though not after the ſame manner: the iuſtice of Chriſt is the actual and very cauſe indeed of our iuſtification, yet not actually in vs, but inſtrumentally applied vnto vs by faith. It is Chriſt then, not faith, that properly effecteth that which the law cannot: faith effecteth it not, but onely reſpectiuely, and as it hath relation to Chriſt.

4. Through faith they ſubdued kingdomes, ſtopped the mouthes of Lions, &c. Faith was not the proper efficient cauſe hereof: but faith apprehendeth Chriſt: Chriſt apprehended worketh all good Rom. 8.32. things: If God haue giuen vs his Son, how ſhall he not together with him giue vs all things? Theſe great workes were verily done by them through faith, not as by the proper power and efficacie thereof, but by the power of Chriſt dwelling in them, and being preſent by faith. So Abels ſacrifice was preferred before Cains, not for the worthines of his faith, but by Gods gracious acceptation, to whom hee was ioyned by faith. Laſtly, we make a great difference betweene iuſtification and ſanctification: faith iuſtifieth onely inſtrumentally, but of the workes of ſanctification it is a proper efficient cauſe, though not the principall: for there is a twofolde righteouſneſſe, a perfect righteouſneſſe, whereby we are made righteous before God; and that is the righteouſneſſe onely of Chriſt: and of this righteouſneſſe, faith onely is an inſtrument, no efficient cauſe. There is an imperfect righteouſnes, that is, ſanctification,whereby euery faithfull man is made righteous in himſelfe, not ſufficient to iuſtifie him before God,but yet auailable to leade an holie and vpright life in ſome meaſure. And of this righteouſneſſe faith is a proper efficient cauſe: for as the tree is the cauſe of good fruit, ſo is faith the roote and beginning of godly workes: faith ſtirreth a man vp to pray, Iam.5.15. it worketh peace of conſcience,Rom.5.1. and it hath other proper effects: but it maketh vs not righteous before God by it owne act,but as it apprehendeth,and laieth hold of Chriſt. Iam.5.15. Rom.5.1.

*Argum.*2. Faith is a worke,we are iuſtified by faith: Ergo,by a worke, and ſo conſequently, by merit: faith then is meritorious. Iohn 6.29.

Anſw. Faith indeede is a worke,but not any of our owne workes: it is called the worke of God, Ioh.6.29. God doth wholly worke it in vs; Ergo, we cannot merit by it: Faith iuſtifieth not then, as it is the worke of God in vs: for by this reaſon all other gifts and graces, which are wrought in vs by the ſpirit of God, ſhould in like manner iuſtifie vs: But as it hath relation vnto the obiect Ieſus Chriſt,in apprehending his righteouſneſſe,which is the office only of faith,and not of any other ſpirituall grace.

1. *Argum.*3. Firſt, faith is our iuſtice it ſelfe: Ergo,not the apprehenſion only of iuſtice: the firſt is proued: To him that beleeueth in him,that iuſtifieth the vngodly,faith is counted for righteouſneſſe. So, Other foundation can no man lay,then that which is laid,Ieſus Chriſt: Faith then is the foundation:and the foundation is part of the building. Faith purifieth the heart, the puritie of the heart is our iuſtice, faith then is our iuſtice,and not the apprehenſion of iuſtice onely,*Bellarm.c.*17.arg.2. Rom.4.5. 1.Cor.3.11. Act.15.9.

2. Secondly,Luk.7.50. Thy faith hath ſaued thee: Ergo, it doth more then apprehend ſaluation. The ſicke mans hand, that apprehendeth or reacheth the medicine, is improperlie ſaid to heale him. Luke 7.50.

3. Thirdly, How ſhall they call vpon him, vpon whom they haue not beleeued? how ſhall they beleeue without a Preacher? As the cauſe of faith is preaching; ſo faith cauſeth inuocation, inuocation obtaineth iuſtification: faith therefore not reſpectiuely onely, but effectiuely worketh iuſtification, Bellar.ibid. Rom.10.14.

1. Anſw. Firſt, 1. It followeth not,faith apprehendeth iuſtice:Ergo,it is not our iuſtice. The eye apprehendeth,or receiueth the light of the day,and yet it is it ſelfe the light of the bodie. But like as the eye is but inſtrumentally the light of the bodie,by conueying and applying the outward light:ſo faith is our iuſtice inſtrumentally,in that we beleeue in him that iuſtifieth,as the Apoſtle there ſaith. 2. Chriſt is properly the foundation:and yet faith alſo is the rocke and foundation. Chriſt then and faith make but one foundation: Chriſt poſitiuely,and effectiuely; faith inſtrumentally, by applying and laying the foundation. 3. Faith is not ſaid to purifie the heart,but God by faith;God as the principall agent, or efficient; faith as the inſtrument. Math.6.22.

2. Secondly, 1. It is no rare thing in Scripture to attribute the effect to the inſtrument; as, By thy ſword thou ſhalt liue: yet is the ſword but the inſtrument: ſo the iuſt man liueth by his faith,being the liuely and effectuall inſtrument of the ſpirituall life. 2. As Chriſt here ſaith,thy faith hath ſaued thee: ſo elſewhere: according to your faith be it vnto you. So that faith is but the meane or meaſure of the worke: Chriſt is the worker: as in the ſame place,verſ.28. Beleeue ye,that I am able to doe this? Geneſ.27.40. Math.9.29.

3. Thirdly, 1. As preaching is the cauſe of faith,ſo I grant faith is of iuſtification: but the preaching of the word is but the inſtrument, the ſpirit working by the word is the efficient. 2. But faith doth not ſo worke iuſtification as inuocation: for as I ſhewed before,faith efficiently produceth the workes of ſanctification,whereof inuocation is a principall, but it inſtrumentally onely cauſeth iuſtification.

The Proteſtants.

Faith doth not iuſtifie vs by the worthineſſe and dignitie thereof, or as it is a qualitie inherent in man,by any meritorious act,or by the worke of beleeuing, or as a proper efficient cauſe; but by way of an inſtrument onely,being as it were the hand of the ſoule, whereby wee doe apprehend the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt.

*Argum.*1. Saint Paul ſaith,By grace are you ſaued through faith,not of your ſelues, for it is the gift of God; not of workes,leſt any man ſhould boaſt himſelfe. Out of this place we gather theſe arguments: firſt,grace and faith may ſtand together towards the attaining of our ſaluation: for the grace of God offered in Chriſt is the principall cauſe, faith apprehending grace the inſtrumentall: but grace and worke cannot ſtand together: Ergo,faith and workes cannot be matched together: faith then iuſtifieth not,as a worke. Epheſ.2.8. Rom.11.6.

Secondly,they that merit,muſt merit of themſelues,faith is not of our ſelues; it is the gift of God: Ergo, by faith we merit not.

*Argum.*2. Faith as it is commanded in the law, iuſtifieth not: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that a man is iuſtified by faith,without the workes of the law: but faith, as it comprehendeth onely the act of beleeuing,is a commandement contained in the law: for we are commanded to beleeue in God: Ergo, as it is an act of beleeuing only,it iuſtifieth not. Rom.3.28.

*Argum.*3. Maſter Bradford holy Martyr reaſoneth thus: As the Iſraelites were healed by beholding the braſen Serpent,ſo are wee ſaued by beleeuing in Chriſt: but the looking vp of it ſelfe did not procure health vnto the Iſraelites,but the promiſe made in the obiect,which was the braſen Serpent, whereupon they looked, gaue them health by their looking vp: Ergo, after the ſame manuer we are ſaued by our faith, and ſpirituall looking vp to the bodie of Chriſt crucified: not that the action it ſelfe of beleeuing, as it is a qualitie in man, doth ſo deſerue; but becauſe it taketh that dignitie and vertue from the obiect Ieſus Chriſt: Fox pag. 1659.

Further, 1. Auguſtine ſaith, Nemo iuſtè viuit, niſi iuſtificatus, id eſt, iuſtus effectus: ab illo autem fit homo iuſtus, qui nunquam poteſt eſſe iniuſtus: ſicut lucerna à ſeipſo non accenditur, ita nec anima humana ſibi præſtat lucem, ſed clamat ad Deum, tu illuminabis lucernam: No man liueth iuſtly, vnleſſe he be iuſtified, that is, made iuſt before: and man is made iuſt by him that can neuer bee vniuſt: for as the lanterne doth not fetch light from it ſelfe, ſo neither doth the ſoule of man giue light to it ſelfe, but crieth vnto God, thou ſhalt lighten my lanterne, Pſal. 109. Faith then is the lanterne that giueth light to the ſoule, that is, iuſtifieth: but as the lanterne giueth not light of it ſelfe, but as it is lighted it ſelfe: ſo faith by it owne act doth not iuſtifie, but as it hath reſpect vnto Chriſt who is the true light: Per fidem locum damus in corde Deo, qui in nobis & per nos bona operatur: It is the office of faith, to make roome for God in our heart, who in vs and by vs worketh that which is good, in Pſal. 144. Faith it ſelfe therfore properly worketh not our iuſtification; but only prepareth a way for the Lord, to come vnto our hearts: God then is the worker, faith is the way whereby he worketh.

Likewiſe, ex epiſtol. 95. Auguſtin. & 5. Epiſcopor. ad Innocentium: Non per legem iuſtitia, &c. ſed ex fide & dono Dei per Ieſum Chriſtum: Righteouſneſſe is not by the law, but by faith, and the gift of God by Ieſus Chriſt, &c. Faith then doth not iuſtifie by the work and merite thereof: for merit and gift cannot ſtand together, yet faith and gift may: becauſe faith it ſelfe is the gift of God. Againe, in the ſame Epiſtle, Iuſtos patres & ex fide viuentes, non poſſibilitas naturæ,—ſed dei gratia per fidem iuſtificauit: The righteous fathers which liued by faith, not the poſſibilitie of nature, but Gods grace by faith did iuſtifie, &c. But grace and workes cannot ſtand together, therefore faith doth not iuſtifie by the merit of the worke. And yet Auguſtine more directly, mouing this queſtion: Vtrum fides mereatur hominis iuſtificationem: Whether faith merit mans iuſtification: reſolueth, that it doth not, concluding thus, Miſericors Deus vocat, nullis hoc vel fidei meritis largiens, The mercifull God calleth, not giuing any thing to the merits of faith: ad Simplician. lib. 1.

Lib.7. de ſacrificijs. 2. Theodoret ſaith: neque enim operibus noſtris, ſed per ſolam fidem myſtica bona conſecuti ſumus: for not by our workes: but by faith alone wee haue obtained the myſticall good things, &c. then faith muſt not be conſidered as a worke in the matter of iuſtification.

Harm. ſſ. 4. pag. 243. 3. Latter confeſſe of Heluetia, c. 11. Becauſe faith doth apprehend Chriſt our righteouſneſſe, and doth attribute all to the praiſe of God in Chriſt, in this reſpect iuſtification is attributed to faith chiefly becauſe of Chriſt, whom it receiueth, and not becauſe it is a worke of ours: Belgia, artic. 22. We doe iuſtly ſay with Saint Paul, we are iuſtified by faith without the workes of the law: yet to ſpeake properly we doe not meane that faith by it ſelfe and of it ſelfe doth iuſtifie vs, which is but onely, as an inſtrument, whereby we apprehend Chriſt, which is our iuſtice, &c. Ibid. p. 260.

Rom. 6.24. 4. Peter Lombard rehearſeth and approueth this ſentence out of Auguſtine vpon theſe words of S. Paul, We are iuſtified freely by grace: Hoc ideo dixit, ne fides ipſa ſuperba ſit, ne dicat ſibi: Therefore he ſo ſaid, leſt faith it ſelfe be proud and ſay, how freely? for that which faith meriteth, is reſtored rather, then giuen: Non dicat homo iſta fidelis, quia cum dixerit, habeo fidem, vt merear iuſtificationem, reſpondetur ei, quid habes, quod non accepiſti? Let not a faithfull man ſay ſo, becauſe if he ſay, I haue faith to merit iuſtification, it will be anſwered, What haſt thou, that thou haſt not receiued, &c. lib. 2. diſt. 26. liter. d. Thus then faith is excluded from meriting or working of iuſtification.

Againe, lib. 3. diſt. 19. liter. a. Vt olim aſpicientes, &c. As in time paſt, they which looked vpon the braſen Serpent were healed from the biting of Serpents; ſi recte ergo fidei intuitu in illum reſpicimus, qui pro nobis pependit in ligno: ſo if by the beholding of faith, we looke vpon him that hung vpon the tree, we are looſed from our ſinnes, &c. Thus faith then by the beholding onely and ſpirituall apprehending of Chriſt doth iuſtifie, euen by the ſentence of their Maſter.

THE SECOND ARTICLE, WHETHER faith onely iuſtifieth.

The Papiſts.

54. Error. FAith is not the onely cauſe of our iuſtification: but there are other alſo, as hope, charitie, almes deeds, and other vertues, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 8. ſect. 6. Bellar. lib. 1. de iuſtificat. cap. 13. Yea works are more principall then faith, in the matter of iuſtification, Rhem. Iam. 2. ſect. 7. Whoſoeuer therefore ſaith, that a man is iuſtified only by faith, and that nothing elſe is required to iuſtification, wee pronounce him accurſed, Trident. Concil. ſeſſ. 6. can. 9.

Argum. 1. Wee are ſaued by hope, Rom. 8. 24. Ergo, not onely by faith, Rhemiſt. annot. in hunc locum.

Rom. 8.24. Anſw. The Apoſtle here expoundeth himſelfe: for (ſaith he verſ. 25.) If we hope for that we ſee not, we doe with patience abide for it: We are ſaid then to bee ſaued by hope, not becauſe wee are thereby iuſtified, but becauſe by hope we doe expect and waite for our ſaluation, which is not yet accompliſhed: ſo then iuſtification is the proper obiect of faith, which is now preſent; ſaluation which is the end of our faith, and followeth iuſtification, is the proper obiect of hope. And therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that faith is the ground of things hoped for, the thing hoped for, is the ſaluation of our ſoules, the ground is iuſtification by faith in Chriſt. So we are ſaued by hope, not that wee are iuſtified by hope, which the Scripture no where affirmeth, but becauſe hope worketh in vs a patient abiding and expectation, till the promiſed reward come.

Heb.11.1.

*Argum.*2. Charitie iuſtifieth: Ergo, not faith only. The antecedent is thus proued, Many ſinnes are forgiuen her, for ſhe loued much: her loue is the cauſe, that her ſinnes are forgiuen. So ſaith S. Iohn, We know we are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe we loue the brethren. Loue then is the cauſe why we are tranſlated from death to life, Bellar. ibid.

Luke 7.47.50.
1.Iohn 3.14.

Anſw. 1. To the firſt place wee anſwere: that the womans loue is not rendred as a cauſe, that her ſinnes were forgiuen her by Chriſt: but by her exceeding loue, which was an euident ſigne and effect of her faith, whereby her ſinnes were forgiuen her, our Sauiour Chriſt confuteth the Phariſies who reputed her as a ſinner, verſ. 39. and ſheweth, that ſhee was not now in her ſinnes, but they were alreadie remitted; as it might appeare by her great loue: for ſhee hauing receiued ſo great a benefit, as the remiſſion of her ſinnes, doth hold her ſelfe much bound to Chriſt. It followeth therefore, to whom a little is forgiuen, hee loueth a little: but to this woman much was forgiuen, therefore ſhe loued much. Her loue then followed the remiſſion of ſinnes, as an effect, it went not before as a cauſe: for in this reſpect our Sauiour telleth her, it was her faith that ſaued her, verſ. 50. not her loue.

2. To the other place we likewiſe anſwere: the Apoſtle ſaith not, we are tranſlated from death to life, &c. but, we know we are, becauſe we loue the brethren: that is, loue as a ſpeciall fruit of faith, is a certaine ſigne vnto vs of our regeneration: as verſ. 19. thereby we know that we are of the truth. By loue iſſuing from faith, we are aſſured our faith is not in vaine, not that therby we are iuſtified: yet loue it ſelfe is no cauſe of our iuſtification, but onely a ſigne and badge thereof: for it is impoſſible, that we ſhould loue God firſt: But herein is loue, not that we loued God, but hee loued vs. God then ſheweth his loue firſt, in reconciling vs by his Sonne whom we apprehend by faith, and then after our reconciliation by Chriſt, and iuſtification by faith, loue alſo is wrought in vs toward God. If our loue then ſhould goe before our reconciliation, wherein Gods loue appeareth toward vs, then ſhould wee loue God firſt, contrarie to the Apoſtle.

1.Iohn 4.10.

*Argum.*3. Feare doth iuſtifie as well as faith: as Prou. 1.7. The feare of the Lod is the beginning of knowledge. Prou. 14.27. The feare of the Lord is a wel-ſpring of life: Ergo, faith onely doth not iuſtifie, or giue life, Bellarm. c. 13. diſpoſ. 2.

Prou.1.7.
Prou.14.27.

Anſw. Firſt, by feare here may be vnderſtood in generall the whole ſpirituall ſtate of man, as it alſo comprehendeth faith: as Pſal. 128.1. Bleſſed is the man that feareth the Lord: but true bleſſedneſſe is by faith: therefore faith cannot be here excluded. In this ſenſe, we doubt not to grant, that the feare of the Lord, that is, being ioyned with faith, is the beginning of wiſedome. Secondly, if we take feare more ſpecially, for a particular gift of the ſpirit; in this ſenſe iuſtification is not aſcribed to it: for in the firſt place, it is ſaid to bring knowledge; in the ſecond, it is called the fountaine of life: which in the ſame place is expounded, verſ. 26. In the feare of the Lord is aſſured ſtrength. Theſe are the gifts and graces of ſanctification, knowledge, aſſurance, ſtrength, they are not iuſtification it ſelfe, but the fruites thereof, to the which the feare of God is the ready way.

Pſalm.128.1.

*Argum.*4. If faith alone doe iuſtifie, and the other vertues, as of hope, charitie, doe not helpe any thing to iuſtification, then faith may as well iuſtifie, when thoſe vertues are abſent, as when they are preſent: But faith ſeparated from hope and charitie, iuſtifieth not: Ergo, faith alone doth not iuſtifie, Bellarm. cap. 14.

Anſw. It followeth not, faith alone doth iuſtifie: Ergo, it is, or may be alone. In the Sunne, there is both heate and light: It is the heate onely that heateth the earth, not the light; and yet the heate cannot be ſeparated from the light: the tongue both toucheth and taſteth; by the taſte onely it diſcerneth the ſauour of meates, not by the touching or feeling; yet there can be no taſte without feeling: ſo faith alone iuſtifieth, yet it is not alone: faith and charitie are inſeparable, yet charitie helpeth not faith to iuſtifie. The good tree is neuer without good fruit, yet the good fruit doth not helpe to make the tree good; the tree is good firſt it ſelfe, before it can bring forth good fruit: So charitie doth not helpe to iuſtifie, that is, to make men good; but firſt he is made righteous by faith, and then hee bringeth forth good fruits, as the workes of charitie.

The Proteſtants.

FAith whereby we are iuſtified, is to be conſidered, partly as it is paſſiue, partly as it is actiue: It is paſſiue in apprehending the promiſes of God in Chriſt, and applying Chriſt with all his benefits, in which reſpect faith onely iuſtifieth. It is alſo actiue in bringing forth good fruits, and quickening of vs to euery good worke; but ſo it iuſtifieth not. Faith then is inſeparably ioyned with hope and loue, and neceſſarily yeeldeth in vs good fruit; but none of al theſe doe concurre with faith, in the act of our iuſtification: but it is the office onely of faith, to applie vnto vs the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, whereby only we are made righteous before God.

Argum. 1. If men are iuſtified without workes, then iuſtification is onely by faith. But the firſt is true, as it may appeare by theſe teſtimonies of Scripture: Wee conclude, that a man is iuſtified by

Rom.3.28.
Rom.4.2.
Epheſ.2.9.
Phil.3.9.

faith,without the workes of the law,Rom.3.28. If Abraham were iuſtified by workes, he hath wherein to reioyce but not with God,Rom.4.2. By grace are ye ſaued through faith,not of workes,Epheſ.2.9. That I might be found in him,not hauing mine owne righteouſnes which is of the law,but that which is through the faith of Chriſt,Philip.3.9. Ergo,faith onely iuſtifieth.

Bellarmine anſwereth,that the Apoſtle excludeth not all workes,for then faith it ſelfe ſhould bee excluded from iuſtification,becauſe it is a worke: And if iuſtifying faith do except euery law,then the law of faith alſo ſhould be excepted,Bellarm.cap.16. Such workes therfore only are excluded,which goe before faith,which are done,ſola cognitione legis,vel ſolis viribus liberi arbitrij, ſine gratia,by the knowledge onely of the law,or by the ſtrength onely of freewill, without grace: not ſuch workes as are of faith,and proceede of grace,cap.19.

Epheſ.2.10.
Tit.3.5.
Rom.11.6.

*Contra.*1. The Apoſtle excludeth euen the workes alſo of grace: for when he had ſaid,wee are ſaued by grace through faith,not of workes: he afterward ſheweth what workes;euen ſuch as the Lord had ordained for vs to walke in. Epheſ.2.10. Againe,in another place he ſaith,Not by the workes of righteouſneſſe which we had done,but according to his mercie he ſaued vs,Tit.3.5. The workes of righteouſneſſe are excluded: but no man by nature without the helpe of grace, can doe the workes of righteouſneſſe. Further,the Apoſtle ſheweth,that grace and workes cannot be matched together: If it bee of grace,it is no more of workes,or elſe were grace no more grace: if of workes,it is no more grace,for then worke were no more worke,Rom.11.6. Grace and works cannot therefore iuſtifie together,becauſe the one deſtroyeth the other. Euen works of grace cannot iuſtifie together with grace: for I aske them,the workes of grace,are they not workes? But if they ſhould iuſtifie together with grace,they ſhould be no more workes: or elſe (ſaith the Apoſtle) worke were no more worke.

Heb.11.8.
Geneſ.12.17.
Geneſ.13.18.
Geneſ.14.20.
Geneſ.15.6.

2. Euen at this time,when Abrahams faith was imputed to him for righteouſneſſe,and his works were refuſed in reſpect of his iuſtification; Abraham had done many excellent workes by his faith: As he obeyed God,to goe from his fathers houſe,vnto a ſtrange countrey, which he knew not,Gen.12.1.which was a worke of faith,Heb.11.8. He built altars,and called vpon the name of God,Gen.12.7.&13.18. Before this time alſo Abraham was bleſſed of Melchiſedech,Geneſ.14.20. And then after all theſe workes of faith,the Scripture ſaith,That Abraham beleeued the Lord, and it was counted to him for righteouſnes,Geneſ.15.6. Wherefore euen Abrahams godly workes,iſſuing from his faith,are excluded from his iuſtification.

Bellarmine anſwereth,that although Abraham at this time wrought many workes by his faith, yet the Apoſtle taketh not exception againſt ſuch workes; but thoſe onely that Abraham did without faith: for euen the faithfull,that haue faith,aliquando operantur non ex fide, ſometime doe worke,but not of faith; as when they ſinne,or doe any pure morall workes, without relation to God: Bellarm.ibid.

*Contra.*1. As for the ſinfull workes of faithfull men, which wee denie not,but they may ſometimes fall into,it is abſurd to thinke,that the Apoſtle excludeth any ſuch workes: as though any man were ſo blinde to thinke,that by his ſinnes or euill workes, he might bee iuſtified. What meaneth the Ieſuite,to giue an inſtance of the ſinfull workes of Abraham, or any other faithfull man,as though they euer came in queſtion,in the matter of iuſtification?

Rom.14.23.

2. As for other workes of faithfull men,if they be good and vertuous,they are of faith: for whatſoeuer is not of faith, is ſinne, Rom.14.23. but faith alwaies hath reſpect and relation to God: therefore whatſoeuer faithfull men doe well, it commeth of faith,and a good conſcience. All,whatſoeuer elſe in them,is ſinne,and ſo commeth not within the compaſſe of this queſtion.

Philip.3.8.

3. Saint Paul, when hee ſaith, That I may bee found, not hauing mine owne righteouſneſſe,&c. doth not ſpeake onely of ſuch workes, as he did before he was called, but euen of thoſe which he did ſince he was an Apoſtle: For whom I haue counted all things loſſe, and doe iudge them to be dung,that I might winne Chriſt. He ſaith not onely,I haue counted,as ſpeaking of the time paſt,but I doe.

2.Tim.4.8.

Bellarmine anſwereth,that the Apoſtle could in no wiſe vnderſtand his workes done after his calling,to iudge them as dung,becauſe he ſaith,that for ſuch workes, there was laid vp a crowne of righteouſneſſe,Nunquid Deus coronaret ſtercora? Should God crowne dung? Bellarm.cap.19.

Rom.6.23.

Contra. Firſt,Saint Paul doth not ſimplie call theſe workes dung, or loſſe, but in compariſon: I count all things loſſe,for the excellent knowledge ſake of Chriſt. Secondly,God crowneth the works of his Saints,not for the worthines of them,which indeede are but as dung, in reſpect of the excellencie of reward: but we with our workes are crowned for the worthineſſe of Chriſt: Life eternall is the gift of God,through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord.

Iohn 6.29.
Rom.3.27.

4. Now where the Ieſuite obiecteth,that faith is a worke,and that there is a law alſo of faith: Ergo,euery worke,and euery law is not excluded from iuſtification. We anſwere: Firſt,that faith is indeed a worke,but not any of our workes,it is the worke of God wrought in vs only by his ſpirit: This is the worke of God,that ye beleeue in him,&c. Secondly, faith iuſtifieth not as it is a worke, but in reſpect of that propertie,which it hath to apprehend and apply the iuſtice of Chriſt: it iuſtifieth not by it owne worthineſſe and dignitie,but by the worthineſſe of the obiect. Thirdly,we exclude not euerie law,but legem operum,the law of workes: but the law of faith is not the law of workes: for the Apoſtle doth diſtinguiſh them.

*Argum.*2. The ſcripture aſcribeth iuſtification to faith and beleefe: Whoſoeuer beleeueth in him, ſhall haue euerlaſting life. Thy faith hath ſaued thee. We are ſaued through faith, Ergo, faith onely iuſtifieth. Ioh.3.16. Luk.7.50. Epheſ.2.8.

Anſw. Though faith onely be named, yet faith onely doth not iuſtifie: for by the ſame reaſon, becauſe other vertues ſometimes are onely named, as, Many ſinnes are forgiuen her, for ſhe loued much, And, We are ſaued by hope, As notwithſtanding, we cannot gather, that loue, or hope doe iuſtifie without faith, although they be named alone: ſo the contrary cannot be concluded, by the ſole naming of faith, *Bellarm.cap.*20. Luk.7.47. Rom.8.24.

Contra. Firſt, that neither hope, nor charitie doe iuſtifie in whole, or in part, neither that it can be gathered by theſe places, we haue ſhewed before in our anſwere to their ſecond and third argument againſt iuſtification by faith. Secondly, we are able to bring foorth a place of Scripture, where faith onely is required. Chriſt ſaid vnto the ruler of the Synagogue, whoſe daughter was now dead: Crede tantum, Beleeue onely, and ſhe ſhall be made whole. Luk.8.50.

Bellarmine anſwereth: That Chriſt ſpeaketh not here of iuſtification, or remiſſion of ſinnes, but onely of doing a myracle, in raiſing vp one which was dead; and faith alone is able to obtaine a myracle, though it be not to iuſtifie, Bellarm.

Contra. 1. Our aduerſaries affirme iuſtifying faith, and the faith of myracles in ſubſtance to bee all one, and that it is one and the ſelfe ſame faith, whereby myracles are wrought, and the ſoules of men iuſtified, *Bellarm.cap.*5. Yea, the Rhemiſts confeſſe, that the faith of myracles haue more feruour, deuotion, and confident truſt, then the iuſtifying faith: *Annot.*1.Cor.13.9. If then faith onely be ſufficient to worke myracles, why not alſo to iuſtifie, ſeeing, in their opinion, they are operations of the ſame faith? Nay, if to worke myracles, as they ſay, be the more worthy thing: if faith onely ſuffice for the greater worke, much more for the leſſe.

2. Our Sauiour Chriſt requireth no other faith of Iairus here, then hee doth of the father, whoſe ſonne was poſſeſſed with a dumbe ſpirit: Mark.9. Chriſt requireth of him to beleeue, that hee was able to caſt out the euill ſpirit; and of this man, to beleeue, that he was able to raiſe his daughter: But that faith was not ſufficient onely for myracles, but for all other purpoſes: If thou canſt beleeue, all things are poſſible to him that beleeueth. If all things, then not onely the health of the body, but the ſaluation of the ſoule: Ergo, this onely faith here required, where our Sauiour ſaith: Crede tantum. Beleeue onely, is ſufficient to obtaine all things. Mark.9.23.

3. This, crede tantum, beleeue onely, was no other faith, than that which was in the woman, healed of the bloody iſſue: for ſhe beleeued onely that Chriſt was able to doe it. But Chriſt ſaith vnto her: Fides tua te ſaluam fecit, Thy faith hath ſaued thee, which the Ieſuite himſelfe confeſſeth to bee vnderſtood of the health both of her body and ſoule; Fidei tribuit vtramque ſanitatem; He aſcribeth to faith both kindes of health. And in the ſame forme of words our Sauiour ſaith to the woman, whoſe ſinnes were forgiuen, *Thy faith hath ſaued thee, Bellar.cap.*17. If al theſe places ſpeake of the ſame faith, which Chriſt commandeth, in ſaying, crede tantum, beleeue onely; then this faith, to beleeue onely, is ſufficient to procure both bodily and ghoſtly health. Luk.8.48. Luk.7.50.

*Argum.*3. We are iuſtified freely by grace, therefore not of workes, but by faith: By grace are ye ſaued through faith, To him that worketh not, but beleeueth in him that iuſtifieth the vngodly, his faith is counted for righteouſneſſe. We are then iuſtified freely by faith and beleefe, without workes: Ergo, by faith onely. Rom.3.24. Epheſ.2.8. Rom.4.5.

*Anſw.*1. Iuſtification freely by grace, excludeth not all workes or merits, but thoſe workes onely which doe properly merit, ex condigno, of condignitie and worthines, not thoſe which doe merit ex congruo, of congruitie: there are other diſpoſitions then beſide faith which goe before iuſtification, which doe not merit of condignitie, that is, for their worthines abſolutely, yet of congruitie, in ſome ſort they do merit: And yet for all this kinde of meriting, our iuſtification ſhall bee free by grace, *Bellar.cap.*21.

*Contra.*1. Before we haue faith, there is no place at all for merits: for without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, where God is not pleaſed, there is no meriting: Ergo, without faith no man can merit. Thoſe diſpoſitions then, which goe before faith and iuſtification, cannot merit any thing at all, and therefore not ſo much, as, de congruo, of congruitie. 2. The leaſt degree of meriting in the world, taketh away the freenes of the gift: if iuſtification come freely by grace, it cannot be any way merited: for to him that worketh (ſaith the Apoſtle) the wages is not counted by fauour, but by debt, and that we might knowe, that our iuſtification is altogether of Gods meere mercie, the Apoſtle vſeth two words expreſſing the ſame thing: he ſaith, we are iuſtified by grace, yea and that freely: gratis per gratiam, freely by grace. Hebr.11.6. Rom.4.5.

*Anſw.*2. Iuſtification freely by grace excludeth not all workes and merits, but thoſe onely which are of our ſelues, thoſe merits which we worke by grace, and are of God, may ſtand very well with grace: for as iuſtification by grace excludeth not faith, becauſe faith alſo is of grace, ſo it excludeth not other workes, becauſe they alſo are of grace, Bellar.ibid.

Contra. 1. Not onely the workes, which men are able to doe by their owne ſtrength, are excluded from iuſtification, but euen the workes of grace: Not by the workes of righteouſnes, but according to his mercy hee ſaued vs, Mercy then ſhutteth out all workes, euen holy and righteous workes. Tit.3.5.

We are ſaued by grace, &c. not of workes, yea good workes, which God hath prepared for vs to walke in, Ephes.2.8.10. Grace therefore admitteth not ſo much as good workes, in the matter of iuſtification. See more of this before, reſponſ. ad argum. 1. 2. Though faith be wrought in vs by grace, yet it ſtandeth together with grace, in the benefit of iuſtification, the one as the efficient, the other as the inſtrument thereof: faith meriteth not or deſerueth any thing towards iuſtification, but onely applieth Chriſt crucified: which office of applying is proper onely to faith; it is not common either vnto workes, or any other gift beſide: therefore they are excluded. And againe, the Scripture ioyneth grace and faith together: Ephes.2.8. By grace are ye ſaued by faith, but no where doe we finde grace and workes coupled together, in our iuſtification. And this may be a ſufficient cauſe why workes are excluded, and not faith.

Anſw. 3. The Rhemiſts grant, that the beginning of our iuſtification, which they call the firſt iuſtification, is meerely of Gods grace, neither can we haue any acceptable workes, before wee are iuſtified: but in the ſecond iuſtification, which is the encreaſe of the former iuſtice, a man may merit by good workes: Annot. Rom.2.3. Saint Paul in this place ſpeaketh of the firſt iuſtification, not of the ſecond.

Contra. This is but a late and new deuiſe, of the firſt and ſecond iuſtification, as afterward wee will ſhew in the proper place. The Scripture teacheth vs, that not only the beginning of our righte- Ephes.2.5.6. ouſneſſe, but the finiſhing, and perfecting of it, is onely by grace in Chriſt: When wee were dead in our ſinnes, hee hath quickned vs together in Chriſt, by whoſe grace yee are ſaued, and hath raiſed vs vp, and made vs ſit together in heauenly places. We ſee that this ſaluation by grace, bringeth vs vp to heauen: Ergo, both the firſt and ſecond iuſtification are of grace, for they can bring vs no further then to heauen.

Argum. 4. The Scripture teſtifieth, that all, which beleeue, are iuſtified and ſaued; which ſhould John 3.16. Act.10.43. Act.13.39. not be infallibly true, if faith onely did not iuſtifie: as, That whoſoeuer beleeueth in him ſhould not periſh: Through his name, all that beleeue in him ſhall receiue remiſſion of ſinnes: By him euery one, that beleeueth, is iuſtified.

Anſw. 1. The meaning of theſe places may be this: Euery one that beleeueth ſhall be ſaued, that is, none without faith can be ſaued: and none is iuſtified, except he beleeue, Bellar. c. 22.

Contra. 1. You are a goodly interpreter, to expound an affirmatiue by a negatiue: as to ſay, euery one that beleeueth ſhall be ſaued: that is, he that beleeueth not, ſhall not be ſaued. This is rather a conMark.16.16. ſequence, than the ſenſe of the former: as Mark.16.16. Chriſt placeth them together, hauing firſt ſaid, he that beleeueth ſhall be ſaued, he addeth, he that beleeueth not ſhall bee damned. This is not the John 5. expoſition of the former, but a concluſion inferred vpon it. 2. Where Chriſt ſaith, Iohn 5. Hee that beleeueth, &c. hath paſſed from death to life: will you expound it thus, he that beleeueth not, hath not paſſed, &c. thus in your ſenſe, hath not paſſed, and hath paſſed, ſhall one expound the other: Such kind of interpreting is moſt groſſe.

Anſw. 2. By all, which beleeue, are vnderſtood all ſorts of people, whether Iewes or Gentiles, that they are all ſaued by faith, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. If this ſenſe be admitted, all that beleeue, that is, all ſorts of men that beleeue ſhall bee ſaued: the ſame concluſion ſtill remaineth, that faith to all ſorts of men both Iewes and Gentiles is ſufficient to ſaluation. 2. How all is to be expounded, our Sauiour ſheweth, Preach the Goſpell to Mark.16.15.16 euery creature, he that ſhall beleeue and be baptized, ſhall be ſaued: but the Goſpell is not preached onely in generall to all ſorts, nor yet Baptiſme miniſtred, but in particular alſo: Ergo, euery particular man that beleeueth is ſaued. 3. And as he that beleeueth not is damned, ſo he that beleeueth is ſaued; but euery man in particular not beleeuing is damned. Ergo.

Anſw. 3. Theſe Scriptures doe proue that faith doth iuſtifie, if other things bee not wanting, it ſufficeth not alone, but doth iuſtifie for the part thereof; as likewiſe hope, charity, for their part. Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. The want or abſence of faith onely condemneth, he that beleeueth not is damned, Ergo, Mark.16.16. the preſence of faith onely saueth: He that beleeueth and is baptized ſhall be ſaued. 2. Baptiſme is the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, as Saint Paul ſaith of circumciſion, Ergo, faith onely ſealed in Rom.4.11. Baptiſme ſufficeth. 3. Whereas it is ſaid, through his name and by him euery one that beleeueth, ſhall be Act.10.43. ſaued, we reaſon thus; Chriſts name onely iuſtifieth vs; but faith onely, neither hope nor charitie, Act.13.39. applieth Chriſt: Ergo, faith in Chriſt onely ſufficeth.

Auguſtine ſaith, Intelligenda eſt gratia Dei per Ieſum Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum, qua liberantur homines a malo: We muſt vnderſtand the grace of God by Ieſus Chriſt, by which men are onely deliuered from euill: De corrept. & grat. cap. 2. If all bee of grace, then nothing is of workes. That alſo is a knowne ſaying of Auguſtine: Opera non præcedunt iuſtificandum, ſed ſequuntur iuſtificatum: Works goe not before vnto iuſtification, but follow in him that is alreadie iuſtified. If a man therefore bee iuſtified, before workes come, then workes helpe not at all toward his iuſtification. Againe hee ſaith, Quantalibet fuiſſe virtutis antiquos iuſtos prædices, non eos ſaluos fecit, niſi fides Mediatoris: How vertuous ſoeuer you report the ancient righteous perſons to haue been, they were not ſaued but by the faith of the Mediator: Lib. 1. cont. 2. epiſt. Pelag. cap. 21. Likewiſe, Ex epiſtol. Auguſtin. & 5. Epiſcoporum ad Innocentium: Fide euacuata, quæ hominis iuſtitia remaneat?— Chriſtus manens Deus, homo factus, refecit ipſe, quod fecit: Faith being euacuated, what righteouſneſſe remaineth in man?

Chriſt remaining ſtill God, being made man, did make againe, that is, reſtore what hee had made. If no righteouſnes remaine where there is no faith, then all mans righteouſnes before God, is by faith in Chriſt.

The fathers are plentifull witneſſes for iuſtification onely by faith.

1. Origen in c.3.epiſt.ad Roman. Dicit Apoſtolus ſufficere ſolius fidei iuſtificationem: The Apoſtle ſaith, that the iuſtification onely of faith ſufficeth.

2. Hilar.can.8 in Matth. Fides ſola iuſtificat: Faith onely doth iuſtifie.

3. Baſil.homil.de humilitat. Nouit ſe ſola fide in Chriſtum iuſtificatum: He doth know himſelfe onely iuſtified by faith.

4. Ambroſ.in c.3.ad Roman. Sola fide iuſtificati ſunt dono Dei: They are iuſtified by faith alone by the gift of God: in cap 9. Sola fides poſita eſt ad ſalutem: Onely faith is appointed to ſaluation.

5. Chryſoſt.homil.de fide. Si credis fidei, cur alia infers, quaſi fides iuſtificare non ſufficiat ſola? If you beleeue faith, why do you bring in other things, as though faith onely ſufficed not to iuſtifie?

6. Cyril.lib.10.in Ioan.c.18. Hominem per ſolam fidem inhærere Chriſto: That a man by faith only doth cleaue to Chriſt.

7. Bernard.ſerm.22.in Cantic. Solam iuſtificatus per fidem pacem habebit apud te: Being iuſtified onely by faith he ſhall haue peace with thee.

Anſw. Bellarmine to all theſe places anſwereth, that the fathers, in ſaying, Faith onely iuſtifieth, exclude not all other things beſide; but either externall workes onely, as Origen.1.Chryſoſt.5. or the workes of the law without faith, as Hilar.2.Baſil.3. or the ceremonies of the law, as Ambroſe loc.4. For otherwiſe Chryſoſtome ſaith, Non ſolum fide opus eſt, ſed charitate: We haue not need onely of faith but of charitie, hom.1.in 1.Timoth.Bellarm.c.25.

Contra. Firſt, that charitie is neceſſarie, and other graces of the ſpirit beſide, wee grant, but yet faith onely hath this property to iuſtifie: for Saint Paul hauing taught, that wee are iuſtified by grace, not by the workes of righteouſneſſe, yet exhorteth, that they which haue beleeued in God, ſhould be carefull to ſhew forth good workes; theſe things are good and profitable to men: though he aſcribe iuſtification onely to faith, yet he vrgeth workes as neceſſary and profitable. Tit.3.5.7.

Secondly, that the fathers excluded all other things whatſoeuer, from the worke of iuſtification, imputing it onely to faith, it is euident.

1. Chryſoſtome ſaid before, Cur alia infers? Why do yee bring in any other thing to iuſtifie beſide faith?

2. Auguſtine before alleaged, Fide euacuata, quæ hominis iuſtitia remanet? Faith being euacuate, what other iuſtice of man remaineth? epiſt.95.

3. Cyprian: Fidem tantum prodeſſe, & tantum nos poſſe, quantum credimus: That faith onely profiteth, (to ſaluation) and that we onely can doe ſo much, as we beleeue, lib.3.ad Quirin.c.42.

4. But Saint Ambroſe of all other is moſt plentifull: Firſt, in Luc.13. Fides regnum cœlorum eſt: itaq́ qui habet fidem, habet & regnum: Faith is the kingdome of heauen; he then that hath faith, hath the kingdome. Secondly, in 3.ad Roman. Beatos dicit, de quibus hoc ſanxit Deus, vt ſine labore & aliqua obſeruatione ſola fide iuſtificentur apud Deum: He calleth them bleſſed, of whom God hath decreed, that without any labour or obſeruation, they ſhould bee iuſtified onely by faith. And againe, Manifeſtè beati ſunt, quibus ſine labore, vel opere aliquo remittuntur iniquitates, nulla ab his requiſita pœnitentiæ opera, niſi tantum vt credant: They are manifeſtly bleſſed, whoſe ſinnes are remitted without their labour, no worke of repentance being required, but onely that they ſhould beleeue, &c. Here Ambroſe excludeth euen the godly and religious workes of repentance from iuſtification. Thirdly, in 9.ad Roman. Conuenit, vt in ſolo nomine Domini conditoris conſequatur ſalutem creatura, hoc eſt, per fidem: It is conuenient, that the creature onely ſhould obtaine ſaluation in the name of the Creator, that is, by faith, &c. I reaſon from hence thus; as the name onely of the Creator iuſtifieth; ſo faith onely in his name: but his Name alone, without any other thing whatſoeuer iuſtifieth: Ergo, Faith onely in his name, all other things excluded. Fourthly, Ibid. Nullum opus dicit legis, ſed ſolam fidem dandam in cauſa Chriſti: He ſaith no worke of the law, but onely faith is to bee giuen in the cauſe of Chriſt, &c. If faith onely is to be exhibited in the cauſe of Chriſt, what elſe is required, I ſee not. Fifthly, in 2.Cor.3. Lex ſpiritus dat libertatem, ſolam fidem poſcens: The law of the ſpirit doth giue liberty, requiring faith alone, &c. If the ſpirit require onely faith, who is it that ſhall require any thing els? Sixthly, in Epheſ.6. Arma Dei fides ſtabilis, per quam ſolam ſemper victus Sathanas: The armour of God is a ſtable faith, by the which onely Sathan alwayes hath beene ouercome, &c. As by faith alone we eſcape the condemnation of Sathan, ſo by faith alone wee obtaine iuſtification by Chriſt. Seuenthly, in 2.Timoth.2. Fundamentum Dei fides quæ continet, quæ promiſit Deus: The foundation of God is faith, which containeth all that God hath promiſed, &c. one foundation may ſuffice for one houſe; if faith be this foundation, who dare take vpon him to lay another? Eightly, in 3.ad Galath. Sciunt Abraham ſine operibus legis per ſolam fidem iuſtificatum: They know that Abraham without the workes of the law was iuſtified onely by faith, &c. and by workes of the law are vnderſtood all good workes and graces, and not the law of Moſes onely; as Hierome expoundeth, vpon theſe wordes; No fleſh is iuſtified by the workes of the law; Quod ne de lege Moſis tantum dictum putes, &c. Which leſt you ſhould thinke is ſpoken only of the law of Moſes, and not of all Gods commandements, the ſame Apoſtle writeth, ſaying, I conſent to the law of God in the inward man,&c.ad Cteſiphont. Thus then haue we the moſt cleare teſtimonies of the fathers, for iuſtification by faith alone, deliuered from this popiſh writers corrupt gloſſes.

And for further euidence. 1. this was the ancient faith of the Greeke Church. Baſilius: this is true glorying in God—when one acknowledgeth that he is deſtitute of true iuſtice, verum ſola in Chriſtum fide iuſtificatum eſſe: but is iuſtified by faith alone in Chriſt. *Epiphan. There is one Vlenbergius a pariſh prieſt of Colen, who ſaith, he found a booke in a chappell, ſuppoſed to be written by Anſelme, preſcribing a forme of viſiting the ſicke, ending with this exhortation: In hac ſola morte fiduciam tuam conſtitue, in nulla alia re fiduciam habe,&c. Place thy confidence onelie in this death, and in nothing elſe, with this onelie protect thy ſelfe, &c. Thus, whatſoeuer their Schoole doctrine is, they teach at the houre of death, to cleaue onelie vnto Chriſt by faith.

Laſtly, for this holy truth, that wee are iuſtified by faith onely in Chriſt, haue many holy Martyrs ſuffered perſecution and death: Patrick Hamelton condemned, for affirming that a man is onely iuſtified by faith in Chriſt: Fox. pag.974. col.2. artic.2. Iohn Tewkſbury, for the ſame article with others, put to death, pag.1026. col.1. articul.5. AN APPENDIX TO THIS ARTICLE; WHETHER faith be the beginning only of iuſtification.

The Papiſts.

WE are ſaid to be iuſtified by faith, becauſe faith is the beginning onely, the foundation and roote of iuſtification: *Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.6.cap.*8.The ſame alſo is the opinion of Bellarmine, Fidem eſſe initium iuſtificationis: That faith is the beginning of our iuſtification : Lib.1.de iuſtificat. cap.13. 55.Error.

*Argum.*1. The Apoſtle ſaith, He that commeth to God, muſt beleeue that God is,&c. Ergo, faith is but a beginning and preparation to iuſtification : for he muſt haue it, that is, in comming to God: Bellarm.ibid. Hebr.11.6.

Anſw. Firſt, it followeth not, faith is the beginning of iuſtification : Ergo,it is onely the beginning: he that commeth to God muſt haue faith, and he that is come already, muſt haue faith alſo. In a commer and beginner, there is required a comming and beginning faith:and his faith muſt grow vp, and encreaſe with him : Lord I beleeue, ſaith the carefull parent in the Goſpell, heere is the beginning of his faith ; helpe my vnbeleefe, here is the increaſe : Secondly, neither is it neceſſary to vnderſtand, this comming vnto God onely for the beginning of our calling,but for the whole vocation of a Chriſtian: as is euident by theſe places : Come vnto me all ye that are wearie, and I will refreſh you, He that commeth vnto me ſhall not hunger, He that commeth to me, I caſt not away, He that is taught of God, and hath learned of the father, commeth to me. But theſe are not fruites onely of the beginning of our calling, namely, to be refreſhed,not to hunger,not to be caſt off, to be taught of God:but they proceede from the very perfection of our vocation and iuſtification : Ergo. Mark.9.24. Matth 11.28. Iohn.6.35.37. verſ.45.

*Argum.*2. To as many as receiued him he gaue them power to be the ſonnes of God, euen to them that beleeue in his name : Ergo, they that beleeue in Chriſt, are not yet the ſonnes of God, but haue a power and poſſibilitie onely to be : faith then is a preparation to iuſtification,rather then the thing it ſelfe: Bellarm.ibid. Iohn.1.12.

Anſw. Firſt, they that beleeue in Chriſt are already the ſonnes of God, as it followeth in the next verſe, which are borne of God : and, Whoſoeuer beleeueth that Ieſus is the Chriſt, is borne of God: Hee ſaith not, ſhall be borne, or may be borne, but is borne : but he that is borne of God, is already the ſonne of God. Secondly, He that beleeueth hath euerlaſting life, and hath paſſed from death to life, But none are heires of life, but children: If ye be children, then heires alſo,&c. Ergo, he that beleeueth, is really and actually already the child of God. Thirdly, As many as are led by the ſpirit of God, are the ſonnes of God, But they which beleeue are led by the ſpirit of God, for the father draweth them, and they are borne not of blood, nor of the will of fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God. And hee that is not borne of the fleſh, is borne of the ſpirit, Wherefore hee that beleeueth, is the childe of God, he hath not onely poſſibilitie to be. Fourthly, this place then cannot carry any ſuch ſenſe, as the Ieſuite inferreth vpon it, for then the Scripture ſhould be contrary to it ſelfe ; that God giueth a facultie and abilitie onely to them that beleeue, to be the ſonnes of God : but this place declareth rather, from whence faith receiueth this high dignitie, power and vertue, to make vs the ſonnes of God: that it commeth not of our ſelues, nor of the worthines of faith, but of the grace and free gift of God : as Saint Paul elſe where ſheweth, Wee are ſaued by grace through faith, not of our ſelues,&c. 1.Ioh.5.1. Iohn.5.24. Rom.8.7. Rom.8.14. Iohn 6.44. Ioh.1.13. Iohn.3.6. Epheſ.2.8.

The Proteſtants.

FAith is not onely the beginning and foundation of our iuſtification, but both the encreaſe, and perfection, and full accompliſhment thereof.

*Argum.*1. Saint Paul ſaith, The Goſpell is the power of God to ſaluation, &c. for by it, the righteouſnes of God is reuealed from faith to faith. Faith then leadeth vs to faith : It is not then onely the beginning, but the encreaſe of righteouſnes. The Scripture alſo ſaith, The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, But wee liue not by iuſtification begun onely, but perfected and finiſhed : Ergo, our full iuſtification is by faith. Rom.1.17.

Anſw. We liue by faith, that is, faith perfected, and formed by charitie : And wee are led from faith to faith,that is, from an imperfect to a perfect faith, which is perfected by charitie : *Bellarm. lib.1.de iuſtificat.cap.*20.

Contra. That there are degrees of faith we grant : there is a beginning and encreaſe of faith : I beleeue, helpe my vnbeleefe, There is a greate faith, There is a little or ſmall faith,as a graine of Muſtard ſeede. But that faith is formed or perfected by charitie, we vtterly deny it, as an vntruth contrarie to Scripture, as ſhall be ſhewed more at large in the proper place : Faith indeede worketh by charitie, but the ſubſtance of faith is one thing,the working another : loue concurreth with faith in working, it is no part of the eſſence, or being of faith : loue is an effect of faith: That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts, by faith, that being grounded and rooted in loue, &c. The dwelling of Chriſt by faith in vs, maketh vs Mark.9.24. Matth.15.28. Matth.17.20. Galath.5.6. Epheſ.3.17.

to bee grounded in loue: If loue then be an effect, and follow faith, it is rather perfected by faith then a perfector of faith.

Rom.4.3. Argum.2. Abraham beleeued God, and it was counted to him for righteouſneſſe: But Abraham at this time was no nouice, or young beginner in faith, but a perfect righteous man: Ergo, of faith is not onely the beginning, but perfection of our righteouſnes.

Anſw. We ſay not, that faith is ſuch a beginning of iuſtification, as that it goeth away, when perfection commeth: but it is ſuch a beginning and foundation, as the groundworke of the houſe, which though it be the beginning of the building, yet it remaineth, when the building is perfected and finiſhed. Therefore Abrahams iuſtice was both begun, encreaſed and perfected by faith: but not onely by faith: this we ſay, that faith is not able alone perfectly to iuſtifie the beleeuer: Bellarmin.ibid.

Contra.1. We take this kindly at the Ieſuites handes, that he will grant vs thus much, that faith is the foundation of iuſtification: the foundation is the principall part of the houſe, and ſo by his confeſſion, faith is the principall in our iuſtification: yet the Rhemiſts flatly denie it: for they ſay in theſe very words, That workes are more principal then faith in the matter of iuſtification: Annot. Iam.2.ſect.7. It were good for them firſt to be agreed, before they deale againſt vs, leſt they haue worke enough among themſelues. 2. Bellarmine in aſcribing to faith the beginning, encreaſe and perfection of righteouſnes, though not to faith alone, heerein diſſenteth from his ghoſtly fathers of the Tridentine Chapter, which as he ſaith, Nihil amplius fidei dederit, quam vt eſſet initium iuſtificationis: Did giue no more vnto faith, then to bee the beginning onely of iuſtification: Bellarmin. cap.13. initio cap. 3. That faith doth perfectly iuſtifie, wee haue proued at large before, and it may appeare further thus: Hee that is at peace with God, is fully and perfectly iuſtified, his conſcience cleered, and his ſinnes remitted, but by faith we haue peace of conſcience: Being iuſtified by faith, wee haue peace toward God, Rom.5.1. Ergo, by faith we are fully and perfectly iuſtified.

Joh.6.29. And further, firſt Auguſtine vpon theſe words: This is the worke of God, that ye beleeue, &c. writeth thus: Si iuſtitia eſt opus Dei, quomodo erit opus Dei, vt credatur in eum, niſi ipſa ſit iuſtitia, credere in eum? If iuſtice or righteouſneſſe be the worke of God, how is it the worke of God to beleeue in him, vnleſſe it bee righteouſneſſe it ſelfe to beleeue in him? ſerm de tempor.237. See then, it is not initium iuſtitiæ credere, ſed ipſa iuſtitia, not the beginning of iuſtice to beleeue, but iuſtice and righteouſneſſe it ſelfe.

THE

THE SECOND GENERALL PART, OF IVSTIfication it ſelfe.

THe particular queſtions are theſe: Firſt, whether inherent iuſtice be the formall cauſe of iuſtification. Secondly, of the certaintie of iuſtification by faith. Thirdly, whether faith, or the grace of iuſtification may be loſt.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER INHErent iuſtice be the formall cauſe of iuſtification.

The Papiſts.

THey denie inſtantly, that men are iuſtified by the onely imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, or by the remiſſion of ſinnes: *Trident.Concil.ſeſſ.6.can.*11. or that wee are formally made iuſt by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt: *can.*10. but holde them accurſed that ſo affirme and teach. This then is their ſentence, that Vnica formalis cauſa, eſt iuſtitia Dei, qua nos iuſtos facit, quam quiſque in ſe recipit: The onely formall cauſe of our iuſtification, is the iuſtice of God, whereby wee are not reputed iuſt, but are made iuſt indeede. This is that iuſtice, which euery man hath within himſelfe, and is inherent in him: ſeſſ.6. cap.7. Sic Rhemiſt.annot. Rom.2. ſect.4. Bellarmine alſo conſenteth: Lib.2. de iuſtificat. cap.2. Firſt, let vs ſee their arguments for inherent iuſtice: ſecondly, againſt the imputatiue iuſtice of Chriſt. 36. Error.

Argum.1. As by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners: ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous: At Adamì inobedientia verè non imputatiuè nobis peccatum impreſſit: But Adams diſobedience did truly print ſinne in our nature, not imputatiuely onely: Ergo, wee are truly made righteous by Chriſt, not by imputation only: Bellar.cap.3.arg.1. This argument Bellarmine taketh to be ſo firme, that he ſaith: Videtur nullam reſponſionem admittere: It cannot be anſwered. And therefore he doth inculcate the ſame argument often, euen thrice together in this one queſtion: Once, cap.3.arg.1. Againe, cap.7.arg.2. And againe, arg.6. Where he reaſoneth thus: Chriſt reſtoreth that to vs, which wee loſt in Adam, but we loſt true inherent iuſtice in Adam: Ergo, we recouer true inherent iuſtice by Chriſt. Rom.5.19.

*Anſw.*1. This argument concludeth nothing, vnleſſe hee will haue the Apoſtles compariſon betweene the diſobedience of Adam, and the obedience of Chriſt; our fall by the one, and our reſtitution by the other, to agree in all things: but that cannot be, for all men in the world are borne in Adams ſinne, yet all men are not made righteous by Chriſt. Againe, Adams diſobedience brought vs from Paradiſe, Chriſts obedience ſhall not bring vs to Paradiſe, but to heauen: Ergo, this compariſon holdeth not in euery reſpect.

2. The Apoſtle himſelfe, in this ſimilitude, ſheweth ſome difference and diſſimilitude: The gift is not ſo, as the offence; the fault came of one offence to condemnation, the gift is of many offences to iuſtification, verſ.16. And againe, The gift is not ſo as the offence, verſ.15. For, if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, &c. That is, Chriſt is much more able to ſaue many by his righteouſneſſe, then Adam was to condemne many by his diſobedience. Wee ſee then that this compariſon, As by one mans diſobedience, &c. ſo by the obedience of one, &c. is not to be vrged in euery part, but wherein only the compariſon ſtandeth. And if it hold not in theſe points, which the Apoſtle himſelfe ſetteth downe, why ſhould it hold in this, which the Ieſuite vrgeth, ſeeing it is not that point, wherein the Apoſtle compareth them? Verſ.15.16.

3. The Apoſtle then compareth them together, in reſpect of the worke or the thing done, many are made ſinners by one, and many are made righteous by one, but not in reſpect of the manner: that righteouſneſſe ſhould be conueyed from Chriſt, after the ſame manner, as ſinne was propagated from Adam: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that in Adam all ſinned, that is, verily and indeed in him they are ſinners: But ſpeaking of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, he ſaith, It is a gift, and of the abundance of grace, verſ.17. And how this gift is conueyed, he ſheweth, where he ſaith, The righteouſnes of God by the faith of Ieſus Chriſt, unto all, and vpon all that beleeue: This gift of righteouſneſſe is by faith in Chriſt. Rom.3.22.

4. If yet notwithſtanding the Ieſuite will ſtand ſtill ſtrictly vpon the equalitie and likeneſſe of this compariſon in all points: let him remember, that he defineth originall ſinne to be nothing elſe, but priuatio & carentia iuſtitiæ originalis, to be a priuation or wanting of originall iuſtice: *De remiſſ.grat.lib.5.cap.*19. Then by the ſame reaſon, it may be inferred by this compariſon, that as Adams ſinne brought nothing but a priuation of iuſtice: ſo Chriſts righteouſneſſe ſhould bring nothing to vs, but a priuation of originall ſinne and vnrighteouſneſſe. But Chriſt doth not onely free vs from ſinne, but alſo maketh vs righteous: as Auguſtine ſaith, Non ſolum peccata per Chriſtum interfecta ſunt, ſed iuſtitia tributa: Our ſinnes are not onely ſlaine by Chriſt, but righteouſneſſe alſo is giuen.

5. Yet ſomewhat better to content the Ieſuite, wee grant alſo a ſimilitude euen in this reſpect betweene Chriſt and Adam, in the manner of transferring ſinne on the one ſide, and righteouſneſſe on the other: for as there are two parts of originall ſinne, the guilt of Adams ſinne propagated to his poſteritie, and the deprauation of our nature: ſo there is a two-folde iuſtice: there is a iuſtice imputed vnto vs by faith, which is the iuſtice of Chriſt; there is a iuſtice inherent and abiding in vs, which is our owne iuſtice: And as Adams ſinne entring into his poſteritie made them ſubiect to death and con-

Rom.5.12. demnation, and wholly corrupted and depraued their nature; ſo it is the righteouſneſſe only of Chriſt which freeth vs from condemnation, which worketh in vs an imperfect inherent righteouſneſſe, whereby we leade an holy life, but are not thereby iuſtified before God: And as Adams ſinne is propagated by the naturall and carnall generation, ſo Chriſts iuſtice is ſpiritually deriued vnto vs by the ſpirituall birth which is by faith.

6. Wherein this compariſon holdeth betweene Adam and Chriſt, in what reſpect Adam is ſaid to be a forme of him, that was to come, that is, of Chriſt; Contra Iulian, lib.1. Auguſtine very well ſheweth in theſe words: Adam forma eſt futuri, i. Chriſti, quoniam ſicut ille ex ſemetipſo naſcentibus licet non manducauerint de ligno, factus eſt cauſa mortis, quæ per cibum inducta eſt: ita Chriſtus, qui ex ipſo ſunt, tametſi nihil iuſte egerunt, factus eſt prouiſor iuſtitiæ quam per crucem nobis omnibus condonauit: Adam is the figure of him that was to come, namely Chriſt, becauſe, as he became the cauſe of death, which came in by the forbidden meate, to thoſe which were borne of him, although they did not eate of the tree: ſo Chriſt to thoſe which are of him, although they had done no righteouſneſſe, yet prouided for them righteouſneſſe, which he purchaſed by his croſſe, and gaue vnto them, &c. Adam then may be a figure of Chriſt, and the compariſon may holde without inherent iuſtice: for the iuſtice giuen to vs, is the iuſtice of Chriſts croſſe, and we are made iuſt, without doing iuſtly, that is without our owne iuſtice: as Auguſtine here ſaith.

7. Now laſtly, whereas Bellarmine would haue Chriſt to reſtore whatſoeuer is loſt in Adam: by the ſame reaſon, by Chriſt men ſhould be exempted in this life from ſinne and death: for Adam before his fall, was ſubiect to neither. Our anſwere then is this: that indeede we finde more in Chriſt, then wee loſt in Adam: he doth reſtore vs to a farre more excellent eſtate, then man was created in: But this our happineſſe is but begun in this life, the perfection and accompliſhment of it, is reſerued for the life to come. And thus, I truſt, this vnanſwerable argument is anſwered: our ſtout champion then was ſomwhat too forward in triumphing before the victorie.

1. Argum.2. Firſt, Abel by faith obtained to be righteous: and Noah likewiſe, verſ.7. theſe were iuſt by their inherent iuſtice, becauſe they did righteous workes: as Abel did offer ſacrifice; Noah prepared the Arke, &c. Bellarm.arg.5.

2. Secondly, Rom.8.29. He hath predeſtinate them to be made like the image of his Sonne: but Chriſt is iuſt, not by an imputatiue, but an inherent iuſtice: Ergo, ſo are his members.

3. Thirdly, Rom.6.5. We are graft in the ſimilitude of Chriſts death and reſurrection: but hee truly died, and not putatiuely, or in opinion: Ergo, we alſo truly not putatiuely muſt die vnto ſinne, &c.

4. Fourthly, S. Paul ſpeaketh of the ſpirit of adoption now preſent, and of the adoption by the redemption of our bodies, Rom.8.15.23. but the adoption or redemption of our bodies, ſhall bee true, and not putatiue, or in opinion: Ergo, ſo is our adoption now. Bellar.arg.7.8.

1. Anſw. Firſt, Abel & Noah we grant had iuſt and righteous works, which were fruites of their faith: but they were not by them iuſtified before God, but it was the righteouſneſſe of faith, whereby they were iuſt before God: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Noe was made heire of the righteouſneſſe which is by faith.

2. Secondly, the conformitie betweene Chriſt and vs ſtandeth not in our iuſtification: for the iuſtice of Chriſt was in him originall, but in vs it is deriued from him: but it conſiſteth in our ſanctification, as the Apoſtle ſheweth: Arme your ſelues with the ſame minde, that he, which hath ſuffered in the fleſh, hath ceaſed from ſinne. We muſt then be conformable vnto Chriſt in dying vnto ſinne, and riſing to newneſſe of life.

3. Thirdly, to dye vnto ſin is part of our ſanctification, not of our iuſtification, which wee grant muſt verily and truly be in vs.

4. Fourthly: firſt, an adopted ſonne, is a reputed ſonne: and therefore ſeeing wee are Gods ſonnes by adoption in Chriſt, we are ſo by reputation or imputation. Secondly, it followeth not, our adoption is true, therefore not by imputation: for, the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt is as verily ours through imputation by faith, as if it were actually in our ſelues. Thirdly, the argument followeth not from the ſtate of the next life, to our condition now: for then wee ſhall ſee Chriſt face to face, wee ſhall neede Reuel.7.14. no faith, nor imputatiue iuſtice, but ſhall verily and perfectly be made iuſt by Chriſt: our roabes ſhall 2.Cor.5.7. be made white in the blood of the Lambe: but in this life we walke by faith, and not by ſight; and therefore are iuſt onely by the iuſtice of faith.

Argum.3. The Apoſtle ſaith, According to his mercy he ſaued vs by the waſhing of the new birth or regeneration, and the renewing of the holy Ghoſt, which he ſhed on vs abundantly, through Ieſus Chriſt our Sauiour, that we being iuſtified by his grace, &c. ad Tit.3.7. To be iuſtified then, is nothing elſe but to be regenerate and renewed by the holy Ghoſt: but our regeneration is inherent in vs: Ergo, ſo is our iuſtification: Bellarm.cap.13.argum.4.

Anſw.1. The Apoſtle in this place vſeth this word (to be iuſtified) in the largeſt ſenſe, as comprehending both the iuſtice of Chriſt imputed vnto vs by Chriſt, as alſo that iuſtice and holineſſe which is wrought in vs by his ſpirit: for ſeeing the Scripture doth call men iuſt both theſe wayes; iuſt by the Heb.11.7. righteouſneſſe or iuſtice of faith, as Noe: iuſt alſo, though imperfectly, by the righteouſneſſe wrought in them, as Lot is called iuſt, 2.Pet.2.7. not vnfitly both theſe kindes of iuſtice are comprehended vnder the word iuſtification. Againe, this word the Apoſtle in this ſenſe vſeth in other places, as, Rom.8.30. Whom he iuſtifieth, he glorifieth; where iuſtification alſo comprehendeth ſanctification, which goeth before glorification. Likewiſe, the Apoſtle calleth the whole worke of our redemption, including alſo our ſaluation, which muſt anſwere in that place to condemnation, the iuſtification of life: yet at other times ſpeaking more diſtinctly, he maketh theſe three degrees, being freed from ſinne, here is our redemption, To haue your fruit in holineſſe, this is ſanctification, and the end euerlaſting life, here is ſaluation: ſo in this place, the Apoſtle confoundeth theſe two words to be ſaued, and iuſtified: and ſo he doth. At other times he diſtinguiſheth betweene them: as, Being iuſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaued through him: and in the next verſe alſo he putteth difference betweene theſe two, to be reconciled, and ſaued: for ſaluation, to ſpeake properly, is of the end, iuſtification is the meane that leadeth to the end. Laſtly, the Apoſtle himſelfe doth diſtinguiſh this generall kinde of iuſtification into parts: They which beleeue in God (ſaith he, verſ.8.) this is the iuſtification by faith, ought to be carefull to ſhew forth good workes: this is the iuſtice which is in vs. Rom.5.18. Rom.6.22. Ephes.2.8. Rom.5.9.

2. The Apoſtle here ſaith, That the holy Ghoſt is ſhed on vs abundantly through Ieſus Chriſt: But faith is the meane and way whereby it is applied: We receiue the promiſe of the ſpirit through faith. Hee nameth alſo here the waſhing of the new birth, which new birth is by beleeuing in Chriſt: Whoſoeuer beleeueth, that Ieſus is the Chriſt, is borne of God: So that the Apoſtle neceſſarily vnderſtandeth in this place iuſtification by faith, though he alſo ſpeake of regeneration and renouation: ſo farre is the Apoſtle from making them all one: though he name them together, becauſe they muſt goe together, and are both neceſſarie towards the attaining of euerlaſting life. Tit.3.6. Galath.3.14. 1.Ioh.5.1.

Theſe, and the like arguments our aduerſaries haue deuiſed for their inherent iuſtice: Now let vs ſee, what they can obiect againſt the imputation of the iuſtice of Chriſt. 57.Error.

*Argum.*1. If the iuſtice of Chriſt be truly imputed vnto vs, ſo that thereby wee are verily and truly counted iuſt, as if it were our owne proper righteouſneſſe, we ſhould then be counted no leſſe iuſt and righteous, then Chriſt himſelfe, and ſo conſequently be counted Redeemers and Sauiours of the world, as well as he: *Bellarm.cap.7.argum.*5.

Anſw. Firſt, it followeth not, Chriſts iuſtice is verily made ours, as if it were properly our owne: Ergo, we are as iuſt as Chriſt: for Chriſts iuſtice was originally in him, it is ours but by imputation: his iuſtice was truly meritorious, and not of grace, our iuſtice by him is of grace: Neither is the whole iuſtice that was in Chriſt, imputed to vs, for he was not iuſt onely, as hee was man, but iuſt alſo as God. Secondly, we muſt diſtinguiſh betweene iuſtice it ſelfe and the communication thereof, betweene the proprietie and poſſeſſion of a thing, and the vſe. A thing may be common in vſe, yet proper in poſſeſſion: ſo Chriſts iuſtice is communicated to vs, that is, the vertue, power, and efficacie thereof, yet Chriſts perſonall iuſtice ſtill remaineth in himſelfe. The two Oliue branches did continually emptie themſelues into the golden pipes: The pipes or conduits had no oyle, but from the branches; yet the fountaine of oyle remained in the Oliue tree ſtill: It cannot be ſaid now, that the pipes were as full of oyle as the branches. By theſe Oliue branches, the Prophet vnderſtandeth Chriſt, from whom we receiue all the oyle of grace which wee haue, in as ample manner, as if this oyle ſprang of our ſelues, yet farre inferiour (for all this) are the pipes to the Oliue tree. Zach.4.12.

*Argum.*2. If we by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt imputed to vs, are truly counted iuſt before God, and are become the ſonnes of God, by the ſame reaſon Chriſt by the imputation of our ſinnes, may be truly counted a ſinner, and ſo alſo the childe of the diuell, which were a moſt horrible blaſphemie. But if Chriſt, notwithſtanding the imputation of our ſinnes, be righteous and iuſt ſtill, we alſo, though the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt bee imputed, ſhould remaine vnrighteous, and vniuſt ſtill, and therefore not thereby iuſtified: Bellarm.ibid.

*Anſw.*1. That our ſinnes were imputed to Chriſt, and that he tooke them vpon himſelfe, and ſuffered for them, being now counted his by imputation, we haue euident teſtimonies out of Scripture to proue it: The Lord hath laid vpon him the iniquitie of vs all: He ſhall beare their iniquities: verſ.11. Hee was counted with the tranſgreſſors, and bare the ſinne of many, verſ.12. This alſo was euidently prefigured by the ſcape goate, which was a type and figure of Chriſt: the ſinnes of the people were put vpon the head of the goate, and the goate did beare their iniquities into the wilderneſſe: And the goate by this imputation of the peoples ſinne, was counted vncleane, the beaſt yet by nature being vncapable of ſin; inſomuch that he, which carried the goate, was commanded to waſh his cloathes and fleſh with water, as polluted with touching the goate: So S. Paul ſaith, that Chriſt was accurſed, yea made a curſe for vs: And that hee was made ſinne for vs, which knew no ſinne, not onely a ſacrifice for ſinne, but euen ſo ſinne for vs, that is by imputation, as we are made his righteouſneſſe: for ſeeing this is the perpetuall rule of Gods iuſtice, that the ſame ſoule that ſinneth ſhould dye, how can it ſtand with Gods iuſtice, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer for our ſinnes, if they were not in ſome ſort now annexed vnto him? Seeing then the Scripture ſaith, that Chriſt bare our iniquitie, was accurſed, made ſinne for vs, counted among ſinners and tranſgreſſors: why ſhould wee doubt to ſpeake, as the Scripture doth, that Chriſt was for vs counted a ſinner and a tranſgreſſor, yet in himſelfe remained holy, iuſt, and righteous ſtill? So wee in Chriſt are verily reputed righteous, though by nature wee are vniuſt and vnrighteous. Iſai.53.6. Leuit.16.22.26 Galath.3.13. 2.Cor.2.25. Ezech.18.20.

2. Now concerning theſe conſequents, which Bellarmine inferreth hereupon: as firſt, Si Chriſtus poterit dici vere peccator, tum etiam filius diaboli: If Chriſt may verily bee counted or called a ſinner, then alſo the childe or ſonne of the diuell, which is an horrible thing to be thought. We anſwere: not

1. Iohn 3. 8. euery ſinner is the childe of the diuell: He that committeth ſinne, is of the diuell. But Chriſt neuer committed ſinne: In him is no ſinne, ibid. verſ. 5. ſinne is laid vpon him onely by imputation: Ergo. Againe, euen amongſt men, euery one that hath ſinne, is not of the diuell: for there is no man liuing but hath ſinne: 1. Iohn 1. 8. If wee ſay, we haue no ſinne, we deceiue our ſelues: And yet it is true, which the ſame Apoſtle ſaith, 1. Iohn 3. 9. Whoſoeuer is borne of God ſinneth not: for there is great difference betweene theſe two, to commit ſinne, and to haue ſinne, as Auguſtine diſtinguiſheth: Aliud eſt non peccare, aliud non habere peccatum; nam in quo peccatum non regnat, non peccat, &c. It is one thing not to ſinne, another, not to haue ſinne: for he ſinneth hot, in whom ſinne raigneth not, to obey the deſires thereof: in 5. cap. ad Galat. And againe, Quamuis diabolus (ſaith hee) ſit princeps omnium peccatorum & author, non tamen filios diaboli faciunt quæcunque peccata,—filios autem diaboli infidelitas facit: Although the diuell be the prince and author of all ſinnes, yet all ſinnes make not the children of the diuell, infidelitie onely maketh a man the ſonne of the diuell, Auguſt. cont. epiſt. Pelag. lib. 3. cap. 2. He then that committeth ſinne, that is, in whom ſinne raigneth, or in whom there is infidelitie, is the childe of the diuell; not he which hath ſinne, but obeyeth it not, or is a beleeuer: much leſſe can it be inferred, that Chriſt is of the diuell, though hee were for vs counted among ſinners, becauſe he neither hath, nor doth ſinne, but it was onely imputed vnto him; into whoſe heart neuer any ſparke of infidelitie entred.

Secondly, the Ieſuite inferreth, that if our ſinnes were imputed to Chriſt, as his righteouſneſſe is to vs, then as Chriſt for all the imputation of our ſinnes, remaineth iuſt, and holy; ſo we, notwithſtanding the imputation of his righteouſneſſe, ſhould be vnholy and vnrighteous ſtill.

Anſw. 1. True it is, that as Chriſt in his owne nature remaineth righteous and iuſt, though our ſinnes were imputed, the imputation of our ſinnes doth not pollute the pureneſſe of his nature: ſo, if wee ſhould ſet apart the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, by the imputation whereof wee are iuſtified; in vs by nature, there is nothing elſe but ſinne and corruption: as S. Paul ſaith, I know, that in me, that is, in my Rom. 7. 18. fleſh, dwelleth no good thing. 2. There is nothing the like reaſon, that the imputation of our ſinne ſhould leaue any ſtaine or blot in the holy nature of Chriſt, as, that the imputation of his righteouſneſſe ſhould worke holineſſe in vs: whereupon it is, that we are holy and iuſt by his righteouſneſſe imputed, but he notwithſtanding the imputation of our ſin, is neither vniuſt nor vnholy: firſt, becauſe it is impoſſible that Chriſt ſhould bee vniuſt, his holy nature is not capable of ſinne, but it is poſſible that man ſhould become righteous: the humane nature is capable of rigteouſneſſe, wherein it was once created, and ſhall bee againe reſtored vnto it in Chriſt. Secondly, ſinne is not ſo forcible to defile and deſtroy nature, as the grace of God is to preſerue and ſanctifie: as S. Paul reaſoneth: Rom. 5. 15. If through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace. If grace euen in men, whoſe nature is ſubiect to ſinne, and death, be more able to ſaue, than ſinne is to deſtroy: much leſſe can ſinne preuaile more, or ſo much, being but imputed, in the nature of Chriſt to pollution, which cannot ſinne, as grace and righteouſneſſe doth in vs to ſanctification? And thus farre of their arguments.

Argum. 3. If this imputation were neceſſarie, it ſhould be neceſſarie chiefly for this cauſe, for that a man after the commiſſion of his ſinne, might be held to be a ſinner ſtill, as though his ſinne were couered onely, and not cleane taken away; but our ſinnes are verily and truly taken away, as the Scripture euidently teſtifieth: Iohn 1. 29. Behold the Lambe of God, that taketh away the ſinnes of the world: 1. Iohn 1. 7. the blood of Ieſus Chriſt doth cleanſe vs from all ſinne: Hebr. 1. 3. by himſelfe purging our ſinnes: therefore there is no neede of ſuch imputation: Bellarm. lib. 2. de iuſtif. c. 7. argum. 2.

Contra. 1. The conſequent is denied, that, which is ſuppoſed, is not the cauſe of the neceſſitie of imputation: and Bellarmine himſelfe ſhall be iudge, who giueth this as a reaſon, why iuſtification conſiſteth not onely in remiſſion of ſinnes, becauſe wee are not onely by iuſtification freed from hell, but doe obtaine the reward of heauen: and are not onely not enemies, but are alſo made Gods friends, cap. 6. ſect. deinde: The remiſſion of ſinnes procureth the one, there muſt bee ſomewhat to purchaſe the other, and that is the imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe.

2 Our ſinnes are truly forgiuen vs, both in reſpect of the guilt and puniſhment: but there remaineth a ſtaine and blot of ſinne ſtill, which yet ſhall not hinder our iuſtification in Chriſt.

Argum. 4. If ſuch imputation of iuſtice be requiſite, it is for that our inherent iuſtice is imperfect, which conſiſteth in faith, hope and charitie: but this is perfect, as namely, faith may be perfect in this life: as S. Peter ſaith, 1. Pet. 1. 7. The triall of your faith, which is more precious then gold: and S. Paul ſaith, that Rom. 4. 19. Abraham was not weake in faith: and S. Iohn ſaith, 1. Iohn. 5. 4. this is the victorie, which ouercommeth the world, euen your faith: Bellarm. ibid. argum. 3.

Contra. 1. Our iuſtification conſiſteth not at all in hope and charitie, but in faith only as the inſtrument, whereby Chriſt with all his benefits is applied vnto vs. 2. Faith iuſtifieth not as an inherent qualitie & gift in vs by any worthineſſe thereof, but as it apprehendeth Chriſts righteouſneſſe, and this imputatiue iuſtice, and iuſtification by faith are all one, for by faith in Chriſt, is his iuſtice imputed vnto vs: the one then hindreth not the other, as Bellarmine inferreth. 3. Neither is any mans faith perfect in this life: a true faith, though not abſolute & perfect, is accepted of God in Chriſt, and though it be not perfect in it ſelfe, yet it may apply Chriſt, whoſe perfection by faith is made ours: the places giuen in inſtance proue no abſolute perfection of faith, but either in reſpect of others, as Abrahams faith, or in the regard of the effects, which faith worketh, becauſe of the worthineſſe and perfection of Chriſt, whom it apprehendeth.

Theſe and ſuch like arguments are produced by Bellarmine, againſt all imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe. Now becauſe there is ſprung vp another opinion, which findeth intertainment among ſome Proteſtants, who though they denie not all imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe, yet their opinion is, that chiefly obedience in part is imputed vnto vs, namely his paſſiue obedience in his death and paſſion, in part it is not, namely his actiue obedience is not neceſſarie to be imputed: but whatſoeuer was neceſſarie to our iuſtification, was performed onely by his death and paſſion? I will produce ſome of their arguments.

Whether we be not iuſtified as well by the actiue as paſſiue obedience of Chriſt.

Argum.2. Thoſe places of Scripture are vrged: Act.20.28. Chriſt hath purchaſed his Church by his blood: the Sonne of man came to giue his life, a ranſome for many; his blood is ſhed for many for remiſſion of ſinnes: Heb.10.19. by the blood of Ieſus we may be bold to enter into the holy place; Hence is inferred, that not onely remiſſion of ſinnes, but eternall life is purchaſed for vs by the death of Chriſt: Piſcator. annot. in 4. ad Roman. Adde hereunto, that they are pronounced bleſſed, to whom the Lord imputeth not ſin: and to the like effect other places are heaped vp, where the whole worke of our redemption is aſcribed to the moſt precious death and paſſion of Chriſt.

Act. 20.28.
Matth.10.28.
Matth.26.28.
Rom.4.9.

Anſwere. 1. Theſe places, which aſcribe remiſſion of ſinnes to the death, and paſſion of Chriſt, and the effuſion of his blood vpon the Croſſe, haue no difficultie at all in them: for wee affirme, that two things belong to iuſtification, the taking away of ſinne, which is obtained by faith in Chriſts death, and the enduing of vs with perfect rigteouſneſſe, which is conferred by the imputation of the righteouſneſſe and obedience of Chriſt.

2 Touching the other places: which aſcribe beatitude, and the entring into heauen vnto the redemption purchaſed by Chriſts blood: our anſwere is, 1. That it is the manner of Scripture by one meritorious act of Chriſt, to vnderſtand all the reſt, becauſe, the one is the perfection and conſummation of the other: as our iuſtification and ſaluation, is ſometime aſcribed to the reſurrection of Chriſt; as where the Apoſtle ſaith: It ſhall be imputed to vs for righteouſneſſe, which beleeue in him, that raiſed vp Ieſus from the dead: ſo alſo in other places: ſometime to the obedience of Chriſt: by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous: yet in all thoſe places muſt the death of Chriſt bee alſo included, by the ſame reaſon, where mention is made onely of Chriſts death to the fulfilling of our iuſtification, his holy life, reſurrection, aſcenſion; and other his vertuous and powerfull workes, muſt be comprehended: as in that place, Heb.10.19 where our entrance into the holy place is attributed to the blood of Chriſt, he ſaith, verſ.10. by the which will we are ſanctified: where our ſanctification is aſcribed to Chriſts holy and obedient will, not onely in ſubmitting himſelfe vnto death, but in obedience to the whole law of God: as it is ſaid in the Pſalme, from whence this place is taken; Thy law is within my heart. 2. By the like figure, called Synecdoche, when one part is taken for the reſt, vnder remiſſion of ſinnes, the other benefites, and effects annexed, and accompanying the ſame, are vnderſtood: as iuſtification, ſanctification: for all bleſſedneſſe conſiſteth not ſimply in remiſſion of ſinnes: ſeeing our Sauiour alſo ſaith: bleſſed are they, which mourne, bleſſed are the meeke, bleſſed are the pure in heart.

Rom.4.23.
Rom.10.9.
1.Pet.1.3.
Rom.5.19.
Pſal.41.8.
Matth.5.4.5.8.

*Argum.*2. We are here borne in hand, that there can bee no place found in the Scriptures or Fathers, which affirme, Chriſts righteouſneſſe, imputari nobis ad iuſtitiam, to be imputed vnto vs for righteouſneſſe: ſo Bellarmine, lib.2. de iuſtific. c.7. ſect. primam: the ſame obiection is made by others, which denie the imputation of Chriſts actiue righteouſneſſe and obedience.

Anſwere. It ſhall appeare among other arguments, which ſhall be euen now produced, that the Scriptures and Fathers, doe with full conſent approue this veritie of the imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe.

The Proteſtants.

WE acknowledge an inherent iuſtice in all faithfull men, wrought in them by the ſpirit of God, being now iuſtified by faith in Chriſt: but it is imperfect, not able to iuſtifie them before God; it is no other then ſanctification, which is a fruit of iuſtification: But that iuſtice, whereby wee are iuſt before God, not falſly accounted, but made truly iuſt, is by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt onely, which we apprehend by faith. And of this our iuſtification by Chriſt, there are two parts, the cleere remiſſion of our ſinnes and puniſhment due thereunto: for in Chriſt we are freed from the law of ſinne, and death. The other part is the imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt: By the iuſtifying of one, the benefit abounded toward all men, to the iuſtification of life: And that this is our righteouſneſſe before God, and no other, it remaineth now to be proued by Scripture.

Rom.8.2.
Rom.5.18.

Argum.1. Abraham beleeued God, and it was counted to him for righteouſneſſe: And, Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiuen, and whoſe ſinnes are couered, and to whom the Lord imputeth no ſinne, verſ.7.8. Ergo, the righteouſneſſe of man conſiſteth not in any actuall inherent iuſtice in himſelfe, but in that his ſinnes are forgiuen him, and the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt applied to him by faith.

Rom.4.2.7.8.

Anſw.1. We grant that Abraham was reputed righteous by his faith, yet it followeth not, that to haue faith reputed or counted for righteouſneſſe, is to haue the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt imputed by faith: for faith, which is imputed for righteouſneſſe, is not the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, but our owne righteouſneſſe. And to be reputed for righteous here, ſignifieth not a bare opinion of righteouſneſſe, but ſuch an opinion, as the truth of the matter anſwereth: for the Apoſtle vſing the ſame word, ſaith, that to him that worketh the wages is counted, or reputed not by fauour, but by debt, ver.4. But the wages is not giuen to him that worketh in opinion, or account only, but verily and in deede, Bellarm.cap.9.

Contra. 1. Faith, ſaith the Ieſuite, which is reputed for righteouſneſſe, is not the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt but our owne: and therefore it is not all one to ſay, faith is reputed for righteouſneſſe, and righteouſneſſe is imputed.

Rom. 3. 22. Anſw. 1. The Apoſtle heere by faith vnderſtandeth alſo the obiect apprehended by faith: as more plainly in theſe words, The righteouſneſſe of God by the faith of Ieſus Chriſt, Rom. 3. 22. So that in faith here reputed for righteouſneſſe, we are not to reſpect the worthineſſe of the act of beleeuing in it ſelfe, but in reſpect of the obiect: the faith (ſaith the Apoſtle) of Ieſus Chriſt.

2. Againe, the Ieſuite elſe where ſaith, that faith, in his meaning, vnderſtanding ſtill the dignity of faith in it ſelfe, is but the beginning of righteouſneſſe: but the Apoſtle ſaith, that faith it ſelfe, not naming any thing elſe, is righteouſneſſe, that is more then the beginning.

Rom. 4. 5. 6. 3. And if faith as it is a worke and act in vs doth iuſtifie; how can it bee true, which the Apoſtle ſaith? To him that worketh not, faith is counted for righteouſneſſe, and God imputeth righteouſnes without workes.

2. We ſay not, that to be reputed iuſt, is to be iuſt onely in opinion, but verily and indeed: for ſeeing the Apoſtle vſeth the ſame word, ſpeaking of the reputing of the reward of debt, as well as of fauour: we ſay that of grace and fauour a man is as verily reputed righteous, as if he were righteous indeed by his owne deſerts: for that which is reputed of fauour, is verily and indeed, as that which is reputed of debt, though not after the ſame manner.

1. Cor. 1. 30. Argum. 2. Chriſt is our wiſdome, righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, and redemption, Ergo, Chriſt onely is our righteouſneſſe, whereby we are iuſtified.

Anſw. Chriſt is ſaid to be our righteouſneſſe, becauſe he hath ſatisfied God for vs, and this ſatisfaction is imparted to vs, when we are iuſtified, in ſuch ſort, that it may be called our ſatisfaction and our righteouſneſſe: for although we are truly iuſt, by our inherent iuſtice, yet thereby wee cannot ſatisfie God for our ſinnes, and the puniſhment thereof: but it is an effect of Chriſts ſatisfaction, which is conferred and applyed to vs in our iuſtification: And ſo wee may ſafely ſay, that Chriſts righteouſneſſe, and his merits are imputed to vs, when they are ſo applyed vnto vs, as if we our ſelues had ſatiſfied: ſo that we confeſſe alſo an inherent iuſtice, whereby we are truly iuſt: Bellarm. cap. 10. reſponſ. ad argum. 1.

Rom. 5. 24. Contra. 1. It is very abſurd, as the Ieſuite here ſetteth it downe, that we ſhould bee iuſtified by our inherent iuſtice, and yet thereby are not able to ſatisfie for our ſinnes: that onely hath power to iuſtifie vs, that is able to redeeme vs, and ſatisfie for vs: We are iuſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Chriſt, Our inherent iuſtice is not able to ſatisfie for vs, by the Ieſuites confeſſion: Ergo. not to iuſtifie vs. 2. We may thus reaſon alſo out of the Ieſuites words: That can not bee a cauſe of our iuſtification, which is an effect thereof: but our inherent iuſtice is an effect of the ſatisfaction of Chriſt applied vnto vs, which is nothing elſe but our iuſtification: Ergo. 3. That righteouſneſſe, whereby being applied vnto vs, we are as iuſt, as if in our owne perſon we had ſatisfied for our ſinnes, is that righteouſneſſe, whereby we are iuſtified: but this doth the righteouſneſſe and merits of Chriſt applyed and imputed to vs, as the Ieſuite here acknowledgeth: Ergo. 4. Bellarmine ſpeaketh contradictories, and ioyneth together impoſſibilities: he ſaith, that the iuſtice of Chriſt is imputed to vs in as effectuall manner, as if we had ſatisfied our ſelues; and yet he ſaith beſides, Iuſtitiam inhaerentem veram eſſe & abſolutam iuſtitiam: That iuſtice inherent, is a true and abſolute iuſtice: How can this be an abſolute iuſtice, and that together which is imputed? There cannot be a double abſolute iuſtice: for that is abſolute which is perfect, and entire of it ſelfe: but Chriſts iuſtice imputed is an abſolute iuſtice, which hath ſatisfied for vs, as fully, as if we our ſelues had done, but the inherent iuſtice doth not ſatisfie for vs: all this is by the Ieſuite confeſſed: Ergo, it is not an abſolute iuſtice. 5. Doth not the Ieſuite now, in ioyning the iuſtice of Chriſt, and our iuſtice together, make two formall cauſes of our iuſtification? which notwithſtanding he inſtantly denied before, affirming this to bee the iudgement of the Tridentine chapter, that wee are not iuſtified, not onely, but not at all by the iuſtice of Chriſt, cap. 2. But here he ſaith, that by Chriſts iuſtice applyed, we doe ſatisfie the wrath of God: what now is this elſe but by the iuſtice of Chriſt truly to be iuſtified? For to bee iuſtified, is nothing elſe, but to be reconciled to God, and ſaued from his wrath. How is it now poſſible, that Bellarmine ſhould agree with others, ſeeing he ſo ſhamefully diſagreeth from himſelfe? (Rom. 5. 9. 10.)

2. Cor. 5. 21. Argum. 3. S. Paul ſaith, He hath made him to be ſin for vs, that knew no ſin, that we ſhould be made the righteouſneſſe of God in him. Out of this place we reaſon thus: As Chriſt was made ſin for vs, ſo wee are righteous in him: But our ſinnes were onely imputed to him, they were not actually in him: Ergo, ſo is his righteouſneſſe, whereby we are iuſtified, onely imputed to vs.

Anſw. 1. Chriſt is ſaid to be made ſinne for vs, not that our ſinnes are imputed to him, otherwiſe, then for that he ſatisfied for our ſinnes, and was an offering for our ſinne: ſo the iuſtice of Chriſt is imputed to vs, in reſpect of his ſatisfaction: by the which notwithſtanding we cannot bee counted iuſt: Bellarm. cap. 10. reſp. ad argum. 3.

Contra. 1. If ſinne be heere taken only for the ſuffering for ſinne, becauſe Chriſt bare the puniſhment of our ſinne: then where the Apoſtle ſaith, we are righteouſneſſe in him, we muſt vnderſtand, not righteouſneſſe it ſelfe, but only the reward of righteouſneſſe: for theſe two members or parts doe anſwere one the other: as Chriſt was ſin for vs, ſo we are righteouſneſſe in him: but Chriſt only bare the puniſhment for ſinne: Ergo, wee obtaine onely the reward of righteouſneſſe by him. 2. How could the puniſhment of ſinne in the iuſtice of God be laid vpon Chriſt, if the ſinnes were not in ſome ſort annexed to the ſufferer: ſeeing it is the perpetuall rule of Gods iuſtice, that the ſame ſoule that ſinneth, ſhould die? Ezech. 18.20. And how can we obtaine the reward of righteouſneſſe, if firſt we be not made righteous? 3. The Scripture alſo euidently affirmeth, that Chriſt bare not only the puniſhment of our ſinnes, but our ſinnes alſo: He hath borne our infirmities: He was counted among tranſgreſſors, and bare the ſinne of many. What aileth then the Ieſuite ſo boldly to denie, that our ſins were imputed to Chriſt? Auguſtine ſaith, that Chriſt, pro nobis — peccatum ſuſcepit: vnde nec erubuit Apoſtolus dicere, peccatum eum feciſſe pro nobis: Chriſt tooke ſinne for vs, whereupon the Apoſtle was not aſhamed to ſay, he made him ſinne for vs: in 3. ad Galat. 4. Whereas hee granteth, that the iuſtice of Chriſt is imputed, quoad ſatisfactionem, in reſpect of his ſatisfaction, but wee are not thereby iuſt: firſt, it is one thing for Chriſts ſatisfaction to be imputed vnto vs, and reputed for ours; another, for Chriſts righteouſneſſe to be made ours: Bellarmine will haue the firſt onely imputed, we affirme alſo the ſecond by the warrant of the Apoſtles words, that wee ſhould be made the righteouſneſſe of God, &c. Secondly, vpon the imputation of Chriſts ſatisfaction, muſt of neceſſitie follow alſo the imputation of iuſtice: the one is an inſeparable and immediate conſequent of the other: as Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth, that there can be no remiſſion of ſinnes, niſi iuſtitia infundatur, vnleſſe righteouſneſſe be infuſed: as he ſheweth by this familiar ſimilitude: The darknes is not chaſed away, vnleſſe light ſucceed: cap. 9. ſect. poteſt: It followeth then that by faith in Chriſt, we haue both the imputation of his ſatisfaction for our ſinnes, and of his righteouſnes alſo.

Ezech.18.20.

Iſai.53.4.12.

Anſw. 2. Or thus we may vnderſtand the Apoſtle: As Chriſt is made ſinne for vs, that is, being the head, hee counteth the ſinnes of his members as his owne, ſo we are the righteouſneſſe of God in him: that is, the diuine iuſtice which is in Chriſt our head, is communicated to his members, Bellar. ibid.

Contra. 1. In the matter of iuſtification, wee haue not any thing to doe with the diuine iuſtice of Chriſt, whereby he is iuſt as he is God; for that is not communicable to his members: but the Apoſtle meaneth, the righteouſneſſe of God, that is, of the grace of God through faith: but the diuine and eſſentiall righteouſneſſe of God, is neither apprehended, nor applied by faith.

Rom.3.22.24.

2. If our ſinnes agree vnto Chriſt as he is our head; then they doe more then by imputation, yea properly and verily agree vnto him: becauſe there is a reall coniunction and communication betweene the head and the body: he ſaid to Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? not becauſe our afflictions are imputed to Chriſt, but that the head and members make but one myſticall body: by denying imputation of ſinne, they fall into a greater gulfe, euen to appropriate ſinne vnto Chriſt.

Acts 9.

3. The Ieſuite hath made a very good argument for vs: Chriſt is the head, wee are the members, both make but one body: one and the ſame body, hath one and the ſame forme: Ergo, Chriſt and his Church are both formally iuſt by the ſame righteouſneſſe, and that is the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt. The Apoſtle alſo ſaith, that the body of Chriſt, that is, his Church, is the fulneſſe of him that filleth all in all things: our fulneſſe then is the fulneſſe of Chriſt, our righteouſneſſe is our fulneſſe: Ergo, and if Chriſt fill all in all, then Chriſt onely iuſtifieth: not Chriſts iuſtice in part, and our owne iuſtice in part.

Epheſ.1.23.

Anſw. 3. Chriſt was made ſinne for vs, that is, he tooke vpon him the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, and we are righteouſnes, that is, doe take the ſimilitude of the iuſtice of God. As Chriſt then verily, not imputatiuely, tooke our fleſh, and was a ſacrifice for ſinne; ſo wee verily, not imputatiuely, are partakers of his iuſtice: Bellarm. ibid.

Rom.8.3.

Contra. 1. This may ſeeme a ſtrange expoſition by ſinne to vnderſtand the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh: this were to adde trope to trope, and figure to figure: for to take ſinne for ſinfull fleſh, is one farre fetcht figure, and, to take ſinfull fleſh for the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, is another. 2. And in that place the Apoſtle doth directly diſtinguiſh betweene the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, and ſinne: how then doth he here confound them? 3. Againe, the Apoſtle ſaith, he was made ſinne, that knew no ſinne: in both clauſes, ſinne is to be taken and vnderſtood alike: if then to be made ſinne, be, to take fleſh, then not to know ſinne, is not to know fleſh, which is to deſtroy Chriſts humanitie. 4. As Chriſt was made ſin, ſo wee are made righteouſneſſe: if Chriſt be ſaid here to take our humane nature, then we alſo may be ſaid to take the diuine nature. But I thinke they will not ſay, that the diuine nature is ſo appropriated to vs, as the humane nature is to Chriſt. Wherefore ſetting apart all ſuch vaine gloſſes, and idle ſhifts, which wee ſee doe vaniſh as the miſt, the ſenſe of this place appeareth euidently and plainly to be this: that as our ſinnes by imputation were annexed to Chriſt in his paſſion, ſo his righteouſneſſe is appropriate to vs by faith in our iuſtification.

Argum. 4. Through this man is preached vnto you forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, &c. and by him euery one that beleeueth is iuſtified: Ergo, our iuſtification in the remiſſion of ſinnes is by the preaching of Chriſt apprehended by faith, and ſo conſequently not inherent in vs. Likewiſe the Publicane is ſaid to bee iuſtified, ſaying, God be mercifull to me a ſinner: Our iuſtification then is in the forgiueneſſe of ſinne, grounded vpon Gods mercie, who in his mercie counteth vs no ſinners, but as iuſt in Chriſt: Ergo, we are not iuſtified by any inherent iuſtice.

Anſw. Firſt, by preaching of remiſſion of ſinnes, is not onely vnderſtood the condonation of the fault, but the ſucceeding alſo of inward iuſtice, whereof Chriſt is the efficient cauſe, but yet Chriſts iuſtice is not the formall cauſe thereof. Secondly, the Publicane prayeth not onely for forgiueneſſe, but for perfect reconciliation, which requireth alſo an infuſion of iuſtice, Bellarm. cap. 12.

1. Contra. Firſt, 1. We grant that remiſſion of ſinnes once obtained in Chriſt, wee are conſequently reputed as iuſt in Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſinnes, and imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe doe alwaies concurre in act: but inherent iuſtice cannot ſtand together with remiſſion of ſinnes: the one being of grace and mercie, the other of worke; but grace and workes cannot agree together, If of grace, it is no more of worke. 2. As Chriſt is the efficient cauſe by his ſpirit of our iuſtifying faith: ſo is his iuſtice the very formall cauſe of our iuſtification: for it is not our owne righteouſneſſe, but the righteouſneſſe of God by the faith of Ieſus Chriſt vnto all that beleeue, whereby we are iuſtified.

Rom. 11. 6.
Rom. 3. 22.

Secondly, 1. The Publicane ſueth for perfect reconciliation, which is by Gods mercie in the free forgiueneſſe of our ſinnes in Chriſt: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Being iuſtified by faith, wee are at peace with God, and ſo are perfectly reconciled. 2. But he ſtandeth not vpon any inherent iuſtice of his owne; the Phariſee did ſo, and was refuſed; but onely appealeth to Gods mercie.

Rom. 5. 1.
